The General Assembly,

Aware of the special nature of the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the difficulties inherent in its financing,

Considering with concern the mounting deficit in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon due to the withholding by certain Member States of their contributions to the Force, and the resulting difficulties in paying the troop-contributing Governments the amounts due to them on a current basis, mainly because of the lack of funds in the Special Account,

Convinced of the need to make special provisions for the liquidation of the outstanding obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Force,

Recalling its resolution 33/13 F of 14 December 1978, in which it approved special arrangements for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations,

1. Approves the following special arrangements for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon in regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Force shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4:

(a) At the end of the twelve-month period provided in regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received, or which are covered by established reimbursement rates, shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account until payment is effected;

- (i) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received, shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided in regulation 4.3;
 - (ii) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided under subparagraph(a) above, if appropriate;
 - (iii) At the end of the additional four-year period any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained therefor shall be surrendered.

Resolution 34/9 D and Annex, as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/34/630/Add.1, adopted by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 106, by recorded vote of 108 to 13, with 6 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guvana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 and 33/14 of 3 November 1978 on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Concerned that a number of Member States have indicated their unwillingness to pay their assessed share of the budget of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Taking note of paragraph 7 of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, in which it is stated that more than one fourth of the total amounts apportioned among Member States to finance the costs of the Force must, in the present circumstances, be considered uncollectable,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session, particularly section XII thereof, in which, inter alia, is outlined the burden which the policy of certain Member States of withholding their assessed contributions places on the troop-contributing States, particularly those States with relatively smaller resources,

Noting that the continuation of the present situation may militate against the important principle of equitable geographical distribution in the composition of peacekeeping forces,

- 1. Renews its invitation to Member States to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;
- 2. Decides to establish a Suspense Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon to be operated according to the annex to the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraphs 6 and 7 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Ouestions, Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council.

Concerned that the Secretary-General is facing growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, particularly those due to the troop contributors,

Concerned that the financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon will soon be reaching a critical stage, Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended temporarily in respect of the amount of $122,492 which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in a separately identified account of the United Nations and held in suspense pending a further decision by the General Assembly.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision of 29 November 1974, taken at its twenty-ninth session, by which it established, as from 25 October 1973, standard rates of reimbursement to troop-contributing countries for pay and allowances of their troops serving in the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and its decision 32/416 of 2 December 1977, by which it revised those rates of reimbursement as from 25 October 1977,

Recalling also its decision of 15 December 1975, taken at its thirtieth session, by which it approved the principle of reimbursing the troop-contributing States for the usage factor for personal clothing, gear and equipment, and the related report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its thirty-first session establishing the rates therefor as from 25 October 1973,

Recalling further its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978, by which it applied the same standard rates of reimbursement payable to those Governments contributing troops to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, Recognizing that inflation and escalating troop costs have adversely affected in real terms the existing standard rates of reimbursement.

Requests the Secretary-General to study, in consultation with the States contributing troops to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, the existing standard rates of reimbursement, with a view to ensuring an equitable rate of reimbursement to the Governments of troop-contributing States, and to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Search for a peaceful settlement

Situation in the Middle East

Communications (January-November)

Throughout 1979, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received communications concerning the situation in the Middle East.

In letters of 17, 18 and 29 January, 28 February, and 25 and 28 March, the representative of Israel submitted complaints of what he described as terrorist crimes for which he said the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had claimed responsibility. Bombs, grenades and other explosive devices had been detonated in Jerusalem, Lod and Netanya, killing and wounding a number of civilians, including children. The Israeli Government reiterated that it was dutybound to take all measures necessary to protect the lives and safety of its citizens.

By a letter of 5 March, the representative of Kuwait transmitted to the Council President a letter of 28 February from the Permanent Observer of PLO to the United Nations, forwarding a memorandum and an appeal of 26 February addressed to the Secretary-General on behalf of a United States Jewish organization, Jerusalem Neturei Karta (Guardians of the City). It appealed to the Secretary-General to call on the Israeli authorities to halt construction of a new highway linking Jerusalem with Ramot, and charged that the Israeli Government was attempting to defile and secularize the unique character of the Holy City.

By a letter of 7 March, Sri Lanka transmitted the text of a communique issued that day by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, in New York, reiterating the position that the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East required Israel's withdrawal from all territories it occupied and recognition of the national and inalienable rights of the Palestinian people as affirmed by the General Assembly on 22 November 1974.²⁵

By a letter of 7 March, Jordan transmitted several documents and maps on Israeli settlements on the West Bank, a letter concerning the Mosque of Hebron and an appeal to the President of the United States for intervention in a property confiscation protest (see also p. 382).

By a letter of 19 March, the representative of Egypt transmitted a letter of 16 March, addressed to the Secretary-General by the Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that negotiations between Egypt and Israel had resulted in a peace treaty between the two countries. This treaty stipulated the following: Israeli withdrawal from Egyptian territory occupied since 1967 and its return to Egyptian sovereignty; termination of the state of war between the two countries; and reciprocal guarantees for the territorial integrity of both. He added that the achievement of a just solution to the Palestinian problem had always been Egypt's primary goal. Egypt had worked diligently to establish a firm link—both political and legal—between Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty and progress on the Palestinian problem. This link was contained in a supplementary agreement providing for a timetable for the implementation of the stages of establishing Palestinian authority in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

Reaction to the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, signed in Washington, D.C., on 26 March, was the subject of a number of communications to the Secretary-General.

By a letter of 15 March, Yemen transmitted the text of a statement issued that day by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, expressing Yemen's commitment to the unanimous Arab position adopted at Arab summit conferences in Algeria, Iraq and Morocco opposing any separate solution as harmful to the cause of a just peace in the Middle East. Yemen confirmed its position that PLO was the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

On 22 March, Iraq transmitted a message of that date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, expressing grave concern over the impending signing by the President of Egypt of a peace treaty with Israel, contrary to the wishes of the Palestinian people and the interests of the Arab States whose territories Israel occupied. He appealed to the Secretary-General to exert every effort to prevent implementation of the treaty.

By a letter of 26 March, the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted a message from its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that the determination of Egypt's President to conclude a separate peace treaty with Israel jeopardized chances for establishing a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East. The treaty did not establish any basis for peace in the Middle East; in fact it would impede the peace process initiated by the United Nations. Nor did the treaty safeguard the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, which meant that instability and conflict still existed. In addition, a part of Syrian territory remained occupied by Israel, which continued to reject United Nations resolutions calling for complete withdrawal from that territory.

By a letter of 28 March, Jordan transmitted the text of a Government communique issued on 26 March, declaring that all work in Jordan would cease between 1100 hours and noon that day as an expression of Arab rejection of the separate peace agreement.

By a letter of 30 March, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People transmitted the views and concern of Committee members in connexion with the Egyptian-Israeli negotiations on the Middle East, which they felt had not dealt with the question of Palestine—the heart of the Middle East conflict—or other principles supported by the General Assembly (see also p. 362).

By a letter of 2 April, Iraq transmitted the texts of resolutions adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States at the level of Arab Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Economy and Finance, meeting at Baghdad from 27 to 31 March, which included recommendations to the Arab countries on severance of political and diplomatic relations with the Government of Egypt and possible suspension of Egypt from the Arab League and other intergovernmental organizations, and transference of the League's headquarters from Cairo to Tunis. It also detailed economic measures to be taken against Egypt as a consequence of its concluding a separate peace treaty with Israel, and asked the United Nations to transfer its regional offices that covered the Arab region from Egypt.

Egypt, in a letter dated 22 November, informed the President of the General Assembly that the Egyptian Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs had, in a letter of 10 April to the Secretary-General of the League, stated that Egypt considered that any decisions and recommendations taken to violate the charter of the League of Arab States were without legal validity. The letter also stated that the seat of the League would continue to be located in Cairo, as stipulated in that charter.

By a letter of 3 April, Sri Lanka transmitted the text of a communiqué issued that day by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, reiterating its position that a just and peaceful solution in the Middle East could not be attained without Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories and the restoration of national rights to the Palestinian people. It appealed to the Security Council to take measures to compel Israel to abide by its decisions.

On 12 April, Iraq transmitted a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, stating that the bilateral treaty was contrary to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and all United Nations decisions relating to the question of Palestine, the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, the withdrawal of occupation forces from Arab territories and recognition of PLO. Iraq and other Arab countries rejected all attempts to associate the United Nations in any way with implementation of that treaty.

In a letter of 29 May, the United Arab Emirates, current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations, pursuant to the resolutions adopted on 31 March at Baghdad by the Council of the League of Arab States, notified its opposition to action by any organ of the United Nations that might be interpreted as conferring recognition on the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

In a letter of 27 April, the representative of Egypt informed the Secretary-General that the peace treaty with Israel had been approved on 10 April by the Egyptian People's Assembly. He pointed out that the treaty had been concluded within the provisions of the United Nations Charter and international law, Security Council resolutions $242(1967)^{26}$ and $338(1973)^{27}$ and the terms and obligations contained in the framework achieved at Camp David (United States) in September 1978.²⁸ He added that the additional agreement attached to the treaty stipulated the establishment of Palestinian self-government with full autonomy at a later interim stage, in the course of the process of restoring the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. Egypt firmly believed that the United Nations had a major role to play in affirming the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and the restoration of Arab Jerusalem to Arab sovereignty.

In a letter of 9 May, Israel said that the treaty had been ratified unanimously by its Government on 1 April and that Egypt and Israel had exchanged instruments of ratification on 25 April, thereby bringing the treaty into force. The treaty was carried out in implementation of one of two Camp David agreements signed by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat on 17 September 1978, and witnessed by United States President Jimmy Carter. The other pertained to a framework for peace in the Middle East, establishing the principles of a self-governing authority to be set up in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, referred to by Israel as Judaea, Samaria and Gaza, and negotiations on this subject to be commenced between Egypt, Israel and, if it so accepted, Jordan, one month after the exchange of instruments of ratification of the peace treaty. In no circumstances, the letter stated, would Israel contemplate or permit the establishment of a Palestinian State in Judaea, Samaria and Gaza; moreover, Jerusalem would remain one indivisible city—the capital of Israel.

In letters of 10 April, 23 May and 25 June to the Secretary-General, Israel complained of what it termed terrorist outrages, for which PLO had claimed responsibility, in which bombs and other explosive devices had been detonated in Tel Aviv, Petah Tikvah, Hebron and Jerusalem, killing and wounding civilians, including children.

On 19 April, Israel charged that on 15 April a group of what it described as PLO terrorists had tried for the second time in recent weeks to penetrate Israeli territory by crossing the Jordan River. The four armed men had been killed in an exchange of fire with the Israel Defence Force.

In a letter of 28 June, France communicated the text of a declaration issued on 18 June in Paris by the nine member countries of the European Community, in which they deplored any action or declaration that might constitute an obstacle to the quest for peace in the Middle East, in particular certain positions and declarations of the Israeli Government. In that respect, they found Israel's claim of ultimate sovereignty over the occupied territories and its policy of establishing settlements in those territories to be inadmissible. (See also p. 363.)

In letters of 27 July, 7 and 22 August, 19 September, 30 October and 13 November, Israel submitted further complaints of terrorist incidents for which it said PLO had claimed responsibility. Bombs and other explosive devices had been detonated in Dimona, Jerusalem, Netanya, Tel Aviv and towns adjacent to it, indiscriminately and senselessly killing and wounding civilians. On 20 November, Israel charged that on 18 November a group of four PLO terrorists in a rubber dinghy had been intercepted three miles south of the border with Lebanon; two of the men had been killed. The following day, explosive devices had been detonated in Jerusalem, causing injuries and property damage. Israel said PLO had claimed responsibility for these acts.

In a letter of 10 October, Lebanon expressed the appreciation of its Government's Council of Ministers in connexion with the address delivered by Pope John Paul II to the General Assembly on 2 October, in which the Pope expressed concern for the future of Lebanon (see p. 442).

Report of the Secretary-General (24 October)

On 24 October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council a report on the situation in the Middle East, as called for by the Assembly in 1978.²⁹ The Assembly had requested him to report to the Council periodically on the development of that situation and to submit to the Assembly at its regular 1979 session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the region in all their aspects.

The Secretary-General's report dealt with the status of the cease-fire and the activities of the United Nations peace-keeping forces, efforts undertaken by the United Nations concerning the situation in the occupied territories and the question of Jerusalem, the Palestine refugee problem and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the question of the rights of the Palestinian people, and developments in connexion with the search for a peaceful settlement.

The Secretary-General said the general situation was unstable and would remain so without a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem, in particular the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people; evidently all parties concerned must be involved.

He said he had been informed by Egypt and Israel that the peace treaty between the two countries signed on 26 March 1979 had been approved by the respective legislatures and had come into force on 25 April. He stated that he had received a number of communications conveying concern about these developments or rejection of the treaty.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The Assembly considered the Secretary-General's report when it discussed the situation in the Middle East at six plenary meetings held between 30 November and 6 December.

Among the many documents submitted to the Secretary-General in connexion with the discussion of this item were:

- the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September, transmitted by Cuba on 1 October;
- the final communiqué and resolutions of the Tenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Fez from 8 to 12 May, transmitted by Morocco on 27 July;
- a letter of 15 October from Israel in answer to an address by the President of Cuba, in his capacity also as Chairman of the movement of non-aligned countries, during the Assembly's general debate on 12 October; the Israeli statement expressed what the Israeli representative might have said had he at that time exercised his right of reply;
- a letter of 21 November from the Syrian Arab Republic denying the presence of Cuban troops in the Republic, as Israel had charged in its written statement in right of reply on 15 October;
- an Austrian proposal, transmitted by a note verbale of 30 November, for a resolution by which the Assembly would call on Israel and the Palestinian people to begin exploratory talks, without pre-conditions, covering all aspects and all possible solutions for a peaceful settlement of the situation without prejudice to the final solution, the aim of the talks being to reach an adequate basis and produce guidelines for negotiations among all parties concerned, under United Nations auspices; and
- the Final Declaration of the Tenth Arab Summit Conference, held at Tunis from 20 to 22 November, transmitted by Tunisia on 3 December.

On 6 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/70, on the situation in the Middle East, by a recorded vote of 102 to 17, with 20 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Cuba, Guinea-Bissau, India, Indonesia, Iran, Malaysia, Pakistan, Qatar, Sao Tome and Principe, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

By the preamble of the resolution, the Assembly expressed concern that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 continued to be under illegal Israeli occupation and that the Palestinian people after 30 years was still deprived of the exercise of its inalienable rights. It reaffirmed that the acquisition of territory by force was inadmissible under the United Nations Charter and that all territories thus occupied must be returned. It reaffirmed also the urgent necessity to establish a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for Charter principles and United Nations resolutions.

By the operative paragraphs, the Assembly condemned Israel's continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, in violation of the Charter, the principles of international law and United Nations resolutions. It declared again that peace was indivisible and that a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East question must be based on a comprehensive solution, under United Nations auspices, which took into account all aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in particular attainment by the Palestinian people of all its inalienable rights and Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem.

The Assembly condemned all partial agreements and separate treaties which violated the recognized rights of the Palestinian people and contradicted the principles of just and comprehensive solutions to the Middle East problem. It reaffirmed that until Israel, in accordance with United Nations resolutions, withdrew from all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, and until the Palestinian people attained and exercised its inalienable national rights, a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in which all countries and peoples in the region lived in peace and security within recognized and secure boundaries, would not be achieved. The Assembly called anew for the early convening of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East, under United Nations auspices and USSR/United States co-chairmanship, with participation on an equal footing of all parties concerned, including PLO.

The Assembly urged all parties to work towards the achievement of a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the problem, and requested the Security Council to take all necessary measures to ensure the implementation of Council and Assembly resolutions and to facilitate the achievement of such a settlement aiming at the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region. It requested the Secretary-General: to follow the implementation of this resolution; to forward the relevant records of the current Assembly session to the Council; to inform all concerned, including the Peace Conference Co-Chairmen; to report to the Council periodically; and to report to the Assembly in 1980 on developments in the Middle East in all their aspects;

Speaking in explanation of vote, Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, New Zealand, Singapore, Spain, Thailand, Togo, Venezuela and Zaire expressed reservations about a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly recalled resolution 34/65 of 29 November on the question of Palestine (see following section). By that resolution, the Assembly had declared that the Camp David accords and other agreements had no validity in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinian people and of the occupied Palestinian territories.

Austria, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, New Zealand, Singapore, Spain, Sweden and Venezuela had reservations on the wording of the paragraph of resolution 34/70 by which the Assembly condemned partial agreements and separate treaties. Ireland, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, said they had been unable to support the resolution largely because of that paragraph. Norway said it had voted against the text because of the implication that the Camp David accords violated the recognized rights of the Palestinian people and contradicted the principles of just and comprehensive solutions to the Middle East problem. Norway had consistently supported those accords, viewing them as a step towards the implementation of Council resolutions $242(1967)^{30}$ 338(1973).³¹ Bhutan and Liberia observed that their positive votes should not be construed as a condemnation of the accords or the treaty. Costa Rica found the reference to Jerusalem as an occupied Arab territory unacceptable; it held that it must be an international city. New Zealand considered that the resolution as adopted lacked balance.

China, which voted in favour, supported that part of the resolution condemning Israel for its occupation of Arab territories and calling for its withdrawal, but had reservations on the provision calling for convening the Peace Conference on the Middle East under USSR/United States co-chairmanship.

Albania, which did not participate in the vote, expressed similar views, considering that undertakings under the aegis of the super-powers were harmful

Democratic Yemen and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also observed that they had not participated in the vote—in accordance with their stand on the Middle East issue—despite certain positive provisions referring to the rights of the Palestinians.

Iraq abstained, considering that the text did not fully express the views of the majority of the international community nor truly and clearly define the rights of the Palestinian people and nation.

³¹ See footnote 27.

Israel voted against the resolution, which it considered a crude and transparent attempt by the Arab "rejectionist" States and their supporters to hamper progress of the only constructive, practical and ongoing peace process launched in three decades with the aim of achieving a comprehensive settlement. Since the Assembly had determined by such resolutions that peace was not important, Israel would treat this resolution accordingly.

Participants in the general debate indicated that the situation in the Middle East continued to pose a severe threat to international peace and security and that it required a just and comprehensive solution, to be achieved on the basis of United Nations resolutions and under United Nations auspices.

The majority of speakers—including Arab States, Austria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, Ecuador, El Salvador, Indonesia, Ireland (on behalf of the members of the European Community), Nepal, Nigeria, Portugal, Romania, Senegal, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Zambia—said that the question of Palestine was the core of the Middle East conflict.

Egypt said that a comprehensive peace based on justice must prevail so that all peoples, in particular the Palestinian people, might exercise their legitimate rights. The basis that had been accepted by Egypt at Camp David was full implementation of Council resolution 242(1967) and principles of the Charter and of international law. The treaty of March 1979 concluded by Israel and Egypt should be seen as only a first step towards widespread peace in the area and towards the settlement of all aspects of the conflict in accordance with Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). Egypt was well aware of the fact that the framework agreed upon at Camp David did not represent a final settlement. The agreement was the first constructive step towards a settlement of the Palestinian question and the dispute between the Arab countries and Israel in accordance with Charter provisions. At the same time, Egypt vigorously condemned the measures taken by Israel in the occupied lands—specifically the creation settlements and the expropriation of Arab lands-and considered these to be illegal measures clearly hindering progress. Peace in the area required the withdrawal of Israel from all lands occupied in 1967, including the City of Jerusalem, and recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people, in particular their right to self-determination.

Israel said that the roots of the Arab-Israeli conflict were embedded in the refusal of the Arab world to come to terms with the restoration of the independence and sovereignty of the Jewish people in its homeland. The conclusion of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel was the first major step towards bringing an over-all settlement to the Middle East. The most ominous threat to peace in the Middle East was the rejectionists' "Eastern Front" combining the armed forces of Iraq, Jordan Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic. In Israel's view, the massive build-up of arms on the Eastern Front had been accompanied by a diplomatic offensive at the United Nations to secure Judaea and Samaria (the West Bank) as a forward base from which the rejectionist States and PLO might be able to carry out a war of annihilation against Israel. Israel could not be expected to adopt an approach which might involve its very existence. The Egyptian-Israeli treaty was steadily being translated into fact: Israel had just completed the fifth successive redeployment of its troops in Sinai; and Mount Sinai and valuable oil fields in the Gulf of Suez had been turned over to Egypt well ahead of the agreed schedule. The Camp David framework for peace in the Middle East was based on Security Council resolution 242(1967). It must be understood that any tampering with that resolution could only jeopardize the ongoing peace process, Israel concluded.

The PLO representative said that Zionism was the negation of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people, and that the Zionists were responsible for introducing terrorism into the region.

Brazil, Egypt, El Salvador, Nigeria, Qatar, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Turkey and the USSR, among others, condemned Israel's policy in the occupied territories. They mentioned in particular Israel's violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people, annexation of Jerusalem, acquisition of Arab lands and establishment of settlements in the occupied territories. They considered that Israel's policy was illegal, a permanent source of tension and a major obstacle to finding a peaceful solution.

Many Members, including Arab States, Brazil, Cyprus, Pakistan, Romania and Turkey, expressed concern over the situation in Lebanon. They called for the cessation of military action by Israel against that country and considered the continuation of hostilities to be another obstacle to a peaceful solution to the problem.

By a letter of 20 November to the Assembly President, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted a joint Libyan/League of Arab States request dated 14 November that the Secretary-General of the League be given the opportunity to address the Assembly.

On 26 November, the Assembly acceded to that request, and the Secretary-General of the League addressed the Assembly on 30 November. In his statement, he referred to resolutions adopted at the Tenth Arab Summit Conference at Tunis and said that they constituted the directives that imparted energy to Arab actions and determined their policies. He said the Egyptian regime's signature of a treaty with Israel was in violation of the charter of the League of Arab States. The treaty undermined the efforts of the United Nations and enabled Israel to persist in its violation of rights and its illicit occupation of land. He continued by stating that at Tunis it had been suggested that Arab countries should mobilize every effort, including their resources, in order to effect the emancipation and liberation of all Arab territories, including Jerusalem.

The position of the Arab States was that peace in the, Middle East must be based on justice, taking into account the following considerations: the Palestinian question was the core of the Middle East crisis and the main reason for the Arab-Israeli conflict; there was no place for a partial solution since the Palestinian and Middle East questions were indivisible; and the establishment of a just peace must be based on the total and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all Palestinian and occupied territories and the restoration to the Palestinian people of all their inalienable national rights, including the right to return to their homeland, to selfdetermination and to establish an independent Palestinian State.

The United States said that the Assembly agreed, with a few exceptions, that the basis for peace was to be found in Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). However, there was wide disagreement on how to reach that goal. The objective must be to promote the cause of justice and to bring about negotiations between adversaries of long standing. Although the impression had been given by many statements that no progress had been made in the search for a comprehensive peace, a peace treaty had been signed between Egypt and Israel, calling for complete Israeli withdrawal from all Egyptian territory occupied by Israel in 1967. One month later, negotiations had begun with the objective of establishing full autonomy for the Palestinians in the occupied territories as a first step in the process of securing the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and addressing the Palestinian question in all its aspects. The target date for the completion of the talks was 25 May 1980. The United States said it remained committed to the just resolution of the Palestinian question in all its aspects and to the achievement of legitimate Palestinian rights. It was obvious that much remained to be done, but the process must continue.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Community, said that the Community saw the signing of those agreements as a correct application of the principles of resolution 242(1967) as far as Egyptian-Israeli relations were concerned. Ireland recalled that one of the basic requirements of a comprehensive settlement was an end to the territorial occupation that Israel had maintained since 1967. The European Community was opposed to Israel's policy of establishing settlements in occupied territories in contravention of international law, and it could not accept claims by Israel to sovereignty over those territories. The security of Israel, which the Community considered essential, could be guaranteed and the legitimate rights of the Palestinians given effect within the framework of a comprehensive settlement.

Austria noted that since the conclusion of the treaty no further steps had been forthcoming. It stressed the danger of the stalemate and recalled that at the current session it had submitted suggestions as to how the United Nations could again resume its rightful role in the peace efforts. In submitting them, Austria was guided by the following considerations: Israel was a reality and, like every other State, had the right to recognition and secure boundaries; the Palestinian people were also a reality and had their national rights, which had to be exercised; PLO had been generally accepted by the Palestinian people as their representative; and Israel's obligation to withdraw from the occupied territories had not been fulfilled.

New Zealand, Singapore and Thailand expressed interest in the Austrian proposal, which they felt encouraged a flexible approach.

El Salvador, Nepal, Portugal, Senegal and Spain saw the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty as a possible first step towards a peaceful solution of the conflict. Portugal said that peace could only be achieved through a gradual process. The treaty, however, and the ongoing negotiations fell short of being the over-all settlement which was needed to bring peace to the area.

Spain said that a change of approach was evident; some progress had been made in recognizing that any over-all agreement was contingent on acknowledgement of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to a homeland of their own. In the opinion of Spain, that recognition showed a significant change in world public opinion and in the policies of many States; without such a change, no solution was possible.

Spokesmen representing most Arab States, socialist countries of Eastern Europe and countries belonging to the non-aligned movement evaluated the Camp David accords critically and the ensuing Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. They regarded these agreements as a flagrant violation of the rights of the Palestinian people, the Arab States, the United Nations Charter, the charter of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and international resolutions.

Arguments advanced against the separate peace treaty included the following.

The USSR said that failure to resolve the conflict had caused concern among all those who cared about improving international detente and bringing about general peace and security. It was clear that the overwhelming majority of Member States were convinced that in order to achieve a comprehensive settlement the very roots of the conflict had to be eradicated. This required: the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories occupied in 1967; implementation of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian Arab people, including the right to self-determination and to create. their own independent State; and implementation of the right to an independent existence and security of all those directly concerned in the conflict. The USSR reiterated that the separate Egyptian-Israeli treaty, concluded against the will of the Arab peoples and countries, was an overt attempt not to allow the implementation of the legitimate rights of the Arab people of Palestine, including their right to create their own State. For that reason, the USSR was against any attempt, by whatever means, to involve the United Nations in the implementation of that transaction, which it said could never lead to peace. As events had shown, tension in the Middle East continued, and Israel was actively pursuing its policy of expansion and aggression.

The Byelorussian SSR said that those agreements were designed to help Israel strengthen its position in the occupied Arab territories. Bulgaria stated that they were not limited to refusing to recognize the true representative of the Palestinian people, PLO; they denied the very existence of the Palestinian people.

The German Democratic Republic said the Camp David accords had become, wittingly or unwittingly, an obstacle to an over-all, just solution to the problem of the Middle East. The basic problem—the Palestinian question—was of secondary importance in those agreements. They did not provide binding formulas for recognizing the right of the Arab people of Palestine to self-determination and to an independent State. The Palestinians living under Israeli occupation were allowed to determine only such matters as food, subsistence and certain minor questions.

Jordan said that remedies based on misrepresentation could only compound an already potentially explosive situation. The Camp David accords were not only in violation of Palestinian and Arab rights but also of United Nations resolutions, conventions and all other instruments concerning the peaceful settlement of disputes. Council resolution 242(1967) did not permit the perpetuation of Israeli military occupation under the pretext of the relocation of forces. It did not permit the transfer of Israelis into the occupied territories and did not condone the colonization policies of Israel which had already taken over almost one third of the occupied lands. Jordan said it was willing to request a considered ruling on the subject from the International Court of Justice.

Algeria said a State was free to conclude any treaty, unless that treaty was incompatible with imperative norms of law which could not be derogated or transgressed, such as the right of peoples to self-determination. The Camp David accords violated the national rights of the Palestinian people, and Egypt had concluded treaties that were therefore contrary to international law. The United Nations, which had always energetically affirmed the rights of the Palestinian people, was faced with treaties and agreements which directly clashed with those rights. Developments following the conclusion of those agreements had engendered greater tension owing to Israel's constant expansionist thrusts.

Yugoslavia said that separate solutions or agreements outside the United Nations framework would not lead to lasting peace but, on the contrary, further aggravated the crisis since they did not take into consideration the core of the crisis: the recognition of the right of the Palestinian people to freedom and independence, a right that could not be the subject of negotiations.

Many Members emphasized the role of the United Nations in solving the Middle East conflict. Romania said that it would be particularly important to organize an international meeting, under the auspices and with the active participation of the United Nations, either by reconvening the Geneva Peace Conference or by holding a different type of conference with all countries and parties concerned participating, including PLO, the two Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference and other countries if necessary.

Senegal said that in the search for a settlement the Assembly had been for some time the victim of a mistaken approach, by leaving aside the question of the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people. It had corrected that error by defining the inalienable rights of that people and by reaffirming the central nature of the question of Palestine. Unfortunately, the Security Council remained the victim of that incomplete approach. Resolution 242(1967) dealt with the Palestinian problem only from the humanitarian angle and was inadequate. The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People had been working to correct this, but had always met with obstruction in the Council from one of its permanent members. The' Council was being prevented from playing its main role, which was to define the basic principles underlying peace in the Middle East. If the situation continued, the Assembly should plan to hold a special session, in accordance with the wish expressed by the overwhelming majority of United Nations Member States and by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries at Havana in September.

Question of Palestine

Communications and report

During 1979, the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General received a series of communications concerning the question of Palestine from the Chairman and the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

In a letter of 9 February to the Secretary-General, the Committee Chairman conveyed his concern about the recurrence of systematic repressive measures by the Israeli authorities against the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. Examples of these measures were: arrests at Bir Zeit University and in Ramallah; statements by the Foreign Minister of Israel about deporting Palestinians who supported PLO; and demolition of homes of PLO supporters. He also expressed concern that Israel was continuing illegally to establish new settlements in the occupied territories and enlarge existing ones.

To a letter of 2 March to the Council President, the Acting Chairman of the Committee annexed a list of documents and press reports which he said detailed a wide-ranging campaign of repression against the Palestinian people by Israel. Maps indicating Israeli settlements in the occupied territories were accompanied by an explanatory note, purporting to show Israeli designs to control the West Bank of Jordan.

In a letter of 13 March to the President, the Committee Chairman drew attention to principles which guided Committee members in formulating recommendations for United Nations action on the problem of Palestine.³² The Committee considered it important that the Security Council should take measures to implement the Committee's recommendations, which the Committee felt the Council would want to reexamine.

In a reply of 24 May, the Council President informed the Chairman of consultations he had undertaken with Council members, as a result of which they were following the matter with great attention with a view to holding a meeting at an early date.

On 30 March, the Chairman again reminded the Secretary-General of the Committee's recommendations for the implementation of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, which had been supported by the General Assembly as a possible basis for the settlement of the question of Palestine. The Committee noted with regret that these principles had not been taken into consideration in recent negotiations on the question of Palestine, which had not been conducted within the framework of the United Nations.

In a letter of 2 May, the Chairman expressed serious concern about Israel's decision to authorize the establishment of two new settlements in the occupied Arab territories, in violation of Committee recommendations, United Nations resolutions and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (the fourth Geneva Convention) of 12 August 1949.

On 11 May, the Acting Chairman again conveyed the concern of the Committee about the systematic and increasingly repressive measures taken against Palestinians by Israel in the illegally occupied territories, including incidents in which a student supporter of PLO was expelled to Lebanon, another student was shot and wounded, and 70 students were detained indefinitely.

Referring in a letter of 17 May to a letter of 9 May from Israel to the Secretary-General, in which Israel had affirmed that Egypt and Israel had exchanged on 25 April instruments of ratification, thereby bringing into force a peace treaty between the two States (see p. 356), the Acting Chairman said that Israel's declared refusal to withdraw from the territories it had occupied since 1967 and its stated intention concerning those territories ignored the Assembly-endorsed recommendations of the Committee. He considered Israel's statement that in no circumstances would it permit the establishment of a Palestinian State in Judaea, Samaria and Gaza to be a denial of the exercise of the right of selfdetermination, and its declaration that Jerusalem would always remain one indivisible city, the eternal capital of Israel, to be a defiance of Council resolution 252(1968).33

In a letter of 27 June, the Committee Chairman informed the Council President that the Committee had concluded that the Council should resume consideration of the Committee's recommendations as soon as possible. The Assembly in 1978³⁴ had authorized and asked the Committee to make suggestions it deemed appropriate should the Council not have considered its recommendations by 1 June 1979.

On 19 September, the Chairman expressed to the Secretary-General the Committee's serious concern at an Israeli Government decision to abrogate provisions prohibiting Israeli companies and nationals from purchasing land in the illegally occupied Arab territories. He protested that this action was in flagrant violation of international law, world public opinion, the United Nations Charter, United Nations resolutions and the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949.

A number of communications from States pertaining to the question of Palestine were also received during the year.

Following a letter to the Secretary-General of 16 March, in which the Egyptian Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs set out the provisions of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, the Secretary-General received a number of letters from Arab States expressing a negative reaction to that treaty in so far as it affected Palestinian rights. Communications were received in March and April from Iraq, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen. On 27 April, Egypt gave the Secretary-General further details concerning the treaty, including an additional agreement stipulating establishment of Palestinian self-government at a later interim stage. (See p. 356.)

On 9 May, Israel, in a letter to the Secretary-General, summarized the background to the treaty, outlining the principles contained in the Camp David accords and Israel's commitments which included: full autonomy for the Palestinian Arab inhabitants of Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza district; the refusal of a "Palestinian State" in that region; and the status of Jerusalem as one indivisible city with free access for all to the Holy Places.

On 1 August, the Chairman of the Palestinian Rights Committee addressed a letter to the Secretary-General expressing the Committee's concern at the statement made by the United States in explanation of its abstention following the voting on Security Council resolution 452(1979) (see p. 391). It was the Committee's view that the Council Commission Established under Resolution 446(1979) (see p. 385) had acted within its mandate in taking up the question of illegal Israeli settlements at Jerusalem.

Several intergovernmental groups reaffirmed to the Secretary-General their positions on the question of Palestine. On 7 March and 3 April, Sri Lanka transmitted the texts of communiqués issued in New York by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, reaffirming that the establishment of peace in the Middle East required Israel's withdrawal from all the occupied territories and the recognition of the national and inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, and reaffirming a position of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, in July 1978. Sri Lanka transmitted on 6 July the final communiqué, resolutions and other documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau held at Colombo from 4 to 9 June 1979.

In a communiqué issued on 9 May, the Coordinating Bureau expressed grave concern at the recent escalation of Israeli armed attacks on Lebanon and on the Palestinian refugee camps there.

By a letter of 24 August, Zambia transmitted the text of the final communiqué issued by the heads of Government of Commonwealth countries at their meeting at Lusaka from 1 to 7 August. This communiqué emphasized, among other things, that a just and permanent peace in the Middle East could only be achieved on the basis of a fully comprehensive solution that upheld the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to a homeland.

By a letter of 28 June, France transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration on the situation in the Middle East issued in Paris on 18 June by the nine member countries of the European Community.

The nine States considered that a just and lasting peace could be established only on the basis of an over-all settlement, which should be founded on Security Council resolutions 242(1967)³⁵ and 338(1973)³⁶ and on: the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territories by force; the need for Israel to end the occupation of territory held since the 1967 conflict; respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries; and recognition of the fact that, in the establishment of a just and lasting peace, the legitimate rights of the Palestinians, including their right to a homeland, would have to be taken into consideration.

The nine States deplored any action that might constitute an obstacle to the quest for peace, considering that certain Israeli Government positions represented an obstacle to the search for such an over-all settlement, particularly Israel's claim of ultimate sovereignty over the occupied territories and its policy of establishing settlements there.

A number of other communications also transmitted documents that addressed the question of Palestine.

To a letter of 2 April, Iraq annexed the texts of resolutions of the Council of the League of Arab States at the level of Arab Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Economy and Finance, issued at Baghdad following their meeting from 27 to 31 March (see p. 355).

To a letter dated 27 July, Morocco annexed the texts of the resolutions and final communiqué of the Tenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Fez from 8 to 12 May.

Cuba transmitted on 1 October the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana. from 3 to 9 September, and, on 16 October, a communiqué of 6 October issued following an Extraordinary Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries, held in New York from 4 to 6 October, which decided on priority issues of concern to those countries among the agenda items currently before the Assembly, including the question of Palestine.

Venezuela on 16 October transmitted the texts of resolutions adopted by the Sixty-sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference, held at Caracas from 13 to 21 September.

To a letter of 27 November, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya annexed the text of the Lisbon Declaration adopted by the World Conference in Solidarity with the Arab People and Their Central Issue: Palestine, held at Lisbon, Portugal, from 2 to 6 November.

Romania on 1 December transmitted an extract from the report of the Romanian Communist Party's Central Committee to the Twelfth Congress of the Party, held at Bucharest from 19 to 23 November.

Tunisia annexed to a letter of 3 December the Final Declaration of the Tenth Arab Summit Conference, held at Tunis from 20 to 22 November.

On 24 October, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly and the Council a comprehensive report on the situation in the Middle East, as called for by the Assembly in 1978.³⁷ The report dealt with, among other things, the question of the rights of the Palestinian people, outlining United Nations decisions on the subject during the previous year and indicating communications received in this connexion.

Consideration by the Security Council (June-August)

The Security Council held five meetings on 29 June, 27 July and 23 and 24 August to consider the question of the exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights, in response to the letters of 13 March and 27 June from the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (see preceding subsection). The Council had before it a draft resolution on the subject prepared by the Committee.

The representatives of Afghanistan, Cuba, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Morocco, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The President, with the consent of the Council, extended an invitation, under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure,38 to the Chairman of the Palestinian Rights Committee, the representative of Senegal.

At Kuwait's request, PLO was invited to participate in the discussion. The invitation, as extended, conferred on PLO the same rights as were conferred when a Member State was invited to participate under rule 37 of the provisional rules of procedure.39 The United States requested that the proposed invitation be put to a vote. It was adopted by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom).

Reporting to the Council, the Committee Chairman summed up the Committee's position on the most recent developments in the Middle East. First, the question of Palestine was at the heart of the Middle East problem and therefore any solution must take into account the rights of its people. Second, the full exercise of those rights, including self-determination, independence and national sovereignty, would contribute to a solution of the problem. Third, the participation of PLO, on an equal footing with other parties, was indispensable to all negotiations undertaken under United Nations auspices. Fourth, the acquisition of territory by force was inadmissible and Israel must withdraw completely from any territory so occupied.

The Chairman said that certain Council members believed that the Committee's recommendations were partial and lacked balance. The Committee had held discussions with those members to explain the underlying principles and to invite suggestions to improve the recommendations. The Chairman drew the Council's attention to the declaration issued by the European Community on 18 June, which affirmed those principles (see preceding subsection).

The majority of speakers supported the Committee's recommendations, expressing their conviction that until the Palestinian people could exercise their inalienable rights, it would be impossible to arrive at a settlement of the Middle East crisis, and that it was therefore the Council's responsibility to provide guidelines for such a settlement, working from the basis of Council resolution 242 (1967).

Israel said that, ever since PLO had been granted observer status at the United Nations, the Assembly had supported PLO's objectives and had adopted many resolutions that lacked balance. The Assembly had established the Palestinian Rights Committee by a resolution 40 designed to bypass resolution 242(1967). Israel claimed that the Committee's recommendations ignored that resolution, failed to mention the concept of negotiations and were a thinly disguised formula for dismemberment of the State of Israel, in keeping with PLO's aims. The Council should not help those whose purpose was to perpetuate hostilities in the Middle East, Israel said.

Egypt said that resolution 242(1967) should be developed and its provisions translated into fact. Such action would reaffirm that resolution and resolution 338(1973), and contribute to the ongoing peace process based on the Camp David accords. In Egypt's view, the principles of the accords and of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty paved the way for a positive movement towards a comprehensive peace. By those agreements, Israel had recognized the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. Egypt would support a Council resolution that called for the recognition of those rights and for the right of all nations in the region, including Israel, to exist. Egypt welcomed the position taken by the European Community as a constructive approach. Egypt's position was that a comprehensive settlement required complete withdrawal by Israel from all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem.

The PLO representative said the Camp David accords dealt with the future of the Palestinian people, but neither a Palestinian individual nor PLO had authorized the parties to those accords to speak for the Palestinians. He said that in PLO's view the Camp David formula was a violation of the international consensus on the Palestinian question, and noted that it had been rejected by the Arab States, the developing countries and the socialist States of Eastern Europe. As for the problem of Jerusalem—a city in Palestine—Israel had declared it to be indivisible and outside the scope of the proposed self-governing authority.

The PLO representative said the return of Palestinians to their homes and property was a prerequisite for peace that was denied them by Israel. The Council was empowered to redress that injustice and its duty was to adopt a programme of implementation to do so. Article 25 and Chapter VII⁴¹ of the United Nations Charter granted the Council powers to discharge its duties. He added that the international community, including the United Nations, had never approved the Zionist concept and was under no obligation to protect the Zionist character of Israel.

The United Kingdom said it remained committed to the principles of resolution 242(1967), which called for the withdrawal of Israeli occupying forces and reaffirmed that Israel, like other States, was entitled to live in peace with its neighbours within secure borders. The Council should refine those principles, since that resolution did not address itself to the Palestinians, but dealt with how the Arab States and Israel could live in peace together. Palestinians must be fully involved in any settlement and able to take part in negotiations. In the United Kingdom's opinion, resolution 242(1967) should be supplemented, not amended or replaced. The Palestinians should also accept it as a working basis for peace. The United Kingdom urged PLO to accept without qualification Israel's right to exist, and to commit itself to a negotiated settlement on that basis. The United Kingdom also urged Israel to recognize that the legitimate rights of the Palestinians must be satisfied to achieve a lasting settlement. The Council should direct its efforts to getting the Israelis and the Palestinians to negotiate.

France said the Council's duty was to seek to reconcile the various elements of the problem: the right of the Arab States to recover their territorial integrity, which required evacuation by Israel of occupied territories; the right of each State in the region, including Israel, to live in peace within secure boundaries; and the right of the Palestinian people to a homeland.

The USSR expressed a lack of belief in the references to Palestinian autonomy contained in the Egyptian-Israeli treaty. It condemned Israel's occupation of Arab territories and its separate peace treaty. Supporting this view, Czechoslovakia said it was not for Israel to propose autonomy measures to the inhabitants of the Arab territories since those areas were not part of Israeli territory.

The representative of the United States said that the United States attitude in the Council and towards the discussions that had led to its convening reflected its conviction that the Palestinian people must be brought into the peace process. Peace with justice must apply to all peoples in the area. It was important, therefore, that the Council understand his country's basic approach to securing a comprehensive peace, for that approach would guide it in actions with respect to the countries and peoples of the region and in response to proposals for Council action. First, the current stage of the peace process, now centred on negotiations between Egypt, Israel and the United States, needed a chance to succeed. Second, the bases for making peace were resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) in their entirety. Third, the right of Israel and its neighbours to live in peace, within secure and recognized borders, was fundamental. Fourth, the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to participate in determining their future, must be realized. Negotiations to create full autonomy for the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza were proceeding between Egypt, Israel and the United States, and that represented the first time in more than 30 years that negotiations were directly addressing the Palestinian question and Palestinians were invited to take part.

China supported the Palestinian Rights Committee's recommendations, which rectified an earlier approach to the question of Palestine as a refugee question, and said the Council should adopt a resolution confirming the correct principles. In China's view, a real solution to the problem of the Middle East depended on the Arab people's strength and unity in the common struggle against the enemy, and the super-powers' ceasing to meddle in the situation.

The Syrian Arab Republic said it regarded the Camp David accords and the subsequent treaty between Egypt and Israel as null and void and a danger to peace in the Middle East. Cuba, Iraq, Jordan and the Lao People's Democratic Republic criticized Israel for its annexation of Arab territories and for its separate peace treaty with Egypt, which they felt sidestepped the real issue. They believed it was the Council's duty to impose sanctions if Israel continued to defy United Nations resolutions.

Jordan found it difficult to understand why certain States refused to recognize the Palestinian Rights Committee. The Committee's recommendations were action-oriented and meticulously worked out. The Council could enter into a dialogue with the Committee on the modalities in its recommendations as a prelude to positive action, such as the resumption of the Geneva

Peace Conference on the Middle East, in which all parties would participate, including PLO.

Kuwait said that it was essential to realize that peace could not be achieved in the Middle East without negotiating with the Palestinians, represented by PLO. The United States was not a bystander in the matter; it was an involved party, according to the Camp David accords, which stated that the United States was a full partner with Egypt and Israel in the pursuit of peace. In Kuwait's view, the major protagonists in the Middle East were the Israelis and the Palestinians, and United States policy was to support Israel at the expense of the Palestinians. Kuwait did not question the right of the United States to support the survival of Israel, but it questioned total indifference to the rights of the Palestinians. Kuwait called on the Council to recognize the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination.

Tunisia, in its capacity as current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations, said that the Committee's main recommendations had been endorsed by the Assembly and needed the strong support of the Council. The Council's silence encouraged Israel in its denial of the Palestinian people's right to exist. Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka in its capacity as Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, said that the recommendations represented a balanced prescription for peace and should find reflection in a unanimous Council pronouncement. The solution could not remain confined within the parameters of resolution 242(1967).

Morocco, President of the Islamic Conference, expressed similar views and affirmed that any solution that failed to take into account the Palestinian cause and that did not entail the restitution of occupied Arab territories was unacceptable to the Moslem world. The Islamic Conference called for the creation of an independent Palestine on its own land, led by PLO. Morocco believed that to implement resolutions 242 (1967) and 338(1973) a third element was required: the granting of self-determination to the Palestinian people.

Afghanistan, the German Democratic Republic, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey and Yugoslavia called on the Council to accept its responsibility towards the Palestinian people in their struggle, led by PLO, to establish a Palestinian national State. Turkey said that after many years during which the issue of Palestine had been considered as a refugee problem, its political dimension had finally been accepted and defined in various Assembly resolutions.

The draft resolution prepared by the Committee, and submitted by its Chairman on 24 August, would have had the Council affirm that the Palestinian people should be enabled to their inalienable rights determination, national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, and affirm the right of Palestinian refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours to do so and the right of those choosing not to return to receive compensation for their property. These affirmations should be taken into account in all international efforts and conferences organized within the framework of the United Nations for the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

The Committee Chairman said the text was prudent and in accord with previously adopted resolutions. In order to avoid dissension, the formulation of national independence and sovereignty had been used, rather than that of a Palestinian State.

No vote was taken on the draft resolution. At the end of the meeting on 24 August, the President announced that further consideration of the item would be fixed following consultations.

Report of the Committee on Palestinian Rights

In its 1979 report, submitted on 17 October, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People reviewed its activities during the year. The General Assembly, in a 1978 resolution, 42 had again urged the Security Council to take a decision as soon as possible on the Committee's 1976 recommendations designed to enable the Palestinian people to exercise its inalienable rights.⁴³ Since the Council had not taken action on those recommendations by 1 June 1979, the deadline mentioned by the Assembly in its 1978 resolution, the Committee's Acting Chairman had initiated consultations with the Council President to urge early action by the Council, which had considered the question of Palestine at meetings in June, July and August (see subsection above).

The report reviewed action taken by other organizations on the questions covered by the Committee's mandate, noted attendance by representatives of the Committee at international conferences, seminars and other meetings, and reflected the Committee's reactions to events in the Middle East, including the signing of the peace treaty between Israel and Egypt in March 1979, and to developments in the occupied territories.

By resolution 446(1979) of 22 March 1979 (see p. 385), the Security Council had established a Commission to examine the situation relating to settlements in the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem. The Committee had cooperated with the Commission and, noting that the Commission's recommendations bore out those of the Committee, hoped that they would be endorsed by the Council, as a first step towards endorsement of the Committee's own recommendations.

The Committee also endorsed a decision by the group of Arab States at the United Nations to oppose Israeli moves to have Jerusalem recognized as its capital.

Acting on an Assembly resolution of 2 December 1977,⁴⁴ the Committee had suggested to the Secretariat's Special Unit on Palestinian Rights several themes on which the Unit had prepared pamphlets during 1979. The Committee also reviewed the bulletins issued periodically by the Unit, noting that they were receiving the widest possible dissemination.

In its 1979 recommendations, the Committee unanimously decided to reiterate the validity of its 1976 recommendations, which the Assembly had repeatedly endorsed, and annexed them to its report. In addition, the report also reiterated the four basic principles relating to the problem of Palestine within the Middle East situation. 45

The report also drew the Assembly's attention to the Committee's considered opinion that the Camp David accords, to the extent that they did not take into consideration the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and had been negotiated without the participation of PLO, contravened the Assembly's resolution of 7 December 1978.⁴⁶

International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People

In compliance with a General Assembly resolution of 2 December 1977,⁴⁷ the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights, in consultation with the Palestinian Rights Committee, organized on 29 November the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People. A special meeting of the Committee was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, with an exhibition-emphasizing the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. Publications prepared by the Special Unit on various aspects of Palestinian rights were distributed at the meeting. Similar arrangements were made at the United Nations Office at Geneva. A film prepared by the Department of Public Information (DPI) was also shown.

At this meeting, statements were made by the Assembly and Security Council Presidents, the Committee Chairman and the Secretary-General.

Messages were received, expressing solidarity with the Palestinian people in their struggle to secure their inalienable rights, from the heads of State of Afghanistan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, China, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Oman, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, San Marino, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

Messages were also read out from the heads of Government or Deputy Premiers of Malta, Saudi Arabia and Yemen, and from the Foreign Ministers of Barbados, Greece, Indonesia, Japan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, the Philippines and Turkey.

In addition, statements were made by representatives of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, various regional groups of Member States at the United Nations, OAU, PLO, the Islamic Conference and the League of Arab States, and by invited speakers.

The messages were subsequently circulated in a special bulletin issued by the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights. In a note verbale of 22 June addressed to the Secretariat, Israel protested the fact that PLO was represented as a Government in that publication.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The General Assembly considered the question of Palestine at seven meetings held between 26 November and 12 December. In addition to the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, the Assembly had before it several communications having a bearing on the question (see subsection above on COMMUNICATIONS AND REPORT).

The President called on PLO to address the Assembly on the basis of an Assembly resolution of 22 November 1974.⁴⁸

The Palestinian Rights Committee Chairman said the recommendations of the Committee endorsed by the Assembly continued to be valid and important. The implementation of United Nations resolutions was incumbent on every Member State. Unfortunately, a major obstacle to Security Council approval of the recommendations had been the policy of one permanent Council member. He regretted that the principles on which the Committee's recommendations were based. had been ignored in recent negotiations on the Middle East.

The Chairman recalled that the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana in September, had reaffirmed its support for the Committee's decisions and proposals. The Conference had also advocated the convening of a special session of the Assembly, should the Security Council not succeed in coming to a decision through a lack of unanimity among its permanent members. The Palestinian cause, he said, had also welcomed the declaration published on 18 June by the European Community.

Introducing his Committee's report, the Rapporteur of the Palestinian Rights Committee said that, despite the annual endorsement of the Committee's recommendations by the Assembly, the Security Council had not adopted them. Thus, nothing tangible had been done to alleviate the plight of the Palestinian people; on the contrary, action taken by the occupying power was increasing tension in the area and retarding prospects for a peaceful solution.

The Rapporteur said the Committee's role in the past three years had been limited to the three functions of retaining its openness and objectivity, exercising vigilance over events, and spreading new information on the various aspects of the question of Palestine. With the assistance of the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights, the Committee had produced and disseminated 10 major studies.

The PLO representative said that the events in occupied Palestine and the region in general demonstrated the suffering of the people and their determination to resist occupation in order to attain liberation and the establishment of a just peace in the region. The situation had worsened since the Camp David accords were signed, he said, mainly because those agreements, for which the United States bore full responsibility, made no mention of the rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to return to their homeland and ignored the question of Jerusalem. Those agreements had been decided in the absence of the Palestinian people and PLO, its lawful representative, which alone had the right to decide the fate of those

The PLO representative said the Assembly had repeatedly requested the Council to adopt the Committee's recommendations but, because of the use of the veto by the United States, the Council had been unable to take action.

Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Hungary, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, M.adagascar and Mauritania also expressed the view that the negative attitude of the United States was a primary reason for lack of progress towards a solution.

Burundi, China, the Comoros, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Japan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Malaysia, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Turkey, the USSR, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia were among those emphasizing the essential role that PLO, as the representative of the Palestinian people and the guardian of their inalienable rights, had to play in efforts to reach a solution to the Palestinian question—the heart of the Middle East conflict.

Qatar appealed to Western States to recognize PLO as the Palestinian people's only legitimate representative and to recognize that people's right to self-determination. The Sudan expressed the hope that the European Community would allow the positive trend in their position to culminate in recognition of PLO.

The representative of Israel outlined Israel's view of the historical evolution of the Palestinian problem and said that the Arab States took advantage of the numerical majority at their disposal at the United Nations by setting up a so-called Committee and a Special Unit on Palestinian Rights. According to Israel, the Special Unit under the Committee's guidance had in the past 12 months produced a series of pseudo-scientific studies bearing the emblem of the United Nations that distorted well-known historical facts.

In Israel's opinion, the only practical solution to date had been outlined in the Camp David framework for peace in the Middle East, based on Council resolution 242(1967). By those agreements, the Palestinian Arab residents of Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza district were granted full autonomy for a transitional period of five years before the final status of the areas would be agreed. Israel claimed that the solution provided for in the Camp David framework offered the Palestinian Arabs greater opportunities than they had ever before experienced in their history. In Israel's view, PLO had escalated its anti-peace and intimidation campaigns and remained a willing tool in the hands of those Arab States opposed to peaceful coexistence with Israel.

Israel restated its position that an indivisible Jerusalem would remain the capital of Israel and of the Jewish people.

Albania, Algeria, Bahrain, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Ghana, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Morocco, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the United Arab Emirates said they rejected the Camp David accords, which in their opinion created further obstacles to a peaceful settlement. They blamed Israel's intransigence and its ignoring of United Nations resolutions for the deadlock.

Mongolia, Poland, the USSR and Viet Nam also expressed disapproval of the accords and the separate treaty. Poland said that, as most of the Arab countries and the socialist States of Eastern Europe had anticipated, the treaty had not only failed as a first step towards a comprehensive settlement, but had played straight into the hands of Israel, which had intensified its expansionist policies.

Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, India, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Sweden, Uruguay and Zaire approved some aspects of the accords as a positive step towards breaking the deadlock.

Sweden welcomed the bilateral treaty as a first step towards the application of Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973). In Sweden's view, those resolutions must be supplemented by recognition of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people; a final peace settlement could be comprehensive and lasting only if all parties concerned, including PLO, took part in it. Sweden had repeatedly expressed its firm rejection of the Israeli settlement policy in the occupied territories.

Romania and the USSR said that the question of Palestine was a matter of a people's fundamental right to self-determination, including the right to set up its own State. They believed that negotiation between the parties directly concerned was the only way to resolve the problem and that the participation of PLO was a prerequisite for reaching a viable solution. Romania considered that it was particularly important to organize under the aegis of the United Nations an international conference with the participation of all the parties concerned, including PLO and the two Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Peace Conference. It was Romania's opinion that positive action by the Council on Assembly recommendations concerning the Palestinian question could create the necessary conditions for a just and lasting peace in the region.

Jordan said Israel's occupation of Arab land had been the longest that the contemporary world had witnessed. Systematic despoliation and colonization of the occupied land were taking place. In Jordan's view, by means of organized violence Israeli occupation was unilaterally delimiting areas that Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) had envisaged being determined by multilateral negotiations and agreements under United Nations auspices and with the participation of all parties concerned. In this connexion, Jordan restated that Israeli military withdrawal from Arab Jerusalem was a prerequisite to any just and lasting peace.

Lebanon pointed out that there could be no peace in the Middle East without peace for Palestinians, and that although peace in Lebanon was linked to the question of Palestine it could not wait until attainment of peace in the entire Middle East.

Egypt stated that it had embarked upon the battle for peace to restore both the rights of the Palestinian people and Arab and Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem. Israel could not claim sovereignty over those territories. Egypt recalled to the Assembly the commitment within the context of the Camp David accords to implement Council resolution 242(1967) in all its parts, the United Nations Charter and the principles of international law, as well as commitment to the participation of all the parties concerned with the solution of the Palestinian problem in all its aspects and the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. Egypt supported the Committee's recommendations, which it said were designed to enable the Palestinians to recover those rights. Egypt recognized that the Camp David framework did not constitute the final settlement of the Palestinian problem. It asserted, however, that the accords had shattered the stalemate, had wrenched from Israel concrete commitments for the benefit of the Palestinian people, and thus had been the first constructive step towards a sound resolution of the problem.

A number of States endorsed the Committee's recommendations. These included Algeria, Bahrain, Bulgaria, Democratic Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and the USSR. The Syrian Arab Republic said the Council should support those recommendations as the Assembly had done.

Ireland, on behalf of the European Community, expressed the Community's reservations concerning those recommendations, considering that they suffered from a fundamental lack of balance. Israel and the United States opposed the recommendations.

Ireland reaffirmed the following principles of the Community's London declaration of 29 June 1977 for a Middle East settlement: the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force; the need for Israel to end the territorial occupation which it had maintained since 1967; respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of all States in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries; and recognition that, in the establishment of a just and lasting peace, account must be taken of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians.

Ireland said that those principles, together with resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973), taken as a whole, set the essential framework for a comprehensive peace settlement.

China said that the question of Palestine was at the heart of the Middle East problem, and the struggle of the Palestinian people to regain their national rights was inseparable from the struggle of Arab countries to regain their lost territories. It stated that Israel, in its hostile acts against the Palestinian and other Arab peoples, had the support of the super-powers, locked in rivalry for oil resources and strategic areas in the Middle East: one continued to shield the Israeli aggressors, while the other seized every opportunity to infiltrate, expand and disrupt the unity of Arab countries. China expressed the hope that effective measures would be adopted for the implementation of constructive United Nations resolutions affirming the national rights of the Palestinian people.

Burundi, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Mauritania, Mongolia, Qatar, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire were among States that expressed gratification concerning the work of the Committee.

The Assembly then adopted four resolutions on the question of Palestine: resolutions 34/65 A and B on 29 November, and resolutions 34/65 C and D on 12 December.

Resolution 34/65 A, sponsored by Algeria, Benin, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mozambique, Pakistan, Qatar, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia, was adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 14, with 16 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby expressed grave concern that no just solution to the problem of Palestine had been achieved—without which a just and lasting peace in the Middle East could not be established—on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the United Nations Charter. It called again for PLO, the representative of the Palestinian people, to be invited to participate in all efforts, deliberations and conferences on the Middle East held under United Nations auspices, on an equal footing with other parties. The Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Committee, expressed regret that they had not been implemented and that the Council had not taken the action the Assembly had urged it to take in 1977,49 and again urged the Council to do so. It authorized and requested the Committee, if the Council failed to consider or to take a decision on those recommendations by 31 March 1980, to make appropriate suggestions.

The second resolution, 34/65 B, sponsored by Algeria, Benin, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Madagascar, Mozambique, Pakistan, Qatar, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia, was adopted by a recorded vote, requested by Algeria, of 75 to 33, with 37 abstentions.

The Assembly reaffirmed that valid agreements purporting to solve the problem of Palestine must be within the framework of the United Nations, its Charter and its resolutions and with the participation of PLO. Noting with concern that the Camp David accords had been concluded outside that framework and without PLO participation, the Assembly rejected those provisions which ignored, infringed, violated or denied the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return, the right of self-determination and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter, and which envisaged and condoned continued Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territories it had occupied since 1967. The Assembly strongly condemned all partial agreements and separate treaties which constituted a flagrant violation of the rights of the Palestinian people, Charter principles and resolutions adopted in various international forums on the Palestinian issue, declaring that the Camp David accords and other agreements had no validity in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinian people and of the occupied Palestinian territories.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Egypt expressed strong reservations with regard to the paragraphs that referred to the Camp David accords. It proposed that the paragraph by which the Assembly declared that the accords and other agreements had no validity in so far as they purported to determine the future of the Palestinian people and occupied territories be deleted. Gabon and Zaire supported the amendment. The amendment was rejected by a recorded vote of 51 in favour to 56 against, with 30 abstentions.

Israel and the United States said they opposed the resolutions on the question of Palestine in their entirety as totally negative and seeking to undermine the only existing viable framework for negotiations. Norway felt they did not reflect in a balanced manner the principles which must constitute the basis for a comprehensive settlement.

The United States requested the Assembly President to rule, according to Charter Article 18, paragraph 2,⁵⁰ that resolution 35/64 B required a two-thirds majority for adoption. Put to a recorded vote, this motion was rejected by 53 votes in favour to 65 against, with 19 abstention.

Because they considered that the accords were a positive first step towards solving the problems of the Middle East, the Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Finland and Togo had voted against the resolution, and Papua New Guinea had abstained. Bhutan, Lesotho and Mali, which voted for the text, nevertheless noted that they had difficulties with the provisions negating the validity of the accords. Albania, Botswana, Brazil and Sierra Leone, which also voted in favour, observed that they had reservations on some of the wording or ideas in the resolution.

Chile, Costa Rica, Israel, the United States and Uruguay held that the Assembly was not empowered to pronounce on the validity of an agreement between two or more sovereign States, and voted against the resolution. Peru said it abstained for similar reasons.

The third resolution, 34/65 C, sponsored by Algeria, Benin, Colombia, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritius, Pakistan, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia, was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 10, with 12 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts and asked it to keep the question of Palestine under review and to report and make suggestions to the Assembly or the Council, as appropriate. It authorized the Committee to continue promoting the implementation of its recommendations and to send representatives to international conferences it considered appropriate. The Assembly requested the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, and other United Nations bodies associated with the question, to co-operate fully with the Committee. It also decided to circulate the Committee's report to United Nations bodies, urging them to take necessary action in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation.

The fourth resolution, 34/65 D, sponsored by Algeria, Benin, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Tunisia, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia, was adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 15, with 9 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General —in the light of consultations held in accordance with an Assembly request of 7 December 1978⁵¹ to consider reorganizing and strengthening the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights-to redesignate the Special Unit as the Division for Palestinian Rights and to provide it with the resources necessary to discharge the increased responsibilities assigned to it. It also asked him to ensure that the Division, under the guidance of the Committee on Palestinian Rights: (a) continued to discharge the tasks mandated to the Special Unit when it was established in 1977;52 and (b) expanded its programme of work to include the establishment of closer co-operation with non-governmental organizations, the organization of four seminars during 1980 and 1981, sponsoring annual internship programmes, arranging for lecture tours, monitoring developments affecting the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, assisting in the preparation of visual material, such as posters, and expanding the scope of the Division's bulletin to include all items relevant to the question of Palestinian rights. The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Division had the full co-operation of DPI and other Secretariat units and invited all Governments and organizations to co-operate.

The Assembly requested Member States to observe annually on 29 November the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People and to issue special postage stamps for the occasion. It requested the Secretary-General to direct the United Nations Postal Administration to issue commemorative stamps to publicize the grave situation and the rights of the Palestinians and to direct DPI to set up, in consultation with the Committee, a photographic display for the same purpose in the public areas of United Nations Headquarters.

Israel reiterated its opposition to both resolutions adopted on 12 December as calculated to impede the peaceful solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict, and reiterated its opposition to both the Committee and the Division for Palestinian Rights. Norway said its negative votes reflected its reservations on those organs.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

Pursuant to a 1977 Economic and Social Council resolution⁵³ endorsed by the Assembly in 1978,⁵⁴ the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a report on assistance to the Palestinian people by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in consultation with other organizations of the United Nations system. The report contained information received from those organizations on action they had taken, in co-ordination with the Economic Commission for Western Asia, to identify the social and economic needs of the Palestinian people and establish projects to that end. The organizations had also been asked by the Council to consult with PLO on projects to improve socio-economic conditions.

The submission by UNDP contained in the Secretary-General's report indicated that its Administrator had convened in Geneva on 15 and 16 February an interagency meeting at which was established an interagency task force to identify the needs of the Palestinian people, work out a list of national projects for meeting those needs and report to an interagency meeting on 30 April and 1 May. On the basis of that report, the Administrator recommended to the UNDP Governing Council, at its June/July session in New York, 18 project proposals. On 26 June, the Governing Council authorized him to draw upon the Programme Reserve up to $3.5 million to finance those projects, and to accept funds from Governments and intergovernmental organizations to implement them.

The Economic and Social Council considered the Secretary-General's report in its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee. On 18 July, after informal consultations, and on a suggestion by its Chairman, the Committee, without vote, recommended that the Council take note of the report and transmit it to the Assembly at its regular 1979 session. The Council adopted the recommendation, also without vote, on 2 August as decision 1979/53.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/133 by which it noted UNDP's action with satisfaction, endorsed the Governing Council's decision of 26 June, and urged United Nations-related organizations to take steps to implement the Economic and Social Council's resolutions of 1976⁵⁵ and 1977⁵⁶ on assistance to the Palestinian people. It asked the Secretary-General to report on progress to the Council and to the Assembly in 1980.

The Assembly adopted this resolution, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, by a recorded vote of 112 to 3, with 21 abstentions. The text sponsored by 36 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) had been approved by the Second Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote of 96 to 3, with 20 abstentions. In the Second Committee, the sponsors revised the request for a report to include submission to the Economic and Social Council as well as to the Assembly.

In introducing the resolution, Pakistan said that, although the assistance provided for was inadequate, it was nevertheless an expression of the interest of international public opinion and a form of protest against the injustices borne by the Palestinians.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Ireland (on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community), Sweden and the United States, while supporting the programme of assistance to the Palestinian people, disapproved of references in the resolution to earlier resolutions which they could not support. Israel also objected to those references and opposed the resolution. The USSR welcomed the measures taken by UNDP to improve the living conditions of the Palestinian people.

Related General Assembly decisions

The Assembly at its regular 1979 session adopted a number of additional resolutions related to the search for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East.

On 15 November, by resolution 34/28 on the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Assembly expressed grave concern that some States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, ⁵⁷ for reasons beyond their control, were being prevented from fulfilling their obligations under the Convention in parts of their respective territories, referring in this respect to the situation in the Golan Heights of the Syrian Arab Republic. (For details, see p. 802.)

On 23 November, the Assembly, by resolution 34/44 on self-determination, strongly condemned all partial agreements and separate treaties which constituted a flagrant violation of the rights of the Palestinian people, Charter principles and resolutions adopted in various international forums on the Palestinian issue. It also condemned all Governments which did not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of peoples such as the Palestinian people, condemned the expansionist activities of Israel, the continuous bombing of civilian Arab and Palestinian populations, and the destruction of their villages and encampments, and urged international support to the Palestinian people through PLO in its struggle for self-determination and independence. (For details, see p. 833.)

On 11 December, the Assembly, by resolution 34/77, urged concerned parties seriously to consider taking steps to implement a proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. Meanwhile, it invited them to declare solemnly that they would refrain from producing or acquiring nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and to agree to place their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards. The Assembly reaffirmed its recommendation that nuclear-weapon States refrain from actions contrary to this resolution and co-operate with the States of the region in their efforts to promote these objectives. (For details, see p. 48.)

Convinced of the dangers of the development of nuclear capability by Israel, the Assembly, on 11 December by resolution 34/89, appealed to all States to end co-operation with Israel which might assist it in acquiring and developing nuclear weapons and to dissuade corporations, institutions and individuals within their jurisdiction from any such co-operation. The Assembly called on Israel to submit its nuclear facilities to IAEA inspection. Strongly condemning any attempt by Israel to acquire nuclear capability or to introduce nuclear weapons into the Middle East, the Assembly requested the Security Council to adopt measures to ensure implementation of resolutions concerning Israeli nuclear armament. (For details, see p. 43.)

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East."

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977 and 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978,

Recalling also its resolution 34/65 of 29 November 1979, Taking into account the support extended to the just cause of the Polosition people and the other Arch countries in their

Taking into account the support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and for a genuine, comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people, both by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its sixteenth ordinary session, held at Monrovia from 17 to 20 July 1979.

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have continued, for more than twelve years, to be under illegal Israeli occupation and that the Palestinian people, after three decades, is still deprived of the exercise of its inalienable national rights,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied must be returned,

Reaffirming also the urgent necessity of the establishment of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations as well as for its resolutions concerning the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine, Convinced that the early convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East with the participation of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, particularly resolution 3375(XXX) of 10 November 1975, is essential for the realization of a just and lasting settlement in the region,

- Condemns Israel's continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and relevant resolutions of the United Nations;
- 2. Declares once more that peace is indivisible and that a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East question must be based on a comprehensive solution, under the auspices of the United Nations, which takes into account all aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in particular the attainment by the Palestinian people of all its inalienable rights and the Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem;
- Condemns all partial agreements and separate treaties which violate the recognized rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of just and comprehensive solutions to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;
- 4. Reaffirms that until Israel, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, withdraws from all the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, and until the Palestinian people attains and exercises its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by the General Assembly in resolution 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in which all countries and peoples in the region live in peace and security within recognized and secure boundaries, will not be achieved:
- 5. Calls anew for the early convening of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, with the participation on an equal footing of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3375(XXX);
- 6. Urges the parties to the conflict and all other interested parties to work towards the achievement of a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the problem and worked out with the participation of all parties concerned within the framework of the United Nations;
- 7. Requests the Security Council, in the exercise of its responsibilities under the Charter, to take all necessary measures to ensure the implementation of relevant resolutions of both the Security Council and the General Assembly, including Assembly resolution 34/65 A and the present resolution, and to facilitate the achievement of such a comprehensive settlement aiming at the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region;
- 8. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution, to transmit the records of the thirty-fourth session of the General Assembly relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East to the Security Council and to inform all concerned, including the Co-Chairmen of the Peace Conference on the Middle East;
- 9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a report covering, in all their aspects, the developments in the Middle East.

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3375(XXX) and 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 A and B of 2 December 1977 and 33/28 A to C of 7 December 1978.

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Having heard the statement of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people,

- 2. Reaffirms that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be established without the achievement, inter alia, of a just solution of the problem of Palestine on the basis of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return and the right to national independence and sovereignty in Palestine, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;
- 3. Situation in the occupied territories

During 1979, the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council, and the General Assembly and its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories.

The occupied territories consisted of the Golan Heights, the West Bank of Jordan (including East Jerusalem), the Gaza Strip and the Sinai peninsula. The areas of Egyptian territory under Israeli military occupation were to be modified in accordance with an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty which came into force on 25 April 1979.

Also during the year, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of communications concerning the treatment of the civilian population in the occupied territories.

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council

At its session in February/March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights adopted several resolutions on the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East.

By the first resolution, the Commission expressed concern over the deteriorating situation in those territories, and called on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of the Palestinians. Reaffirming that Israel's settlement policies in the territories were a violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (the fourth Geneva Convention) of 12 August 1949 and United Nations resolutions, and declaring that Israel's breaches of that Convention were war the Commission condemned, demanded that Israel cease, a number of specific practices and policies regarding those territories and their inhabitants. It reaffirmed that all measures taken to change the physical character, demographic composition and institutional structure or status of those territories, including Jerusalem, were null and void, and asked the international community not to recognize them and avoid actions which might be used by Israel in pursuit of its policies. It called on Israel to accord prisoner-of-war status to Arabs detained as a result of their struggle for selfdetermination. The Commission also again condemned the destruction of the Syrian city of Quneitra.

By the second resolution, the Commission expressed concern at the consequences of Israel's refusal to apply the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, reaffirmed the applicability of that Convention, deplored Israel's failure to acknowledge its applicability, and called on Israel to abide by it and other obligations under international law. It urged States parties to exert all efforts to ensure compliance with the Convention's provisions in the occupied territories.

In a separate decision, the Commission decided to send a telegram to the Government of Israel to again express deep concern about reported systematic torture practised by Israel against Palestinian detainees and about the destruction of houses in the occupied territories, calling on Israel to cease those practices forthwith.

By a resolution on the right to self-determination, the Commission affirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to selfdetermination without external interference and the establishment of a fully independent and sovereign State in Palestine, and their right to return to their homes and to regain their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. It also urged support for the Palestinian people through the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO.)

All these decisions were taken on 21 February. (For further details, see p. 818).

By a resolution of 5 September, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, of the Human Rights Commission, called on United Nations Member States to assist peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation to exercise the right to self-determination. It also urged all States and United Nations and other international organizations to enable negotiations to begin immediately between Israel and the Palestinian people, through PLO.

On the same date, the Sub-Commission adopted a resolution deeply deploring Israel's violation of the fundamental rights of the Arab population in Palestine and the occupied territories, and demanding that Israel cease such violations. (For further details, see p. 819.)

On 10 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1979/40 commending the Commission on Human Rights for its vigilance and decisions for the protection of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine, and requested it to pursue its efforts. (For details, see p. 8 19; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Communications (January-March)

A number of communications were received from January to March by the President of the Security Council and the Secretary-General concerning Israeli measures in the occupied territories and related subjects.

In a note verbale of 10 January, Morocco charged that the Israeli occupation authorities in Jerusalem, apparently in order to construct a suspension bridge leading to the Western ("Wailing") Wall, had been engaged since 29 December 1978 in destroying certain parts of the wall adjoining Bab El Maghariba (the Moor's Gate), which was part of the Moroccan Waqf (property used for charitable and religious purposes). Morocco requested the Secretary-General to approach the Israeli authorities as soon as possible with a view to halting that destruction.

Replying on 1 February, Israel said that nothing in the vicinity of Bab El Maghariba had been or was being destroyed and there were no plans to construct a suspension bridge there. Only maintenance work had been carried out to protect the Gate.

By a letter of 31 January, Jordan transmitted the text of a statement issued on 1 December 1978 by Bir Zeit University in the occupied West Bank of Jordan, north of Jerusalem, in which the Israeli military authorities were charged with subjecting the university community to continual harassment. The statement indicated that during the previous few weeks 18 students had been arrested or ordered to appear for questioning before Israeli military authorities. No charges had been levelled against them, although six were still under arrest and a substantial number had been subjected to beating and torture.

Replying on 28 February, Israel said its Government did not impose any academic or administrative restriction on Bir Zeit University, granted university status under the Israeli administration in 1973. It did not interfere in its programme of studies or its day-to-day affairs. However, in recent years, the University had been the scene of student unrest and agitation; terrorist organizations had tried to plant their agents among the students and recruit accomplices. The security authorities were dutybound to take appropriate steps. In Israel's view, the letter from Jordan was an act of political warfare against Israel and an effort to manipulate the United Nations for propaganda purposes.

By another letter of 31 January, Jordan requested the circulation of an article which appeared in The New York Times on 21 January. The subject was the plight of the villagers of Berem and Ikrit in Upper Galilee who had been ordered in 1948 by Israeli troops to evacuate their villages until the fighting ended, and had not been permitted to return since then.

On 12 February, Jordan transmitted, on behalf of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations, an article that had appeared in The Washington Post on 7 February headlined "Allegations of Israeli torture contain grisly descriptions."

By a letter of 2 February, the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted two letters of 31 January to the Secretary-General from the Deputy Permanent Observer of PLO to the United Nations, by one of which he charged Israeli forces with demolishing on 30 January the homes of eight Palestinian families in Nablus and in a Jerusalem suburb, and with deporting a Palestinian student. (See also p. 325.)

In a letter of 9 February, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People conveyed his concern about the recurrence of systematic repressive measures by the Israeli authorities against the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. A similar letter of 2 March from the Acting Chairman of the Committee annexed a list of press reports of violations of Palestinian rights and of Israeli settlements in the occupied Arab territories. (See also p. 362.)

By a letter of 13 February, Egypt transmitted the text of a message of the previous day from its Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, expressing his Government's concern over reports of deteriorating conditions in the occupied territories, over Israel's policy of settlement and colonization there, and in particular over reports of torture of Arab detainees in Israeli prisons.

On 23 February, Jordan requested the convening of a Security Council meeting to consider what it called the ominous and accelerating erosion of the status of Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Arab territories in consequence of the Israeli occupation authorities' systematic, relentless and deliberate policy and practice of settlement and colonization.

By a letter of 5 March, Senegal, in its capacity as Chairman of the Islamic Conference, transmitted the text of a Declaration issued on 2 March by the 42 Islamic Member States of the United Nations, strongly supporting the request for an urgent meeting of the Council. In the Declaration, the Islamic States expressed their profound concern at the current process of despoliation and colonization of the Holy City of Jerusalem. Calling for Israel's withdrawal, they considered all such measures taken by Israel to be illegal and in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 as well as of international law and United Nations resolutions.

By a letter of 7 March, Jordan transmitted: (a) a map showing Israeli settlements on the West Bank as at 31 December 1978; (b) a list of 79 settlements constructed by Israel in the occupied Arab territories between 1967 and 1979; (c) a letter of 12 December 1978 from the Chairman of the Islamic Commission in Jerusalem to the Prime Minister of Jordan complaining of acts of desecration by the Jewish settlers of Qiryat Arba in Hebron, transforming the mosque of Al-Haram Al-Ibrahimi Ash Sharif (the Mosque of Hebron) into a synagogue, and subjecting Arab worshippers to acts of aggression; and (d) a letter of 21 February to the President of the United States from a United States citizen complaining about the confiscation of a piece of land owned by his family in Beit Safafa, Jerusalem.

Consideration by the Security Council (March)

The Security Council considered the situation in territories occupied by Israel at eight meetings on 9, 12 to 16, 19 and 22 March in response to Jordan's request.

The representatives of Democratic Kampuchea, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Mauritania, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yemen and Yugoslavia were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Kuwait, in a letter of 8 March, had requested the participation of the representative of PLO in the meetings. If the proposal was approved, the Council President stated, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as were conferred when a Member State was invited to participate under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.58

The United States said that it could not agree that PLO should participate with the same rights as Member States. At its request, the Council voted on Kuwait's proposal, which was adopted by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom).

The President, with the consent of the Council, also extended an invitation under rule 39⁵⁹ to a Vice-Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, at his request.

Opening the debate, Jordan said that by the end of 1978 Israel had established 80 settlements and some 69 residential areas on private land. The strategic objectives of Israel's policy of colonization consisted of three substantial belts of settlements: almost the whole of the Jordan Valley on the West Bank; nine agricultural and industrial complexes, with the objective of containing the Palestinian population by encircling them; and the establishment of a chain of colonies along the entire length of the western highlands of the northern, central and southern parts of the West Bank, to move the former Israeli armistice line inside the Palestinian-populated areas. To supplement the plan, several highways had been constructed or were under construction to connect 1948 Israel with the three belts.

The main objective of the high-rise residential fortresses ringing Jerusalem was to create a psychological feeling of living in a ghetto, in the hope of causing the Palestinians of Jerusalem to emigrate.

By digging below the foundations of the Al-Aqsa Mosque, Israel threatened it with eventual collapse. The holy sanctuary of Al-Haram Alibrahimi in Hebron had been converted in part to a Jewish synagogue.

Jordan urged the Council to resolve that an immediate moratorium be imposed on further colonization and expropriation of Palestinian and other occupied Arab lands, to send a commission to investigate the situation and report back by 1 May on the authenticity of Jordan's complaint, and, if the commission's findings confirmed the substance of the complaint, to exercise its power under the Charter, including Chapter VII,60 to ensure Israel's compliance.

Support for Jordan's proposals was expressed by Bangladesh, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Iraq, Kuwait, Qatar, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam.

During the debate, the Arab countries generally voiced concern and anger over Israel's colonization policies and its violation of the human rights of the Arab and Palestinian peoples. The German Democratic Republic, Iraq, Qatar, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yemen also expressed their readiness to support the application of sanctions against Israel if it continued to defy the Council.

Kuwait said that Israel was not only violating international law; it was trying to replace Charter principles in the occupied territories by a concept based on mystical affinity. The new Israeli language referred to the West Bank as Judaea and Samaria; Jerusalem was said to be unified, not annexed; and Arab lands were no longer confiscated, but closed off. This was Israel's way of describing the situation in the occupied territories; the Council must act in a manner that accorded with the Charter and its provisions.

Israel said that since the 1978 Camp David accords, remarkable progress had been made in the direction of peace, showing that the principles contained in that framework were constructive, sound and more fruitful than any peace efforts which the region had known in the past 30 years. Jordan had been invited to join the peace negotiations. It had rejected that invitation and continued to do so. The sudden urgency which Jordan had claimed for the current debate had been occasioned only by the momentous talks which it knew were soon to be held in the Middle East. It was no coincidence that the Council was pressed into meeting on the eve of the arrival in Jerusalem of the President of the United States. The Jordanian initiative was an obstructive step to the cause of international peace. it should be within the power of the Council to resist manipulation and to allow the current peace process, where all the issues would find their rightful place and appropriate solution, to succeed.

According to Israel, the real issue of the Middle East conflict was not Israeli presence in Judaea and Samaria but the refusal of many of Israel's neighbours to recognize its basic natural rights to statehood and independence in its homeland.

Israel asserted that it had carried out in Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza district an immense and constructive development programme marked by human concern and respect for the Arab identity of the inhabitants. It also maintained that the fourth Geneva Convention did not apply to those areas; the Convention referred to the seizure by one State of territory under the sovereignty of another, which was not the status of Judaea, Samaria and Gaza, and to forcible transfers of the population of an occupied territory. Israel maintained that no Arab inhabitants had been displaced by the establishment of the villages in question.

The PLO representative noted that, by an article of that Convention, the occupying power was explicitly forbidden to deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory occupied. He said that Israel's policy of establishing settlements must be evaluated in the light of a number of reports by international and national organizations, and in the light of repeated assertions by Israeli leaders that the settlements were intended to establish new borders for Israel. Those settlements were not only in violation of the 1949 Geneva Convention; they represented a serious obstacle to peace.

In accordance with an Israeli plan which became part of the Camp David accords, he continued, the fate of the Palestinians would be separated from that of the land: the population would have some "self-rule," but the land would continue to be effectively controlled by Israel. False hopes had been entertained to the effect that through bilateral negotiations peace would be achieved.

The validity of the application of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied Arab territories was reaffirmed by a number of States in addition to the Arab countries, among them France, Indonesia, Iran, Norway, Pakistan, Romania, Somalia, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia.

Egypt recalled that, by various resolutions adopted by overwhelming majorities, the Assembly had determined that Israeli measures and actions in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories had no validity and had called on Israel to comply strictly with its international obligations. Moreover, universally accepted international instruments prohibited the expropriation of properties, the demolition of homes and the transfer of population.

Egypt noted that conditions in the occupied territories were worsening, tension was rapidly mounting and the whole area was fraught with far-reaching and ominous implications for world peace and security. The Council was called on to face its responsibilities and act decisively to bring an end to Israeli occupation. The attainment of a comprehensive, just peace in the Middle East would be achieved through the termination of Israeli occupation of all the Arab territories, including Arab Jerusalem.

A majority of States indicated that Israel's settlement policy in occupied Arab territories was incompatible with a sincere desire for a just and lasting Middle East peace. In that respect, Somalia held that the policy violated international law and the human rights of the population against which it was directed, and deliberately placed serious obstacles in the way of a comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem. It added that the concentration of new Israeli settlements in and around the Old City of Jerusalem was aimed at destroying its Arab and Islamic character and isolating its Arab citizens from other Arab communities.

The Syrian Arab Republic said that 27 settlements had been established in the Golan Heights. Sixteen of these had been installed in Syrian villages, after Israeli authorities had expelled their inhabitants, bulldozed their homes and usurped their land. The growth of settlements was part of a preconceived plan systematically pursued. Israel, with a crisis of overproduction, a lack of vital natural resources and a need for more workers, had been driven to acquire more territory in search of captive markets, natural resources such as water, and sources of cheap labour. By providing the Israelis with economic and military aid, the United States continued to isolate itself as an exception to the almost unanimous condemnation of Israel. The United Nations could not allow Israeli intransigence to continue.

The German Democratic Republic, Jordan and Viet Nam as well as the Vice-Chairman of the Palestinian Rights Committee and PLO also deprecated the role of the United States.

France said that it considered illegal and contrary to international law not only the creation of settlements in the occupied territories but also any unilateral measures that might change their physical and demographic status or the character of their people's beliefs. It was regrettable that such practices could have been continued and even developed, because they seemed to some to run counter to the desire for peace and created new obstacles in the difficult peace-making process. The Council had indicated clearly that peace would not be possible unless Israel withdrew from the territories. France called for respect for international law and asked that an end be put to actions which could only perpetuate tension and violence and jeopardize the chances for a settlement.

The United Kingdom said it had always been opposed to Israel's settlement activity because it could make a negotiated solution to the over-all problem in the area more difficult. Any over-all settlement must be based, among other things, on the need for Israel to end the territorial occupation. The United Kingdom considered that the imminent signing of a peace agreement between Israel and Egypt was a first step in the struggle to achieve a genuine comprehensive settlement.

The peace agreement also received the support of Norway, Portugal and the United States but was opposed by the majority of States that spoke.

The USSR said that the Egyptian-Israeli agreement pursued the goal of preserving the current situation in the occupied territories. A great fuss had been made, it said., about the question of how close a link there should be between the separate agreement and the process of granting so-called autonomy to the people of Gaza and the West Bank. Thus an attempt was made to divert attention from the essence of that notorious autonomy. Such attempts, it held, could not mislead anyone, especially in the light of statements made by the Israeli leaders that the West Bank and Gaza were historically Israeli lands. It was the opinion of the USSR that there was a direct link between the separate Israel's treaty and policy of annexation.

Any attempt to bring about a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict in defiance and in spite of the legitimate interests of the people of Palestine was doomed to failure. The USSR supported the just proposals put forward by Arab and other States to the effect that the Council should condemn Israel's policy in the occupied Arab territories and demand a cessation and rescinding of the illegal actions carried out in those territories. To verify compliance with that decision, it would be useful to create a special organ of the Council.

China said that the question of the occupied Arab territories was inseparable from the whole Middle East question. The miseries of the Arab and Palestinian people in those territories were caused by Israel's policy of aggression and expansion and the super-powers' rivalry in the region. Therefore, to achieve a fundamental solution, it was imperative to do away firmly with those powers' interference and sabotage, restore the national rights of the Palestinian people and secure the complete *withdrawal of the Israeli aggressors from all the occupied Arab territories. The Council should strongly condemn the crimes committed by Israel, voice firm support for the just struggle of the Arab and Palestinian people, and adopt effective measures to put an end to Israeli atrocities in those territories.

Concern at the serious encroachment by the occupying authorities on the inviolability of the status of Jerusalem was also expressed by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Jamaica, Jordan, Lebanon, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

On 22 March, the Council adopted, by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States), twice-revised resolution sponsored by Bangladesh, Kuwait, Nigeria and Zambia. By resolution 446(1979), the Council determined that the policy and practices of Israel in establishing settlements in the Palestinian and other Arab territories had no legal validity and constituted a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East It strongly deplored Israel's failure to abide by previous United Nations decisions on this matter, and called on it to abide scrupulously by the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, rescind previous measures and desist from action that would result in changing the legal status or geographical nature or in materially affecting the demographic composition of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

The Council established a three-member commission to examine the situation relating to settlements in the territories, including Jerusalem, to be appointed by the Council President after consulting Council members. The Commission was to report by 1 July 1979, in which month the Council would reconvene to review the situation in the light of the Commission's findings.

Following the vote, the United States said that the content of the resolution generally accorded with its frequently stated position on settlements in the occupied territories: it was opposed to those settlements because they could be perceived as prejudging the outcome of negotiations and were inconsistent with the fourth Geneva Convention and with international law. However, the United States had grave doubts about the utility of a Council commission to examine the settlement situation; Egypt and Israel had made a first important move towards a comprehensive peace settlement in the Middle East, and it was incumbent on the Council not to inject irritants into that process.

The United Kingdom said that, although it supported the concept of fact-finding missions in principle, on this occasion such a mission might serve only to complicate the peace efforts.

By a note of 3 April, the President of the Security Council said that agreement had been reached on the composition of the Commission: Bolivia, Portugal and Zambia.

In a note of 29 June, the President stated that the Commission had requested an extension of the time-limit for the submission of its report to 15 July; no Council members had objected to the request.

Communications (March-July)

Further communications were sent to the Council President and the Secretary-General concerning Israeli activities in the occupied Arab territories before the Council next met.

To a letter of 26 March Jordan annexed the text of a message of 21 December 1978 from an Arab Palestinian woman sentenced to life imprisonment in an Israeli prison. Jordan stated that the message gave an authentic sample of inhumane treatment of Palestinian detainees.

A Jordanian letter of 2 April enclosed a statement issued by the University of Bir Zeit on 12 March—a day of strike to protest what were termed Israeli acts of violence the day before, at a time when United States President Jimmy Carter was visiting Jerusalem. Jordan annexed a chronological list of events at the University, whose authorities charged Israeli forces with storming the campus, firing at unarmed students and imposing a curfew on the town.

Action taken against schools and universities on the West Bank was the subject of two other communications. By letters of 9 and 11 May, Kuwait transmitted complaints of 8 and 11 May from the Permanent Observer of PLO. He indicated that on 2 May Jewish settlers in the West Bank, while holding so-called "independence day" celebrations, committed acts of provocation against Palestinians. Palestinian students had responded by holding peaceful marches. As a result, the Israeli authorities closed the secondary school and university in Bethlehem and Bir Zeit University. One student was shot and wounded, and 70 were arrested.

Replying on 8 June, Israel said that terrorist organizations based in Arab countries had endeavoured to plant agents in the student body and to recruit accomplices. Since the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli treaty on 26 March, student disturbances had increased, reaching a climax on 2 May. In the face of such violence, the Israeli authorities had closed Bir Zeit University until further notice.

By a letter of 3 July, Jordan charged Israel with attempting to destroy Arab educational and cultural institutions in the West Bank. Jordan listed the most recent incidents—the closure of Bir Zeit University, the closure of secondary schools in the cities of Ramallah, Halhoul and Nablus since 7 May, and the closure of Bethlehem University for four days—and called attention to other restrictions on Arab universities instituted by Israel.

Replying on 6 July, Israel rejected Jordan's accusations and charged that, during 19 years of occupation of Judaea and Samaria, Jordan had curtailed educational development, refusing to grant university status to any institution. Israel said that Bir Zeit University had been reopened on 4 July. It charged that Jordan was attempting to manipulate the United Nations to serve its political warfare against Israel.

By a letter of 5 April, Jordan drew attention to what it termed the plight of the inhabitants of Halhoul, in the Hebron region of the West Bank of Jordan. For three weeks, Jordan said, they had been placed under total curfew and confinement in their town and subjected to collective punitive action, following a demonstration to protest attacks perpetrated against them by the Israeli colonizers of Qiryat Arba. That clash had resulted in the death of two citizens of Halhoul. The prolonged siege imposed on the town had resulted in the depletion of water reserves, medicines and foodstuffs, and Israeli prohibition of such supplies to the town had posed a serious threat to the lives of the inhabitants.

On 11 April, Jordan transmitted the text of a communiqué issued on 11 March by the Executive Office of the General Commission of the Islamic Conference for Jerusalem, which had met at Amman following an attack by Israeli elements on the headquarters of the Islamic Commission and the Department of Islamic Waqf in Jerusalem. The Office called on the Arab and Islamic States and peoples to unite in order to defend their sacred places and heritage in the Holy Land.

On 26 April, Kuwait transmitted to the Council President a letter of the previous day from the PLO Permanent Observer, referring to reports in The New York Times of 19, 24 and 25 April that Israel had recommenced the establishment of settlements in the West Bank, adding that such action was in total disregard of Council resolution 446(1979) and was another manifestation of Israel's determination to pursue its aggressive policy against the Palestinian people.

In a letter of 2 May, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People expressed serious concern at a recent decision of the Government of Israel to authorize the establishment of two new settlements in the occupied Arab territories in defiance of Council resolution 446(1979) and clearly demonstrating Israel's intransigence and cynical attitude towards international opinion and the concept of fundamental human rights. He added that statements ascribed to Israeli officials confirmed Israel's intention of establishing further settlements, in complete disregard of world and international law. One such statement, attributed to the Minister of Agriculture, indicated that 27,000 settler families would be moved into the West Bank over the next three years.

On 21 May, Kuwait transmitted two letters of 17 May from the Permanent Observer of PLO, drawing attention to articles published in The Jerusalem Post (international edition) of 13-16 May and The New York Times of 17 May. The first article reported the movement of Israeli settlers to a new settlement, Kfar-Daron, in the Gaza Strip. The second reported that the Israeli President, visiting settlements around Bethlehem on 16 May, had told the settlers he was certain they could remain in their new homes permanently. In the same article, it was reported that a Co-Chairman of the Jewish Agency's Settlements Department had urged the building of new towns of at least 5,000 families each. These statements, the PLO Observer said, confirmed that Israel intended to pursue its illegal occupation and colonization of Palestine in contempt of United Nations resolutions and international opinion and at the expense of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people.

By letters of 6 and 28 June, Kuwait transmitted letters of the same dates from PLO, drawing attention to articles in The New York Times of 4 and 28 June and to another published by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency on 5 June, reporting that Israel had decided to permit the establishment of a new settlement adjacent to Nablus, by confiscating privately owned Arab land, and six paramilitary settlements in occupied Arab territories: three in the West Bank, two in the Gaza Strip, and one in the Golan Heights. It was further reported that the Israeli Prime Minister had stated that settlement was a right and a duty that would continue to be fulfilled.

By a letter of 9 July, Jordan charged that Israel had on 4 June demolished one house and sealed off a number of others in the town of Al-Jariah, near Ramallah, and that their owners had been arrested on the pretext that they had resisted Israeli occupation. Residents of Silwan near Jerusalem had the day before protested the expropriation of their cultivated land near Jericho and in the Dead Sea area, and Israel's Cabinet had approved the establishment of a Jewish settlement, Elon Moreh (Qaddum), on privately owned Arab land 7 kilometres south of Nablus. Meanwhile, Jordan added, the Israeli newspaper Ma'ariv had reported on 7 June on efforts to expand 14 settlements in the West Bank.

By a letter of 16 July, Kuwait transmitted two letters of the same date from the Permanent Observer of PLO to the Council President, protesting in the first what he termed fictitious accusations by Israeli authorities against two West Bank mayors who opposed Israel's so-called plan for "self-rule," and referring in the second to articles in the United States press published on 5 June about the murder of four Palestinian civilians by an Israeli officer in southern Lebanon in 1978.

Report of the Security Council Commission (12 July)

The Security Council Commission Established under Resolution 446 (1979), having held a number of meetings at United Nations Headquarters, New York, since 10 April and after visiting Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Lebanon and Egypt from 20 May to 1 June, on 12 July submitted its report in which it included its conclusions and recommendations.

The Commission noted that before its departure it had received assurances of full cooperation from Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon, as well as from the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and PLO. Israel had informed the Commission that its Government had nothing to hide concerning its action in the territories under its control, that the situation there had been freely examined by numerous impartial observers who had always confirmed its Government's statements, and that Israel was not prepared to have any contact with the Commission. The Commission considered such a lack of co-operation on the part of a United Nations Member State as an act of disregard for a decision of the Security Council. The Commission had in each country met with Government authorities, had received testimony from 42 witnesses, had met spokesmen from local associations and had received some written communications.

According to the Commission's sources, the settlements in the occupied territories numbered 133, including 17 in and around Jerusalem, 62 in the West Bank, 29 in the Golan Heights and 25 in the Gaza Strip and the Sinai. The number of people in those settlements varied. In the area of Jerusalem and the heavily settled West Bank there were approximately 90,000 settlers; in the Sinai the number was under 5,000. The land seized by Israeli authorities covered 27 per cent of the occupied West Bank and nearly all the Golan Heights, and it was the Commission's conviction that number of settlements had been established on privately owned land. Many settlers were said to have military weapons in the midst of an unarmed Arab population, and the Commission had found evidence that the Israeli Government was engaged in a wilful, systematic and largescale process of establishing settlements in the occupied territories, for which it should bear full responsibility.

The report listed several consequences to the local population resulting from Israel's settlement policy. It stated that since 1967 the Arab population had been reduced by 32 per cent in Jerusalem and the West Bank. Syrian authorities had stated that 134,000 inhabitants had been expelled from the Golan Heights, leaving only 8,000 people, or 6 per cent of the local population.

In implementation of its settlement policy, Israel had resorted to methods—often coercive and sometimes more subtle—which included control of water resources, seizure of private property, destruction of houses and banishment of persons; it had shown disregard for basic human rights, in particular the right of the refugees to return to their homeland.

Arab inhabitants living in the occupied territories were pressured to emigrate, and the economic and social pattern of their daily life had undergone drastic and adverse changes. The policy was causing profound and irreversible geographical and demographic changes.

The report cited a genuine desire for peace in the capitals visited and among PLO leaders, and also a deep sense of despair and helplessness, primarily among Palestinian refugees. The settlement policy was widely regarded as a highly negative factor in the achievement of peace in the area.

The Commission recommended that the Council launch a pressing appeal to the Government and people of Israel, reemphasizing the disastrous consequences which the settlement policy was bound to have on any attempt to reach a peaceful solution in the Middle East.

As a first step, Israel should be called on to cease establishing and planning settlements in the occupied territories. The question of the existing settlements would then have to be resolved. The Council might further wish to consider measures to safeguard the impartial protection of property arbitrarily seized.

With respect to Jerusalem, the Commission recommended that the Council call on the Government of Israel to implement faithfully Council resolutions adopted on that question as from 1967. The Council might wish to consider steps to protect and preserve the unique spiritual and religious dimension of the City's Holy Places, taking into account the views of high-ranking representatives of the three monotheistic religions to which Jerusalem was sacred.

Consideration by the Security Council (18-20 July)

The Security Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the occupied Arab territories at four meetings beginning on 18 July to consider the report of its Commission.

The representatives of Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic were invited, at their request, to participate in the debate without the right to vote.

Kuwait, in a letter of 18 July, requested the participation of the PLO representative in the debate. By 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom), the Council approved Kuwait's proposal, conferring on PLO the rights of participation conferred on Member States when invited to participate under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The United States, which requested the vote, did not agree with the procedure for hearing PLO.

The President, with the consent of the Council, also extended an invitation under rule 39⁶² to the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, at his request.

Introducing the report of the Commission, its Chairman, the representative of Portugal, said that in the Commission's view the settlements were being used above all as a political weapon designed to impose Israeli presence on the occupied territories. The Commission was firmly convinced that such a policy violated the fourth Geneva Convention and international law relating to military occupation, and was a major obstacle to a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Although the Commission's mandate included Jerusalem, the report could not reflect the emotion which the Commission felt that question aroused in so many of those interviewed. The Commission had referred to possible protective measures for the Holy Places in Jerusalem that the international community might take, and hoped that it might be possible to make the Holy City a unique meeting place and a place of peace—a point of departure for all to unite in a determination to give it a status that would guarantee and encourage fruitful and fraternal dialogue between men, peoples and religions.

⁶¹ See footnote 9.

⁶² See footnote 10.

Bolivia, a member of the Commission, said that the measures the Council might adopt concerning the status of Jerusalem, incorporating the opinions of highly qualified representatives of the three major monotheistic religions of the world, were fully in consonance with the statements of Pope John Paul II. In that sensitive matter, Bolivia drew attention to the opinions expressed to the Commission by Crown Prince Hassan of Jordan, who had suggested the establishment of an international body to examine that issue.

Zambia, the third member of the Commission, said that Israel's policy of establishing settlements in occupied Arab territories was a twentieth-century version of colonialism. By establishing colonies for Jews and expelling the indigenous peoples, Israel was seeking to legitimize its occupation of lands seized by force. More ominous, the resulting process had triggered a massive displacement of people. Zambia expressed its conviction that Israel had occupied Arab territories for purposes of exploitation rather than so-called security reasons.

With the exception of Israel, which found it tendentious, and the United States, which did not agree with all the points it contained, speakers generally praised the Commission's report and endorsed its recommendations.

Israel said that, like the Palestinian Rights Committee's reports, the Commission's report accepted the views of Israel's avowed enemies, as though they constituted hard and objective evidence. As Israel saw it, despite the Commission's stated intention to evaluate all information freely and critically, the report consisted largely of an uncritical regurgitation of extreme and unrestrained attacks on Israel's sovereign rights. The Jewish people and the State of Israel had the right in principle, as well as in law and in terms of national security, to permanent presence in Judaea, Samaria and the Gaza district. As for Jerusalem, it had known many foreign rulers in the course of its long history, but none of them regarded the City as his capital. The Jewish people alone had always maintained it as the centre and sole focus of its national and spiritual life. Israel's policy with to Jerusalem's Holy Places was governed by the Law on the Protection of Holy Places of June 1967, under which unrestricted access to them was guaranteed to all members of all faiths.

Jordan noted the Commission's view that a correlation existed between the establishment of settlements and the displacement of the Palestinian and Arab populations. The economy of the occupied territories had been made hostage to Israel's purposes—expansion and further aggression. Jordan expressed indignation that the equivalent of $200 million was being poured into Israel, mostly from outside sources. It appealed to the Council to request all those who were contributing vast sums to stop doing so if they were in earnest about safeguarding and promoting the peace and survival of the Palestinian people in their homeland. Jordan felt it was useless to utter brave statements about a determination to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace, and then to act in a manner whose only consequence was to subvert prospects for that peace. Jordan added that Jerusalem had been founded 4,500 years ago by the Jebusite Semitic Arabs, who had called it Uru-Salem, a fact verified by excavations at Ebla in the northern Syrian Arab Republic a few years ago; the founders of Jerusalem were the Palestinians, descendants of those Arabs, and not the Hebrew intruders. Jerusalem did not belong to any race; it was not a monopoly for political Zionism. Even if the whole of the country was returned, without Jerusalem, Jordan would object, not only on its own behalf but on behalf of the entire Arab and Islamic world and peace-loving people all over the world.

The representative of PLO noted that the Commission's mandate dealt only with one manifestation of illegal occupation and its impact, namely, the establishment of colonial settlements in the Arab territories. The Commission, with its recommendation to cease establishing and planning such settlements, was merely reiterating past resolutions; PLO had hoped and expected its members to recommend something more action-oriented. The United Nations Charter contained provisions on how to deal with the contemptuous and the arrogant by imposing sanctions—economic, military and others. As PLO saw it, the establishment of settlements was nothing but military aggression, expansion and annexation.

It appealed to the United States and the other Western powers that financed Israel and its plans to withhold their support. It also expressed surprise that the Commission had failed to make any recommendation concerning the seizure of water resources by the forces of illegal occupation.

In regard to Jerusalem and the other Holy Places, PLO pointed out that the quality of holiness was not in buildings or structures, but in the worshippers and what they worshipped. It was sure that the Commission was concerned not exclusively with the protection and preservation of the unique spiritual and religious dimension of the Holy Places, but also with the fate and rights of the people in the Holy Land.

France said that the situation in the occupied Arab territories was a constant source of concern to the French Government. It was regrettable that the Commission's efforts to solicit the assistance and co-operation of all Governments concerned should have met with Israel's rejection. However, the information the Commission had been able to assemble from other sources justified the growing concern felt by many countries. The facts reported ran directly counter to the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention. In France's view, cause for concern derived not only from the illegality of the settlement policy but also from the fact that it constituted a serious obstacle to the search for a comprehensive settlement to the Middle East question.

Egypt expressed similar views, also regretting that Israel had chosen not to allow the Commission to visit the occupied territories. Reiterating its condemnation of the settlement policy, Egypt voiced particular concern that a number of settlements had been established on privately owned land, despite assurances to the contrary by Israel. The locations of the settlements gave Egypt further cause for concern, based as they were not only on so-called security purposes but also on agricultural designs.

The Acting Chairman of the Palestinian Rights Committee also expressed regret that because of Israeli intransigence the Commission had been unable to visit the occupied territories. He felt that its findings fully justified his Committee's concern and its own recommendations on the various violations of human rights in those territories. It was his Committee's view that the Council should take immediate and decisive action to prevent the disastrous consequences which the settlement policy, if continued, was bound to exert on the situation in the Middle East.

China said that it had always held that the question of Israeli-occupied territories was an inseparable part of the whole Middle East question. To resolve that question required both firm opposition to Israel's policies of expansion and to super-power intervention, and recovery of the occupied Arab territories with realization of the national rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to return to their homeland and establish their own State. China expressed the hope that the Arab world would strengthen its unity against the common enemy. In its opinion, the Council should adopt a resolution strongly condemning the Israeli authorities for their crimes of aggression and expansion, supporting the just struggle of the Arab and Palestinian peoples, and containing more practical measures than those embodied in resolution 446(1979) to stop Israel's atrocities in the occupied territories.

The Syrian Arab Republic said the report supported the contention that Israel's desire for more Arab territory was intrinsically linked to its economic needs as a colonial settler régime. Many of the charges that Arab representatives had brought before the Council had thus been borne out. The Commission's findings would be relegated to the archives as just another United Nations document unless the Council took appropriate measures that could deliver real justice. Such measures, the Syrian Arab Republic believed, should include sanctions as envisaged in Chapter VII of the Charter, although it said it was improbable that Israel's patron would allow the Council to impose such sanctions against its protégé.

The USSR also found that the Commission's report and conclusions substantiated charges by representatives of Arab and other countries and denied by Israel: that Israel did not intend to withdraw from the Arab lands and was instead doing everything possible to keep them. According to the USSR, Israel's colonization of the territories had become particularly provocative since the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. The treaty was, in the USSR's view, nothing more than a deal designed to prevent implementation of the legitimate rights of the Arab people of Palestine, including the right to establish their own State, and had led to a further exacerbation of tension in the region. The USSR remained a consistent supporter of a comprehensive and just settlement in the Middle East. It stressed that the Council must deal very seriously with the content of the Commission's report.

On 20 July, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (the United States), the Council adopted as resolution 452(1979) a draft which had evolved in the course of informal consultations.

By the preamble, the Council: strongly deplored Israel's lack of co-operation; considered that Israel's settlement policy was illegal and a violation of the fourth Geneva Convention; expressed concern about the practices of the Israeli authorities in carrying out that policy in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem; emphasized the need to confront the issue of the existing settlements and to safeguard the impartial protection of property seized; and drew attention to the grave consequences of the settlements policy on any attempt to reach a peaceful solution in the Middle East.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council: commended the work done by the Commission in preparing its report and accepted its recommendations; called on the Government and people of Israel to cease, on an urgent basis, the establishment, construction and planning of settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; and requested the Commission, in view of the magnitude of the problem of settlements, to keep the implementation of this resolution under close survey and report back to the Council before 1 November.

Czechoslovakia and the USSR felt that the resolution was weak and unduly marked by compromise, and that the Council should have adopted measures to ensure the dismantling of existing settlements.

The United Kingdom said that, once the decision to send the Commission had been taken, all United Nations Members should have sought to co-operate with it. The United Kingdom was disappointed that Israel had declared itself unable to do so. An important source of information had thus been denied to the Commission. Inevitably, there were areas where there was room for doubt, but the United Kingdom was in broad agreement with the statistics, conclusions and recommendations in the report.

Following the vote, the United States reiterated its opposition to Israel's policy of settlements in the occupied territories and repeated its request to Israel to cease establishing such settlements. However, since the resolution, like the Commission's recommendations accepted therein, went beyond the question of settlements to deal with such matters as Jerusalem, the United States had abstained. Those questions, as well as such issues as the future of the occupied territories, could be dealt with effectively during negotiations between the parties. Those negotiations were now under way, and the United States hoped they would be extended to incorporate all parties with an interest in them.

On 1 August, the Palestinian Rights Committee Chairman expressed to the Secretary-General deep concern at the fact that the United States, in explaining its abstention in the vote on Council resolution 452(1979), had stated that the resolution, like the recommendations of the Commission which the resolution accepted and incorporated, went beyond the question of settlements to deal with such matters as Jerusalem. Noting that the mandate of the Commission did in fact extend to Jerusalem, the Chairman expressed the Committee's concern that the statement could carry implications of Jerusalem and its environs' being treated as distinct from Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, which would appear to constitute a divergence from the long-standing position of the United States. The Chairman stated that such a development would have farreaching repercussions and would be a matter of serious concern to the Committee.

By a note of 24 October, the President of the Security Council drew attention to a request from the Chairman of the Commission that the time-limit for its report be extended to 10 December. Following informal consultations among Council members, the President reported no objections to the request.

Communications and report (July-December)

From July to December, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of additional communications from various sources dealing with measures affecting the Palestinian people, particularly with regard to Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories and the expropriation of Arab lands.

Kuwait, on 23 July, transmitted a letter of 18 July from the Permanent Observer of PLO, concerning efforts made by 13 Palestinian inhabitants of the village of Salfit in the West Bank to seek an injunction in the Israeli Supreme Court against the expropriation of their land by Israeli authorities.

The Jordanian representative,, in letters of 5 July and 19 September, gave accounts of recent Israeli practices of expropriating Arab agricultural areas in the West Bank, including Jerusalem, on the pretext of security, airport construction or setting up new settlements. He said that the Supreme Court of Israel on 12 July had ordered the Israeli military authorities to stop fencing-in operations and other measures in the Salfit area. He noted other cases before the Supreme Court which involved the expropriation of land in Ramallah and Bethlehem. He cited Israeli press reports that land might also be confiscated in several districts for the construction of dwellings for Israeli army officers. On 19 September, he called on the Secretary-General to use his good offices to put an end to the inhumane practices of the Israeli authorities in the West Bank, including Jerusalem.

By a letter of 9 August, Kuwait transmitted a letter of 6 August from the PLO Permanent Observer, denouncing the seizure and confiscation of Bedouin lands by Israel, reported in press articles. On the same subject, the representative of Jordan transmitted on 5 September an article published in a Haifa newspaper on 24 August in which the author charged that, because of Israeli legislation permitting seizure of Arab lands, the Bedouin of the Negev had become refugees in their own homeland.

By a letter of 19 September, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People expressed the Committee's concern over an Israeli Cabinet decision of 16 September to abrogate provisions prohibiting Israeli nationals from purchasing land in the occupied territories. Similar concern was expressed by Egypt and Jordan in letters of 19 and 20 September.

To a letter of 18 October the Chairman of the Palestinian Rights Committee annexed the text of a master plan for the development of settlements in Judaea and Samaria for 1979 to 1983, attributed to the World Zionist Organization, and charged that a reported recent Israeli Government decision to expand seven of its settlements in the occupied Arab territories appeared to have been taken within that framework.

By a letter of 8 November, Jordan complained that the Israeli authorities had recently expropriated agricultural land belonging to villagers in the Jenin area of the West Bank, and had begun preparations and earmarked funds for the establishment during 1980 in Galilee of 10 new Israeli settlements.

On 30 July, Jordan charged that Israel had refused to permit a Palestinian surgeon to enter Hebron in the West Bank to visit his dying mother.

To a letter of 13 November Kuwait annexed a letter of the previous day from the Permanent Observer of PLO, protesting the arrest and threat to expel the Mayor of Nablus, Bassam Al-Shaka, by Israeli authorities. Concern over his arrest and threatened deportation was the subject of several other communications: a letter and statement of 12 November from Egypt; a letter of 13 November from the Chairman of the Palestinian Rights Committee; a letter of 14 November, in which the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations, requested immediate measures to ensure that the Mayor was not deported; and a letter of 28 November from Jordan enclosing an Israeli newspaper article of 12 November, which contained the text of a recorded conversation between the Mayor of Nablus and the Israeli Military Governor on 6 November covering West Bank issues.

On 14 November, the President of the Security Council issued the following statement:

Following consultations among the members of the Security Council, I am authorized as President of the Council to express, on behalf of the Council, the Council's concern at the imprisonment and threatened deportation of Mayor Bassam Al-Shaka of Nablus. As President of the Council, I can only regret this development which might contribute to an increase of tension in the Middle East region. Meanwhile, the Council will follow developments very closely.

To a letter of 31 December Kuwait annexed the text of a letter of 26 December from PLO to the Council President, charging that the night before Israeli troops had stormed Bir Zeit University in the occupied West Bank and had raided the Jerusalem home of the mother of the PLO Permanent Observer. Replying on 11 January 1980, Israel said that Israeli authorities had entered Bir Zeit University to restore order following student clashes with police on 22 December 1979. In the second case, entry into the private house had been for the purpose of enforcing a civil judgement and impounding items in lieu of municipal debts. An account of the case was annexed to the letter.

On 24 October 1979, the Secretary-General submitted a comprehensive report on all aspects of the situation in the Middle East, as requested by the General Assembly on 7 December 1978.⁶³ With regard to the situation in the occupied territories, he outlined efforts and decisions of the United Nations since the submission of his previous report on 17 October 1978.⁶⁴

Report of the Security Council Commission (4 December)

On 4 December, the Security Council Commission established on 22 March unanimously adopted its second report to the Council.

The Commission had requested its Chairman to establish informal contacts with the Permanent Mission of Israel to the United Nations to ascertain its reaction to the Commission's new mandate. The Chairman had been informed that there had been no change in Israel's policy with regard to the Commission, and therefore the Commission could not count on Israel's co-operation.

The Commission had also sought the views of high-ranking representatives of the three monotheistic faiths with regard to Jerusalem. It appended to its report replies received from the World Council of Churches and from the Holy See.

The Commission stated that since its first report in July it had held five meetings in New ⁶³ See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 340, resolution 33/29.

York, between 5 September and 4 December. It had detected no evidence of any basic positive change in Israel's policy with regard to the construction and planning of settlements in the Arab territories under occupation, particularly in the West Bank. The Commission viewed that policy as having contributed to a deterioration of the situation and as being incompatible with the pursuit of peace in the region.

Israel was still pursuing its systematic process of colonization of the territories, constructing and expanding settlements in the West Bank and planning others. The Commission viewed with particular concern Israel's recent decision to allow its citizens and organizations to buy land in the West Bank and Gaza.

The Commission reiterated its recommendation that the Council should again draw the attention of the Government and people of Israel to the disastrous consequences which the settlement policy was bound to have on any attempt to reach a peaceful solution in the Middle East. It recommended that the Council adopt effective measures to prevail on Israel to cease the establishment of settlements in occupied territories and to dismantle existing ones.

In view of the reported serious depletion of water resources in the territories resulting from Israeli exploitation, mainly for the settlements, the Commission felt the Council might wish to investigate the matter further, with a view to ensuring their protection.

The Commission again strongly recommended that the Council urge Israel to implement fully Council resolutions on Jerusalem adopted since 1967 and desist from taking any measures that would change the City's status, including its pluralistic and religious dimensions.

Report of the Special Committee

The three-member Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories presented its eleventh report to the Secretary-General on 9 November 1979 covering the period from 11 November 1978 to that date.

The report contained a representative crosssection of the information received by the Committee since the adoption of its previous report on 10 November 1978.⁶⁵ The Committee stated that this information had been obtained without the co-operation of the Government of Israel, a continuing obstacle in its work. It had been possible to follow closely the situation of the civilians in the occupied territories by relying on a number of sources, including oral and written testimony, press reports of statements by responsible persons in the Government' of Israel, information submitted by Governments and non-governmental bodies, and unedited films.

The Committee analysed the information in its report into two main categories—the first concerned the Israeli Government's policy of annexation and settlement, and the second concerned the situation of civilians as a consequence of the occupation. As in previous reports, it paid considerable attention to the situation of detainees in the occupied territories, classifying it as a third source of evidence. A special chapter on judicial remedies for the protection of the human rights of the local population was included. The Committee wished to determine whether the judicial system in Israel afforded any protection to the civilian population of the occupied territories.

The report gave samples of the pattern of incidents occurring in the occupied territories and their consequences in the form of arrests, trials and releases.

The Committee held meetings in February, June, September and November. In June it heard the testimony of a number of former detainees released in March. It also decided to extend invitations to municipal leaders from the occupied territories to testify, in an effort to obtain first-hand information on the situation of the population in those territories. In September it heard the testimony of Fahd Qawasma, the Mayor of Al-Khalil (Hebron). In an assessment of all available information, the Committee reiterated its view that the situation of civilians in the occupied territories in general, and of those who were held in detention in particular, continued to give cause for serious concern.

The report noted that Israel continued to carry out a deliberate policy of annexation by expropriation of property and establishment of settlements of Israeli Jewish civilians. Unequivocal statements by Israeli governmental officials concerning this policy supported the Committee's basic assumption that that policy was being implemented in the context of the so-called homeland doctrine, that is, that part of the territories occupied in June 1967 formed part of the Jewish homeland.

The Committee noted that the High Court of Justice of Israel had endorsed arguments according to which reasons of security might be invoked to justify the establishment of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories and the transfer of Israeli citizens to those settlements.

The Committee, after an examination of the effectiveness of the available judicial remedies, felt that such decisions warranted the conclusion that the civilians in the occupied territories did not benefit in any degree by recourse to the Israeli judicial authorities.

The Committee considered that the policy pursued by the Israeli Government denied the local population any opportunity to express its desire for self-determination. It observed that resistance to the occupation was met with individual and collective punishment, contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949.

The Committee concluded that Israel was in fact consciously following a policy which was in violation of that Convention; in that connexion, it referred to articles of the Convention prohibiting annexation of territories under military occupation by the occupying power and prohibiting the transfer of its citizens into those territories. The Committee observed that this policy was implemented largely through the financial support of parastatal or quasigovernmental societies. A new aspect of Israeli policy, the creation of "regional councils" in the territories to co-ordinate services and organizations of Israeli settlement in various regions, was looked upon by the Committee as further evidence of Israel's intention to consolidate annexation.

The Committee recalled that the very fact of occupation constituted a fundamental violation of human rights, a conclusion it had reached from its first report. Daily life in the occupied territories was marked with violence and a large number of arrests. The report quoted figures of the number of arrests, incidents, trials and releases.

The report stated that the policies followed by the Israeli Government with regard to the civilian population complemented those followed with regard to the establishment of settlements in the territories. Measures taken by the Israeli authorities with regard to civilians, purportedly to maintain order, fitted more logically into the general context of the Israeli homeland policy, their main purpose being to demoralize the civilian population by facing it with the constant reality of being a people under military subjugation.

Moreover, the behaviour of Jewish settlers towards the local population contributed to its demoralization and strengthened the Israeli Government in the ultimate realization of its aim.

Referring to several instances where property was expropriated and civilian settlements were then established, the Committee observed that Israel's policy provoked a pattern of resistance by the civilian population. It referred to the frequency and type of incidents as an illustration of this pattern of behaviour.

The Committee noted that prison conditions in general continued to deteriorate and that there was no evidence of efforts to improve them. Although Israeli officials had occasionally made statements acknowledging adverse prison conditions, no remedial measures were taken; the Committee continued to receive reports of serious overcrowding, physical abuse and lack of adequate medical attention in prisons.

The Committee reiterated the proposal that it had made in previous years for the adoption of an arrangement⁶⁶ based on the protecting-power formula envisaged under the fourth Geneva Convention in an effort to ensure protection of the civilian persons in the occupied territories.

The report of the Special Committee was considered by the General Assembly's Special Political Committee, which also had before it a number of communications (see sections above). One of these annexed, to a letter of 29 November from Iraq to the Secretary-General, three summaries of cables filed by the United States Consulate General in Jerusalem in 1978 and early 1979, based on interviews with visa applicants who had charged that Israeli torture of Palestinian political prisoners was a systematic practice. The Secretary-General also reported to the Assembly, describing measures he had taken to carry out an Assembly request of 18 December 1978 that he provide the Special Committee with the necessary resources and ensure the widest possible dissemination of information on its activities.67 He outlined measures taken by the Department of Public Information to ensure the widest circulation of the Committee's reports and findings.

The Special Political Committee discussed the Special Committee's report at six meetings between 26 November and 7 December, following which it recommended three resolutions for adoption by the Assembly.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted a three: the first resolution—34/90 A—concerned the work of the Special Committee. By its operative provisions, the Assembly commended the Committee for its efforts, thoroughness and impartiality, deplored Israel's continued refusal to allow the Committee access to the occupied territories and called on it to do so.

The Assembly deplored Israel's continued and persistent violation of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 and condemned in particular those violations termed "grave breaches" in the Convention. Condemning a number of specific Israeli policies and practices, the Assembly demanded that Israel desist forthwith from: annexing parts of the occupied territories; establishing and expanding Israeli settlements on Arab lands, and transferring an alien population there; evacuating, deporting, expelling, displacing or transferring Arab inhabitants and denying their right to return; confiscating and expropriating Arab property and other transactions for acquiring land in the territories; destroying Arab houses; mass arrests, administrative detention, mistreatment of the Arab population and detainees, pillaging of archaeological and cultural property, or interfering with religious freedom, family rights or customs; and exploiting the resources and population of the occupied territories.

The Assembly reaffirmed that all Israeli measures to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories or any part of them, including Jerusalem, were null and void. Israel's policy of settling its population and new immigrants in the territories constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions, and the Assembly demanded that Israel desist immediately.

The Assembly reiterated its call on all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including aid, that might be used by Israel to pursue its policies.

The Committee was requested to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories, including the treatment of civilians in detention, to consult with the International Committee of the Red Cross as appropriate to safeguard human rights, and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose. The Secretary-General was requested to render all necessary facilities to the Committee, including additional staff, to ensure the widest circulation of its reports, activities and findings, and to report to the Assembly in 1980.

The Assembly adopted this resolution by a recorded vote of 111 to 2, with 31 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 7 December by a recorded vote of 87 to 3, with 25 abstentions, as sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Nigeria and Pakistan.

By the second resolution—34/90 B—the Assembly reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 was applicable to Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem. Deploring Israel's failure to acknowledge that, it called on Israel to comply with that Convention's provisions in those territories. The Assembly urged the States parties to that Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions.

This resolution was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 140 to 1, with 4 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 7 December by a recorded vote of 113 to 1, with 2 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan and Yugoslavia.

By the third resolution—34/90 C—the Assembly expressed grave anxiety and concern over the serious situation resulting in the occupied territories from Israel's continued occupation and the measures taken by its Government, as the occupying power, to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of these territories. The Assembly called on Israel to comply strictly with its international obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention and to desist forthwith from taking any such measures in the territories, including Jerusalem. It determined that all such measures and actions had no legal validity and constituted a serious obstruction to efforts aimed at achieving a just and lasting peace. The Assembly strongly deplored Israel's persistence in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements. It urged all States parties to the fourth Geneva Convention to exert all efforts to ensure compliance with its provisions in all the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 140 to 1, with 4 abstentions. The Special Political Committee had approved the text on 7 December by a recorded vote of 113 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Guinea-Bissau, India, Indonesia, Madagascar, Mali, Pakistan and Turkey.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Austria and Ireland (on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community (EEC)) said they had voted in favour of resolution 34/90 B and fully shared the view that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable. Ireland said that EEC had supported resolutions 34/90 B and C. Their position on Israel's settlement policy was unchanged. They had abstained on resolution 34/90 A, objecting to the references to torture since there was no conclusive proof. Finland also said it had abstained on resolution

34/90 A because of reservations in that regard, but had voted in favour of 34/90 B on the understanding that nothing in the text contradicted Security Council resolution 242(1967).⁶⁸

Australia said that it understood, in voting in favour of resolution 34/90 C, that the term "Palestinian and other Arab territories" referred only to the territories occupied in 1967. Austria, Norway and Sweden said their votes in favour were based on the understanding that that term meant the territories referred to in resolution 242(1967).

Guatemala said that, although it recognized that violations of human rights must be condemned in every case and agreed with the principles set forth in the three resolutions, it could not accept some of their provisions.

The United States said resolution 34/90 A contained accusations with little or no basis and would be prejudicial to the peace process. The United States was in favour of resolutions 34/90 B and C, however, and hoped that they would prompt Israel to reconsider the policies it was applying in the occupied territories.

Israel objected to the terminology of all three resolutions and rejected them as obstructing the ongoing peace process and aggravating the existing situation.

Introducing the Special Committee's report in the Special Political Committee, the Committee Chairman said that, given Israel's refusal to co-operate, his Committee had been obliged to collect its information from other sources. However, the fact that Israel had continued its policy of annexation and settlement was often demonstrated by admissions from Israeli sources.

Challenging the accuracy of the Committee's factual reporting, Israel said the Committee had studiously ignored any information from authoritative Israeli sources that shed a different light on the subject. The Committee's conclusions, it said, were formulated for the purpose of discrediting Israel. Israel claimed that earlier annexations, such as Jordan's in 1950, had been illegal, and consequently the fourth Geneva Convention did not apply to the Israel-administered areas. The article on which the Committee based its claim that Israeli settlements were not allowed in those areas banned forcible transfers, not voluntary acts of individuals taking up residence. Israel wished once again to record its emphatic rejection of the Special Committee's report.

Nigeria and Pakistan said that the international community could not accept Israel's contention that the fourth Geneva Convention could not be applied to the situation in the occupied territories. Israel had ratified that Convention without reservation; it must be applied by all parties and in all circumstances.

The representative of PLO said the Special Committee's report reflected increasing Israeli repression of the population of the occupied territories. The so-called legal process in the territories was a travesty of justice, he said. The autonomy talks proposed in the Camp David agreements had been rejected by Palestinians everywhere as a violation of their inalienable rights and their right determination. Concerning Israel's refutation of allegations of torture, those practices had been verified by recognized international human rights organizations.

Arab countries, together with Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, China, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mongolia, Nigeria, Pakistan and Tunisia, expressed appreciation to the Special Committee for its report They considered it to be factual and objective, in spite of the many obstacles created by the Israeli authorities.

Ireland, speaking for the EEC members, said the Special Committee had not had access to sufficient first-hand material to give its report adequate authority. Ireland felt that in spite of this the report cast light on disquieting aspects, especially concerning conditions of detention and treatment of prisoners.

Kuwait identified the major trends of Israel's policy as shown in the Committee's report: intensification of the settlements policy and, linked to that, extension of the area of public and private lands being claimed by the Israeli Government for that purpose; increasing control by Israel of the territories' water resources; removal of the ban on acquisition of land in the occupied territories by Israeli individuals or companies; establishment of regional and local councils to administer Israeli settlements; a rise of organized Israeli terrorism in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip; and a concerted attempt to wipe out feelings of Palestinian identity in the young people of the territories.

Arab countries generally considered that the intensification of expropriation and expulsion measures and the increase in the number of settlements had an obvious purpose—to enable Israel to establish itself more firmly in the territories in order to effect a permanent annexation. They also considered that: the situation continued to deteriorate as Israel continued to display total disregard for the decisions of the international community; Israel was altering the geographical and demographic character of the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention; Israel's attitude in refusing admission to the Special Committee confirmed suspicions that it was seeking to cover up serious human rights violations committed against the inhabitants of the occupied Arab territories; and the United Nations must face up to its responsibility and redouble its efforts to protect the human rights of the Palestinian people, bring about compliance by Israel with its decisions concerning those territories, and in particular end Israel's occupation.

General concern was expressed for the civilian population. Its reaction to occupation produced a pattern of incidents: army intervention to stop hostile demonstrations, ensuing mass arrests and unsatisfactory legal remedies to protect persons arrested by the Israeli authorities on the pretext of security offences. It was the opinion of most States that the basic human rights of civilians were constantly and violently set aside in the occupied territories.

Deportation of the Mayor of Nablus

On 13 November, the Secretary-General received a letter from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya; it forwarded, under cover of a letter from the Permanent Observer of PLO, a letter of the same date from the Chairman of PLO's Executive Committee. The Secretary-General was urged to intervene with the Israeli occupation authorities to prevent the deportation of Bassam Al-Shaka, Mayor of Nablus. The Chairman also warned that the authorities planned to deport the Mayors of Ramallah and Al Bireh, who were to be brought to trial on 22 November on what he called a trumped-up charge of preventing a policeman from performing his duties, and were threatening to prosecute the Mayor of Halhoul on charges of committing administrative contraventions. Secretary-General also reported that he had received complaints on the matter from Egypt on 12 November, from Jordan and from several non-governmental organizations.

The President of the Security Council was informed of the decision of the Israeli authorities by Kuwait, which on 13 November transmitted a message from PLO's Permanent Observer, and on 14 November by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, current Chairman of the Arab group. On that day, the Council President made a statement expressing the Council's concern. (Seep. 392.)

The Secretary-General brought the matter to the attention of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices and also informed the Palestinian Rights Committee.

On 15 November, prior to the Special Political Committee's discussion of the Special Committee's report, the United Arab Emirates requested the Special Political Committee to consider as a matter of urgency the situation in the occupied territories arising from Israel's decision to expel the Mayor of Nablus and at the same time introduced a draft resolution on the subject sponsored by 26 States (see DOCUMENTA-RY REFERENCES below). The Committee decided that it was competent to deal with the matter, by a recorded vote, requested by Israel, of 89 to 2, with 13 abstentions. After further discussion, in which France and Israel contended that in accordance with the rules of procedure the draft resolution should not be voted on the day it was introduced, the Committee decided, by a recorded vote, also requested by Israel, of 77 to 17, with 8 abstentions, to proceed to an immediate vote on the text.

At the request of the United Arab Emirates, a recorded vote was taken on the resolution, which was approved by 85 votes to 1, with 21 abstentions.

On 16 November, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 132 to 1, with 1 abstention, adopted the text as resolution 34/29. Noting with concern the decision of the Israeli authorities to deport the Mayor of Nablus and gravely concerned at the resignation of other mayors in the occupied Palestinian territory as result of that decision, the Assembly called on Israel to rescind the deportation order and asked the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly as soon as possible on the implementation of this resolution.

The United Arab Emirates said that Israel had decided to deport the Mayor on the pretext that he had been supporting certain activities of freedom fighters. The Mayor had then asked other mayors in the occupied areas to explain on Israeli television the reasons for his conduct. The Israeli authorities had refused to permit the telecast, and 25 mayors had then resigned. Strikes and demonstrations had followed, and casualties had resulted.

Israel said that the decision to deport the Mayor had been taken in conformity with the laws of Judaea and Samaria, otherwise known as the West Bank. The Supreme Court of Israel would shortly issue a ruling in response to an appeal. In Israel's view, it was pointless to pursue the matter. Moreover, Israel said the resolution's sponsors had been hypocritical in expressing concern at the resignation of 25 West Bank mayors, since they were aware that those mayors had been forced to resign as a result of threats from PLO.

In explanation of vote, Austria, Ireland (on behalf of the EEC), Sweden (on behalf of the five Nordic countries) and the United States affirmed their positions on the phrase "occupied Palestinian territories" to mean the territory occupied. by Israeli armed forces in the 1967 war and within the meaning of that referred to in Security Council resolution 242 (1967).⁶⁹ The United States reserved its position on that point.

On 24 November, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly in pursuance of resolution 34/29. He outlined the developments that had led up to adoption of that resolution, including communications and meetings with representatives of interested States. He noted that the Permanent Mission of Israel had been informed at the same time as the Special Committee and the Palestinian Rights Committee of the Secretary-General's concern regarding the arrest and impending deportation of the Mayor of Nablus.

Immediately following adoption of resolution 34/29, the Secretary-General had requested the Prime Minister of Israel to provide all relevant information concerning its implementation. On 20 November, he had received a reply from the Prime Minister, stating that the decision to expel the Mayor of Nablus would shortly be reviewed by the Supreme Court of Israel, and drawing attention to the phrase "occupied Palestinian territory" in the Assembly's resolution, which Israel considered to be false and misleading.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly's regular 1979 session on the social and economic impact of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Arab territories, as the Assembly had requested on 18 December 1978.70 In preparing the report, the Secretary-General had been asked to consult with PLO and to collaborate particularly with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) and the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices.

The Secretary-General reported that, in response to his requests that three consultant 'experts be given free access to the occupied territories, the position of the Government of Israel was that a mission was unnecessary because a number of visitors' reports were available recording an improvement in the living conditions of Palestinians in those territories. Similar attempts by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) to dispatch the mission had met with the same response.

The Secretary-General would continue his efforts as soon as circumstances permitted.

A report of PLO, made by a member of the Jordanian Parliament for the occupied West Bank, was appended to the Secretary-General's report.

Also in implementation of the Assembly's 1978 resolution, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), by a decision of 3 May, requested the UNEP Executive Director to ensure an adequate assessment of the environmental conditions of the Palestinian people. After consulting. with the Secretary-General, the Executive Director requested Egypt, Israel, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as PLO, to provide him with information on the subject. His report, covering major aspects of the impact of the Israeli occupation and based on the information provided by Egypt, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO, as well as information available to ECWA, UNRWA and offices of the United Nations Development Programme in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, was annexed to the Secretary-General's report. The subjects assessed in the report were population and shelter, health, natural resources, the working environment, and the conditions of school buildings.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 120 to 2, with 21 abstentions, resolution 34/113 on living conditions of the Palestinian people. The text, sponsored by 38 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), had been approved in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote, requested by Democratic Yemen, of 102 to 2, with 21 abstentions.

By the resolution, the Assembly noted that the report of the Secretary-General was insufficiently analytical and accordingly requested him to prepare for its regular 1980 session, after consulting PLO and in collaboration with United Nations organs and specialized agencies, particularly UNRWA, ECWA and the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices, a comprehensive and analytical report on the social and economic impact of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Arab territories. All States were urged to co-operate in the preparation of the report.

Israel objected to the one-sidedness of the resolution, which it said could not improve living conditions or be conducive to peace; it could not be expected to co-operate on a resolution which sought to impose the will of one party on the other.

⁷⁰ See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 3.58, resolution 33/110.

The United States said it had voted against the resolution because it injected extraneous political questions into a body concerned with economic and social matters.

Permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/136, on permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories, by a recorded vote of 118 to 2, with 21 abstentions. The text, sponsored by 35 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), had been approved in the Second Committee on 28 November by a recorded vote, requested by Israel, of 104 to 2, with 23 abstentions.

By the resolution, the Assembly called on all States to support and assist the Arab States and peoples whose territories were under Israeli occupation in the exercise of their rights to full and effective permanent sovereignty and control over their natural and all other resources, wealth and economic activities and to the restitution of and full compensation for the exploitation, depletion and loss of and damages to their natural, human and other resources, wealth and economic activities. It reaffirmed that all Israeli measures taken in this connexion were illegal, and called on it to desist forthwith from all such measures and to meet the just claims of the Arab States and peoples. It also asked all States, international organizations, investment corporations and other institutions not to recogize or co-operate with any measures taken by Israel to exploit the resources of the occupied effect territories or to changes in demographic composition, geographic character or institutional structure.

The Secretary-General was requested to prepare a report in 1980 taking into account specific areas of loss noted by the Assembly in 1977,71 such as adverse economic effects since 1975, human and military losses, loss of and damage to items of national, religious and cultural heritage, losses in the retail trading, small industry and farming sectors, and the full impact of occupation on Arab development.

In explanation of its negative vote, Israel said international law and specific United Nations resolutions had entrusted it with responsibility for the security of the territories and the safety of their population; the military administration had been in accordance with those requirements and had even surpassed them in promoting the socio-economic development of the population.

Ireland (on behalf of the nine EEC members) and the United States said that the subject was not within the competence of the Second Committee. The United States added that its negative vote was in accordance with its longstanding position on the issue of permanent sovereignty.

Portugal expressed some doubts on the wording of the Assembly's reaffirmation of the Arab States' and peoples' rights to the restitution of and full compensation for the loss of and damage to their resources.

Resolution 452(1979), as proposed in S/13461, adopted by Council on 20 July 1979, meeting 2159, by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention (United States).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report and recommendations of the Security Council Commission established under resolution 446(1979) of 22 March 1979 to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, contained in document S/13450 and Corr.1 and Add.1,

Strongly deploring the lack of co-operation of Israel with the Commission,

Considering that the policy of Israel in establishing settlements in the occupied Arab territories has no legal validity and constitutes a violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned by the practices of the Israeli authorities in implementing that settlements policy in the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, and its consequences for the local Arab and Palestinian population,

Emphasizing the need for confronting the issue of the existing settlements and the need to consider measures to safeguard the impartial protection of property seized,

Bearing in mind the specific status of Jerusalem and reconfirming pertinent Security Council resolutions concerning Jerusalem, and in particular the need to protect and preserve the unique spiritual and religious dimension of the Holy Places in that city,

Drawing attention to the grave consequences which the settlements policy is bound to have on any attempt to reach a peaceful solution in the Middle East,

- 1. Commends the work done by the Security Council Commission established under resolution 446(1979) in preparing the report on the establishment of Israeli settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem:
- 2. Accepts the recommendations contained in the report of the Commission;
- 3. Calls upon the Government and people of Israel to cease, on an urgent basis, the establishment, construction and planning of settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;
- 4. Requests the Commission, in view of the magnitude of the problem of settlements, to keep under close survey the implementation of the present resolution and to report back to the Security Council before 1 November 1979.

Questions pertaining to refugees in the Near East

In 1979, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) maintained its education, health and relief programmes for Palestine refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip through its own schools, clinics and health centres and its system to procure and distribute rations.

In spite of the continuing insecure situation in Lebanon, programmes were almost fully maintained. In May, UNRWA launched an emergency assistance programme in southern Lebanon to provide some 50,000 displaced refugees with food. From May to July there was a one-time issue of rations to 48,452 persons, and from August to December there were six issues of ration; to an average of 25,185 persons per issue. The refugees who were displaced as a result of military action also continued to receive essential health services.

The Agency did not receive enough voluntary contributions during the year to meet all budgeted expenditures. Income for 1979 was slightly more than $152 million against budget expenditures of nearly $159 million. To overcome this deficit, the basic food ration was kept at the reduced 1978 level, a number of badly needed capital improvements were deferred, and improvements in staff remuneration to keep pace with inflation were not implemented.

On 20 June, the Secretary-General announced the appointment of Olof Rydbeck (Sweden) as Commissioner-General of UNRWA, following the retirement in April of Thomas W. McElhiney.

In November, the General Assembly, by resolutions 34/52 A-F, called on all Governments urgently to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of UNRWA, particularly in the light of a projected budgetary deficit. It also requested that UNRWA'S headquarters be relocated within the area of operations as soon as practicable, and endorsed the efforts of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA to continue humanitarian assistance.

During the year, the number of refugees registered with UNRWA rose through natural increase from 1,778,815 (at 31 December 1978) to 1821,933 at 31 December 1979, of whom about 832,000 were eligible to receive monthly rations and approximately 1.6 million were eligible for health and educational programmes.

The Agency also distributed monthly rations to about 230,000 displaced persons and displaced refugee children (registered with UNRWA for services only) in Jordan at the expense of the Jordanian Government. However, more than 570,000 eligible children did not receive any rations because of ceilings put on the number of ration recipients.

Only about 35 per cent of the registered population lived in camps. At 31 December, there was a total of 645,783 refugees in 61 camps, including 119,535 refugees living in 10 emergency camps established after the 1967 hostilities — six in Jordan and four in the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Agency continued its efforts, in cooperation with the World Health Organization (WHO), to improve the health of refugees through health education and integrated family health care, with emphasis on preventive medicine, including supplementary feeding for nutritionally vulnerable groups. Despite money shortages, specialized medicine programmes and laboratory facilities were improved, and the Agency extended its hot meal programme to all children under the age of eight, instead of six as before. Expenditure on health services totalled $26 million in 1979.

Spending on education increased during the year to $83.4 million, about 52.5 per cent of the Agency's total actual expenditure. The programme, operated with the technical assistance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), included the first nine years of general education (10 years in Lebanon), some assistance for refugee pupils in government and private secondary schools, vocational and teacher training in eight centres, and 351 university scholarships (for the 1978/79 academic year). Of UNRWA'S 16,500 employees, almost all Palestine refugees themselves, nearly 11,200 were working in the educational field, and most of them were teachers (9,227).

In the 1978/79 school year, 311,000 refugee children were enrolled in the 623 UNRWA elementary and preparatory schools, an increase of approximately 4,000 over 1977/78. There were also 84,579 pupils enrolled in government and private schools. Double shifts were necessary in 73.4 per cent of UNRWA schools despite the fact that 33 prefabricated class and administration rooms and 14 standard classrooms were completed during the year.

The eight UNRWA/UNESCO training centres had places for 4,641 young persons. By the end of 1979, more than 30,000 trainees had been graduated from these centres. With most of the Agency's teachers professionally qualified, the UNRWA/UNESCO Institute of Education continued to emphasize refresher courses for qualified teachers and courses in educational techniques to meet special needs and new developments in curricula.

Consideration by the General Assembly

As in previous years, the Assembly considered the question of refugees in the Near East both in its Special Political Committee and in plenary meetings.

The Committee, which discussed the matter' between 17 and 26 October, had before it several reports, including the annual report of the Commissioner-General of UNRWA, three reports by the Secretary-General, a report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and a report by the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA.

Report of the Commissioner-General

In his report covering the period from 1 July 1978 to 30 June 1979, the Commissioner-General, after detailing the various activities of UNRWA, indicated that the year under review had been a very difficult one for the Agency, primarily because of the insufficiency of income in the face of ever-rising costs. The precariousness of UNRWA'S finances was likely to affect not only the future level of its services but also its very existence.

The Commissioner-General said that he intended to follow the previous policy of reducing the Agency's rate of expenditure from 1 January 1980 to a level that could be supported by foreseeable income until the end of 1980, even though that would probably mean further reduction of essential refugee services. Increased income would obviate the necessity of reducing services, and he appealed to all Member States to contribute generously to UNRWA.

Referring to the political factors affecting UNRWA'S work, the Commissioner-General indicated that Israeli military operations against Palestinian targets in southern Lebanon had caused massive and repeated displacement of refugees which had led to serious interruptions of Agency operations and necessitated emergency assistance to some 50,000 displaced refugees. In the occupied West Bank, measures of collective punishment imposed by the Israeli authorities, particularly on students in UNRWA educational establishments, had gravely affected the Agency's services.

In a letter of 29 August included in the Commissioner-General's report, the Chairman of the Advisory Commission of UNRWA, having examined the report, recommended that the Assembly call on the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA to study the deficit and make specific recommendations for measures to increase contributions to the Agency.

Reports of the Secretary-General

In October 1979, the Secretary-General submitted three reports to the General Assembly pursuant to three Assembly resolutions of 18 December 1978.⁷²

The first report concerned offers of scholarships and grants for higher education for Palestine refugees and included the substance of responses by Member States and United Nations agencies to appeals by the Assembly for allocations, scholarships and grants to refugee students. Responding to a 1977 appeal,⁷³ had indicated that it was providing Palestinians with numerous fellowships for higher studies through the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), and Israel stated that opportunities were provided for refugees to attend higher educational institutions in Israel in addition to the direct assistance it provided to them for educational services. Further responses had come from Malta (two scholarships in electrical engineering) and Egypt (currently 13,209 scholarship holders at Egyptian universities).

Several United Nations specialized agencies had also informed the UNRWA Commissioner-General of the assistance they were providing through PLO to Palestinians, including training facilities and fellowships for higher studies.

The Secretary-General's second report concerned Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and the provision of shelters for them. The Assembly, by a 1978 resolution,⁷⁴ had called on Israel to take steps for the immediate return of those refugees to the camps from which they had been removed, and to stop removing them and destroying their shelters. The Secretary-General reported that he had requested Israel to forward to him information on the implementation of the resolution. Israel replied that, thanks to measures it had taken in Gaza, refugees in that district for the first time since 1948 had been given the possibility of moving out of the squalid conditions of the camps into decent, modern housing. Israel would not evict refugees living in new homes, would not adopt the course advocated, by the Assembly resolution, and rejected the suggestions reflected in that resolution.

The report stated that in general the Israeli occupying authorities required refugees who purchased new housing to demolish their camp shelters.

At the same time, the Secretary-General reported that information received from the Commissioner-General indicated that, while there had been no new cases of punitive demolition of refugee shelters, UNRWA had not secured any settlement in respect of its claims for compensation for refugee shelters demolished on punitive grounds in former years. With regard to continuing references by Israel to "squalid conditions" in the refugee camps, the Commissioner-General had again noted that such references were more generalized than was warranted by the facts.

The Secretary-General submitted his third report, concerning the return of displaced inhabitants of the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, in response to an Assembly request for a report on Israel's compliance with its directive that Israel take immediate steps for their return and desist from measures obstructing that return.⁷⁵

The Secretary-General reported that, replying to his request for information, the' Israeli Government maintained that its policy vis-à-vis those who had left the area as a result of the 1967 hostilities remained unchanged; it allowed freedom of movement of people and goods in both directions across the cease-fire line. In 1978, Israel claimed, about 1 million incoming and outgoing residents of the areas, as well as visitors from Arab countries, had taken advantage of that policy. Special arrangements made for the reunification of families had remained in force. However, in implementing that policy, the Israeli Government emphasized that it had to be guided by certain security considerations.

The Secretary-General reported that information obtained from the Commissioner-General of UNRWA indicated that the number of displaced registered refugees who were known by the Agency to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 was about 9,400. The Agency was unable to estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned, since its records accounted only for UNRWA-registered refugees.

Report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Pales tine

In accordance with an Assembly resolution of 18 December 1978, 76 the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine submitted to the Assembly a report covering the period from 1 October 1978 to 30 September 1979. Under the terms of the resolution, the Commission had been requested to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of paragraph 11 of Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 77 and to report to the Assembly by 1 October 1979.

The Commission noted that circumstances limiting its possibilities of action had remained essentially unchanged. It expressed the hope, however, that the situation in the region would improve, enabling it to carry forward its work.

Report of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA

In its report, submitted to the Assembly on 12 October, the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA reiterated its conviction that, as long as a just and lasting settlement of the problem of the Palestine refugees had not been achieved, the Agency's humanitarian services remained indispensable.

It emphasized the gravity of the continuing critical financial situation facing UNRWA in spite of the improvement in the financial management of the Agency's activities as a result of administrative measures introduced by the Commissioner-General in the past few years. Only the continued generous support of a relatively few donors had made it possible to avoid further reductions in UNRWA services during 1979, and the outlook for 1980 gave rise to serious concern.

The Working Group continued to believe that there should be a firm basis for financing UNRWA, as the Agency's services were an obligation of the entire international community acting through the United Nations.

Communications

In a letter to the Secretary-General of 23 May, Jordan, on behalf of the League of Arab States, after referring to UNRWA financial crisis and particularly to a proposed elimination of educational services which would involve 80,000 young refugee children, warned that the cutbacks would lead to very serious repercussions among the refugee population and would impinge on public security and political stability, as well as accentuate the human tragedy of the refugees.

In a letter of 31 May, the United Arab Emirates, current Chairman of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations, stated that the group endorsed Jordan's letter of 23 May and warned against attempts being made to reduce the responsibility of the world community towards the refugees and to transfer it to the Arab States, especially the oil-producing States. Those attempts were part of a calculated scheme to liquidate the refugee problem in complete disregard of all relevant United Nations resolutions. The United Nations must refuse to be a party to any such scheme.

In another letter to the Secretary-General, of 4 June, Jordan expressed regret that its earlier communication might have given rise to confusion as to where responsibility lay in the failure of the United Nations to shoulder its full responsibility towards the refugees and the overburdened host Governments. That failure was attributable to United Nations Member States.

On 28 June, the Secretary-General addressed to the Permanent Representatives of Jordan and the United Arab Emirates identical letters in which he stated that UNRWA depended almost entirely on voluntary contributions, mostly from Governments. He said he would continue his efforts to collect additional contributions and expressed the hope that more contributions would be pledged, so that the Agency could meet its budgeted expenditure in 1979. In this connexion, the Secretary-General mentioned that UNRWA had been able to postpone the decision to close its preparatory schools, but for four months only.

In a comprehensive report to the Assembly of 24 October covering all aspects of the situation in the Middle East, the Secretary-General reiterated, in connexion with the Palestine refugee problem, that UNRWA was continuing to experience difficulty in securing the financial support needed for its services, in spite of successful efforts by its Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions.

In a letter of 27 June, Israel maintained that the cause of UNRWA could not be helped by mis-⁷⁷ Operative paragraph 11 of resolution 194(III) states, in part, that "the refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property ..." representing the origins of the refugee problem and by the continued manipulation of the refugees for purposes of political propaganda. Responsibility for the refugee problem in the Middle East lay entirely with the Arabs, according to Israel.

General Assembly discussion

The Commissioner-General of UNRWA, in presenting his report to the Special Political Committee on 17 October, noted that the Agency's financial situation for 1979 had improved since the submission of his annual report on 3 September. Estimated income for 1979 stood at $143.1 million for projected expenditures of $166.8 million, leaving a deficit of $23.7 million. Improvements in staff salaries and the cost of restoring basic rations to former levels would have to be dropped. Prospects for 1980 were even grimmer than they were at the beginning of 1979.

Three factors contributing to UNRWA'S financial crisis were the increase in the school population by about 10,000 children a year, inflation, and the depreciation of the United States dollar. The proposed budget deficit was so considerable that it might become impossible for the Agency to fulfil its mandate, under which it had to continue its operations until June 1981. He could not risk the Agency's total collapse by continuing services at their current level. He had already cut rations for refugees. If the deficit were not met, it would become necessary to effect substantial reductions in the education programme. That meant closing schools, dismissing thousands of teachers and putting tens of thousands of children out of the classroom. Such curtailment of services would have very serious political consequences.

The representative of Norway, speaking as Rapporteur of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, presented the Group's report to the Committee. He pointed out that with a budgetary deficit of $23.7 million, unless further substantial contributions were received by the end of 1979, the Commissioner-General would be unable to approve certain committed items of expenditure, including the financing of a new $11 million camp in Lebanon, for which $4.75 million had already been pledged. Expenditure in 1980 was, moreover, expected to increase to $185.3 million, and it was feared that the Agency would consequently have to reduce expenditure on education.

In the course of the discussion of this question in the Special Political Committee, general concern was expressed at the Agency's continued financial crisis and the possibility that it might have to curtail essential services because of insufficient funds. Jordan, among others, expressed deep apprehension that UNRWA'S continuing cutback of services might result in host countries' bearing the entire burden of the plight of the refugees.

While recognizing the importance and urgency of providing immediate assistance to the Pales tine refugees, many States emphasized other aspects of the problem. A number of speakers, including those from Arab countries, expressed the view that the refugee problem should be dealt with in all its dimensions.

Romania, the USSR and Yugoslavia, among others, pointed out that the Palestine refugee problem was not merely a humanitarian issue, but rather a major political problem whose solution resided in a just and lasting settlement in the Middle East. Speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, Ireland expressed their belief that the humanitarian aspects of the Palestinian problem were inseparable from its political aspects and should be considered within the framework of a comprehensive settlement.

The United States concurred that there was wide recognition that the plight of the Palestinians called for a political solution which could enable them to live in dignity and self-reliance. Peace in the Middle East was the best means of improving their lot, and the Camp David agreements provided a viable framework for peace.

India and Senegal, in addition to several Arab States and socialist countries of Eastern Europe, expressed the view that a lasting solution of the Palestine refugee problem could only be found on the basis of the realization of the national rights of the Palestinian people and the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Arab territories. In the mean time, the international community had a morally binding obligation to assist' UNRWA. Egypt appealed to the world community to stand firm behind all sincere efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East. As the USSR saw it, there was convincing evidence that the problem of the refugees could not be considered in isolation from the larger Palestinian problem. The only way of achieving a stable peace in the Middle East was through the establishment of an independent Palestinian State, not by granting the so-called "autonomy" proposed by the participants in the Camp David agreements.

The PLO representative reiterated the view that the Palestinian problem could only be solved when the Palestinians were able to exercise their right to self-determination. In the mean time, the Arab countries should not be asked to underwrite the costs of the international decision which had led to the expulsion of the Palestinians from their homeland.

The United Arab Emirates said it was a matter of grave concern that the Conciliation Commission had been unable to discharge its duty. Reorganization of the Commission or a wider membership should be considered.

With regard to the financial situation of UNRWA, European Community countries in particular felt that too small a group of nations supported UNRWA. They expressed the hope that all States, including those most active in supporting the Palestinian cause, would respond to appeals for contributions.

Certain Arab States suggested ways of putting UNRWA'S finances on a firmer basis. The United Arab Emirates proposed that the Agency's budget become part of the regular budget of the United Nations. In Kuwait's view, there should be a role for the private sector and nongovernmental organizations as potential donors to UNRWA. The USSR, however, reiterated its position favouring retention of the voluntary system of financing the work of the Agency.

Some States pointed to difficulties other than financial that UNRWA faced. Lebanon stated that the repeated acts of Israeli aggression against it were increasing the burden of UNRWA because of the resulting displacement of refugees. Egypt expressed a similar view.

A number of Members referred to complaints in the Commissioner-General's report that certain policies of Israel vis-a-vis UNRWA'S Staff seriously interfered with the Agency's work. In this connexion, Austria expressed concern that UNRWA officials continued to be arrested without charges or trial and that there were restrictions on their movements.

Israel maintained that plans for resettling the refugees had been prepared, but were rejected by the Arab States as part of their propaganda war against Israel. Israel said it was regrettable that UNRWA should be supporting a refugee population of some 500,000 Arabs at the expense of the world community.

Decisions of the General Assembly

On 26 October, the Special Political Committee approved six draft resolutions and forwarded them to the Assembly, together with a report detailing its consideration of the item. On 23 November, the Assembly approved all six resolutions without modification.

By the first (resolution 34/52 A), on assistance to Palestine refugees, the Assembly noted with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees had not been effected in accordance with its resolution 194(III), that the Conciliation Commission had been unable to find a means to implement that resolution and that no substantial progress had been made by either repatriation or resettlement. The Assembly reiterated its request that UNRWA relocate its head-quarters-currently in Vienna, Austria, and Amman, Jordan-within the area of operations as soon as practicable. Directing attention to UNRWA'S financial position, it called on all Governments urgently to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of its budgetary deficit.

Resolution 34/52 A, sponsored by the United States, was approved by the Special Political Committee by a recorded vote, requested by Israel, of 116 to 0, with 1 abstention; the Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 140 to 0, with 1 abstention.

Israel, explaining its abstention, said it did not agree with the Assembly's interpretation of resolution 194(III). Many developments had taken place since the adoption of that resolution in 1948, and subsequent Security Council resolutions 242(1967) 78 and 338 (1973) 79 provided for a negotiated solution to the problem without reference to resolution 194(III).

The Syrian Arab Republic said it voted in favour of resolution 34/52 A, but understood its terms to mean that steps should be taken to repatriate rather than reintegrate the refugees and to implement Assembly resolutions upholding the right to self-determination.

Mexico said it voted in favour, even though it considered that the question of relocating UNRWA headquarters fell within the competence of the Secretary-General, not the Assembly.

By the second resolution (34/52 B), on assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities, the Assembly endorsed the Commissioner-General's efforts to provide humanitarian assistance on an emergency and temporary basis to other displaced persons in the area in need of it, adding an appeal for generous contributions to UNRWA and other organizations involved in that work.

Resolution 34/52 B, sponsored by Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Malaysia, the Netherlands, Norway, the Philippines and Sweden, was approved by the Special Political Committee by consensus; the Assembly adopted it without vote.

The third resolution (34/52 C) concerned education for Palestinian refugees. The Assembly, noting that fewer than one per thousand could continue higher education, including vocational training, appealed to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestinian refugees, in addition to their contributions to UNRWA'S regular budget. It appealed to States, agencies and the United Nations University to contribute to the Palestinian universities in the occupied territories and to those States, agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres. It also requested UNRWA to act as recipient and trustee for such allocations and scholarships and to award them to qualified candidates.

Bahrain, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar and Yugoslavia sponsored resolution 34/52 C in the Special Political Committee, which approved it by a recorded vote, requested by Israel, of 117 to 0, with 2 abstentions; the Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 138 to 0, with 2 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, the United States said it had abstained because of the way the resolution was worded, although it would continue to support, through UNRWA and voluntary agencies, its objective.

Israel said that the Arab attitude was directly responsible for the Palestinians' education problem. Israel charged that, during the 19 years of Jordanian rule, West Bank Palestinians had been refused higher education, which Israel permitted. That position was reflected in its abstention.

By the fourth resolution (34/52 D), the Assembly noted with approval the report of the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, commended its work and requested it to continue its efforts for the financing of UNRWA for a further one-year period.

Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Indonesia, Iran, Malaysia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Spain, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Yugoslavia and Zaire sponsored the resolution, which was approved without vote by the Special Political Committee and similarly adopted by the Assembly.

By the fifth resolution (34/52 E), on displaced population, and refugees, the Assembly reaffirmed the right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied since 1967, declared that any restriction on the free exercise of that right was inadmissible, and considered any agreement embodying any restriction on their return as null and void. Deploring Israel's refusal to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants, the Assembly called on Israel to do so immediately and to desist from measures obstructing their return, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories. It asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with UNRWA, to report in 1980 on Israel's compliance.

Afghanistan, Bangladesh, the Comoros, Cuba, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Pakistan and Yugoslavia sponsored the text, which the Special Political Committee approved by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 101 to 4, with 18 abstentions. At the request of Mexico, a separate vote was first taken on the operative paragraph by which the Assembly considered any agreement restricting or placing conditions on the return of displaced inhabitants to be null and void. That paragraph was approved by 91 votes to 6, with 23 abstentions. The Assembly adopted resolution 34/52 E by a recorded vote of 121 to 3, with 16 abstentions.

Explaining its negative vote, the United States said the resolution was needlessly polemical and its terms distracted from the task of improving UNRWA aid to the refugees. Israel said the text was unrealistic and constituted Arab propaganda, as evidenced by the paragraph referring to agreements restricting the return of displaced inhabitants.

Portugal and Spain felt the wording of that paragraph, as well as the one declaring inadmissible attempts to restrict or attach conditions to the right of return, could prejudge the outcome of or hamper current negotiations. Ireland (speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community), Norway and Sweden expressed similar views.

Mexico said it had abstained and had asked for a separate vote on the paragraph concerning agreements because, although it supported the principle on which the resolution was based, it thought it was dangerous to extend the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions to other situations.

By the sixth resolution (34/52 F), the Assembly, recalling the provisions of resolution 194(III) and considering that measures taken to resettle Palestinian refugees resident in the Gaza Strip were a violation of their inalienable right of return, called again on Israel to desist from removing and resettling those refugees and from destroying their shelters.

The resolution, sponsored by Afghanistan, India, Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan and Yugoslavia, was approved by the Special Political Committee by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 117 to 1, with 5 abstentions; the Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 136 to 1, with 5 abstentions.

Ireland, on behalf of the nine European Community States, said that, although they had voted in favour, they felt that the preambular reference to resettlement measures as a violation of the Palestinian refugees' right of return should in no way imply an objection to their freedom to choose new housing, nor should it conflict with their right of return within the framework of a comprehensive negotiated settlement. The nine States, as well as Sweden, also noted that references to the removal of refugees and destruction of their shelters were not entirely consistent with observations in the Secretary-General's report.

The United States, explaining its abstention, also pointed out that the Secretary-General's report had clearly stated that there had been no punitive demolition of shelters in the past year. In addition, it expressed objections to an unclear attempt to link resolution 194(111) to the efforts to resettle refugees in the Gaza Strip. Israel, explaining its negative vote, said that the reference to resolution 194(111) was irrelevant and designed to distort the facts. According to Israel, the Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip were eager to move to decent, less-crowded housing, and nobody should demand that Israel stop providing such housing.

Norway and Sweden, voting in favour, commented on the ambiguity of the text. Norway said the draft should not be construed as opposing the right to choose a place of residence. Sweden also felt that voluntary settlement outside the camps should not prejudice right of return.

The Ivory Coast said that resolution 34/52 F, in particular, had been drafted in such a tendentious manner as to impede its implementation and delay positive results, and the Ivory Coast had therefore abstained.

Health needs of Palestinian refugee children

In accordance with a 1978 Assembly resolution, 80 the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in September 1979 on the health needs of Palestinian refugee children.

He reported on a nutrition survey carried out in 1978 as in previous years by UNRWA with technical support from WHO. The survey showed a very low prevalence of acute malnutrition, corresponding closely to that in the United States, the comparator country. A comparison with the results of previous surveys (1974 and 1975) showed a definite improvement since 1974. A breakdown of heights by age groups revealed a normal height development up to 9 months of age; thereafter, heights lagged behind those of the reference population.

Two reasons for growth retardation were suggested: infections and weaning. The incidence of diarrhoeal disease in the population remained high. Information on breast feeding and growth indicated a correlation between the two.

A considerable proportion of children also showed low haemoglobin levels and a certain degree of anaemia, as in previous surveys. The large differences between operational fields had cast some doubt on the reliability of current haemoglobinometric methods.

In response to the survey results, a number of modifications were introduced in UNRWA services to improve the health of refugee children.

The Assembly, in adopting decision 34/429 without a vote on 14 December, took note of the Secretary-General's report. The text had been approved without vote on 1 December by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

Pledges and contributions

For the calendar year 1979, governmental and intergovernmental contributors provided the equivalent of $121,251,985 towards the budget of UNRWA. In addition, contributions were received from the United Nations and its organizations, non-governmental organizations, private individuals and business corporations. Total income from all sources in 1979 was $133,477,272.

On 4 December, the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, where 47 States pledged contributions for 1980 in cash or kind. Pledges announced, plus those projected, were estimated at $132 million.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/112 A of 18 December 1978 and all previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948.

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1978 to 30 June 1979.

- 1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 1 1 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern:
- 2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;
- 3. Expresses its deep appreciation to the former Commissioner-General, Mr. Thomas W. McElhiney, for his many years of effective service to the Agency and his dedication to the welfare of the refugees;
- 4. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the Agency should be relocated within the area of its operations as soon as practicable;
- 5. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 1 1 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 October 1980;
- Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;
- 7. /Votes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;
- 8. Calls upon all Governments as a matter of urgency to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contribution.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

In March, the Secretary-General reported to the 1979 first regular session of the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to a 1978 General Assembly resolution 81 requesting him to establish at Beirut a joint co-ordinating committee of specialized agencies and other United Nations-related organizations to help and advise the Government of Lebanon in all matters relating to reconstruction and development. The Secretary-General was also asked to appoint a co-ordinator to head the committee. The Secretary-General informed the Council that in the process of selection he had consulted with the Lebanese Government to define more precisely the co-ordinator's functions, and that consultations were still in progress.

Pending appointment of a co-ordinator, the functions of the Committee on Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon were being carried out through the original co-ordination mechanism (United Nations agencies, Lebanese Government officials and bilateral donors) under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General's Special Representative and Resident Representative of the United Nations Development Programme in Beirut.

81 See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 373, resolution 33/146 of 20 December 1978.

On 4 May, by decision 1979/15, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report. The decision, as orally proposed by the Council President, was adopted without vote.

The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on 26 September that Iqbal A. Akhund (Pakistan) had been appointed co-ordinator and would take up his duties in Beirut on 15 October.

By a letter to the Secretary-General of 24 July, Lebanon transmitted an appeal for international assistance for southern Lebanon from the High Relief Committee of Lebanon, issued the previous day in Beirut. The Committee asked for food and vital materials for emergency cases, temporary shelters and funds for reconstruction to help the inhabitants of the region stay in their villages.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/135, sponsored by 39 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The text was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved it, also without vote, on 23 November.

By the resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts to implement fully its 1978 resolution, noted with satisfaction the appointment of the co-ordinator and asked for progress reports to the Council and the Assembly in 1980.

Chapter XIV

Situation in Cyprus

In 1979, the situation in Cyprus continued to be calm, owing in good part to the activities of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), with the co-operation of the parties. The major political development of the year was a high-level meeting held in Nicosia on 18 and 19 May under the personal auspices of the Secretary-General. The meeting resulted in a 10-point agreement which outlined the basis, content and priorities for the resumption of intercommunal talks between representatives of the two Cypriot communities. The talks were resumed on 15 June, but the persistent political differences between the two sides caused the talks to be recessed on 22 June.

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNFICYP, on 15 June and 14 December. The Force continued to perform its peaceSituation in Cyprus 421 keeping and humanitarian tasks. Its personnel strength remained unchanged at about 2,500. The Secretary-General, in reports to the Council of 31 May and 1 December, drew attention to the critical financial condition of the Force.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/30 of 20 November, authorized its President to appoint an ad hoc committee should the Secretary-General by 31 March 1980 report lack of progress in the intercommunal talks. The committee's task would be, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to recommend steps for and promote the implementation of Assembly resolutions on Cyprus.

Details of these and other related matters are to be found in the following subchapters.

Political and related developments

Communications (January-May)

Between January and May 1979, a number of communications concerning the situation in Cyprus were received from Cyprus and Turkey. Most of those from Turkey transmitted letters from representatives of the Turkish. Cypriot community.

In a letter dated 17 January to the Secretary-General, Turkey transmitted a letter of the same date from Nail Atalay, identified as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. He forwarded a letter of 2 January from Kenan Atakol, who signed as Minister for Foreign Affairs, Defence and Tourism of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The letter criticized the dispatch to Cyprus of two experts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to advise on the setting up of a university which, the letter said, would not benefit the Turkish Cypriot community.

By letters dated 22 January, 14 February, 30 April and 4 May, Turkey transmitted to the Secretary-General communications from Mr. Atalay and from Rauf R. Denktash, identified as President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. They protested, in letters of 22 and 29 January and 15 and 19 April, what they called provocative, chauvinistic and insulting statements made by high Greek Cypriot and Greek officials at local meetings and in television broadcasts. In letters dated 6 February and 11 May, Cyprus referred to these accusations as unfounded allegations for purposes of propaganda.

In a letter dated 13 March, Cyprus criticized a statement made in 1977 by Raif Denktash, son of the Turkish Cypriot leader, which Cyprus said revealed Turkey's expansionist and annexationist policy. This interpretation of the statement was denied by Mr. Atalay in a letter dated 19 March, transmitted to the Secretary-General by Turkey.

By letters dated 25 January and 2 February, Turkey transmitted communications from Mr. Atalay, the last one forwarding a letter of 24 January from Mr. Denktash. They objected to the appointment of Andreas V. Mavrommatis and Andreas C. Pouyouros as Permanent Representatives of Cyprus to the United Nations in New York and Geneva respectively, on the ground that there was no central authority in the island entitled to represent both communities either at home or abroad.

Cyprus, in letters dated 31 January, 27 February and 15 March, charged that Turkish military aircraft had violated its airspace and that Turkey had escalated its military manoeuvres in the air over northern Cyprus in order to terrorize civilians and put pressure on the Government of Cyprus. The charges were denied by Turkey in a letter dated 7 February and by Mr. Atalay in letters of 5 February and 2 and 19 March, transmitted by Turkey, the last on 21 March.

In a letter dated 9 February, Cyprus said that a statement published in the Turkish Cypriot Special News Bulletin of 7 February revealed the Turkish side's intention to undermine the prospects for a resumption of intercommunal talks. The charges were denied by Mr. Atalay in a communication of 16 February transmitted by Turkey.

Report and letter of the Secretary-General (31 May)

On 31 May, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering the period from 1 December 1978 to 31 May 1979. In addition to outlining the work of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), he described his own efforts, within the framework of the good offices mission entrusted to him by the Council, to initiate effective negotiations towards a just and lasting settlement. Those efforts had culminated in a high-level meeting held at UNFICYP headquarters in Nicosia on 18 and 19 May under his personal auspices. At that meeting, agreement had been reached on the basis for a resumption of the intercommunal talks. This was recorded in a 10-point communiqué of 19 May as follows:

- 1. It was agreed to resume the intercommunal talks on 15 June 1979.
- 2. The basis for the talks will be the Makarios/

Denktash guidelines of 12 February 1977¹ and the United Nations resolutions relevant to the Cyprus question.

- 3. There should be respect for human rights and fundamental freedom of all citizens of the
- 4. The talks will deal with all territorial and constitutional aspects.
- 5. Priority will be given to reaching agreement on the resettlement of Varosha under United Nations auspices simultaneously with the beginning of the consideration by the interlocutors of the constitutional and territorial aspects of a comprehensive settlement. After agreement on Varosha has been reached, it will be implemented without awaiting the outcome of the discussion on other aspects of the Cyprus problem.
- 6. It was agreed to abstain from any action which might jeopardize the outcome of the talks, and special importance will be given to initial practical measures by both sides to promote goodwill, mutual confidence and the return to normal
- 7. The demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus is envisaged, and matters relating thereto will be discussed.
- 8. The independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, and non-alignment of the Republic should be adequately guaranteed against union in whole or in part with any other country and against any form of partition or secession.
- The intercommunal talks will be carried out in a continuing and sustained manner, avoiding any delay.
- 10. The intercommunal talks will take place in Nicosia.

While the Secretary-General viewed this agreement as a heartening outcome which delineated the basis and priorities for the forthcoming talks, he emphasized that it did not resolve the substantive differences confronting the parties. He urged them to demonstrate political will and statesmanship during the delicate negotiations and to exercise restraint in their public

In the light of the situation on the ground and of political developments, the Secretary-General concluded once again that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained indispensable in helping to maintain calm in the island and facilitating the search for a peaceful settlement. He recommended a further six-month extension of the UNFICYP mandate and again appealed for voluntary financial contributions.

The Secretary-General also informed the Council of progress towards setting up a committee on missing persons (see p. 433).

In an addendum to the report, issued on 15 June, the Secretary-General stated that, following consultations, the parties had signified their concurrence in the extension of the UNFICYP mandate for a further six months.

In a letter dated 31 May addressed to the Governments of all Member States of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, the Secretary-General issued a further appeal for voluntary financial contributions for UNFICYP. He stated that, because voluntary contributions consistently fell short of needs, the accumulated deficit for the period ended 15 December 1978 was more than $53 million and that an estimated $11.8 million was required to meet the cost of the Force for the six months ending 15 June 1979. He added that the troopcontributing countries had expressed concern over the disproportionate financial burden they were carrying. He appealed to past contributors and others to help rectify the serious financial situation confronting the Force.

Consideration by the Security Council (15 June)

The Security Council met on 15 June to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus. The representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the request of Turkey, the Council also extended an invitation, under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure,2 to Nail Atalay to participate.

Before hearing the parties, the Council adopted by 14 votes to 0, with China not participating, resolution 451(1979), by which it extended the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period, ending on 15 December. It requested the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices and to submit a report by 30 November. The parties were urged to proceed with the intercommunal talks within the framework of the lo-point agreement of 19 May. The draft resolution had been prepared in consultations among Council members.

In a statement after the vote, the Secretary-General informed the Council that, as agreed at the high-level meeting in Nicosia on 18 and 19 May, the intercommunal talks had been resumed earlier that day. Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, had read out a statement on the Secretary-General's behalf pointing out that it was up to the representatives of the two communities to build on the consensus reached at the high-level meeting and to make progress towards agreed solutions. The Secretary-General expressed to the Council his hope that the parties would take advantage of the impetus created by the 19 May accord; his representatives would make every effort to sustain that momentum.

The representative of Cyprus said the President of Cyprus, Spyros Kyprianou, had stated that the May agreement contained all the essential elements and principles for a just solution and constituted the proper basis for negotiation. The agreement was a further demonstration of his Government's determination to negotiate meaningfully. However, nothing had happened to resolve such important issues as the withdrawal of the Turkish army from Cyprus, the safe return of the refugees to their homes and the restoration of human rights. Moreover, despite the agreement, the Cyprus Government had no information on the position of the Turkish Cypriot authorities on the issue of missing persons. Political will was needed, especially on the part of the Turkish side, to resolve the Cyprus problem in accordance with the four guidelines agreed on in 1977 and the relevant United Nations resolutions.

The representative of Greece was gratified at the prospect of a new round of negotiations. The lo-point agreement constituted a good framework for a viable settlement. Such a settlement should be based, as agreed on 19 May, on United Nations resolutions. Another encouraging sign was the agreement by the Turkish Cypriots to collaborate in the search for missing persons.

Mr. Atalay said the Turkish Cypriot community was pleased with the summit meeting between Mr. Denktash and Mr. Kyprianou which had resulted in the 10-point agreement. His community now expected the economic boycott and other measures imposed against the Turkish Cypriots by the Greek side since 1963 to be lifted. Mr. Denktash was attending to the question of missing persons and, on completion of the constitutional process, the Secretary-General would be informed. Mr. Atalay observed that the reference to "the Government of Cyprus" in Council resolution 451(1979) — by a preambular paragraph of which the Council noted that the Government of Cyprus had agreed on the need to extend UNFICYP — was unacceptable to the Turkish community. Furthermore, the UNFICYP mandate was out of date and should be amended to conform to existing realities.

The representative of Turkey welcomed the convening of the Nicosia meeting and the 10-point agreement that had resulted from it. The Denktash/Kyprianou agreement was not a solution in itself, but it was a major step in the right direction. Turkey and Greece should assist and encourage the two national communities in Cyprus to find a viable and equitable solution to their problem through intercommunal talks. Turkey would continue with determination to support and encourage this negotiating process, and expected it to lead to progress towards a just and lasting settlement within the framework of the Denktash/Makarios agreement of 12 February 1977.³

Other members of the Council who participated in the discussion also welcomed the lo-point agreement. Most of them commended the Secretary-General for his efforts to facilitate substantive negotiations.

Portugal and France stressed that the condition most indispensable to the success of those negotiations was the political will of all sides to achieve a settlement. Those countries and the United States urged the parties to be flexible. A number of countries, including China, Czechoslovakia, Gabon, Jamaica, Kuwait, the USSR and Zambia, called for the preservation of the independence of Cyprus, its sovereignty and territorial integrity, and its status as a non-aligned country. Czechoslovakia, the USSR and Zambia further called for the cessation of all foreign interference in the country's internal affairs, the removal of all foreign troops and the demilitarization of Cyprus.

China strongly condemned super-power interference in the internal affairs of Cyprus. In conformity with its policy concerning United Nations peace-keeping operations, it had not participated in the vote on resolution 45 1(1979).

In the view of Czechoslovakia and the USSR, attempts were being made to turn Cyprus into a stronghold of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). The USSR reiterated its call for an international conference within the United Nations context to examine the Cyprus question.

Kuwait said that UNFICYP, while providing a sense of quiet, had not played the role initially envisaged for it as an interim force to encourage the parties towards a meaningful solution. Instead, it had provided a good shelter behind which the parties had entrenched their positions and consolidated their policies.

Communications (August-December)

Between August and December 1979, Cyprus and the Turkish Cypriots sent a series of communications to the Secretary-General on various aspects of the problem.

In a letter dated 20 August, Cyprus protested the violation of its airspace by two Turkish military aircraft on 17 August. This accusation was rejected by Mr. Atalay in a letter of 4 September, transmitted by Turkey.

By a letter dated 1 September, transmitted by Mr. Atalay and circulated as a document at the request of Turkey, Fazil Kuçuk, former Vice-President of Cyprus (1960-1973), accused the Greek Cypriot leaders of continuing one-sided propaganda at international forums and of attempting to deceive the world at the expense of the rights and freedoms of the Turkish Cypriot community.

On 13 September, Mr. Atalay transmitted, through Turkey, a message dated 6 September from Mr. Atakol characterizing as malicious the Greek Cypriots' assertion that a proclamation of independence by the Turkish Cypriot community was imminent. He reiterated that community's readiness to enter into serious dialogue with the Greek Cypriots on the basis of equality.

By a letter dated 26 September, Cyprus transmitted the text of a resolution passed by the Cyprus House of Representatives on 20 September, rejecting, any solution that would result in the abolition of the Republic of Cyprus and the territorial integrity of Cyprus, in the annexation of the whole or part of its territory by any other State, in the partition of the Republic or in the declaration of any part of its territory as a separate State. Commenting on that resolution, Mr. Denktash, in a statement cited — by Mr. Atalay in a letter of 18 October transmitted by Turkey, described it as propaganda aimed at usurping the rights of the Turkish Cypriot community.

In a letter dated 16 October, Cyprus accused Turkey of partitionist and annexationist designs against Cyprus and its people, as evidenced by a decree allowing usurpers to sell the properties of expelled Greek Cypriot refugees, a decision by Turkish Cypriot authorities to annul passports issued by the Cyprus Government to Turkish Cypriots, and a decision to stop distributing mail in Greek Cypriot enclaves in the occupied part of Cyprus unless it bore Turkish Cypriot stamps. These allegations were countered in a letter of 19 October by Mr. Atalay, who said the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus was not redistributing Greek property, that the Greek Cypriots had denied passports to most Turkish Cvpriots and that the Turkish Cypriots had merely suspended the privilege of the Greek Cypriots in the north to receive mail from the south without stamps.

In a letter dated 18 October, Cyprus charged that Turkish attacks on Maronite Cypriots in the Turkish-controlled area of Cyprus on 13 and 14 October had resulted in the usurpation of their land by Turkish settlers. The letter annexed a memorandum on the incident which had been submitted by the Representative of the Maronite community in the Cyprus House of Representatives. Mr. Atalay refuted these charges in a letter of 13 November, stating that the land problem had been resolved and that Maronites were treated as equal citizens.

In a letter dated 2 November, Cyprus accused Turkey of preventing the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) from facilitating the exchange of messages and letters between Greek Cypriots residing in the north and their relatives in the south. This allegation was denied in a letter of 6 November by Mr. Atalay, who said that the exchange of messages free of charge, arranged by ICRC four years earlier during the state of emergency, was unwarranted now that normality prevailed.

In a letter dated 30 November, Cyprus drew attention to a succession of statements by Turkish Cypriot and Turkish leaders threatening to declare an independent State in the northern part of the island. A response made by the Foreign Minister of Cyprus to a statement on this, subject by the Foreign Minister of Turkey was contained in a letter of 28 December from Cyprus.

Report of the Secretary — General to the General Assembly

In pursuance of a General Assembly resolution of 9 November 1978, 4 the Secretary-General, on 8 November 1979, submitted to the Assembly a report giving an account of developments relating to the implementation of United Nations resolutions on Cyprus.

The Secretary-General reported that, since the adoption of the Assembly's 1978 resolution on Cyprus, there had been intense diplomatic activity aimed at achieving United Nations objectives. He had endeavoured to promote a freely negotiated, just and lasting settlement based on the legitimate interests of the two communities. Distinct progress had been achieved at one stage through the agreement reached on 19 May at the high-level meeting in Nicosia, but the opportunity had not been fully seized and great difficulties had been encountered in sustaining the momentum.

When the intercommunal talks resumed in Nicosia on 15 June under the auspices of Under-Secretary-General Pérez de Cuéllar, the interlocutors had not addressed the substance of the Cyprus problem. The Greek Cypriot interlocutor had taken the position that, in accordance with point 5 of the 19 May accord (see p. 422), the talks should give priority to reaching agreement on the resettlement under United Nations auspices of Varosha — outside the old walled city of Famagusta, in the vicinity of the buffer zone. The Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, on the other hand, had considered that before taking up point 5 the two representatives should engage in a comprehensive discussion of point 2, with a view to reaching agreement on the principles of the Makarios/Denktash guidelines of 12 February 1977 and of the United Nations resolutions relevant to the Cyprus question. The Turkish Cypriot interlocutor had asked the Greek Cypriot interlocutor to acknowledge that the agreement on the 1977 guidelines comprised also the concepts of "bi-zonality" and the "security of the Turkish Cypriot community." On 22 June, after consulting the two interlocutors, the Under-Secretary-General had recessed the talks.

During the following months, the Secretary-General and his representatives, both at United Nations Headquarters and in Nicosia, had held extensive consultations with the parties with a view to resolving the difficulties that had arisen in the talks. In August and September, the Secretary-General had sounded out the parties on some ideas designed to dispose of those difficulties. Both sides had initially rejected the approach, but on 1 October the Turkish Cypriot side had accepted the suggestions. The Greek Cypriots had offered counter-suggestions which were not accepted by the other side.

The Secretary-General's approach was that four items be dealt with concurrently, namely:

- (a) reaching agreement on the resettlement of Varosha under United Nations auspices, in accordance with the provisions of point 5 of the 19 May agreement;
- (b) initial practical measures by both sides to promote goodwill, mutual confidence and the return to normal conditions, in accordance with the provisions of point 6, which stated that special importance was to be given to this matter;
 - (c) constitutional aspects; and
 - (d) territorial aspects.

Stating that the approach he had outlined had lost none of its validity, the Secretary-General said he had told the parties he was ready to reconvene the intercommunal talks on the basis of the 10-point agreement, if possible no later than January 1980.

The Secretary-General also reviewed developments on other matters referred to in Assembly resolutions, such as the withdrawal of foreign troops, supervision of the cease-fire and changes in the demographic structure of Cyprus. The situation with regard to foreign armed forces had not changed during the year. Humanitarian assistance continued to be provided by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in his capacity as Co-ordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus (see p. 433). Efforts to establish a committee on missing persons had not succeeded (see p. 433).

Annexed to the report were notes verbales from the representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey in early October and a letter of 24 September from Mr. Denktash, setting out their respective positions.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 21 September 1979, the General Assembly decided, on the recommendation of its General Committee, to consider the question of Cyprus directly in plenary meetings on the understanding that the Assembly, when considering the item, would invite its Special Political Committee to meet for the purpose of affording representatives of the two Cypriot communities an opportunity to express their views. The decision was taken by a recorded vote, requested by Turkey, of 74 to 8, with 30 abstentions.

Before making its recommendation, the General Committee rejected, by 4 votes in favour to 13 against, with 8 abstentions, an oral proposal by Turkey to allocate the item to the Special Political Committee. Turkey, supported by Pakistan, contended that such an allocation to the Committee rather than to the plenary Assembly would allow the two parties to participate in the debate on an equal footing. Cyprus stated that the Turkish proposal was designed to gain indirect recognition of the so-called Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The USSR, in voting against the Turkish proposal, said the international implications of the Cyprus issue must be considered at the highest level.

Following the Assembly's action of 21 September, Mr. Atalay informed the President, in a letter of 14 November forwarded by Turkey, that the decision was unacceptable to the Turkish Cypriots. In those circumstances, his community had no alternative but to dissociate itself from the Assembly's proceedings on the question of Cyprus, and any resolution thereon would not be binding on that community.

When it began consideration of the Cyprus question on 15 November, the Assembly decided that the Special Political Committee should meet on the same day in order to hear the views of the representatives of the two Cypriot communities.

Speaking in the Committee on behalf of the Greek Cypriot community, George Ioannides said that, apart from its positive attitude towards the holding of negotiations, the Greek Cypriot side had always given much practical proof of its political will to negotiate meaningfully for a solution of the Cyprus problem. The 19 May agreement provided the framework for a solution and he pledged the willingness of the Greek Cypriot side to negotiate on the basis of that agreement. He accused the Turkish side of frustrating every effort at constructive negotiations while moving to legalize the faits accomplis created by the Turkish invasion of 1974. The Cyprus problem could be solved only if unilateral Turkish actions ceased, if United Nations resolutions were implemented and if the principles of the Charter of the United Nations were applied.

The Turkish Cypriot community did not take part in the proceedings in accordance with its stated position.

By decision 34/408, adopted without vote on 16 November, the General Assembly, on an oral proposal of its President, took note of the report of the Special Political Committee on its hearing.

Speaking in the plenary debate, Cyprus said it was rightfully entitled to ask for sanctions as a result of Turkey's flagrant violation of its obligations under the Charter. Cyprus reserved the right to request the convening of an international conference on Cyprus, but it would not press the matter at present. The establishment of a committee on Cyprus to help break the deadlock would afford a new plateau of action in efforts to implement United Nations resolutions.

Greece said that no progress could be achieved as long as one of the parties, which also happened to be the aggressor, was not willing to negotiate in good faith. But the United Nations should not give up, because by so doing it would condone aggression and the violation of the most sacred principles of the Charter. What should be avoided at all costs was to rest content with the status quo, which with every passing day was in increasing danger of becoming permanent.

Turkey said it was only through intercommunal negotiations on an equal footing that a comprehensive settlement could be achieved. Turkey therefore gave unqualified support to the Secretary-General's good offices mission. It was also determined to encourage efforts designed to achieve a viable solution within the framework of the Denktash/Makarios four-point guidelines and the Denktash/Kyprianou 10point agreement which, in its view, had laid the foundations for a solution based on the fundamental and legitimate rights of the two communities within an independent, non-aligned, bicommunal and bi-zonal federal republic. Proposals to internationalize the issue would have devastating effects on the intercommunal negotiations.

The importance of dialogue between the parties was stressed by most Members, and hope was expressed for an early resumption of the intercommunal talks. Thus, speaking on behalf of the European Community, Ireland said that, while the United Nations could encourage and support the efforts of both sides to reconcile their differences, direct negotiations between the parties, within the established framework, still offered the best hope. The Community members called on both sides to resume the negotiations on the basis of the guidelines to which they had already agreed, in accordance with the proposals made by the Secretary-General. The United Kingdom expressed support for these views, adding that there was no alternative to intercommunal talks.

The USSR renewed its call for the convening within the United Nations framework of a representative international conference to consider the question of Cyprus. Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia and Poland supported this suggestion. Canada, on the other hand, said a conference would be more likely to distract the talks than aid the dialogue between the communities.

The United States feared that the formation of a committee on Cyprus, as favoured by the Cyprus Government, could interfere with the Secretary-General's efforts to resume negotiations. Canada and Sweden also indicated that they did not favour such a committee. On the other hand, Ecuador supported the creation of an Assembly committee to help find a solution to the problem of implementing United Nations resolutions on Cyprus.

Some representatives attributed the lack of progress in achieving a solution mainly to outside interference in the country's internal affairs. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, for instance, maintained that because of strategic considerations, certain external forces close to NATO were working towards eliminating the independence of Cyprus through perpetuating the tensions between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities. Albania and China, on the other hand, blamed super-power interference for the continuing stalemate.

India said that no community in any country had the right to invite armed intervention from outside and attempt to force a solution through the use of arms; by the same token, no country could legitimately intervene in the internal affairs of a sovereign State on behalf of one or the other community. In the view of the Syrian Arab Republic, any classification of national or international entities on the basis of creed or community would lead only to chauvinism and discrimination.

Malta said that attempts to bring about a permanent, artificial division under the shadow of bayonets and through forced demographic change would create tension. Kenya appealed to Turkey to desist from occupation policies which had created a dangerous situation in the area.

Situation in Cyprus 427

The Assembly adopted on 20 November a resolution sponsored by 34 countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and introduced by Algeria on behalf of a contact group of countries belonging to the non-aligned movement.

Under its terms, the Assembly called on all States to support and help the Government of Cyprus to exercise the rights of the Republic and its people to full and effective sovereignty and control over the entire territory of Cyprus and its resources. Further, it called for the urgent resumption of negotiations between the representatives of the two Cypriot communities. They were to be held under the auspices of the Secretary-General and conducted freely on an equal footing on the basis of the 19 May agreement, with a view to reaching a mutually acceptable agreement based on fundamental and legitimate rights.

The text included a call on the parties to refrain from any unilateral action which might adversely affect the prospects of a just and lasting solution by peaceful means. The Secretary-General was requested to continue to provide his good offices for the negotiations and to report by 31 March 1980 on progress made.

The Assembly authorized its President, in the event that the Secretary-General reported lack of progress, to appoint an ad hoc committee of up to seven Member States. The committee would maintain contact with the Secretary-General in his task of facilitating the successful conclusion of the negotiations between the two communities and would, in consultation with him, recommend steps for and promote the implementation of all Assembly resolutions on Cyprus.

The Assembly adopted this text as resolution 34/30 by a recorded vote of 99 to 5, with 35 abstentions. Prior to the adoption of the resolution as a whole, a separate vote was taken on several operative paragraphs.

One of these contained a recommendation that the Security Council examine the implementation, within a specified time-frame, of its resolutions and, if necessary, consider and adopt appropriate measures under the Charter for ensuring the speedy and effective implementation of United Nations resolutions on Cyprus. It was adopted by a recorded vote of 87 to 10, with 40 abstentions. The vote was requested by Turkey.

The paragraph by which the Secretary-General was asked to report by 31 March 1980 was adopted by a recorded vote of 94 to 8, with 34 abstentions. The three paragraphs which concerned the formation and work of an ad hoc committee on the Cyprus question were adopted together by a recorded vote, requested by Turkey, of 83 to 23, with 30 abstentions.

Explaining its vote against the resolution, Turkey stated that the committee mentioned in the text was destined to be stillborn, as the Turkish community could not be expected to deal with it. Moreover, the reference in the text to the "Government of Cyprus" denied the Turkish community the right to negotiate on an equal footing. Turkey added that the resolution was based on a draft by the Greek Cypriot delegation.

Pakistan said that, bearing in mind that the resumption of the intercommunal talks was the key to a settlement, the resolution did not serve the primary goal of achieving peace and harmony. It did not take into account the views of the Turkish Cypriots, and the proposal to create an ad hoc committee prejudged the outcome of direct negotiations by presupposing lack of progress in them.

Bangladesh, which also voted against the resolution, said the proposal to broaden the scope of negotiations beyond the intercommunal talks would compound the effect of other elements that complicated the aim to move the talks forward. Oman, Portugal, Spain and the United Arab Emirates, which abstained, felt that some paragraphs could prevent or would not contribute to a negotiated solution. Zaire, which also abstained, saw contradictions between the proposal for Security Council action and the provision for creating a committee. Albania said it had not participated in the vote because the resolution implied an internationalization of the problem. Australia, Austria, Finland, France, New Zealand and Sweden, as well as Ireland, which spoke on behalf of the nine members of the European Community, said they had abstained in the vote, in part because they could not support the creation of an ad hoc committee.

Communications to the General Assembly (September-November)

Between September and November 1979, Turkey forwarded to the President of the General Assembly a number of communications from the Turkish Cypriots relating to the Assembly's consideration of the question of Cyprus.

In a letter dated 18 September, Mr. Atalay said that the representation of Cyprus in the Assembly by Spyros Kyprianou and/or any of his aides would amount to allowing the Greek Cypriot Administration to consolidate its unconstitutional status as the so-called Government of Cyprus, affording it the opportunity to continue its policy of discrimination against the Turkish Cypriot community.

On 19 October, Mr. Atalay transmitted a message of the same date by the Chairman of the Cypriot-Turkish Association in London, protesting against certain references to Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot leadership made by Mr. Kyprianou in a speech on 1 October to the Assembly, during its general debate.

In a letter dated 19 November, Mr. Atakol declared that the resolution on Cyprus before the Assembly was not acceptable to the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Its adoption would destroy the platform of negotiations reached at the summit meeting in May, and the possibility of a swift reconvening of intercommunal talks by the Secretary-General would be seriously impaired.

Letters from Cyprus and Turkey relating to the consideration of human rights issues in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee were also circulated (see p. 434).

Letter and report of the Secretary-General (November-December)

In a letter dated 28 November 1979, the Secretary-General appealed to all Member States of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies for additional voluntary financial contributions for UNFICYP.

Before the mandate of UNFICYP was due to expire (on 15 December), the Secretary-General on 1 December submitted to the Security Council a report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus covering the period from 1 June to 30 November.

He reported that the situation had remained quiet, owing in good part to the efforts of UNFICYP, in co-operation with the parties.

With regard to his mission of good offices, the Secretary-General reported that he had continued his efforts to translate into reality the negotiating process delineated in the lo-point agreement of 19 May. Unfortunately, the momentum generated at the time of that agreement had not been sustained, and the substantive aspects of the problem had not been taken up at the renewed intercommunal talks in June. The observations he had outlined in his 1979 report to the General Assembly (see section above) remained valid. He had indicated to the parties that he was prepared to reconvene the talks, if possible early in 1980, with the intention of pursuing them in a continuing and sustained manner, avoiding any delay.

In the light of political developments and the situation on the ground, the Secretary-General concluded once again that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained indispensable for helping to maintain calm in the island and facilitating the search for a peaceful settlement. He therefore recommended that its mandate should be extended for another six months. The Secretary-General also drew attention to the worrisome financial situation of UNFICYP, whose deficit had risen to $73.6 million.

In an addendum issued on 13 December, the Secretary-General stated that, following consultations, the parties concerned had signified their concurrence in the extension of the UNFICYP mandate for a further six months.

Consideration by the Security Council (14 December)

The Security Council met on 14 December to consider the Secretary-General's report on the United Nations operation in Cyprus. The representatives of Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the request of Turkey, the Council also extended an invitation, under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure, to Mr. Atalay, representative of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Before hearing statements, the Council adopted resolution 458(1979), the text of which had been prepared in consultations among its members. By that resolution, adopted by 14 votes to 0, with China not participating, the Council extended the mandate of UNFICYP for a further period, ending on 15 June 1980, and requested the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices and to submit a report by 31 May 1980.

Speaking after the adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General assured the Council that he would make every effort to resume the intercommunal talks early in 1980, on the basis of the 10-point agreement of 19 May 1979.

The representative of Cyprus said that the intercommunal dialogue had had to be recessed, almost ad infinitum, because the Turkish side demanded, by way of pre-conditions, unconditional acceptance of bi-zonality and security for the Turkish Cypriot community. When, by way of compromise, it was suggested that those terms could be discussed at an appropriate later stage, the Turkish Cypriots had insisted on immediate and unconditional acceptance. He expressed the readiness of Cyprus to resume the dialogue immediately on the basis of the 19 May agreement, but without pre-conditions.

The representative of Greece welcomed the Council's decision to extend the mandate of UNFICYP, but said that should not induce the parties to perpetuate the status quo, which was detrimental to the people of Cyprus as a whole.

Mr. Atalay stated that the Turkish community in Cyprus hoped the Greek Cypriot leadership would come to the negotiating table without further delay, and with the resolute intention of developing the bi-zonal federal system in Cyprus Situation in Cyprus 429 in a spirit of partnership and in keeping with the principles arrived at during the 1977 and 1979 summit meetings. The independence and sovereignty of Cyprus could only be the outcome of an equal partnership between the two communities. Each time the Greek community rejected that partnership and violated the inalienable rights and status of the Turkish community, his community would, as a last resort, be dutybound to do everything possible to defend its rights of partnership.

The representative of Turkey, observing that there were two distinct administrations in Cyprus, said that any compliance or co-operation on its part with the United Nations peace-keeping effort in Cyprus would be conditional on exclusion of the concept of a Government of Cyprus. Turkey would encourage all efforts to achieve a viable solution within the framework of the Denktash/Makarios four-point guidelines of 1977 and the Denktash/Kyprianou 10-point agreement of May 1979.

In the further discussion, the United States urged the parties to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General and to agree forthwith to resume sustained and serious talks. The United Kingdom hoped that the talks would be resumed shortly on the basis of the approach set out by the Secretary-General.

The USSR said that the possible positive results of the intercommunal talks should be embodied either in decisions of the Council or in the convening of an international conference within the United Nations framework. The USSR opposed all attempts to foist on the people of Cyprus plans which had been prepared without their participation.

France declared that any settlement must be consistent with justice and must conform with international law; it could not be obtained unless the parties made an attempt to compromise.

Other statements favouring the resumption of negotiations were made by Bangladesh; Bolivia, Czechoslovakia, Gabon, Jamaica, Kuwait, Nigeria, Norway, Portugal and Zambia. Czechoslovakia and Nigeria also called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops. In the view of Kuwait, the Turkish Cypriots had the right to participate fully in decision-making on the island and, at the same time, they should seek the coexistence that could be obtained from cooperation rather than from a fait accompli.

Humanitarian matters

Humanitarian assistance

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continued during 1979 to act as Coordinator of United Nations Humanitarian Assistance for Cyprus, as he had been doing since 1974. The High Commissioner, in consultation with the Government of Cyprus and with the support of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), assured the provision of aid to some 200,000 Cypriots displaced by the military operations of August 1974.

The High Commissioner continued to receive support from the World Health Organization (WHO) and the World Food Programme. Particular emphasis was given in 1979 to developing and improving medical facilities and supplies in co-operation with WHO. Assistance was continued to agriculture, small businesses and handicrafts with the aim of re-establishing the self-sufficiency of the population in their traditional occupations. Special attention was given to the elderly and handicapped, and to improving educational facilities. Low-cost housing was built to replace temporary shelters.

Reporting to the Security Council in May and December on the United Nations operation in Cyprus (see preceding subchapter), the Secretary-General said that the revised 1979 humanitarian assistance programme, co-ordinated through the Cyprus Red Cross Society, provided $16,020,408 to finance 25 projects. Total contributions to the United Nations aid programme since 1974 amounted to $106,588,545 in cash and kind from 38 Governments, $382,417 from non-governmental organizations and other donors, and $8,942,055 in kind from the European Communities. The Secretary-General reported that UNFICYP continued to support the programme by delivering 1,938 tons of food and other relief supplies in northern Cyprus during the year ended 30 November 1979, about evenly divided between Greek Cypriots and Maronites on the one hand and Turkish Cypriots on the other.

The civilian police element of UNFICYP-UNCIVPOL- continued to perform functions handed over to it when the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) delegation left Cyprus in 1977. Among its activities was the distribution of social welfare payments to Greek Cypriots in the north. It continued to maintain a missing persons bureau at UNFICYP headquarters in Nicosia.

Missing persons in Cyprus

The Secretary-General continued his efforts during 1979 to find a solution- to the problem of setting up an investigatory body to trace and account for missing persons of both communities in Cyprus. He was acting pursuant to a 1978 resolution by which the General Assembly had urged the establishment of an investigatory body to include representatives of the parties, chaired by a representative of the Secretary-General with the co-operation of ICRC.⁵

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 7 May, Turkey forwarded a letter of the same date from Nail Atalay, identified as the representative of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Mr. Atalay drew attention to what he referred to as a statement by the Greek Cypriot representative in the Second (Social) Committee of the Economic and Social Council on 4 May that his administration had been trying to establish the investigatory body envisaged in the 1978 resolution. Mr. Atalay alluded- to the objection expressed by the Turkish Cypriots to a provision in the resolution empowering the Secretary-General's representative, in case of disagreement among members of the investigatory body, to reach a binding opinion which was to be implemented. He added that the Turkish Cypriots, while not bound by the 1978 resolution, were ready to implement the Assembly's 1977 resolution on missing persons in Cyprus,6 which also provided for an investigatory body but without the clause on the powers of the Secretary-General's representative.

In his 31 May report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus (see p. 421), the Secretary-General noted that implementation of the 1978 resolution would depend in the first instance on the readiness of both parties to appoint their representatives. One of the parties was not prepared to. do so. However, at a high-level meeting presided over by the

Secretary-General in Nicosia on 18 and 19 May, an agreement had been reached in principle on a proposal by the Secretary-General to resolve the procedural problem relating to the committee. The Turkish Cypriot side had undertaken to submit that agreement to the appropriate authorities.

In his 8 November report to the Assembly on implementation of United Nations resolutions on the Cyprus situation (see p. 424), the Secretary-General described the difficulties encountered, as reported to the Security Council, in his efforts to set up a committee on missing persons.

The human rights situation in Cyprus, with special reference to the question of missing persons, was the subject of three letters to the Secretary-General in November and December.

In letters dated 1 November and 4 December, transmitted by Turkey, Mr. Atalay stated that the Greek Cypriots continued to exploit the issues of human rights and missing persons for political and propaganda purposes, with a view to misleading world opinion and obtaining support for the Greek Cypriot position. He noted in the 4 December letter that the Turkish Cypriots remained ready for a committee to investigate the issue of missing persons, with the participation of ICRC.

By a communication dated 30 November, Cyprus transmitted a letter from a Pancyprian Committee of Relatives of 2,190 Greek Cypriot undeclared prisoners and missing persons, urging the Secretary-General to take steps so that they could learn the fate of their missing relatives.

Speaking in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 3 December during consideration of the 1979 report of the Economic and Social Council, Cyprus said it had appointed a representative to the investigatory body to be established under the Assembly's 1978 resolution, but the Turkish Cypriots had not fulfilled their obligations under that resolution. The resolution should be implemented; if not, Cyprus would seek more pragmatic ways of dealing with the problem.

Turkey said in reply that the formation of the committee had been blocked by the Greek Cypriots. It quoted from the 4 December letter by Mr. Atalay to the effect that all decisions of the committee must be taken by consensus; there was no precedent for conferring the role of a compulsory arbitrator on the Secretary-General or his representative without the consent of both parties.

Other matters

The question of human rights in Cyprus was on the 1979 agendas of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. Both bodies decided to defer consideration of the item until 1980. (See p. 829.)

Questions relating to the membership and organs of the United Nations

Admission of new Members

During 1979, the number of Member States of the United Nations rose to 152 with the admission of Saint Lucia, which attained independence on 22 February. Its admission was unanimously recommended by the Security Council on 12 September by resolution 453 (1979). The General Assembly adopted resolution 34/1 admitting Saint Lucia by acclamation on 18 September. The text was sponsored by 37 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

OTHER DOCUMENTS

A/35/2. Report of Security Council, 16 June 1979-15 June 1980, Chapter 1 1 A.

Equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council

By a letter dated 14 November 1979, the representatives of Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Guyana, India, Maldives, Nepal, Nigeria and Sri Lanka requested the inclusion in the agenda of the current session of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council."

An explanatory, memorandum stated that, since the 1963 amendment to the Charter of the United Nations enlarging the Council's membership from 11 to 15 members, ¹ the membership of the United Nations had increased from 113 to 152 States, due mainly to the emergence and admission of a large number of States from Africa, Asia and Latin America. This increase had not been reflected in the membership of the Security Council.

The global average of the number of countries represented by one non-permanent seat in the 1 See Y.U.N., 1963, p. 87, resolution 1991 A (XVIII) of 17 December 1963.

Council was 14.7: the number of Asian countries represented by one non-permanent seat was 18.5; the corresponding figure for African States was 16.3, for Latin American States, 14, for Western European and other States, 11, and for Eastern European States, 10. This state of affairs constituted an under-representation of non-aligned and developing countries on one of the principal organs of the United Nations.

The General Assembly, according to the memorandum, should be called upon to take measures to amend the Charter with a view to providing for a more equitable and balanced representation reflecting these changes.

When the General Committee was considering the request, the United States submitted an amendment which sought to inscribe the question as part of an agenda item on the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (see Chapter IX above). The General Committee rejected the amendment on 27 November by 7 votes in favour to 13 against, with 3 abstentions; it then recommended inclusion of the item in the Assembly's current agenda by 19 votes to 5, with 2 abstentions. The Assembly adopted the Committee's recommendation on 28 November by a recorded vote of 83 to 14, with 9 abstentions.

The Assembly considered the question at two plenary meetings on 14 December, during which Algeria, Bangladesh, Bhutan; Cuba, Grenada, Guyana, India, Iraq, Japan, Maldives, Mauritius, Nepal, Nigeria, Sri Lanka and the Syrian Arab Republic presented a draft resolution on the subject.

By the operative provisions of this text, the Assembly would adopt and submit to Member States for ratification several amendments to the Charter. These would, in amending Article 23, ² increase the membership of the Security Council to 19, 14 of which (rather than the current 10) would be elected non-permanent members. Further changes to other Charter provisions would provide for the terms of office of the new members and increase from 9 to 11 the number of affirmative votes needed to effect Council decisions. A pattern of geographical distribution for election of the 14 non-permanent members was also included, as follows: four from African States, three from Asian States, one from Eastern European States, three from Latin American States, and two from Western European and other States; one seat was to alternate between African and Asian States. The Assembly would, by the text, call on all Member States to ratify the Charter amendments by 1 September 1981.

Amendments to this draft were submitted by Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Panama, Peru and Venezuela. These would have the effect of increasing the Council's membership to 21, 16 of which would be elected non-permanent members; 13 affirmative votes would be needed for adoption of decisions, and the pattern of geographical distribution for election differed from that in the 15-power draft resolution by allotting five seats to African States instead of four, and one non-permanent seat was to alternate between Latin American and Asian States and another was to alternate between Eastern European and Western European and other States.

Following discussion of these changes, India, on behalf of the sponsors of the draft resolution, announced that they would not press it to the vote; India orally proposed instead that consideration of the question be postponed until the Assembly's regular 1980 session.

The Assembly adopted the Indian proposal without vote on 14 December as decision 34/431, by which it also decided to transmit to that session the draft resolution and related documents.

Election of five non-permanent members of the Security Council

On 26 October 1979, the General Assembly proceeded to the election of five non-permanent members of the Security Council to fill the vacancies which were to occur on 31 December. On the first ballot, having obtained the required two-thirds majority of Members voting, four Member States (the German Democratic Republic, the Niger, the Philippines and Tunisia) were elected members of the Council for a two-year term beginning on 1 January 1980.

With regard to the fifth vacancy, to be filled by a Member from the Latin American group of States at the United Nations, Cuba obtained 77 votes and Colombia 68, i.e. less than the required two-thirds majority. The Assembly held 12 more ballots on that day but with no positive result. More attempts to fill the remaining seat were made on 30 October (six ballots), 2 November (nine), 29 November (12), 5 December (18), 11 December (12), 13 December (nine), 17 December (15), 18 December (18), 19 December (12) and 27 December (15).

On 28 December, in view of the persisting deadlock and of the fact that the term of office of the member to be elected was to begin on 1 January 1980, Austria submitted a draft resolution, by which the Assembly would have: called on the Member States concerned to enter immediately into consultations with a view to arriving at an appropriate solution which would enable the Assembly to fulfil in time its responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations concerning the election of non-permanent members of the Security Council; and urged those Member States to inform the Assembly President of the outcome of their consultations no later than 31 December 1979. Amendments to the Austrian draft were submitted by Algeria and jointly by Bolivia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Venezuela and Zaire.

Algeria would have inserted a preambular paragraph recalling the practice followed after the adoption in 1963 of the Assembly's resolution to expand the Council's membership;3 the Council had continued to function under the previous regime until the election of the additional members. By a further Algerian amendment, Member States, in particular the two States directly concerned, would have been called on to enter immediately into consultations to arrive at a solution enabling the Assembly to fulfil in time its election responsibility under Article 23 of the Charter. ⁴

The eight-power amendments would have had the Assembly call on the two Member States concerned and the regional group to enter immediately into consultations with a view to proposing an appropriate solution to enable the Assembly to fulfil its election responsibility in time, and urge them to inform the Assembly President of the outcome by 31 December. Austria, however, did not press its draft resolution to a vote.

As the numerous consultations held by the Assembly President to resolve the deadlock, including two meetings of the General Committee, had remained without effect, the Assembly continued its balloting on 31 December 1979 (nine ballots) and on 4 January 1980 (six).

Although there had been considerable fluctuations in the results of the voting (in the penultimate vote on 4 January, Colombia obtained 72 votes and Cuba 71), the last ballot that day gave Cuba 74 votes and Colombia 69, the required majority being 96. By then, 154 ballots, an unprecedented number in the history of the United Nations (the largest number of ballots previously taken was 51 in 1959), had proved inconclusive.

On 7 January, after extensive consultations by all the parties concerned under the leadership of the Assembly President, the President announced that Colombia and Cuba had decided to withdraw their candidacies and that the Latin American group had officially endorsed the candidature of Mexico.

In the final ballot, held on 7 January, Mexico obtained 133 votes and was thus elected a member of the Security Council.

The Assembly's election of the five nonpermanent members of the Council was embodied in decision 34/328.

Composition of relevant organs

The question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations was again considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth (1979) session.

As at previous sessions, the item was allocated to the Special Political Committee. As there was no consensus among regional groups regarding the item, the Committee Chairman orally proposed on 21 November that substantive discussion of the question should be postponed to the thirty-fifth (1980) session. Accordingly, the Committee, without objection, recommended that the Assembly include the item in the provisional agenda of that session. On 5 December, the Assembly adopted the Committee's recommendation without vote as decision 34/420.

Rationalization of the procedures and organization of the General Assembly

The General Assembly, in approving the conclusions of its Special Committee on the Rationalization of the Procedures and Organization of the General Assembly on 17 December 1971,⁵ had decided to review from time to time the progress achieved in rationalizing its work and requested the Secretary-General to report as appropriate on the extent to which the Special Committee's conclusions -annexed to the Assembly's 1971 resolution -had been reflected in the practice of the Assembly.

The first report called for under that resolution was submitted to the Assembly in June 1979. It reviewed the Special Committee's recommendations which had not been or had been only partly implemented. These pertained to the work of the General Committee, the agenda, the organization of the work of the Main Committees, maximum use of available time, documentation, subsidiary organs, planning of meetings, and budgetary and financial questions. The report also contained additional recommendations of the Secretary-General aimed at further rationalizing the Assembly's procedures.

By a letter of 9 July, Mexico, as current Chairman of the Latin American group of Member States at the United Nations, transmitted to the Secretary-General an aide-memoire endorsed that day by the group. The group found the Secretary-General's report acceptable on the whole as a starting-point for more detailed discussion in the General Committee. It submitted suggestions on the organization of work of the Main Committees, documentation, planning of meetings, and budgetary and financial questions.

The attention of the Economic and Social Council was drawn to the Secretary-General's report by a Secretariat note of 12 July circulating to the Council, to facilitate consideration, a preliminary list of Assembly agenda items presumably to be dealt with at its forthcoming session by the Second (Economic and Financial) and Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committees, two of the three Main Committees- the other being the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Commit tee-noted in the Secretary-General's report as having the heaviest workload.

On 3 August 1979, on an oral proposal by its President, the Council adopted, without vote, decision 1979/88, by which it took note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's report and confirmed that, in accordance with his wishes, the report had been duly taken into account; the Council would be guided by the action that the Assembly might take on the matter. (See also p. 518.)

The Secretary-General's report was considered in depth by the General Committee at the Assembly's 1979 regular session. On the basis of that Committee's recommendations, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 34/401, comprising six sections which incorporated the Committee's proposals to rationalize the Assembly's procedures and the organization of its work.

Section I, on the organization of the session, was approved by the General Committee on 19 September and adopted by the Assembly on 21 September. It dealt with improving the work of the General Committee, a time schedule for meetings, allocating most agenda items to Main Committees for discussion, refraining from congratulatory expressions for speeches in the general debate, limitations on explanations of vote, rights of reply, use of the rostrum, timely submission and consideration of budgetary and financial documents-including a mandatory deadline of 1 December for submission to the Fifth Committee of draft resolutions with financial implications —conciseness of Main Committees' reports, restricting secret ballots and dispensing with representatives' concluding statements.

Sections II, III, IV and V, on the work of the Main Committees, documentation, resolutions and planning of meetings, respectively, were approved by the General Committee on 24 October and 28 November and adopted by the Assembly on 25 October and 29 November, containing the following guidelines.

Main Committee work could be improved if regional groups agreed at each session on chairmanship distribution for the following session, officers more often conducted informal negotiations to reach agreement on issues, speaking time was limited, and more meetings were held earlier in the session.

Subsidiary organs should be required to complete their work by 1 September and their reports should be available by the opening of the Assembly session, reports should not contain previously distributed documents or annex summary records, those not requiring a decision should not be debated nor resolutions adopted on them unless requested by the Secretary-General or organ concerned, publication priority should be given to reports of the Assembly's principal and subsidiary organs and to draft resolutions and amendments, and States should refrain from requesting circulation of communications as Assembly documents.

Subsidiary organs should submit draft resolutions, and resolutions should not call for separate agenda items under which to discuss them.

The Committee on Conferences should be authorized to play a more effective role in planning meetings and using facilities, and Assembly organs should not meet at United Nations Headquarters, New York, during regular Assembly sessions.

By section VI, approved by the General Committee on 11 December and adopted by the Assembly the following day, the Assembly appointed the members of an Ad Hoc Committee on Subsidiary Organs, under the chairmanship of the current President of the Assembly, to review the question of the continuation of subsidiary organs and to make recommendations thereon, by consensus, to the 1980 regular session. The Assembly should also consider a moratorium for a fixed period on the establishment of new subsidiaries.

Several of these decisions were implemented in the course of the 1979 regular session; the extent of implementation of the others was to be assessed at the 1980 regular session.

I. ORGANIZATION OF THE SESSION

A. General Committee

- The General Committee should, at the outset of each session, consider how the work of the session can best be rationalized.
- 2. The General Committee should also meet periodically throughout the session to review the progress of work and to make recommendations to the General Assembly on the general programme of the session and on measures aimed at improving its work.

B. Schedule of meetings

3. Both plenary and committee meetings should begin at 10:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. and, in order to expedite the work of the General Assembly, all meetings should begin promptly at the scheduled time.

C. Allocation of items

4. Substantive items should normally be discussed initially in a Main Committee and, therefore, items previously allocated to plenary meetings should henceforth be referred to a Main Committee unless there are compelling circumstances requiring their continued consideration in plenary meeting.

D. General debate

5. Out of consideration for the other speakers and in order to preserve the dignity of the general debate, delegations should refrain from expressing their congratulations in the General Assembly Hall after a speech has been delivered.

E. Explanations of vote

6. Explanations of vote should be limited to 10 minutes.

7. When the same draft resolution is considered in a Main Committee and in plenary meeting, a delegation should, as far as possible, explain its vote only once, i.e., either in the Committee or in plenary meeting unless that delegations's vote in plenary meeting is different from its vote in the Committee.

F. Right of reply

- 8. Delegations should exercise their right of reply at the end of the day whenever two meetings have been scheduled for that day and whenever such meetings are devoted to the consideration of the same item.
- 9. The number of interventions in the exercise of the right of reply for any delegation at a given meeting should be limited to two per item.
- 10. The first intervention in the exercise of the right of reply for any delegation on any item at a given meeting should be limited to 10 minutes and the second intervention should be limited to five minutes.

G. Non-utilization of the rostrum

11. Explanations of vote, interventions in the exercise of the right of reply and procedural motions should be made by delegations from their seats.

H. Budgetary and financial questions

12. It is imperative that Main Committees should allow sufficient time for the preparation of the estimate of expenditures by the Secretariat and for its consideration by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Fifth Committee and that they should take this requirement into account when they adopt their programme of work.

13. Furthermore:

- (a) A mandatory deadline, not later than 1 December, should be established for the submission to the Fifth Committee of all draft resolutions with financial implications;
- (b) The Fifth Committee should, as a general practice, consider accepting without debate the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the financial implications of draft resolutions up to a prescribed limit, namely, $25,000 on any one item;
- (c) Firm deadlines should be set for the early submission of the reports of subsidiary bodies which require consideration by the Fifth Committee;
- (d) A minimum period of 48 hours should be allowed between the submission and the voting of a proposal involving expenditure in order to allow the Secretary-General to prepare and present the related statement of administrative and financial implications.

I. Reports of the Main Committees

- 14. Reports of the Main Committees should be as concise as possible and, save in exceptional cases, should not contain a summary of the debates.
- 15. The practice of dealing in plenary meeting with reports of the Second Committee whereby it is stated that the positions of delegations regarding draft resolutions recommended by the Second Committee have been made clear in the Committee and are reflected in the relevant official records should be extended to reports of other committees.

J. Balloting procedure

16. The practice of dispensing with the secret ballot for elections to subsidiary organs when the number of candidates corresponds to the number of seats to be filled should become standard and the same practice should apply to the election of the President and Vice-Presidents of the General Assembly, unless a delegation specifically requests a vote on a given election.

K. Concluding statements

17. To save time at the end of the session, the practice of making concluding statements in the General Assembly and its Main Committees should be dispensed with except for statements by the presiding officers.

II. WORK OF THE MAIN COMMITTEES

- 18. Before the conclusion of a session. of the General Assembly, regional groups should agree on the distribution of chairmanships among them for the following session.
- 19. Candidates for the chairmanships of the Main Committees should be nominated as soon as possible.
- 20. It is strongly recommended that nominees for the chairmanships of the Main Committees should have experience in the work of the General Assembly.
- 21. During sessions, the Chairmen or other officers of the Main Committees should be entrusted by their Committees, whenever appropriate, with the conduct of informal negotiations aimed at reaching agreement on specific issues.
- 22. Chairmen of Main Committees should fully exercise their authority under rule 106 of the rules of procedure and, in particular, propose more frequently the limitation of the time to be allowed to speakers or of the number of times each representative may speak on any given item.
- 23. The Main Committees which require the largest number of meetings should be encouraged to hold more meetings early in the session in order to ensure a better distribution of meetings over the whole session.

III. DOCUMENTATION

- 24. Subsidiary organs should be required to complete their work at the latest by 1 September, so that their reports may be available in all the working languages in time for consideration by the opening of the session of the General Assembly, and the Committee on Conferences should take this provision fully into account.
- 25. No reports should contain a compilation of other previous documents.
- 26. Subsidiary organs should not annex to their reports summary records of their meetings or other material which were already distributed to all Member States.
- 27. The General Assembly should review periodically the need for summary records of its subsidiary organs.
- 28. The General Assembly, including its Main Committees, should merely take note of those reports of the Secretary-General or subsidiary organs which do not require a decision by the Assembly and should neither debate nor adopt resolutions on them, unless specifically requested to do so by the Secretary-General or the organ concerned.
- 29. The publication of reports of the principal organs and of subsidiary organs of the General Assembly and of draft resolutions and amendments should be given priority over that of any individual communications received from Member States.
- 30. Member States should refrain, to the extent possible, from requesting the circulation of any individual communications as documents of the General Assembly and in lieu thereof, where circulation of such documents is desired should, as far as possible, request such circulation under the cover of a note verbale in the official languages in which they submit them.

IV. RESOLUTIONS

- 31. Subsidiary organs reporting to the General Assembly should make every effort to submit draft resolutions in order to facilitate the consideration of the items.
- 32. Whenever possible, resolutions requesting the discussion of a question at a subsequent session should not call for the inclusion of a separate new item and such discussion should be held under the item under which the resolution was adopted.

V. PLANNING OF MEETINGS

- 33. The Committee on Conferences should be authorized to play a more effective role in the planning of meetings are in the use of conference facilities.
- 34. No subsidiary organ of the General Assembly should be permitted to meet at United Nations Headquarters during regular session of the Assembly, unless explicitly authorized by the Assembly.

VI. SUBSIDIARY ORGANS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

- 35. The General Assembly appoints the following States as members of an Ad Hoc Committee on Subsidiary Organ under the chairmanship of the President of the thirty-four session of the Assembly, to review the question of the continuation of subsidiary organs with a view to making recommendations thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, on the understanding that the Committee will work on the basis of consensus:
- (a) Bahamas, Belgium, Benin, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, China, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, Guyana, Iceland, Lesotho, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Romania, Singapore, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Turkey, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United Republic of Cameroon, United States of America, Yemen;
 - (b) India (as Chairman of the Group of 77);
- (c) Cuba (as Chairman of the Group of Non-Aligned Countries);
- (d) States holding the chairmanship of the region groups.
- 36. The General Assembly requests the Secretary General to extend the full co-operation of the Secretariat the Ad Hoc Committee in the performance of its task.
- 37. A moratorium for a fixed period on the establishment of additional subsidiary organs should be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Observer status in the General Assembly for the Council of Arab Economic Unity

By a letter dated 12 October 1979, the representatives of Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's current session of an item entitled "Observer status for the Council of Arab Economic Unity in the General Assembly."

An explanatory memorandum annexed to the letter noted that the 12-member Council ha been established under the terms of an agreement between members of the League of Arab States which had entered into force in 1964.

was an autonomous legal entity with a secretariat at Amman, Jordan, established to facilitate freedom of movement of persons, capital and goods, liberalize trade through an Arab Common Market, and co-ordinate Arab policies in fields such as agriculture, industry, trade, labour and social legislation, and Arab monetary and fiscal policies. It had obtained observer status with the Economic and Social Council in 1975.6

On 24 October, the General Committee decided to defer temporarily consideration of the request. No further action was taken on the matter during 1979.

Chapter XVI

Address by Pope John Paul II to the General Assembly

On 2 October 1979, His Holiness Pope John Paul II addressed a plenary meeting of the thirty-fourth session of the United Nations General Assembly. Pope John Paul spoke at the invitation of the Secretary-General; he was welcomed to the meeting by the President of the Assembly and the Secretary-General.

The following is the full text of his address.

I desire to express my gratitude to the General Assembly of the United Nations, which I am permitted today to participate in and to address. My thanks go in the first place to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Dr. Kurt Waldheim. Last autumn, soon after my election to the Chair of Saint Peter, he invited me to make this visit, and he renewed his invitation in the course of our meeting in Rome last May. From the first moment, I felt greatly honoured and deeply obliged. And today, before this distinguished Assembly, I also thank you, Mr. President, who have so kindly welcomed me and invited me to speak.

The formal reason for my intervention today is, without any question, the special bond of cooperation that links the Apostolic See with the United Nations, as is shown by the presence of the Holy See's Permanent Observer to this Organization. The existence of this bond, which is held in high esteem by the Holy See, rests on the sovereignty with which the Apostolic See has been endowed for many centuries. The territorial extent of that sovereignty is limited to the small State of Vatican City, but the sovereignty itself is warranted by the need of the papacy to exercise its mission in full freedom, and to be able to deal with any interlocutor, whether a Government or an international organization, without dependence on other sovereignties. Of course, the nature and aims of the spiritual mission of the Apostolic See and the Church make their participation in the tasks and activities of the United Nations very different from that of the States, which are communities in the political and temporal sense.

Besides attaching great importance to its collaboration with the United Nations, the Apostolic See has always, since the foundation of your Organization, expressed its esteem and its agreement with the historic significance of this supreme forum for the international life of humanity today. It also never ceases to support your Organization's functions and initiatives, which are aimed at peaceful coexistence and collaboration between nations. There are many proofs of this. In the more than 30 years of the existence of the United Nations, it has received much attention in papal messages and encyclicals, in documents of the Catholic episcopate, and likewise in the Second Vatican Council. Pope John XXIII and Pope Paul VI looked with confidence on your important institution as an eloquent and promising sign of our times. He who is now addressing you has, since the first months of his pontificate, several times expressed the same confidence and conviction as his predecessors.

This confidence and conviction on the part of the Apostolic See is the result, as I have said, not of merely political reasons but of the religious and moral character of the mission of the Roman Catholic Church. As a universal community embracing faithful belonging to almost all countries and continents, nations, peoples, races, languages and cultures, the Church is deeply interested in the existence and activity of the Organization whose very name tells us that it unites and associates nations and States. It unites and associates: it does not divide and oppose. It seeks out the ways for understanding and peaceful collaboration, and endeavours with the means at its disposal and the methods in its power to exclude war, division and mutual destruction within the great family of humanity today.

This is the real reason, the essential reason, for my presence among you, and I wish to thank this distinguished Assembly for giving consideration to this reason, which can make my presence among you in some way useful. It is certainly a highly significant fact that among the representatives of the States, whose raison d'être is the sovereignty of powers linked with territory and people, there is also today the representative of the Apostolic See and the Catholic Church. This Church is the Church of Jesus Christ, who declared before the tribunal of the Roman judge Pilate that he was a king, but with a kingdom not of this world (cf. John 18:36-37). When he was then asked about the reason for the existence of his kingdom among men, he explained: "For this I was born, and for this I have come into the world, to bear witness to the truth" (John 18:37). Here, before the representatives of the States, I wish not only to thank you but also to offer my special congratulations, since the invitation extended to the Pope to speak in your Assembly shows that the United Nations accepts and respects the religious and moral dimension of those human problems that the Church attends to, in view of the message of truth and love that it is her duty to bring to the world. The questions that concern your functions and receive your attention-as is indicated by the vast organic complex of institutions and activities that are part of or collaborate with the United Nations, especially in the fields of culture, health, food, labour, and the peaceful uses of nuclear energy-certainly make it essential for us to meet in the name of man in his wholeness, in all the fullness and manifold riches of his spiritual and material existence, as I have stated in my encyclical Redemptor Hominis, the first of my pontificate.

Now, availing myself of the solemn occasion of my meeting with the representatives of the nations of the earth, I wish above all to send my greetings to all the men and women living on this planet. To every man and every woman, without any exception whatever. Every human being living on earth is a member of a civil society, of a nation, many of them represented here. Each one of you, distinguished ladies and gentlemen, represents a particular State, system and political structure, but what you represent above all are individual human beings; you are also representatives of men and women, of practically all the people of the world, individual men and women, communities and peoples who are living the present phase of their own history and who are also part of the history of humanity as whole, each of them a subject endowed with dignity as a human person, with his or her own culture, experiences and aspirations, tensions and sufferings, and legitimate expectations. That relationship is what provides the reason for all political activity, whether national or international, for in the final analysis this activity comes from man, is exercised by man and is for man. And if political activity is cut off from this fundamental relationship and finality, if it becomes in a way its own end, it loses much of its reason to exist. Even more, it can also give rise to a specific alienation; it can become extraneous to man; can come to contradict humanity itself. In reality, what justifies the existence of any political activity is service to man, concerned and responsible attention to the essential problems and duties of his earthly existence in its social dimension and significance, on which also the good of each person depends.

I ask you, ladies and gentlemen, to excuse me for speaking of questions that are certainly self evident for you. But it does not seem pointless to speak of them, since the most frequent pitfall for human activities is the possibility of losing sight while performing them, of the clearest truths, the most elementary principles.

I would like to express the wish that, in vie of its universal character, the United Nations will never cease to be the forum, the high tribute from which all man's problems are appraised in truth and justice. It was in the name of this inspiration it was through this historic stimulus, that on 2 June 1945, towards the end of the terrible Second World War, the Charter of the United Nations was signed and on the following 2 October your Organization began its life. Soon after, on 10 December 1948, came its fundamental document, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the rights of the human being as a concrete individual and of the human being in his universal value. This document is a milestone of the long and difficult path of the human race. The progress of humanity must be measured not only by the progress of science and technology, which shows man's uniqueness with regard to nature but also and chiefly by the primacy given to spiritual values and by the progress of moral life. In this field is manifested the full dominion of reason, through truth, in the behaviour of the individual and society, and also the control of reason over nature; and thus human conscience quietly triumphs, as was expressed in the ancient saying: "Genus humanum arte et ratione vivit."

It was when technology was being directed in its one-sided progress towards goals of war, hegemony and conquest, so that man might kill man and nation destroy nation by depriving it of its liberty and the right to exist—and I still have before my mind the image of the Second World War in Europe, which began forty years ago on 1 September 1939 with the invasion of Poland and ended on 9 May 1945—it was precisely then that the United Nations arose. And three years later the document appeared which, as I have said, must be considered a real milestone on the path of the moral progress of humanity-the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Governments and States of the world have understood that, if they are not to attack and destroy each other, they must unite. The real way, the fundamental way to this is through each human being, through the definition and recognition of and respect for the inalienable rights of individuals and of the communities of peoples.

Today, forty years after the outbreak of the Second World War, I wish to recall the whole of the experiences by the individuals and nations that were sustained by a generation that is largely still alive. I had occasion not long ago to reflect again on some of those experiences, in one of the places that are most distressing and overflowing with contempt for man and his fundarights—the extermination camp Oswiecim (Auschwitz), which I visited during my pilgrimage to Poland last June. This infamous place is unfortunately only one of the many scattered over the continent of Europe. But the memory of even one should be a warning sign on the path of humanity today, in order that every kind of concentration camp anywhere on earth may once and for all be done away with. And everything that recalls those horrible experiences should also disappear for ever from the lives of nations and States, everything that is a continuation of those experiences under different forms, namely the various kinds of torture and oppression, either physical or moral, carried out under any system, in any land; this phenomenon is all the more distressing if it occurs under the pretext of internal "security" or the need to preserve an apparent peace.

You will forgive me, ladies and gentlemen, for evoking this memory. But I would be untrue to the history of this century, I would be dishonest with regard to the great cause of man, which we all wish to serve, if I should keep silent, I who come from the country on whose living body Oswiecim was at one time constructed. But my purpose in evoking this memory is above all to show what painful experiences and sufferings by millions of people gave rise to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which has been placed as the basic inspiration and cornerstone of the United Nations. This Declaration was paid for by millions of our brothers and sisters at the cost of their suffering and sacrifice, brought about by the brutalization that darkened and made insensitive the human consciences of their oppressors and of those who carried out a real genocide. This price cannot have been paid in vain! The Universal Declaration of Human Rights-with its train of many declarations and conventions on highly important aspects of human rights, in favour of children, of women, of equality between races, and especially the two international covenants on economic, social and cultural rights and on civil and political rightsmust remain the basic value in the United Nations with which the consciences of its members must be confronted and from which they must draw continual inspiration. If the truths and principles contained in this document were to be forgotten or ignored and were thus to lose the genuine self-evidence that distinguished them at the time they were brought painfully to birth, then the noble purpose of the United Nations could be faced with the threat of a new destruction. This is what would happen if the simple yet powerful eloquence of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights were decisively subjugated by what is wrongly called political interest, but often really means no more than one-sided gain and advantage to the detriment of others, or a thirst for power regardless of the needs of others-everything which by its nature is opposed to the spirit of the Declaration. "Political interest" understood in this sense, if you will pardon me, ladies and gentlemen, dishonours the noble and difficult mission of your service for the good of your countries and of all humanity.

Fourteen years ago my great predecessor Pope Paul VI spoke from this podium. He spoke memorable words, which I desire to repeat today: "No more war, war never again! Never one against the other," or even "one above the other," but always, on every occasion, "with each other."

Paul VI was a tireless servant of the cause of peace. I wish to follow him with all my strength and continue his service. The Catholic Church in every place on earth proclaims a message of peace, prays for peace, educates for peace. This purpose is also shared by the representatives and followers of other Churches and Communities and of other religions of the world, and they have pledged themselves to it. In union with efforts by all people of good will, this work is certainly bearing fruit. Nevertheless, we are continually troubled by the armed conflicts that break out from time to time. How grateful we are to the Lord when a direct intervention succeeds in avoiding such a conflict, as in the case of the tension that last year threatened Argentina and Chile.

It is my fervent hope that a solution also to the Middle East crises may draw nearer. While being prepared to recognize the value of any concrete step or attempt made to settle the conflict, I want to recall that it would have no value if it did not truly represent the "first stone" of a general over-all peace in the area, a peace that, being necessarily based on equitable recognition of the rights of all, cannot fail to include the consideration and just settlement of the Palestinian question. Connected with this question is that of the tranquillity, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon within the formula that has made it an example of peaceful and mutually fruitful coexistence between distinct communities, a formula that I hope will, in the common interest, be maintained, with the adjustments required by the developments of the situation. I also hope for a special statute that, under international guarantees— as my predecessor Paul VI indicated-would respect the particular nature of Jerusalem, a heritage sacred to the veneration of millions of believers of the three great monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity and Islam.

We are troubled also by reports of the development of weaponry exceeding in quality and size the means of war and destruction ever known before. In this field also we applaud the decisions and agreements aimed at reducing the arms race. Nevertheless, the life of humanity today is seriously endangered by the threat of destruction and by the risk arising even from accepting certain "tranquillizing" reports. And the resistance to actual concrete proposals of real disarmament, such as those called for by this Assembly in a special session last year, shows that together with the will for peace that all profess and that most desire there is also in existence-perhaps in latent or conditional form but none the less real—the contrary and the negation of this will. The continual preparations for war demonstrated by the production of ever more numerous, powerful and sophisticated weapons in various countries show that there is a desire to be ready for war, and being ready means being able to start it; it also means taking the risk that sometime, somewhere, somehow, someone can set in motion the terrible mechanism of general destruction.

It is therefore necessary to make a continuing and even more energetic effort to do away with the very possibility of provoking war, and to make such catastrophes impossible by influencing the attitudes and convictions, the very intentions and aspirations of Governments and peoples. This duty, kept constantly in mind by the United Nations and each of its institutions, must also be a duty for every society, every regime, every Government. This task is certainly served by initiatives aimed at international co-operation for the fostering of development. As Paul VI said at the end of his encyclical Populorum Progressio, "If the new name for peace is development, who would not wish to labour for it with all his powers?" However, this task must also be served by constant reflection and activity aimed at discovering the very roots of hatred, destructiveness and contempt—the roots of everything that produces the temptation to war, not so much in the hearts of nations as in the inner determination of the systems that decide the history of whole societies. In this titanic labour of building up the peaceful future of our planet, the United Nations has undoubtedly a key function and guiding role, for which it must refer to the just ideals contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. For this Declaration has struck a real blow against the many deep roots of war, since the spirit of war, in its basic primordial meaning, springs up and grows to maturity where the inalienable rights of man are violated.

This is a new and deeply relevant vision of the cause of peace, one that goes deeper and is more radical. It is a vision that sees the genesis, and in a sense the substance, of war in the more complex forms emanating from injustice viewed in all its various aspects: this injustice first attacks human rights and thereby destroys the organic unity of the social order and it then affects the whole system of international relations. Within the Church's doctrine, the encyclical Pacem in Terris by John XXIII provides in synthetic form a view of this matter that is very close to the ideological foundation of the United Nations. This must therefore form the basis to which one must loyally and perseveringly adhere in order to establish true "peace on earth."

By applying this criterion we must diligently examine which principal tensions in connexion with the inalienable rights of man can weaken the construction of this peace which we all desire so ardently and which is the essential goal of the efforts of the United Nations. It is not easy, but it must be done. Anyone who undertakes it must take up a totally objective position and be guided by sincerity, readiness to acknowledge one's prejudices and mistakes and readiness even to renounce one's own particular interests!

including political interests. Peace is something greater and more important than any of these interests. It is by sacrificing these interests for the sake of peace that we serve them best. After all, in whose "political interest" can it ever be to have another war?

Every analysis must necessarily start from the premise that—although each person lives in a particular concrete social and historical context—every human being is endowed with a dignity that must never be lessened, impaired or destroyed but must instead be respected and safeguarded, if peace is really to be built up.

In a movement that one hopes will be progressive and continuous, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the other international and national juridical instruments are endeavouring to create general awareness of the dignity of the human being, and to define at least some of the inalienable rights of man. Permit me to enumerate some of the most important human rights that are universally recognized: the right to life, liberty and security of person; the right to food, clothing, housing, sufficient health care, rest and leisure; the right to freedom of expression, education and culture; the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, and the right to manifest one's religion either individually or in community, in public or in private; the right to choose a state of life, to found a family and to enjoy all conditions necessary for family life; the right to property and work, to adequate working conditions and a just wage; the right of assembly and association; the right to freedom of movement, to internal and external migration; the right to nationality and residence; the right to political participation and the right to participate in the free choice of the political system of the people to which one belongs. All these human rights taken together are in keeping with the substance of the dignity of the human being, understood in his entirety, not as reduced to one dimension only. These rights concern the satisfaction of man's essential needs, the exercise of his freedoms, and his relationships with others; but always and everywhere they concern man, they concern man's full human dimension.

Man lives at the same time both in the world of material values and in that of spiritual values. For the individual living and hoping man, his needs, freedoms and relationships with others never concern one sphere of values alone, but belong to both. Material and spiritual realities may be viewed separately in order to understand better that in the concrete human being they are inseparable, and to see that any threat to human rights, whether in the field of material realities or in that of spiritual realities, is equally dangerous for peace, since in every instance it concerns man in his entirety. Permit me, distinguished ladies and gentlemen, to recall a constant rule of the history of humanity, a rule that is implicitly contained in all that I have already stated with regard to integral development and human rights. The rule is based on the relationship between spiritual values and material or economic values. In this relationship, it is the spiritual values that are pre-eminent, both on account of the nature of these values and also for reasons concerning the good of man. The pre-eminence of the values of the spirit defines the proper sense of earthly material goods and the way to use them. This pre-eminence is therefore at the basis of a just peace. It is also a contributing factor to ensuring that material development, technical development and the development of civilization are at the service of what constitutes man. This means enabling man to have full access to truth, to moral development, and to the complete possibility of enjoying the goods of culture which he has inherited, and of increasing them by his own creativity. It is easy to see that material goods do not have unlimited capacity for satisfying the needs of man: they are not in themselves easily distributed and, in the relationship between those who possess and enjoy them and those who are without them, they give rise to tension, dissension and division that will often even turn into open conflict. Spiritual goods, on the other hand, are open to unlimited enjoyment by many at the same time, without diminution of the goods themselves. Indeed, the more people share in such goods, the more they are enjoyed and drawn upon, the more then do those goods show their indestructible and immortal worth. This truth is confirmed, for example, by the works of creativity-I mean by the works of thought, poetry, music, and the figurative arts, fruits of man's spirit.

A critical analysis of our modern civilization shows that in the last hundred years it has contributed as never before to the development of material goods, but that it has also given rise, both in theory and still more in practice, to a series of attitudes in which sensitivity to the spiritual dimension of human existence is diminished to a greater or less extent, as a result of certain premises which reduce the meaning of human life chiefly to the many different material and economic factors—I mean to the demands of production, the market, consumption, the accumulation of riches or of the growing bureaucracy with which an attempt is made to regulate these very processes. Is this not the result of having subordinated man to one single conception and sphere of values?

What is the link between these reflections and the cause of peace and war? Since, as I have already stated, material goods by their very nature provoke conditionings and divisions, the struggle to obtain these goods becomes inevitable in the history of humanity. If we cultivate this one-sided subordination of man to material goods alone, we shall be incapable of overcoming this state of need. We shall be able to attenuate it and avoid it in particular cases, but we shall not succeed in eliminating it systematically and radically, unless we emphasize more and pay greater honour, before everyone's eyes, in the sight of every society, to the second dimension of the goods of man: the dimension that does not divide people but puts them into communication with each other, associates them and unites them.

I consider that the famous opening words of the Charter of the United Nations, in which "the peoples of the United Nations, determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war" solemnly reaffirmed "faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small," are meant to stress this dimension.

Indeed, the fight against incipient wars cannot be carried out on a merely superficial level, by treating the symptoms. It must be done in a radical way, by attacking the causes. The reason I have called attention to the dimension constituted by spiritual realities is my concern for the cause of peace, peace which is built up by men and women uniting around what is most fully and profoundly human, around what raises them above the world about them and determines their indestructible grandeur-indestructible in spite of the death to which everyone on earth is subject. I would like to add that the Catholic Church and, I think I can say, the whole of Christianity sees in this very domain its own particular task. The Second Vatican Council helped to establish what the Christian faith has in common with the various non-Christian religions in this aspiration. The Church is therefore grateful to all who show respect and good will with regard to this mission of hers and do not impede it or make it difficult. An analysis of the history of mankind, especially at its present stage, shows how important is the duty of revealing more fully the range of the goods that are linked with the spiritual dimension of human existence. It shows how important this task is for building peace and how serious is any threat to human rights. Any violation of them, even in a "peace situation," is a form of warfare against humanity.

It seems that in the modern world there are two main threats. Both concern human rights in the field of international relations and human rights within the individual States or societies.

The first of these systematic threats against human rights is linked in an over-all sense with the distribution of material goods. This distribution is frequently unjust both within individual societies and on the planet as a whole. Everyone knows that these goods are given to man not only as nature's bounty: they are enjoyed by him chiefly as the fruit of his many activities, ranging from the simplest manual and physical labour to the most complicated forms of industrial production, and to the highly qualified and specialized research and study. Various forms of inequality in the possession of material goods, and in the enjoyment of them, can often be explained by different historical and cultural causes and circumstances. But, while these circumstances can diminish the moral responsibility of people today, they do not prevent the situations of inequality from being marked by injustice and social injury.

People must become aware that economic tensions within countries and in the relationship between States and even between entire continents contain within themselves substantial elements that restrict or violate human rights. Such elements are the exploitation of labour and many other abuses that affect the dignity of the human person. It follows that the fundamental criterion for comparing social, economic and political systems is not, and cannot be, the criterion of hegemony and imperialism: it can be, and indeed it must be, the humanistic criterion, namely the measure in which each system is really capable of reducing, restraining and eliminating as far as possible the various forms of exploitations of man and of ensuring for him, through work, not only the just distribution of the indispensable material goods, but also a participation, in keeping with his dignity, in the whole process of production and in the social life that grows up around that process. Let us not forget that, although man depends on the resources of the mterial world for his life, he cannot be their slave but he must be the master. The words of the book of Genesis, "Fill the earth and subdue it (Gen. 1:28), are in a sense a primary and essential directive in the field of economy and of labour policy.

Humanity as a whole, and the individual nations, have certainly made remarkable progress in this field during the last hundred years. But it is a field in which there is never any lack of systematic threats and violations of human rights. Disturbing factors are frequently present in the form of the frightful disparities between excessively rich individuals and groups on the one hand, and on the other hand the majority made up of the poor or indeed of the destitute, who lack food and opportunities for work and education, and are in great numbers condemned to hunger and disease. And concern is also caused at times by the radical separation of work from property by man's indifference to the production enterprise to which he is linked only by a work obligation, without feeling that he is working for a good that will be his or for himself.

It is no secret that the abyss separating the minority of the excessively rich from the multitude of the destitute is a very grave symptom in the life of any society. This must also be said with even greater insistence with regard to the abyss separating countries and regions of the earth. Surely the only way to overcome this serious disparity between areas of satiety and areas of hunger and depression is through co-ordinated co-operation by all countries. This requires above all else a unity inspired by an authentic perspective of peace. Everything will depend on whether these differences and contrasts in the sphere of the "possession" of goods will be systematically reduced through truly effective means, on whether the belts of hunger, malnutrition, destitution, underdevelopment, disease and illiteracy will disappear from the economic map of the earth, and on whether peaceful cooperation will avoid imposing conditions of exploitation and economic or political dependence, which would only be a form of neocolonialism.

I would now like to draw attention to a second systematic threat to man in his alienable rights in the modern world, a threat which constitutes no less a danger than the first to the cause of peace. I refer to the various forms of injustice in the field of the spirit.

Man can indeed be wounded in his inner relationship with truth, in his conscience, in his most personal belief, in his view of the world, in his religious faith, and in the sphere of what are known as civil liberties. Decisive for these last is equality of rights without discrimination on grounds of origin, race, sex, nationality, religion, political convictions and the like. Equality of rights means the exclusion of the various forms of privilege for some and discrimination against others, whether they are people born in the same country or people from different backgrounds of history, nationality, race and ideology. For centuries the thrust of civilization has been in one direction: that of giving the life of individual political societies a form in which there can be fully safeguarded the objective rights of the spirit, of human conscience and of human creativity, including man's relationship with God. Yet in spite of this we still see in this field recurring threats and violations, often with no possibility of appealing to a higher authority or of obtaining an effective remedy.

Besides the acceptance of legal formulas safeguarding the principle of the freedom of the human spirit, such as freedom of thought and expression, religious freedom, and freedom of conscience, structures of social life often exist in which the practical exercise of these freedoms condemns man, in fact if not formally, to become a second-class or third-class citizen, to see compromised his chances of social advancement, his professional career or his access to certain posts of responsibility, and to lose even the possibility of educating his children freely. It is a question of the highest importance that in internal social life, as well as in international life, all human beings in every nation and country should be able to enjoy effectively their full rights under any political regime or system.

Only the safeguarding of this real completeness of rights for every human being without discrimination can ensure peace at its very roots.

With regard to religious freedom, which I, as Pope, am bound to have particularly at heart, precisely with a view to safeguarding peace, I would like to repeat here, as a contribution to respect for man's spiritual dimension, some principles contained in the Second Vatican Council's Declaration Dignitatis Humanae: "In accordance with their dignity, all human beings, because they are persons, that is, beings endowed with reason and free will and therefore bearing personal responsibility, are both impelled by their nature and bound by a moral obligation to seek the truth, especially religious truth. They are also bound to adhere to the truth once they come to know it and to direct their whole lives in accordance with its demands" (Dignitatis Humanae, 2).

"The practice of religion of its very nature consists primarily of those voluntary and free internal acts by which a human being directly sets his course towards God. No merely human power can either command or prohibit acts of this kind. But man's social nature itself requires that he give external expression to his internal acts of religion, that he communicate with others in religious matters and that he profess his religion in community" (Dignitatis Humanae, 3).

These words touch the very substance of the question. They also show how even the confrontation between the religious view of the world and the agnostic or even atheistic view, which is one of the "signs of the times" of the present age, could preserve honest and respectful human dimensions without violating the essential rights of conscience of any man or woman living on earth.

Respect for the dignity of the human person would seem to demand that, when the exact tenor of the exercise of religious freedom is being discussed or determined with a view to national laws or international conventions, the institutions that are by their nature at the service of religion should also be brought in. If this participation is omitted, there is a danger of imposing, in so intimate a field of man's life, rules or restrictions that are opposed to his true religious needs.

The United Nations has proclaimed 1979 the Year of the Child. In the presence of the representatives of so many nations of the world gathered here, I wish to express the joy that we all find in children, the springtime of life, the anticipation of the future history of each of our present earthly homelands. No country on earth, no political system can think of its own future otherwise than through the image of these new generations that will receive from their parents the manifold heritage of values, duties and aspirations of the nation to which they belong and of the whole human family. Concern for the child, even before birth, from the first moment of conception and then throughout the years of infancy and youth, is the primary and fundamental test of the relationship of one human being to another.

And so, what better wish can I express for every nation and the whole of mankind, and for all the children of the world than a better future in which respect for human rights will become a complete reality throughout the third millennium, which is drawing near.

But in this perspective we must ask ourselves whether there will continue to accumulate over the heads of this new generation of children the threat of common extermination for which the means are in the hands of the modern States, especially the major world powers. Are the children to receive the arms race from us as a necessary inheritance? How are we to explain this unbridled race?

The ancients said: Si vis pacem, para bellum. But can our age still really believe that the breathtaking spiral of armaments is at the service of world peace? In alleging the threat of a potential enemy, is it really not rather the intention to keep for oneself a means of threat, in order to get the upper hand with the aid of one's own arsenal of destruction? Here too it is the human dimension of peace that tends to vanish in favour of ever new possible forms of imperialism.

It must be our solemn wish here for our children, for the children of all the nations on earth, that this point will never be reached. And for that reason I do not cease to pray to God each day so that in His mercy He may save us from so terrible a day.

At the close of this address, I wish to express once more before all the high representatives of the States who are present a word of esteem and deep love for all the peoples, all the nations of the earth, for all human communities. Each one has its own history and culture. I hope that they will live and grow in the freedom and truth of their own history. For that is the measure of the common good of each one of them. I hope that each person will live and grow strong with the moral force of the community that forms its members as citizens. I hope that the State authorities, while respecting the just rights of each citizen, will enjoy the confidence of all for the common good. I hope that all the nations, even the smallest, even those that do not yet enjoy full sovereignty, and those that have been forcibly robbed of it, will meet in full equality with the others in the United Nations. I hope that the United Nations will ever remain the supreme forum of peace and justice, the authentic seat of freedom of peoples and individuals in their longing for a better

Other political questions

Questions relating to information

On 18 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on questions relating to public information. By resolution 34/182, it requested the implementation of recommendations made by the Ad Hoc Working Group of its Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities, calling for several additions to the activities of the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI); it enlarged the Committee from 41 to 66 members and changed its name to the Committee on Information. By resolution 34/181, it requested continued efforts by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to prepare a plan for co-operation and assistance in the application and improvement of national information and mass communications systems for social progress and development.

As it had done for the first time in 1978, the Assembly in 1979 examined questions relating to information mainly in the Special Political Committee, which approved the two resolutions on 4 December. The Committee examined four subitems under its agenda item on information. In addition to the two on which it approved resolutions, the subitems concerned international relations in the sphere of information and mass communications, on which the UNESCO Director-General submitted a report, and freedom of information, on which the Secretary-General submitted a background note.

The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) submitted a report on the network of United Nations information centres, which the Assembly sent to the Committee on Information for its recommendations in 1980.

United Nations public information policies and activities

Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities

The Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities held three sessions in 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, New York: an organizational session on 19 April, its first session from 29 May to 1 June and its second session on 17 and 20 September. It also met on 6 July to establish a 20member ad hoc working group to evaluate the policies and activities of DPI and other information units of the Secretariat in the light of the evolution of international relations in the past two decades, and make proposals to improve the public information activities and programmes of the United Nations system, particularly in the economic and social sphere. The members of the Ad Hoc Working Group were Argentina, Benin, Colombia, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, India, Japan, Lebanon, Nigeria, Romania, Tunisia, Turkey, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia. Following an organizational session on 12 July, the Working Group held 15 meetings in New York from 30 July to 14 August, and produced a report with 50 recommendations. At the closing meeting of its second session on 20 September, the Committee noted this report with satisfaction and decided to attach it to its own report to the General Assembly.

The Working Group concluded that the United Nations, through its information system, should play a key role in support of the establishment of a new information order through the free circulation and wider and better-balanced dissemination of information. The services of DPI should be strengthened, taking into account technical developments and the growing universality of the United Nations.

The Group recommended that DPI should continue to orient its work in regard to both general information about the United Nations and the key issues of the main United Nations bodies, with particular reference to such issues as international peace and security, disarmament, peaceoperations, decolonization, human rights, apartheid and the establishment of the new international economic order. It should make special efforts to explain through various media the aims and principles of the new international economic order and the new information order as well as United Nations work for peace and disarmament. The Department should strive for a balance between economic and social information and information on political matters. It and other United Nations information services should explore new avenues and technologies, especially electronic ones, for wider and costeffective impact. The programme budget of DPI should meet the additional requirements related to new priorities and activities.

The Group made a number of specific recommendations, calling for DPI and other United Nations information units to: evaluate feedback on their activities and assess public opinion with a view to readjusting policies and programmes; balance coverage of United Nations activities with the provision of information in depth, in accordance with the cardinal principles of economy and effectiveness; make balance in the use of official languages and in the geographical composition of DPI staff a prerequisite of information activities; strive for better co-operation and coordination among United Nations information units, with DPI playing a central role within the structure of the interagency Joint United Nations Information Committee; strengthen the sections dealing with non-governmental organizations in New York and Geneva; resume monthly publication of the UN Chronicle, allocate funds to produce more language versions of information publications, seek adequate resources for the periodical Development Forum (see also p. 968) and publish the Yearbook of the United Nations within 18 months of the year covered; provide language versions of United Nations films to non-governmental organizations and education. systems, study the question of establishing a United Nations FM (frequency modulation) radio station, and increase and update radio, television and film equipment; improve facilities for the working media at all United Nations offices and continue extensive press release coverage of conferences and meetings; review the network of United Nations information centres with a view to providing adequate resources and tailoring their functions to new trends, with due consideration for the needs of centres in developing countries; and institute at Headquarters a practice-oriented training programme for radio and television producers from developing countries.

Report of the Secretary-General

In accordance with a 1978 request by the General Assembly, ¹ the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly, dated 23 October 1979, on United Nations public information policies and activities. He observed that United Nations Members were showing renewed interest in the role of public information and its ability to respond to a rapidly changing and complex world where maximum flexibility and shifting of resources must be accomplished on short notice.

Sensitive to that major challenge, DPI was engaged, in conjunction with the Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities, in a critical analysis of its responsibilities for accurate and objective coverage of United Nations events, more meaningful and persuasive in-depth information, better systemwide co-ordination and adequate response to the growing information needs of the developing world. A limited process of evaluating the impact of public information activities had begun and consideration had been given to the organizational implications of a better system of planning, though much DPI work was not susceptible of long-range planning. Progress towards better geographical balance among DPI staff, particularly at the policy-making level, was slow due to the low attrition rate, but it was hoped to achieve a better balance in time, in conformity with the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity. As to improved linguistic balance in information material, the Department's proposals to that end had had to be set aside for reasons of budgetary stringency. The Department planned to assist in a training programme for young journalists from developing countries.

On another aspect of public information activities, the Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its 1979 session held at Unite Nations Headquarters, considered a report by the Secretary-General on the costs of public in formation programmes in the United Nation system. The Committee asked that the report to revised and resubmitted to it in 1980.

In the debate on information questions held by the General Assembly's Special Political Committee at eight meetings between 9 and 15 November, the Under-Secretary-General for Public Information noted that the percentage of the regular United Nations budget devoted to information activities had declined from over 10 per cent in 1946 to less than 4 per cent in 1979. Yet new requests for extra information activitities were constantly received from various United Nations organs. As a substantial increase in funds could not be expected, his primary concern was to establish clearer priorities.

The German Democratic Republic said the United Nations must do all it could to prevent the mass media from fomenting tension and engaging in propaganda against other countries and races. The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR stated that the work of DPI should centre on major problems such as strengthening international peace and security, the inadmissibility of hegemonism in international relations, ending the arms race, prohibiting the production and testing of nuclear weapons, eliminating the causes of armed conflicts, and the struggle against racial discrimination and apartheid and for international co-operation and understanding.

The Netherlands stressed the need for objecttivity in the output of Dpi. Greece said it should direct its efforts mainly to the developing countries, adapting information techniques to different cultures and languages and providing technical assistance.

Israel objected that, during the past 12 months, a series of United Nations publications had been issued which used the Organization's means and machinery for partisan purposes against a Member State. Bulgaria stated that DPI materials sometimes lacked objectivity and political balance, and some were inaccurate.

Iran criticized the output of DPI as ineffective in failing to emphasize the undertakings to which a majority of States attached importance, and said its share of the United Nations budget would increase if its performance improved.

Mali considered that DPI had failed to adapt itself to the modern world by not introducing essential structural reforms.

In France's view, the Secretariat should seek outlets in national and international media to disseminate the vast stores of information it possessed. Poland said a thriftier use of funds and the elimination of duplication could amplify DPI output. In Mongolia's opinion, United Nations information activities could be improved within the existing budget by rearranging priorities and rationalizing work. The United Kingdom thought it would be helpful if the Committee on Information could reach agreement on broad priorities for DPI, since for budgetary reasons the allocation of extra resources for some subjects would mean less expenditure on others. The Federal Republic of Germany felt that efficiency could be improved only if clear priorities were established.

The Syrian Arab Republic and several other Arabic-speaking countries, along with Mauritania, called for the strengthening of United Nations Arabic-language radio services. Barbados, Guyana, and Trinidad and Tobago requested expanded radio transmissions to the Caribbean. Turkey, Venezuela and others urged that thought be given to establishing a United Nations FM station in New York and increasing short-wave broadcasts. Benin, also favouring more short-wave transmissions, said United Nations Radio should broadcast to western Europe from Geneva in English and French. Guinea suggested that States with short-wave facilities might consider allocating time for United Nations broadcasts.

India, the Philippines, Uganda and the United Republic of Cameroon called for the strengthening of United Nations information centres, while Iraq called on them to play a more active role. Finland, speaking for the five Nordic countries, advocated more resources to meet the growing demand for printed materials and audiovisual programmes in various languages. The Nordic countries, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and Turkey urged that part of the costs of the periodical Development Forum be met from the United Nations regular budget. Chile favoured measures in the area of press relations to ensure that lack of information did not lead to misconceptions or misinformation about United Nations work. Afghanistan suggested that DPI devote more attention to the activities of transnational corporations.

The Sudan said the United Nations should not limit itself to improving its own information machinery; it must also help improve the media of Member States. Similarly, Romania said that DPI should consider assisting States with information problems to establish their own information systems, and should adapt its materials to their needs.

In the view of Sri Lanka, the resources of DPI were inadequate in the light of its increasingly heavy workload. The United Republic of Cameroon considered that none of the Assembly's resolutions had gone far enough in reducing the budgetary limitations of DPI or its dependence on the services of public and private press agencies.

Czechoslovakia, Iran, Poland, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Uganda called for measures to improve the geographical distribution of DPI staff, particularly at the higher levels. Also making this point, Democratic Yemen said that, as only a few staff members of the Department were from developing countries, DPI could not truly describe the tragedies those countries were experiencing as a result of exploitation and racism.

The Chairman of the Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities noted that the members of the "Group of 77" developing countries in his Committee had proposed the creation of two working groups in that body, one to evaluate the work of DPI and the other to review and evaluate the progress made in establishing a new world information order. Consensus, however, had proved impossible because certain Western countries categorically refused to acknowledge that the Committee had any role in the establishment of such an order.

Support for the suggestion to give the Committee a role with regard to the establishment of a new information order was voiced by Argentina, Ecuador, Mali, Pakistan, the USSR, Yemen and Yugoslavia. Turkey said it had an open mind on changing the Committee's mandate but felt that it should continue' to give emphasis to United Nations information policies. The United Kingdom, on the other hand, saw no reason to expand the Committee's mandate. Italy argued that the question of enlarging the Committee's mandate should be approached with the greatest caution, since it still had much to do under its original mandate. Morocco, too, doubted the value of changing the mandate.

Following this debate, the Special Political Committee recommended and the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/182.

By this resolution, the Assembly decided to maintain the Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities, but to rename it the Committee on Information and increase its membership from 41 to 66. The Committee was requested to continue to examine United Nations public information policies and activities, to evaluate and follow up the efforts and progress of the United Nations system in information and communications, and to promote and make recommendations on the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order intended to strengthen peace and international understanding and based on the free circulation and wider and better-balanced dissemination of information.

The Assembly requested the Director-General of UNESCO to submit a progress report in 1980 on the establishment of a new world information and communication order. He was also asked to provide for consultations with the Secretary-General on implementation of the recommendations to be made by the Intergovernmental Planning Conference on Communication Development, scheduled by UNESCO for April 1980.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations of the Information Committee's Ad Hoc Working Group and to report in 1980 on the progress achieved. It mentioned in particular the establishment of a small adaptation unit to permit a better linguistic balance in United Nations publications, equitable participation of nationals of developing countries on the DPI staff, the resumption of monthly publication of the UN Chronicle and participation of the United Nations in the production of Development Forum. It called on the Secretary-General to reconsider, in consultation with the Committee on Information, the priorities and programmes of DPI and to report to the Assembly. It also asked him for a report in 1980 on developments in the public information activities of the Secretariat, including those relating to interagency co-operation and coordination. It requested him, in consultation with the Committee, to make proposals in 1980 on the intensification and expansion of United Nations short-wave broadcasts, and to report on the feasibility, legal implications and cost of United Nations FM broadcasts in the Headquarters area. It asked for a training programme for journalists and broadcasters from developing countries, facilities to enable the least developed countries to transmit information material twice without charge during Assembly sessions or other important conferences, and a study on modern communications techniques.

This resolution was based on a text which India introduced in the Special Political Committee on behalf of the Member States of the United Nations which were members of the Group of 77. It was drawn up in a working group in which representatives of various regional groups took part and was subsequently revised by the sponsors.

Following the Committee's approval of the draft resolution by consensus, Ireland, expressing reservations on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), said some of the proposals might duplicate the work of unesco, while others either had potentially serious financial implications or had not been adequately considered; moreover, the primary function of the Committee on Information should be to review and make recommendations on the work of DPI. Canada said it would have abstained on the resolution if there had been a vote, because information questions fell within the mandate of UNESCO and the resolution could only confuse the primary responsibilities of the Assembly and unesco. Greece, endorsing the EEC position, hoped the Committee would not encroach on unesco activities and stressed the primary role of the Assembly in improving United Nations information activities. It was the understanding of Turkey that the Committee would not encroach on the competence of unesco; both Turkey and the Federal Republic of Germany considered that unesco had the primary role in information and mass communications.

Finland, speaking also for Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, said they supported the resolution because of the importance of effective information and communications, but they regretted that it did not mention the role of the International Telecommunication Union in improving physical infrastructure and they reserved their position on any additional funding. The Nordic countries, Australia and the Netherlands, referring to the request in the resolution that States let United Nations Radio share in their short-wave broadcast timetable, said they had no control over their national broadcasting organizations. The United Kingdom could not support the open-ended call for expenditure on broadcasting.

Chile said it would have preferred an explicit reference to the principles of freedom of expression and opinion, freedom of information, freedom of access to sources of information, the free flow of information and the exclusion of the possibility of State control of communications media, as prerequisites to the creation of a more just world information order.

The Federal Republic of Germany questioned the resolution's tendency to focus United Nations information policies on implementation of the new international economic order. The United Kingdom said that neither the Committee on Information nor DPI should become involved in detailed consideration of a new world information order. In a similar vein, the United States expressed reservations about a role for DPI and other United Nations bodies in promoting a new international economic order or a new information order; it was also concerned about financial implications.

Japan supported increased co-operation by States in improving United Nations public information policies and activities, but did not fully agree with some words and ideas in the resolution. Spain emphasized that the review and revamping of United Nations information policy in the light of the new world information order should not result in overly broad objectives.

The USSR said the cost of DPI activities should be met from funds already allocated to it; also, Russian should be included among the languages of the proposed adaptation unit for publications.

In Guinea's view, a reference in the preamble of the resolution to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights 2 and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights³ should not be used as a pretext for imposing specific conduct on any State which applied those instruments in accordance with its national characteristics, commitments and interests.

Albania dissociated itself from a reference in the resolution to the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, which it regarded as serving the interests of the imperialist super-powers.

Additional requests by the Assembly for United Nations public information activities on specific topics were contained in resolutions 34/93 J. on dissemination of information on apartheid (see p. 183), 34/95, on dissemination of information on decolonization (see p. 1016), and 34/45, on human rights (see p. 853).

Other information questions

Reports by UNESCO

The Director-General of unesco prepared. two reports for the General Assembly on information questions, in accordance with requests made by the Assembly in 1978.⁴ One described unesco's activities in the sphere of information and mass communication, and the other was a progress report on action taken to draw up a model plan for co-operation and assistance in the application and improvement of national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development.

The first of these reports summarized resolution as a licence to impugn a whole people tions adopted at the twentieth session of the unesco General Conference (Paris, 24 October to 28 November 1978) and other intergovernmental conferences. The resolutions of the General Conference included the UNESCO Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racialism, Apartheid and Incitement to War,⁵ as well as two resolutions on the new world information and communication order. Appended to the report was the text of a Declaration adopted by the Intergovernmental Conference on Communication Policies in Asia and Oceania (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 5 to 14 February 1979). The report also outlined the work of the International Commission for the Study of Communication Problems at the seven sessions it had held from its establishment in 1977 through September 1979.

The report also summarized UNESCO activities on communication policies and research, programmes on flow of information, development of communication systems, communication planning, transfer and adaptation of technology, training, communication and community media in rural areas, and technical co-operation among developing countries.

The second unesco report stated that an expert meeting was to be held at Washington, D. C., in November 1979 to prepare for an Intergovernmental Planning Conference on Communication Development scheduled to take place at unesco headquarters in Paris in April 1980. The aim of the Conference was to develop a proposal for institutional arrangements to systematize collaborative consultation on communication development activities, needs and plans. This was in response to resolutions adopted in 1978 by the General Assembly⁶ and the UNESCO General Conference.

Consideration by the General Assembly

In the debate on information questions in the General Assembly's Special Political Committee, many speakers referred to the role of the the United Nations and UNESCO in the establishment of a new world information and communication order, the need for which was affirmed by the Assembly in 1978.

Many speakers from developing countries made the point that they were no more than consumers of information over which the developed countries had a virtual monopoly. Pakistan and the Philippines said developing countries had suffered at the hands of mass media monopolies, which often regarded freedom of informa-or to incite them against their Government and their leaders. Peru also criticized the existing order, saying that technological advances had transformed the information media into a political instrument that served the interests of oligarchies and national and international pressure groups. Nigeria stated that the developing countries were tired of the propaganda and distortion to which they had been subjected by the press of the rich nations; they insisted on a more balanced dissemination of information and a better input into international information channels. Sri Lanka said that the call for a new order was not a disguised attempt to gag the press; the goal was to democratize and diversify national and international information flows so as to reflect the state of the world more accurately.

Several countries spoke of the link between a new world information order and the establishment of a new international economic order. Jamaica, for example, said that one of the reasons for the lack of understanding about the legitimate demands of developing countries was the way in which those demands were presented, or not presented, by the media of developed countries.

Venezuela emphasized the need to establish information machinery that would give an objective view of third world countries, their cultural identity and their interests. Chile said that freedom of information must be harmonized with the need to protect the identity and cultural heritage of nations, but such protection could not be achieved by government control of information; each country must create the incentives for a free information system. Uruguay stressed the need to diversify sources and media of information, on the assumption that absolute objectivity was impossible. Burundi said it endorsed all measures to promote the free and balanced flow of information, but would never tolerate the dissemination of false news which fostered hatred and division. In Turkey's view, universal acceptance of the concept of freedom of information should form the basis for the new information order. Algeria and Mauritania stated that the international community should decolonize information.

Several speakers from industrialized nations, while acknowledging the criticism that the flow of information between developed and developing countries was imbalanced, stressed that the situation could not be redressed by stronger government control of information media or any other measure that infringed freedom of information. This view was expressed by Austria, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. Belgium expressed concern that some might wish to use the new information order to disseminate government communiques presenting a selective version of events. Spain said that the new order must serve as a basis for the free flow of information in all aspects.

In the view of Poland, the Western countries' concept of freedom of information served a policy of hegemony and was a tool of communications imperialism; in reality, it meant only freedom for the well-to-do. The USSR said that information in Western capitalist countries was a commodity to be marketed and sold; it was used by media monopolies to create an ideological bias against socialist countries. Bulgaria rejected a concept of the free flow of information that permitted the dissemination of distorted and malicious information and the spread of questionable and generally unacceptable ideas and values. Cuba said that the imperialists, through their publicity consortia, were striving to impose their own ideological and cultural models, including violence, corruption, superficiality, hysteria, incitement to excess consumption and warmongering.

The Byelorussian SSR said that the struggle for a new world information order must emphasize the need for international regulation of the dissemination of information. In the view of Afghanistan, it was logical for States to exercise control over communications in order to protect their identity, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On' the other hand, Morocco said that it was not only the Western media that were at fault; the defects of information media in other developed countries should have been mentioned, while mass media in certain developing countries suffered from either excessive control or anarchy.

A number of representatives spoke of the need to help developing countries improve their national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development. Thus, Egypt said the international community had a responsibility to provide the developing countries with the means of creating a better information infrastructure so that they could participate more effectively in international information exchanges without impeding the free flow of information. Yemen hoped that UNESCO would concentrate on this problem so that the international monopoly on information could be ended. Indonesia suggested that the United Nations system, industrialized countries and professional organizations should expand their transfer of communication technology to developing countries.

Along similar lines, Ireland, speaking for the nine members of EEC, said that practical measures were needed to close the gap between the highly developed information systems of the industrialized world and those of the developing countries.

A similar point was made by the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan. The United States, stating that communications development did not have a high enough priority among development activities, favoured the creation of a body to co-ordinate the application of available resources to needs in this area. These countries and others, including Australia, offered practical assistance to developing countries for communications development.

A number of specific suggestions were advanced. Jordan favoured the preparation of a convention on journalistic ethics, which would make establishments and individuals accountable for abuses of media power. Colombia called for a lowering of international tariffs for the transmission of news, remarking that they were out of reach of the average press agency in a developing country. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya advocated the drafting of an international convention on direct television broadcasting designed to safeguard the cultural heritage of countries, and the establishment of a United Nations fund to help developing countries put satellites into orbit. The United Arab Emirates suggested that consideration be given to establishing an international news agency that would offer a balanced and equitable presentation of world news, with special coverage of developing countries. Yugoslavia said the Press Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries was an important achievement in improving the flow of information and developing national information media. Uganda and others cited with satisfaction the creation at Dakar, Senegal, of the Pan-African News Agency.

A number of speakers cited information objectives set out in the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana, Cuba, in September 1979. These included the build-up of national information media and mass communication systems, the training of national personnel with United Nations assistance, and the development of a technological base.

During this debate, Malaysia introduced a seven-nation resolution on co-operation and assistance in the application and improvement of national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development; it was sponsored also by Indonesia, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. The Committee approved by consensus, and the Assembly adopted without vote as resolution 34/181, a sponsor-revised version of this text. Malaysia said its aim was to remove the inequalities between countries' mass communication systems and to enable them to benefit from technological progress.

By this resolution, the Assembly requested the Director-General of UNESCO to study the possibility of establishing an international fund for the development of communications, under UNESCO auspices. He was also requested to continue efforts to prepare the integrated model plan requested in 1978 and to report to the Assembly in 1980.

Sweden and the United States said their support of the consensus on this resolution did not imply support for a voluntary fund.

United Nations information centres

During its debate on questions relating to information, the Special Political Committee also had before it a report of JIU on the network of the United Nations information centres outside Headquarters and the comments of the Secretary-General on the question.

Among its 37 recommendations, JIU proposed that the centres, which numbered 59 in 1979, should eventually receive at least half of the DPI budget, compared to their 34 per cent share in 1978-1979. It felt that more funds should be provided for operating expenses such as travel, communications and equipment, and that posts should be transferred to the centres from Head-quarters. It called for urgent action to place more nationals of developing countries among centre staffs, advocated a more active role for host Governments to make the work of the centres more effective, and recommended that United Nations information services be regionalized and regional centres established.

In his comments on these recommendations, the Secretary-General said that, while he agreed with JIU on the need to strengthen the resources of the centres, increasing their share of the DPI budget without raising that budget as a whole would have serious implications for the Department at Headquarters. He agreed with the recommendation on the allocation of funds for operating expenses but, with regard to the suggested transfer of posts from Headquarters, he remarked that the managers of the system felt there was already insufficient staff at Headquarters to serve the current number of centres. As to geographical balance, he said that about half of the centres' Professional staff were from developing countries, well above the offically established desirable range. He agreed that host Governments should play a more active role. He expressed serious doubts about the proposed regionalization of the service.

The General Assembly, in resolution 34/182 on United Nations public information policies and activities (see section above), requested the Committee on Information to prepare recommendations in 1980 on the JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments.

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Questions concerning development and international economic co-operation and the establishment of a new international economic order

Questions concerning development and international economic co-operation and the establishment of a new international economic order continued to be considered extensively by United Nations organs in 1979.

The General Assembly took several decisions on preparations for a 1980 special session, to be convened to assess progress towards establishment of the new international economic order and to take the necessary action, including adoption of a new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s). It decided to hold the session at a high political level from 25 August to 5 September and urged the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to submit a draft of the strategy for adoption and proclamation at the session. The Assembly further decided that the intersessional Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174- a decision which mandated the Committee to act as a focal point for United Nations action taken towards establishment of a new international economic order- should also act as the preparatory committee for a round of global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development, which would also be launched at the session, and submit its final report and recommendations at that time.

The preparations for the new strategy and progress towards a new international economic order were also a main topic of debate in the Economic and Social Council, which considered reports of the Preparatory Committee on its four 1979 sessions, and in the Council's expert Committee for Development Planning. Action on the preparations was also taken by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and a United Nations symposium on the topic was held in the Netherlands in July. The Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly also considered other aspects of implementation of decisions on a new development strategy and the establishment of a new international economic order. Both bodies adopted resolutions on preparations for a United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, which the Assembly decided to hold in August 1981.

The Assembly, by other resolutions: sought to improve national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development and to assist developing countries in the field of information; asked for Member States' views on consolidating the development of international economic law; appealed to the international community to support health as an integral part of development; and asked States for information in order to complete studies on the relationship between disarmament and development, and on the application of a unified approach to development analysis and planning. The Council asked for a report containing proposals for standards and measures on consumer protection which States could adopt.

The implementation of decisions relating to the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s) continued to be discussed in detail. Decisions emanating from these discussions were aimed at: accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries; increasing finance for development; reforming the current international monetary system; improving economic co-operation among developing countries; implementing new programmes of action for the least developed and for developing island countries, and taking immediate measures in favour of countries most seriously affected by the current economic crisis; convening a United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 1981; overcoming the particular problems of land-locked developing countries, including an appeal for contributions to the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries; alleviating the debt problems of developing countries; controlling world inflation and mitigating its effects on the development process; and continuing examination of ways to strengthen the role of the public sector in promoting economic development and to support national efforts to improve public accounting and auditing systems. In connexion with United Nations efforts to co-ordinate action for agrarian reform and rural development, the Assembly in 1979 endorsed a Declaration of Principles and a Programme of Action adopted by a World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development in July.

Details of these and other decisions relating to international economic co-operation and development are given in the following subchapters. For further information, see the following chapters in this section: Chapter IV, united nations operational activities for development; Chapter V, trade and development; Chapter VII, INTERNATIONAL FINANCING FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT; Chapter XII, use and development of natural (non-agricultural) resources; Chapter XVII, social questions; Chapter XVIII, population questions; and Chapter XXVI, co-ORDINATION AND ORGANIZATIONAL QUESTIONS.

Implementation of General Assembly decisions on the establishment of a new international economic order

Global negotiations

Report of the intersessional Committee

The intersessional Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174, created in 1977 to act as a focal point in negotiations towards the establishment of a new international economic order and for an exchange of views on global economic problems, held three sessions during 1979, all at United Nations Headquarters, New York.

The first, a resumed first session of the Committee held from 18 to 31 January, was devoted mainly to consideration of the transfer of resources in real terms to developing countries. In adopting agreed conclusions on this subject, the Committee called for a global approach to the transfer of resources encompassing the interrelated issues of official development assistance (ODA), trade, the flow of private capital and investment, and other international payments. The Committee also reconfirmed the desirability of continuous, predictable and increasingly assured flows of bilateral and multilateral financial resources from developed to developing countries. It expressed concern that the performance of the developed countries with respect to the 0.7 per. cent target for ODA, established by the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,² had declined further, and recommended that those countries embrace measures to increase this assistance by: including quantitative multiyear ODA targets in their economic plans or programmes; increasing aid budgets in real terms by a yearly percentage; setting aside at least 1 per cent of the increase in their annual gross national product; establishing interest subsidy mechanisms to generate a large expansion of concessional flows; and reducing substantially the time lag between commitments and disbursements.

The Committee further decided that the quality of flows should be improved and that the developed countries should modify their concept of ODA. It also called for increases in flows from multilateral development institutions, improved lending practices and expanded facilities, and for further examination of international monetary issues. (See also p. 483.)

At its second session, from 19 to 29 March, the Committee devoted most of its time to consideration of food and agricultural issues in developing countries and again formulated a set of agreed conclusions. The Committee stressed, among other things, the need for: further measures to aid growth of agricultural production in developing countries; ensuring food security; enlarging food aid; solving problems of international trade in agricultural products; supporting the development of rural industry and rural integration in development programmes; and developing nutrition policies.

At the same session, the Committee reaffirmed the urgent need to convert the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) into a specialized agency and emphasized that this should not be further delayed. The Committee also decided that the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency, to be convened at Vienna on 19 March 1979, should base its work on the progress already achieved by that Conference at its session in February/March 1978. These agreed conclusions were transmitted to the President of the Conference. (See also p. 618.)

The Committee, at its third session from 10 to 15 September, considered a draft resolution submitted by Tunisia on behalf of the Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries concerning global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development, and adopted a decision by which it recommended that the General Assembly, at its thirty-fourth (1979) session, consider the proposal as a matter of priority. The Committee established two negotiating groups to consider draft proposals, also submitted on behalf of the Group of 77, on industrial development and on special measures to resolve the pressing problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, and the countries most seriously affected by economic crises. While agreement was reached on a text on island developing countries, no consensus was reached on the other informal texts.

The fourth report in a series of biennial reviews prepared by the Secretariat to facilitate the review of progress made in the implementation of the International Development Strategy was submitted to the Committee for Development Planning at its March/April 1979 session. The results achieved by the developing countries during the Second Development Decade were examined in such areas as over-all growth, manufacturing output, agricultural production, population, employment in manufacturing, education, health, international trade, investment and savings. The report also described inadequacies of past and current oda, the constraining impact of the developing countries' growing external debt on their development policies, and some of the limited changes achieved in international monetary co-operation.

The report pointed out that there was a great diversity of experience among countries, and growth had been especially unsatisfactory in the least developed and other low-income countries. Al though total and manufacturing output growth of the developing countries during 1970-1977 approximated the targets (6 per cent and 8 per cent per annum, respectively of the Strategy, expansion in agriculture lagged behind the 4 per cent target substantially, and food production barely kept pace with population growth.

In the field of social development, although some progress was evident in primary education, national goals were not met and disparities in the level and distribution of social services both within and among countries remained considerable. The rate of growth in the manufacturing sector was not adequate to generate as much employment as was expected.

Exports of the non-oil-exporting developing countries fell short of the targets of the Strategy (an average annual increase of more than 7 per cent in exports and less than 7 per cent in imports) while imports exceeded them, and the terms of trade of these countries deteriorated substantially.

Progress in trade policies had been limited in comparison to the measures set forth in the Strategy. While some improvements had been made in the generalized system of preferences and in the multilateral trade negotiations, the discussions on the Integrated Programme for Commodities and its Common Fund had still not been concluded, and non-tariff barriers to trade in developed countries were on the rise.

Although the ratio of investment to gross domestic product in all developing countries had increased markedly (20.1 per cent in 1970 to 24.1 per cent in 1976), it had remained practically unchanged in the least developed countries. The savings rate in the non-oil-exporting developing countries had not reached the target set in the Strategy (a rise in the ratio of gross domestic saving to gross product to about 20 per cent by 1980), and in the least developed countries continued to be extremely low (7.1 per cent).

The report noted that the net flow of resources to the developing countries during the period fell short of the target ratio of 1 per cent of gross national product in developed countries. The relative importance of official flows even declined and amounted to less than half the 0.7 per cent target for ODA. However, the terms of transfer for official flows had been softened, and some countries had made transfers to the least developed countries entirely in the form of grants. A sharp rise had taken place in net disbursements by the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, particularly in the form of concessional assistance (2 per cent of their combined 1977 gross national product) and some developed countries had retroactively softened the terms of past official debt owed to them by the least developed and most seriously affected countries.

The report further noted that while there were many causes for the failures in the implementation of the Strategy, the review and appraisal process did not function as efficiently as had been envisaged, owing largely to the fact that the current process assumed that the objectives and targets were buttressed by agreed policy measures. In future, the report suggested, a more dynamic view needed to be taken of the Strategy and the review and appraisal process.

By decision 1979/51, adopted, without vote, on 1 August, on an oral proposal by the Council President, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report prepared by the Secretariat, among others, and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session.

At that session, for its consideration of the item on development and international economic co-operation, the Assembly had before it the report of the Committee of the Whole, together with the following documents:

- documents, transmitted in July by Sri Lanka, of the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries held at Colombo in June, and the final communique and resolutions of the Tenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers held at Fez in May, transmitted in July by Morocco;
- a note of 17 August by the Secretary-General containing observations made by the Director-General of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in a letter of 1 June by which he had transmitted a report on the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations, concluded in December 1979;
- addresses, jointly transmitted in October by Mexico and Panama, by the Chairman of the Latin American group of States at the United Nations and by the President of Mexico, delivered at United Nations Headquarters in September;
- an address delivered on 2 October by Pope John Paul II to the General Assembly, transmitted jointly by Colombia, Fiji, Lebanon, Lesotho, Poland and Portugal;
- the final communique adopted by the Extraordinary Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries, held in New York in October to consider action on issues before the current session of the Assembly, transmitted by Cuba; and
- an extract transmitted by Romania from the report of the Central Committee of the Romanian Communist Party presented by the President of Romania to the Party's Twelfth Congress, held at Bucharest in November.

Introducing the report of the Committee of the Whole in the Assembly, the Chairman detailed the major areas of disagreement it had encountered. In the field of trade, he said, the developing countries wished to eliminate protectionist measures and reduce and eliminate tariff and non-tariff barriers, measures which were too far-reaching for the developed countries. Most developed countries felt that restructuring was an ongoing process, whereas the developing countries felt that much more vigorous action was needed.

The developing countries, the Chairman continued, also felt it essential that, by the year 2000, their share of world industrial production be stipulated as being at least 25 per cent, without the qualifications contained in the 1975 Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation;³ this was not accepted by the industrialized countries. With regard to the UNIDO system of consultations, there were differences as to whether they should be on a permanent basis, whether Government representatives should be included in all delegations and whether the system should allow for actual negotiations.

However, the Chairman added, the basis for a definition of the concept of redeployment of industry had been worked out.

Democratic Yemen, the Gambia, the Ivory Coast, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania were among those which accused the developed countries of a lack of political will, thereby preventing progress in the goals and objectives of the new international economic order. Tunisia added that repeated appeals had been made to bring about a fundamental restructuring of international economic relations, but the developed countries had remained deaf to these appeals. Ecuador, speaking also on behalf of Bolivia, Colombia, Peru and Venezuela, called for the elimination of protectionist measures as a demonstration of this political will.

India observed that the Group of 77 had formulated an important new proposal for a fresh round of global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation and development, which would enlarge the issues under discussion and should be debated in the Assembly's plenary meetings.

The Ukrainian SSR, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, supported these proposals, adding that they shared the dissatisfaction of the developing countries with regard to the absence of real progress in the restructuring of international economic relations, which could be achieved only if all Members were to put into effect the provisions of the 1974 Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order⁴ and the

1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.⁵

On behalf of the European Community, Ireland said that any discussions on global negotiations must avoid duplicating the ongoing work in other United Nations bodies, a view shared by, among others, Australia, Japan, Pakistan and Sweden. The United States said its intention was to reinforce and draw upon those ongoing processes.

On 6 November, India on behalf of the Group of 77 submitted to the Assembly the draft resolution on global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development which it had previously proposed to the Committee of the Whole. Following informal consultations, this draft was withdrawn and an agreed text, submitted by an Assembly Vice-President, was adopted without vote by the Assembly on 14 December as resolution 34/138.

By the preambular part of the resolution, the Assembly, having considered the report of the Committee of the Whole, noted with deep concern the limited progress in the establishment of the new international economic order. The Assembly emphasized the imperative need to establish a new system of international economic relations based on the principles of equality and mutual benefit and also to promote the common interest of all countries. It also stressed that bold initiatives were required in order to establish such a new system and urged all countries to commit themselves to the achievement of a restructuring of those relations through international negotiations which must take place within the United Nations system. The Assembly reaffirmed its central role in this context.

By the resolution's operative part, the Assembly decided to launch at its 1980 special session global, sustained, action-oriented negotiations on international economic co-operation for development. Such negotiations were to take place within the United Nations system, proceeding in a simultaneous manner in order to ensure a coherent and integrated approach to the issues under negotiation, including the major issues in raw materials, energy, trade, development, money and finance, in order to contribute to the implementation. of the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade and to the solution of international economic problems, as well as to steady global economic development, in particular of the developing countries, reflecting the mutual benefit, common interest and responsibilities of the parties concerned, taking into account each country's general economic capability. The Assembly agreed that the special session should be carefully prepared, including efficient procedures for the negotiations which would not interrupt or adversely affect negotiations in other United Nations forums. The Assembly further decided that the Committee of the Whole was to be the preparatory committee for the global negotiations and that it should prepare recommendations for the special session on procedures, time-frame and detailed agenda for those negotiations.

The Group of 77's draft resolution had differed in several respects from that adopted by the Assembly. For example, by the preambular part, this text would have had the Assembly ascribe a lack of real progress in the establishment of the new international economic order to an absence of genuine political will to negotiate on the part of a large majority of developed countries. The new system of world economic relations, for which a need was emphasized, was, in the Group's draft, to be based on the equality and common interest of all countries and the Declaration and Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.

In the operative part of the Group's text, a statement that negotiations should allow for an integrated approach to the main issues involved and proceed simultaneously on the various issues was modified by referring only to the issues under negotiation. Agreement that the negotiations should contribute to the solution of international economic problems and to other development objectives was added. In addition to submitting a report with recommendations on procedures, time-frame and agenda, asked for in the Group's draft, the Committee of the Whole, acting as the preparatory committee for the global negotiations, was also asked to propose arrangements to enable the Assembly at its special session to decide on a prompt, effective beginning to the negotiations. Finally, a paragraph which stated that the success of the negotiations depended on a clear commitment by all countries, especially the developed countries, to engage in genuine negotiations in the context of the establishment of the new international economic order was replaced by a statement that the full commitment of all participants to careful and thorough preparations was required, including efficient procedures for the negotiations.

Also on 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/139, by which it recalled and took note with appreciation of several recent major proposals made by heads of State or Government regarding a global approach in relation to issues of raw materials, energy, trade, development, money and finance. Being convinced of the urgent need for establishment of the new international economic order and recalling the relevant resolutions, the Assembly decided that the Committee of the Whole, in its capacity as preparatory committee for the global negotiations, should include, in its report to the Assembly's 1980 special session, suggestions and recommendations which might result from consideration of these and other proposals.

Resolution 34/139, introduced by India on behalf of the Group of 77, had been orally amended by an Assembly Vice-President on behalf of the sponsors to recall the relevant resolutions, rather than calling for their urgent implementation.

By resolution 34/207 of 19 December 1979, on preparations for the Assembly's 1980 special session, the Assembly also assigned a number of tasks to the Committee of the Whole in its capacity as preparatory committee for the global negotiations (see section immediately following).

Preparations for the 1980 special session of the General Assembly

At its thirty-fourth (1979) session, the General Assembly had before it a preliminary version of an analytical report on developments in the field of international economic co-operation towards the establishment of the new international economic order since the sixth special session in April/May 1974. The report had been prepared by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and submitted by the Secretary-General in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979.

The report provided a synoptic view of the possible scope and content of its final version.

After analysing the principal components of the new international economic order, the report outlined the main areas to be addressed in the final version: primary commodities; international monetary and financial issues; industrialization and trade in manufactured products; transnational corporations and other business enterprises; science and technology; transport and insurance; co-operation among developing countries; aid to particularly disadvantaged countries; and co-operation among countries with different social and economic systems. The final report would review progress in each area and make suggestions for implementing the new international economic order. The final chapters of the preliminary report covered issues of domestic resource mobilization and social restructuring at the national level related to the new international economic order, and obstacles that continued to impede the United Nations system in dealing international economic and social development.

On 1 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1979/51, without vote, as orally proposed by its President. By one of the provisions of the decision, the Council authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the report on preparations for the Assembly's 1980 special session to the Assembly's thirty-fourth session.

On 8 December, India, on behalf of the Group of 77, introduced in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee a draft resolution on preparations for the Assembly's 1980 special session. Informal consultations on this text took place, following which another draft resolution was submitted to the Committee by a Vice-Chairman and approved without vote on the same day. The Group's draft was then withdrawn. On 19 December, the text was adopted by the Assembly without vote as resolution 34/207.

By this resolution, the Assembly recognized the need for the special session to produce results commensurate with the gravity of the current international economic situation and the magnitude of economic problems. Emphasizing that it had been asked at that session to assess progress in establishing the new international economic order, to consider obstacles impeding its establishment, as indicated by various United Nations forums, and to promote the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation, including adopting a new strategy for the 1980s, the Assembly reaffirmed these objectives, to be based on an assessment of progress made in the establishment of the new international economic order, as well as the objective of launching global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development. The Assembly, deciding to hold the special session at a high political level for two weeks between mid-August and mid-September 1980, urged the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a draft of the new international development strategy for adoption and proclamation at the special session. It also invited the Committee of the Whole, as the preparatory committee for the global negotiations, to organize its work so as to be able to submit its final report to the special session. The Assembly took note of the preliminary version of the analytical report and requested the Secretary-General to make the final report available to Governments six weeks before the special session. Member States were invited to re-examine their position on important international economic problems so that the session might achieve positive results.

Resolution 34/207 differed in several respects from that submitted on behalf of the Group of 77. A preambular paragraph was omitted from the final negotiated text recognizing that the establishment of the new economic order called for bold initiatives and global solutions rather than piecemeal reforms; a similar provision, however, had been contained in resolution 34/138 on global negotiations (see section above). A preambular paragraph to recognize the need for results commensurate with current problems, and another identical to one in resolution 34/138 to urge commitment to achieving the restructuring of international economic relations, were included in the approved text. A preambular reference to identifying at the special session obstacles impeding establishment of the new international economic order was revised to emphasize a request that the Assembly identify obstacles impeding that establishment as indicated by the various forums of the United Nations system. All Governments, instead of only the developed countries, as in the Group's draft, were invited to re-examine their position on important international economic problems. The Secretary-General was asked to accord the necessary high priority, rather than the highest priority, to and to provide facilities and resources for all preparatory arrangements for the special session, instead of all activities relating to the session. Also deleted was a request that the Secretary-General extend all possible assistance to meetings, especially at ministerial level, of the Group of 77 held in the context of preparations for the special session.

By further action on 19 December, the Assembly adopted, without vote, decision 34/448 on an oral proposal by India on behalf of the Group of 77. By this, the Assembly decided that the dates for the special session would be from 25 August to 5 September 1980, with the possibility of a few days' extension if necessary.

Resolution 34/138, as proposed by Assembly Vice-President, A/34/L.55, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, which laid the foundations for the establishment of the new international economic order.

Noting with deep concern that, despite the great efforts made by many countries, especially the developing countries, at a large number of meetings and international conferences aimed at the establishment of the new international economic order, only limited progress has been achieved,

Considering the report of the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174,

Taking note of the important resolution adopted at the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979, on global negotiations relating to international economic cooperation for development,

Emphasizing the imperative need to establish a new system of international economic relations based on the principles of equality and mutual benefit and also to promote the common interest of all countries,

Stressing that the establishment of such a new system calls for bold initiatives and demands new, concrete, comprehensive and global solutions going beyond limited efforts and measures intended to resolve only the present economic difficulties,

Urging all countries to commit themselves effectively to achieving, through international negotiations and other concerted action, the restructuring of international economic relations on the basis of the principles of justice and equality in order to provide for steady economic development, with due regard to the development potential of developing countries,

Emphasizing that such global negotiations must take place within the United Nations system,

Reaffirming in this context the central role of the General Assembly,

- 1. Decides to launch at its special session in 1980 a round of global and sustained negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, such negotiations being action-oriented and proceeding in a simultaneous manner in order to ensure a coherent and integrated approach to the issues under negotiation;
 - 2. Agrees that such negotiations should:
- (a) Take place within the United Nations system with the participation, in accordance with the procedures of relevant bodies, of all States and within a specified time-frame, without prejudice to the central role of the General Assembly;
- (b) Include major issues in the field of raw materials, energy, trade, development, money and finance;
- (c) Contribute to the implementation of the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade:
- (d) Contribute to the solution of international economic problems, within the framework of the restructuring of international economic relations, and to steady global economic development, in particular the development of developing countries, and, to this end, reflect the mutual benefit, the common interest and the responsibilities of the parties concerned, taking into account the general economic capability of each country;
- Also agrees that these negotiations should not involve any interruption of, or have any adverse effect upon, the negotiations in other United Nations forums but should reinforce and draw upon them;
- 4. Further agrees that the successful launching and ultimate success of the global negotiations require the full commitment of all participants to careful and thorough preparations, including efficient procedures for the negotiations;
- 5. Decides that the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 should act as the preparatory committee for the global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development and propose all necessary arrangements worked out in accordance with its established procedures to enable the Assembly at its special session in 1980 to decide on an effective and prompt beginning of the global negotiations, and further decides that the Committee should submit to the Assembly at its special session its final report containing its recommendations on the procedures, time-frame and detailed agenda for the global negotiations, taking into account paragraphs 1 to 4 above

Emphasizing that the General Assembly is requested, at its special session, to assess the progress made in the establishment of the new international economic order and to consider obstacles as indicated by the various forums of the United Nations system that impede its establishment and, in this context, to take appropriate action for the promotion of the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation, including the adoption of the new international development strategy for the 1980s

Urging all countries to commit themselves effectively to achieving, through international negotiations and other concerted action, the restructuring of international economic relations on the basis of the principles of justice and equality in order to provide for steady economic development, with due regard to the development potential of developing countries,

Stressing the need for thorough preparation for the special session in order to achieve positive and concrete results,

- 1. Reaffirms its decision that the special session in 1980 will, on the basis of an assessment of the progress made in the establishment of the new international economic order, take appropriate action for the promotion of the development of developing countries and international economic cooperation, including inter alia for the adoption of the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade and for the launching of global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development:
- 2. Decides to hold the special session at a high political level for two weeks at a suitable time between mid-August and mid-September 1980;
- 3. Urges the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to accelerate its work so as to be able to submit to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a draft of the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade for adoption and proclamation at the special session;
- 4. Invites the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174, in its capacity as the preparatory committee for the global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development, to organize its work in such a manner as to be able to submit its final report to the Assembly at the special session;
- 5. Decides that the Committee of the Whole, in addition to making preparations for the global negotiations, should consider matters relating to the adequate preparation of the special session:

Takes note of the preliminary version of the analytical report called for in General Assembly resolution 33/198 and requests the Secretary-General to submit and make available to Governments six weeks before the special session the final report in accordance with the outline, taking into account the relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by the Assembly during its thirty-fourth session, as well as the ongoing work of the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy and the Committee of the Whole.

Decision 34/448, by which the General Assembly decided that the dates for the special session of the General Assembly on development should be from 25 August to 5 September 1980, with the possibility of extending the session for a few days if that should be necessary, as orally proposed by India (on behalf of Member States of United Nations belonging to "Group of 77"), adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1979, meeting 109.

Preparations for a new development strategy for the third United Nations development decade

In accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979, the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s) held four sessions at United Nations Headquarters, New York, during 1979.

After an organizational session (1-5 February), the Committee held three substantive sessions (2-13 April, 11-22 June and 17-21 September). Represented at one or more of the sessions were: 131 States, 15 United Nations organizations and bodies, 10 specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the five regional commissions, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and three intergovernmental organizations.

During the course of the year, the Preparatory Committee submitted a three-volume report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly. After reporting on the Committee's organizational session, volume I detailed its first (April) session, at which the Committee was informed of the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives and the work of the March/April 1979 session of the Committee for Development Planning (see below). The Committee also heard statements by executive heads of agencies, organizations and regional commissions of the United Nations system, as well as by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation and the Under-Secretary-General for International Economic and Social Affairs. Informal working papers were submitted in conjunction with these statements.

Also at its first session, the Committee heard 'statements by 43 countries and convened an informal working group to consider suggestions made in connexion with the draft preamble of the new international development strategy, including informal papers submitted by: the Byelorussian SSR-on behalf also of Bulgaria, 'Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR; Japan, Sweden and the United States; States members of the European Economic Community (EEC); and the Member States of the United Nations belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The working group requested the Committee Chairman to submit a working paper on the basic elements for inclusion in the draft preamble, based on the informal papers and suggestions made.

At the second (June) session, outlined in volume II of its report, the Committee heard statements and considered informal working papers from 29 agencies, organizations and regional commissions of the United Nations system. Seven countries or regional groupings also made statements. The Committee considered a draft outline of the new international development strategy, including documents submitted by: Hungary, on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR; Sweden; the United States; France, on behalf of EEC; and the Group of 77. The Committee also considered the objectives of the new strategy. Its report also summarized statements on preparations of the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions at their March meetings (see p. 744).

Volume III of the Committee's report informed that the Committee had decided at its third (September) session to concentrate on the draft preamble of the new strategy and, on the basis of discussions held on a paper submitted by the Chairman, a text of the draft preamble had emerged. On the proposal of the Chairman, the Committee decided to concentrate at its fourth (1980) session on consideration of the goals and objectives of the strategy and to begin consideration of policy measures and the strategy's review and appraisal mechanism. The Committee also decided to invite the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) to make its contribution to the strategy's preparations available to the Preparatory Committee's fourth session.

On 13 July, in a statement to the Economic and Social Council at its 1979 second regular session, the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee said that the Committee had failed to agree at its June session on the issue of whether the goals and objectives of the strategy should be addressed to developed or to developing countries, or whether they should be formulated as goals of the entire international community.

He informed the Council of the text of the draft preamble which was to emerge during the Preparatory Committee's September session and said that the Committee had decided to concentrate on this subject, as well as on policy measures and the review and appraisal mechanism, at its 1980 sessions in order that the draft might be adopted by the General Assembly's 1980 special session on the establishment of the new international economic order.

On 1 August 1979, the Council took note of and decided to transmit to the Assembly at its thirty-fourth (1979) session the report of the Preparatory Committee (volumes I and II) and a number of other documents. The Council also authorized the Secretary-General to transmit to the Assembly the report of the Preparatory Committee on its work during the remainder of 1979 (volume III). These actions were incorporated in Council decision 1979/51, adopted, without vote, as orally proposed by the Council President.

At its March/April 1979 session, the Committee for Development Planning reviewed the development performance of the developing countries during the 1970s and examined the causes underlying the inability of a large number of them to achieve the results envisaged in the International Development Strategy for, the Second United Nations Development Decade.⁹

With regard to the new international development strategy for the 1980s, the Committee, in its report to the Economic and Social Council, stressed the need for the creation of favourable external conditions through the removal of the asymmetries and distortions which had characterized the international economic system in the 1970s, in order to enable developing countries to pursue successfully their objectives of self-sustained development. Six major areas were elaborated by the Committee as priorities for action: trade and adjustment; flows of financial resources and development assistance; international liquidity; technology and transnational corporations; disarmament and world development; and accelerated growth and other development objectives for the 1980s.

The Committee also deliberated the international implications of sectoral, intersectoral and regional patterns of development relating to: agriculture; energy and raw materials; industry; environment; technology; social aims, particularly health and education; and the low-income countries

With a view to enhancing implementation of the new strategy, the Committee emphasized the need for: strengthening the links between international, regional, subregional and national strategies; adoption of some global or subregional and regional projects; and monitoring progress towards needed change in the international division of labour through sectoral and regional reviews and appraisals.

On 1 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Committee for Development Planning in adopting decision 1979/51 (see above).

Earlier in the year, in its consideration of social questions, the Council had adopted two resolutions related to development activities.

By resolution 1979/25 of 9 May, the Council recommended that the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy take full account of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development¹⁰ as well as deliberations on this issue in the Commission for Social Development. (For further details, see p. 752.)

By resolution 1979/45 of 11 May, the Council decided to establish an ad hoc working group on the social aspects of the development activities of the United Nations. The working group's mandate included examination of the implementation of several United Nations resolutions, among which was a General Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979 on preparations for an international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade. ¹¹ (For further details, see p. 756.)

On 20 October 1979, in accordance with that Assembly resolution and a request from the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy, the Trade and Development Board of unctad adopted a resolution on the contribution of unctad to the preparation of the new international development strategy, by which it requested the unctad Secretary-General to convene a high-level intergovernmental group, open to participation by all States members of unctad, to prepare a draft for unctad's contribution to the formulation of the strategy. The Board decided that unctad's contribution should be formulated within its mandate and the conceptual framework and guidelines of the Assembly's resolution. In addition, it agreed that the intergovernmental group could take into consideration inter alia the objectives and principles proposed by the Group of 77 developing countries annexed to the Board's resolution.

The Board decided, on the same date, that the Group of Governmental Experts on the Concepts of the Present Aid and Flow Targets could meet as required, to receive reports on the work of data-collecting centres, analyse the information and advise on their implications for the international development strategy.

By a letter of 12 September 1979, the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted a report on a symposium on a new international development strategy held at Scheveningen, Netherlands, from 25 to 28 July.

Convened by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation, hosted by the Netherlands Government, organized by the International Foundation for Development Alternatives and attended by more than 40 participants, the symposium stressed that the search for a new development strategy had to be pursued against the background of a drastically altered world situation and new global human problems.

It was therefore necessary to redefine the concept of development and to reassess development problems as a whole. The primary objective of the new strategy should reflect a firm commitment on the part of all members of the international community to promote the genuine development of third world countries and to arrest the maldevelopment of third world and industrialized countries.

According to the report, the new strategy should provide for: achievement of national self-reliance in the third world; the concept of development with new and different cultural roots by drawing upon alternative modes of civilization; incorporating demilitarization as a development objective; full third world participation in the management of all global commons; greater attention to waste and maldistribution of development resources; and the promotion of negotiations establishing a restructured international framework for trade, monetary and financial co-operation.

In its consideration of the item on development and international economic co-operation, at plenary meetings held on 18 and 19 December, the General Assembly had before it several other documents, including:

- a letter of 20 June from Austria transmitting the text of a communique issued by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development on 14 June, dealing with overcoming obstacles to sustained economic growth, world interdependence and relations with developing countries, and international investment and multinational enterprises;

- a letter of 2 August from the USSR transmitting a declaration of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) concerning the thirtieth anniversary of CMEA, together with a communique of the thirty-third meeting of the session of CMEA, held at Moscow from 26 to 28 June; and
- a note verbale of 29 September from Tunisia transmitting the text of a declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 adopted on the same day, dealing with the launching of a round of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development.

Preparations for a new development strategy for the third United Nations development decade were discussed in detail by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee during the year.

Introducing the subject, the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation stressed the fundamental interdependence of the world economy and the fact that economic growth of the third world was indispensable to global prosperity and stability.

Concern was expressed at the limited results achieved in negotiations towards a new strategy, and it was hoped that the 1980 meetings of the Preparatory Committee would lead to more substantial and conclusive progress. The preparatory work for the Assembly's 1980 special session should also help the North-South dialogue, particularly the ongoing discussions on the strategy. Yugoslavia pointed out that the global negotiations relating to international economic cooperation for development, far from having a negative impact, would complement the strategy and therefore would be an appropriate framework for agreement on policy measures.

There was broad consensus that the strategy should contribute to accelerated development of the developing countries while providing a guiding framework for international economic cooperation throughout the forthcoming decade. The observer for the EEC stated that this framework should ensure economic growth and a better distribution of its benefits. Resolve was needed to combine the new international economic order with social development and the realities of interdependence with the demands of the developing countries for collective self-sufficiency.

Costa Rica, Guyana, Nepal and Senegal were among the developing countries which stressed the necessity of including international measures to create an external environment economically favourable to the third world. Guinea, however, felt that the developing countries would have to rely on their own strength and agree mutually on the new strategy.

Kenya, Pakistan and Sri Lanka, among others, said that the strategy should provide a framework for fundamental and far-reaching structural and institutional changes. Mexico agreed, adding that special efforts in the fields of trade, agricultural development and financial assistance would have to be made in favour of developing countries.

In addition to highlighting the need to democratize international institutions and structures, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the Ukrainian SSR were among those which said that the new strategy should implement the decisions adopted at the sixth and seventh special sessions of the General Assembly¹² and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States¹³-as called for by the Assembly on 29 January 1979. 14 The USSR added that, if the progressive principles embodied in these documents were overlooked, the value of the new international economic order would be diminished. The Byelorussian SSR said preference should not be given to agricultural growth over industrialization as that would intensify strong/weak relationships and would not speedily overcome backwardness in developing countries.

In stressing that account must be taken of lessons derived from implementation of the Strategy for the Second Development Decade, Australia said that the Preparatory Committee should concentrate on realistic proposals capable of winning over world-wide public opinion and governmental commitment. The Philippines hoped the new strategy would be actionoriented, while Pakistan said it should include time-limits together with a comprehensive set of policies to be adopted by the developed and developing States. Norway and Sweden called for clear governmental commitments with regard to goals and targets. France and Uruguay were among those which said that greater account should be taken of the least developed countries'

With regard to other aspects of the new strategy, the Netherlands and Norway held the view that the role of women should be integrated into the development process. Canada stated that, in order to eliminate destitution by the year 2000, attention should be focused on the 250 million unemployed adults throughout the world.

Argentina pointed out that the Group of 77 had reiterated opposition to attempts by developed countries to introduce into discussions on the new international economic order the concepts of basic needs, access to supplies, differentiation, gradualism and selectivity, which drew attention away from the real problems of the developing countries.

On 19 December 1979, in adopting resolution 34/207, the General Assembly reaffirmed its 1977 decision 15 that the 1980 special session would, on the basis of an assessment of the progress made in the establishment of the new international economic order, take appropriate action for the promotion of the development of developing countries and international economic co-operation, including inter alia for the adoption of the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade and for the launching of global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development. The Assembly decided to hold the special session at a high political level for two weeks between mid-August and mid-September 1980 and urged the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to accelerate its work so as to be able to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a draft of the strategy for adoption and proclamation at the special session. (For details, see section on PREPARATIONS FOR THE 1980 SPECIAL SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY in the preceding subchapter.)

On 29 November, by resolution 34/58, the Assembly had welcomed a decision of the World Health Assembly to ensure that the global strategy contained in the Declaration of Alma-Ata, adopted by the International Conference on Primary Health Care held in the USSR in September 1978, would be reflected in the contribution of the World Health Organization (WHO) to the preparation of the new strategy, and called on the Preparatory Committee to give careful attention to the contribution of who. Also on 19 December, in adopting, without vote, decision 34/452, the Assembly took note of the report of the Preparatory Committee on its first, second and third sessions. The Second Committee had approved this action, without vote, on 14 December, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

Reports and discussion of international economic and social policy

At its July/August 1979 session, the Economic and Social Council, in its discussion of international economic and social policy, assessed progress towards the establishment of a new international economic order and the formulation of a new international development strategy for the 1980s.

During the debate, most speakers expressed deep concern about the current economic situation and the uncertainty for world-wide recovery during the remainder of the decade, noting that existing economic difficulties differed from the cyclical recessions since the Second World War.

Developing countries observed that, in spite of the critical importance of the North-South dialogue and even though the developing countries had taken advantage of every opportunity to make progress, little had been achieved. Senegal was among those calling for a new dimension to be given to the dialogue.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community, said that the Council remained the central body of the United Nations system concerned with international economic co-operation, and the current session provided an opportunity to strengthen co-operation between developed and developing countries, which would benefit the North-South dialogue.

There was broad agreement that interdependence was extremely important. Australia said the new development strategy should reflect the increasing degree of interdependence in the world economy of the past 10 years, not only between developed and developing countries, but also between developing countries themselves. The United States added that it was increasingly aware that the well-being of its people depended heavily on the prosperity of all countries. However, the economic problems of the industrial world were real and would limit its ability to respond to the problems of developing countries. This view was shared by France, which added that the possibilities of balanced growth by the industrialized countries were limited and efforts to exceed these limits might accentuate inflation and monetary instability, thus jeopardizing the development of the developing countries.

India said that it was in the interest of industrial States to promote economic growth in the developing countries. The developed countries could solve their economic problems in the long term by adopting policies designed to utilize the productive capacity of developing economies. In addition, the developing countries should acquire a larger role in international economic decisionmaking. Algeria, Barbados, Indonesia, Tunisia, Turkey and Yugoslavia were among those calling for radical changes in international structures; the speedy implementation of the provisions of the 1974 Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order¹⁶ and the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States 17 was therefore essential.

Mongolia and the USSR reiterated that the socialist countries of Eastern Europe strongly supported a restructuring of the whole system of international economic relations, an objective that could be achieved only under peaceful conditions. Détente and development were therefore organically related and the cessation of the arms race and genuine disarmament were of particular importance. Poland, along with Pakistan, the Philippines and Romania, pointed out that one of the consequences of disarmament might be to release real resources to further the development of developing countries.

While there was general agreement that rapid economic expansion of the developing countries was of prime importance, Pakistan and Indonesia argued that the strategy should define the role and agreed commitments of all countries in quantitative terms, contain an agreed time-frame and establish an average growth rate for developing countries. Therefore, a higher target for the over-all growth of the developing countries than that adopted for the Second United Nations Development Decade was needed.

The Federal Republic of Germany and New Zealand stressed that, with regard to the sectoral balance of the new strategy, the highest priority should be accorded to improving agricultural productivity of developing countries in order to ensure their food security, stimulate production of raw materials for their industries, improve income distribution, reduce unemployment and under-employment, curb excessive, unbridled urbanization and improve external balanceof-payments positions. According to the United Kingdom, development depended upon a judicious blend of social and economic objectives. In this connexion, Pakistan said that, although the fulfilment of basic human needs was an essential element in national development policies, when such a strategy was advocated in the form of internationally determined priorities implying redistribution of scarce resources, the developing countries doubted the sincerity of the commitment to eradicate mass poverty and realize quantitative social objectives.

With regard to energy, Algeria, Iraq and Venezuela said the recent increase in the price of oil was merely an effort by oil-exporting countries to maintain the real purchasing power of their export earnings. France and New Zealand were among those which said that the price increase applied additional inflationary pressures and restrained growth in countries facing large oil-import bills. It was therefore vital to avoid further destabilization of the world economy by finding solutions to the energy problem.

The World Economic Survey, 1978 provided an overview of salient developments in the world economy in 1978 and the outlook for 1979, drew attention in particular to changes in international policies needed to improve the pace of development in the developing countries, and exammed developing, developed market and centrally planned economies.

The Survey stressed the weak pace of world economic growth during 1978, confirming that the world economy had made only a partial recovery from the 1974-1975 recession. The annual growth rate of the developing countries (6.2 per cent during 1971-1975, slightly above the 6 per cent target set by the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade¹⁸) was only 4 per cent in 1978, despite increased food production. The developed market economies continued to suffer from insufficient productive investment, high inflation and a slow growth rate (3.6 per cent in 1978). In the centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe and the USSR, growth of net material product fell short of planned magnitudes, largely because of external imbalances and internal bottle-necks, especially in the energy and transport sectors.

The Survey pointed out that the outlook for 1979 was for a continuance of these unsatisfactory trends and, as a result, most developing countries would experience a slackening of export growth. The growth of earned import capacity (the volume of imports which could be financed by export earnings) of the non-oil-exporting developing countries was also expected to decelerate further. As measures allowing the developing countries to sustain and increase their imports were of benefit also to the global economy, the Survey said, what was required was a larger flow of official development assistance, better access to long-term non-concessional financing, and the channelling of private funds into long-term investment in these countries.

The Survey concluded that, in the existing inflationary environment, it was important that expansionary policies be combined with appropriate anti-inflationary action, including income policies designed to promote more rapid growth of productivity. Such measures should include a firm resistance to protection of inefficient industries, in order to permit a movement towards an international structure of production in which the potential of the developing countries in particular might be more fully realized.

Five other reports summarizing major economic trends in the main regions of the world were submitted by the various regional commissions to the Economic and Social Council during 1979. These reports reviewed the most recent information on economic and social conditions of the regions of Africa (during 1977-1978), Asia and the Pacific (1978), Europe (1978), Latin America (1978) and Western Asia (1970-1978).

On 1 August 1979, the Council adopted decision 1979/51 without vote, on an oral proposal by its President. By this decision, the Council inter alia took note of the World Economic Survey, 1978 and the five regional economic and social surveys.

The fourth report in a series of biennial reviews prepared by the Secretariat to facilitate the Economic and Social Council's review of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade was submitted to the Committee for Development Planning at its March/ April 1979 session. The results achieved by the developing countries during the Decade were examined in such areas as over-all growth, manufacturing output, agricultural production, population, employment in manufacturing, education, health, international trade, investment and savings. The report also described inadequacies of past and current official development assistance, the constraining impact of the developing countries' growing external debt on their development policies, and some of the limited changes achieved in international monetary co-operation. (See also p. 463.)

On 1 August 1979, by decision 1979/51 (see above), the Council took note of and decided to transmit this report, among others, to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session.

During 1979, in response to an Assembly invitation of 29 January 1979, ¹⁹ the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) submitted reports on progress they had made towards the establishment of the new international economic order. Each body considered the question from its own standpoint and outlined the policies and activities initiated in support of its objectives.

Three issues previously considered by the 1974 World Food Conference²⁰ were reported by CFA: continuity of adequate food and supplies; an improved policy framework for food aid; and improved arrangements for emergency food aid. The ILO report focused on industrialization and adjustment, agricultural and rural development, and science and technology. The Administrator of UNDP referred to his report on the subject which had been submitted to the UNDP Governing Council in June. This report provided examples of the types of technical co-operation being financed by UNDP. The UNESCO report detailed its role in the fields of science and technology, communication, culture, social sciences and education.

International energy questions

United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy

During 1979, both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly adopted resolutions on preparations for and co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, to be convened in 1981.

On 3 August, the Council adopted resolution 1979/66 by which it recommended a number of preparatory measures and, on 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/190 by which it decided on the date and venue of the Conference, designated a preparatory committee and adopted other preparatory arrangements.

(For details, see p. 674; for page references to texts of resolutions 1979/66 and 34/190, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Information and mass communication

Two resolutions on information and mass communication were adopted by the General Assembly during 1979, both on 18 December. Resolution 34/181 dealt principally with co-operation and assistance activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the application and improvement of national information and mass communication systems for social progress and development. Resolution 34/182, on information questions, concerned the mandate of the Committee on Information and strengthening of a number of United Nations public information activities.

Consumer protection

In accordance with an Economic and Social Council resolution of 1 August 1978, ²¹ the Secretary-General submitted an interim report on consumer protection to the Council at its July/August 1979 session.

The report outlined some basic concepts and issues in consumer protection for developing countries, including: institutional and infrastructural limitations; consumer/product information availability and understandability; product quality; effect of inflation on consumer living standards; unfair commercial practices; and special problems of such vulnerable groups as the elderly, the illiterate, the handicapped and rural populations. It also highlighted the main factors influencing consumer policy and governing the nature of regulatory activities that would best fulfil consumer protection needs in developing countries. Areas suggested for future study in classifying measures and activities for consumer protection were: protection of foodstuffs and drugs; other consumer products and services, including health and safety concerns as well as performance; protection of economic interests of consumers; provision of information on products and services; and creation of adequate infrastructure.

The report stated that, as most developing countries had limited resources to devote to consumer protection, the establishment of priorities assumed particular importance. As consumers of essential goods and services, the minimum requirements for these low-income groups were: access to food, clothing, shelter, health services and education; protection from malpractices such as adulteration, restrictive trade practices and misrepresentation; reliability of information; and possibility of redress.

The report-also contained a preliminary list of options for action at the international and national levels and tentative options relating to food and drugs. The list of options used as its starting-point the list of eight broad areas of technical assistance listed in the Secretary-General's 1978 report to the Council.²

The current report listed the international consumer protection options as international conventions, model laws for developing countries, models for amending existing legislation, a guide or handbook, technical co-operation, seminars and workshops, training and fellowships, international exchange of experience, and studies of particular problems.

Options at the national level were: governmental machinery; distribution of goods and services; testing safety, quality and performance of goods and services; adoption of standards for goods and services; business practices; accurate description of goods; regulation of sales; measures for consumer redress; and education and information programmes.

Options related to food were: assessing country needs for the development of integrated control systems in production, processing, storage and distribution; establishing or updating national laws and development of regulations and codes of practice; strengthening national control administrations, including provision of technical and managerial personnel and inspection analysis facilities for quality control and safety; contamination monitoring and control programmes; manpower development in inspection, management and laboratory research through national, regional or international training programmes based on national institutions in developing countries and promotion of technical cooperation; and a code of ethics for international trade through the Joint Food Standards Programme and the Codex Alimentarius Commission of the Food and Agriculture Organizations of the United Nations and the World Health Organization (WHO).

Drug-related options comprised: model provisions for regulations on marketing practices for pharmaceutical products and consumer protection; national action in the health sector; and information on alternative sources of supply of drugs, vaccines and other medicinal supplies.

On 3 August 1979, the Council adopted, without vote, resolution 1979/74, as recommended by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee. By this resolution, the Council requested. all organizations of the United Nations system to take into account the preliminary list of options contained in the Secretary-General's interim report and to report to him on their action in this connexion. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare a comprehensive report on consumer protection to be submitted to the Council's second regular 1981 session. It would include, inter alia, proposals for adequate standards and other measures on consumer protection which States could consider adopting, taking into account in particular the concern of developing countries with consumer protection issues related to trade and development, and proposals on organizational arrangements envisaged for carrying out work on consumer protection within the United Nations system. The Secretary-General was further requested to submit a progress report to the Council's second regular 1980 session.

On 2 August, the Third Committee had approved the text by consensus, as submitted by Ghana, Kenya, Mexico, Uganda, Venezuela and Zambia.

Speaking in the Committee, several States, including Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, said that primary obligation for consumer protection fell on the State in which the product was used. The United States added that international agencies might advise on, but could have no direct role in, consumer protection regulation. States exporting consumer products should provide access to all information on their product standards; the United States could not, however, commit itself to collating and providing that information. The United States felt the Secretary-General should make one agency responsible for the progress report on action undertaken in order to avoid duplication of work.

The USSR said it was not satisfied with the text, as it was most important for developing countries to protect their citizens from the harmful activities of transnational corporations - a view shared by India. The USSR also did not agree that the Secretary-General could propose establishing new machinery for consumer protection, since that was the task of the Council. However, Ireland, speaking on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community, said that the Secretary-General was free to make such proposals and the contents of the report requested of him were not prejudiced in any respect.

Finland said it did not interpret the reference to trade and development as prejudging orientation of organizational arrangements within the United Nations system. Mexico and Venezuela found the Secretary-General's report acceptable, though it should have concentrated more on the particular needs of developing countries. The Netherlands, however, said it was disappointing and the preliminary list of options too vague.

Development of international economic law

At its 1979 regular session, the Sixth (Legal) Committee of the General Assembly considered the question of the consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to the legal aspects of the new international economic order. The Philippines submitted to the Committee both a working paper, providing an analysis and an outline of a work programme on the topic, and a draft resolution.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/150, based on the Philippine text, by which it requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and in co-ordination with the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, to study the question of the consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to the legal aspects of the new international economic order, with a view to embodying them in one or more instruments, as appropriate. Member States were invited to submit their views on this question not later than 31 July 1980 and the Secretary-General was further requested to submit to the Assembly's thirty-fifth (1980) session a preliminary report on his study and the views of Governments received.

Resolution 34/150, as recommended by the Sixth Committee, was adopted by a recorded vote of 112 to 6, with 26 abstentions. On 6 December, the Sixth Committee had approved the draft by a roll-call vote, requested by the sponsor, of 79 to 7, with 26 abstentions. Accepting the gist of an oral proposal by Mexico, the Philippines amended the text to request that the principles and norms in question be studied with a view to embodying them in one or more instruments as appropriate, rather than in an appropriate instrument.

Speaking in explanation of its vote in favour, Jamaica said that economic relations between developed and developing countries must be restructured on a more equitable basis if there was to be peace in the world. Since many of the features of such relations had attained the status of customary international law, they could be codified into the norms and principles of the subject.

Austria, Canada, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway and the USSR, which abstained, were among those which said that it would be premature to take a decision on the subject, because it required more thorough consideration. The United Kingdom-which opposed the text-Canada and the USSR pointed out that the question was currently being studied in numerous other international forums and codification of these rules might prejudice those consultations.

While the USSR said it was essential to implement fully the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States²³ in dealing with the subject, Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States were among those which reiterated their reservations with regard to that Charter which, in their opinion, did not contain norms and principles of international law.

Israel said its positive vote should not be taken to imply any change in its position on resolutions on the new international economic order, recalled in the preamble, regarding any commitment to supply the Secretary-General with written observations.

Health as an integral part of development

At the General Assembly's 1979 regular session, in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, Botswana, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Chad, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, India, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Sweden, the USSR, the United Republic of Cameroon, and the United States sponsored a resolution on health as an integral part of development. On 27 November, the Committee approved this text without vote, and the Assembly adopted it, also without vote, on 29 November as resolution 34/58.

By the resolution, the Assembly endorsed the Declaration of Alma-Ata, adopted by the International Conference on Primary Health Care, jointly sponsored by who and the United Nations Children's Fund and held in the USSR in September 1978. 24 It endorsed in particular the Conference's view that a combination of promotive, preventive, curative and rehabilitative measures constituted the key to achievement of a healthful society, especially when primary health care was incorporated into the development process. The Assembly noted with approval a World Health Assembly resolution of 25 May 1979, by which that body had decided that the development of who programmes and allocation of its resources at the global, regional and country levels should reflect who's commitment to achievement of health for all by the year 2000.

 $^{^{23}}$ See Y.U.N., 1974, p. 402, resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing text of Charter. 24 See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 1107.

The General Assembly called for support for and co-operation with WHO'S efforts by bodies of the United Nations system and appealed to Member States to carry out the actions called for in the Declaration of Alma-Ata.

The Assembly welcomed a World Health Assembly decision to ensure that the global strategy for achieving an acceptable level of health for all would be reflected in WHO'S contribution to preparation of the international development strategy for the 1980s, and called on the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to give full attention to WHO'S contribution.

The General Assembly also requested the WHO Director-General to report to the Economic and Social Council during 1981 on progress achieved in formulating a global health strategy; the Council was then to submit recommendations for Assembly action.

Relationship between disarmament and development

On 11 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/83 K on a study on the relationship between disarmament and development. By this resolution, the Assembly took note of an interim report of the Secretary-General on the study and requested him to provide the resources-and appealed to Governments to make available information-needed to complete the study.

(For details, see p. 93; for page reference to text of resolution 34/83 K, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Unified approach to development analysis and planning

On 29 November 1979, by decision 34/419, the General Assembly took note of a report of the Secretary-General, submitted to the Commission for Social Development, on a unified approach to development analysis and planning, and requested him, on the basis of replies to a 1976 aide-memoire, to prepare a new report on a unified approach to socio-economic development for the Assembly's 1981 session.

(For details, see p. 753; for page reference to text of decision 34/419, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Relationship between population, resources, environment and development

On 1 August 1979, in adopting resolution 1979/49, the Economic and Social Council took note with appreciation of a report of the Secretary-General on the study of interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development. It urged Member States and United Nations bodies to make full use of the available knowledge relating to such interrelationships in all their development activities, and requested that organizations of the United Nations system undertake multidisciplinary studies of the subject. (For details, see p. 787.)

By a letter of 4 October, Sweden transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement issued by the participants in the United Nations symposium on interrelations among resources, environment, population and development, held at Stockholm from 6 to 10 August. Hosted by the Government of Sweden and co-chaired by its Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, the symposium brought together 27 United Nations and Government officials involved in economic and social development issues facing the developing countries. The statement reflected a consensus of the participants in their personal capacities on the general trends and policy implications concerning the interrelated issues discussed, with emphasis on interactions under four headings: carrying capacity (the ability to support growing populations at increasing standards of living), human development, disparities in life-styles, and resource use.

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 34/450, by which it took note of the participants' statement (for details, see p. 787).

Resolution 1979/74, as recommended by Third Committee,

E/1979/116/Add.2, adopted without vote by Council on 3 August 1979, meeting 40.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2111 (LXIII) of 4 August 1977 and 1978/42 of 1 August 1978,

Recognizing that consumer protection has an important bearing on economic and social development, as well as on the health, safety and welfare of the people of all countries,

Recognizing further that international co-operation in this area is important in promoting the economic and social development of developing countries,

Taking into account the importance of having available all public information on prohibitions and restrictions applying to consumer goods exported to other countries,

Convinced that in their efforts to prevent the promotion of products dangerous to human health, safety and welfare, States should consider the importance of regulating advertising to that end.

Recognizing that in view of the importance of preventing damage which may be caused to human health, safety and welfare by consumer products, States should consider the appropriate regulation of, inter alia, those commercial practices of enterprises, including those of transnational corporations, which are harmful to the interests of consumers,

- 1. Takes note of the interim report of the Secretary-General on consumer protection;
- 2. Requests all organizations of the United Nations system to take into account, in the elaboration of programmes in their respective areas of specialization, the preliminary list of options contained in the interim report of the Secretary-General on consumer protection and based on the "eight broad areas of technical assistance" listed in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Consumer protection: institutional arrangements and legal measures" and to report to the Secretary-General on their action in this connexion;
- 3. Requests the Secretary-General, drawing upon all United Nations organs, agencies and programmes concerned, and on the regional commissions, to prepare, within the existing financial resources, a comprehensive report on consumer protection which would include, inter alia, proposals for adequate standards and other measures on consumer protection which States could consider adopting, taking into account in particular the concern of developing countries with the issues of consumer protection related to trade and development, to include in the report his proposals on the organizational arrangements envisaged for carrying out work on consumer protection within the United Nations system, and to submit the report to the Council at its second regular session of 1981;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on the action undertaken in pursuance of paragraph 3 above to the Council at its second regular session of 1980.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations, in which the General Assembly is called upon to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Noting the relevant provisions of the Charter relating to international economic relations, in particular the promotion of social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom in the Preamble, the achievement of international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character in Article 1, paraaraph 3, and the promotion of higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development in Article 55,

Recalling its resolutions 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Considering that the Charter and the above-mentioned resolutions and declarations, as well as other resolutions and decisions adopted by bodies within the United Nations system and by conferences held under United Nations auspices relating to the establishment of the new international economic order, together contain principles and norms of international economic law which should govern economic relations between and among States of differing levels of development and different economic systems,

- 1. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and in co-ordination with the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, to study the question of the consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to the legal aspects of the new international economic order, with a view to embodying them in one or more instruments, as appropriate:
- 2. Invites Member States to submit their views on this question not later than 31 July 1980;
- 3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a preliminary report on his study and the views of Governments received, under the item entitled "Consolidation and progressive development of the principles and norms of international economic law relating in particular to the legal aspects of the new international economic order."

Health as an integral part of development

A/C.2/34/L.61. Botswana, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Chad, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, India, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Netherlands, Sweden, USSR, United Republic of Cameroon, United States: draft resolution, approved without vote by Second Committee on 27 November 1979, meeting 52.

A/34/728. Report of Second Committee (on examination of long-term trends in economic development), draft resolution II.

Resolution 34/58, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/728, adopted without vote by Assembly on 29 November 1979, meeting 82.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also the United Nations conferences held in recent years on major issues relating to economic and social development and the establishment of the new international economic order, particularly the International Conference on Primary Health Care, jointly sponsored by the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, held at Alma-Ata, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, from 6 to 12 September 1978,

Noting that a substantial portion of the population in many countries, developing as well as developed, lacks access to basic health services, and that people lacking adequate health cannot fully participate in or contribute to the economic and social development of their nation,

We/coming the important efforts of the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the other agencies of the United Nations system associated with the effort to attain the goal of health for all by the year 2000, as expressed in World Health Assembly resolutions WHA 30.43 of 19 May 1977 and WHA 32.30 of 25 May 1979,

Considering that peace and security are important for the preservation and improvement of the health of all people and that co-operation among nations on vital health issues can contribute importantly to peace,

Cognizant of the vital role that health and health care play in the development of countries, particularly developing countries,

- 1. Endorses the Declaration of Alma-Ata, in particular the view that primary health care, aimed at the solution of the major world health problems through a combination of promotive, preventive, curative and rehabilitative measures, constitutes the key to the ultimate achievement of a healthful society, especially when primary health care is incorporated into the development process, particularly that of developing countries:
- 2. Notes with approval the decision of the World Health Assembly, contained in resolution WHA 32.30, that the development of the programmes of the World Health Organization and the allocation of its resources at the global, regional and country levels should reflect the commitment of that organization to the priority of the achievement of health for all by the year 2000;
- 3. Calls upon the relevant bodies of the United Nations system to co-ordinate with and support the efforts of the World Health Organization by appropriate actions within their respective spheres of competence;
- 4. Appeals to Member States to carry out the actions called for in the Declaration of Alma-Ata;
- 5. Reiterates the appeal contained in paragraph 10 of World Health Assembly resolution WHA 32.30 to the international community to give full support to the formulation and implementation of national, regional and global strategies for achieving an acceptable level of health for all;
- 6. We/comes the decision of the World Health Assembly to ensure that the global strategy shall be reflected in the contribution of the World Health Organization to the preparation of the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade and calls upon the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to give full and careful attention to the contribution of the World Health Organization;
- 7. Calls upon Member States, both developed countries and developing, to co-operate with each other and with the World Health Organization in the exchange of technological information and expertise in order to facilitate the achievement of the primary health care goals;

Questions relating to the Second United Nations Development Decade

Transfer Of real resources to developing countries

Acceleratin g the transfer of real resources

At its January 1979 session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174²⁵—an intersessional committee set up to oversee and assess progress made in negotiations on the establishment of the new international economic order (see subchapter above) -formulated agreed conclusions on some aspects of the transfer of resources in real terms to developing countries. The Committee agreed that there should be a global approach to the transfer of resources, which should be fully supportive of the world community's determination to work urgently for the establishment of a new international economic order.

The Committee reconfirmed that flows of bilateral and multilateral financial resources to developing countries should be provided by developed countries on a continuous, predictable and increasingly assured basis, and that developing countries were themselves responsible for an efficient use of the external resources made available to them.

The Committee expressed concern about the performance of the developed donor countries taken as a group with respect to the target for official development assistance (oDA) —0.7 per cent of gross national product, established by the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade²⁶_and agreed that developed countries should consider additional measures to increase, improve the quality of and modify the definition of ODA. The Committee agreed that flows from multilateral development institutions should be increased substantially in real terms, taking into account the capital requirements, objectives and priorities of recipient countries, and that those institutions should improve their lending practices.

The Committee also considered it important that the Third Window of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)²⁷ be reactivated and brought to its original target of $1 billion by contributions from wherever possible.

The Committee called upon United Nations development assistance organizations to consider long-term financing of their programmes, including multiyear pledges. It was also agreed that the proposal for establishment in the World Bank of a long-term facility to finance purchases of capital goods by developing countries be speedily resolved.

With regard to access to capital markets, the Committee urged full and early implementation of the October 1976 recommendations of the Joint Ministerial Committee on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries, of the Boards of Governors of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank (Development Committee).²⁸ The Committee further considered that IMF should conclude as soon as possible the current review of guidelines relating to the conditionality of its drawings.

By resolution 129(V) on the transfer of real resources to developing countries, adopted at its fifth session held from 7 May to 3 June 1979 at Manila, Philippines, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) reaffirmed the conclusions agreed and the commitments made by developed donor countries in January in the Committee of the Whole and urged those which had not reached the 0.7 per cent target to consider adopting new and additional measures to increase the amount and quaiity of their ODA, and to reduce obstacles in their aid-giving procedures.

Also by the resolution, UNCTAD also called upon multilateral financial institutions to increase flows to developing countries. It invited the World Bank and regional development banks to take specific steps to assist those countries. The Conference also acknowledged the importance of private and other non-official flows. Access by developing countries to private capital markets should be facilitated and work on a code of conduct for transnational corporations should be accelerated. The Conference also urged early consideration of a proposai to establish a long-term World Bank facility to finance capital-goods purchases by developing countries. (See also p. 564.)

On 19 December 1979, the General Assembly, in adopting resolution 34/196 on the report of UNCTAD'S 1979 session, endorsed UNCTAD resolution 129(V); (For details, see p. 574; for page reference to text of resolution 34/196, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

In accordance with an Assembly resolution of 19 December 1978, 29 the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly at its 1979 regular session a background report prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat on the increased transfer of resources. The report examined the current framework for the transfer of resources to developing countries and assessed proposals for an expanded flow of Funds to them. It analysed in detail the underlying themes and a number of proposals which were sufficiently elaborate to warrant detailed examination, and raised technical and policy questions. Finally, it singled out issues requiring Further intergovernmental consideration and annexed a 1978 Mexican proposal for a long-term facility for financing capital-goods purchases by developing countries.

On 18 December 1979, the Assembly, by resolution 34/189, took note of the Secretary-General's background report, and endorsed the agreed conclusions on this question of the Committee of the Whole, as well as the decisions and recommendations in UNCTAD resolution 129 (V), calling on all countries, in particular developed donor countries, and multilateral development institutions to implement them urgently.

The Assembly affirmed the importance of a review of the current system of international Financial co-operation in the context of world trade and development, and urged all States members of unctad to consider this question with a view to reaching satisfactory decisions, taking into account inter alia the proposals of the UNCTAD member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, and requested the Trade and Development Board to report its progress to the Assembly's 1980 regular session. The Assembly also urged full and expeditious implementation of the Development Committee's October 1976 recommendations to facilitate access of developing countries to private capital markets and help overcome administrative, institutional and other obstacles impeding their access to those markets, and that capital market countries consider establishing programmes to provide technical assistance to developing countries seeking access to private capital markets. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to consult further with Governments and within the United Nations system on expansion of the volume of resource transfers to developing countries and to include the results of those consultations in a report to the Assembly's 1980 special session. ³⁰

On 13 December, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had approved the text of this resolution without vote, as did the Assembly. The draft was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations held on a draft resolution introduced by India on behalf of the Group of 77 developing Member States, which then withdrew their text.

The approved text differed from that of the Group of 77 in several areas. Instead of calling on all countries to implement UNCTAD and Committee of the Whole decisions and resolutions, the Group of 77's draft had called on only developed donor countries to implement them. Rather than urge capital market countries to establish technical assistance programmes for developing countries seeking access to private capital markets, the earlier draft had called for preferential treatment for developing countries to enable them to make flotations or placements on schedule in developed countries with national capital markets and raise in favour of the developing countries the ceilings on foreign flotations, especially in countries with currencies in high demand. Also, instead of urging all States members of unctad to consider actively the question of a review of the current system of international financial co-operation, that draft had urged them to reach a positive decision on the basis of the Group of 77's proposals.

Although not opposing the consensus on the resolution, several States spoke in explanation of their position on the subject.

Australia pointed out that it could not accept binding commitments in respect of its ODA. The United Kingdom said its approval would have to be seen against the background of its public expenditure constraints and its aid-programme review.

The United States reiterated reservations it had expressed in the Committee of the Whole and in UNCTAD concerning targets and dates for aid performance. Both Australia and the United States had reservations on the implications of the call for measures to be taken to remove obstacles and facilitate access of developing countries to private capital markets.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that resolutions on economic and financial relations between developed capitalist States and developing countries could not be used to regulate financial relations between the latter and the socialist countries. The demand for increased resource transfers should, in their view, be satisfied from profits of capitalistic monopolies and by diversion of arms race expenditures.

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/211 on proposals for the new international development strategy, thereby reaffirming a resolution of 29 January 197931 by which the Assembly had decided inter alia that the new strategy should address itself, among its priority objectives, to increasing substantially the flow of resources in real terms to the developing countries on a predictable, continuous and increasingly assured basis. The Assembly remitted to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy for consideration all aspects of a proposal presented at the Assembly's current session concerning the transfer to developing countries of an additional $300 billion in financial and material resources and technical assistance during the 1980s, of which yearly commitments of at least $25 billion should be made during the early years of the decade.

Resolution 34/211 was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 6, with 16 abstentions. On 12 December, the Second Committee had approved the text, as submitted by India on behalf of the Group of 77, by a recorded vote of 100 to 5, with 16 abstentions; the vote was requested by India.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Second Committee, several Members expressed reservations concerning the amounts to be committed to developing countries. Turkey said its positive vote was on the understanding that the Preparatory Committee for the new strategy would treat the figure mentioned only as a guide. The United States, however, voted against the resolution as it was unable to accept commitment to such a target. Australia, which abstained, said that, in its opinion, the text was procedural and implied no commitments or prejudgements.

Denmark, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, said they also had abstained because of the reference to a specific commitment amount and stated, as did France, that the discussions in the Preparatory Committee should not be prejudged. France also regretted the lack of opportunity for consultations and had voted against the draft. Austria abstained as it felt that account should have been taken of other proposals and ongoing consultations and the text should have been the subject of further study. Israel abstained because it considered elements in the preamble unacceptable.

Bulgaria, on behalf also of seven other Eastern European States- the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR-and Mongolia, said that although they had voted in favour their position with regard to the transfer of real resources to developing countries remained unchanged.

India explained that the Group of 77 regarded the text as procedural in nature and did not commit any State to anything more than its consideration along with other proposals for the new strategy.

Finance for development

Responding to a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1978,³² the Secretary-General submitted a progress report on finance for development to the Assembly's 1979 regular session, drawing attention to a draft resolution submitted by the Group of 77 States members of UNCTAD to UNCTAD'S May/June 1979 session. The draft stressed the need to establish a separate multilateral guarantee facility for the borrowings of developing countries from private capital markets and to amend the appropriate articles of agreement of multilateral financial institutions in order to enable them to provide guarantees more easily.

The report added that, following inconclusive discussions on the subject, UNCTAD had decided to forward the draft to its permanent machinery, for continuing study by its secretariat and examination by the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade at its 1980 session.

At the first part of its nineteenth session, held from 8 to 20 October 1979, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD remitted the proposal to that Committee.

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, decision 34/444 as recommended by the Second Committee. By this decision, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report. On 13 December, the Second Committee had approved the text, also without vote, as orally proposed by its Chairman.

International monetary reform

By a letter of 7 November, Yugoslavia transmitted to the 1979 session of the General Assembly an Outline for a Programme of Action on International Monetary Reform prepared by the Intergovernmental Group of Twenty-four on International Monetary Affairs, of the Group of 77, which was established to co-ordinate and unify the position of the developing countries in international monetary and financial matters.

³² Ibid., p. 440, resolution 33/137.

The Outline had been approved by the Group of 77 at its ministerial meeting, held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, in September 1979 in conjunction with the annual meeting of the World Bank and IMF. It assessed efforts made within various international forums to reform the international monetary system and stated that the international community had failed to achieve its goals in the fields of money, trade and transfer of real resources to developing countries. It was clear, the Outline continued, that, unless policies changed, the world economy would continue to find itself trapped in a vicious circle of slow growth, unemployment, protectionism and instability in the monetary and financial fields. Therefore, a mutually supportive action programme in the areas of trade, development finance and monetary arrangements was needed.

The Outline stated that it was apparent that an international monetary reform should foster development, employment and trade and, in particular, the development of developing countries in the context of the new international economic order. The principal features of a reformed international monetary system would include: an effective, symmetrical and equitable adjustment process; a stable exchange-rate regime; equitable IMF surveillance over exchange-rate and balanceof-payments policies; truly collective action to create international liquidity, with the special drawing right (SDR) becoming the principal reserve asset; promotion of a net flow of real resources to developing countries incorporating an SDR link between allocation and development assistance; and a greater role for developing countries in the decision-making process.

A programme of immediate action was proposed. The first in a series of measures to be given priority related to the transfer of real resources, covering such issues as concessional aid, an SDR link, an increase in programme lending of multilateral financial institutions, and external indebtedness of developing countries. The second series supported an increase in total resources, covering greater SDR allocations and revision of IMF quotas. The third series concerned balance-of-payments support and included a proposal for a medium- term balance-of-payments facility and a review of the operations and conditionality of IMF facilities. The final series of measures applied to trade, establishment in the World Bank of a long-term facility to finance purchases of capital goods, and implementation of structural changes in developed countries.

At its May/June 1979 session, UNCTAD adopted resolution 128 (V) on international monetary reform, by which it reaffirmed that the international monetary system should provide for ways and means of maintaining the real value of the financial assets of developing countries. It invited IMF to review and modify its policies, particularly with respect to developing countries, within the areas of quota shares, conditionality, the Extended Fund Facility, the Compensatory Financing Facility, establishment of an interest subsidy account in conjunction with the Supplementary Financing Facility, and the establishment of a longer-term maturity facility. By this resolution, unctad also decided to establish an ad hoc intergovernmental high-level group of experts to examine fundamental issues in the future evolution of the international monetary system. (See also p. 563.)

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/216 on international monetary reform, by which it took note with satisfaction of the Outline for a Programme of Action on International Monetary Reform, and invited United Nations organs, organizations and bodies to examine it positively, to implement the measures recommended therein and to report to the Assembly in 1980 on progress made. The Assembly welcomed establishment of UNCTAD's ad hoc intergovernmental high-level group of experts, and requested that its report, and comments of the Trade and Development Board, be made available in 1980 to the Assembly.

Resolution 34/216 was adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 16, with 7 abstentions. On 14 December, the Second Committee had approved the draft, introduced by India on behalf of the Group of 77, by 79 votes to 15, with 16 abstentions. A draft resolution submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on the Group of 77's text was withdrawn before the vote in the Committee. In addition to a number of drafting changes, this text would have had the Assembly recognize the need to enhance the responsiveness of the international monetary system to the needs and interests of the developing countries in the context of further reform of the system for the benefit of the international community, rather than recognize the urgent need for the system's comprehensive reform. The draft would also have invited only IMF and the Development Committee to examine the Outline and report on its progress.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Ireland, on behalf of States members of the European Economic Community (EN), said they could not support the resolution, which went far beyond previously agreed positions and posed many serious problems for EEC countries. Japan did not believe that a comprehensive reform of the international monetary system was currently necessary. New Zealand felt it was premature for the Assembly to judge proposals contained in the Outline before proper consideration by IMF and the World Bank. Norway abstained because it felt that the resolution encroached on the mandates of IMF and other international institutions, and that some paragraphs were too categorical and unbalanced.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of seven other Eastern European States and Mongolia, said that, although they shared the concerns of the developing countries, a number of demands contained in the Outline arose from the specific nature of the economic and monetary relations between developed capitalist countries and developing countries and did not concern them; hence they had abstained.

India said, the Group of 77 regretted the lack of consensus on the resolution, the chief reason for which, it said, had been the restrictive view taken by several States as to which United Nations bodies could concern themselves with international monetary issues-a view totally unacceptable to the Group of 77.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

At its tenth special session held in March 1979, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board heard an oral report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on his consultations pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979³³ towards the organizing and convening during 1979 of meetings of governmental experts and representatives of intergovernmental economic co-operation groupings of developing countries to promote the objectives of subregional, regional and interregional economic co-operation among developing countries. He said that, as the issues were still under active consideration in the regional groups, he was unable to make specific recommendations to the Board. The Board therefore decided to include an item on economic cooperation among developing countries in the provisional agenda of unctad's Manila session in May/June.

On 3 June, UNCTAD adopted resolution 127(V) on the subject. Taking account inter alia of the results of the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, in February 1979 and of other meetings of developing countries, UNCTAD urged support by developed countries and international organizations to programmes of economic cooperation among developing countries. It decided to convene in 1980 a special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries; three preparatory meetings of governmental experts of developing countries would also be convened. It also urged prompt implementation of the Buenos Aires

Plan of Action and the resolutions of the 1978 United Nations Conference on Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries,34 and invited the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to increase resources for indicative planning figures and assistance to projects for economic co-operation among developing countries. (See also p. 571.)

On 20 October, the Trade and Development Board remitted to its March 1980 session the question of convening and organizing meetings of governmental experts.

On 19 December, by resolution 34/196, the General Assembly endorsed unctad resolution 127(V) and emphasized the importance of the 1980 special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, which was to consider inter alia proposals of the developing countries for support with regard to establishment of a global system of trade preferences and multinational marketing enterprises among developing countries, and cooperation among State trading organizations of those countries, as well as for studies and meetings pursuant to a May 1977 resolution of the Committee.

(For details, see p. 574; for page reference to text of resolution 34/196, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Pursuant to an Assembly request of 29 January 1979,35 the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly's regular 1979 session on major developments in the field of economic co-operation among developing countries and intersecretariat co-ordination arrangements within the United Nations system.

The report noted three major developments since adoption of the January resolution. The first was the Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations adopted by the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 in February. In adopting the Programme, the Group of 77 decided on the implementation of a First Short/Medium-Term Action Plan for Global Priorities on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries calling for specific action in a number of priority areas which included: a global system of trade preferences among developing countries; cooperation among State trading organizations; establishment of multinational marketing enterprises; strengthening of subregional, regional and interregional economic integration and cooperation; co-operation in the transfer and development of technology; least developed countries; land-locked and island developing countries; subregional, regional and interregional insurance and reinsurance schemes among developing countries; monetary and financial co-operation; multinational production enterprises among developing countries; other substantive items contained in programmes on economic co-operation among developing countries; institutional matters; and technical and economic co-operation among developing countries. The Action Plan could therefore be considered, the report stated, as a first stage of the process of implementation of the programme of economic co-operation among developing countries adopted by the Group, whose consolidated position had been put forward at the September 1976 Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries at Mexico City.

The second major development was a resolution on policy guidelines on the reinforcement of collective self-reliance between developing countries, adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries held at Havana, Cuba, from 3 to 9 September. Cuba transmitted to the Assembly the Final Declaration of that Conference by a letter of 1 October. The third development was unctad resolution 127 (V).

The report also noted a decision taken at the first regular session, held in April 1979, of the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ (OPS)) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) to consider both economic and technical co-operation among developing countries under a single item on co-operation among developing countries. (See p. 963.)

On 19 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/202, by which it welcomed the initiatives, recommendations and decisions of the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77, and urged developed countries and international organizations to support the activities of economic co-operation among developing countries. The Assembly also welcomed the Colombo (Sri Lanka) Action Programme for Economic Co-operation adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries in August 1976, as well as the resolution on policy guidelines adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, and requested the unctad Secretary-General to prepare for convening a special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries and for holding three preparatory meetings of governmental experts from developing countries, as well as other expert meetings that might be requested by other regional groups, referred to in UNCTAD resolution 127 (V). All countries, particularly the developed ones, and international organizations were urged to implement the recommendations in that resolution. They were also urged to act to enable developing countries to participate effectively in the execution of bilateral and multilateral development assistance projects through maximum use of their own capabilities.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was also requested to intensify efforts in support of programmes of economic co-operation among developing countries and to co-operate closely with United Nations organizations and the specialized agencies as well as with the regional intergovernmental organizations of the developing countries

The Assembly requested the United Nations Secretary-General to include a review of developments in this field of endeavour in his report to the Assembly's 1980 special session on the implementation of decisions taken regarding the establishment of a new international economic order.

Resolution 34/202 was adopted without vote. On 5 December, the Second Committee had approved the text, also without vote, as submitted by a Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a draft resolution introduced by India on behalf of the Member States belonging to the Group of 77. The Group then withdrew its draft resolution.

Among the drafting changes to the Group's text was the addition of a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly recognized that, while developing countries' efforts played a decisive role in achieving their development goals, however much those countries mobilized their own resources in pursuit of their economic and social objectives it would not be possible for them to achieve such objectives without concomitant action by developed countries and the institutions of the international community. Also added was a request that, in preparing for the 1980 special session, measures be taken to hold meetings of governmental experts that might be requested by other regional groups, in addition to the three preparatory meetings proposed by UNCTAD. All countries, in particular the developed ones, and international organizations were urged to contribute to implement the recommendations of unctad's resolution, whereas the Group's text had urged only the developed countries and international organizations to contribute. The Group's draft would also have sought a comprehensive report by the Secretary-General for the Assembly's 1980 regular session on implementation of the resolution.

In a statement following approval of the text in the Second Committee, Ireland, on behalf of the member States of EEC, said that welcoming the Action Programme did not imply any value judgement regarding its content-a view shared by the United States.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of seven other Eastern European States and Mongolia, said adoption of the resolution must not involve any additional regular budget appropriations to finance UNCTAD development activities in the developing countries, since that would violate the principle of universality of the United Nations.

Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries was also considered at meetings of the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions held at Rabat, Morocco, from 18 to 20 March, which were also attended by representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, UNCTAD, UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. In a report to the July/August session of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General reported that the meetings considered economic cooperation and technical co-operation among developing countries to be closely interrelated and therefore recommended that unctad and undp should work closely together, that such cooperation should be increased and that an interregional meeting might be held, jointly sponsored by the regional commissions, the Secretariat, unctad and undp. The meetings also felt that economic and technical co-operation should be decentralized through the regional commissions, and welcomed the ACC decision to establish, through ccsq (ops), interagency mechanisms to deal with economic and technical co-operation (see p. 963). In view of the subject's importance, it was agreed to inscribe it on the agenda of forthcoming Executive Secretaries' meetings.

Programme of action for the least developed countries

Special measures in favour of the least developed countries

The Trade and Development Board, at its tenth special session held in March 1979, took note of a report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on the External Trade of the Least Developed Countries, which had met in December 1978 at Geneva, and remitted the Group's basic conclusions and recommendations to the fifth session of UNCTAD. The Group of Experts had been convened by the Secretary-General of UNCTAD pursuant to UNCTAD resolution 98(IV) of 31 May 1976³⁶ to study: expanding least developed countries' exports; long-term arrangements for the sale of those exports in developed countries' markets; promoting sale of least developed countries' products; and ensuring procurement of imports for developing countries at minimum cost.

On 3 June 1979, by resolution 122(V), UNCTAD decided to launch a Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries with both immediate and longerterm phases. The first phase envisaged an Immediate Action Programme (1979-1981) of greatly expanded assistance to meet the critical situation of the least developed countries. This was to boost their economies and support projects for the provision of the most pressing social needs, and pave the way for much larger longerterm development efforts. The second phase constituted a Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s envisaging structural change in the least developed countries aimed at transforming their economies towards self-sustained development and enabling them to provide at least internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, transport and communications, housing and education, as well as job opportunities for all.

With regard to financial requirements and policies under the Comprehensive New Programme of Action, unctad reaffirmed the conclusions agreed and commitments made by donor countries in the Committee of the Whole in January (see p. 462) and urged all donor countries which had not reached the 0.7 per cent target to increase odd substantially.

The Programme also outlined further work to be undertaken and detailed studies to be undertaken by UNCTAD. Other elements of the Programme included: detailed steps for the planning and approval of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s; proposed commercial policy measures; measures to facilitate transfer of technology; and improvements in practices relating to shipping to expand export trade.

The General Assembly was invited to convene a United Nations conference on the least developed countries to finalize, adopt and support the Substantial New Programme of Action (see subsection immediately below).

On 1 August 1979, on an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1979/51, without vote, by which it took note of, among other documents, a note by the Secretariat-reproducing, for the Council's information, the text of UNCTAD resolution 122 (V) - and decided to transmit it to the ³⁶ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 398.

General Assembly at its 1979 regular session. Pursuant to a Trade and Development Board resolution of 17 September 1978,37 and UNCTAD resolution 122 (V), the Secretary-General of UNCTAD convened a meeting of a Group of Highlevel Experts on the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries at Geneva from 26 to 30 November 1979. The report of the 18-member Group: outlined the goals and objectives of the new Programme; discussed the problems and potentials for development made in agriculture, manufacturing, natural and human resources and infrastructure; made proposals for implementing the Substantial New Programme of Action; emphasized the need for expanded external resource flows on more flexible terms and conditions; suggested ways to improve co-ordination arrangements, trade and related measures and co-operation arrangements; and pointed out the major implications of the new Programme for the international community.

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/210 on special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries.

By this resolution, the Assembly invited all international development institutions and specialized agencies, as well as bilateral donor institutions, regional commissions and governmental and non-governmental organizations, to accord high priority to such special measures and to give their full support to the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries, which was endorsed by the Assembly.

The Assembly called upon donor countries urgently to implement ODA commitments undertaken in connexion with unctad's resolution and recommended that such odd should as a general rule be in the form of grants and that loans, when provided by mutual agreements, should be highly concessional. The Assembly further called upon donor countries urgently to consider, as a step towards implementing the Immediate Action Programme, how they should best provide bilateral or multilateral assistance in response to countries' requests for immediate additional financial support, to ensure sufficient resources to supplement the activities undertaken by the least developed countries. The Assembly noted that such assistance would be for 1980 and would not adversely affect the least developed countries' share in the indicative planning figures of UNDP to be considered for the third programming cycle. The Assembly also urged developed countries which had not done so to apply fully the conclusions approved-adjustment in the terms of past ODA-under section

A of Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX).³⁸ Donor countries and multilateral development institutions were urged to increase financial resources and technical aid in support of action to transform the major structural characteristics of the least developed countries.

The Assembly invited the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to take full account, in formulating the new strategy for the 1980s, of the special and pressing problems of the least developed countries, and requested UNCTAD'S Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries, as Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to monitor progress under the Immediate Action Programme.

Finally, the Secretary-General was requested to include in his report to the 1980 special session on the implementation of the new international economic order an assessment of the situation of the least developed countries and a review of implementation of the special measures called for in this resolution.

Resolution 34/210 was adopted without vote; it had been similarly approved on 12 December by the Second Committee. The text was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a draft introduced first in the plenary Assembly by India, on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77, and referred to the Second Committee for consideration. The Group's draft was withdrawn in favour of the new text.

The provisions of the adopted text calling for urgent implementation of ODA commitments and for consideration of how donors might best provide assistance resulted from a reformulation of provisions in the Group's draft which would have had the Assembly urge the developed countries, taking into account their relative performance, at least to double in real terms the quantum of their current oda to the least developed countries, as soon as possible and at the latest by 1981, and call upon donors, as an urgent step towards implementing the Immediate Action Programme, to pledge an additional $100 million to UNDP at the February 1980 session of its Governing Council to be used to assist the least developed countries in their immediate preparations for the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, as called for in unctad resolution 122(V).

In addition, the Group's draft would have had the Assembly request UNCTAD'S Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries to invite also the least developed countries, to the extent of their possibilities, to submit information on implementation of the Immediate Action Programme.

Whereas the adopted text had recommended that all odd to the least developed countries should as a general rule be in the form of grants and that loans to those countries, when provided by mutual agreements, should be on highly concessional terms, the Group's draft had specified that there should be no discrimination among the least developed countries and had simply recommended that odd should be in the form of grants and that loans to these countries should be provided on highly concessional terms.

Speaking in the Second Committee, Bulgaria, on behalf also of seven other Eastern European countries and Mongolia, said that they had not objected to approval of the resolution, even though they had some problems with it. The grave difficulties faced by the least developed countries resulted from exploitation by the imperialists and their monopolies. The socialist countries of Eastern Europe could not assume any financial commitments resulting from adoption of the resolution but would continue to provide support, within their means, to the development of the least developed countries.

The United Kingdom said that, although it had joined the consensus on the draft, it had reservations on new expenditure commitments. The United States added that it could not commit itself to the resolution's specific recommendations for assistance.

United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (1981)

On 19 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/203, by which it decided to convene a United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 1981 to finalize, adopt and support the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s outlined in UNCTAD resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979. The Assembly requested the United Nations Secretary-General to designate the Secretary-General of unctad as Secretary-General of the Conference and to entrust the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation with responsibility, in collaboration with the unctad Secretary-General, for mobilizing and co-ordinating organs of the United Nations system is the further elaboration and implementation of the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries and in the preparations for the Conference.

After designating the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries as Preparatory Committee for the Conference, the Assembly requested it to recommend any sessions, in addition to its February 1980 session, needed to complete preparations. The Assembly further decided to initiate the studies provided for in unctad resolution 122(V) (see p. 568), requested the Preparatory Committee to consider any additional studies necessary for the Conference and invited concerned bodies of the United Nations system, especially the regional commissions, under any the World Bank, to cooperate, support and contribute to preparations for the Conference.

Resolution 34/203 was adopted without vote; it had been similarly approved on 5 December by the Second Committee. The text was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a draft resolution, introduced first in the plenary Assembly by India on behalf of the Group of 77 and referred to the Second Committee for consideration. The Group's draft was withdrawn in favour of the new text.

A provision of the Group's draft not included in the adopted text would have had the Assembly request the Secretary-General to explore ways and means of providing assistance for travel and per diem expenses, as necessary, to enable delegations of the least developed countries to participate in the Preparatory Committee's meetings. After informal consultations, this text became the basis for a separate decision on participation in the meetings of the Preparatory Committee (see below), submitted by the Vice-Chairman. Also, the request that the Preparatory Committee consider any additional studies necessary for the Conference had not appeared in the Group's text.

Speaking in the Second Committee, the United States said it was regrettable that the paragraph in dispute had been removed and made into a separate text to be voted on, thereby setting a dangerous precedent in order to achieve a nominal consensus.

India explained that the two drafts had not been submitted as proposals of the Group of 77 but as the product of informal negotiations in which all countries had taken part; this was a practical means of overcoming the deadlocked negotiations.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of seven other Eastern European countries and Mongolia, reaffirmed their view that the difficulties of developing countries were a consequence of the exploitation and inequity inherent in capitalist economic relations, for which the Eastern European countries were in no way responsible. Those countries felt that the Conference should not occasion additional regular budget appropriations but should be financed from existing resources, from savings achieved by eliminating duplication and rationalizing the Organization's operations, and from voluntary contributions.

On 5 December, the Second Committee approved, by 106 votes to 10, the decision submitted by the Vice-Chairman concerning participation in the Conference. On 19 December, the Assembly adopted the text, by a recorded vote of 129 to 9, as decision 34/449. The Assembly thereby decided to request the Secretary-General to explore ways and means of providing assistance, in particular through extrabudgetary resources, for travel and per diem expenses, as necessary, to enable delegations of the least developed countries to participate in the Preparatory Committee's meetings.

Australia, Canada, Ireland (on behalf of the member States of EEC), Japan, New Zealand, Spain, Sweden and the United States, notwithstanding their positive votes, voiced their concern that the decision and the procedure utilized should not create a precedent and hoped that the Secretary-General would do his utmost to secure extrabudgetary funds.

Bulgaria, speaking on behalf of the eight Eastern European States and Mongolia, said those countries had voted against the decision because they disagreed with financing from the regular budget the costs of governmental participation in United Nations conferences, which could lead to rampant increases in the budget.

Immediate measures in favour of the most seriously affected countries

On 19 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/217, by which it noted with deep concern the deterioration of the economic and financial situation of those developing countries which, given their low per capita income as a reflection of relative poverty, low productivity and low level of technology and development, merited consideration as most seriously affected by the current economic crisis caused by sharp increases in the prices of their essential imports. The Assembly further noted with concern that the special programme launched at its 1974 special session to provide emergency relief and development assistance to those countries³⁹ remained largely unfulfilled.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the appropriate United Nations organs, organizations and bodies, to submit a preliminary report in 1980 on the situation of the most seriously affected countries to the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 40 and to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy, and to include a final report in the analytical report to the Assembly's 1980 special session. The Assembly called upon all donor countries to consider extending relief and assistance to these countries, including, inter alia: financial assistance on grant or highly concessional terms in the context of commitments entered into at the 1979 session of UNCTAD; application of conclusions approved-adjustment in the terms of past ODA-under Trade and Development Board resolution 165 (S-IX); ⁴¹ financial assistance to meet food and agricultural development requirements; and transferring a due share of resources to industrialization efforts.

The Assembly also noted IMF interest and actions in efforts to ease the debt burden of developing countries, and invited the multilateral development and financial institutions to give special attention to development and balance-of-payments needs of countries most seriously affected by the current economic crisis. The World Bank and IMF were invited to continue to consider proposals in the Outline for a Programme of Action on International Monetary Reform adopted by the Group of 77 in September 1979 (see p. 485).

Resolution 34/217 was adopted by the Assembly without vote; it had been similarly approved on 14 December by the Second Committee. The text was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman on the basis of informal consultations on a draft introduced first in the plenary Assembly by India, on behalf of the Group of 77, and referred to the Second Committee for consideration. The Group's draft was withdrawn in favour of the new text.

By a preambular provision of the Group's draft not contained in the adopted text, the Assembly would have noted with regret that the emergency measures and the special programme launched at its 1974 special session to mitigate the difficulties of the most seriously affected developing countries were not implemented and that the United Nations Special Fund (see subsection below) had not come into operation through lack of contributions.

Also omitted from the resolution was a preambular paragraph which would have had the Assembly express profound concern at the decline in the per capita availability of food in the most seriously affected countries owing to extremely low growth in their food and agriculture sector.

By the operative part of the Group's draft, which was extensively recast, the Assembly would have recommended a number of immediate measures to meet the balance-of-payments and development needs of the most seriously affected countries, such as: immediate highly concessional resource-flow increases with a view to doubling ODA by 1981; increasing SDRS and linking them to development assistance, liberalizing access to the IMF Compensatory Financing Facility and Trust Fund, setting up a mid-term balance-of-payments facility with an interest subsidy account, softening IMF conditionality and adjusting interest rates and repayment periods; urgently implementing commitments to enable obtainment of an estimated 1 million tons of plant nutrients annually; and special measures by developed countries and international development and financial institutions to: (a) provide financial aid on grant or soft terms to meet food and agricultural development requirements, including a food facility in IMF; (b) provide, on favourable terms, capital goods and technical assistance to accelerate developing countries' industrialization, including a longterm facility in the World Bank for those countries with an interest subsidy account for the most seriously affected countries; (c) increase investment in industrial and development projects on favourable terms through such measures as interest subsidy mechanisms and guarantees; and (d) provide bilateral or multilateral subsidies to cover interest payments on funds borrowed on commercial terms.

The Group's draft also requested the World Bank and IMF to expedite implementation of the immediate measures addressed to them and called upon all donor countries to implement urgently the immediate measures within the resolution's time frame.

After approval of the draft, Turkey said there was not always a direct correlation between the level of per capita income and the degree to which the effects of the world economic crisis were experienced by developing countries. Owing to the semi-developed nature of their economies, some middle-income developing countries were equally, if not more, affected by the crisis.

United Nations Special Fund

On 14 December 1979, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted, without vote, decision 34/430 on the United Nations Special Fund.

By this decision, the Assembly, recalling its decision of 19 December 1978⁴² by which it had decided to suspend the activities of the Special Fund, ad interim, and to perform the functions of its Board of Governors, decided to continue to perform those functions within the context of its consideration of the item on development and international economic co-operation, pending its consideration of the question at its 1981 session.

The Second Committee had approved the text, also without vote, on 1 December, as proposed by its Chairman.

In a related action, also on 14 December, the Assembly, by decision 34/315, decided that, as a result of its decision to perform the functions of the Fund's Board of Governors, there was currently no need to elect Board members. Decision 34/315 was adopted, without vote, as orally proposed by the Assembly President.

Action related to needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

Measures in favour of land-locked developing countries

At its July/August 1979 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it the text of resolution 123(V), adopted by UNCTAD at its May/ June session, on specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries.

By this resolution, UNCTAD urged full implementation by the international community of the special measures in favour of land-locked developing countries envisaged in its resolution 63(III) of 19 May 1972⁴³ and in the section of its resolution 98(IV) of 31 May 1976 dealing with land-locked developing countries.44 It agreed that action for the particular needs and problems relating to those countries was needed in such areas as: the flow of external resources; cooperation between land-locked and transit countries; an integrated planning approach; integrated regional and subregional transport planning; priority areas for action and assistance; restructuring and diversification of their economies; the United Nations Special Fund for Landlocked Developing Countries; and an outline for further action. The Secretary-General of unctad was requested to continue unctad's related work programme. (See also p. 569.)

On 1 August, the -Council adopted decision 1979/51, without vote, on an oral proposal by its President. By this decision, the Council took note of a note by the Secretariat which had transmitted the UNCTAD resolution to the Council and decided to transmit it to the Assembly's 1979 regular session.

On 19 December, the Assembly, by resolution 34/196, endorsed UNCTAD resolution 123(V). (For details, see p. 574; for page reference to text of resolution 34/196, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

 ⁴² See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 425, decision 33/431.
 ⁴³ See Y.U.N., 1972, p. 280.
 ⁴⁴ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 399.

Also on 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/198, by which it recalled its previous resolutions with respect to the exercise of the right of land-locked developing countries to free access to and from the sea as well as their right to freedom of transit⁴⁵ and reaffirmed those rights. The Assembly called for urgent implementation of unctad's and other United Nations resolutions envisaging specific actions related to these countries' particular needs and problems. Commending aid and work provided, it noted with regret that assistance had fallen far short of these countries' needs and urged all donor countries and international organizations to provide financial assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, improvement and maintenance of their transport and transit infrastructures and facilities. The Assembly invited UNDP and the financial institutions of the United Nations system to provide additional resources, and invited the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to take fully into account, in formulating the new strategy, the special problems of land-locked developing countries. It also invited the international community to give financial support to interested transit and land-locked developing countries in construction of alternative routes to the sea. The Assembly recommended increased study activities and implementation of special actions and action programmes at the regional and subregional levels, in co-operation with the regional commissions.

Resolution 34/198, as recommended by the Second Committee, was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 9 abstentions. On 13 December, the Second Committee had approved the text by a recorded vote, requested by Pakistan, of 111 to 0, with 7 abstentions. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Mongolia, Nepal, the Niger, Rwanda, Swaziland, Uganda, the Upper Volta and Zambia.

The text was orally amended by the sponsors to delete a phrase containing a request that the land-locked countries be provided with increased resources to meet their needs-a point covered elsewhere in the text.

Egypt orally proposed, but subsequently withdrew, amendments to the last preambular and first operative paragraphs - respectively recalling previous United Nations resolutions on the rights of free access to and from the sea and freedom of transit and reaffirming those rights- which would have taken account of and made their terms conditional on developments in the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea.

At the request of Pakistan and other States, the Second Committee took separate recorded votes on these paragraphs. The preambular paragraph was approved by 51 votes to 3, with 60 abstentions; the first operative paragraph was approved by 46 votes to 5, with 60 abstentions. In the Assembly, separate recorded votes were also requested on these paragraphs. Both were adopted-the preambular paragraph by 66 votes to 1, with 54 abstentions, and the operative paragraph by 57 votes to 5, with 59 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Committee, India and Pakistan said they opposed the paragraphs on which separate votes had been taken and had abstained in the vote on the resolution as a whole because they did not agree that land-locked countries had unqualified rights to and from the sea and to freedom of transit, since that would infringe the sovereignty of transit countries. Afghanistan, Brazil, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Peru, Sri Lanka and Uruguay said that their positive votes should not be interpreted as prejudging the outcome of the Law of the Sea Conference.

Explaining their abstentions in the separate votes on the paragraphs, Ecuador, Egypt and the United Republic of Cameroon were among those which said they felt that the Law of the Sea Conference was the proper forum for the question's consideration. Nigeria, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Viet Nam added that the question dealt with in these paragraphs should be settled at the bilateral or subregional level. Bangladesh supported the paragraphs on the understanding that they would be subject to agreements on matters of transit. The USSR considered the rights under discussion as legitimate.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the States members of EEC, which had voted in favour of the draft as a whole, said that the reservations previously expressed with regard to their intention of directing assistance to the land-locked developing countries through other existing bilateral and multilateral channels still stood.

United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

The Governing Council Of UNDP, at its June/July 1979 session, considered an April report of the UNDP Administrator on the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, managed on an interim basis by the Administrator in collaboration with the Secretary-General of UNCTAD. The Fund was established by the General Assembly in 1975 ⁴⁶ and its statute approved in 1976 ⁴⁷ to help land-locked developing countries overcome transport and communication problems which severely limited their trade and growth potentials. The year 1979 marked the first year of full-scale operational activities of the Fund, for which the main problem remained the low level of available resources.

The Administrator's report covered projects approved as at 28 February 1979. In addition, projects were approved during 1979 for: rehabilitation of transit warehouses in Afghanistan; a feasibility study on a national airline in Botswana, and training of civil aviation personnel in Swaziland, carried out by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO); improvement by the Government of transit services in the Lao People's Democratic Republic; and establishment of a shippers' council in Malawi, appointment of a special adviser in trade planning in Mali, improvement of air freight handling equipment in Rwanda, and provision of storage facilities in Zambia, all to be executed by UNCTAD. A ropeway feasibility study in Bhutan was completed during the year.

Commitments against the Fund as at February 1980 totalled $577,800, of which $61,700 represented executing agency support costs.

On 26 June 1979, the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report and reiterated its appeal to Governments and international organizations to contribute generously to the Fund.

On 2 August, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Administrator's report, among others, when it adopted decision 1979/56, as recommended by its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee which had approved the text on 27 July on an oral proposal of its Chairman. The General Assembly took similar action on 14 December in adopting decision 34/429, approved on 1 December by its Second Committee on an oral proposal of its Chairman. These decisions were all taken without vote.

Earlier, on 3 June, UNCTAD, in adopting resolution 123(V) (see p. 569), had urged the international community to contribute generously to the Fund's operations, welcomed UNDP's growing support, endorsed the interim management arrangements, and emphasized the need for equitable distribution of the Fund's meagre resources, with attention to the special needs of the least developed of the land-locked countries.

These actions were brought to the Assembly's attention at its 1979 regular session by the Secretary-General. On 19 December, by resolution 34/209, the Assembly took note of both the UNCTAD resolution and the Governing Council's decision, expressed appreciation for the measures taken by the UNDP Administrator to identify projects which could be financed from the Fund and asked him, in consultation with the executive heads of related institutions, to pursue action in favour of the land-locked countries, within the framework of the interim arrangements. The Assembly expressed disappointment at the very low level of contributions to the Fund for 1979 and urged all Governments, particularly those of developed countries, to review their position towards the Fund and to contribute generously to it.

Resolution 34/209 was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 20 abstentions. The draft, proposed by India on behalf of the Group of 77 Member States, was first introduced in the plenary Assembly and referred to the Second Committee for consideration where, on 11 December, it was approved by 94 votes to 0, with 17 abstentions.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Ireland, on behalf of the States members of EEC, and the United States, while recognizing the right of any country to contribute to the Special Fund, said they had abstained in the voting because of their policies of providing assistance to land-locked developing countries through other bilateral and multilateral channels.

On 14 December, the Assembly decided to defer to its 1980 regular session the election of members of the Board of Governors of the Fund, since no candidate had been put forward by the regional groups. This text was adopted without objection as decision 34/316. In a related action, on 20 December, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 34/247, by which it took note of the information contained in the note by the Secretary-General stating that, in view of the continuing interim arrangements for the management of the Fund, no appointment for the post of its Executive Director would currently be submitted for confirmation by the Assembly. The texts of both decisions were orally proposed by the Assembly President.

PLEDGING CONFERENCE

Contributions pledged by 11 Governments to the Special Fund for 1980 at the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held at United Nations Headquarters on 6 November, and subsequent pledges totalled $27,367 as at 30 June 1980 (for details, see p. 558).

⁴⁶ See Y.U.N., 1975, p. 387, resolution 3504(XXX) of 15 December 1975.

⁴⁷ See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 355, resolution 31/177 of 21 December 1976, annexing text of statute.

As at 31 December 1979, total voluntary contributions to the Fund (including pledges for 1980) amounted to $759,600, of which $672,100 had been received.

Action programme in favour of developing island countries

At its May/June 1979 session, UNCTAD adopted resolution 111 (V) urging specific action related to the particular needs and problems of island developing countries in such fields as: diversification of their economies; market accessibility; international community aid, such as investment in infrastructure, education and training programmes, joint ventures and strengthening negotiating capacity; subsidies for feeder and interisland transport; natural and non-natural disaster prevention and mitigation; simplification of assistance procedures; full utilization and sharing of specialized aid; co-operation arrangements; assistance for participation in international conferences; and increased use of facilities by international transport.

The Secretary-General of unctad was requested to continue the work programme contained in its resolution 98(IV)48 and UNCTAD decided to carry out studies for Government follow-up action of common problems and development constraints of island economies. With assistance from UNCTAD and regional institutions, ICAO was invited to study and support efforts to improve air transport policies in view of the importance of tourism for some of these countries. Donors were requested to increase assistance to island developing countries, including support for UNCTAD's technical and advisory services. The Secretary-General of unctad was invited to consult States members and development institutions about implementing recommendations of a Group of Experts on Feeder and Inter-Island Services by Air or Sea for Island Developing Countries, which had met in October 1977. The Expert Group had stressed the inevitability of subsidizing inter-island transport links with smaller outer islands in many cases, and urged international technical assistance for studying the forms such a subsidy might take and sources for subsidy funds. It also recommended that a series of regional seminars on the transport and trade aspects of outer-island policy be organized and made further recommendations on methods of aid management and delivery. (See also p. 569.)

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 19 December 1977,⁴⁹ the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in 1979 a report on the United Nations action programme in favour of developing island countries. The report contained information on assistance being provided or proposed by the United Nations system and intergovernmental organizations. Twelve Governments - Australia, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Iceland, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Singapore and Sweden - provided information on bilateral aid and one island developing country, Mauritius, also reported.

On 19 December, the Assembly 'adopted resolution 34/205, by which it welcomed UNCTAD resolution 111 (V) and called upon the international community to implement urgently the actions envisaged therein and in UNCTAD resolution 98(IV). After taking note of the Secretary-General's report, the Assembly called upon the international community to ensure that the criteria, terms and conditions governing the flow of bilateral and multilateral financial and technical assistance to developing island countries were geared to their special needs and problems, invited competent organs of the United Nations system to consider steps to enhance their capacity to respond positively to those needs at all levels-for example by strengthening their technical and advisory services-and requested UNDP and invited international development institutions and bilateral institutions to consider increasing assistance to those countries.

The Assembly recommended that developed countries, international development institutions and developing countries which were elaborating assistance programmes in favour of other developing countries give particular attention to requests for assistance from developing island countries. It invited the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to take fully into account, in formulating the new strategy, the particular needs and problems of these countries, and called upon the regional commissions urgently to identify action in favour of them in their respective regions, while inviting UNDP and other competent institutions to co-operate with UNCTAD in the studies of problems and development constraints of island economies envisaged in UNCTAD resolution

The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to include an assessment of the situation in the developing island countries in his analytical report to the Assembly at its 1980 special session.

Resolution 34/205 was adopted by the Assembly without vote; it had similarly been approved on 8 December by the Second Committee. The text was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman after amendment and on the basis of informal consultations on a draft introduced first in the plenary Assembly by India, on behalf of the Group of 77, and referred to the Second Committee for consideration. The Group's draft was subsequently withdrawn.

Ireland orally amended the paragraph inviting enhancement of response capacity to island countries' needs to reflect what it said was the consensus reached in the informal consultations.

The text adopted differed from the Group's earlier draft in taking note of the Secretary-General's report and in requesting donors to consider increasing, rather than to increase, their assistance to developing island countries. The provision calling for assistance to be geared to island developing countries' special needs was recast from a text calling on the international community to ensure that the criteria adopted for granting financial and technical assistance to developing countries fully took into account the particular needs and problems of these countries. Deleted from the Group's original draft was a call for a review of the current resolution's implementation.

Assistance to Grenada

On 14 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/118, by which it stressed the urgency of assisting Grenada to develop and strengthen its economy. It requested the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, including in particular UNDP, international financial institutions and aid donors to intensify their assistance to Grenada. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular that of the developed countries and the system's organizations, to help meet Grenada's short- and long-term development needs and to report on progress to the Assembly's 1981 session.

Resolution 34/118 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had similarly approved the text on 21 November. It was sponsored by Barbados, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Guyana, Jamaica, Madagascar, Mali, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela and Viet Nam.

Assistance to Tonga

By resolution 117(V), adopted at its May/June 1979 session, UNCTAD recommended that Tonga be included in the category of least developed countries, requested the Secretary-General to inform the international community of the situation in Tonga and urgently appealed to Member States to, provide assistance to that country.

On 14 December 1979, the General Assembly

drew the international community's attention to the special problems confronting Tonga as a developing island country with a small population, and called upon Member States to consider granting Tonga for the remainder of the Second United Nations Development Decade the special assistance and benefits accorded to least developed countries and to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Tonga in their programmes of development assistance. The Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to consider including Tonga, in the light of up-to-date data, in the new list of least developed countries, to be drawn up for the third United Nations development decade, and appealed to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide assistance to enable Tonga to establish the social and economic infrastructure essential for the well-being of its people.

The Assembly invited bodies within the United Nations system: to bring to the attention of their governing bodies the special needs of Tonga and to report their decisions to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1980; to cooperate closely with him in organizing international assistance; and to report periodically to him. He was requested: to mobilize resources for an assistance programme for Tonga; to establish a special account under the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes for the channelling of contributions to the country -to which Member States were urged to contribute generously; to keep the situation in Tonga under review; to apprise the Economic and Social Council of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Tonga; and to review progress for consideration by the Assembly in 1980.

These decisions were incorporated into resolution 34/132, which was adopted by the Assembly, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee. The text, sponsored by Australia, Barbados, Botswana, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, the Ivory Coast, Madagascar, Mali, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa and the Syrian Arab Republic, had been approved by the Second Committee on 23 November, also without vote.

The Federal Republic of Germany was among those in the Second Committee which expressed reservations on extending special assistance to countries not on the list of least developed countries. Denmark-speaking also on behalf of Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden-and France voiced similar views, adding that it was for the Committee for Development Planning to determine the list's composition.

Assistance to other developing island countries

At its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly took a number of decisions concerning international aid to various other specific developing island countries. On 14 December, it adopted resolutions on assistance to Cape Verde (resolution 34/119, see p. 247), the Comoros (resolution 34/127, see p. 248), Sao Tome and Principe (resolution 34/131, see p. 250) and Seychelles (resolution 34/126, see p. 251). Resolution 34/194, on assistance to Antigua, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent, was adopted on 19 December (see p. 1053).

Debt problems of developing countries

At its tenth special session, held at Geneva in March 1979, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD examined the report of the October 1978 meetings of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Debt and Development Problems of Developing Countries, 50 and transmitted it to UNCTAD's fifth session for consideration. By a decision of 3 June 1979, UNCTAD decided to remit the item, together with a draft resolution on the subject submitted by Cuba on behalf of the States members of UNCTAD belonging to the Group of 77, to its permanent machinery.

On 20 October, at the first part of its nineteenth session, the Trade and Development Board, having considered the item without reaching a conclusion, remitted the item to its March 1980 session.

Effects of world inflation on the development process

On 19 December, at its thirty-fourth (1979) session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/197, on the effects of the world inflationary phenomenon on the development process. Recognizing the ways that current inflation seriously affected developing countries' economies, and affirming the need for inflation control measures, the Assembly asked the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board to discuss ways to combat the phenomenon.

Role of the public sector in promoting economic development

Responding to General Assembly resolutions of 19 December 1977⁵¹ and 20 December 1978,⁵² and an Economic and Social Council resolution of 3 August 1978,⁵³ the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Council in May 1979 on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries.

The report took into account information received from 21 Governments as well as from organizations within the United Nations system. Information in the section on public administration, finance and management was drawn largely from parallel work being done under Council resolutions on that subject of 4 May⁵⁴ and 8 November 1978.⁵⁵

The report brought out approaches, policies and measures used by the public sector, and the results achieved, in realizing national objectives in different spheres of socio-economic development and noted that the public sector's role in national development, which continued to grow in scope and importance in developing countries, had been influenced considerably by external factors and random internal changes. According to the report, for the public sector to become more effective in national development, international and national action would be required. Examples of the former included major issues subject to international economic agreements, such as trade, international finance, science and technology for development, and availability of other resources. The report stated that measures needed at the national level to strengthen the public sector's role included: improvement of the performance of public enterprises- the main instruments of the sector; strengthening the substantive and managerial capabilities of financial institutions; and devising new organizational arrangements to meet the needs of changing objectives and opportunities for development. The report noted that managerial capabilities of the public sector often received low priority, but were the most important elements in the sector's effectiveness. The report identified the substantive and managerial issues at the national level, where action was urgently needed.

At its second regular session of 1979, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the General Assembly review the report in order to determine which aspects of the role of the public sector required further in-depth study. The Council requested the Secretary-General to submit a further progress report to the Council's 1981 second regular session giving consideration to changes occurring in the overall roles and modalities of the public sector as a result of new perceptions and priorities regarding development, including implementation of the international development strategy for the 1980s and the experience of different countries. The Council also invited organizations within the United Nations system to give attention in their studies to aspects of the role of the public sector in promoting the economic and social development of the developing countries.

These decisions were provisions of resolution 1979/48, proposed by Algeria, Cuba, India, Iraq, Mongolia, Morocco, Pakistan, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda and Yugoslavia, and orally revised following consultations.

After the text had been revised by the sponsors, Ireland, on behalf of EEC member States, suggested two amendments to which the sponsors agreed. The first added a preambular paragraph by which the Council bore in mind that every State had the sovereign and inalienable right to choose its economic and social system in accordance with the will of its people, without outside interference. By the second, in his next report the Secretary-General was asked to give consideration, rather than special consideration, to changes in the roles and modalities of the public sector. The sponsors also accepted a change, suggested by the Secretariat, to a provision recommending that the progress reports requested by the Assembly in a 1977 resolution on this subject⁵⁶ be prepared and submitted as from 1981. Inasmuch as the reports envisaged in that resolution had already been submitted, the request for a report in 1981 was made without reference to the 1977 resolution.

With these amendments, resolution 1979/48 was adopted by consensus on 31 July 1979.

In a statement to the Council endorsed by the United Kingdom and the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany said it feared the public sector's role in promoting national development was being unduly emphasized and hoped that detailed consideration would be given in any study to that sector's limitations as compared with the private sector, so that a fair balance between the two systems could be established. The USSR maintained that the public sector did not have the disadvantages of a market economy and hoped that the essential nature of the public sector in third-world development would be brought out.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/137, by which it endorsed Council resolution 1979/48 and invited the Secretary-General to continue his detailed study of the role of the public sector and to submit, through the Council, a comprehensive report to the Assembly in 1983, paying special attention to: (a) the public sector's role in mobilizing national resources for social and economic development, its role as a lever for introducing national development plans and establishing social and economic development priorities, and its role in relation to other sectors of economic activity; (b) the role of public enterprises as the public sector's main instruments and ways of increasing their efficacy; and (c) ways and means of strengthening the public sector, including its institutional and managerial capabilities, as a possible basis for developing national and international measures, and of facilitating an exchange of experience and information among developing countries.

The Assembly invited UNDP and other organizations to give, within the context of national development systems and priorities, due consideration to technical co-operation projects for strengthening the role of the public sector and improving the performance of public enterprises. The regional commissions were invited to examine in detail the sector's role in promoting the economic development of the developing countries of their respective regions, giving particular attention to aspects, noted in the Assembly's 1977 resolution on the public sector, which had been examined in the Secretary-General's May 1979 report. The Assembly also reaffirmed a 1978 Council resolution⁵⁷ by which the Council had invited regional commissions and other United Nations organizations to assist the Secretary-General in preparing further studies on this topic.

Resolution 34/137, recommended by the Second Committee, was adopted without vote. On 28 November, the Committee had approved the text, also without vote, as sponsored by 31 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Following approval of the resolution, the United States said it questioned the value of repetitive resolutions and studies on this subject, and again emphasized that the role of the private sector in development should not be overlooked.

Public administration and finance for development

As part of the realignment of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development,⁵⁸ the Divison of Development Administration was created to assist developing countries to improve their public administration and finance systems, population programmes, and other aspects of institutional infrastructure and human resources development. The Division was divided into two principal programmes, dealing with public administration and finance, and population. The Division's functions included studies of changes and trends, development administration problems, and dissemination of information on courses of action through handbooks, technical guidelines and similar publications and also through seminars, workshops and other forms of training courses.

⁵⁷ See footnote 53.

During 1979, the Division assisted in organizing: the Fourth United Nations International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions' Interregional Seminar on Government Auditing, at Vienna from 14 to 25 May; an Expert Group Meeting on Institution-Building for Management Development, at Bangkok, Thailand, from 11 to 15 June; an International Seminar on Joint Ventures and Public Enterprises in Developing Countries, at Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, from 4 to 12 December; and a meeting of an ad hoc Expert Group on Methodologies of Policy Analysis and Development, at New York, from 17 to 21 December.

Expenditure on technical co-operation projects during the year totalled $12,739,700, and 174 experts provided guidance in administrative reform and management improvement, government budgeting and financial management, tax administration, public enterprises management, personnel administration and training, information management and computer use in public administration.

At its July/August 1979 session, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1979/47 on public accounting and auditing for national development. By this resolution, the Council requested the Secretary-General to convene a workshop on public accounting and auditing to review generally accepted accounting principles and modern auditing techniques particularly suitable for the needs of developing countries, and to study, in the light of the results of the workshop, the feasibility of organizing training activities at the national, regional and interregional levels, in order to support national efforts to improve accounting and auditing systems. The Council requested UNDP and other organizations in the United Nations system to give, within the context of national development priorities, due consideration to technical cooperation projects in public accounting and auditing.

Resolution 1979/47, introduced by the Ivory Coast on behalf of member States of the Council belonging to the Group of 77, was adopted without vote on 31 July.

Agrarian reform and rural development

Co-ordination of action in the field of rural development

Following its consideration of rural development at its February/March 1979 session, the Commission for Social Development took note of three reports and a note by the Secretary-General on various aspects of agrarian reform and rural development (see p. 783):

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) in 1979 reviewed a report by ACC on interagency action in rural development and requested that further progress in this field be reported to CPC's 1980 session. The report described progress by ACC's Task Force on Rural Development -a body composed of all United Nations organizations concerned with rural development-in joint action at the country level, monitoring and evaluation, and harmonization of programme proposals. The encouraging progress made in these areas, in ACC'S view, justified continuation of interagency effort and its widening to include additional countries.

On 3 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1979/67, by which it took note of AAC's report and requested it to continue the joint planning exercise on rural development, through its consultative committees, to report to the Council's second regular 1980 session and to provide a table of costs of the exercise. (For details, see p. 971.)

On the same day, in a related action, the Council adopted resolution 1979/70 on follow-up action to the Action Plan on integrated water resources development and management, adopted by the United Nations Water Conference at Mar del Plata, Argentina, in March 1977.⁵⁹ By the third section of this resolution, on agricultural water use, the Council urged Governments to establish a reporting mechanism for their agricultural water development programmes in accordance with the Action Programme on Water for Agriculture adopted by the Water Conference,60 and to report regularly to regional and global intergovernmental bodies on training and research facilities for current and planned irrigation, drainage, and land and water conservation programmes. Organizations were requested to intensify work and studies and training programmes on soil/water/plant relations and irrigation methods, as well as studies on institutional and economic obstacles to the productivity increases of irrigated agriculture. (For details, see p. 673.)

and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), met at Rome from 12 to 20 July 1979 and was attended by representatives of 145 countries, three liberation movements, 21 United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, 20 intergovernmental bodies and 39 nongovernmental organizations. The United Nations Secretary-General also sent a special representative. The Conference adopted by acclamation—with reservations by some countries on certain provisions— a Declaration of Principles, a Programme of Action and a resolution on the follow-up of the Conference.

By the Declaration of Principles, the Conference stated that a programme of action on agrarian reform and rural development should be founded on guidelines and principles which included: recognition that the fundamental purpose of development was individual and social betterment, development of endogenous capabilities and improvement of the living standards of all people, especially the rural poor; every State's right to exercise full and permanent sovereignty over its natural resources and economic activities; use of foreign investments in accordance with national priorities; redistribution of national economic and political power, and fuller integration of rural areas into national development; application of appropriate population policies; mobilization of domestic resources; incentives for increased investment and production; equitable distribution and ecologically balanced and efficient use of land, water and other productive resources; diversification of rural economic activities; mutually reinforcing links between agriculture and industrial development; participation of all rural people, including women and youth, in policymaking; efficient communications to improve understanding and awareness of problems at all levels; constant vigilance to ensure nonrecurrence of past concentration of resources in private hands or emergence of new forms of instrengthening of international cooperation and increasing flows of financial and technical resources; intensifying efforts by Governments to ensure world food security, overcome inequities and stabilize agricultural commodity trade; and strengthening technical co-operation and collective self-reliance among developing countries.

By the Programme of Action, the Conference recommended national and international measures aimed at transforming rural life in all its economic, social, cultural, institutional, environmental and human aspects. At the national level, developing countries should consider action to eradicate poverty, aim at equitable growth, redistribute economic and political power, and increase people's participation. Specifically, those countries should implement programmes concerning rural institutions, the removal of constraints preventing a wide access to natural resources for the vast majority of the rural masses, the active involvement and organization of rural people at the grass-roots level, the integration of women in the rural development process, greater productivity and equity, the development of non-farm rural activities, and the expansion of education, training and extension services.

After adding that these national programmes and policies should be helped by further improvements in international economic relations, the Conference stressed that achievement of a new international economic order was essential to the success of national rural development efforts. Such changes should be designed to overcome protectionist policies, distortions in international markets for production inputs and technology, inadequate technical co-operation and insufficient resource flows. In addition, the Conference called upon the developing countries to improve trade relations and encourage cooperation in agricultural technology, institutional reforms and rural development planning. It also recommended national and international action to bring foreign investment and activities of transnational corporations more in line with the goals of rural development, and invited donor countries and international lending agencies to devote more resources to rural development. The Conference also invited international organizations, with FAO as the lead agency, to monitor agrarian reform and rural development, analyse and disseminate information, expand technical assistance activities, and assist in mobilizing resources.

By its resolution on follow-up action, the Conference called upon FAO to implement and assist member countries in implementing the Programme of Action. It invited the governing bodies of United Nations and other specialized agencies to consider providing resources for complementary action and to prepare, in conjunction with FAO, programmes and activities which might be financed from extrabudgetary resources. The Conference also expressed the hope that financing institutions and other sources of funds would increase their support for agrarian reform and rural development.

On 31 July 1979, the Economic and Social Council heard a statement by the Secretary-General of the Conference, who called for vigorous governmental action and co-operation from the international community to implement the Programme of Action. The Netherlands said it regretted that the resolution on follow-up action to the Conference stressed FAO's role more than that of other organizations, as it felt both the Council's and ACC's co-ordinating roles were important in this respect.

On the same day, the Council adopted decision 1979/50 without vote, as orally proposed by its President. By this decision, the Council took note with satisfaction of the Secretary-General's statement and of those made by Council members, and invited the Director-General of FAO to submit the report of the World Conference to the General Assembly and the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy.

On 9 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/14, by which it endorsed the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action of the World Conference, and urged Member States and invited organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to implement the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

Resolution 34/14, as recommended by the Second Committee, was adopted without vote by the Assembly. The text, sponsored by 38 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved, also without vote, by the Committee on 16 October.

Following approval of the resolution in the Second Committee, the USSR referred to the Conference resolution on follow-up action by which' the governing bodies of United Nations and other specialized agencies were invited to provide resources for complementary action. The USSR believed that the Secretariat should draw those resources from previously approved allocations. The Ukrainian SSR, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the USSR, reaffirmed their position taken at the Conference that the Declaration and Programme did not take sufficient account of real development needs and possibilities; for instance they did not fully reflect the importance of eliminating big private landholdings and exploitation of rural populations by land-owners, money-lenders traders and foreign monopolies, and did not properly express the way for implementation of progressive agrarian transformations in the interests of the working class.

Brazil, also reiterating reservations made at the Conference, felt the concepts in the Declaration and Programme were too broad to be applied in their entirety, and had joined the consensus on the understanding that every country was free to take account of its own priorities when considering international recommendations. France, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States also pointed out that they had registered reservations at the Conference, as did Ireland, on behalf of the member States of the European Community.

Argentina said that, had the text of resolution 34/14 been put to a vote, it would have abstained because of serious reservations with regard to the assertion that agrarian reform was a critical component of rural development.

The United States said that a major omission in the resolution was the failure to address the problem of co-ordination within the United Nations system. France also stressed the need for co-ordination and added that special programmes should be financed from existing resources. Japan's reservations concerned reference in the Programme of Action to trade negotiations.

Resolution 34/189, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/778, adopted without vote by Assembly on 18 December 1979, meeting 108.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States.

Recalling also its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic cooperation, in which it, inter alia, called for an increased, predictable, continuous and increasingly assured flow of concessional financial resources for development on more favourable terms and conditions,

Recalling further its resolutions 3489(XXX) of 12 December 1975, 31/174 of 21 December 1976, 32/181 of 19 December 1977 and 33/136 of 19 December 1978 on the acceleration of the transfer of real resources to developing countries,

Recalling also resolution 129(V), adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session, held at Manila from 7 May to 3 June 1979,

Deeply concerned at the fact that the recent performance of the developed countries, taken as a group, with respect to the 0.7 per cent target of official development assistance has not increased substantially despite repeated commitments to increase progressively and substantially their official development assistance,

Noting with satisfaction that a few developed countries have attained and in some cases exceeded the target of 0.7 per cent.

Convinced of the urgent necessity of a considerable and sustained increase in the transfer of real resources, both concessional and non-concessional, to developing countries and improved access of those countries to capital markets, in support of their development objectives and priorities,

Convinced also that such transfer of real resources to developing countries constitutes an important contribution to a balanced and equitable process of global economic development,

Bearing in mind that substantial consultations are needed to implement fully paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 33/136,

- 1. Takes note of the background report of the Secretary-General on increased transfer of real resources, prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
- 2. Endorses the agreed conclusions on the transfer of resources in real terms to developing countries reached on 31 January 1979 by the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174;
- 3. Endorses the decisions and recommendations contained in resolution 129(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
- 4. Affirms, in this connexion, the importance of the question of a review of the present system of international financial co-operation in the context of world trade and development and consideration of ways and means in this context to make it more effective in contributing to the development of developing countries, which is now on the agenda, inter alia, of the ninth session of the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade, urges all States members of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to consider actively this question with a view to reaching satisfactory decisions, taking into account, inter alia, the proposals of the Group of Seventy-seven, and requests the Trade and Development Board to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on progress made on this question;
- 5. Urges that steps should be taken for the full and expeditious implementation of the recommendations made by the Development Committee at its 6th meeting, held at Manila on 3 October 1976, so as to facilitate access of developing countries to private capital markets and help overcome obstacles impeding access of developing countries to those markets, including any present administrative or institutional obstacles, and that capital market countries should consider establishing programmes to provide technical assistance to developing countries seeking access to private capital markets;

- 6. Calls upon all countries, in particular developed donor countries, and multilateral development institutions to implement on an urgent basis the agreed conclusions and the decisions and recommendations referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 above:
- 7. Requests the Secretary-General, with respect to his report on increased transfer of real resources, to engage in further and intensified consultations with Governments and within the United Nations system on the expansion of the volume of resource transfers to developing countries and to include the results of those consultations in his analytical report to the General Assembly at its special session in 1980 called for in Assembly resolution 33/198 of 29 January 1979.

Recalling further resolution 129(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting with concern the unprecedented widening of the gap between developing and developed countries, as a consequence of the continuing deterioration of the economic situation in the developing countries, made worse by the effects of the crisis which the present system of international economic relations is undergoing,

Taking note of the Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations, adopted by the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 12 to 16 February 1979, Convinced that the development of developing countries requires, inter alia, a massive transfer of financial resources as a vital contribution to their economic and social development.

Convinced also that a substantial increase in the financial and other flows for development, supporting the national priorities and plans of developing countries, will be a significant help in the effective restructuring of the world economy, with beneficial consequences for all countries,

Taking note of the Economic Declaration adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979.

Recalling also its resolution 33/193 of 29 January 1979 on the preparations for an international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade,

Welcoming the proposals formulated by heads of State or Government during the general debate of the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session for quickly and substantially improving the economic conditions which confront developing countries,

- 1. Reaffirms its resolution 33/193, in which it decided, inter alia, that the new international development strategy should address itself, among its priority objectives, to increasing substantially the flow of resources in real terms to the developing countries on a predictable, continuous and increasingly assured basis;
- 2. Refers, in this context, to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy consideration of all aspects of the proposal presented in this connexion to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session concerning the transfer to developing countries of an additional amount of $300 billion in the form of financial resources, material resources and technical assistance during the 1980-1990 decade, as a contribution to development, of which yearly commitments of at least $25 billion should be made during the early years of the third United Nations development decade:

 Agrees that the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy should consider the feasibility and the ways and means of implementing those proposals within the framework of the third United Nations development decade.

Resolution 34/202, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/676/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1979, meeting 109.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolutions 3177(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973, 3241(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3442(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 31/119 of 16 December 1976, 32/180 of 19 December 1977 and 33/195 of 29 January 1979, as well as resolution 127(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on economic cooperation among developing countries,

Recalling further the decisions taken by the Conference on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Mexico City from 13 to 22 September 1976,

Recalling the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and the resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, and reaffirming that technical co-operation is a basic instrument for the promotion of economic co-operation among developing countries,

Noting the decisions taken by the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 12 to 16 February 1979, and in particular the Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations,

Noting also the decisions taken by the non-aligned countries on economic co-operation among developing countries, particularly the Action Programme for Economic Co-operation, adopted at the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, and resolution 7 containing policy guidelines on the reinforcement of collective self-reliance between developing countries, adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Mindful that economic co-operation among developing countries is a key element in the strategy of collective self-reliance and an essential instrument for promoting structural changes contributing to a balanced and equitable process of global economic development, wherein the developing countries will enhance mutual economic co-operation in order to increase one another's capabilities and meet their development needs.

Recognizing that, while the efforts of the developing countries play a decisive role in achieving their development goals, however much the developing countries mobilize their own resources in the pursuit of their economic and social objectives it would not be possible for them to achieve such objectives without concomitant action on the part of developed countries and the institutions of the international community,

Reaffirming that the efforts of the developing countries to promote economic co-operation among themselves do not diminish the responsibilities of all other countries to establish a just and equitable system of international economic relations,

Recognizing that in the context of international economic co-operation the achievement of the goals of greater economic co-operation among developing countries will make an important contribution to the establishment of the new international economic order.

- 1. Welcomes the initiative of the developing countries in adopting, at the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of Seventy-seven, the First Short/Medium-Term Action Plan for Global Priorities on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, which is expected to make a significant contribution to the promotion of economic co-operation among developing countries;
- 2. Welcomes also the Action Programme for Economic Cooperation and the resolution containing policy guidelines on the reinforcement of collective self-reliance between developing countries, which are expected to make a significant contribution to furthering economic co-operation among developing countries;
- 3. - (b) Economic co-operation among developing countries, being a matter that chiefly concerns the developing countries, should be devised and implemented by them at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, and appropriate, concomitant support action on the part of the developed countries and organizations of the international community is needed to contribute to its implementation;
- 4. Urges all countries, in particular the developed countries, and international organizations to contribute fully to the implementation of the recommendations on economic cooperation among developing countries contained in resolution 127(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
- 5. - 6. Further urges the developed countries to contribute to the implementation of projects of economic co-operation among developing countries through the United Nations development system;
- 7. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to undertake, as a matter of priority, the necessary preparations for convening a special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, in particular taking measures

Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with established procedures and practices, to support measures of economic co-operation among developing countries, including—as requested—the continued provision of the necessary Secretariat support services and other suitable arrangements to facilitate the holding of meetings by the developing countries in pursuance of the objectives of economic co-operation among developing countries;
- 12. Requests the Secretary-General to include a review of developments regarding economic co-operation among developing countries, taking into account the implementation of the present resolution, in his analytical report to the General Assembly at its special session in 1980 on the implementation of the decisions taken regarding the establishment of the new international economic order called for in Assembly resolution 33/198 of 29 January 1979.

Resolution 34/210, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/676/Add.2, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1979, meeting 109.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/149 of 20 December 1978, in which it, inter alia, recommended that the developed countries, as well as the appropriate international organizations and financial institutions within the United Nations system, should implement the special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries, as recommended by the General Assembly and other related bodies of the United Nations,

Recalling also the special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in its resolutions 62(III) of 19 May 1972 and 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, as well as Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978,

Reiterating the decision taken by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in its resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979, to launch a Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries as one of its major priorities,

Noting that the first phase of that Programme calls for an immediate effort to meet the critical situation of the least developed countries in the form of an Immediate Action Programme, for 1979-1981, of greatly expanded assistance for the least developed countries, aimed at:

- (a) Providing an immediate boost to their economies and immediate support for projects for meeting the most pressing social needs.
- (b) Paving the way for comprehensive and much larger long-term development efforts,

Considering that the basic structural and economic problems facing the least developed countries are so severe that extraordinary additional measures, especially designed in the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries as an essential contribution to the establishment of the new international economic order, are required,

Considering also that the special measures thus far implemented in favour of the least developed countries have led on the whole only to relatively small and unsatisfactory results and that their growth rate in real terms of gross domestic product per capita has declined in the period 1970-1978,

Emphasizing the need for a greatly expanded transfer of official development assistance to the least developed countries, in the context of a general increase in official development assistance for all developing countries with a view to realizing the 0.7 per cent target,

Emphasizing further that external support should be forthcoming from developed countries, developing countries in a position to do so, multilateral development institutions and other sources.

- 1. Endorses the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries contained in resolution 122(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
- 2. Calls upon donor countries urgently to implement the commitments relating to official development assistance to the least developed countries undertaken by them in connexion with paragraph 13 of resolution 122(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
- 3. Calls upon donor countries to consider urgently, as a step towards the implementation of the Immediate Action Programme, how they should best provide assistance bilaterally or through appropriate multilateral channels, such as the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Development Programme Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries and the United Nations Capital Development Fund, in response to requests from the least developed countries for immediate additional financial support, as envisaged in paragraph 3 (c) of resolution 122(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in order to ensure that sufficient resources shall be provided to supplement the activities undertaken by the least developed countries themselves;
- 4. Notes that such additional assistance would be for 1980 and would in no way adversely affect the share of the least developed countries in the indicative planning figures of the United Nations Development Programme to be considered for the third programming cycle;
- 5. Requests the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which is to act as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to monitor progress under the Immediate Action Programme and, in particular, to invite donors, as well as the least developed countries to the extent of their possibilities, to submit information on the steps they are taking to implement that Programme;
- Recommends that official development assistance to the least developed countries should as a general rule be in the form of grants and that loans to those countries, when provided by mutual agreements, should be on highly concessional terms;
- 7. Urges those developed countries which have not yet done so to take steps as quickly as possible to apply fully the conclusions approved under section A of Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX);
- 8. Urges donor countries and multilateral development institutions to allocate increased financial resources and technical assistance in support of activities aimed at transforming the major structural characteristics of the least developed countries;
- 9. invites all international development institutions and specialized agencies, as well as bilateral donor institutions, regional commissions and the relevant governmental and non-governmental organizations, to accord a high priority to special measures for the least developed countries and to give their full support to the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries;
- 10. Further invites the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to take fully into account, in the formulation of the strategy for the third United Nations development decade, the special and pressing problems facing the least developed countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his analytical report to the General Assembly at its special session in 1980 on the implementation of the new international economic order, called for in Assembly resolution 33/198 of 29 January 1979, an assessment of the situation of the least developed countries as well as a review of the implementation of the special measures called for in the present resolution.

- A/C.2/34/L.134. Draft resolution submitted by Second Committee Vice-Chairman (on basis of informal consultations on draft resolution introduced by India, A/34/L.20), approved without vote by Second Committee on 14 December 1979, meeting 60.

A/34/676/Add.2. Report of Second Committee (part III), draft 'resolution XII.

Resolution 34/217, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/676/Add.2, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1979, meeting 109.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, by its resolution 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, it decided to launch a special programme to provide emergency relief and development assistance to the developing countries most seriously affected by the economic crisis, as a matter of urgency and for the period of time necessary, at least until the end of the Second United Nations Development Decade, to help them to overcome their difficulties and to achieve self-sustaining development,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, it called upon donor countries and international organizations to take specific measures to assist the most seriously affected countries in meeting their serious balance-of-payments deficits,

Noting with concern that the special programme in general remained largely unfulfilled,

Mindful of the inadequacy of concessional multilateral and bilateral assistance to developing countries identified as most seriously affected, despite efforts made by the international community,

Noting with deep concern the deterioration of the economic and financial situation of those developing countries which, given their low per capita income as a reflection of relative poverty, low productivity and low level of technology and development, merit consideration as most seriously affected by the current economic crisis caused by sharp increases in the prices of their essential imports,

- 1. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to review and study speedily the situation of those developing countries which, given their low per capita income as a reflection of relative poverty, low productivity and low level of technology and development, merit consideration as most seriously affected by the current economic crisis caused by sharp increases in the prices of their essential imports, to submit a preliminary report to the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 at its first substantive session in 1980, as well as to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy at its fourth session, and to include a final report in the analytical report to the Assembly at its special session in 1980;
- 2. Calls upon all donor countries, in the mean time, to consider extending relief and assistance to those countries which may be most seriously affected by the current economic crisis, bearing in mind immediate balance-of-payments and development needs; to this end, urgent consideration should be given, inter alia, to the following measures:
- (a) Making their best efforts to increase substantially financial assistance on grant or highly concessional terms in the context of the commitments entered into by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session:
- (b) Developed countries which have not yet done so should take steps as quickly as possible to apply the conclusions approved under section A of Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978;
- (c) Provision of financial assistance on favourable terms, inter alia, to meet their food deficit and agricultural development requirements;
- (d) Industrialization efforts should receive a due share of the resources transferred to those countries, taking into account their development priorities;
- 3. Notes that the International Monetary Fund is studying the possibility of establishing an interest subsidy for the Supplementary Financing Facility, that the Development Committee has requested the Executive Board of the Fund to give attention to developing ways and means of lowering the interest costs of the Supplementary Financing Facility and that the Fund has recently extended the maturities of drawings on the Extended Financing Facility, and invites the Fund to give consideration to proposals in those areas;
- 4. Invites the International Monetary Fund to take into account, within the context of its financing facilities and guidelines, the adverse balance-of-payments effects caused by the rise in the food import bills of those countries which may be most seriously affected by the current economic crisis;
- 5. Invites the multilateral development and financial institutions to give special attention to the development and immediate balance-of-payments needs of those countries which may be most seriously affected by the current economic crisis; in that context, appropriate bodies in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank are invited to continue to consider within their respective fields of competence the relevant proposals contained in the Outline for a Programme of Action on International Monetary Reform adopted by the Group of Seventy-seven at its ministerial meeting held at Belgrade on 29 September 1979.

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the specific actions in favour of the land-locked developing countries, particularly those envisaged in resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972, 98(IV) of 31 May 1976 and 123(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Bearing in mind various other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, its related organs and the specialized agencies emphasizing special and urgent measures in favour of land-locked developing countries,

Recognizing that the lack of access to the sea, aggravated by great distances to seaports, by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and by the greater difficulties and costs of their international transport services, constitutes a major and persistent hindrance to the social and economic development of the land-locked developing countries,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 31/157 of 21 December 1976, 32/191 of 19 December 1977 and 33/150 of 20 December 1978, and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations with respect to the exercise of the right of land-locked developing countries to free access to and from the sea as well as their right to freedom of transit,

- Reaffirms the right of land-locked developing countries to free access to and from the sea and their right to freedom of transit;
- 2. Calls upon all countries, international organizations and financial institutions urgently to implement the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in resolutions 63(III), 98(IV) and 123(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in other relevant resolutions adopted by the United Nations;
- 3. Notes with regret that the assistance given thus far falls far short of the needs of the land-locked developing countries;
- 4. Urges all donor countries as well as the international organizations concerned to provide land-locked developing countries with appropriate financial aid and assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, improvement and maintenance of their transport and transit infrastructures and facilities;
- 5. Commends the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other related agencies within the United Nations system for the work and assistance they have provided to the land-locked developing countries;

Invites the United Nations Development Programme and the financial institutions of the United Nations system to take appropriate and effective measures in order to provide additional resources within their spheres of competence to meet the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries;
- Invites the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to take fully into account, in the formulation of the strategy for the third United Nations development decade, the special problems relating to land-locked developing countries;
- 8. Further invites the international community to give financial support to interested transit and land-locked developing countries in the construction of alternate routes to the sea;
- 9. Recommends intensified activities relating to the conducting of necessary studies and the implementation of special actions and action programmes, including those under "economic co-operation among developing countries," as well as those under the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at the regional and subregional levels, in co-operation with the regional commissions.

Noting the action taken by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, as well as by the regional bodies, particularly the Caribbean Community and the Common Market, to provide economic, financial and technical assistance to Grenada,

Resolution 34/132, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 concerning the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling also its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries, and 32/1 85 of 19 December 1977, in which it urged all organizations in the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Recalling further its resolution 32/94 of 13 December 1977 on assistance to Tonga, Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1978/58 of 3 August 1978,

Recalling further resolutions 111(V) on specific action related to the particular needs and problems of island developing countries and 117(V) on the economic situation of Tonga, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session, held at Manila from 7 May to 3 June 1979,

Taking into account the fact that the Committee for Development Planning has recommended that the present list of the least developed countries should stand until the end of the Second United Nations development decade and that the international development strategy for the third United Nations Development Decade has not yet been agreed upon,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session, in response to the application of Tonga for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries, that Tonga should be assisted during the remainder of the current decade and that the special difficulties and upheavals experienced by Tonga required special measures.

Concerned at the continued structural imbalances in the economy of the country, particularly its overwhelming dependence on imports,

Taking into account the disadvantageous demographic and geographical features of Tonga—the small area and population and the physical remoteness of the country—which pose special development problems,

Noting that, without good transport and communication links, any development will be difficult,

- 1. Draws the attention of the international community to the special problems confronting Tonga as a developing island country with a small population;
- 2. Calls upon Member States, in the light of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning and in accordance with the resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development noted above, to consider granting to Tonga for the remainder of the Second United Nations Development Decade the special assistance and benefits accorded to least developed countries and to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Tonga in their programmes of development assistance;
- 3. Invites the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to consider, in the light of up-to-date data, including Tonga in the new list of the least developed countries which is to be drawn up in the context of the third United Nations development decade;
- 4. Appeals to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Tonga to enable it to establish the social and economic infrastructure that is essential for the well-being of its people;
- 5. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Tonga and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1980;
- 6. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Tonga, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;
 - 7. Requests the Secretary-General:
- (a) To mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Tonga:
- (b) To establish a special account under the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Tonga and urges Member States to contribute generously to that account;
- (c) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Tonga and the mobilization of assistance;
- (d) To keep the situation in Tonga under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1980, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Tonga;

(e) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Tonga and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Chapter II

Restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

A number of steps were taken during 1979 in further implementation of recommendations endorsed by the General Assembly in 1977 to restructure the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system. Plans were advanced for shifting some posts and other resources from United Nations Headquarters in New York to the regional commissions. Guidelines were drawn up for the work of the resident coordinators who were to be designated to oversee the development activities of the United Nations system in individual countries. The Secretary-General put forward his plan for reorganizing the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, one of the new units envisaged as part of the restructuring of the economic and social areas of the Secretariat. The Economic and Social Council reported that it had been unable to agree on how its own machinery should be restructured.

The General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted five resolutions pertaining to restructuring. By resolution 34/206, it requested further steps to decentralize United Nations activities to the regional commissions and called for other action to strengthen regional co-operation. By resolution 34/212, it recommended a reorganization of the agenda of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. By resolution 34/213, it approved guidelines for the work of the resident co-ordinators. By resolution 34/214, it suggested several measures to improve interagency coordination. By resolution 34/215, it requested the Secretary-General to implement immediately recommendations made by the Assembly in January 1979 on the functions of the DirectorGeneral for International Economic Cooperation and Development, an office established in 1978 as a key element of Secretariat restructuring in the economic and social areas.

Also on 19 December, the Assembly adopted two decisions on aspects of reorganization on which it took no substantive decisions in 1979. By decision 34/451, it decided to review in 1980 implementation of the recommendations on planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation. By decision 34/453, it called for further consultations on restructuring of the Economic and Social Council.

Action taken to implement the restructuring recommendations was described in two progress reports submitted by the Secretary-General during the year.

The purpose of restructuring, as defined by the Assembly when it decided in 1975 to initiate the process, was to enhance the capacity of the United Nations system to deal with problems of international economic co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner, and to make it more responsive to the requirements of the new international economic order.

In 1977, the Assembly had endorsed a series of reforms recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System. These were annexed to the Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring.² They covered structural and other reforms affecting eight areas: the Assembly; the Economic and Social Council; other United Nations negotiating forums; structures for regional and interregional co-operation; operational activities for development; planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation of activities; interagency co-ordination; and Secretariat support services.

Details follow on developments in 1979 relating to these eight areas.

Progress reports by the Secretary-General

In 1979, the Secretary-General submitted two progress reports describing what had been done to restructure the system along the lines approved by the General Assembly. The first of these reports, submitted initially to the Economic and Social Council in July and then transmitted to the Assembly, had been requested by the Assembly in January 1979, by a resolution in which a number of actions were suggested to promote the process, and all bodies of the United Nations system were invited to take further action to give full effect to the restructuring recommendations.³ The report summarized measures taken since 1977, with emphasis on action initiated in 1979, and identified issues requiring further action or calling for further guidance by the Council and the Assembly. The second report was submitted to the Assembly in November, at the Council's request, after the Council, by decision 1979/57 of 2 August orally proposed by its President, decided without vote to inform the Assembly that it had been unable to reach agreement on implementation of the restructurin recommendations affecting itself.

(Some details from these reports are given below in the sections relating to particular aspects of restructuring.)

Implementation of the recommendations on restructuring

General Assembly procedures

By resolution 34/212, adopted without vote on 19 December, the General Assembly agreed on an indicative framework to guide the Secretary-General in drawing up the agenda items normally allocated to the Second Committee. This regrouping of items was also to be taken into account by that Committee when it organized its work programme and debates. The six broad items in this framework, which was annexed to the resolution, were: (I) Development and international economic co-operation; (2) Report of the Economic and Social Council; (3) Operational activities for development; (4) Training and research; (5) Special economic and disaster relief assistance; and (6) Other matters brought to the Assembly's attention. The Council's report would continue to be a separate item but individual chapters would be considered under other items.

By the same resolution the Assembly took some procedural decisions affecting the Second Committee, one of them being that introductory statements on behalf of United Nations bodies and organizations should be made in the first two weeks of the Committee's discussion, so that States could make the best use of the remaining time at each session. These arrangements were subject to review at the Assembly's 1980 regular session, when it would review two further matters: certain technical procedures relating to documents in respect of reports from intergovernmental bodies; and the possibility or desirability of examining some Second Committee items biennially, including the possibility of assigning some items to the Council for consideration and decision.

This resolution was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 14 December, on the basis of a text submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Committee. It had been prepared following informal consultations on an earlier draft, submitted by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, which was then withdrawn. The earlier draft also contained a framework for Second Committee items, but this differed from the one approved in that it did not list the Council's report as a separate item and it made separate provision for an item on environment and human settlements, which the final resolution placed under "Development and international economic co-operation." Also omitted from the final version was a paragraph in the original draft according to which the Assembly would have decided to examine in 1980 possible improvements in the agenda of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

Membership, structure and work programme of the Economic and Social Council

In his July progress report on restructuring, the Secretary-General noted that, while the Economic and Social Council had not agreed on revising its subsidiary machinery, some progress had been achieved on other matters affecting the Council's functioning. For example, with a view to helping the Council initiate periodic reviews of operational activities for development, a report on policy issues in this regard was being prepared.⁴ Also, the Council was operating on the basis of a biennial work programme as called for by the Assembly.

Informal consultations in the Council, at both of its substantive sessions in 1979, concentrated on those aspects of restructuring pertaining to the Council. At its April/May session, a Vice-President who chaired the consultations reported to the Council on 11 May that it had been impossible to achieve any significant progress because of the difficulty of the topic and the simultaneous scheduling of other meetings and consultations. The Council thereupon agreed to resume consideration of the matter at its second regular session in July/August.

Following further consultations at the second session, another Vice-President who presided over them reported on 2 August that it had again been impossible to reach agreement. He identified three basic problems: the convening of subject-oriented Council sessions; participation in those sessions and the procedures to be followed; and the implications for reducing and rationalizing the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies.

By decision 1979/57 of 2 August (see section above), the Council informed the General Assembly that it had not been able to reach an agreement on implementation of the restructuring recommendations relating to the Council.

The Assembly, on 19 December, adopted without vote decision 34/453, by which it invited Member States to continue consultations on implementation of the restructuring recommendations relating to the Council and requested the Assembly President to facilitate such consultations as appropriate. By the same decision, it deferred to its 1980 regular session consideration of a draft resolution submitted by Argentina and Jamaica, in which they proposed that the membership of the Council be enlarged to encompass all United Nations Member States. The text of the decision, to which the draft resolution was annexed, was also proposed by Argentina and Jamaica. It had been approved without vote by the Second Committee on 14 December.

The proposed enlargement of the 54-nation Council would be achieved through an amendment to the Charter of the United Nations adopted by the Assembly and submitted for ratification by all Member States. Its aim, as stated in the draft resolution, would be to make the Council a more effective organ for the discharge of the functions and responsibilities assigned to it by the Charter. As an interim measure, until the amendment entered into force, the Council would be asked to open its sessional committees to all United Nations Member States as full members, and to entrust all substantive questions to those committees. At the same time, it would be asked to discontinue half of its functional commissions and standing committees, and to consider itself, on specified dates, the issues dealt with by those bodies.

Introducing the draft resolution in the Committee, Jamaica said it had become clear that the main obstacle to the Council's attempts to streamline its machinery had been its lack of universality. That shortcoming had led to a proliferation of bodies, with the result that United Nations intergovernmental machinery was becoming unmanageable and ineffective.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR following the Committee's approval of the decision, said that those countries opposed in principle the transformation of the Council into an organ composed of all United Nations Members, since they considered any amendment of the Charter as inadmissible. Furthermore, they were not convinced that such action would improve the Council's effectiveness, nor could they agree to the discontinuance of subsidiary organs which had worked well and had served the interests of the developing countries.

Other United Nations negotiating forums

The Secretary-General, in his July report on developments relating to restructuring, noted that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) had adopted resolution 114(V) on institutional issues, in which it made special reference to the strengthening of UNCTAD. The resolution was adopted on 3 June 1979 at the fifth session of UNCTAD, held at Manila, Philippines. (See p. 571.)

Structures for regional and interregional co-operation

The Secretary-General's July 1979 progress report on restructuring cited efforts by the secretariats of the United Nations regional commissions to promote interagency co-ordination within their regions, ways in which the commissions contributed to global policy-making and particularly the preparation of a new international development strategy, and the role of the commissions in preparing United Nations programme budgets and medium-term plans. The report further noted that the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had taken steps to enable the regional commissions to be designated as executing agencies for certain categories of UNDP-financed projects, as decided by the General Assembly.5 In addition, it mentioned a June 1979 decision of the UNDP Governing Council to review the practices for priority-setting in UNDP regional programmes.

In a report to the Council in July on meetings of the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, the Secretary-General gave information on what the commissions were doing to promote economic and technical co-operation among developing countries and to enhance interregional co-operation, along the lines indicated in the Assembly's restructuring recommendations. The report summarized the results of consultations between the executive secretaries and top Secretariat officials at United Nations Headquarters on the criteria that should guide further efforts to decentralize activities to the commissions and strengthen them in the context of an improved distribution of responsibilities between them and Headquarters. (See also pp. 489 and 744.)

On 3 August 1979, under its agenda item on regional co-operation, the Council adopted resolution 1979/64, by which it invited the Secretary-General to pursue actively the process of decentralization to the regional commissions, on the basis of the Assembly's restructuring recommendations. It invited the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) to undertake in 1980 a full review of policy and programme issues relating to the distribution of tasks and responsibilities between the commissions and other United Nations entities, in preparation for the elaboration of the next programme budget and mediumterm plan. It welcomed the, consideration being given by the UNDP Governing Council and the regional commissions to measures to enhance the collective involvement of developing countries in each region in determining the priorities for intercountry programmes. (For details, see p. 745; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in November a report containing proposals for redeployment to the regional commissions of 10 posts from the Departments of International Economic and Social Affairs and of Technical Co-operation for Development. The programme areas affected included economic surveys and analyses, rural development, social development, population, water resources, transport, financial management and public administration. The report also contained proposals for adding 14 posts to the secretariats of the regional commissions in selected priority areas.

The Assembly, on 19 December, adopted without vote resolution 34/206, by which it emphasized the need for more vigorous action to enable the regional commissions to play fully their role as the main general economic and social development centres in the United Nations system for their respective regions, as envisaged by the Assembly. It requested the Secretary-General to intensify the decentralization measures contemplated in his reports by, among other means, redeploying existing posts from Headquarters to the commissions. It asked him to provide support for the policy review to be carried out by CPC, and it requested the UNDP Administrator to prepare, in co-operation with the commissions' executive secretaries, proposals to enhance the collective involvement of countries in each region in identifying and initiating UNDP-assisted regional projects and in determining priorities for intercountry programmes.

This resolution was approved by the Second Committee on 8 December by 91 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions. It was based on a draft submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Committee on the basis of informal consultations on a text submitted earlier by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77. It incorporated an oral amendment by the sponsors adding "inter alia" to the provision by which the Secretary-General was requested to intensify decentralization through inter alia the redeployment of existing posts from Headquarters to the commissions. This amendment was approved by a vote, requested by the USSR, of 82 to 9, with 9 abstentions.

The original draft resolution by the Group of 77, which was withdrawn, did not specify how a greater decentralization should be accomplished, referring simply to the measures contemplated in the Secretary-General's report, which mentioned both a transfer of existing resources and the addition of new ones.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they had voted against the amendment and had abstained on the text as a whole because the Secretary-General's report contained requests for additional posts which had not been discussed or endorsed by a single intergovernmental body. Belgium, France, the United Kingdom and the United States said they had abstained on the amendment since they considered that the regional commissions should be strengthened primarily by transferring existing posts and resources.

Operational activities for development

During 1979, arrangements were approved for designating resident co-ordinators in individual countries who were to be given over-all responsibility for development activities carried out by the United Nations system in their respective countries. In December, the General Assembly approved guidelines for the co-ordinators to follow in performing their tasks.

The arrangements with regard to resident coordinators of the United Nations system's operational activities for development were approved by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) in April. They were reported in the Committee's annual report for 1978/1979 to the Economic and Social Council. The Committee approved the text of a standard letter to Governments by which the Secretary-General would announce the designation of these officials, whose appointment was called for in the Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring. 6

Spelling out the responsibilities of the coordinator, the standard letter stated that, in addition to his responsibility to the Secretary-General for over-all co-ordination of the United Nations system's development assistance in his country, he would be responsible to the UNDP Administrator, in his capacity as UNDP resident representative, on all matters connected with the management of the UNDP programme. He would also be responsible to the heads of organizations utilizing the resident representative as their field representative in matters concerning their respective activities. The letter further specified that these arrangements aimed at a better coordination of operational activities for development in the United Nations system, but did not affect relations between the Government concerned and United Nations agencies or the direct lines of authority and communication between the country representatives of those agencies and their own executive heads.

The Committee also agreed on provisional arrangements for the exercise of the resident coordinator's functions. These arrangements emphasized that the main aim of the coordinator, in promoting the harmonization of assistance by the United Nations system, should be to facilitate and support the exercise by the Government concerned of its own responsibilities for co-ordination. The framework for these arrangements was worked out in ACC's newly formed Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities), which held its first session at United Nations Headquarters from 25 April to 1 May.

These results of ACC's work were noted by the UNDP Governing Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly. The Governing Council, on 2 July, also noted that ACC was continuing to consider practical arrangements for the functioning of resident co-ordinators. It considered that such arrangements should enable the officials to exercise their responsibilities effectively and to ensure at the country level the achievement of the Assembly's objectives for the restructuring of operational activities. It also considered that the responsibilities of resident co-ordinators, like those of UNDP resident representatives, should be confined to operational activities.

The Governing Council also endorsed by this decision the Administrator's view that the aim of restructuring should be to ensure a more coherent, integrated and multidisciplinary approach to development problems, and to achieve a real increase in the flow of resources for operational activities on a predictable, continuous and assured basis. It endorsed restructuring measures already taken as they pertained to UNDP, citing in particular: the Assembly's decision to hold a single annual United Nations pledging conference;7 steps to achieve maximum uniformity in administrative, financial, budgetary, personnel and planning procedures; and measures to coordinate and integrate operational activities within individual countries.

7 Ibid., para. 31.

In his July progress report on implementation of the restructuring recommendations, the Secretary-General noted that the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation was preparing a report for submission to the Economic and Social Council in 1980, at the Assembly's request, on policy issues pertaining to operational activities for development in the United Nations system. The aim, as stated by the Assembly, was to help the Council to initiate periodic policy reviews of such activities as provided for in the restructuring recommendations.

On 3 August, the Council, by decision 1979/66, recommended that the Assembly examine in 1979 the responsibilities of the resident coordinator, the standard letter of designation and ACC's proposed arrangements for the exercise of his functions. (See also pp. 960 and 964; for page reference to text of decision, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Guidelines for the resident co-ordinators' functioning were set forth by the Assembly in resolution 34/213, adopted, without vote, on 19 December on the Second Committee's recommendation. The Assembly reiterated the prerogative of Governments to co-ordinate the assistance provided to them by the United Nations system in conformity with national objectives and priorities, and at the same time reaffirmed the responsibilities of the co-ordinators, whose tasks should pertain exclusively to operational activities of the United Nations system. The coordinators, it said, should be enabled to take the Assembly's restructuring recommendations adequately into account in their work; they should be able to help Governments achieve their objectives and priorities by ensuring coherent and integrated United Nations assistance; they should assume over-all responsibility for and coordination of United Nations operational assistance in their assigned countries; they should evolve a multidisciplinary dimension in the programming, implementation and evaluation of sectoral aid programmes; and they should help achieve maximum uniformity in administrative, financial, procurement and other procedures.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to proceed with the designation of resident co-ordinators, with the consent of the countries concerned, and to report to the Economic and Social Council in 1980.

The resolution also contained provisions on the financing of operational activities. The Assembly noted with regret that a major premise underlying the integration measures it had endorsed for the restructuring of such activities substantially higher levels of voluntary con tributions—was yet to be fulfilled. It decided to pay special attention to the question of increased levels of such contributions in connexion with its comprehensive policy review of operational activities.

On another matter dealt with in this resolution, the Assembly decided to consider the establishment of a single governing body for the intergovernmental management and control of United Nations operational activities for development, to replace the existing governing bodies. The Economic and Social Council was requested to submit recommendations to that end in 1980.

An earlier draft resolution, submitted to the Second Committee by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77, would have had the Assembly decide in principle to establish a single governing body. This draft was withdrawn in favour of a text submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Committee following consultations, which was approved without vote by the Committee on 14 December.

After the Committee approved this resolution, Finland, speaking also for Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, said they had joined in the consensus on the understanding that the policy review report being prepared on operational activities would concentrate on all of the Assembly's objectives for restructuring such activities, including the achievement of optimum efficiency and a reduction of administrative costs, and would not be confined to the issue of increased voluntary contributions. This position was endorsed by the Netherlands.

Planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation

In his July 1979 progress report on developments pertaining to restructuring, the Secretary-General described progress made under the guidance of CPC to improve programme planning and evaluation methodologies and to harmonize medium-term plans and programmes among United Nations organizations, as part of the restructuring process. The report noted that CPC had mandated an analysis in 1980 of the rural development activities of the United Nations system and had examined further the feasibility of joint interagency planning in response to commonly agreed objectives and guidelines. (See also p. 970.)

By decision 34/451 of 19 December, adopted without vote, the General Assembly decided to review these issues at its 1980 regular session and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report in that regard. This decision was approved, without vote, by the Second Committee on 13 December, as proposed by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77.

Interagency co-ordination

The Secretary-General's July 1979 progress report on restructuring provided information on the functioning of new subsidiary bodies established by ACC pursuant to the restructuring measures recommended by the General Assembly to improve interagency co-ordination.⁹

The Assembly adopted without vote on 19 December resolution 34/214 on interagency coordination. By that resolution, it requested the Economic and Social Council to work out mutually convenient procedures for improving communications between ACC and intergovernmental bodies, including procedures to enable Council and CPC officers to participate in an appropriate manner in ACC's work. It reiterated three aims for intersecretariat co-ordination: to assist in the preparatory work for intergovernmental decisions, in implementing them and translating them into complementary or joint activities. It repeated a request that ACC should give the highest priority to substantive questions of central importance to the development of developing countries and to international economic cooperation, and should gear its work to the concerns and directives of the Assembly and the Council. The Assembly requested ACC to state options and alternatives when submitting suggestions and studies to legislative bodies. Finally, it decided to review these matters again in 1982 and asked the Secretary-General to submit a report.

This resolution was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 14 December, on the basis of a text submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Committee. An earlier draft, submitted by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77, was withdrawn in favour of this text. Two provisions in this resolution were not contained in the earlier draft-the request for improved communications with ACC and the decision to review the topic again in 1982.

After the Committee approved the resolution, the USSR said it had not opposed the text even though it considered that the principle of the sovereign equality of States was violated by a preambular paragraph describing restructuring as an integral part of efforts to ensure the equitable, full and effective participation of the developing countries in the formulation and application of decisions concerning development and international economic co-operation; the USSR and other socialist countries were insufficiently represented in the higher echelons of the Secretariat, making it more difficult to implement United Nations decisions. India said the staffing pattern of the Secretariat was a separate issue which could be dealt with in another text on restructuring.

Secretariat support services

The Secretary-General's first restructuring report, submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July 1979, described a number of functions undertaken by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in line with the Assembly's January 1979 resolution defining those functions¹⁰ and other resolutions calling for the assignment of specific tasks to that office. The Director-General's office had synthesized the contributions of United Nations organizations to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy and the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174¹¹ on global economic issues, and it had drawn up options for those bodies to consider in their negotiations. It had begun preparing reports on developments in international economic co-operation and on policy issues relating to operational activities for development. It had monitored negotiations taking place elsewhere in the United Nations system, and had apprised the bodies concerned of the priorities and directives set by United Nations organs. Within the United Nations, the office had assisted the Secretary-General in reorienting the work of the new Secretariat units established as part of restructuring and had become involved in steps to decentralize United Nations activities to the regional commissions.

The report also contained information on steps taken to reorganize the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs and the Office of Secretariat Services for Economic and Social Matters-two of the other Secretariat units created as part of restructuring.

The Secretary-General's second progress report on developments relating to restructuring, submitted to the Assembly in November 1979, focused on the reorganization of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development. The function of this Department, as defined by the Assembly in 1977, 12 was to provide substantive support for technical co-operation activities in specified economic and social sectors, and manage United Nations technical co-operation activities. Among the main concerns in realigning the Department had been to improve its delivery of services and to strengthen its capacity to respond to the needs of developing countries. The Department had been reorganized into five divisions, for policies and resources planning, development administration and finance, natural resources and energy, programming and implementation, and field operations. This structure would be reviewed in time for the Assembly's 1980 regular session.

The Assembly's 1979 action on restructuring related mainly to the Director-General's office. By resolution 34/215 of 19 December, adopted without vote, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to implement immediately the provisions of section IV of its January resolution on this matter, 13 including the issues identified therein, and to submit a report to the 1980 Assembly session, including an organizational chart. (In section IV of that resolution, the Assembly had further defined the nature of the Director-General's functions and had clarified the extent of the authority attached to his office. The issues referred to included co-operative arrangements among the Secretariat units established as a result of restructuring and adjustments to be introduced in the functioning of all affected Secretariat units.)

Resolution 34/215 was approved by the Second Committee without vote on 14 December. It had been submitted by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77, and was approved with a drafting change made by the sponsors.

ANNEX

Implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975, by which it, inter alia, established the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System for the purpose of preparing detailed action proposals with a view to initiating the process of restructuring the United Nations system so as to make it more fully capable of dealing with problems of international economic co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner, and to make it more responsive to the requirements of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishmment of a New International Economic Order as well as those of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling also its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, by which it, inter alia, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee,

Recalling further its resolution 33/202 of 29 January 1979, in which it, inter alia, requested certain actions and measures within the framework of the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee,

Reaffirming that the process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system is an integral part of the efforts required to ensure the equitable, full and effective participation of the developing countries in the formulation and application of all decisions within the United Nations system in the field of development and international economic co-operation,

Noting Economic and Social Council decision 1979/57 of 2 August 1979, concerning the implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197,

Recalling, in particular, paragraph 13 of the annex to its resolution 32/197,

- 1. Expresses regret at paragraph (a) of Economic and Social Council decision 1979/57, concerning the implementation of section II of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197;
- Recognizes the imperative need to enable the General Assembly to focus its attention on the major global issues relating to development and international economic cooperation, and to deal with other issues on a less frequent basis;
- 3. Recognizes also that extension of the composition of the Economic and Social Council to all States Members of the United Nations as full members would make the Council a more effective organ for carrying out the functions assigned to it in the Charter of the United Nations and for discharging the responsibilities laid down in section II of the annex to

General Assembly resolution 32/197, as well as for assisting the Assembly as may be requested by it;

4. Decides therefore to adopt, in accordance with Article 108 of the Charter of the United Nations, the following amendment to the Charter and to submit it for ratification by the States Members of the United Nations:

"Article 61

- "1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of all the States Members of the United Nations.
- "2. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.";
- 5. Urges all Member States to ratify the above amendment in accordance with their respective constitutional processes as soon as possible and to deposit their instruments of ratification with the Secretary-General;
- 6. Decides to delete, as from the date of the entry into force of the above amendment, rules 145 and 146 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;
- Recommends that the Economic and Social Council should decide at its next organizational session that, as from 1980, its sessional committees should be open to the participation of all States as full members;
- 8. Recommends further that, until the amendment to the Charter adopted in paragraph 4 above enters into force, all substantive questions should be entrusted by the Economic and Social Council to its sessional committees;
- Requests the Economic and Social Council, in adopting its programme of work at its organizational session for 1980, to make provision for the consideration of the following questions on the dates indicated:
- (a) Science and technology for development (19-29 February);
- (b) Questions related to the status of women (25 February-5 March);
- (c) Preparations for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (31 March-4 April);
 - (d) Social development questions (8-14 April);
 - (e) Humanitarian questions (16 April-2 May);
 - (f) Transnational corporations (12-21 May);
- (g) Preparations for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (2-13 June);
- (h) Economic and programme and co-ordination questions (2-25 July);

Resolution 34/213, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/676/Add.2, adopted without vote by Assembly on 19 December 1979, meeting 109.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling also its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975, by which it, inter alia, established the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System for the purpose of preparing detailed action proposals with a view to initiating the process of restructuring the United Nations system so as to make it more fully capable of dealing with problems of international economic co-operation and development in a comprehensive and effective manner, and to make it more responsive to the requirements of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order as well as those of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling also its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, by which it, inter alia, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee,

Recalling further its resolution 33/202 of 29 January 1979, in which it, inter alia, requested certain actions and measures within the framework of the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee,

Reaffirming that the process of restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system is an integral part of the efforts required to ensure the equitable, full and effective participation of the developing countries in the formulation and application of all decisions within the United Nations system in the field of development and international economic co-operation,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1979/66 of 3 August 1979, in particular subparagraph (c) thereof.

Taking note also of decision 79/30 of 2 July 1979 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Having considered the progress report of the Secretary-General for 1979 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system as well as the annual report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination for 1978/1979,

- 1. Regrets that the major premise underlying the integration measures proposed in section V of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197, namely that it would stimulate substantially higher levels of voluntary contributions to operational activities for development, is yet to be fulfilled;
- 2. Decides, therefore, in the context of the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, called for under General Assembly resolution 33/201 of 29 Janary 1979, to pay special attention to the question of increased levels of voluntary contributions for operational activities for development without prejudice to paragraph 2 of the said resolution:
- 3. Takes note of the text of the proposed standard letter of designation of the resident co-ordinator of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, to be signed in each case by the Secretary-General, affirms in this context that the resident representative of the United Nations Development Programme would normally be designated as resident co-ordinator and draws attention to the fact that paragraph 2 of the standard letter may not be applicable to those exceptional cases in which the resident co-ordinator is not the resident representative of the Programme;
- 4. Reaffirms the principle that the assistance provided by the United Nations system should be in conformity with the national objectives and priorities of the recipient countries and that, therefore, the co-ordination of various assistance

- inputs at the national level is the prerogative of the Government concerned, while reaffirming also that over-all responsibility for, and co-ordination of, operational activities for development of the United Nations system carried out at the country level is entrusted to the resident co-ordinator;
- 5. Reaffirms further that the tasks of the resident coordinator should be carried out in conformity with the criteria and priorities established by the competent national authorities and that they, including the reporting arrangements, should pertain exclusively to operational activities of the United Nations system;
- 6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, in consultation with the Governments and the executive heads of the organizations concerned, that in the exercise of his functions the resident co-ordinator shall be enabled:
- (a) To take adequately into account the objectives set forth in paragraphs 28 (b) to (d) of the annex to resolution 32/197;
- (b) To assist Governments in achieving the objectives and priorities set by them by ensuring the coherence of action and effective integration of the various sectoral inputs from the United Nations system, as defined in paragraph 33 of the annex to resolution 32/197;
- (c) To assume over-all responsibility for, and coordination of, operational activities for development of the United Nations system carried out at the country level, in conformity with paragraph 34 of the annex to resolution 32/197;
- (d) To be responsible, in accordance with the policies and priorities of the Government concerned, for evolving at the country level a multidisciplinary dimension in the programming, implementation and evaluation of sectoral development assistance programmes, as set forth in paragraph 34 of the annex to resolution 32/197;
- (e) To help in the implementation at the country level of the objective stated in paragraph 32 of the annex to resolution 32/197, namely the achievement of maximum uniformity in administrative, financial, procurement and other procedures;
- 7. Decides that the guidelines set forth in paragraph 6 above do not affect relations between Governments and individual organizations of the United Nations system or the direct lines of authority and communication between the representatives of those organizations at the country level and their own executive heads;
- 8. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the designation of resident co-ordinators, with the consent of the Governments concerned, taking fully into account the provisions of paragraphs 3 to 7 above, and in accordance with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1980 on the implementation of paragraph 34 of the annex to resolution 32/197;
- 9. Decides, in the context of progress made in the implementation of section V of the annex to resolution 32/197, to give consideration to the establishment of a single governing body responsible for the management and control, at the intergovernmental level, of United Nations operational activities for development, which would replace the existing governing bodies as envisaged in paragraph 35 of the annex to resolution 32/197, and requests the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1980 to formulate recommendations to this end and submit them to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Chapter III

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

Following the adoption of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States in 1974, the General Assembly entrusted the Economic and Social Council with the task of reviewing the implementation of the Charter and coordinating the efforts of various organs of the United Nations system in this endeavour.

At its second regular session of 1979, the Council considered the Secretary-General's progress report on the implementation of the Charter, which had been requested by the Council in 1978³ but whose submission had been deferred to 1979 pending receipt of more replies to requests for information. The report, prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on behalf of the Secretary-General, was based on material contributed by United Nations organs and programmes, specialized agencies, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the International Atomic Energy Agency and on information received from 16 Governments-the Byelorussian SSR, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Iraq, the Netherlands, Norway, Romania, Seychelles, Spain, Thailand, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

The report noted the importance attached to the Charter by nearly all the responding Governments, and it grouped specific activities and considerations related to the effective implementation of the Charter, as reported by Governments and United Nations organs, into the following 13 categories, each of which corresponded to one or more sections of the Charter: natural resources and development goals; commodity supplies and prices and terms of trade; trade liberalization and expansion and other aspects of visible trade; invisible trade, including shipping, insurance and tourism; foreign investment and activities of transnational corporations; net flow of real resources to developing countries; action in the fields of science and technology; social and cultural aspects of development; internationco-operation for development; regional economic groupings and economic co-operation among developing countries; other aspects of international economic relations, such as industrial restructuring and co-operation; international decision-making and efficiency of international organizations; and special issues in the fields of trade and development, including disarmament and development, the needs and problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, the common responsibility for the sea-bed, ocean floor and environment, and the elimination of the economic and social consequences of colonialism, apartheid, racial discrimination, neocolonialism and all forms of foreign aggression, occupation and domination.

By decision 1979/51, on matters related to the general discussion of international economic and social policy, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the implementa-

Chapter IV

United Nations operational activities for development

Operational activities are those undertaken with the object of sustaining or enhancing economic and social well-being and generally involve the transfer of resources to developing countries or regions in a tangible or intangible form. Operational emergency activities provide immediate sustenance in crisis situations, while operational development activities seek to mobilize or increase the potential and capacities of countries to promote long-term economic and social development and welfare. Operational activities directly related to development fall into four broad categories: capital assistance, in the form of grants or loans to assist capital development schemes; commodity assistance, including the supply of food aid; technical co-operation, involving the transfer, adoption and utilization of skills and technology; and external finance, provided on a non-project basis to support the over-all development efforts of developing countries.

A small part of the United Nations system's operational activities is financed from the regular or assessed budgets of the United Nations and specialized agencies. A far greater part, over 86 per cent, is financed from voluntary contributions to the extrabudgetary resources of the system by Governments, international organizations outside the system, or non-governmental organizations. In addition to general-purpose contributions to United Nations funding organizations, such as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), contributions for specific purposes are made to the funding organizations and to other organizations in the system. These take the form of: contributions to specialpurpose funds; contributions from bilateral sources for activities in a particular sector or country (known as multi-bilateral activities); contributions to an agency by developing countries to undertake activities in the contributing country or to UNDP under cost-sharing arrangements; and contributions for special economic assistance programmes for individual countries.

The central funding organization for technical co-operation activities within the United Nations system is UNDP. Contributions to UNDP and to a number of other funds and programmes are made at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities. The activities of UNDP and the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, as well as details of the 1979 Pledging Conference and of the development operations financed under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation, are described in this chapter. The operational activities for development of the specialized agencies and of other major funding organizations and programmes, such as the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, can be found in other chapters focusing on their respective areas of concern.

United Nations Development Programme

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is primarily responsible for the financing, administration and implementation of international development assistance activities at the country, intercountry and global levels. The Programme works closely with Governments and 35 international organizations, 28 of which act as executing bodies, in support of operational activities for development in over 150 countries in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and Latin America. Field offices headed by resident representatives, who co-ordinate UNDP projects in close consultation with recipient Governments, are maintained in 111 developing countries.

Projects of from two to five years' duration in agriculture, forestry and fisheries, economic -and social planning, industry, education, health, transportation and resource exploration comprise the major part of UNDP's activities. Government execution of projects is encouraged through UNDP's "New Dimensions" programme, established in 1975, and an increasing number of countries use national personnel and institutions for the implementation of UNDP-assisted projects.

The Programme is financed by voluntary contributions from Governments, which have increased annually from about $55 million in 1959 to nearly $700 million in 1979. Allocations to each developing country and region are made on the basis of an indicative planning figure (IPF), which covers a five-year period. For the second five-year programming cycle, from 1977 to 1981, approximately one third of available resources was allocated to the needs of 28 least developed countries and two thirds to developing countries with an annual per capita income of $300 or less.

During 1979, the mid-point of its second programming cycle, UNDP financed over 5,200 country projects and nearly 700 intercountry projects at the regional, interregional and global levels. Field expenditures increased substantially, while the value of net project approvals rose only slightly above those of the previous year, reflecting UNDP's efforts to ensure that both ongoing and projected expenditures for the cycle would approximate the target amount of $2.46 billion in total IPF expenditures by the end of 1981.

According to the annual report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), field expenditures during 1979 rose to a new high of $546.6 million, a 25.5 per cent increase over the previous year. Total expenditures for 1979, including a parallel increase in agency overhead costs and a 19.6 per cent increase in administrative and programme support costs, amounted to $698 million. In addition, UNDP supervised the implementation of $10.8 million in funds from bilateral and multilateral donors and $31.1 million from developing countries, bringing total expenditures overseen by UNDP, including Government contributions in cash or kind, to more than $1.3 billion.

During the year, 8,445 experts were fielded under 4,943 operationally active projects at a cost of $272 million. The Programme also provided $129.9 million in equipment, $71.6 million in subcontracts and $51.6 million in training fellowships. More than 6,500 nationals from developing countries received training under UNDP-financed projects in 1979. Of these, 2,156 were from Asia and the Pacific, 1,870 from Africa, 938 from Europe, 838 from Latin America and 766 from Arab States. The value of UNDP components obtained from developing-country suppliers also rose. During 1979, developing countries provided 26 per cent of experts for projects, 12.5 per cent of equipment ordered and 27.5 per cent of the value of new subcontracts awarded; they hosted 31.2 per cent of the training fellowhips awarded.

The Programme's increase in field expenditures was accompanied by continued expansion of its administrative and operational responsibilities. During 1979, UNDP: expanded its network of executing agencies to include the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements; assumed basic administrative and coordinating functions at the field level on behalf of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control; launched operational activities under the United Nations Special Fund for Landlocked Developing Countries; assumed administrative responsibility for the Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development, with potential resources of some $250 million for project commitments in 1980 and 1981; and assumed the chairmanship of three international steering committees-on drinking water supply and sanitation measures in developing countries, on technical assistance measures for the group of Caribbean nations, and on the internationalization of the Cholera Research Laboratory at Dacca, Bangladesh, into an internationally supported Centre for Diarrhoeal Disease Research. The Programme also opened four additional field offices, in Bhutan, China, Djibouti and Samoa. The opening of the Beijing field office in China in August and the allocation of an indicative planning figure (IPF) of $15 million to that country for the remainder of the second programming cycle brought the total number of UNDP field offices to 111 and raised the total number of countries served by UNDP to 152.

Total investment commitments for 1979 declined slightly to $4.59 billion as against $4.85 billion in 1978. The main volume of investment follow-up continued to be concentrated in three main areas: transport and communications; agriculture, forestry and fisheries; and industry. In line with UNDP's new emphasis on assistance to developing countries' administrative sectors, some $161.8 million in investment follow-up was committed, for the first time, in the sector of general development issues, policy and planning. In order to stimulate pre-investment activities and follow-up investments, an Investment Development Office at United Nations Headquarters, New York, was established in January 1979. Early in the year, the Office entered into a cooperative agreement with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), under which projects considered to have investment potential were visited by experts from the FAO Investment Centre and, where feasible, reoriented to meet more fully the investment requirements of development finance sources. The Office also began negotiating similar cooperative agreements with other executing agencies, while initiating and strengthening special interest arrangements with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the regional development banks.

Field work on 155 large-scale projects, each costing $400,000 or more, was completed in 1979. Of the 134 country projects completed, 43 were in Latin America, 42 in Africa, 35 in Asia and the Pacific, 10 in Arab States and 4 in Europe. Eleven of the 15 regional projects completed were in Latin America, three in Arab States, and one in Europe. Three interregional projects—two on the development of fisheries in the East Central Atlantic and one on the second phase of an aquaculture and co-ordination programme—were executed by FAO. The global projects executed by UNDP included an international rice-testing programme, a programme for strengthening agricultural economic research in East Africa, and the third phase of a research and training project on the development of high-quality maize.

The value of the 5,967 new projects approved in 1979, together with net additions to ongoing projects, advanced moderately to $701 million, a 2 per cent increase over the previous year. Of this amount, $668.3 million affected projects costing $150,000 or more. As in 1978, the agriculture, forestry and fisheries sector received the highest allocation, 25.9 per cent of costs incurred and more than double the expenditure of any other sector. Transport and communications received 12.7 per cent of expenditures, followed by industry with 11.8 per cent, natural resources with 10.8 per cent and general development issues, policy and planning with 10.7 per cent. The remaining costs were divided among education, employment, science and technology, health, international trade and development finance, human settlements, humanitarian aid and relief, social conditions and equity, and culture. (See table on p. 535.)

Nineteen new country programmes were approved by UNDP's Governing Council at its June/July session, and another 11 underwent preparation for submission to the Council in 1980. Costs of these 11 projects averaged from $200,000 to $500,000, and about one third of new programme resources was committed to agriculture, continuing a trend evident in 1978. Following an extensive mid-term examination of the country programming experience in 1979, UNDP concluded that the optimal effectiveness of the country programming process depended primarily on more concerted planning and implementation measures and recommended, inter alia, that the identification and formulation of new projects take place concurrently as programme implementation moved forward, based on a continuing dialogue among Government authorities, the UNDP field offices and the executing Considerable attention was also directed to the process of intercountry programming in 1979 and a revised consultative process was proposed by UNDP with the aim of ensuring greater collective involvement by Governments in the setting of regional programme priorities. Under the revised process, Governments, regional commissions, intergovernmental groups and agencies would be advised in advance of regional programming exercises and requested to provide their views on programme priorities. A draft programme would then be drawn up by UNDP on the basis of these priorities, and representatives of Governments concerned would review the draft in its final stages to ensure that it reflected the chief consensus of the Governments of the region involved.

During 1979, 693 intercountry projects at the regional, interregional and global levels, valued at $140.4 million, were approved by UNDP. As part of the Programme's interregional activities to promote the new international economic order, UNDP and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) formulated a wide-ranging programme stressing economic and technical co-operation among developing countries at all levels. Other interregional projects in telecommunications, technical training, management development and public enterprises helped to strengthen co-operative ties among countries of different regions for their mutual development and support.

interregional programme also continued to serve as the main co-ordinating point for the development and conservation of world marine resources, including specific components in the interregional fisheries projects to assist artisanal fishermen, frequently one of the lowest income groups. The Programme's research-oriented global programmes continued to build up networks of central concern to development needs, with particular stress on improved food and health measures. During 1979, these networks covered such fields as basic agricultural research, low-cost water and sanitation technology, rice testing, nitrogen fixations, animal diseases, and research in diarrhoeal diseases. Both global and interregional activities maintained a strong anti-poverty orientation. A major interregional programme in labour-intensive public works, involving 20 least developed and five developing countries with the International Labour Organisation as executing agency, mobilized international support for construction projects that generated an estimated 350,000 man-months of additional employment for 100,000 men and women, many of them landless labourers employed seasonally on the projects.

The Governing Council of UNDP also authorized the use of funds from the Programme Reserve and from a reserve for "future participants and other claims" for a number of projects approved in 1979 in response to special requests from Governments and international organizations, including: a programme of technical co-operation with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the second half of the programming cycle; emergency assistance for desert-locust control; priority regional and subregional projects in the programme for the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978–1988); and rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance following natural disasters in Jamaica and Yugoslavia.

During 1979, substantial progress was also made in the implementation of the "New Dimensions" programme, designed and approved by the UNDP Governing Council in 1975 to strengthen self-reliance among developing countries. Expenditures on projects implemented by direct Government execution during the year rose to $6.5 million, a tenfold increase over the previous year. The number of experts from developing countries serving on UNDP-financed projects rose to 2,506, a 28 per cent gain compared to 1978; the dollar value of subcontracts awarded institutions in developing countries increased by 61 per cent and the number of training fellowships provided by developing country institutions increased by 27 per cent. However, despite these substantial advances, studies undertaken of the experience of country programming indicated that many Governments continued to prefer drawing on the services of the specialized agencies as executing agencies, often because of the agencies' ability to handle the administrative procedures involved in project execution, the special advantages of agency procurement and importation of equipment, or the lack of trained national personnel, particularly in the least developed countries. Revised instructions designed to broaden the scope for the use of nationals in project implementation were promulgated in August 1979. The first step taken to promote active involvement of nationals was the appointment of national project co-ordinators.

During the year, UNDP also advanced a fundamental concept of New Dimensions by a series of measures in support of technical co-operation among developing countries (known as TCDC), a means of sharing and exchanging their experience and capabilities. In preparation for a highlevel meeting on TCDC scheduled for May 1980, UNDP's special unit for TCDC launched several major studies on the subject. It also collaborated with field offices, regional bureaux and the Division for Global and Interregional Projects in reviewing ongoing projects for TCDC potential and in revising the UNDP Policies and Procedures Manual to include TCDC principles. Following informal discussions between UNDP and UNCTAD, a joint programme on economic and technical cooperation among developing countries was agreed to in October 1979, supporting particular interregional and regional efforts in fields such as trade expansion, monetary and financial cooperation and the promotion of multinational production enterprises. (See also p. 539.)

As part of its contribution to the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna in August 1979, UNDP documented its extensive analysis of the role of science and technology in the development process and the need for more action by the international community in support of that role. In October 1979, the Administrator of UNDP established a special task force to help implement the decisions of the Conference, which had recommended, inter alia, the establishment of an Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development, to be administered by UNDP, which would provide financing and expertise for projects aimed at strengthening the ability of developing countries to use science and technology to meet their own development needs. The task force drew up a prospectus for the Interim Fund, which was amended and subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly on 19 December 1979 when it adopted resolution 34/218. (For details, see p. 641; for page reference to text of resolution 34/218, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

The Programme also undertook an actionoriented assessment of rural women's participation in development, which served as part of UNDP's contribution to the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, as well as a framework for future UNDP-supported development activities. The assessment included a number of specific recommendations for the involvement of women in the development process and stressed the urgency for new initiatives for the inclusion of women as beneficiaries and participants in the planning and implementation of UNDP activities, particularly in the areas of agricultural production, cottage and small-scale industry, credit, marketing, energy, technology, potable water supply, sanitation, primary health care, education and training.

Expenditures and financing

According to the UNDP Administrator's report for 1979, both income and expenditures during the year were within 2.5 per cent of UNDP's own projections, indicating that ongoing financial monitoring was guiding the ascending growth curve required to meet planned targets for the second programming cycle as a whole. Of the $546.6 million in field expenditures, $523.2 million was expended under country and intercountry IPFs and cost-sharing arrangements, $2.8 million under the Programme Reserve, $4.7 million under Special Industrial Services, $11.3 million under the Special Measures Fund for Least Developed Countries and $4.6 million under Government cash-counterpart arrangements. Total expenditures, including agency overhead costs of $75.3 million and administrative and programme support costs of $76.1 million, amounted to $698 million.

Details of field expenditure by executing agency, by economic and social sector and by region, excluding Government cash-counterpart expenditure, are given in the tables below (amounts are in millions of United States dollars).

Voluntary contributions paid by Governments in 1979 in support of UNDP's activities totalled $691.6 million, including $11.3 million in voluntary contributions by developing countries to cover programme costs. Miscellaneous income for the year amounted to $461.1 million, traceable in part to a new income and cash management system inaugurated by UNDP's treasury section. Resources for supplementary programmes -the Special Measures Fund for Least Developed Countries and cost-sharing and Government cash-counterpart contributions-totalled $56.8 million. Of this amount, $41.9 million was received as cost-sharing contributions. Six Governments and four international organizations provided $10.8 million in the form of thirdparty cost-sharing on projects financed under UNDP auspices in five developing countries and five regions. Developing countries themselves contributed the balance of $31.1 million, $10.1 million of which was provided to supplement UNDP-supported programmes in the countries concerned and $21 million of which went to support specific projects. Total resources from all sources during the year amounted to $809.5 million, while UNDP's total recorded income stood at $797.6 million.

During 1979, UNDP's Operational Reserve became fully funded to the level of $150 million—a $50 million increase over the level attained by the end of 1978. Further progress was also made in the utilization of non-convertible currencies. Two million roubles were exchanged in 1979 under a 1978 agreement reached with the USSR to exchange some 5 million roubles, equivalent to $7.5 million, for certain developing-country currencies which UNDP would normally purchase for operational purposes.

As a result of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities held at United Nations Headquarters on 6 November 1979, total voluntary contributions pledged to UNDP's main programme for 1980, as at 30 June

1980, amounted to $717.2 million, including $10.5 million in voluntary programme costs paid by developing countries. In addition, a total of $11.7 million was pledged by Norway, Sweden and Switzerland to the Special Measures Fund for Least Developed Countries. (For details, see table on p. 555.)

The UNDP administration established a new Resources Office in 1979 to assist in assuring more continuous and predictable financing of the Programme, and the UNDP Governing Council, at its June/July session, decided to convene an intergovernmental study group to consider issues relating to multiyear pledging and a more equitable basis for sharing support of the Programme.

In its mid-term review of the second programming cycle, the Governing Council invited all donor countries, developed and developing, to assist in realizing at least $3,402.2 million in voluntary contributions for the cycle. It also decided, inter alia, to increase the interregional IPF for the second cycle by $3.5 million, to be financed from the Programme Reserve, and agreed to a total UNDP main programme, including the reserve for "future participants and other claims," of $2,518.1 million for 1977-1981. The Council also invited the Administrator to submit to its 1980 session a proposal for limited borrowing from the third cycle for certain country programmes, provided that it be compensated by underspending in other country programmes.

Provision of operational, executive and administrative personnel

Under a plan for providing operational, executive and administrative personnel in the field of public administration, experts were appointed as officials of recipient Governments, although they remained in the employ of the United Nations or the specialized agencies participating in the scheme. The United Nations or the agency concerned recruited the experts and supplemented the salaries paid by Governments if they were too low to attract experts of the required calibre. The experts were responsible for training nationals to take over from them as soon as possible.

In 1979, UNDP financed 122 operational experts in the following 39 developing countries, regions or territories: Angola (7), Antigua (1), Bahrain (3), Bangladesh (2), Bolivia (1), Botswana (10), the Cayman Islands (2), Chad (1), the Cook Islands (2), Cyprus (1), Ethiopia (1), Fiji (4) Ghana (3) Haiti (3) Jordan (1) Kenya (2), Lebanon (4), Lesotho (7), Malawi (8), Malaysia (2), Mozambique (2), the Netherlands Antilles (1), Nigeria (7), Oman (6), Saint Lucia (2), Saint Vincent and the Grenadines (1), Samoa (4), Seychelles (1), Singapore (1), the Solomon Islands (2), Swaziland (8), Tonga (5), Trinidad and Tobago (2), the Turks and Caicos Islands (1), Tuvalu (1), Uganda (2), the United Arab Emirates (1), the United Republic of Tanzania (9) and Zaire (1).

In line with UNDP's efforts to promote self-reliance in developing countries, the Governing Council, in July 1979, invited the UNDP Administrator, agencies and Governments to consider alternatives to UNDP-financed, internationally recruited experts and to consider, in particular: increased support to Governments wishing to undertake the direct recruitment of experts; increased use of qualified nationals as experts in projects; increased use of expatriate nationals for service in their home countries; and increased use of institutional twinning arrangements and related methods as had been proposed by the Joint Inspection Unit.

Extrabudgetary activities

In addition to its main programme activities in 1979, UNDP continued to oversee the work of over a dozen funds and other special activities within the United Nations system. During the year, increasing emphasis was placed on cooperation between UNDP's special funds, the regional bureaux and other UNDP units through the Bureau for Special Activities, responsible for the development of an integrated management system for extrabudgetary activities, and through the UNDP resident representatives, who assisted in project identification, appraisal, implementation and monitoring and provided financial and administrative services for most of the funds described below.

United Nations Volunteers

During 1979, the United Nations Volunteers programme continued to supplement the work of international and host-country experts by providing at low cost qualified middle-level expertise to the development effort in such areas as health, nutrition and education. The programme gave particular attention to the needs of growing numbers of refugees in South-East Asia, initiating a special programme of rehabilitation assistance in collaboration with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and with financial support from UNDP. During the year, the programme completed the initial phase of its first regional programme on youth and launched its first regional programme of assistance to domestic development service organizations, designed to strengthen co-operation among such organizations in Asia and the Pacific and promote exchanges of technically skilled development personnel.

By the end of 1979, almost 650 volunteers were serving in 75 developing countries—an increase of more than 60 per cent over 1978—with 70 percent coming from developing countries. The total income of the Volunteers programme in 1979 amounted to $2.2 million, including $750,000 transferred from the UNDP revenue reserve. Expenditures amounted to $1.4 million and the balance of funds as at 31 December was $1.9 million. (For further information, see p. 542; for pledges to the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers for 1980, see table on p. 558.)

United Nations Capital Development Fund

During 1979, the United Nations Capital Development Fund continued to provide assistance almost exclusively to the least developed countries, financing projects of immediate and direct benefit to low-income groups. As at the end of 1979, its fifth operational year, the Fund's commitments totalled $112.4 million for 133 projects more than a fivefold increase over its 1975 programme. The Fund approved 41 projects during 1979 with a total value of $41.2 million. Total project expenditures amounted to $8.9 million while income for the year totalled $30.6 million An operational reserve of $20 million and a guarantee reserve of $900,000 were established in 1979. As at 31 December, unencumbered funds amounted to $52 million. At its 1979 session, the UNDP Governing Council approved a change from full to partial funding (funding on a cashflow basis) of the capital assistance programme It also reiterated its request to the Economic and Social Council to recommend to the General Assembly that the administrative expenses of the Fund be met from voluntary contributions. (See also p. 603; for pledges to the Fund for 1980, see table on p. 557.)

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration was established in 1973 to provide developing countries with high-risk capital for mineral exploration. In 1979, the Fund's first operational project was completed in Ecuador and resulted in the identification of economically exploitable deposits of silver, lead and zinc, with possible recoverable values in gold and cadmium. Five new projects, in Ecuador, Ghana, Kenya, the Sudan and Suriname, were approved in 1979, and an inventory of 25 projects was established, of which four-in Egypt, Guyana, the Philippines and the Upper Volta—were ready for approval in early 1980. The total income of the Fund in 1979 amounted to $5 million and expenditures totalled $2.6 million. As at the end of 1979, the balance of the Fund was $19.1 million, of which unspent allocations amounted to $13.8 million. The Fund's total projected requirements to accommodate ongoing and new activities, such as the feasibility studies authorized by the UNDP Governing Council at its 1979 session, exceeded $30 million. (See also p. 678; for pledges to the Fund for 1980, see p. 555.)

United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office

For the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, 1979 marked the first full year of operations under its enlarged mandate, comprising its original responsibilities as the central coordinating mechanism within the United Nations system for the implementation of the development programmes of eight drought-stricken Sahelian countries, as well as additional responsibilities for assisting 15 sub-Saharan countries of the region in implementing the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. Of the $340 million mobilized for programmes in the Sahel, the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities provided over $62 million for 51 priority projects, of which 28 were completed and 23 were under active implementation by the end of 1979, in such fields as seed multiplication, crop protection, fertilizers, pesticides, agricultural tools, agrometeorological and, hydrological services and feeder roads. With the participation of concerned United Nations agencies, the Office sent planning and programming missions to 13 of the 15 countries involved in desertification control activities in order to assess the extent and nature of the desertification problem in the region. During the year, Governments submitted 107 priority projects to the Office with an estimated cost of $640 million. The income of the Trust Fund in 1979 totalled $9.9 million and expenditures amounted to $10.9 million. As at the end of 1979, the balance of the Fund was $18.5 million, including $14.9 million in unspent allocations. (See also p. 935.)

United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

The United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, established in 1975 to help 19 land-locked countries overcome their transport and communication problems, entered its first year of full-scale operational activities in 1979. The Fund concentrated its limited resources on feasibility studies for future large-scale ventures and on relatively small projects designed to help alleviate immediate transport difficulties. Total income of the Fund for 1979 amounted to $124,780 and expenditures totalled $39,000. As at the end of 1979, the Fund balance amounted to $685,055, of which unspent allocations amounted to $489,001. (See also p. 494; for pledges to the Special Fund for 1980, see table on p. 558.)

United Nations Trust Fund for Operational Programme in Lesotho

The United Nations Trust Fund for Operational Programme in Lesotho was established following a 1967 agreement between Sweden and the United Nations by which Sweden offered to finance technical assistance programmes in Lesotho. The Fund sought to assist in the development of Government infrastructures in Lesotho and financed a number of operational and administrative expert posts in the country, covering a variety of fields from industrial development and educational planning to road transportation and tourism. Allocations of $553,225 were issued in 1979; at the end of the year the Fund's balance stood at $259,573 and unspent allocations amounted to $531,330. Commitments in excess of income were expected to be covered by further contributions from the Swedish International Development Authority.

United Nations Trust Fund for Operational Personnel in Swaziland

The United Nations Trust Fund for the Provision of Operational Personnel in Swaziland was established following a 1969 agreement with Sweden which provided for the financing of technical assistance in Swaziland. Projects financed by the Fund were similar to the ones described under the Trust Fund for Lesotho. Allocations of $32,141 were issued in 1979. As at the end of 1979, the Fund showed a deficit of $24,381 and unspent allocations amounted to $176.867.

Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire

Although full-scale operations under the Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire ended in 1971, residual activity continued, mainly in the fields of transport and communications. As at the end of 1979, the balance of the Fund was $12,187, of which unspent allocations totalled $6,486.

UNROB residual funds-Bangladesh

The United Nations Special Relief Office in Bangladesh (UNROB) continued certain functions of the United Nations Relief Operation in Dacca, which had completed its activities on 31 March 1973. On 1 April 1973, the Secretary-General had transferred most of the unexpended funds for UNROB to the Administrator of UNDP, for use on projects proposed by the Government of Bangladesh within the broad framework of relief and rehabilitation activities. The balance of the Fund as at 31 December 1979 was $793,522, of which unspent allocations amounted to $602,564.

Assistance to colonial countries and peoples

With assets of the Trust Fund for Assistance to Colonial Countries and Peoples due to be fully expended by the end of 1980, the UNDP Governing Council, at its June/July 1979 session, increased the assistance available for national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to $20.5 million. Through this channel and the Trust Fund, UNDP provided a total of $24.7 million for activities in such priority sectors as education, vocational training, health and public administration. During 1979, nine new projects, developed in collaboration with national liberation movements in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), South Africa and Namibia, were approved, and co-operation continued with the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia to promote and implement the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. The income of the Fund in 1979 amounted to $600,000 and expenditures totalled $370,000. At the end of 1979, the balance of the Fund was $1.15 million, of which unspent allocations amounted to $590,000. (See also p. 543.)

Other trust funds

Unallocated funds of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, formally terminated in August 1960, were transferred to the United Nations to settle outstanding claims and to carry out relief and rehabilitation activities. In January 1966, the funds were placed under the responsibility of UNDP; as at the end of 1979, residual assets amounted to $20,938, against which commitments in respect of unspent allocations were $18,238.

The balance of the Fund of the United Nations for the Development of West Irian (Irian Jaya), established in 1963 by agreement between the Netherlands and Indonesia and in the process of being terminated in 1979, was applied as cost-sharing for Irian Jaya projects. As at the end of 1979, the balance of the Fund was $393,739, of which unspent allocations were $37,519.

The UNDP Trust Fund for the Nationhood Programme of the United Nations Fund for Namibia, administered by UNDP by agreement between the UNDP Administrator and the Commissioner for Namibia, channelled funds for Nationhood Programme projects. The total income for the Fund in 1979 amounted to $3,356,579 and expenditures to $11,897. As at the end of the year, the balance of the Fund was $3,344,682, of which unspent allocations were $3,155,703. (see also p. 1089.)

Decisions of deliberative organs

Technical co-operation among developing countries

A comprehensive report on the activities of the United Nations development system in 1978 to promote technical co-operation among developing countries (known as TCDC) was submitted by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to the 1979 session of the UNDP Governing Council, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 6 June to 16 July. In defining the scope of TCDC, the report emphasized the voluntary sharing of resources and experience among developing countries and the responsibility of the countries themselves in providing managerial impetus and project input as the distinguishing features of TCDC activities or elements in a project. Noting the conceptual and methodological problems in isolating TCDC from other technical co-operation activities, the report focused on principal manifestations of TCDC, such as meetings, seminars, networks and joint projects, irrespective of sector, and grouped developments during 1978 into broad categories, such as: new TCDC opportunities, techniques and priorities; educational training and information activities of the system to remove attitudinal barriers and promote TCDC; financial resources devoted to TCDC; measures taken to strengthen and reorient the United Nations system in support of TCDC; and the use of expertise, equipment, and consultancy and training facilities in developing countries.

The Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries,² adopted by the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries at Buenos Aires, Argentina, and endorsed by the General Assembly on 19 December 1978,³ contained recommendations on specific ways in which UNDP could support TCDC, including the preparation of progress reports on the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. In response to these recommendations, the UNDP Administrator submitted a report to the Governing Council's 1979 session on strengthening the capacity of UNDP to promote and support TCDC, in which he proposed the strengthening of the Special Unit for Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, the appointment of an Assistant Administrator for TCDC to direct the Unit, and the use of the Programme Reserve to finance TCDC promotional activities.

On 29 June, the Governing Council authorized allocations from UNDP amounting to $1,432,000 as 1979 and 1980-1981 supplementary estimates for strengthening the Special Unit. The Council also authorized the Administrator to draw up to $1 million from the Programme Reserve for the financing of TCDC projects when indicative planning figure (IPF) resources were not available. Welcoming India's announced allocation of 10 per cent of its IPF to TCDC activities, the Council invited other developing countries to consider similar action.

On 2 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council took note of, inter alia, the Administrator's reports on TCDC when it adopted, without vote, decision 1979/56. The decision had been recommended and approved without vote by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee on 27 July on an oral proposal by the Committee Chairman.

A number of recommendations in regard to TCDC activities in the field of science and technology were also set forth in the Programme of Action adopted by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, held at Vienna from 20 to 31 August 1979, and endorsed by the General Assembly the following December. Recommended in the Vienna Programme of Action were, inter alia: the strengthening of scientific and technological capacity and co-operation among developing countries, including the allocation of adequate financial resources; the restructuring of existing international co-operation so as to promote a better distribution of world production and resources in the fields of science and technology; and the adoption of special measures in the field of science and technology in favour of least developed, land-locked, island developing and most disadvantaged countries. On 26 June 1979, the UNDP Governing Council had requested the Administrator to take measures to enable UNDP to respond promptly to Assembly-approved decisions of the Vienna Conference that might be of concern to UNDP and to convene a special meeting of the Governing Council if those decisions required urgent action. (See p. 635.)

At the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly, the UNDP Administrator submitted a report on organizational and substantive arrangements for a high-level intergovernmental meeting to be held at Geneva in May 1980 to review TCDC.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/117, adopted without vote on 14 December, approved the Administrator's proposals regarding arrangements and requested him to take into account the relevant elements of the Vienna Programme of Action in preparations for the meeting, inviting all UNDP participants to undertake preparations necessary for the meeting and to be represented at it at a high level. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General and all bodies of the United Nations system to continue intensifying their efforts to ensure that TCDC was an integral part of their activities for international cooperation for development and asked the executive heads of organs of the United Nations development system, including regional commissions, to contribute to the preparations for the highlevel meeting and participate actively in it.

The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to include in his report to the Assembly's 1980 special session on progress in the establishment of the new international economic order a review of developments in TCDC, including the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, and it urged all States to take immediate steps to implement agreements reached at the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, calling upon developed countries to comply, in particular, with the Conference's recommendations on ways to provide and increase financial support for technical co-operation activities.4 The Assembly also invited the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy, in its formulation of the strategy for the third United Nations development decade, to take into account the special contributions to be made by TCDC.

The text of resolution 34/117 had been introduced in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by India on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. Following informal consultations in that Committee, the text was orally amended by the sponsors and approved by the Committee without vote on 1 December 1979.

Following approval of the text, Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that they had joined in the consensus on the understanding that the costs of the high-level meeting would be covered by voluntary contributions, rather than by the regular United Nations budget, and that they considered the paragraph by which developed States were urged to comply with provisions of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action regarding increased financial support to be beyond the scope of the Vienna Conference action, by which those provisions had been adopted as recommendations only.

Role of regional commissions

On 19 December 1979, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/206, emphasized the need for more vigorous action to enable the regional commissions to play their role fully as the main general economic and social development centres within the United Nations system for their respective regions and, inter alia, requested the UNDP Administrator to prepare, in cooperation with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions, proposals for enhancing the collective involvement of the countries of each region in identifying and initiating regional projects and activities and in determining priorities for intercountry programmes. (For details, see p. 520; for page reference to text of resolution 34/206, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Role and activities of UNDP

On 27 June 1979, the UNDP Governing Council adopted a comprehensive decision on the role and activities of UNDP, including country programming, programme evaluation, investment follow-up, equipment and supplies in UNDPassisted projects, intercountry programming, the UNDP Interagency Task Force and the new international economic order. By that decision, the Council requested the Administrator, inter alia: to ensure that future examinations of experience with country programming would aim at introducing measures which would contribute to implementing the Assembly's recommendation that the country-programming process be used as a frame of reference for operational activities of the United Nations system;5 to examine, in collaboration with the executing agencies, ways of systematizing the evaluation of individual projects; to submit reports in 1980 on global programmes and on investment development studies carried out during 1979 and 1980; and to prepare a report for a review of intercountryprogramming practices, in consultation with the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and appropriate organizations of developing countries. The Council also endorsed the Administrator's proposal to extend the mandate of the UNDP Interagency Task Force to 30 October 1980, inviting all participating and executing agencies to associate themselves with this consultative mechanism, and asked him to prepare a comprehensive report on UNDP and the new international economic order for review by the Council and submission to the General Assembly in 1980.

Designation of the resident co-ordinator

By its 1977 resolution on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, the General Assembly recommended that the over-all responsibility for operational activities for development carried out at the country level be entrusted to a single official who would exercise team leadership and be responsible for evolving a multidisciplinary dimension in sectoral development assistance programmes at the country level.6 At its April 1979 session in Geneva, the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) gave further consideration to the functions of this individual, to be known as resident co-ordinator of the United Nations system's operational activities for development, and approved the text of a standard letter of designation to be signed by the Secretary-General for the appointment of each resident co-ordinator. On 2 July, the UNDP Governing Council endorsed measures already taken to implement provisions of the 1977 restructuring resolution pertaining to UNDP and took note of the text of the standard letter of designation adopted by ACC.

Practical arrangements for the functions of the resident co-ordinator were considered by the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive (Operational Activities) at its Questions April/May 1979 session, and provisional arrangements for the exercise of those functions were set forth by ACC at its July 1979 session. The Committee noted, among other things, that established principles governing relations between resident representatives and United Nations organizations at the country level also applied to the resident co-ordinator. It stressed that the function of the co-ordinator in harmonizing United Nations activities was one of facilitating the Governments' own efforts and that his responsibility for evolving a multidisciplinary dimension in sectoral development assistance must be exercised in the light of priorities established by national authorities, ensuring access by Governments to information on available funds, expertise and facilities from the system as a whole. The Committee also noted the desirability of joint interagency advisory groups, as well as joint periodic reviews of current and planned activities, to assist the coordinator in the planning, programming, review and evaluation of operational activities and in the attainment of an effective dialogue with Government authorities. (See also p. 521.)

By decision 1979/66 of 3 August 1979 (see p. 964), the Economic and Social Council, inter alia, recommended that the General Assembly, at its regular 1979 session, examine the question of the responsibilities of the resident coordinator, including the text of the standard letter of designation and the arrangements for the exercise of his functions, as proposed by ACC in its annual report and on the basis of other relevant elements. (See also p. 960; for page reference to text of decision 1979/66, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 19 December, by resolution 34/213, dealing with the implementation of the section on operational activities of the United Nations system in the Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of that system, the General Assembly took note of the ACC report, including the proposed standard letter of designation of the resident co-ordinator, and affirmed that the UNDP resident representative would normally be so designated, although drawing attention to the fact that part of the standard letter might not be applicable to those exceptional cases in which the resident co-ordinator was not the resident representative. The Assembly endorsed ACC's view that the co-ordinating functions of the resident coordinator pertained to the operational activities of the United Nations system and were to be carried out in conformity with the priorities of the Government concerned, and it requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with Governments and the executive heads of concerned organizations, to ensure that, in the exercise of his functions, the resident co-ordinator would: assist Governments through a coherent and integrated programme of action on the part of United Nations organizations; assume over-all responsibility for and co-ordination of United Nations operational activities for development; evolve a multidisciplinary dimension in the programming, implementation and evaluation of sectoral development assistance programmes; and assist in implementing maximum uniformity in administrative, financial, procurement and other procedures at the country level. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to proceed with the designation of resident co-ordinators and to report on how they implemented their tasks to the second regular 1980 session of the Economic and Social Council. (See also p. 522; for page reference to text of resolution 34/213, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

United Nations Volunteers

In his report on the United Nations Volunteers programme, submitted to the 1979 session of the UNDP Governing Council, the Administrator reviewed the performance of the programme during 1978, noting the considerable increase in number of volunteers and of countries receiving assistance, as well as the development and expansion of youth and domestic services. The report also described the status of the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers, indicating the need for greater financial support for the programme, and reviewed major operational questions, such as the recruitment of volunteers, their role in least developed and newly independent countries, and the coordination of the programme's activities with executing agencies.

Taking note of the Administrator's report, the Governing Council: approved the placement of the programme's assistants in UNDP field offices in the least developed and newly independent countries; agreed that the programme Coordinator should continue consultations with Governments and agencies in order to facilitate recruitment; and urged the Co-ordinator to expand the activities of the programme with regard to domestic development service organizations. The Council also recommended that the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly establish a new target level of 1,000 field volunteers by 1983 and appealed again to Governments to take into account the greater number and scope of the programme's activities and consider increasing their contributions to the Special Voluntary Fund.

By decision 1979/56, adopted without vote on 2 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council took note of, inter alia, the Administrator's report on the United Nations Volunteers. The text of the decision was recommended by the Third Committee, where it had been approved, without vote, on 27 July, as orally proposed by the Committee Chairman. The General Assembly also took note of that report, among others, by decision 34/429, adopted, without vote, on 14 December, on a recommendation of its Second Committee, where it had similarly been approved on 1 December on an oral proposal by the Committee Chairman.

In a related action, the Assembly, by resolution 34/107: endorsed an increase in the number of volunteers in service to 1,000 by 1983, subject to the availability of funds and with the understanding that the quality of the programme would not be adversely affected; requested the Administrator to undertake appropriate actions to achieve that increase and to continue his efforts towards promoting the activities of the programme; reiterated its appeal to Governments and other potential contributors to take into account the growth of the programme's activities and to consider contributing, or increasing contributions, to the Special Voluntary Fund; and requested the Administrator to inform the Assembly on a regular basis of progress made in implementing these decisions.

The draft of resolution 34/107 was sponsored in the Second Committee by India, the Ivory Coast, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Philippines and Sri Lanka. The sponsors accepted an oral amendment by Finland to request the Administrator to undertake appropriate actions, rather than appropriate administrative actions, to achieve an increase in volunteers. The text was then approved by the Committee without vote on 28 November and adopted by the Assembly, also without vote, on 14 December.

As a result of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held in New York on 6 November 1979, total voluntary contributions pledged to the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers for 1980, as at 30 June 1980, amounted to $711,433. (For details, see table on p. 558.)

Role of qualified national personnel in development

On 27 June 1979, the UNDP Governing Council took note of a report of the Administrator on progress made towards preparation of a study on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries. The interorganizational study had been requested by the General Assembly on 19 December 1978,8 with UNDP acting as the lead organization for its preparation. The report set forth a comprehensive outline, including specific elements for analysing the training and utilization of national personnel, to guide the organizations of the United Nations system in preparing contributions to the study in their areas of competence, and recommended, inter alia, that the study put particular stress on experience with endogenous approaches to training and on the utilization of domestic resources and that its approach be based on an analysis of selected processes of technical co-operation with a direct bearing on the promotion of self-reliance.

The Governing Council requested the Administrator to prepare the study on the basis of the outline contained in his report and with the close involvement of concerned United Nations organizations for submission to the Governing Council at its 1980 session. It transmitted the progress report to the Economic and Social Council for consideration at its second regular 1979 session.

Taking note of the Administrator's progress report by resolution 1979/52, the Economic and Social Council invited the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to contribute to the study on the role of qualified national personnel. It requested the Secretary-General and the UNDP Administrator to proceed with the study, taking into account the comments and suggestions made during the Council's current session as well as the national experience acquired in all countries in the training of qualified national personnel, and asked them to submit the full report requested by the Assembly in 1978 to the Assembly's regular 1980 session through the UNDP Governing Council and the Economic and Social Council. The Council also recommended that Member States take into account the urgent need for qualified national personnel in activities aimed at the expansion of TCDC and invited developing countries, as appropriate, to establish national systems of training such personnel.

The text of resolution 1979/52 was sponsored in the Third Committee by Cuba, Ethiopia, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zambia. On behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community in the Council, Ireland proposed and the sponsors accepted an amendment whereby the Secretary-General and the Administrator, in preparing the study, were requested to take account of the national experience in personnel training acquired in all countries, rather than pay special attention to national experience in such training acquired in countries with different socio-economic systems. The amended text was approved without vote by the Third Committee on 27 July and the Council adopted it, also without vote, on 2 August.

Aid to colonial countries and peoples

At its June/July 1979 session, the Governing Council expressed its appreciation for the increased support given by UNDP and for action taken by the UNDP Administrator in extending assistance to African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity. Noting that the IPF for the liberation movements had been fully committed, the Council decided to convert a $7 million advance it had approved in 1978 from the Programme Reserve into an increase in the IPF for those movements and to raise the IPF for them by $7.5 million, allocating $3.15 million from the Programme Reserve and $4.35 million from the reserve for future participants and other claims, in order to meet the financial requirements for the remainder of the programming cycle. The Council also requested the Administrator to prepare by 1982 a comprehensive report on aid to the movements for the remainder of the cycle.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

On 26 June 1979, the Governing Council authorized the UNDP Administrator to draw up to $3.5 million from the Programme Reserve to finance the 18 project proposals identified in his report on assistance to the Palestinian people and to accept funds from Governments and intergovernmental organizations to implement such projects. The General Assembly endorsed this decision by its resolution 34/133 of 14 December 1979. (For details, see p. 372; for page reference to text of resolution 34/133, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Report of the Governing Council

On 2 July 1979, the Governing Council of UNDP, on the recommendation of the Intergovernmental Working Group on Support Costs, approved the commissioning and terms of reference of a limited study by a consultant, to be submitted to the Working Group by March 1980, that would provide the Group with needed information for recommending long-term arrangements for reimbursement of agency support costs associated with the administration of technical cooperation activities of the United Nations system. It invited the Economic and Social Council to request agencies to consider providing information on their technical co-operation programmes and related support costs in an annex to their budget documents. It also invited the agencies to consider advising recipient Governments of the projected utilization of UNDP-reimbursed or agency support costs and decided that existing reimbursement arrangements would continue until the end of 198 1.

By a number of other decisions on administrative matters taken at its 1979 session, the Governing Council, inter alia, requested the Administrator: to continue the installation of the integrated financial and programme information system for UNDP, with a view to completion in 1980; to present to the Governing Council's 1980 session new proposals for the funding of activities of the interagency procurement services which would reflect the system-wide nature of the benefits accrued; and to undertake with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization a country-by-country study of the need for the services of a senior industrial field adviser. The Council also set forth guidelines concerning the relationship between UNDP and external institutions and approved a provisional agenda for its June 1980 session.

By decision 1979/55, the Economic and Social Council took note of the decisions adopted by the UNDP Governing Council at its 1979 session, endorsed its decision on the report of the Intergovernmental Working Group on Support Costs, and authorized submission of the Governing Council's report to the General Assembly.

The text of this decision was orally proposed by the Chairman of the Third Committee and orally amended by Finland to include the Council's endorsement of the decision on the Intergovernmental Working Group. The Finnish amendment had been subamended by Sweden, the United Republic of Tanzania and the Upper Volta to exclude an endorsement of the Governing Council's decision on the United Nations Capital Development Fund (see under subchapter above). The Committee approved the decision on 27 July 1979 and the Council adopted it on 2 August; both actions were taken without vote.

On 14 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Governing Council, expressed its appreciation to the Administrator for his continuing efforts to strengthen UNDP activities, and appealed to all Governments to renew their efforts to provide UNDP with the resources necessary for achieving the target amount, based on an annual growth rate of 14 per cent, for the 1977-1981 development cycle. The Assembly took this action by resolution 34/106, adopted, without vote, on a recommendation of its Second Committee, where the text, proposed by Fiji, had been approved without vote on 28 November.

United Nations programmes of technical co-operation

The term "United Nations programmes of technical co-operation" is used in a collective sense to describe the technical assistance activities carried out by the United Nations in developing countries. These activities may be grouped into three categories: the United Nations regular programme of technical cooperation, which includes activities financed under the portion of the United Nations regular budget set aside for technical co-operation activities; activities funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which include projects financed under UNDP's indicative planning figures, Programme Reserve, Special Measures Fund for Least Developed Countries, Special Industrial Services and Government cash-counterpart contributions; and extrabudgetary activities, which include projects financed by contributions provided directly to the executing agencies by multilateral funding organizations within or outside the United Nations system, other than UNDP, and by unilateral or bilateral contributions from Governments and non-governmental organizations.

In order to consolidate under one authority the responsibilities and resources within the United Nations Secretariat in support of technical co-operation activities, the General Assembly, in March 1978, set up the Department of Co-operation for Development Technical (DTCD). As an executing agency for UNDP and a principal operational arm of the Secretariat, DTCD executes projects financed from extrabudgetary sources, and the regular programme of technical co-operation, providing technical expertise, training materials and direct advisory assistance to Governments in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of country and intercountry programmes and specific projects.

During 1979, more than half the resources of the regular programme of technical co-operation were programmed and managed by DTCD and shared among the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the Division of Human Rights, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and DTCD for the provision of sectoral advisory services. The remaining resources of the regular programme financed regional and subregional advisory services provided by the regional commissions-the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP)—as well as the industrial development activities of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). The organizations and regional commissions responsible for implementing the regular programme, as well as the Centre on Transnational Corporations, also acted as executing agencies for projects funded by UNDP and by extrabudgetary sources that were valued at approximately $204 million, nearly half of which was delivered through DTCD.

The total value of the United Nations technical co-operation programme in 1979 was $216.2 million, of which $12.4 million was provided under the United Nations regular budget programme, $153.7 million by UNDP and $50.1 million by other extrabudgetary sources. Of that total, $101.4 million was programmed and managed by DTCD, $60.7 million by UNIDO, $24.9 million by the regional commissions, $15.2 million by UNCTAD and $14 million by Habitat. (For project expenditure by organizational entity and by source of funds, see table below.)

During 1979, the internal structure of DTCD was realigned to respond better to the needs of developing countries through more effective management and support of technical cooperation projects. The realignment sought to strengthen DTCD's function as the main agency in the United Nations system for supporting the general infrastructure for economic and social development and concentrated on planning, management and training activities. In addition, guidelines, were established for matching functional and programme responsibilities to appropriate funding sources.

Of the total programme delivered by DTCD in 1979, UNDP-financed projects amounted to $66 million, nearly two thirds of total delivery. More than $15 million of the programme was funded from resources of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and $12 million from trust funds. Expenditures under the regular programme were more than $6 million. Of the total DTCD expenditures, 57 per cent was used for experts and consultants, 25 per cent for equipment and subcontracts, and approximately 14 per cent for fellowships.

The largest expenditures by DTCD during 1979 were in the fields of: natural resources; development strategies, policies and planning; general statistics; public administration and finance; and population. By region, the largest DTCD expenditures were for Africa, followed, in descending order, by Asia and the Pacific, the Americas, the Arab States, interregional projects, Europe, and global projects. (For DTCD project expenditure by sector and by region, see tables below.)

In 1979, 948 experts were appointed, 364 of whom came from developing countries. The total number of experts in the field during the year totalled 1,663, serving in 127 countries. In addition, 2,594 training fellowships were awarded to fellows from 110 countries. For number of experts and fellowships by field of activity and source of financing, see table below.)

At its 1979 session, the UNDP Governing Council requested the Secretary-General to present to its 1980 session a proposal on the future orientation of work of DTCD containing, inter alia, ways to increase the use of the regular programme for the benefit of the least developed countries and for promoting technical cooperation among developing countries. The Council welcomed the proposal to use DTCD resources in support of country programming exercises and recommended that DTCD's competence in developing infrastructure and resource bases be used more extensively to further self-reliance in developing countries and to assist in implementing of the new international economic order.

Provision of operational assistance personnel

Under projects administered by the United Nations for the provision of operational assistance personnel, officers were appointed to Governments in order to train nationals to fill their positions. During 1979, 16 officers occupied posts in the following 11 countries and territories: Barbados, the Cook Islands, Ghana, Lesotho, Malawi, Niue, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, and Trinidad and Tobago.

Decisions of the General Assembly

By resolution 34/223 A of 20 December 1979, the General Assembly approved a final budget appropriation of $22,666,000 for the United Nations regular programme of technical assistance during the 1978-1979 biennium. This was a $998,100 decrease from the amount appropriated at the Assembly's 1978 regular session. (Refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS for page reference to text of resolution 34/223 A.)

^aTotals have been rounded. Figures are based on estimated expenditure within the year.

^bThe totals for experts by country of assignment are somewhat higher than the totals shown by nationality because a number of individual experts had more than one country of assignment.

^cThe totals for fellowships by host country are somewhat higher than the totals shown by nationality because some fellowship awards called for study in two or more countries.

^dThe figures given under the heading "Supplied by" are based on orders placed in the various countries during the course of 1979, whereas the figures given under the heading "Received by" are based on estimated expenditure within the year. Consequently the totals of the two equipment columns do not correspond exactly.

^eUNDP data in all five categories do not include agency overhead costs.

Regular programme data in all five categories refer to technical assistance activities, other than those carried out under UNDP, which were financed from regular budgetary resources of other organizations of the United Nations system.

United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities

By a note verbale dated 20 September 1979, the Secretary-General invited States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies or the International Atomic Energy Agency to participate in the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities and to announce their contributions for the period 1 January to 31 December 1980 to the following programmes and funds: the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Capital Development Fund, the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, the Special Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Volunteers and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration. The Secretary-General also noted that Governments might wish to utilize the Conference to make pledges for all operational activities for development, whether or not such activities would be performed under programmes for which pledging conferences had been previously provided.

On 6 November 1979, the Pledging Conference was convened at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and was attended by 123 States, 12 specialized and related agencies and an observer from the European Economic Community. In addition to the pledges made to the above programmes, indicated in the tables below, total pledges of $47,213 were made to the United Nations Environment Programme (Algeria, $25,000; Democratic Yemen, $1,150; Hungary, $4,924; Kenya, $6,139; and Malaysia, $10,000) and $1,200,605 to the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (Dominican Republic, $2,000; Italy, $1,197,605; and Panama, $1,000). Also, the United Republic of Tanzania pledged $20,948 to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

The following tables list amounts pledged or paid as at 30 June 1980. The United States dollar equivalent of contributions pledged in national currencies was calculated at the rate of exchange in effect on 30 June; contributions paid before that date were recorded at the rate of exchange in effect on the date of payment.

Chapter V

Trade and development

The major event in the field of trade and development in 1979 was the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), known as UNCTAD V, held from 7 May to 3 June at Manila, Philippines.

The central theme of the session was the need for structural change in the world economy, including change in the institutional framework governing economic relations between developed and developing countries. Thus, UNCTAD v sought to address virtually all the major concerns in the area of international co-operation for development—including commodity trade, protectionism, monetary and financial questions, the transfer of technology, transport, the problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries, trade relations and economic co-operation—against the wider background of structural change. It adopted 35 resolutions and decisions on these and other issues.

Several major ongoing activities of UNCTAD were given new impetus by the Manila Conference: pledges of voluntary contributions to bring the proposed Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities (IPC) into operation were announced; an action programme was approved for economic co-operation among developing countries; UNCTAD was designated as the focal point for an expanded programme of action in favour of the least developed countries; and recommendations were made to strengthen the position of the developing countries in world shipping. Decisions were also taken on the technological transformation of developing countries, restrictive business practices and internal institutional issues.

Among new initiatives launched at UNCTAD V were: a decision to establish an international framework for intensified co-operation in aspects of commodity trade other than price stabilization, including processing, distribution and marketing; an agreement on a programme of action for structural adjustment related to trade and policies to deal with protectionism; and a decision to establish an intergovernmental group of experts within UNCTAD to contribute to the ongoing discussions of monetary reform, particularly in the context of the relationship between reform of the international monetary system and trade and development.

On some issues, such as trade between countries with different economic and social systems, evaluation of the multilateral trade negotiations and debt reorganization, agreement was not reached at Manila and the topics were referred to UNCTAD's permanent machinery.

Progress was made during the year towards the adoption of a set of principles and rules for the control of restrictive business practices, of a United Nations convention on international multimodal transport of goods and of a code of conduct on the transfer of technology, each of which were the subject of negotiating conferences in 1979.

Capping two years of negotiations, agreement 'was reached in March 1979 on the fundamental elements of a Common Fund under IPC. An Interim Committee charged with drafting the articles of agreement for the proposed Fund held three sessions during the year.

The United Nations Conference on Olive Oil established the text of and opened for signature the International Olive Oil Agreement, 1979, replacing a 1963 agreement and protocols extending it. Another achievement was the adoption, in October, of the International Natural Rubber Agreement, the first new agreement to be concluded within the framework of IPC and the first to provide specifically for equal sharing of the financial burden of buffer stocks by producers and consumers.

The General Assembly took several decisions relating to UNCTAD at its 1979 regular session. Among other things, it decided, on 19 December, to convene a United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 1981 to finalize, adopt and support a Substantial New Action Programme on their behalf recommended by UNCTAD, and adopted a comprehensive resolution on the report and decisions of UNCTAD V Also on 19 December, it confirmed the appointment of Gamani Corea for a third term as Secretary-General of UNCTAD, until 31 March 1983.

These and other matters relating to UNCTAD are described in the following subchapters.

Fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and subsequent action

The fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), known as UNCTAD v, was held at Manila, Philippines, from 7 May to 3 June 1979.

On 19 March 1979, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD, acting as preparatory committee for the Conference, convened its tenth special session at Geneva and on 27 March approved a provisional agenda for the Conference.

The Board on the same day also adopted a set of agreed conclusions on the organization of the Conference, including the distribution of seats among its officers and subsidiary bodies and the allocation of agenda items among eight Negotiating Groups.

In preparation for the Conference, the African, Asian and Latin American regional groups of UNCTAD member States had met during January and February 1979 at Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Colombo (Sri Lanka) and Caracas (Venezuela), respectively, to consider matters proposed for the agenda.

The results of these regional meetings were taken into consideration by the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the developing States members of the "Group of 77," held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 6 to 16 February. It adopted as its final document the Arusha Programme for Collective Self-Reliance and Framework for Negotiations, to serve, inter alia, as the Group's position paper on the items before the Conference. The document was annexed to the report of the proceedings of the Conference.

Similar preparatory meetings were held at Paris by representatives of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and at Moscow by the Permanent Commission for Foreign Trade of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance.

The opening of the Conference was preceded by a meeting on 4 May of senior representatives of participating States, who agreed on recommendations regarding the organization of the work of the session. These recommendations, subsequently accepted by the Conference, called, inter alia, for establishment of eight openended Negotiating Groups, among which the agenda items not handled in plenary meetings were to be distributed as follows: Group Ievaluation of, and consideration of structural changes in, the international economic order, and institutional issues relating to UNCTAD; Group II—developments in international trade, manufactures and semi-manufactures; Group III—commodities; Group IV—monetary and financial issues; Group V-technology and shipping; Group VI—least developed, landlocked and island developing countries; Group VII—trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems, and resulting trade flows; and Group VIII-economic co-operation among developing countries.

The Conference was attended by 144 member States of UNCTAD, as well as by representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, the regional commissions and other United Nations organizations, nine specialized agencies and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). Also, represented were 29 intergovernmental bodies, 20 non-governmental organizations and four national liberation movements: the African National Congress of South Africa, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe and the South West Africa People's Organization.

At its opening meeting, on 7 May, the Conference elected as its President Carlos P. Romulo (Philippines); it also elected a Rapporteur and 33 Vice-Presidents. (For Conference participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference's inaugural ceremony was addressed by the First Lady and Minister of Human Settlements of the Philippines, who underscored the humanitarian basis of UNCTAD's work, and by the President and Prime Minister of the Philippines, who outlined the major accomplishments of the Conference at its first four sessions, and called on UNCTAD V to break the vicious cycle of crisis and impotence that was keeping the world from working out practical solutions to its deepening problems.

The Secretary-General of the United Nations, in an address to the opening meeting, noted that, even if the problems of political strife and the arms race were somehow resolved, lasting peace in the world could only be achieved on the basis of justice, equity and global economic reform. He said UNCTAD V presented an exceptional opportunity to deal jointly with the two most critical problems threatening the goal of universal well-being—the extremely slow progress being made in establishing a new international economic order and the continuing economic malaise in the developed market-economy countries. It seemed unlikely that long-term growth could be restored in those countries without significant improvements in the over-all structure of international economic relations, which by creating new demand for their exports would expedite their recovery and help place the world economy on a more viable and dynamic footing. In these circumstances UNCTAD had a particularly crucial role to play, as a major organ of the General Assembly for deliberation, negotiation, review and implementation in the field of international trade and related areas of international co-operation.

Decisions of the Conference

Developments in international trade

By resolution 131(V), adopted without dissent on 3 June 1979, the Conference agreed on a twopart programme of action in the areas of protectionism and structural adjustment in international trade.

By the first part, dealing with policies and measures for structural adjustment related to trade, the Conference agreed that structural adjustment was a global phenomenon which should be facilitated by the international community to ensure optimum over-all growth, including development and diversification of developing countries' economies, so as to secure an increased share for them in world trade in processed goods and manufactures. The Trade and Development Board was entrusted with organizing an annual review of world patterns of production and trade with a view to identifying problems and elements most relevant to optimum over-all economic growth, including the development and diversification of developing countries' economies and an effective international division of labour.

By the second part, on protectionism, the Conference called on developed countries to adhere strictly to standstill provisions they had accepted, particularly concerning developing countries' imports, to move towards the elimination of quantitative restrictions and to reduce tariff escalation. It also requested the Trade and Development Board and its subsidiary bodies to formulate recommendations on the problem of protectionism, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue updating an inventory of non-tariff barriers and their effects, and invited GATT to examine future protective action by developed countries against imports from developing countries.

The Group of 77 developing countries registered disappointment with the resolution as falling far short of their expectations. The Group noted its understanding that GATT's examination should include actions by non-members of GATT and that its examining body should be openended.

The group of socialist countries of Eastern Europe (known as Group D within UNCTAD) indicated that their exports, too, suffered from the effects of protectionism and believed international measures should not be confined to the interests of a single group. They assumed that the differences between them and the developed market-economy countries—including different approaches to the problem of protectionism and to the methods of solving it-were understood. (For subsequent action on protectionism, see pp. 573 and 587.)

Also on 3 June, following agreement in informal consultations, the Conference adopted without dissent decision 132(V), requesting the Trade and Development Board to undertake a global evaluation of the multilateral trade negotiations on the basis of a report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General and other documentation (see also p. 573).

As it had not been possible to reach agreement on a substantive resolution on the subject, the Group of 77 adopted a separate declaration on the multilateral trade negotiations, launched at Tokyo in 1973, for inclusion in the report of the Conference, detailing the developing countries' concerns regarding the methods and results of the negotiations and outlining policies and actions that should be taken by the developed countries. (For further details on the multilateral trade negotiations, see p. 588; see PART TWO, CHAPTER XVII, for activities Of GATT.)

Commodities

Five resolutions were adopted by the Conference in the area of commodities.

The first of these concerned tungsten, a commodity lying outside the scope of the Integrated Programme for Commodities (IPC) as adopted by UNCTAD at its fourth session in 1976.² By resolution 104(V), adopted without dissent on 1 June, UNCTAD, bearing in mind the lack of sufficient progress towards negotiations on tungsten, requested its Secretary-General to convene a negotiating conference on tungsten, subject to preparatory meeting recommendations, before the end of 1980.

The United States, explaining its position on the resolution, felt that it was premature to move discussions on tungsten to the negotiating stage. (For subsequent action relating to tungsten, see p. 584.)

Also on 1 June, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 105(V), on international food trade, by which it urged substantially increased investment and technical assistance by developed countries and concerned international organizations to accelerate food production in developing countries, especially the least developed ones. It further urged efforts to increase developing countries' food exports, to achieve stable and equitable food prices, to improve nutrition and food security, to conclude international agreements on food commodities and, where necessary, to establish adequate reserves. Finally, UNCTAD asked its Secretary-General to review food-trade matters regularly and to examine and report on their impact on food production, consumption and security in developing countries. (See also p. 586.)

Resolution 124(V), adopted without dissent on 3 June, on which consensus had been reached in a contact group, covered various aspects of the implementation of IPC.

The Conference welcomed Government pledges to the "second window," or account, of the Common Fund under IPC-to be used to finance measures for commodities other than stocking—and urged UNCTAD member States and international organizations to indicate their voluntary pledging intentions prior to the next session of the United Nations Negotiating Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities, envisaged for year's end. The Conference further called for consultations with international organizations to obtain inputs into the work of the Interim Committee of the Negotiating Conference, and called on its member States to participate actively in the Committee's work on articles of agreement for the Common Fund.

The Conference urged Governments to decide on convening negotiating conferences on commodities currently in their preparatory phase, and to accelerate preparatory meetings on other commodities. It requested its Secretary-General to assist countries, on request, in preparatory meetings and negotiations under IPC, invited association with the Common Fund and other measures under IPC, and urged establishment of pricing arrangements within international commodity agreements, in particular negotiated price ranges. The Conference agreed to include in preparatory negotiations processed and semi-processed products additional to those agreed in 1976,³ asked its Secretary-General to convene preparatory meetings as soon as possible on perishable commodities, and urged that countries negotiating and renegotiating international commodity agreements take fully into account the interests of producing developing countries.

The Conference agreed to establish, within the context of IPC, a framework for expanded processing of commodities in developing countries and export of their processed goods, and asked for studies of prospects for processing and product development in those countries. It agreed to establish a similar framework in the field of marketing and distribution of commodity exports from developing countries, requesting studies in this area as well. All the studies, including one on medium-term needs and costs in these areas, were to be submitted to the Trade and Development Board's Committee on Commodities, IPC preparatory meetings and producer/consumer bodies.

The Conference requested the Committee on Commodities to provide over-all policy guidance for the work in the above areas. It decided that, with the end of IPC—scheduled to expire at the close of 1979—work begun under its aegis would become part of UNCTAD's regular work programme in commodities, and requested that the necessary resources be provided.

A spokesman for the majority of the group of industrialized market-economy countries (known as Group B) indicated that their acceptance of the resolution did not imply an acceptance of differential pricing schemes. Japan associated itself with this statement; it also noted that, in any effort to expand developing countries' processing of primary commodities and export of processed goods, consideration must be given to the particular commodities involved so as to reflect the interests of both the producers and consumers concerned. The Federal Republic of Germany considered that linking of commodity prices with the price trend of manufactures or world inflation was economically harmful.

The United States observed that it did not consider itself committed to the specific courses of action or the principles indicated in the resolution. Effective arrangements, it believed, should aim at stabilizing commodity prices for all producers in keeping with long-term trends. Moreover, increases in the developing countries' share in the processing and marketing of commodities should remain a function of market forces. It felt that the terms of reference of the proposed studies would have to be defined precisely.

Canada maintained a long-standing reservation regarding the feasibility of artificially harmonizing the competitive position of natural with synthetic products. A similar view was expressed by the Federal Republic of Germany. Austria felt that provisions on improving natural and synthetic product competitiveness, on increased market outlets for developing countries' processed and semi-processed exports, and on liberalization of market access would require further detailed study.

Eastern European countries dissociated themselves from a provision requesting the UNCTAD Secretary-General to assist countries in preparatory meetings and negotiations under IPC, considering that it might lead to unjustified proliferation of UNCTAD activities, with attendant financial consequences.

The Group of 77 regretted the statements of interpretation which, they felt, diluted the sense of the consensus. The Ivory Coast expressed surprise at the interpretive comments, particularly regarding the revision of price ranges in the negotiation or renegotiation of international commodity agreements.

(For subsequent action on commodities, see p. 582.)

Also on 3 June, the Conference adopted, by 73 votes to 12, with 14 abstentions, a Group of 77 proposal as resolution 125(V), by which it requested its Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with the International Monetary Fund (IMF), a detailed study on the operation of a complementary facility to compensate for shortfalls in export earnings of individual commodities. The facility was to be additional to improvements in the IMF Compensatory Financing Facility and other facilities and to action taken under IPC to deal with the problem of price stabilization in real terms.

An alternative approach, supported by the majority of Group B members, was to postpone action by unctad until a similar study under preparation by IMF and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) was completed.

A number of developed market-economy countries, including Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Norway and Sweden, supported the resolution since they favoured study of a system to stablize the commodity export earnings of developing countries. The Federal Republic of Germany, however, felt that such a system should not offer compensation in real terms nor on a commodity-by-commodity basis; Finland cautioned that the UNCTAD study should avoid duplicating the work already undertaken by the World Bank and IMF; and Sweden felt the study should be co-ordinated with the work of the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries (the Development Committee), having regard to the different modalities governing such facilities.

Denmark, Japan and the Netherlands abstained because they felt precedence should be given to the Development Committee studies. Spain stated that it was obliged to vote against the resolution on technical grounds; which system should be used to stabilize commodity prices in real terms had not been determined.

The United States felt that new measures aimed exclusively at stabilizing earnings from commodity exports were inappropriate. Canada also voted against the resolution, considering that stabilizing export earnings was a problem of short- or medium-term balance-of-payments financing rather than development financing and should therefore properly be treated as such by IMF, and particularly by its Compensatory Financing Facility.

(See also p. 584.)

The Conference also adopted without dissent on 3 June resolution 126(V) on the United Nations Conference to Negotiate an International Arrangement to Replace the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended, by which it urged participating States to exert the requisite political will at the forthcoming session of the International Wheat Council in June, and in their consultations and preparations, to allow for the successful conclusion of a new international arrangement, taking into account the interests of developing countries. It brought to the attention of UNCTAD members the request of the developing countries that the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the Executive Secretary of the Wheat Council help them in preparing for effective participation in the negotiations. (For further details, see pp. 585 and 658.)

Manufactures and semi-manufactures

By resolution 103(V) on restrictive business practices, adopted without dissent on 30 May, the Conference decided, in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1978, 4 to hold a United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices in the last quarter of 1979, asked that Conference to make recommendations on institutional aspects of future work by UNCTAD in this field, and decided that continued action should be undertaken within the UNCTAD framework to collect information on restrictive business practices adversely affecting international trade, particularly that of developing countries, and to elaborate model laws on such practices to assist in devising appropriate legislation.

The Conference asked its members and Secretary-General to explore possibilities of providing technical assistance to developing countries on control of restrictive business practices, and requested studies, concerning especially marketing and distribution arrangements in export and import transactions and exclusive-dealing arrangements affecting developing countries' trade and economic development. The Conference recognized the desirability of developing countries' co-operating among themselves to control restrictive business practices.

The Group D spokesman stated that the costs of the proposed Conference, including secretariat preparatory work, should be covered from current budgetary provisions and under existing staffing and financial arrangements. Group B States likewise noted that their approval of the resolution did not constitute an endorsement of the estimates contained in an accompanying statement of financial implications. (For further information, see p. 586.)

By a separate decision of 3 June, the Conference decided to remit for consideration to the permanent machinery of UNCTAD three questions arising under its agenda item on manufactures and semi-manufactures: (1) comprehensive measures required to expand and diversify the export trade of developing countries in manufactures and semi-manufactures; (2) review and evaluation of the generalized system of preferences; and (3) review of implementation of two resolutions—96(IV) and 97(IV)⁵—adopted at its fourth session, concerning, respectively, a set of supporting measures for expanding and diversifying manufactured and semi-manufactured exports of developing countries and the role of transnational corporations in the expansion of trade in manufactures and semi-manufactures. (For follow-up action, see p. 573.)

Monetary and financial issues

On 3 June, the Conference adopted, by 69 votes to 17, with 13 abstentions, resolution 128(V) on international monetary reform, by which it reaffirmed the need for: a more effective and symmetrical adjustment process, greater exchange-market stability and a higher degree of co-ordination in the international monetary system; improved surveillance of global liquidity, employing the special drawing right (SDR) as the principal reserve asset; and promotion of net flow of real resources to developing countries and of means of preventing the erosion of the real value of those countries' financial assets through inflation and exchange-rate depreciation.

The Conference called on the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund on the International Monetary System to consider the establishment of a development link in the context of allocating SDRs based on long-term global liquidity needs, and invited IMF to examine the over-all size of its quotas in relation to levels of international trade and balance-of-payments deficits and the need to finance them in the context of the adjustment process, with due regard to increasing developing countries' quota share. Also stressed was the need to apply conditionality in IMF loans flexibly, taking into account domestic, social and political objectives and priorities as well as priorities and circumstances of IMF members, so as to encourage developing countries to make fuller use of its facilities. The Conference emphasized that IMF adjustment programmes should seek to reconcile countries' short- and long-term objectives, taking account of external factors beyond their control. It invited IMF to study ways to improve the terms and use of the Extended Fund Facilityintended to support members with structural balance-of-payments deficits—and the need for establishing a substantially funded additional facility, designed to provide balance-of-payments support for programming adjustments over longer periods. It agreed that the existing Compensatory Financing Facility should be improved and liberalized to compensate more fully for shortfalls in the export earnings of developing countries. It invited IMF to consider an interest subsidy account to alleviate charges on developing countries making use of the Supplementary Financing Facility.

The Conference decided to establish within UNCTAD an ad hoc intergovernmental high-level expert group to examine fundamental monetary policy issues.

Group B members, most of which had either abstained or voted against the resolution, dissociated themselves from various proposals and principles included in it. The Group felt generally that a study of medium-term financing should not prejudge the solutions to be chosen, and a majority doubted the usefulness of establishing a group of experts. Many doubted that the international monetary system could by itself serve to promote the flow of real resources to developing countries, and none felt that UNCTAD should interfere with the review of quotas of IMF, whose autonomy they felt the resolution called into question.

The United States could not accept the text; in view of wide divergences of position, it would have preferred to remit the item to the Trade and Development Board for consideration. Italy, which abstained, objected to a call for maintenance of the real value of developing countries' assets, considering this as a potentially dangerous form of indexation. The Netherlands and Norway also abstained, but accepted the establishment of the ad hoc expert group. Norway felt that the concept of a development link should be kept alive, but thought certain proposals would interfere with the work of other organizations and had been drafted in too categorical a tone. (See also p. 581.)

On 3 June, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 129(V), on the transfer of real resources to developing countries. The text had been submitted to a contact group by Negotiating Group IV, and subsequently amended. The Conference urged donor countries to meet the internationally agreed, official development assistance (ODA) annual target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product and to announce their assistance plans as far in advance as possible and on a multiyear basis. It reaffirmed that ODA to the least developed countries should generally be in the form of grants and the rate of concessionality increased for other developing countries, and grants and loans should be untied as far as possible. The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade was instructed to monitor these measures.

The Conference agreed on the urgent need for a substantial general increase in the capital base of the World Bank and in the resources of the regional development finance institutions, urged that the sixth replenishment of the International Development Association be effected without delay, and invited the World Bank and regional development banks to expedite disbursements, provide adequate technical assistance, including programme assistance, increase co-financing and examine international bidding arrangements, so as to make the greatest possible use of the capabilities of recipient countries. It agreed on the importance of reviving the Bank's "third window" financing facility.

The Conference acknowledged the importance of private and other non-official assistance and of facilitating developing countries' access to private capital markets. The Conference also called for accelerated work on a code of conduct for transnational corporations with a view to presenting a comprehensive draft code to the Commission on Transnational Corporations by mid-1980.

Substantially increased transfers of resources to developing countries were indispensable for accelerating their development, and the Conference indicated that attention should be given to multilateral guarantees for borrowing on international financial markets and borrowing in significant measures under the guarantee of members of the international community, with possible use of interest-subsidy mechanisms. The World Bank's proposal for a long-term facility to finance capital goods purchases should be decided on quickly.

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland and the United States expressed regret that direct private investment was not, in their view, adequately treated in the resolution. Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States indicated that they could not enter into firm commitments regarding the ODA target. Australia, Austria, Finland and New Zealand, which accepted the target in principle, could not commit themselves to a particular time table.

Group D members stated they considered that the recommendations regarding the flow of resources from the developed capitalist countries to the developing countries did not apply to them. They requested that a draft resolution on the outflow of financial resources from developing countries as the result of the activities of foreign private capital, submitted to Negotiating Group IV by Eastern European countries and Mongolia, be included in the Conference's report. (See also p. 582.)

By decision 130(V), approved without dissent on 3 June, the Conference decided, on the basis of a text submitted to the contact group by Negotiating Group IV, that the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade should establish at its 1980 session a sessional committee to consider the technical aspects of a proposed export credit guarantee facility (see also p. 582).

The Conference also decided to remit to its permanent machinery three draft resolutions submitted by the Group of 77, dealing with the establishment of a multilateral guarantee facility, debt problems of developing countries, and an effective system of international financial cooperation. (For follow-up action, see p. 573.)

Technology

The Conference adopted without dissent on 30 May resolution 101(V), on the contribution of UNCTAD to economic, commercial and development aspects of the industrial property system, by which it welcomed a decision of the World Intellectual Property Organization to convene in 1980 a Diplomatic Conference for the Revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, stressed that promotion of indigenous inventive and innovative capacity, particularly in developing countries, should be one of the Diplomatic Conference's main objectives, and reaffirmed agreed conclusions and recommendations regarding the revision made in 1977 by its Group of Governmental Experts on the Role of the Industrial Property System in the Transfer of Technology.⁷

The Conference urged its member States to attend the Diplomatic Conference, taking into account the concerns of the developing countries, and invited its Secretary-General to continue studies of the economic, commercial and developmental aspects of industrial property and to undertake new studies on the impact of new industrial property policies and legislation on the developmental process and on the role of trade-mark protection in vital sectors of their economy, in consumer protection and in export promotion.

By resolution 102(V), on the reverse transfer of technology, adopted without dissent on the same date, the Conference endorsed 1978 conclusions and recommendations of the Group of Governmental Experts on Reverse Transfer of Technology.8 It invited the United Nations Secretary-General to make available to the Committee on Transfer of Technology his 1978 study on the "brain drain" and to decide on appropriate areas of competence for a co-ordinated treatment of this issue by the United Nations system. The Trade and Development Board was then to consider arrangements, including convening an expert group if needed, for examining the feasibility of measuring human resource flows. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to continue studies on: country experiences and policies on skill flow, for assessing the magnitude, composition, causes and effects of, and response measures to, outflow of trained personnel from developing countries; modalities for bilateral, regional and international co-operation; and the feasibility of co-operative skill-exchange among developing countries.

Developed countries should encourage absorption of trained personnel within developing countries and international efforts to find solutions, research and training activities in developing countries, and greater use of their skilled personnel in projects. Those which admitted skilled migrants should consider helping to build up better data on skilled migrations and consider measures related to social security, pension rights, currency control, tax policies and remittances for encouraging contributions to the economic development of developing countries. Developing countries should monitor skill outflows and take remedial measures, indigenize their education and training systems, promote collective self-reliance and try to create conditions to satisfy employment for their skilled personnel. The international community should examine possible arrangements to assist developing countries in dealing with adjustment problems of large outflows of skilled professionals, support co-ordinated resource-flow accounting, and give special consideration to the outflow problems of the least developed countries. The Conference asked the Board to consider providing facilities for a multilateral exchange of views on the development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology.

The States members of Group D and Mongolia expressed a preference for stronger and more specific wording, reflecting a goal of compensation for developing countries by the developed countries which admitted their skilled migrants.

Group B members other than Turkey expressed doubt as to whether UNCTAD should take a leading role in further consideration of the matter. They noted that certain specific recommendations properly lay within national competence, reaffirmed their position that this highly complex problem could not be remedied through compensatory measures and reiterated reservations regarding the financial implications of the resolution.

(For other actions relating to the reverse transfer of technology, see pp. 574, 596 and 652.)

Also on 3 June, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 112(V), recommending lines of action to be adopted to strengthen the technological capacity of developing countries, including accelerating their technological transformation. At the national level, developing countries, where appropriate, should: formulate technological development plans as an integral part of their national development strategies; formulate and implement policies, laws and regulations governing the transfer and development of technology; monitor, screen and evaluate imported technology to maximize domestic technological inputs; and establish or strengthen their technological infrastructure, including technology centres to serve as focal points between national users of technology and national and international suppliers, to ensure efficient acquisition and use of technology and manpower, to utilize the public sector's technological activities, to increase training and research, and to create over-all conditions conducive to the development and transfer of technology.

The Conference recommended strengthening or initiating subregional, regional and interregional co-operative measures among developing countries, including joint technological research, harmonization of policies, laws and practices, establishing institutional mechanisms, skill and information exchanges and preferential arrangements for the transfer and development of technology. It also recommended establishment or strengthening of regional and subregional centres for transfer and development of technology and establishment of interregional linkages between them.

The Conference also recommended cooperative action by developed countries, including access to technologies and technological information, facilitation of the transfer of such technologies from both private and public sector enterprises, provision of resources to their regional and subregional centres, and other actions aimed at helping developing countries realize their development plans and increase their technological self-reliance.

The Conference further recommended that all countries, directly or through international organizations, increase co-ordinated assistance to developing countries for the development of their technological capacities and the selection and adaptation of suitable technologies, and for research and development relevant to their requirements.

Contributions by UNCTAD related to: (a) the preparation of studies, in collaboration with other United Nations organizations, in particular the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), on technological problems in the areas of agro-industries, including food-processing, pharmaceuticals, energy, design and engineering consultancy, capital goods, and industrial machinery and electronics, for submission to the Committee on Transfer of Technology and other organs for examination, on the basis of which groups of experts might be convened; (b) undertaking in-depth studies on areas not yet examined, as agreed by the Committee on Transfer of Technology and in cooperation with other United Nations organizations, focusing on development-related aspects in the transfer, development and utilization of technology and on methods to strengthen technological capacities, and studies of the effects of regulations on technology transfer, the experiences and prospects of technology extension services, the role of small and medium-sized enterprises, an inventory of institutions concerned with technology, possible arrangements for promoting research, design and technological activities, and a comprehensive report for the Committee on Transfer of Technology on all measures in the UNCTAD work programme concerning the development and transfer of technology: (c) technical and operational assistance by the Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology (also referred to as the Advisory Service on Technology), for which States, international organizations and their financing and technical assistance programmes were urged to provide resources for developing countries' priority projects and for which the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was urged to provide advisers to ensure co-operation with the. various centres being established for the transfer and development of technology; and (d) proposals for an outline, to be submitted to the Trade and Development Board in 1980, of a strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries.

The Conference recommended that UNCTAD participate, where appropriate, in the implementation of the recommendations of the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 635) and invited its Secretary-General to continue to cooperate with the United Nations Environment Programme, with emphasis on work on technological alternatives and their effects on the environment.

Group B members other than Turkey reserved their position regarding proposals for the convening of expert groups to study various technological problems. The Group doubted the feasibility of elaborating a comprehensive global strategy for the technological transformation of developing countries. It noted that its acceptance of the consensus on the resolution did not imply a commitment regarding voluntary contributions to the Advisory Service on Technology, nor did it constitute an endorsement of the accompanying estimates of financial implications.

The States members of Group D and Mongolia also expressed concern at the resolution's financial implications and felt the work called for could largely be performed within existing staffing and budgetary resources. They urged that revised estimates be submitted to the Trade and Development Board in October and further urged closer co-ordination of UNCTAD's work with that of other bodies.

Shipping

On 1 June, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 106(V), on developments pertaining to the Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences, concluded in 1974 but not yet in force.⁹

The Conference called upon UNCTAD members which were States parties to the Convention to take measures for its early implementation and invited others to consider becoming parties. It urged developing countries to pool cargomovement and service-requirement information, to form joint sailing arrangements to increase competitiveness and to establish or strengthen national and regional shippers' organizations to balance interests between suppliers and users of liner conference services. It urged contracting Governments to facilitate application of the Convention's consultation machinery. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to give guidance, on request, in putting the Code into effect and to analyse and report to the Committee on Shipping on experiences in implementing the Convention. Its secretariat was asked to review and update conference tariff studies, in co-operation with the United Nations regional commissions. (See also p. 594.)

On 3 June, the Conference adopted, by a rollcall vote of 81 to 23, with 9 abstentions, resolution 120(V), introduced by Cuba, on developing countries' participation in world shipping and the development of their merchant marines. The Conference called on Governments to ensure for developing countries equitable participation in the transport of all cargoes, particularly bulk cargoes, generated by their own foreign trade, and recommended principles to be applied to this end, including equitable participation by the national lines of each pair of trading countries in the transport of cargoes between them and stipulations in shipping contracts that, until the developing countries achieved an equitable share of world tonnage, vessels of, or operated by, developing countries should carry a substantial and increasing portion of bulk cargoes, including those arising from the exploitation of their natural resources. The Conference urged importing developing countries to take measures among themselves for joint bulk-shipping operations in co-operation with exporting developing countries and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to identify cargo movements that might form the bases of joint fleet development and joint bulkshipping operations. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to arrange a meeting of interested Governments towards ensuring that all bulk cargoes between developing countries should be carried on national lines of, or operated by, the respective trading countries. Studies were requested on the possibility of expanding developing-country bulk fleets on specific trade routes, on examining how cargo was tied to trading-partner countries or transnational corporations, on controls exercised by transnational corporations over bulk movements of commodities, on ways of increasing the participation of developing countries in the refrigerated cargo trade, on guidelines for containerization and other shipping and port improvements and, in co-operation with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), on ways of increasing their air transport fleets, on the repercussions of phasing out open-registry shipping, and on the feasibility of establishing legal machinery to regulate open-registry fleets. The phasing-out studies were to be considered by an intergovernmental working group.

Liberia stated that it supported the resolution on the understanding that the phasing-out studies and those on legal machinery for regulating open-registry fleets did not prejudge a decision on the subject or mandate establishment of such machinery.

The Group D spokesman stated that its members had abstained, together with Mongolia, on the grounds that measures to increase developing countries' participation in international shipping must be based on mutually agreed decisions guaranteeing universal application. Unilateral actions by separate States or groups of States could only lead to the development of protectionism and restrictive business practices.

Group B States stated that they opposed the resolution as being directly opposed to the freely competitive environment which was an essential feature of the bulk market. Cargo sharing would increase transportation costs, seriously affecting the trading interests of all countries. Group B also felt that proposals on air transport were inappropriate to the item under discussion. Despite its negative vote, however, Group B supported the studies of the problem of openregistry shipping as well as the reconvening of an intergovernmental working group to consider and report on these studies.

Also on 3 June, the Conference adopted, by a roll-call vote of 91 to 0, with 23 abstentions, resolution 121(V), on ship financing and technical assistance. By this text, it urged States members of UNCTAD to consider developing. countries' proposals that credit for the acquisition of ships be extended to them on specified favourable terms, requested member States and international financial institutions to help developing countries obtain development aid to purchase ships and improve port facilities and infrastructures, requested those institutions to provide financing and refinancing facilities for ship acquisition, called on countries to encourage companies with managerial and operational expertise to participate in joint shipping ventures with companies in developing countries, and called on developed countries to provide technical assistance in various maritime sectors.

The Conference asked its Secretary-General to establish an ad hoc unit to assist developing countries with feasibility studies for ship acquisition, invited UNDP to consider providing technical assistance resources, including training, and instructed the Committee on Shipping to keep shipping finance under review, in particular the financing of port improvements and infrastructures.

Group B members, which abstained, stated that they strongly supported, in principle, aid to help developing countries compete effectively in international shipping, but had withheld their support for the resolution because of its close links with the bulk-cargo sharing proposals advanced in resolution 120(V), on which the regional groups had been unable to agree. (See also p. 594.)

Least developed among developing countries

On 3 June, the Conference approved—by 85 votes to 0, with 20 abstentions, and by 88 votes to 0, with 20 abstentions, respectively—recommendations 117(V) and 118(V), whereby it recommended that Tonga and Djibouti be included in the United Nations category of least developed countries and appealed for international financial, technical and economic assistance to those countries.

Australia and New Zealand were of the view that UNCTAD was not the appropriate body to take such action. Group D considered the texts as recommendations to the appropriate body. Group B indicated that the majority of its members had abstained from voting on the same procedural grounds as Australia and New Zealand. (See also p. 248.)

Also on 3 June, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 122(V), by which it decided to launch, as one of its major priorities, a substantially expanded programme of assistance to be known as the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries.

Phase one of the Programme—an Immediate Action Programme for 1979-1981 to meet the critical situation of the least developed countries—aimed at immediately boosting the economies of these countries, supporting projects for their most pressing social needs, and paving the way for larger, long-term development efforts. Phase two was to consist of a Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, to transform their economies aiming at self-sustained development and enabling them to provide internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, transport and communications, housing, education and job opportunities.

Phase one called for greatly expanded resources to expedite already planned assistance projects and to implement projects and programmes that could be quickly executed. It called too for the fullest use of existing emergency-assistance arrangements to mitigate the effects of natural disasters, for immediate funding of phase-two preparations and mobilizing skilled personnel to support the planning effort, and for international assurances of adequate resources to complement the activities of the least developed countries.

Under phase two, donor support for a much wider range of activities would be needed than had been available in the past and on more flexible terms and conditions, to address problems of structural change, social needs, transformational investments and emergency support.

Detailed steps for planning and approval of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s to benefit each least developed country, entailed both global and national efforts, supported by bilateral and multilateral assistance, and studies on an improved strategy to assist the least developed countries. The results of these studies should be considered by a highlevel expert group, to be convened in late 1979, and reviewed by UNCTAD's Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries, at a session to be called for this purpose early in 1980, and by the Trade and Development Board. The General Assembly was invited to convene a United Nations conference on the least developed countries to finalize and adopt the Substantial New Programme of Action.

The Conference urged countries which had not reached the ODA target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product to increase their contributions. Efforts should soon be made to double assistance to the least developed countries on a continuous, predictable and assured basis, in the form of grants or on highly concessional, untied and flexible terms, and UNDP was invited to consider increasing resources allocated to those countries.

The Conference recommended special commercial policy measures to benefit the least developed countries, including trade preferences, aid for export expansion, long-term purchase arrangements, steps to foster on-the-spot processing of raw materials and food products, and the possible temporary suspension of tariff and non-tariff barriers, exemptions from financial contributions in commodity agreements, and special arrangements to assist in the sale of exports of the least developed countries.

The Conference also recommended actions to assist the transfer of technology, to alleviate problems of the reverse transfer of technology, to increase training assistance, to expand shipping and to strengthen insurance aid. The UNCTAD and United Nations Secretaries-General were called upon to prepare and arrange for full United Nations participation in the Comprehensive New Programme of Action. International development institutions, specialized agencies, bilateral donor institutions, regional commissions and governmental and non-governmental organizations were urged to give priority to the measures and to support the Programme. Additional efforts, in the form of in-depth studies and technical assistance activities, in collaboration with other United Nations bodies and individual developing countries, were also recommended for which the secretariat unit concerned with these problems should be strengthened and consideration given to transforming it into a separate division.

Group D, while supporting the resolution, reserved its position on several provisions. It did not, on principle, assume any general financial obligations towards granting assistance to developing countries, over and above their direct bilateral agreements with them. It noted that proposals to strengthen UNCTAD's secretariat or create a separate division could be examined only after study by an ad hoc group on rationalization of UNCTAD machinery set up under UNCTAD resolution 114(V) (see below under INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES). Finally, it felt that social needs were too narrowly interpreted in the resolution and should properly include progressive social and economic reforms, creation of an independent economy, raising living standards of the poorest strata, and broad involvement of the citizenry in the solution of development problems.

The United States reiterated its reservations on ODA targets, on which it remained unable to commit itself, as did Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

(For further information on action for the least developed countries, see p. 598.)

Land-locked and island developing countries

The Conference on 3 June adopted without dissent resolutions 111(V) and 123(V) on the particular needs and problems of island developing countries and of land-locked developing countries, respectively. By the first of these, it urged action to: diversify island economies by development of infrastructure and of over-all national development programmes; facilitate their access to foreign markets by assisting in trade promotion efforts and by simplifying preference procedures; support investment in infrastructure, and establish technical training programmes and joint ventures; subsidize inter-island transport services; assist in mitigating natural and other disasters; simplify aid procedures and supply specialist aid; encourage inter-country cooperation, skill-sharing schemes and participation in international conferences; and increase use of their harbours and airports by international shipping and aviation.

The Conference requested its Secretary-General to continue the UNCTAD work programme on behalf of these countries, decided that in-depth analyses should be carried out on the common problems and constraints of island economies for follow-up action by their Governments, asked UNDP and international development and bilateral assistance institutions to consider increasing their assistance to such countries and their support to UNCTAD, requested the Trade and Development Board to consider the needs and act in favour of the island developing countries, invited ICAO to study policy issues of, and support, air transport-service development, and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult member States and development institutions on recommendations considered most useful of the Group of Experts on Feeder and Inter-Island Services by Air or Sea for Island Developing Countries.

Group D, speaking also on behalf of Mongolia, noted that its members' position on foreign private investments was reflected in the document they had submitted in Negotiating Group IV on the negative consequences of the activities of foreign private capital.

By resolution 123(V), UNCTAD agreed on specific action aimed at reducing the cost of access to and from the sea and to world markets for land-locked developing countries, at improving their transit-transport services and at restructuring their economies to overcome their geographical situation.

The Conference reaffirmed the need for increasing external financial resources to land-locked countries on favourable terms, and the need for close and effective collaboration between those countries and their transit neighbours both in studying and implementing transport proposals, including proposals for special measures to reduce transit costs.

The Conference recommended as key elements for such co-operation improved procedures and new investments to reduce the costs of access to the sea and to world markets, financial assistance from the international community to improve transit-transport infrastructures, consideration of all aspects of the transit-transport problem, including procedures, regulations, documentation, management, training, organizational and institutional arrangements, maintenance, facilities and infrastructure, and joint ventures, study of alternative routes, and detailed planning and economic studies of improvement options.

The Conference also noted key elements of integrated transport planning: high priority by international assistance organizations to improvements in integrated transport infrastructures: harmonization of transport planning and promotion of joint transport ventures, consideration of the creation of co-operative air-transport development projects: and efforts to apply and possibly revise international conventions to facilitate transit traffic.

The Conference urged the international community to provide financial and technical support to land-locked countries in the development and maintenance of road, rail, waterway, air transport, containerization, warehousing, transit, port, dry port, communications and shipping facilities. It called for international assistance to help diversify the economies of these countries and urged that the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries be augmented by contributions and equitably distributed.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to continue the work programme on land-locked developing countries, including a review of their special economic problems and recommendations to reduce their access costs, monographic studies and studies on transit and transport questions, and the collection and dissemination of information on experiences in overcoming their difficulties. The Conference invited UNDP and international financial institutions to consider increasing their assistance, and recommended studies, specific action and financial and technical assistance to implement these activities.

The Group B countries indicated their intention to channel assistance not through the Special Fund, whose establishment they had not supported, but through other existing institutions.

Trade relations among countries with different economic and social systems

On 3 June, the Conference, in approving decision 116(V) without dissent, requested further implementation of a 1976 resolution on trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems and the resulting trade flows, ¹⁰ and referred two draft resolutions on this question to its Trade and Development Board for consideration. One of these had been submitted by the USSR on behalf of Group D members, and the other by Cuba on behalf of the Group of 77. (For follow-up action, see pp. 573 and 597.)

Economic co-operation among developing countries

On 3 June, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 127(V), by which it welcomed the initiative of the developing countries in adopting, at the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Group of 77 at Arusha in February 1979, the First Short/Medium-Term Action Plan for Global Priorities on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, and urged developed countries and international organizations to support such co-operation.

The Conference invited the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue measures of assistance, including secretariat support services for meetings on economic co-operation among developing countries, and it agreed that UNCTAD's activities in support of this sector should be improved and intensified, in closer co-operation and co-ordination with other bodies, in particular UNDP.

The Conference decided to convene a special session of its Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries in 1980 to examine UNCTAD studies and assess work and proposals in the priority areas of establishment of a global system of trade preferences among developing countries, co-operation among State trading organizations and establishment of multinational marketing enterprises. Preparations for the session, including governmental expert meetings, were to be supplied by UNCTAD. It requested the Committee to facilitate implementation of recommendations contained in the Arusha Action Plan and requested the Trade and Development Board to provide for the necessary Committee meetings.

The UNCTAD secretariat was also asked to intensify its activities in, and submit actionoriented proposals to the Committee on, priority areas such as: elaboration and maintenance of an information system on the foreign trade of developing countries; preparation and updating of a handbook of developing-country State trading organizations; continuation of technical seminar and consultancy services to such organizations; technical assistance to projects for multinational marketing arrangements; monetary and financial co-operation; analysis and identification of opportunities for joint marketing ventures; and, in collaboration with UNIDO, intensification of activities concerning multinational production enterprises among developing countries.

The Conference also requested its secretariat to maintain close co-operation with United Nations bodies and organizations of developing countries, and its Secretary-General to report regularly to the Trade and Development Board on consultations to secure contributions for prodects. Finally, it urged implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and resolutions adopted by the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries in 1978, 11 and invited UNDP to devote increased resources to projects for economic co-operation among developing countries.

The Group D spokesman stated that its members had reservations regarding UNCTAD's work programme and its role in organizing an undefined number of meetings, which might lead to an unjustified proliferation of secretariat activities and place additional strain on UNCTAD's budget.

(See also pp. 573 and 579.)

Institutional issues

The Conference, on 3 June, adopted without dissent resolution 114(V), aimed at improving UNCTAD's effectiveness and responsiveness.

By part I of this resolution, the Conference invited the General Assembly to strengthen UNCTAD, based on recognition of its role as a principle instrument of the Assembly for negotiations on and review of problems of international trade and related issues of international economic co-operation. By part II, the Conference requested its Secretary-General to consult with the United Nations Secretary-General towards achieving greater flexibility for UNCTAD in budgetary, conference servicing, programming, evaluation, personnel and administrative matters, and to report the results to the Trade and Development Board at its October session.

The Conference, by part III, recommended that the Assembly allow the Board to meet twice yearly. It requested the Board to undertake at its October session to further harmonize and rationalize its work. The Conference requested its Secretary-General to consult with regional groups on nominations of governmental experts, to shorten meetings, limit documentation, prepare an annual report summarizing UNCTAD's technical assistance activities and their funding, and regularly to convene consultations between the UNCTAD secretariat and the regional groups on a calendar of meetings. The Conference also decided to establish an ad hoc intergovernmental committee, of limited duration, on the rationalization of the machinery of UNCTAD, to report to the Board with recommendations for further action. (For follow-up action, see p. 600.)

By resolution 115(V), also adopted without dissent on 3 June, the Conference recommended that the General Assembly take steps in 1979 to give Arabic full capacity as an official and working language of UNCTAD, effective 1 January 1980, and requested its Secretary-General to submit proposals to the Assembly aimed at implementing its recommendation.

The United States reiterated its reservations regarding the financial implications of adding official languages in the United Nations system. (For subsequent action, see p. 600.)

The Conference remitted to the Trade and Development Board a draft proposal submitted by the Philippines on behalf of the Group of 77 to limit meetings at Geneva of bodies not headquartered there (see p. 574).

Other business

On 1 June, the Conference adopted several resolutions introduced by Cuba on behalf of the Group of 77. By resolution 107(V), adopted without dissent, it requested the Trade and Development Board to recommend that the General Assembly decide on the location of the sixth session of UNCTAD, bearing in mind Cuba's offer to act as host.

By resolution 108(V), adopted by a roll-call vote of 107 to 9, with 13 abstentions, the Conference reiterated that unilateral actions to exploit the resources of the sea-bed prior to the adoption of a Convention on the Law of the Sea, in contravention of pertinent United Nations resolutions, would not be recognized by the international community and would be invalid under international law; it warned that States taking such unilateral actions would have to assume responsibility for the consequences.

Switzerland, despite its vote in favour, declined to be bound by an interpretation which would make non-observance of the resolution tantamount to a violation of international law. The United Kingdom, speaking also on behalf of Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United States, opposed the solution both because of substantive disagreements and because, like Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Israel, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain and Sweden which had abstained in the voting, they felt the subject had been broached inappropriately by UNCTAD.

By resolution 109(V), adopted by a roll-call vote of 91 to 16, with 14 abstentions, the Conference, considering that peoples of Namibia, Palestine, South Africa and Zimbabwe were still living under colonial domination or foreign occupation, requested its Secretary-General to initiate studies on those peoples and countries, in collaboration with their respective national liberation movements recognized by regional intergovernmental organizations, and to report periodically to the Trade and Development Board.

The spokesman for States members of the European Economic Community (EEC) stated that they opposed the resolution both because it introduced questions alien to the purposes of UNCTAD and because it confused situations of colonial domination and foreign occupation, which were legally and politically distinct. Brazil, Jamaica and Mexico, which supported the resolution, none the less expressed reservations regarding excessively broad wording in the preamble, merging the separate phenomena. Israel rejected the resolution as politically motivated and said it would not co-operate in any action emanating therefrom. Chile, Costa Rica and El Salvador stated that they had abstained, and Canada that it had voted against the resolution, on the ground that UNCTAD was not the appropriate forum for questions of a political nature. The United States expressed its strong opposition to the resolution on the grounds that it threatened to divert the Conference and the Board from their proper tasks and because it called the legitimacy and sovereignty of Israel and South Africa into question.

On 3 June, the Conference adopted without dissent resolution 110(V), by which it lent its support to the Economic Commission for Africa in studying Zaire's problems of transport, transit and access to foreign markets. (For further details, see p. 580.)

Also on 3 June, the Conference adopted resolution 119(V), by a roll-call vote of 91 to 23, with 1 abstention. It thereby called on the developed countries to eliminate discriminatory and unfair practices in the services sector, in particular in banking and insurance, and in transport where special air fares were arranged exclusively between two developed countries. It requested an urgent examination of the effects of discriminatory civil aviation practices on air cargo and tourism growth in developing countries.

Group B members indicated that they had abstained or voted against the resolution on procedural grounds because, in their view, ICAO was the appropriate forum for civil aviation matters. Group D countries and Mongolia, which supported the resolution, noted that its provisions could not be applied to their organizations operating in the service sector, e.g. airlines.

By resolution 135(V), adopted by acclamation on 3 June, the Conference formally expressed its gratitude to the Government and people of the Philippines for their hospitality.

By a series of other decisions, the Conference: approved a revised calendar of meetings for 1979 (decision 134(V)); approved the inclusion of Djibouti, Dominica, Seychelles, Solomon Islands and Tonga in the lists by which members of UNCTAD were assigned to various groups of States; designated the Andean Reserve Fund and the Association of Natural Rubber Producing Countries as participating intergovernmental bodies; decided to remit to its Trade and Development Board for further consideration its agenda item on evaluation of the world trade and economic situation, on which no resolution had been agreed; and decided to remit to the permanent machinery of UNCTAD (a) a draft proposal by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR on transnational and international commodity trade, (b) draft resolutions submitted by Cuba on behalf of the Group of 77 on debt problems of developing countries and on an effective system of international financial co-operation, and (c) agenda items on review of the implementation of previous Trade and Development Board resolutions relating to debt and development problems and on review of the existing system of international financial co-operation in the context of world trade and development and measures to make it contribute more effectively to the development of developing countries.

Follow-up decisions of the Trade and Development Board

The Trade and Development Board, at the first part of its nineteenth session, held at Geneva from 8 to 20 October 1979, took up a number of matters remitted to it by, or arising out of, UNCTAD V.

After lengthy consideration, the Board decided to transmit to its twentieth session in 1980 the item on evaluation of the world trade and economic situation and measures to facilitate structural changes in this area with a view to establishing a new international economic order, remitted to it by the Conference. The Board also decided to refer to that session the draft resolution on transnational corporations and international commodity trade that had been remitted from the Conference by Group D members and Mongolia.

In the area of international trade, the Board, pursuant to Conference decision 132(V), decided to conduct a global evaluation of the results of the multilateral trade negotiations at its 1980 session.

In the same area the Board, in accordance with a provision of Conference resolution 131(V), requested, the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report to it, for a final decision in 1980, with specific suggestions on the organization of an annual review of patterns of production and trade in the world economy. It further decided that it and its concerned subsidiary bodies would continue to review developments involving trade restrictions with a view to formulating recommendations on the general problem of protectionism.

The Board remitted to its Committee on Manufactures for consideration items on measures to expand and diversify the export trade of developing countries in manufactures and semimanufactures and on reviewing the implementation of previous UNCTAD resolutions on the same subject, which had been referred by the Conference to its permanent machinery. An item on review and evaluation of the generalized system of preferences was remitted to the Special Committee on Preferences.

Pursuant to provisions of Conference resolution 127(V) on economic co-operation among developing countries, the Board, by two decisions of 20 October, approved the inclusion in the UNCTAD calendar of a series of regional meetings of governmental experts preparatory to the convening of the first special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries in 1980 and decided to remit to its twentieth session the question of convening future meetings.

The Board had before it three items relating to monetary and financial issues. A Group of 77 draft resolution on debt and development problems of developing countries remanded to the Board from UNCTAD V along with related agenda items were remitted, on 20 October, to the twentieth session for further consideration. The Board on the same date remitted to the 1980 session of its Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade an item on international financial co-operation in the context of world trade and development, along with draft resolutions on the transfer of real resources to developing countries and on an effective system of international financial co-operation and a draft proposal on the establishment of a multilateral guarantee facility which had been submitted to the Conference by Cuba on behalf of the Group of 77.

By a decision of 17 October, the Board decided to defer to its twenty-first session in 1980 discussion of two draft resolutions on trade relations and trade flows among countries having different economic and social systems submitted to the Conference by the States members of Group D and of the Group of 77, respectively, and remitted to the Board by decision 116(V). It decided to convene a sessional committee annually to consider problems pertaining to this subject.

Pursuant to a request advanced by the Conference in resolution 102(V), the Board on 20 October authorized the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide facilities, on request and within available resources, for an exchange of views among countries on development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology.

On the same date, the Board requested its Committee on Transfer of Technology to recommend dates for and convene expert meetings on transfer and development of technology in the food-processing, energy, capital goods and industrial machinery sectors, in accordance with Conference resolution 112(V), and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit to the Committee studies on other sectors called for in the Conference's resolution, if possible by November 1980.

In its consideration of institutional issues, the Board adopted on 20 October the Philippines-introduced proposal remitted by UNCTAD V appealing to the General Assembly to endeavour to avoid scheduling meetings of bodies not head-quartered at Geneva whose work might affect that of bodies located there, in view of problems created by overburdening Geneva's conference facilities. On 23 November, at the second part of its nineteenth session, it recommended that the Assembly strengthen facilities at the United Nations Office at Geneva and the UNCTAD secrerariat to enable UNCTAD to fulfil its obligations regarding translation, interpretation and document distribution. (See also p. 600.)

Other Board decisions concerned UNCTAD's contribution to the preparation of the new international development strategy (see p. 471), tungsten (see p. 584), marine insurance (see p. 593), IPC (see p. 582) and the Special Programme on Trade Facilitation (see p. 579).

Follow-up decisions of the General Assembly

In discussing in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee the report of the Conference, which was placed before the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session, the majority of States, especially those belonging to the Group of 77 developing countries and the countries of Group D, expressed disappointment at the limited progress made by the Conference in achieving structural changes in the world economy and world trade. A number of States, however, notably those of Group B, including Austria, Canada, Japan, New Zealand and the Nordic countries, preferred to highlight the positive results of the Conference in the area of commodities, including progress towards establishment of the Common Fund, and in the areas of protectionism, the plight of the least developed, island and land-locked developing countries, economic co-operation among developing countries and internal institutional reforms. Others, such as Australia, Israel and Spain, attributed the Conference's limited results to the impractically broad and often political nature of its agenda.

On 19 December 1979, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/196, on the report of UNCTAD V. Noting with concern that the results reached by the Conference were limited, especially in the areas of major concern to developing countries, the Assembly called for urgent national and international action to implement the resolutions and decisions adopted by UNCTAD V and by the Trade and Development Board in October. It specifically endorsed resolutions: 131(V), on protectionism and structural adjustment, and the Board's decision on that subject; 124(V), on finalizing articles of agreement of the Common Fund under IPC and concluding negotiations on individual commodities; 129(V), on measures to increase official and private development assistance; 101(V), on revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; 102(V), and the Board's related decision, on the reverse transfer of technology; 106(V), relating to the Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences; 111(V) and 123(V), on actions to meet the needs of island and land-locked developing countries; 114(V), on institutional issues; 115(V), on including Arabic as an official and working language of UNCTAD; 127(V), on economic co-operation among developing countries, with emphasis on the 1980 special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries; and 107(V), requesting the Board to recommend the place, date and duration of the Conference's sixth session.

The Assembly also endorsed recommendations contained in Conference resolution 103(V), on restrictive business practices, including those relating to the collection and dissemination of information and preparation of studies on practices having adverse effects on international trade, in resolution 105(V) on international food trade, and in resolution 112(V), on the importance of continuing action to strengthen developing countries' technological capacity and thereby accelerate their technological transformation.

The Assembly also endorsed the decision in Conference resolution 122(V) to launch a Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries, underlining the importance to them of the proposed United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

It took note of: resolution 121(V), on shipping, by which the Conference had invited assistance to developing countries for ship acquisition, building up their merchant fleets, and port facilities and infrastructure; resolution 119(V), with its invitation to the UNCTAD Secretary-General to examine, analyse and report. on protectionism in the services sector and its effects on the growth of air transport in developing countries; resolution 125(V), concerning a study of a complementary facility for commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings; resolution 128(V), on international monetary reform, and in particular the decision to establish an ad hoc intergovernmental high-level group of experts to examine the future evolution of the international monetary system; and the requests in resolution 120(V) for studies by UNCTAD on developing-country participation in world shipping and the development of their merchant marines.

The Assembly welcomed the Board's decision to convene a sessional body to consider trade relations and trade flows among countries of different economic and social systems and urged UNCTAD members to participate.

The text of the resolution had been approved without vote in the Second Committee on 8 December, as submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on a draft, introduced by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77, which was subsequently withdrawn.

A separate vote was taken in the Committee at the request of the United States on the paragraph by which the Assembly called for urgent action to implement at the national and international levels the resolutions and decisions adopted by UNCTAD V and by the Trade and Development Board in October. The paragraph was adopted by 114 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The United States noted that it had not supported many of the Conference's resolutions and pointed out potential discrepancies between the summaries in the Assembly's resolution and the texts adopted by the Conference. The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United Kingdom felt that the paragraph in question failed to reflect the circumstances, including their reservations, in which the various resolutions had been adopted.

India, on behalf of the Group of 77, as well as Australia, Austria, Canada, Finland and Sweden, which none the less maintained their reservations on particular resolutions, expressed regret at the request for a separate vote on the paragraph. Bulgaria (on behalf of eight Eastern European countries and Mongolia), Ireland (on behalf of the States members of EEC), Norway and Spain indicated that, while they joined in approving the paragraph in question, they had not changed their individual views on resolutions, as expressed at the Conference. France noted that it had voted in favour on the understanding that the paragraph in question called for implementation of the resolutions as adopted at the Conference and reflecting the conditions in which they were adopted, including reservations expressed at the time, which it maintained.

Prior to adoption of the resolution as a whole in the plenary Assembly, the same paragraph was put to a separate recorded vote; it was adopted by 125 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The text adopted differed from the Group's original version in several respects. The Assembly by the final text noted with concern that the Conference's results were limited, especially in the areas of major concern to developing countries, rather than having noted with deep disappointment that the agreements reached were very limited in nature.

The final text contained the addition of "where appropriate" following a call for the conclusion of negotiations on individual commodity agreements or arrangements. By a paragraph on the industrial property system, the Assembly took note of the concern, rather than the demands, of the developing countries that their interests be taken into account when revising the Paris Convention.

The Assembly's endorsement of recommendations in UNCTAD resolution 103(V) on restrictive business practices was expanded to define more precisely the information to be collected and disseminated and the subject-matter of the marketing and distribution arrangement studies. It added a call for full implementation of resolution 102(V) on the reverse transfer of technology, and the Board's related decision.

The Assembly took note of, rather than endorsed, resolutions 121(V) on assistance for shipping and 119(V) on protectionism in the services sector, and a request that the UNCTAD Secretary-General submit a study of the matter to the Trade and Development Board was added to the latter provision.

It noted the requests in resolution 120(V) for studies and work by UNCTAD on participation of developing countries in world shipping and the development of their merchant marines, rather than, as formerly worded, reaffirm the need for implementation of the measures enumerated in that resolution to assist them to achieve an equitable participation in the transport of cargoes, and more especially bulk cargoes generated by their own foreign trade.

In addition, the Assembly, rather than urge that a study on a complementary facility for commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings envisaged by resolution 125(V) be completed as soon as possible, took note of the resolution concerning the study and requested that it be completed as soon as possible after the conclusion of the negotiations on the Common Fund. It took note of rather than welcomed resolution 128(V), on international monetary reform; an invitation to IMF to undertake studies and reviews was not mentioned in the earlier draft. The final text also omitted detailed reference, in its endorsement of resolution 114(V) on institutional reforms, to the content of that resolution.

India, again on behalf of the Group of 77, submitted to the Second Committee a draft resolution by which the Assembly would have emphasized the need to provide adequate resources for UNCTAD to implement the resolutions and decisions of its fifth session and requested the Secretary-General to adjust the programme budget for 1980-1981 accordingly. On 1 December, the Committee decided to refer this draft to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee for consideration in the context of its consideration of the United Nations programme budget.

At its 1979 regular session, the Assembly adopted a number of resolutions containing follow-up action on the resolutions of UNCTAD V. Among them were: resolution 34/132, on special assistance and benefits to Tonga; resolution 34/189, endorsing Conference decisions and recommendations on accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries; resolution 34/193, endorsing the Conference resolution on particular transport and access problems confronting Zaire; resolution 34/198, on action related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries; resolution 34/199, on the multilateral trade negotiations; resolution 34/200, endorsing the Conference's resolution and the Trade and Development Board's decision on development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology; resolution 34/202, on economic co-operation among developing countries and on preparations for a special session of the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries; resolution 34/203, on convening a United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 1981 to adopt UNCTAD's Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s; resolution 34/205, on an action programme in favour of developing island countries; resolution 34/210, on special measures in f&our of the least developed among the developing countries; and resolution 34/216, on international monetary reform. General trade and development questions

Effects of inflation on development

Noting with regret that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), at its May/June 1979 session at Manila, Philippines, had not taken a firm decision on international policy measures to combat the world inflationary phenomenon, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/197 of 19 December, stated that it recognized that the current world inflationary process seriously affected the economies of the developing countries because it increased the cost of their imports, destabilized commodity export earnings, caused fluctuations in world exchange rates, increased the developing countries' current account deficits and debt burdens, reduced the flow of official development assistance, adversely affected the net flow of real resources and reduced the real value of monetary reserves.

The Assembly affirmed the urgent need to implement, particularly in industrialized countries, policies to control inflation, including the elimination of protectionism, reform of fiscal and monetary policies, accelerated transfer of real resources to developing countries, structural adjustments and the achievement of sustained real economic growth. It requested the Trade and Development Board to discuss measures to combat the world inflationary phenomenon and accelerate the real growth of developing countries and increase their import capacity. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General, with expert assistance if necessary, to prepare a report on the subject.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 112 to 0, with 20 abstentions; it had been approved in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 13 December by 97 votes to 0, with 20 abstentions. The draft text had been submitted by India on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

The sponsors orally revised their draft before the vote in the Committee, modifying a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly, rather than recalling a decision to begin global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development to deal with raw materials, energy, trade, development and financial and monetary questions, recalled resolutions 34/138 and 34/139 of 14 December 1979 on those negotiations (for page references to texts, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Ireland, on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Community, which had requested the vote in the Committee, and the United States indicated that they were unable to support the resolution, which' they considered contentious and inaccurate. They regretted, as did Australia and Spain, that sufficient time had not been available for consultations or negotiations on the text. Australia, however, supported the resolution in the conviction that implementation of anti-inflationary policies was of the utmost urgency, although it felt that the text would have benefited by including the perspective of the developed countries.

Bulgaria, on behalf also of seven other Eastern European countries—the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR—and Mongolia, stated that they had voted in favour of the resolution because of its stress on the negative effects of the world inflationary phenomenon on the economies of developing countries., Inflation, it stated, was the direct result of the capitalist system and of the military and monetary policies of the Western imperialist countries.

Turkey regretted the lack of consensus on the resolution, which it supported, and stressed the need for transfer of real resources to developing countries, which would benefit the world economy by creating new demand for the capital goods of the industrialized countries.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

By resolution 127(V) of 3 June 1979 (see p. 571), which the General Assembly endorsed by resolution 34/196 of 19 December (see p. 574), UNTAD decided to convene a special session of the Committee on Economic Cooperation among Developing Countries early in 1980, preceded by three preparatory meetings of regional governmental experts of developing countries to consider on a priority basis establishment of a global system of trade preferences and multinational marketing arrangements among developing countries, and co-operation among their State trading organizations.

At the first part of its nineteenth session at Geneva in October 1979, the Trade and Development Board decided to remit to its 1980 session the question of convening and organizing future meetings of governmental experts from developing countries, and other countries if they so wished, on specific aspects of interregional economic co-operation among developing countries.

By resolution 34/202 of 19 December on the subject, the Assembly urged developed countries and international organizations to give appropriate support and assistance for economic cooperation among developing countries in fulfilment of Assembly and UNCTAD resolutions, including resolution 127(V). It also requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to undertake as a matter of priority the necessary preparations for the Committee's special session, in particular the governmental expert meetings, and further to intensify UNCTAD's efforts in support of programmes of economic co-operation among developing countries, in close collaboration with other United Nations organizations and the regional intergovernmental organizations of the countries concerned. (For details, see p. 488; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Special Programme on Trade Facilitation

The Trade and Development Board at its October meetings considered a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on the work of the Special Programme on Trade Facilitation (FALPRO), whose three main functions were: providing a cross-sectoral secretariat within UNCTAD; promoting co-operation with the Economic Commission for Europe and the other regional commissions; and supervising and supporting technical cooperation within developing countries.

On 18 October, the Board decided to continue and intensify within UNCTAD's resources the work on facilitating trade procedures and documentation undertaken through FALPRO, ensuring the full participation of developing countries.

Particular problems facing Zaire

By its resolution 110(V) of 3 June (see p. 572), UNCTAD invited its Secretary-General to support the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in studying the problems facing Zaire of transit, transport and access to foreign markets and practical measures to reduce the high transport cost of Zaire's foreign trade.

On 19 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/193, endorsed UNCTAD's resolution and requested the United Nations Secretary-General to take steps to enable ECA to accelerate implementation of that resolution; he was to report to the Assembly in 1980.

The resolution was submitted, with an oral drafting change, by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on behalf of 52 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), and had been approved without vote on 27 November by the Second Committee; it was likewise adopted by the Assembly.

The USSR, speaking on behalf of eight Eastern European countries and Mongolia, indicated that they had not opposed its adoption without vote on the understanding that the actions called for would fall under the existing work of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988) and would not involve additional expenditure from the United Nations regular budget.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling its resolutions 34/138 and 34/139 of 14 December 1979 on the global negotiations relating to international economic co-operation for development to deal with raw materials, energy, trade, development and financial and monetary questions,

Recalling its resolution 32/175 of 19 December 1977, in which it requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to establish a group of high-level governmental experts to prepare a study of the inflationary phenomenon and to transmit it, together with the comments of the Trade and Development Board, to the General Assembly, so that the Assembly might decide what action should be taken, including the possibility of holding a world conference on inflation,

Recalling its resolution 33/155 of 20 December 1978, in which it, inter alia, took note of the report of the Group of Highlevel Governmental Experts on the Effects of the World Inflationary Phenomenon on the Development Process,

Noting with regret that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its fifth session, did not take a firm decision on international policy measures to combat the world inflationary phenomenon or on the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Experts,

Recalling also Trade and Development Board decision 144(XVI) of 23 October 1976, entitled "Arrangements to keep under review interrelated problems in the field of international trade and related areas of international economic cooperation, in particular development finance and monetary issues," in which, inter alia, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was requested to keep such problems under continuous review,

Bearing in mind that deteriorating international economic conditions and the high rates of world inflation are hindering the growth of the economies of all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Bearing in mind also that inflation internationally transmitted to the developing countries is acquiring increasingly alarming proportions,

Recognizing the fundamental interconnexion between inflationary pressures, protectionism, growth, balanceof-payments disequilibrium and the uncontrolled creation of international monetary liquidity,

Taking note of the proposal made by the Government of Iraq concerning the establishment of an international fund to combat the adverse effects of imported inflation on the economies of the developing countries,

- 1. Recognizes that the present world inflationary process seriously affects the economies of the developing countries because, inter alia:
- (a) It has increased the cost of their essential imports, particularly capital goods and manufactures;
- (b) It has led to instability in the export earnings of their essential commodities;
- (c) It has caused considerable fluctuations in the exchange rates of the countries with greater trading activity, with resultant adverse effects on world trade, particularly on the exports of the developing countries;
- (d) It has substantially increased the current account deficit and the debt burden of the developing countries;
- (e) It has reduced the real value of the flow of official development assistance;
- (f) It has adversely affected the net flow of real resources, thereby aggravating the trade and development problems of the developing countries;
- (g) It has reduced the real value of the monetary reserves of the developing countries;
- 2. Affirms, therefore, the urgent need for the implementation of policies, particularly by industrialized countries, to control inflation by, inter alia, such measures as elimination of protectionism, fiscal and monetary policies, acceleration of the transfer of real resources to developing countries, structural adjustments and sustained real economic growth;
- 3. Requests the Trade and Development Board, when considering the item entitled "Interdependence of trade problems, development finance and the international monetary system," which it maintains on its agenda by virtue of its decision 144(XVI), to discuss measures to combat the world inflationary phenomenon with a view to accelerating the real growth of the developing countries and increasing their import capacity in a context of just and stable financial markets;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, with the assistance of experts, if necessary, as envisaged in Trade and Development Board decision 144(XVI), to prepare a report on this subject for consideration by the Trade and Development Board and subsequently by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution 293(XIII) adopted on 26 February 1977 by the Economic Commission for Africa at its thirteenth session and fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers, and Economic and Social Council decision 249(LXIII) of 25 July 1977,

Recalling also its resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977, in which it recalled Economic and Social Council resolution 2097(LXIII) of 29 July 1977, proclaiming the period 1978-1988 Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Recalling further resolution 110(V), adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth session, held at Manila from 7 May to 3 June 1979,

Aware of the particular difficulties confronting Zaire as a result of the problems encountered by its foreign trade with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets,

Convinced that this situation is prejudicial to the development of the Zairian economy,

- 1. Endorses resolution 110(V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the particular problems facing Zaire with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to enable the Economic Commission for Africa to accelerate the implementation of that resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Financing related to trade and the international monetary system

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), at its May/June 1979 session at Manila, Philippines, adopted two resolutions and a decision relating to international monetary and financial issues.

By resolution 128 (V), on international monetary reform, the Conference invited the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to review and modify its policies with respect to developing countries. It reaffirmed the need for: a more effective and symmetrical international adjustment process: improvements in the composition and international surveillance of global liquidity, with the special drawing right (SDR) as the principal reserve asset and corresponding changes in the role of gold and reserve currencies; promotion of a net flow of real resources to developing countries and examination of the establishment of a development link in the context of allocating SDRs based on long-term global liquidity needs; and maintenance of the real value of developing countries' financial assets. The Conference also decided to establish within UNCTAD an ad hoc intergovernmental high-level expert group to examine fundamental issues in this area. (For further details, see p. 563.)

By resolution 129(V), on the transfer of real resources to developing countries, the Conference outlined measures to increase flows of bilateral official development assistance, multilateral assistance and private capital to developing countries and called for substantially increased transfers of resources to these countries as an indispensable factor in accelerating their development and stimulating global economic activity. The Conference also instructed its Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade to monitor, keep under review and report regularly on bilateral official development assistance measures. (For further details, see p. 564.)

By decision 130(V), the Conference decided that its Committee on Invisibles, at its 1980 regular session, should establish a sessional committee to give technical consideration to the feasibility of establishing an export credit guarantee facility. (For further details, see p. 565.)

A proposal for the establishment of a multilateral guarantee facility for loans to developing countries, submitted by Cuba on behalf of the member States of UNCTAD belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was remitted by the Conference to its permanent machinery for consideration. The Trade and Development Board, at its October 1979 session, remitted the proposal to its Committee on Invisibles for consideration in 1980.

By another decision of 20 October, the Board submitted to the Committee on Invisibles an item remanded to it by the Conference, on a review of the current system of international financial co-operation in the context of world trade and development and consideration of ways to make it more effective for the development of developing countries. Included was a draft resolution on an effective system of international financial co-operation, submitted to UNCTAD by Cuba on behalf of the Group of 77.

The Board again considered in October a 1977 report on the work of a Group of Governmental Experts on the Concepts of the Present Aid and Flow Targets. ¹² It determined, by a decision of 20 October, that the Group could meet as required and outlined its functions (see p. 472).

On 19 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/216, welcomed with satisfaction the establishment, by UNCTAD resolution 128(V), of an ad hoc intergovernmental high-level expert group on the future evolution of the international monetary system and requested that its report, with the Board's comments, be made available. The Assembly reiterated this request on the same day in adopting resolution 34/196, on the report of the Conference, by which it took note of resolution 128(V) and of the invitation therein to IMF to undertake specific studies and reviews relating to international monetary reform. (For page references to texts of resolutions 34/196 and 34/216, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Questions relating to merchandise trade

Commodities

Integrated Programme for Commodities

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) continued its activities related to commodities in 1979 within the framework of resolution 93(IV) on the Integrated Programme for Commodities (IPC), adopted at its fourth session in 1976, 13 and resolution 124(V), adopted during its fifth session (known as UNCTAD V) held in May/June at Manila, Philippines. (For details of resolution 124(V), see p. 561.)

13 See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 394.

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee for the Integrated Programme for Commodities met at Geneva on 22 March and on 17 and 18 December 1979 to review the progress of negotiations under IPC and to co-ordinate the schedule of meetings on commodities through 1980. By a resolution of 18 December, the Committee decided to undertake, at its tenth session scheduled for June 1980, a comprehensive review of the progress of work under IPC.

At its tenth special session, in March 1979, the Trade and Development Board took note of and remitted to UNCTAD the report of the March session of the Ad Hoc Committee. On 20 October, the Board at its nineteenth session decided to continue the Ad Hoc Committee through 1980 and to entrust the responsibility for further work on IPC beyond that date to the Committee on Commodities, as part of UNCTAD's regular work programme.

ACTION ON INDIVIDUAL COMMODITIES

During 1979, 12 preparatory and associated meetings on eight individual commodities and commodity groups were held at Geneva within the framework of IPC.

At a preparatory meeting on cotton, held from 17 to 21 September, the majority of developing producing/exporting and some developed importing countries favoured international action to stabilize world cotton prices. The meeting agreed that a comprehensive over-all programme of international action on cotton should include measures complementary to price stabilization, including research and development, market promotion and expanded participation by developing countries in cotton marketing and distribution systems.

Working groups on two hard fibres—abaca and coir—met from 19 to 23 February to examine proposals for a technical improvement programme for those commodities. On their recommendations, technical consultations by Government-nominated experts were convened in Rome by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in collaboration with UNCTAD, from 10 to 21 September. These meetings carried out detailed technical examinations of project proposals. The issue of the stabilization of the hard-fibres markets was deferred to a later preparatory meeting.

A preparatory meeting from 23 to 28 April on jute and jute products produced an agreed conclusion to proceed to negotiations on an international jute agreement as soon as possible; the same conclusion had been reached at a seminar of jute-producing countries at Kathmandu, Nepal, from 26 to 28 February. The preparatory meeting further concluded that such an agreement should provide for the establishment of an international jute organization concerned with research and development, market promotion and intelligence, cost reduction, competition with synthetics and, failing a prior agreement on the subject, the stabilization of prices and supplies. A regional consultative meeting of juteproducing countries was held at Bangkok, Thailand, from 3 to 6 September and prepared a draft of an international agreement for a postpreparatory meeting, held at Geneva from 5 to 9 November. At that meeting the Secretary-General of UNCTAD was requested to convene a pre-negotiating meeting on jute to clarify issues, consider drafts for an international agreement and work out the time schedule for a negotiating conference.

An intergovernmental group of experts on tea, meeting from 3 to 7 December, considered conclusions reached earlier by a seminar of producing countries held in Malawi from 12 to 16 November, and recommended that intensive work should continue. towards an international agreement. At a preparatory meeting immediately following, from 10 to 13 December at Geneva, it was agreed that the proposals of the producing countries, as well as questions of market promotion, research and development and similar measures, should be studied in detail. Meetings in 1980 would be held with a view to deciding on ways to advance an international agreement.

A preparatory meeting on tropical timber, held from 22 to 26 October, examined four previously identified elements—research and development, expansion of processing by producing developing countries, reforestation and forest management, and market fluctuations—as a basis for an international arrangement.

Agreements to proceed with the development of over-all programmes of research and development for vegetable oils and oilseeds was reached at a preparatory meeting from 8 to 11 October, which agreed on criteria for the selection of such projects and on an initial timetable for programme development.

Discussions of international measures relating to copper—including proposals to negotiate an international agreement to stabilize the market by means of buffer stocking and other measures—were held at preparatory meetings from 26 February to 2 March and from 24 to 28 September and at an intergovernmental expert group meeting from 25 June to 6 July, but wide differences remained concerning the need for international action and the forms which it might take.

Pursuant to UNCTAD resolution 104(V), by which the Conference called for meetings preparatory to a negotiating conference on tungsten, a working group met from 10 to 14 September. It reported to the Trade and Development Board that it had been unable to reach a consensus on a recommendation on convening the conference. (For details of resolution 104(V), see p. 561.)

On 20 October, the Board requested the Committee on Tungsten to undertake early in 1980 a thorough review of work to date on stabilizing the tungsten market, with a view to determining courses of action to enable Governments of producer and consumer countries to reach agreement on stabilization measures and to arrive at an early decision on the convening of a negotiating conference.

By resolution 125(V), UNCTAD asked its Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Monetary Fund, to prepare a detailed study for operation of a complementary facility, additional to actions taken under IPC to deal with price stabilization problems, to compensate for shortfalls in earnings of each commodity. The study was to be considered by the Committee on Commodities. (See also p. 562.)

The Assembly noted this resolution when it adopted resolution 34/196 on 19 December, and asked that the study be completed as soon as possible after the conclusion of negotiations on the Common Fund (for details, see p. 574).

PREPARATORY WORK ON A COMMON FUND

The United Nations Negotiating Conference on a Common Fund under the Integrated Programme for Commodities held its third session at Geneva from 12 to 19 March 1979.

On 19 March, the Conference adopted by consensus a resolution annexing an outline of the fundamental elements of the Common Fund, to serve as a basis for further work leading to the drafting of its final articles of agreement. Included in the outline were the objectives and purposes of the proposed Fund, its financial resources and capital structure, and its organization, management and voting procedures. The Fund was to be established as a new entity and key instrument for attaining the agreed objectives of IPC embodied in UNCTAD resolution 93(IV) by facilitating the conclusion and functioning of international commodity agreements and arrangements, particularly on commodities of special interest to developing countries.

Other key elements outlined by the Negotiating Conference included: a "first window," or account, of $400 million, funded by direct Government contributions, to finance international buffer stocks and internationally co-ordinated national stocks; and a "second window," whose operation would be facilitated by a Consultative Committee, with targeted resources of $350 million from direct Government and voluntary contributions, to finance measures other than stocking, such as research and development and productivity and marketing improvements.

The Negotiating Conference further asked that voluntary pledges to the second window be indicated at UNCTAD V. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene an Interim Committee of the Negotiating Conference, open to all States members of UNCTAD, to consider the elements of the outline requiring further elaboration, to draft articles of agreement for the Common Fund and to recommend preparatory work needed to bring the Fund into operation. It also asked him to reconvene the Negotiating Conference before the end of the year.

By resolution 124(V), UNCTAD took note of the Negotiating Conference's resolution, welcomed pledges to and declarations of intent for the second window, called upon all UNCTAD member States to participate actively in, and invited organizations to co-operate with, the Interim Committee, and urged States to exert the requisite political will to bring about the establishment of the Fund. (For further details, see p. 561.)

The Interim Committee held three sessions in 1979—from 3 to 14 September, 22 October to 2 November and 3 to 14 December.

On 19 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/196 on the report of UNCTAD V (for details, see p. 574), endorsed UNCTAD's resolution and welcomed the pledges and declarations of intent, including an announcement by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) in October that OPEC members were willing to pay through the OPEC Special Fund the equal portion of the mandatory contribution of all the least developed countries in interest-free loans, and to make a voluntary contribution to the second window which would raise the total OPEC commitment to the Common Fund to $100 million. The Assembly urged other countries and institutions to indicate their intentions to contribute to the Fund prior to the next session of the Negotiating Conference.

The Trade and Development Board, at the second part of its nineteenth session, held at Geneva on 23 November 1979, decided to schedule a fourth session of the Interim Committee of the Negotiating Conference in February 1980 and to postpone until April 1980 the fourth session of the Negotiating Conference. At the same session the Board, on the proposal of the Interim Committee, recommended that the General Assembly advance the necessary funds up to $1.8 million for the preparatory work to bring the Common Fund into operation.

The Assembly, by decision 34/446, adopted without vote on 19 December, took note of the Board's resolution and decided to make appropriate financial arrangements for its implementation, up to a total of $1.8 million. This decision was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on the proposal, following informal consultations, of a Vice-Chairman and approved without vote on 8 December.

The USSR reaffirmed reservations by the countries of Eastern Europe expressed at the Board's November meeting. It was premature to allocate resources; the preparatory work for the Common Fund should be considered at the Interim Committee's fourth session.

Conferences, meetings and agreements

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE TO NEGOTIATE
AN INTERNATIONAL ARRANGEMENT TO REPLACE
THE INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT, 1971

The third part of the United Nations Conference to Negotiate an International Arrangement to Replace the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended, was held at Geneva from 22 January to 15 February 1979. On 14 February, the Conference, having failed to reach agreement on a new international arrangement, decided to adjourn and adopted a resolution by which it requested the UNCTAD secretariat, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the International Wheat Council, to prepare a document on the current status of the work of the Conference and further requested the Wheat Council, once it was satisfied that the necessary conditions existed for resuming negotiations, to request the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to reconvene the Conference. It also recommended that the Wheat Council and the Food Aid Committee should, respectively, extend the 1971 Wheat Trade Convention and the 1971 Food Aid Convention, which together constituted the International Wheat Agreement of 1971.

By resolution 126(V) (see p. 563), UNCTAD on 3 June took note of the progress made at the third part of the Conference and called on all participating countries to intensify the process of consultation and preparation, with a view to resuming the negotiations as soon as possible.

(See also p. 658.)

UNITED NATIONS COCOA CONFERENCE

The United Nations Cocoa Conference, 1979, held three series of meetings at Geneva (29 January to 23 February, 16 July to 2 August and 19 to 30 November) to negotiate an international agreement to replace the International Cocoa Agreement of 1975.

On 15 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/23, by which it urged all States participating in the Cocoa Conference to intensify consultations in preparation for the third part of the Conference, to be held later that month, and invited them to show the necessary political will on outstanding questions to create conditions conducive to the speedy and successful conclusion of negotiations on the agreement.

The resolution had been approved on 9 November, also without vote, by the Second Committee, with a recommendation that it be adopted by the Assembly as a matter of priority in view of the imminent resumption of the Conference. The draft was sponsored by Brazil, the Central African Republic, Colombia, the Congo, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, Mexico, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, Sao Tome and Principe, Togo, the United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela and Zaire. The sponsors orally modified a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly considered that the question of commodities, in particular cocoa, had been considered in depth at UNCTAD by producers and consumers but that no final agreement on cocoa had been reached-rather than that insufficient progress had been achieved.

On 30 November, the Conference, having reached agreement at its third part on most major issues aside from the price range for the new arrangement, decided to adjourn and adopted a resolution by which it requested the International Cocoa Council to seek intensified negotiations, with a view to requesting the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to reconvene the Conference for a fourth session.

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON OLIVE OIL

The United Nations Conference on Olive Oil, 1979, met at Geneva from 20 to 30 March to negotiate a new international olive oil agreement to replace the International Olive Oil Agreement of 1963, as extended. The Conference had before it the draft text of a new agreement prepared by a Special Committee of the International Olive Oil Council, in accordance with a request of the Conference at its 1978 session.

On 30 March, the Conference established the text of the International Olive Oil Agreement, 1979, and adopted two resolutions. By the first, it requested its Legal Drafting Committee to arrange and concord the articles in the various authentic languages, and, by the second, requested that Arabic, English, French, Italian and Spanish texts, authenticated by the Conference Secretary, be transmitted to the Government of Spain as the depositary and that the Agreement be opened for signature at Madrid from 1 July through 16 November 1979 and be registered with the United Nations Secretary-General upon its entry into force.

The Agreement consisted of a preamble and 50 articles distributed among 15 chapters. Its aims, relying on consultative mechanisms and administered by an International Olive Oil Council, were to foster research and development, to facilitate the study and application of measures for expanding the international olive oil trade and balancing production and consumption, to control the negative effects associated with fluctuations in supply levels, to forestall and, if appropriate, combat unfair competitive practices, to foster co-ordination of production and marketing policies, to study the application of other products of the olive tree, and to improve market access, reliability of supply, market structures, information procedures, and marketing, distribution and transport systems.

The Agreement was to enter into force between signing Governments on 1 January 1980, or at any time up to 12 months thereafter, if the signers included six countries accounting together for at least 60 per cent of world olive oil production: it was to remain in force until 31 December 1984, unless extended.

UNITED NATIONS NATURAL RUBBER CONFERENCE

The United Nations Natural Rubber Conference, 1978, held its second, third and fourth sessions at Geneva in 1979 from 27 March to 12 April, 25 June to 13 July and 24 September to 6 October. At the close of its fourth session, the Conference established the text of the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1979, and adopted two resolutions: by the first, it requested its Legal Drafting Committee to arrange and concord the articles; by the second, it requested that the authenticated Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts be forwarded through the United Nations Secretary-General, the depositary, to the Governments invited to the Conference for their consideration and that he arrange for the Agreement to be opened for signature at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 2 January through 30 June 1980. It further invited Governments to deposit instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval not later than 30 September 1980 or notify that they would apply the Agreement provisionally.

The Agreement—the first new international commodity agreement to be negotiated within the framework of IPC—had as its main objective the stabilization of conditions in the international natural rubber trade by limiting price fluctuations. Rubber prices were to be stabilized under the Agreement by means of an international buffer stock of 550,000 metric tons to be financed equally by exporting and importing countries. The Agreement incorporated a reference price, to be reviewed every 18 months by the International Natural Rubber Council, the administering authority, and revised automatically in accordance with market trends and/or net changes in the buffer stock; high and low trigger prices at which intervention in the market by the Buffer Stock Manager was mandated by the Agreement.

The Agreement was to enter into force on 1 October 1980, or within two years thereafter—provisionally if and when ratified or otherwise approved by Governments accounting for 65 per cent, and definitively if by Governments accounting for 80 per cent, of net exports and imports of natural rubber world-wide—and it was to remain in effect for five years, unless previously terminated or extended.

International food trade

By resolution 105(V) of 1 June, UNCTAD urged substantially increased investment and technical assistance to accelerate food production in developing countries and efforts to increase their food exports and to stabilize prices at equitable levels through, inter alia, the early conclusion of appropriate international agreements on food commodities. It also requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to review regularly all matter pertaining to international food trade. (See also p. 561.)

The recommendations contained in UNCTAD's resolution were endorsed by the General Assembly on 19 December by resolution 34/196 (see p. 574).

United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices

On 26 March 1979, the Trade and Development Board, at its tenth special session, took note of a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1978,¹⁴ by which the Assembly had decided to convene, under the auspices of UNCTAD, a United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices to negotiate multilaterally agreed rules and principles to control restrictive business practices having adverse effects on international trade, particularly of developing countries. The Board authorized the Third Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices to transmit the report on the work of its sixth, and final, session, held at Geneva from 17 to 27 April 1979, to UNCTAD V.

On 30 May, UNCTAD, by resolution 103(V), welcomed the Expert Group's proposals and recommendations for rules and principles. It decided to convene the United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices in the last quarter of 1979, requested its Secretary-General to undertake studies on the subject, decided that continued collection and dissemination of information on restrictive business practices having adverse effects on the international trade and economic development of developing countries and the elaboration of a model law on the subject should be carried out within the framework of UNCTAD, and requested the Conference to make recommendations on the institutional aspects of future work in this area. (For further details, see

By decision 134(V) of 3 June, UNCTAD decided that the Conference should meet in November/December 1979, preceded by two days of consultations in September.

The General Assembly on 19 December, by resolution 34/196 (see p. 574), endorsed UNCTAD's recommendations, including those concerning the collection and dissemination of information and the preparation of studies on marketing and distribution arrangements in respect of export and import transactions and exclusive-dealing arrangements resulting in abuse of dominant position of market power.

The United Nations Conference on Restrictive Business Practices met at Geneva from 19 November to 8 December 1979. It established a Negotiating Group to facilitate negotiations on a set of agreed principles and rules on the problem. On 8 December, the Conference adopted a resolution recognizing the need for a further two-week session and requested that the necessary arrangements be made.

Pursuant to this request, the Assembly, by decision 34/447 of 19 December, decided to convene the resumed session for two weeks in 1980 and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take the appropriate actions, including consultation procedures. The decision had been approved on 13 December by the Second Committee, as submitted by its Chairman. Approval in both bodies was without vote.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that' the cost of the resumed session should be met from existing funds or should be offset by corresponding savings within the secretariat. The extension of the Conference, they noted, was evidence of UNCTAD's questionable practice of convening expensive conferences without proper preparation.

Protectionism

By resolution 131(V) of 3 June, UNCTAD agreed on a programme of action for structural adjustment related to trade and policies, and measures to deal with the problem of protectionism, including a call for continued resistance to protectionist pressures and full implementation and strict adherence by developed countries of the standstill provisions they had accepted, in particular concerning imports from developing countries. The Conference requested the Trade and Development Board and its subsidiary bodies to continue reviewing developments involving trade restrictions and to formulate recommendations on the problem of protectionism. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to continue compiling and updating an inventory of non-tariff barriers and their effects on the trade of developing countries. (For further details, see p. 560.)

On 20 October, the Board, decided to continue to review at its 1980 regular session developments involving trade restrictions with a view to formulating recommendations on protectionism.

In a related action, UNCTAD, on 3 June, adopted resolution 119(V), on protectionism in the services sector, by which it called on developed countries to eliminate all discriminatory and unfair practices, in particular in the areas of transport, banking and insurance, and requested its Secretary-General to examine urgently the effects of unfair civil aviation practices on the growth of air transport, including air cargo and tourism in the developing countries. (For further details, see p. 572.)

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/196 of 19 December (see p. 574), endorsed UNCTAD resolution 131(V) and the Board's related decision and called for their full implementation by Governments. It also took note of resolution 119(V) and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit the requested study to the Board.

A draft resolution on protectionism and structural adjustment was introduced by India in the Second Committee at the Assembly's 1979 session on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. By this text, the Assembly would have urged developed countries to implement fully and adhere strictly to the standstill provisions they had accepted by refraining from introducing new tariff and non-tariff barriers affecting developing-country exports and to reduce substantially the tariff escalation so as to improve market access for these countries' manufactures and semi-manufactures. The Assembly would have: called on developed countries promptly to eliminate existing barriers, and particularly quantitative restrictions and other measures having equivalent effect on developing countries' exports; and agreed that structural adjustment should be a constant, global process, facilitated by conscious efforts of the international community, in particular the developed countries, to ensure accelerated and sustained over-all growth for developing countries, including the development and diversification of their economies and an effective international division of labour involving inter- and intra-industry specialization, enabling those countries to secure an increase in their share of world trade, in processed goods and in manufacturing. Developed countries would have been called on to implement longterm industrial, structural adjustment policies to facilitate establishment of an equitable and effective international division of labour, and UNCTAD would have been requested speedily to organize the annual review of global patterns of production and trade as called for in Conference resolution 131(V). The Assembly would have called on UNCTAD member States to undertake sectoral reviews within the framework of these annual reviews and invited UNCTAD to recommend alternatives to be applied by developing countries; UNCTAD would have been requested to review continuously developments involving, and make recommendations on, trade restrictions affecting developing countries' exports. The review would also monitor the evolution of developed countries' industrial capacity with a view to making recommendations on measures that would avoid protectionist demands.

The sponsors did not seek an Assembly decision on the text at the current session.

On 20 October, the Trade and Development Board transmitted to the Committee on Manufactures agenda items, remitted from UNCTAD V, on measures to expand and diversify the export trade of developing countries in manufactures and semi-manufactures and on review of the implementation of Conference resolutions in this area adopted at its fourth session in 1976.

An UNCTAD item on review and evaluation of the generalized system of preferences was remitted to the Special Committee on Preferences.

An expert group jointly convened by the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)—the Ad Hoc UNCTAD/UNIDO Group of Experts on Trade and Trade-related Aspects of Industrial Collaboration Arrangements—met at Geneva from 22 to 26 October. It agreed on the need to strengthen industrial co-operation and trade between developed and developing countries in order to facilitate the latter's industrialization and economic development and to improve international economic relations. The Group recommended that work be undertaken jointly to: study the concept of comparative advantage; examine buyback agreements and transfer-of-technology terms in enterprise-to-enterprise arrangements and the characteristics of such agreements; examine bilateral, subregional, regional and interregional trade as well as industrial and other co-operation arrangements and propose new forms; identify compensatory and adjustment measures; and examine ways to improve the flow of information. The Group felt a further meeting would be useful.

Multilateral trade negotiations

The so-called Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations, initiated at a ministerial meeting in Tokyo in 1973¹⁵ and conducted under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), concluded in 1979.

By a resolution of 29 January 1979, 16 the General Assembly called on developed countries to abide by the agreements arrived at in Tokyo regarding, in particular, non-reciprocity and special and differential treatment for developing countries, and declared that the results of the negotiations must reflect substantial reduction and ultimate abolition of tariff and non-tariff restrictions against the trade of developing countries, removal of discriminatory and escalatory barriers against them, selective exemptions from safeguard measures and improvement in the generalized system of preferences to provide wider coverage and deeper tariff cuts.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to report to it at its 1979 regular session on the evaluation of the multilateral trade negotiations carried out by UNCTAD V.

Following the final meeting on 11 and 12 April of the GATT Trade Negotiations Committee, the body responsible for over-all supervision of the Tokyo Round, UNCTAD considered a report prepared by its secretariat on the multilateral trade negotiations, evaluating them and containing recommendations for further work. Although the Conference did not adopt a resolution on this topic, on 3 June, by decision 132(V) (see p. 561), it requested the Trade and Development Board to make a global evaluation of the negotiations on the basis of a report by its Secretary-General and other documentation.

In the absence of an agreed resolution, a declaration was adopted at the Conference by the Group of 77, stressing the developing countries' concern that the developed countries had failed to respond to their interests in the conduct of the negotiations in accordance with the commitments of the Tokyo Declaration,¹⁷ and declared that they must take urgent action to rectify, before the adoption of the final instruments, specific situations which had arisen from the procedures and results of the negotiations.

In an oral statement to the Conference, the spokesman for the industrialized market-economy countries of Group B said they considered the multilateral trade negotiations to be an important landmark in efforts to maintain and improve the system of open world trade, with special significance for the trade of all countries, including the developing countries. Australia, however, said it felt that in some important respects the results of the negotiations had been unbalanced; benefits had fallen unevenly both as to countries and as to sectors, and it could not therefore support the outcome as enthusiastically as the Group B spokesman.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly in October, evaluating the multilateral trade negotiations carried out at UNCTAD V and recording the views of the Group of 77, Group B, the Eastern European countries of Group D and Mongolia, and international organizations.

Group D countries considered that the results of the negotiations fell far short of the goals set in Tokyo, while noting that, in continued efforts to revise the rules and principles of international trade to eliminate commercial discrimination and protectionism, new norms and principles should not be geared exclusively to the interests of any single group of countries.

Among international organizations, GATT noted that the results of the negotiations represented a substantial liberalization of trade and a significant improvement in trading conditions for developing countries, though leaving much room for further advances, particularly with respect to quantitative restrictions on tropical products, textiles, shoes and other exports of developing countries, and the reduction of remaining tariff barriers.

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development stated that the completed Tokyo Round represented some areas of genuine progress, a few areas of major concern and an opportunity to build further on the progress made. The Bank called for detailed analyses by GATT and UNCTAD, as well as by individual Governments, of the agreements, regular review of developments in the international trading system, and further negotiations on areas of trade policy not covered in the Tokyo Round.

At its October session, the Trade and Development Board reviewed developments in the negotiations subsequent to UNCTAD V, on the basis of a preliminary report by its secretariat, including developments in the negotiations on safeguards and on various agreements submitted with alternative texts. On 20 October, the Board decided to conduct its global evaluation of the results of the multilateral trade negotiations; on the basis of the full report to be prepared by its Secretary-General and other documentation, at its twentieth (1980) session.

From 26 to 29 November, the Contracting Parties to GATT met and formally closed the Tokyo Round. Taking the final results into account, as well as a comprehensive report on the Round by the Director-General of GATT submitted to it in accordance with its request of 29 January, 18 the General Assembly, on 19 December, adopted by a recorded vote of 112 to 1, with 22 abstentions, resolution 34/199. The Assembly thereby noted with deep concern that the developed country Contracting Parties to GATT had not taken fully into account in all areas of negotiation in the multilateral trade negotiations the interests and concerns of the developing countries, especially the least developed. It noted with particular concern that the negotiations aimed at establishing an improved legal framework for the conduct of international trade more responsive to the needs and aspirations of developing countries had had disappointing results, and affirmed that the interests and rights of those countries would have to be fully safeguarded in implementing the results of the negotiations. The Assembly urged that negotiations on a safeguards code should be speedily concluded to provide for greater discipline and non-discriminatory rules for the use of safeguard measures, to enable developing countries to participate in the results of the negotiations on an equitable basis, and reiterated the need for systematic negotiations to eliminate quantitative restrictions and other barriers against developing countries' exports and until the objectives and commitments of the Tokyo Declaration were achieved.

The Assembly requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the Trade and Development Board in 1980, a comprehensive report on the results of the multilateral trade negotiations, with special emphasis on sectors in which the results had not fully responded to the concerns and interests of developing countries, for the purpose of undertaking a global evaluation of the negotiations and identifying possible courses of action for attaining those countries' objectives.

Finally, the Assembly recommended that the United Nations Development Programme

¹⁷ See footnote 15.

¹⁸ See footnote 16.

(UNDP) favourably consider requests for technical assistance, including regional and interregional projects, to ensure developing countries the full benefit of the results of the negotiations, and recommended that negotiations continue, upon their request.

Orally revised by the sponsors, the final provision replaced an earlier text recommending that provisions be made to enable UNCTAD to provide the necessary technical assistance to assist developing countries to benefit fully from the negotiation results and continue conducting such negotiations upon request, and in that respect invited UNDP to give favourable consideration to requests for assistance in this field, including regional and interregional projects.

The text of the draft resolution had been submitted in the Second Committee by India, on behalf of the Group of 77, where it was approved on 13 December by 95 votes to 1, with 22 abstentions.

The United States indicated that it had voted against the resolution on the grounds that it was exclusively subjective and not based on an adequate consideration of the results of the negotiations, which were in any case a closed chapter in the history of international trade. The international community should, it felt, move forward, and the United States accordingly welcomed GATT's decision on the need for negotiations on an improved multilateral safeguard system.

Ireland, on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Community, said that they had abstained in the vote; the text reflected a very partial view, contained value judgements not in accord with the reality of the negotiations and failed to take into account subsequent developments. Austria and Japan expressed similar reservations.

Sweden, which abstained on similar grounds, pointed out, as did New Zealand, that it was too early to appraise the results achieved in the negotiations. Finland, which also abstained, took note of decisions taken by GATT subsequent to the negotiations to accommodate concerns of the developing countries, including a new committee to negotiate safeguards and a sub-committee to examine protectionism. Norway shared the reservations expressed by Finland and Sweden. Australia noted that, in all the substantive areas where results had been achieved, the wishes of the developing countries had been taken into account. It did not think it wise to prejudge indirectly the possible outcome of future negotiations.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Considering that the Tokyo Declaration of 1973 called for the Tokyo round of multilateral trade negotiations and set forth the framework, principles and objectives to govern the negotiations, especially the objectives and commitments in favour of developing countries, particularly those regarding the principle of non-reciprocity in trade relations between developed and developing countries, the special and differential treatment for developing countries and the securing of additional benefits for the international trade of developing countries and the maintaining and improving of the generalized system of preferences,

Bearing in mind the modified part four of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade stipulating, inter alia, that the developed countries should not expect reciprocity in their trade relations with developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 33/199 of 29 January 1979, in which it, inter alia, reiterated the need for continued efforts aimed at the reform of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the international trade regime in accordance with the principle of special and differential treatment of developing countries,

Recalling further decision 132(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in which the Trade and Development Board was requested to make a global evaluation of the multilateral trade negotiations

Regretting that, contrary to the commitments made by the developed countries in the Tokyo Declaration, no real attempt was made to extend special and differential treatment to the developing countries and to secure additional benefits for them in all areas of negotiation in the multilateral trade negotiations,

Noting that the Trade and Development Board, at its nineteenth session, decided to conduct a global evaluation of the results of the multilateral trade negotiations,

- 1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the multi-lateral trade negotiations:
- 2. Takes note also of the report of the Director-General of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade on the multilateral trade negotiations:
- 3. Notes with deep concern that the developed countries which are contracting parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade did not take fully into account in all areas of negotiation in the multilateral trade negotiations the interests and concerns of developing countries, especially the least developed countries;
- 4. Notes with particular concern that the negotiations aimed at establishing an improved legal framework for the conduct of international trade more responsive to the needs and aspirations of developing countries had disappointing results;
- Affirms that the interests and rights of developing countries must be fully safeguarded and preserved in the process of implementation of the results of the multilateral trade negotiations;
- 6. Urges that the negotiations on the safeguards code should be speedily concluded to provide for greater discipline and fair and non-discriminatory rules for the use of safeguard measures, with a view to contributing significantly to meeting the main concerns of the developing countries and enabling those countries to participate in the results of the multilateral trade negotiations on an equitable basis;
- 7. Reiterates the need for undertaking negotiations on a systematic basis for the elimination of quantitative restrictions and other non-tariff as well as tariff barriers against the exports of the developing countries and until the objectives and commitments undertaken in the Tokyo Declaration, including, inter alia, the need for preferential and special treatment in favour of developing countries and explicit recognition of the principle of non-reciprocity, are achieved;

- 8. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to prepare, in conformity with decision 132(V) of the Conference, a comprehensive report on the results of the multilateral trade negotiations in the light of the objectives and commitments of the Tokyo Declaration, placing special emphasis on those sectors in which the results obtained have not fully responded to the interests and concerns of developing countries, for submission to the Trade and Development Board at its twentieth session, for the purpose of undertaking a global evaluation of such negotiations and with a view to identifying possible courses of action for the attainment of the objectives pursued by developing countries in those negotiations;
- 9. Recommends that the United Nations Development Programme should favourably consider requests for technical assistance to be given to developing countries, including for regional and interregional projects, in order to provide them with the full benefit of the results of the multilateral trade negotiations and recommends that negotiations should continue to be conducted effectively in the future, upon the request of those countries.

Invisibles, including shipping

The Intergovernmental Preparatory Group on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport—a subsidiary organ of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD)—held its sixth, and final, session at Geneva from 21 February to 9 March 1979.

On 26 March, the Board at its tenth special session decided to transmit the draft convention completed by the Group to Governments for comments and to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, and, as the Group had recommended, to request the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to convene the United Nations Conference of plenipotentiaries on a multimodal transport convention in November.

By decision 1979/83 of 3 August, the Economic and Social Council transmitted the relevant documents to the Assembly at its 1979 regular session, and a first session of the Conference was convened at Geneva under UNCTAD auspices between 12 and 30 November. (For further information on the work of the Conference, see p. 989; for page reference to text of decision 1979183, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Also in 1979, the Committee on Shipping's Working Group on International Shipping Legislation met at Geneva from 18 to 26 June, for its sixth session, to consider simplifying and standardizing marine insurance-policy conditions and clauses. On 26 June, the Working Group adopted a resolution by which it recommended that a further session be held to continue this work and that a limited expert subgroup be designated from among its members to formulate a set of standard clauses to marine insurance contracts to serve as a non-mandatory international model.

On 20 October, the Trade and Development Board at its nineteenth session recommended the convening of a three-week session of the Working Group, the first two weeks of which should be devoted to work at the expert level; on the same date it scheduled the session for December 1980.

At its tenth special session, in March 1979, the Board considered a report on the work of the second (20 November-1 December 1978) session of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group on Container Standards for International Multimodal Transport.¹⁹ On 27 March, the Board decided to remit the question of container standards to its Committee on Shipping for regular review and for examination of the question of drawing up a flexible international agreement on the subject. The Economic and Social Council took note of the Group's report by decision 1979/84 of 3 August (for details, see p. 989; for page reference to text of decision 1979/84, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

In June 1979, UNCTAD, at its fifth session in Manila, adopted three resolutions relating to shipping.

By resolution 106(V) of 1 June, on developments pertaining to the Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences, 20 UNCTAD invited its member Governments to consider becoming contracting parties to the Convention, which had been adopted on 6 April 1974. (For further details, see p. 567.)

As at 12 July 1979, according to a secretariat report submitted to the Committee on Shipping, 43 countries had signed, approved, accepted, ratified or acceded to the Convention, which was to enter into force six months from the date when 24 countries accounting for at least 25 per cent of world cargo tonnage had ratified or acceded to it. These 43 countries owned 17.27 per cent of the relevant total.

By resolution 120(V) of 3 June, on participation of developing countries in world shipping and the development of their merchant marines, UNCTAD called on Governments to ensure equitable participation for developing countries in the transport of all cargoes, particularly bulk cargoes, generated by their own foreign trade by national vessels of the respective trading countries or by vessels otherwise operated by them. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to undertake studies and other work, including the preparation of guidelines to assist developing countries in the introduction of containerization and multimodal transport. The Conference also called on the Committee on Shipping to review the entire subject at its regular sessions and requested its Secretary-General to reconvene the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group on the Economic Consequences of the Existence or Lack of a Genuine Link between Vessel and Flag of Registry to consider studies on phasing out open-registry shipping operations. (For further details, see p. 567.)

By resolution 121(V) of 3 June, on ship financing and technical assistance, UNCTAD outlined proposals for improved financing terms for the acquisition of ships and development of transport infrastructure by developing countries and called on developed countries to provide technical assistance to them in the maritime field. The Conference also instructed the Committee on Shipping to review regularly the subject of shipping financing, possibly establishing a consultative group on the subject. (For further details, see p. 568.)

On 19 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/196, endorsed UNCTAD resolution 106(V), took note of resolution 121(V) and noted the requests enumerated in resolution 120(V) for studies and work to be undertaken by its permanent machinery relating to developing-country participation in world shipping and the development of their merchant marines. (For details, see p. 574.)

Transfer of technology

Pursuant to a 1978 request of its Committee on Transfer of Technology, ²¹ contained in a Committee resolution on strengthening and accelerating the technological capacity of developing countries, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), at its tenth special session held at Geneva in March 1979, considered a secretariat note proposing terms of reference for convening groups of experts between the fifth (May/June 1979) and sixth sessions of UNCTAD to examine the main issues related to transfer and development of technology in individual sectors and areas of critical importance to developing countries. Areas to be covered included foodprocessing, pharmaceuticals, capital goods, energy and electronics. On 26 March, the Board transmitted the note to the fifth session of UNCTAD (UNCTAD V), which opened in May at Manila, Philippines.

On 3 June, UNCTAD endorsed the Committee's 1978 resolution. It also included in UNCTAD resolution 112(V) a request to its Secretary-General to convene prior to its sixth session, in cooperation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other United Nations bodies, up to three meetings of experts to identify problems and issues concerning the transfer, application and development of technologies in the food-processing, energy, capital goods and industrial machinery sectors.

At the first part of its nineteenth session, held at Geneva, the Board on 20 October requested the Committee, at its third session scheduled for November 1980, to convene meetings of experts on those sectors after consulting with regional groups of States. The Board also requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit to the Committee's third session studies concerning other sectors listed in Conference resolution 112(V), including agro-industries, pharmaceuticals, design and engineering consultancy, and electronics.

Resolution 112(V) contained UNCTAD's recommended lines, of action for strengthening the technological capacity of developing countries and accelerating their technological transformation, as part of a comprehensive development strategy to be worked out by the international community for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s). Recommendations relating to the transfer of technology were contained particularly in two areas of action outlined in the resolution: action to be taken by, and co-operation among, developing and developed countries; and contributions to be made by UNCTAD.

The Conference also noted with satisfaction the progress made by the Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology, established by UNCTAD in 1976,²² to requests of developing countries for assistance, and invited and urged countries, financing programmes and international organizations to contribute to its operations. The Conference also asked its Secretary-General for an outline to help formulate a strategy for the technological transformation of the developing countries.

Two other areas for recommended action were UNCTAD participation in the preparations for the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 633) and continued co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme on environmental aspects of technology.

Resolution 101(V), adopted on 30 May, concerned UNCTAD's contribution to the industrial property system, covering patents and trade marks, in the context of a revision currently under way (for details, see p. 565).

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/196 of 19 December (see p. 574), endorsed Conference resolution 101(V) and took note of the developing countries' concern that their interests be taken into account in the revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, and also endorsed the recommendations in resolution 112(V) relating to the importance of continuing action at the international, regional, subregional and national levels to strengthen the technological capacity of developing countries and thereby accelerate their technological transformation.

United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1978,23 a resumed first session of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology was held from 26 February to 9 March 1979 at Geneva. The resumed session continued negotiations on the basis of a draft code completed in 1978 by the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology, 24 concentrating on chapters dealing with: definitions and scope of application, and national regulation of transfer transactions, applicable law and settlement of disputes (assigned to Working Groups 1 and 2 of the First Committee); restrictive business practices, and guarantees, responsibilities and obligations of parties (assigned to Working Groups 3 and 4 of the Second Committee); and international institutional machinery.

In an agreed statement issued on 9 March, at the conclusion of the resumed session, it was noted that the international code was on the agenda of UNCTAD V, and the Conference President and the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in consultation with regional co-ordinators, were invited to prepare for the continuation of work on the code.

On 3 June 1979, UNCTAD approved without dissent decision 113(V), requesting its Secretary-General to convene, in the last quarter of 1979, a further session of the Conference on a code of conduct and recommended the convening of a preparatory meeting to review organizational aspects and make recommendations to promote its efficiency. The Conference President was invited to review outstanding issues and consult with regional groups and the Working Group Chairmen towards their resolution.

The Preparatory Meeting for the second session of the Conference was held at Geneva from 24 to 28 September, and recommended a method of dealing with the issues.

The second session of the Conference was held at Geneva from 29 October to 16 November.

In a statement at the close of the session, the Conference President observed that considerable progress had been made during the session, leading to agreement on a chapter relating to national regulation of transfer of technology transactions and to substantial agreement on chapters on definition and scope of application, objectives and principles, and international institutional machinery. Intensive negotiations had led to completion of a number of provisions on restrictive practices and guarantees, responsibilities and obligations, and work had progressed on the question of applicable law and the settlement of disputes.

On 16 November, the Conference adopted a resolution recommending that the General Assembly authorize the convening of a third session in the first half of 1980 to complete negotiations and take the necessary decisions for adoption of the code.

On 19 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/195, by which, expressing deep concern that no agreement had been achieved at the second session of the Conference on a number of fundamental issues of interest to developing countries, it decided to convene a third session in the first half of 1980 and called for the necessary political will and flexibility at that session to complete negotiations and take the necessary decisions for adoption of an international code of conduct, bearing in mind the interests and concerns of the developing countries.

The resolution was a compromise text submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee following informal consultations, and approved without vote on 5 December. An earlier draft, submitted by India on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was then withdrawn. The Group's version had differed from the final version in strongly urging the developed countries to display, rather than calling for, the necessary political will and flexibility to complete negotiations. The Group's text had also included the phrase "despite the political will and flexibility demonstrated by the developing countries" in the preambular paragraph expressing concern that agreement on fundamental issues of interest to them had not been achieved.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that Conference costs must be met from existing. funds and voluntary contributions or through savings and elimination of duplication; their deplored the practice of holding conferences without adequate preparation, resulting in additional sessions and expenses.

Reverse transfer of technology

On 30 May 1979, UNCTAD adopted resolution 102(V) on development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology, outlining measures to be taken in respect of a comprehensive approach to the problem of the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries—the "brain drain" problem—and recommended measures to be taken by all developed countries, those which admitted skilled migrants, developing countries and the international community. It invited the United Nations Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Transfer of Technology an in-depth study of the problem he was preparing (see p. 652). This accorded with that Committee's request, endorsed by the Trade and Development Board on 27 March at its tenth special session. The Board also endorsed the Committee's requests that areas of competence be decided for a co-ordinated treatment of the subject by the United Nations system, that arrangements be made to study the feasibility of measuring human resource flows, and that studies be undertaken of countries' experiences relating to the problem.

By resolution 102(V), the Conference also requested the Board to consider providing facilities, on request, for a multilateral exchange of views on the development aspects of reverse transfer of technology. (For further details of resolution 102(V), see p. 565.)

On 20 October, at the first part of its nineteenth session, the Board authorized the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide such facilities.

The General Assembly endorsed, and called for full implementation of, UNCTAD resolution 102(V) and the Board's related decision when it adopted resolution 34/196 on 19 December (for details, see p. 574).

The Assembly further endorsed the UNCTAD resolution when it adopted on the same date resolution 34/200 on development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology (for details, see p. 653; for page reference to text of resolution 34/200, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

Questions relating to special trade flows and groups of countries

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

By decision 116(V) of 3 June 1979, on trade relations and trade flows among countries having different economic and social systems, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) at its fifth session decided to refer to the October session of its Trade and Development Board two draft resolutions on the subject, on which agreement had not been reached (for details see p. 570).

In October, the Board considered, in particular, the implementation of a comprehensive technical assistance programme to develop trade between developing countries and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. On 17 October, it decided to convene annually, at its second regular session, a sessional committee to consider problems pertaining to trade and trade flows among countries having different economic and social systems and further decided to remit to its twenty-first session in 1980 the two draft resolutions referred to it by the Conference.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/196 of 19 December, welcomed the Board's decision and urged all States members of UNCTAD to participate constructively in the consideration of the item (for details, see p. 574).

Least developed, land-locked and island developing countries

By resolution 122(V) of 3 June, UNCTAD decided, as one of its major priorities, to launch a comprehensive and substantially expanded new programme of action for the least developed countries, including an Immediate Action Programme to meet the critical situation of those countries and a Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s, aimed at transforming the major structural characteristics of the least developed countries to enable them to provide at least internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, transport and communications, housing, education and job opportunities for their citizens. (For details, see p. 568.)

By resolution 34/196 of 19 December, the General Assembly endorsed UNCTAD's decision to launch the new programme. It endorsed the programme again by resolution 34/210 of the same date, on special measures in favour of the least developed among the developing countries, also urging donor countries and multilateral development institutions to allocate increased financial resources and technical assistance in support of activities aimed at transforming the major structural characteristics of the least developed countries. (For details, see pp. 574 and 490; for page references to texts of the Assembly resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Also on 19 December, the Assembly decided, by resolution 34/203, in accordance with an invitation in UNCTAD resolution 122(V), to convene a United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 1981 in order to finalize, adopt and support the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s. (For details, see p. 491; for page reference to text of resolution 34/203, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 3 June, UNCTAD adopted resolution 123(V) by which it agreed that specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries should aim at reducing their costs of access to and from the sea and to world markets, at improving the quality, efficiency and reliability of their transit/transport services, and at restructuring their economies in order to alleviate their geographical handicaps. It outlined priority areas for specific international assistance to help diversify their economies. (For details, see p. 570.)

On 19 December, by resolution 34/196, the Assembly endorsed UNCTAD resolution 123(V) and, by resolution 34/198 of the same date, it recommended intensified activities to implement special action programmes for these countries, in co-operation with the regional commissions. (For details, see pp. 574 and 494; for page references to texts of the Assembly resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

By resolution 111(V), UNCTAD on 3 June recommended specific actions to meet the needs and alleviate the problems of island developing countries, to diversify their economies, facilitate market access for their exports, attract foreign investment for their industries, subsidize transport and encourage co-operative arrangements among island countries, especially in the support and service sectors. (For details, see p. 569.)

On 19 December, the Assembly, by resolution 34/196, endorsed UNCTAD resolution 111(V) and, by resolution 34/205 of the same date, called upon the international community to implement urgently the actions recommended by the Conference and to ensure a flow of financial and technical assistance geared to these countries' special needs. (For details, see pp. 574 and 496; for page references to texts of the Assembly resolutions refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

International trade law

At its nineteenth session, in October 1979, the Trade and Development Board took note of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twelfth session, held in June. (For information on the work of the Commission, see p. 1127.)

Technical assistance and related activities

In 1979, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) continued technical assistance activities aimed at strengthening the structures governing the external sector of developing countries, fostering economic co-operation among them, improving their trade mechanisms and procedures and enhancing their participation in international trade negotiations.

Substantive projects were pursued by UNCTAD on: maritime and multimodal transport; economic co-operation among developing countries; trade policy and planning of the external sector; special problems of the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; the generalized system of preferences for manufactures and semimanufactures; trade facilitation and documentation; insurance and reinsurance; monetary and financial issues; the Integrated Programme for Commodities; transfer and development of technology; and trade between countries having different economic and social systems.

In the concluding phases of the multilateral trade negotiations in 1979, in particular, UNCTAD, through its advisory services programmes, supplied developing countries with a continuous flow of information on the issues under negotiation. It also agreed to strengthen its working arrangements with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), with a view to enhancing their joint operational activities in economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. (For further information, see p. 534.)

Providing services to particular countries, UNCTAD in 1979 aided Nicaragua, following its change of Government, in external debt management and external trade and customs reorganization. It also completed a major economic and social survey of Zimbabwe, as a guide for policy orientation during its immediate post-independence period.

More than three fourths (77 per cent) of UNCTAD's total expenditure of $12 million for assistance programmes in 1979 went to intercountry projects and almost nine tenths (87.5 per cent) was financed from multilateral sources, with major support from UNDP. The tables below show UNCTAD expenditures in 1979 by sector, region and source.

At its nineteenth session, on 12 October 1979, the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD took note of a report of the Joint Advisory Group on the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT, jointly run by the Conference and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Ongoing programmes of the Centre in 1979, endorsed in the report, included projects aimed at strengthening national trade-promotion institutions, specialized trade-promotion services and export market development. Organizational questions

By resolution 114(V), on institutional matters, adopted at its fifth session in Manila, Philippines, on 3 June 1979, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) invited the General Assembly to strengthen UNCTAD and reaffirmed its need for greater flexibility in budgetary, financial and administrative matters. The Conference decided to establish an ad hoc intergovernmental committee on the rationalization of the machinery of UNCTAD, to report to its Trade and Development Board in October, and recommended that the Board meet twice yearly. (For details, see p. 571.)

On 4 October, the Assembly, by resolution 34/3, adopted without vote, amended its resolution of 30 December 1964,²⁵ by which it had established UNCTAD and set forth the Board's composition and functions, to have the Board meet twice, rather than once, a year. The text had been prepared by the United Nations Secretariat and approved without vote by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 1 October.

On 19 December, by resolution 34/196, the Assembly endorsed UNCTAD resolution 114(V) and called for the necessary action for its full implementation (for details, see p. 574).

In its consideration of institutional issues arising from UNCTAD resolution 114(V), the Board, at the first part of its nineteenth session, by a decision of 20 October, opened the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Committee on the Rationalization of the Machinery of UNCTAD to the participation of all States members of UNCTAD and entrusted it also with examining ways to improve the effectiveness of the Working Party on the Programme Budget and the Medium-term Plan. The Board, by a separate decision of 20 October, also decided to convene the Working Party semi-annually, in accordance with the Conference's request.

The Working Party met from 19 to 23 November to consider the programme budget for the 1980-1981 biennium. Its report was annexed to the Board's report to the Assembly.

The Board discussed at its October meetings a note by the UNCTAD Secretary-General on technical meetings held from 1 to 3 October at Geneva between representatives of the regional commissions and UNCTAD on the question of decentralizing trade and development activities to the regional commissions and on related aspects of co-operation and co-ordination with the commissions. The Board took note of the note on 17 October.

By its resolution 115(V) of 3 June, the Conference recommended that the Assembly ensure that Arabic would have full capacity as an official and working language of UNCTAD as from 1 January 1980.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/196 of 19 December, by which it took note of the reports of both the fifth session of UNCTAD and the 1979 sessions of the Trade and Development Board endorsed UNCTAD resolution 115(V) and decided that the necessary steps should be taken for its implementation with respect to both interpretation and translation facilities (for details, see p. 574).

International Trade Centre

During 1979, the International Trade Centre (ITC), under the joint sponsorship of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), continued to expand its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in the formulation and implementation of trade promotion programmes.

The total value of the programme implemented by ITC in 1979 was $13.66 million, more than a $2 million increase over the 1978 programme. Over three quarters of the programme budget was financed by trust fund contributions amounting to $10.32 million; the remaining $3.34 million was financed by the United Nations Development Programme. Approximately 43 per cent of the programme budget was used for export market development of selected products; 27 per cent for establishing and strengthening trade promotion institutions and services; 22 per cent for training Government officials, businessmen and instructors in trade promotion and export marketing; 3 per cent for multinational product promotion; 3 per cent for a special programme for least developed countries; 1 per cent for import operations and techniques; and the remainder for special programmes on export-oriented rural development and technical co-operation with chambers of commerce.

The value of programme delivery expanded in all regions. Asia and the Pacific maintained the largest share of the programme (33.8 per cent), followed by Africa (20.9 per cent), Latin America (12 per cent), and Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East (8.2 per cent); the remainder went to interregional projects. Integrated assistance projects, mainly national in scope, continued to be the single most important mode of ITC assistance, accounting in value for nearly half the 1979 programme. These projects focused on strengthening the country's infrastructure and trade promotion policy framework while providing assistance in other areas, such as export potential surveys, export market development, specialized export services, training programmes and import procurement.

During the year, ITC carried out 37 integrated assistance projects, 33 in individual countries and four for regional groupings. Ten of these national projects were in least developed countries and nine in countries most severely affected by economic crises. In addition, nearly all developing countries received ITC assistance through regional, interregional and global projects. This assistance was provided mainly through 608 technical cooperation experts, an increase of 48 over 1978.

The technical assistance management of ITC'S programme was exercised by the Centre's Division of Technical Co-operation, through the support and direction of experts working in the developing countries, and by ITC'S Division of Interregional Programmes, which was responsible for global programmes such as training activities, export-oriented rural development and assistance to the least developed countries in trade promotion. The Centre's Technical Division continued to give assistance in identifying products with favourable export prospects, undertaking research on export markets and helping formulate market development plans. This assistance was provided through various types of market surveys and marketing publications, advisory missions by market development officers and functional advisers, and the dissemination of trade information and statistical data.

During 1979, major market-research surveys were undertaken on canned asparagus and mushrooms, and tropical aquarium fish. Monographs on trade channels were prepared for a series of products in individual markets. Handbooks were also produced on export market research and duty drawback on exports. All of these ITC publications, including the quarterly magazine, International Trade FORUM, were available free of charge to exporters and trade officials in developing countries. The Centre also continued market research for individual countries, either as part of integrated country projects or as special projects, and to answer inquiries for trade information. In addition, it developed and disseminated several statistical series analysing the trade performance of developing countries.

Activities in multinational trade promotion expanded significantly in 1979, particularly with regard to coir, cotton, henequen, iron ore, jute, pepper, sisal and tea. A number of market promotion projects were formulated and implemented, and ITC continued to offer support to joint efforts by Governments to promote specific commodities through intergovernmental bodies, such as the intergovernmental groups of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Institute for Cotton, the Asian and Pacific Coconut Community and the Pepper Community, as well as the International Tea Promotion Association, the first session of whose governing board was convened by ITC at Geneva in April 1979.

In 1979, 3,500 participants from developing countries took part in ITC'S training activities, including seminars, workshops, courses and study missions; 75 per cent of these were held in developing countries on a regional, subregional and individual country basis. The training programme focused on helping developing countries establish their own framework for training in export marketing and trade promotion. Seminars and workshops for trade representatives from developing countries constituted the most important part of ITC'S interregional training activities.

The Joint Advisory Group on ITC reported on its March 1979 session to the Trade and Development Board of UNCTAD; the Board took note of the report on 12 October 1979 in connexion with its discussion of export promotion. The Advisory Group reviewed ITC technical cooperation programmes and made a number of recommendations in that area.

The Group recommended that ITC: increase the participation of short-term experts and experts from developing countries in field projects; increase support to multinational trade promotion of certain basic commodities; strengthen its activities to foster trade and economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, and to promote trade between them and the socialist countries of Eastern Europe; strengthen co-operation with other international organizations; set up a special programme of technical co-operation for least developed countries; co-ordinate its technical assistance services with those of UNCTAD and GATT with regard to follow-up activities on multilateral trade negotiations; and co-operate with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to assist the least developed countries in establishing industries having a high ratio of value-added to transport costs.

Secretariat

In 1979, ITC headquarters staff consisted of 91 Professional and 112 General Service employees, including those financed from the regular budget, extrabudgetary resources and by developed countries, and excluding project-financed staff. The Centre's regular budget of $8.67 million, covering headquarters operations, was contributed in equal portions by UNCTAD and GATT.

Chapter VII

International financing for economic development

During 1979, there was a marked increase in the international financing of economic development, which was reflected in the expanded operations of the United Nations Capital Development Fund and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the increased lending figures of the World Bank Group, which comprises the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and its affiliates, the International Development Association (IDA) and the International Finance Corporation. In December, by resolution 34/208, the General Assembly called on contributors to ensure an early conclusion of negotiations on the sixth replenishment of IDA and urged World Bank members to take action to increase the Bank's lending capital.

By a related decision of 18 December, the Assembly took note of a report of the Secretary-General on finance for development which examined the question of accelerating the transfer of real resources to developing countries (see p. 485).

The activities of the United Nations Capital Development Fund and an overview of international financing for economic development based on the findings of the World Bank and IMF are discussed in the subchapters below. For details of the activities of the World Bank and IMF during 1979, see pp. 1273 and 1291.

United Nations Capital Development Fund

The United Nations Capital Development Fund underwrites international community projects that directly benefit the lowest income groups in the least developed countries. Although its support is provided on a grant basis, projects which produce revenues are expected to repay the assistance into domestic revolving funds. The Fund places maximum reliance on recipient Governments in project execution, through which it seeks to mobilize community efforts and sustain self-help initiatives, and it works closely with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and agencies in the United Nations system to ensure the most effective use of its resources.

By the end of 1979, its fifth operational year, the Fund's cumulative commitments amounted to $112.4 million for 133 projects in 32 countries. During the year, the Fund approved 41 projects, representing more than a third of all projects approved by the Fund since its establishment. As in previous years, the Fund's financing was used to provide simple agricultural equipment, irrigation systems, farm-to-market roads, fertilizer and credit as integrated inputs into increased farm production and marketing and to assist in establishing cottage industries, village schools, vocational training facilities, health centres, low-cost housing, credit unions and co-operatives.

The value of the Fund's 1979 project commitments amounted to $41.2 million, of which $12.7 million (31 per cent) was committed to potable water supply; $7.9 million (19 per cent) to agricultural production, including irrigation, credit grain storage and fisheries; $3.9 million (10 percent) to small industries; $3.6 million (9 percent) to rural health and nutrition; $3.4 million (8 per cent) to low-cost housing; $3 million (7 per cent) to rural feeder roads; $2.4 million (6 per cent) to rural schools; $2 million (5 per cent) to rural electrification; $1.3 million (3 per cent, to social welfare; and $1 million (2 per cent) to transport and communication facilities.

Pre-investment expenditures connected with project identification and preparation, amounting to $262,000 in 1979, were financed from amounts allotted for country programmes by UNDP. The Fund's administrative expenses of $525,000, compared with annual project commitments, resulted in a 1.3 per cent overhead cost for the year, charged to UNDP's administrative budget.

Delays in project implementation, due to the lack of a basic institutional framework in the least developed countries, were reflected in a low level of project expenditure for 1979. Total project expenditure amounted to $8.9 million, approximately $1.3 million less than in 1978, although income and new commitments were considerably greater. Recognizing the special problems of least developed countries, the Fund, in co-operation with UNDP field offices, regional bureaux concerned and the United Nations Volunteers programme, assigned 10 Volunteers to assist Governments in removing obstacles to project implementation. It also reviewed its procedures to ensure that needed simplifications were introduced to help alleviate the administrative burden on Governments and UNDP resident representatives.

Following a June 1979 decision of the UNDP Governing Council, a fully funded operational reserve of $20 million was established in 1979 (see section below). A fully funded guarantee reserve of $900,000 was also established, representing approximately 20 per cent of total contingent liabilities for guarantees entered into by the Fund with respect to bank loans granted by Governments. As at 31 December, the Fund's unspent allocations amounted to $73.5 million, which was $21.5 million. more than the unspent balance of funds available at that date. The Fund's total resources, excluding cumulative project disbursements, reached $109.4 million, including $52 million in unencumbered funds, $20.9 million in reserves, $5.1 million in project costs not yet paid, $300,000 due to UNDP for its advances to finance projects and $31.1 million in contributions pledged but not yet paid by Governments. Pledges to the Fund for 1980, totalling $26.5 million, were announced at the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held in New York on 6 November 1979. (For details of pledges, see p. 557.)

Legislative decisions

At its June/July 1979 session, the UNDP Governing Council took note of the annual report of the UNDP Administrator on the United Nations Capital Development Fund and approved his proposal for changing the financing of the Fund's projects from full funding to funding on a cash-flow basis (partial funding) for an experimental period not to continue beyond the Council's regular 1981 session. The Council also decided that the Fund should establish and maintain an operational reserve of no less than 20 per cent of the Fund's project commitments. It requested the Administrator to report to its 1980 session on the implementation of partial funding, to give due regard to the need for efficient staffing arrangements in the Fund and to accord the Fund maximum flexibility in mobilizing administrative resources for the immediate implementation of partial funding, not to exceed 2 per cent of the Fund's annual project commitments. It also resolved that the Fund should reimburse undp for administrative expenditures from the Fund's accrued earnings, and reiterated its request that the Economic and Social Council recommend to the General Assembly that the Fund meet its administrative expenses from voluntary contributions.

The Economic and Social Council did not take action in 1979 with regard to the financing of the Fund's administrative expenditures, and the General Assembly, by, decision 34/428, postponed consideration of the question to 1980, inviting the Economic and Social Council to make appropriate recommendations on the matter. By the same decision; the Assembly confirmed the original functioning of the Fund in accordance with the measures set forth in a 1967 resolution that had transferred the Fund's administration to UNDP on a provisional basis, 1 resulting in assumption of the financing of the Fund's administrative expenditures by UNDP.

Decision 34/428, adopted without vote by the Assembly on 14 December, had been proposed in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by its Chairman on 1 December. Prior to its approval by the Committee, the United States proposed that consideration of the draft be postponed, pending consultations on an alternative text endorsing the recommendation of the UNDP Governing Council that administrative costs, which could be covered from interest earnings, be ascribed to the Fund. Yugoslavia, supported by Algeria, Burundi and the Upper Volta, proposed that the draft decision be approved and the question be reconsidered at the next Assembly session. The United States did not press its proposal for postponement and the decision was approved by the Committee without vote. Following approval of the decision, the USSR and Japan stated that, although they had joined in the consensus, they felt that the Fund's administrative expenses should be met by voluntary contributions.

Role of the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund in international economic and social policy

Economic and Social Council consideration

In his address to the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council on 6 July 1979, the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) indicated that inflationary pressures, low growth rates and unemployment remained serious problems in industrial countries. Divergent inflation rates and demand management policies had aggravated balance-of-payment problems and caused severe exchange-rate fluctuations.

The price of oil was a leading factor in the increase in inflationary pressures. The terms of trade of the non-oil-producing developing countries had deteriorated and their inflation rate had reached 25 per cent per year. Many countries, particularly those with low per capita incomes, faced serious external debt problems. The external position of the non-oil-producing less-developed-country group was increasingly strained, while the net flow of capital and aid to those countries was no larger than it had been in 1973. Developing countries with an emerging industrial base had been able to enjoy stronger external positions due to anti-inflationary measures; however, their achievements were threatened by the intensification of protectionist policies in the industrial countries.

The Managing Director emphasized that a gradual decrease in the growth rate of monetary aggregates was necessary to counter inflation. In the energy field, new measures were needed in the importing countries with regard to pricing policies, conservation and development of new sources of energy. Avoidance of protectionist measures was critical, since they impeded structural changes and reinforced inflationary pressures.

The Managing Director noted that the financing capacity of IMF had been enhanced by a 50 per cent increase in quotas submitted to member countries and by a supplementary financing facility which had provided $2.1 billion in loans to developing countries over the past three and a half years. However, the official development assistance targets of the developed countries had not been met and increased financial aid on concessional terms was needed.

The President of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) addressed the Council on 23 July 1979. Noting that one of the Bank's major functions was the provision of analyses on which Governments could base a coherent set of development goals and the presentation of alternative policies that would assist them in attaining those goals, the President concentrated on the Bank's principal contribution to that task, the 1979 World Development Report, which reassessed growth prospects of developing countries in the light of the past year's events, looking forward to 1990 and beyond.

The Report focused on issues and objectives central to development strategies, presenting growth rates for developing countries against several background trends, such as the economic health of the industrialized countries. It emphasized the need for a greater expansion of world trade and official development assistance and for the recognition of the interdependence of economic problems between developed and developing countries, citing trade, capital flows and energy as special areas of concern.

The President emphasized that the Report's projections of manufactured exports from developing countries assumed that protectionist pressures would be resisted and that the industrialized countries would facilitate access to their markets for such exports. A growth of exports also assumed policy reforms and structural adjustments in world trade. With regard to capital requirements, domestic investments would be provided mainly by the savings of the developing countries, but an additional $469 billion would be needed from external sources by 1990. For low-income countries, this meant greater official development assistance, on which they relied for approximately 70 per cent of net inflows of medium- and long-term capital. Middle-income countries would look mainly to market loans. Growth in net private lending was projected at an annual rate of almost 4 per cent in real terms during the 1980s.

With regard to energy, the President noted that, in order to realize the Report's projected growth rate for developing countries, it was essential that: industrialized countries consider such issues as conservation of demand, safety of nuclear power, pricing of domestic energy supplies and development of synthetic fuels; oilexporting developing countries decide how fast to exploit their non-renewable energy resources and how to ease the world's transition to a postoil future; and non-oil-exporting developing countries consider how to develop their own commercial energy sources, an undertaking for which the Bank had offered financial and technical assistance.

The President also noted that development programmes for the next two decades would be radically affected by trends in employment and urbanization. Between 1975 and 2000, the labour force in the developing countries would increase by over 550 million people, twice as many as in the previous 25 years. Measures for providing employment through development and training would have to be supplemented by population-control measures and by policies facilitating geographical and occupational mobility for workers. To improve the rural economy in developing countries, a reversal of investment, pricing and trade policies that discriminated against agriculture was necessary. Middleincome countries, in particular, would face the difficult task of promoting industrial expansion without prejudice to agricultural development. Despite vigorous decentralization measures designed to slow down migration from rural areas, urbanization would remain a pressing problem. By the year 2000, 1 billion persons would be added to the urban populations of developing countries, necessitating the expansion and implementation of policies that would meet the needs of the urban majority at low cost.

In June 1979, the Bank's Board of Directors had unanimously recommended to its Board of Governors a $40 billion capital increase, which would permit a continued increase in the Bank's lending in real terms through the middle of the next decade. On the assumption that the increase would be approved, the lending programme that began on 1 July 1979 had been increased to $7.6 billion of new financial commitments as against $6.8 billion in the previous year.

The President also reported that negotiations for the sixth replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA) were under way. During the 1980 fiscal year, beginning 1 July 1979, some $3.4 billion would be committed, after which funds under the fifth replenishment, commitment authority for which was to expire in June 1980, would be fully committed. The Bank hoped to achieve a $12 billion to $13 billion replenishment for the three years beginning 1 July 1980.

In the course of the Council's general discussion of international economic and social policy, the United Kingdom stated that the Report summarized by the President of the World Bank would be highly relevant to the work of the Council and the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy. Other members emphasized the economic interdependence of developed and developing countries and the need for an elaboration of a development strategy for the 1980s based on a positive approach to that concept. In discussing the priority issues summarized in the reports of the Bank President and the IMF Managing Director, virtually all speakers stressed the urgent need for concerted action by developed and developing countries in arriving at solutions that would benefit the international community as a whole.

Replenishment of IDA and recapitalization of the World Bank

At its regular 1979 session, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/208, called upon all contributing countries to take the necessary steps for an early conclusion of negotiations on the sixth replenishment of IDA and to ensure that the replenishment provided an adequate increase in real terms in IDA's resources, taking into account the effects of world inflation and the rapidly growing requirements of the developing countries. The Assembly urged World Bank members to take early implementing action on the decision to increase the Bank's capital so as to ensure that its lending to developing countries would increase adequately in real terms.

The resolution was introduced in the Assembly's Second Committee by India on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. An oral amendment by the sponsors replaced the word "substantial" with "adequate" in reference to the increase in IDA'S resources. The resolution was approved by the Second Committee without a vote on 11 December; the Assembly adopted it in like manner on 19 December.

Chapter VIII

Industrial development

The adoption on 8 April of an agreement to establish the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) as a specialized agency, a move to new headquarters at the Vienna International Centre and preparations for the organization's Third General Conference, to be held at New Delhi, India, in January/February 1980, highlighted events of UNIDO in 1979.

The organization continued to direct technical assistance activities in 1979 towards helping developing States mobilize their endogenous skills and resources and accelerate their industrial development, with a view to raising their share of world industrial output from the current 9 per cent at the end of 1979 to 25 per cent by the year 2000. It also expanded its network of investment promotion services and decided to continue its system of consultations as an ongoing activity. Three major meetings on the iron and steel (New Delhi, 15-19 January), petrochemicals (Mexico City, 12-16 March) and agricultural machinery (Stresa, Italy, 15-19 October) sectors were held in 1979 within the framework of the system of consultations.

The Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took follow-up decisions on the work of the Industrial Development Board. The Council, by resolution 1979/54 of 2 August, and the Assembly, by resolutions 34/98 and 34/227 of 13 and 20 December, sought to promote industrial development co-operation through support for the activities of UNIDO and for the Third General Conference.

In addition, the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174,¹ the overseeing body for United Nations action on the establishment of a new international economic order, reporting on its September 1979 session, noted that it had considered in a negotiating group an informal paper on industrial development co-operation submitted by Tunisia on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The paper contained recommendations on restructuring world industrial production and strengthening the industrial capacity of the developing countries. No consensus was reached in the time available, and the Committee annexed the paper to its report to the Assembly at its 1979 regular session.

Details of these and other actions of the Industrial Development Board, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in the field of industrial development are described in the following subchapters.

Total expenditures	114.9

Technical assistance totalling $70.5 million was delivered by UNIDO in 1979, a nominal increase of $15 million and an increase in real terms of $10.8 million, or 18.2 per cent, over 1978 expenditures. Of this total, nearly two thirds was funded under the indicative planning figures for country programmes of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for which UNIDO continued to serve as a major executing agency.

Included in the total were 1,410 field projects, of which 345 were large-scale projects (costing over $150,000 each), 293 medium-scale (between $50,000 and $150,000) and 227 small-scale ($25,000 to $50,000); 545 averaged less than $25,000. Over-all, project personnel accounted for 45 per cent of total project expenses, fellowships and training for 12.7 per cent, and subcontracts and equipment for 40.4 per cent, with the balance in miscellaneous expenditures.

A general shift of interest on the part of developing countries was evidenced in 1979 from isolated projects to integrated programmes aimed at building self-reliance and developing local skills, industrial capacity and technology. Among the areas of special priority were projects for strengthening agricultural-industrial linkages, for the conservation of energy in industrial processes and the use of alternative energy sources, for health and environmental protection and for the development of small-scale and rural industries.

A total of $16.35 million was expended for technical assistance in Africa in 1979, directed mainly to the creation and development of institutional infrastructure, the development of a technological base, refinement of planning techniques, and the strengthening of project identification, implementation and training capacities. Expenditures for project personnel in the region accounted for 59.5 per cent of the total, subcontracts and equipment for 31.2 per cent, and fellowships and training for 5.8 per cent, with the balance in miscellaneous expenses.

In collaboration with the Scientific and Technical Research Commission of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), UNIDO in 1979 completed a regional study and plan of action for the development of industrial and technological manpower. It also co-sponsored, with OAU and the Economic Commission for Africa, a regional symposium held at Nairobi, Kenya, on industrial policies and strategies for the period 1978-2000, as well as the sixth follow-up session of the Committee on Industrialization in Africa, held at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

The organization provided technical assistance in industrial matters to a number of African multinational organizations. The African and Mauritanian Common Organization, the Central African Customs and Economic Union, the Organization for the Development of the Senegal River and the West African Economic Community received assistance in development-programme preparation and promotion.

Technical assistance totalling $10.16 million was delivered to the Americas in 1979—a 42 per cent increase over 1978 and the largest amount expended in the region since the inception of UNIDO in 1967. Of this total, some 62 per cent went to project personnel, 29 per cent to subcontracts and equipment, and 8 per cent to training and fellowships. Requests from the region reflected a growing interest in energy-related projects, regional co-operation programmes, and advisory services in the pharmaceuticals, building materials and agro-industries sectors.

At the country, level, assistance ranged from general planning and programming to projects for the use of ethyl alcohol as a chemical feed-stock and fuel, with emphasis on specialized sectoral development in the areas of capital goods, technology transfer and chemical, industries. Notable co-operative efforts included assistance extended by the Institute for Plastics, a technical centre established by UNIDO in Argentina, to plastics industries in Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico and Uruguay.

In the first year in which the Arab States were tabulated separately by UNIDO, expenditures in 'the region totalled $9.8 million, some 70 per cent of which was financed from UNDP sources. Over 30 per cent of UNIDO projects in 1979 were financed from trust funds deposited with UNIDO by recipient countries as payment against services requested from the organization, a method frequently employed by oil-producing developing countries. Aid to Arab States was mainly in the form of advisory services and assistance in industrial legislation, the metallurgical, petrochemical and engineering sectors, the upgrading of skills, the transfer of technology and the establishment of national standardization and qualitycontrol systems.

As in previous years, UNIDO'S largest technical assistance expenditures went to Asia and the Pacific, with a total outlay of $19.87 million—an 8 per cent increase over 1978 levels, Some 84 per cent of this assistance was funded from UNDP sources. Of the total, 26.2 per cent went to project personnel, 63.6 per cent to subcontracts and equipment, and 9.2 per cent to training and fellowships.

Technical assistance in the region included projects in metallurgy, investment promotion, small-scale industries, industrial planning, standardization and quality control, certification and metrology, the development of non-conventional energy sources and the control of chemical pollutants.

In Europe and Western Asia, UNIDO maintained its over-all level of technical assistance delivery, at $6.78 million, some 87 per cent of which was funded by UNDP. Some 60 per cent of the total, particularly in countries with centrally planned economies, went to equipment and subcontracts, 28 per cent to project personnel and 11.5 per cent to training and fellowships.

Requests for assistance in Europe were generally for short-term expert assistance in trouble-shooting and high-level decision-making. Project areas included: coal conversion, gasification, liquefaction and pyrolysis in Poland; ore-processing and related research and development in Turkey; assessment of computer-based management control systems in Bulgaria; and standardization, quality control, certification and metrology questions in Greece, Portugal and Turkey.

In 1979, UNIDO assisted 131 countries and territories, undertook some 250 studies—including country profiles and case studies of selected industrial sectors—issued 36 publications and convened 75 meetings, 35 group training programmes and 126 expert groups, seminars, workshops, courses and symposia.

The tables below show UNIDO expenditures for direct technical assistance and for support activities, as well as the numbers of experts received and provided, fellowships awarded, and cost of assistance provided, by country or territory, and the over-all expenditures by region.

Programme questions

Industrial development co-operation

In its report to the General Assembly on the work of its thirteenth session, held from 24 April to 4 May 1979 at Vienna, the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) made recommendations on 4 May relating to organizational and financial matters, the system of consultations, the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB) and the integration of women in development. A 2 May decision concerned the role of the public sector in industrial development.

On the basis of a report by an open-ended sessional working group it had set up to consider the progress under the system of sectoral consultations -established on an experimental basis in 1976—the Board recommended that the system be continued and strengthened to provide the maximum benefit to the developing countries, and asked the Executive Director of UNIDO to prepare draft rules of procedure for their operation. It also decided to convene consultations on leather and leather products, food-processing, pharmaceuticals and fertilizers during 1980, and on petrochemicals, vegetable oils and fats, capital goods and the training of industrial manpower in 1981.

The Board approved proposals by the Executive Director for use of the regular programme of technical assistance in 1980, and provisionally approved proposals for 1981. It also approved a programme for 1980 and plan for 1980-1981 he had proposed for projects financed under the United Nations Industrial Development Fund.

The Board recommended that the Executive Director explore with the Secretary-General the possibility of extending measures for giving unido greater autonomy in administrative matters. It endorsed the views expressed in a consultant report that the, senior industrial development field advisers programme be strengthened, requesting the Executive Director to inform the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) of its view that undprobable underwrite the cost of up to 50 advisers by the end of 1980 and invite him to report on the UNDP Governing Council's decision in 1980.

After examining the report of the Permanent Committee on the work of its April 1979 session at Vienna and affirming its conclusion that UNIDO'S work could not be effectively sustained and expanded without appropriate resources, the Board recommended that the General Assembly, when approving the programme budget, take the Board's views into account.

The Executive Director was asked to prepare an in-depth evaluation of experience gained regarding the system of consultations for consideration at the Third General Conference of

On the basis of an expert group's report, the Board recommended that INTIB, until then a pilot project, should be continued as an ongoing activity of UNIDO with appropriate staff and resources, and that its work should include the sectors and topics covered by the UNIDO system of consultations and those chosen at the International Forum on Appropriate Industrial Technology, held in India in 1978. (See also p. 651.)

The Board requested the Executive Director to increase efforts aimed at integrating women in the industrialization process of developing countries by, among other measures, developing a concrete programme of action for this purpose. It also asked him to submit the preliminary results of studies he was to undertake on the subject to the Third General Conference of unido in 1980, to organize a policy-technical meeting as a follow-up to a November 1978 Conference preparatory meeting on the topic, to establish appropriate machinery such as a working group to co-ordinate activities in the field, and to keep these activities under continuing review.

On 2 May, the Board noted a proposal to hold, later in the month in Yugoslavia, an expert group meeting on the role of the public sector in industrial development to review issues such as linkages between public-sector policy and national industrial strategies, organizational and institutional arrangements, and management performance and evaluation. The Board requested the Executive Director to ensure an adequate role for the public sector in promoting the economic and social development of developing countries and to submit a more detailed report in 1980.

In other actions, the Board on 3 May granted consultative status to the Commonwealth Secretariat, an intergovernmental organization, and to the Association of African Development Finance Institutions, the European Federation of National Associations of Engineers and the Latin American Pharmaceutical Industry Federation, which were non-governmental organizations.

Having considered the Board's report at its July/August session, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1979/54 without vote on 2 August, by which it urged all countries, and especially the' developed countries, to contribute to the Industrial Development Fund or to increase their contributions thereto, with a view to reaching the agreed desirable funding level of $50 million annually, endorsed the Board's decision on the system of consultations, and requested the General Assembly to provide adequate resources for the 1980-1981 programme. The Council also endorsed the Board's recommendation for expansion of the activities of INTIB and its continuation as an ongoing activity of UNIDO, and urged early implementation of the recommendations in the report on the senior industrial development field advisers programme, in the light of a review to be carried out jointly by UNIDO and UNDP.

The Council emphasized the importance of maintaining the momentum, quality and growth of the UNIDO programme of technical assistance and recommended that the Assembly provide adequate resources for it in its 1980-1981 budget.

The Council also stressed the need for active participation by all Member States in the Third General Conference of UNIDO and invited early State approval of the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization adopted on 8 April 1979 (see subchapter immediately below).

The text of the resolution had been approved, without objection, on 30 July by the Council's First (Economic) Committee, as proposed by the Ivory Coast on behalf of member States of the Council belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries.

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/98, relating to industrial development co-operation and the Third General Conference of UNIDO.

The Assembly thereby took note with appreciation of Conference preparations, urged active participation in the Conference, and asked the Secretary-General and the UNIDO Executive Director to ensure the conclusion of national, regional and interregional preparations and to seek extrabudgetary resources for the effective participation of the least developed countries. It also specified issues to which the Conference should give special attention (see subchapter immediately below).

The Assembly emphasized the need of support for increased industrial production, special and differential treatment and liberalized market access for developing countries, as measures to facilitate the restructuring of world industrial production, and asked the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of UNIDO to expand and develop technical assistance programmes for the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries. It agreed that the system of consultations should be strengthened and continued as an ongoing UNIDO activity, and suggested participation in the consultations of Government officials as well as of representatives of industry, labour and consumer groups. It stressed that UNIDO'S action programme on appropriate industrial technology should be implemented in accordance with the needs and priorities of developing countries, and requested that the industrial development field advisers programme be strengthened and extended in the light of a joint UNIDO/UNDP review.

The Assembly invited State approval of the UNIDO Constitution, urged all countries, and particularly developed countries, to contribute or expand their contributions to the Industrial Development Fund, urged developed countries and international financial institutions to consider ways of responding adequately to requests by developing countries for favourable financing terms in the industrial sector, invited consideration of a proposal to establish a long-term financing facility in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for the purchase of capital goods by developing countries, and emphasized that a due share of resources transferred to those countries should be allocated to industrialization.

(See also subchapter immediately below for provisions of the resolution relating to the Third General Conference of UNIDO.)

The resolution had been approved without vote by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 8 December. The text, based on a draft introduced by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77, was submitted for approval by a Committee Vice-Chairman following informal consultations. The Group's text was withdrawn.

The final text differed from the Group's original draft, inter alia, by including three preambular paragraphs, by which the Assembly indicated its consciousness of UNIDO's role as a forum for negotiations between developed and developing countries and among developing countries in the field of industrial development, emphasized the relationship between world peace and progress towards real disarmament and resources available for international co-operation for industrial development, and emphasized that the public sector and planning could serve as important tools for industrial policies.

A number of operative paragraphs pertaining to recommendations to the Conference were redrafted (see subchapter below).

On 20 December, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 108 to 11, with 19 abstentions, resolution 34/227 on UNIDO'S programme. By this resolution, the Assembly emphasized that the programme budget proposals for UNIDO for the 1980-1981 biennium should reflect the priorities agreed upon by the Industrial Development Board at its thirteenth session and as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1979/54 (see above). It reaffirmed that the system of consultations, INTIB and technical assistance were of the utmost priority and urgency to developing countries and that the momentum of their growth must be maintained; accordingly it requested the Secretary-General to submit to the current Assembly session proposals for the 1980-1981 programme budget that would enable UNIDO to execute its programmes in these areas.

The text had been submitted to the Second Committee by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77. The Committee on 26 November decided to remit it to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee as referring only to budgetary matters. The draft was subsequently revised by the sponsors to eliminate requests for specific amounts for each of the areas in question, in keeping with the Assembly's regular procedures.

On 11 December, the Fifth Committee approved the revised draft by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 67 to 12, with 16 abstentions. The Federal Republic of Germany abstained in the voting on the ground that decisions relating to the system of consultations and INTIB should be referred to the Third General Conference of UNIDO and that technical assistance activities should not be financed under the United Nations regular budget.

The USSR cited similar reasons for opposing the draft, which it considered premature and unjustified in its requests for additional funds. Moreover, it held that it was for the Third General Conference to identify priorities for UNIDO activities.

The United States also expressed strong objection to provision of funds for technical assistance under the regular budget, as well as to financing travel to meetings and consultations. Sweden, which abstained, said it supported the general objectives, but felt the request for extra funds could be met through internal redeployment.

On 18 December, the Fifth Committee decided, without vote, on a recommendation by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), to inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the resolution, an additional appropriation of $598,500 would be required, although ACABQ was unable to recommend that requested travel expenses to consultation meetings be financed from the regular budget.

By a decision of 20 December, adopted by a recorded vote of 112 to 14, with 16 abstentions, as section XIV of resolution 34/233, the Assembly approved an appropriation of $100,000 for travel by 50 representatives of the least developed countries to consultation meetings of UNIDO, on the understanding that the decision constituted an exception to provisions of its resolution of 11 December 1962³ proscribing payment of travel and subsistence expenses for Government representatives.

The section had been approved in the Fifth Committee on 18 December by 65 votes to 12, with 11 abstentions, as orally proposed by the Chairman on the basis of a suggestion by Tunisia.

Industrial redeployment in favour of developing countries

The Executive Director of UNIDO submitted to the Industrial Development Board at its April/ May 1979 session a report on the question of industrial redeployment from developed to developing countries and on secretariat studies in the field, prepared in accordance with a General Assembly request of 15 December 1978.⁴

The report contained a consideration of the concept of industrial redeployment -which, broadly defined, would include the transfer of capital, technology, know-how, plants and other resources to developing countries in order to establish manufacturing capacity in those countries-and of its relation to questions of trade and structural adjustment. It further outlined the results or progress of studies on: constraints and potentials for industrial redeployment as viewed by developed countries' Governments, unions and entrepreneurs; priorities for redeployment in developing countries and its implications; international trade and market access to developed countries; and structural adjustment in developed countries, including adjustment policies, long- term structural changes and effects on employment. The report offered preliminary conclusions on the desirability of formulating a rational long-term policy for redeployment which would be mutually beneficial for developed and developing countries alike and indicated considerations that such a policy would have to take into account.

On 4 May, the Board endorsed the report's general concept and approach and decided that the secretariat's research programme should continue along the same lines. The Board submitted the report to the Assembly which, on 13 December, adopted without vote decision 34/427, taking note of it. The decision had been approved, without objection, in the Second Committee on 8 December, as orally proposed by the Chairman.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, adopted at the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, which established the main measures and principles for industrial development and co-operation within the framework of the establishment of the new international economic order.

Conscious of the role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as the central organ within the United Nations system for the promotion and co-ordination of industrial development co-operation and for the attainment of the targets and the accelerated implementation of the agreed measures contained in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, including, in particular, raising the share of developing countries to the maximum possible extent and, as far as possible, to at least 25 per cent of total world industrial production by the end of the century,

Conscious also of the role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a forum for the negotiation of agreements in the field of industry between developed and developing countries and among developing countries themselves at the request of the countries concerned,

Emphasizing that peace, security and national independence are major factors in ensuring international coperation for industrial development and that there should be progress in the field of real disarmament, which would increase the possibilities of reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries,

Recalling further its resolutions 33/77 and 33/78 of 15 December 1978 on the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and on industrial development co-operation, respectively, and 33/193 of 29 January 1979 on the preparations for an international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, Bearing in mind that the rapid industrialization of developing countries constitutes an indispensable element and a dynamic instrument of the sustained self-reliant growth of their economies and of their social transformation.

Also bearing in mind that, within the framework of the new international economic order, far-reaching changes in the structure of the world economy involve restructuring of world industry, taking fully into account the capacities and potential of the developing countries,

Emphasizing the role of redeployment of industrial capacities in the context of international industrial co-operation, including resource and technology transfers aimed at establishing and strengthening the productive capacities of developing countries with a view to stimulating their economies, taking into account their potential to develop their national resources in conformity with their over-all national objectives and priorities and the need to increase correspondingly their share in world industrial production,

Emphasizing further that the public sector and planning can serve as important tools for the implementation of industrial policies within the national framework of industrialization programmes of developing countries,

Affirming the need to promote the further development of collective self-reliance among developing countries as an essential element in their economic and industrial transformation.

Recognizing the need for, inter alia, a substantially increased transfer of financial resources to developing countries, including official development assistance transfers as well as improved access to markets with a view, inter alia, to the attainment of improved terms of trade, enhanced capital investment, enhanced absorptive capacities, the development and transfer of technology and development of conventional and non-conventional energy, in order to provide the necessary dynamic stimulus to the industrialization of those countries,

Recognizing further the close complementarity that exists in developing countries between the industrial and rural sectors and the necessity, for the optimum utilization of the national resources of those countries, of promoting endogenous industrialization through, inter alia, the use of appropriate technology,

- 1. Takes note with appreciation of the preparations now under way for the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, as described in the report of the Executive Director of that organization;
- 2. Urges the Governments of all Member States to participate actively in the Third Genera! Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to be held at New Delhi from 21 January to 8 February 1980, to review the progress made and the obstacles encountered in the implementation of the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation and to adopt appropriate policies and concrete programmes for the development of a strategy for further industrialization as an indispensable element of the development process in the 1980s and beyond:
- 3. Recommends that the Conference should, inter alia, give special attention to and, where appropriate, adopt concrete measures for:
- (a) Accelerating the implementation of agreed measures for the industrial development of developing countries, particularly those measures contained in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action;
- (b) Providing a major substantive input, in the field of industrialization, for the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade;
- (c) Restructuring world industrial production through positive strategies, thus establishing a more effective international division of labour, which would, inter alia, facilitate the redeployment of industry, expand and strengthen the industrial capacities of developing countries and promote domestic industrial processing of the natural resources of developing countries:
- (d) Providing financing at substantially increased levels for the industrial development of developing countries by more effectively utilizing and strengthening the existing international financing facilities, including appropriate ways to extend or modify those facilities, and, as required, through other measures towards this end;

- (e) Strengthening and enlarging the United Nations Industrial Development Fund in order to provide a significant increase in the necessary technical assistance for accelerating the industrialization of developing countries;
- (f) Promoting measures and policies to develop and strengthen the technological infrastructure of developing countries, taking into account their endogenous capacity as well as the need for the transfer of technology to them on fair, equitable and mutually acceptable terms;
- (g) Strengthening programmes that would lead to the optimum processing of agricultural and mineral commodities and the development of industries based on and related to agriculture within developing countries;
- (h) Developing manpower training in the developing countries, in particular for women and youth, according to national requirements for industrial development;
- 4. Emphasizes the need to facilitate the restructuring of world industrial production through, inter alia:
- (a) Support for increased industrial production in developing countries;
- (b) Special and differential treatment in favour of developing countries where feasible and appropriate in the context of a general effort to liberalize world trade, particularly in their favour:
 - (c) Trade liberalization relating to increased market access;
- 5. Invites the Conference to consider the mechanisms and institutions that should be strengthened or established within the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the implementation of its decisions, taking into account, inter alia, the recommendations and proposals contained in the study entitled Industry 2000— New Perspectives;
- 6. Requests the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in the light of that organization's experience in developing technical assistance programmes for the least developed as well as land-locked and island developing countries, to expand and develop the current programmes;
- 7. Agrees that the system of consultations has become an important and established activity of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, that it should be continued as an ongoing activity of the organization and be strengthened so as to provide the greatest possible benefit to the developing countries and contribute effectively to the achievement of the objectives and targets set out in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, and that participation from each country in the system of consultations might include officials of Governments as well as representatives of industry, labour and consumer groups, for example, as deemed appropriate by each Government;
- 8. Stresses that the co-operative programme of action on appropriate industrial technology being undertaken by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization should be implemented in full accordance with the development priorities and needs of developing countries;
- 9. Requests that the industrial development field advisers programme should be strengthened and extended, in the light of the review being carried out jointly by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Development Programme;
- 10. Invites all States that have not yet done so to take early steps to sign and ratify, accept or approve the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, adopted on 8 April 1979 at the second session of the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency;
- 11. Urges all countries, in particular the developed countries, to contribute to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund or to raise their contributions, taking into account the need for maximum flexibility, with a view to reaching the agreed desirable funding level of $50 million annually;
- 12. Urges developed countries and the international financial institutions concerned, including the World Bank, to consider ways and means of responding adequately to re-

- quests by developing countries for financial resources in the industry sector on favourable terms, in accordance with their established procedure, and, in this context, invites serious consideration of the proposal to set up a long-term facility in the World Bank for financing the purchase of capital goods by developing countries;
- 13. Emphasizes that industrialization should receive a due share of the resources transferred to developing countries from developed countries and international institutions, taking into account the development priorities of developing countries;
- 14. Requests the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to ensure that the necessary arrangements, including the requisite financial provisions, are made for the conclusion of national, regional and interregional preparations for the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, including arrangements for interregional and other meetings in the later stages of the preparatory process for the Conference;
- 15. Requests the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to seek extrabudgetary resources for the effective participation in the Conference of the representatives of the least developed countries, including the requisite financial provisions for the travel expenses and daily subsistence allowances of two representatives from each of those countries.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation, adopted at the Second General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, held at Lima from 12 to 26 March 1975, which established the main measures and principles for industrial development and co-operation within the framework of the establishment of the new international economic order, Recalling further its resolution 33/78 of 15 December 1978 on industrial development co-operation and Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/54 of 2 August 1979 on the same subject.

Bearing in mind, in particular, that the rapid industrialization of developing countries constitutes an indispensable element and a dynamic instrument in the sustained, self-reliant growth of their economies and of their social transformation,

Stressing the need to accelerate the implementation of measures for the achievement of industrial development cooperation, particularly those contained in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, with a view to raising the share of developing countries to at least 25 per cent of total world industrial production by the end of the century, as called for in the Lima Declaration,

1. Emphasizes that the programme budget proposals in respect of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the biennium 1980-1981 should reflect the priorities agreed upon at the thirteenth session of the Industrial Development Board, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1979/54;

- 2. Reaffirms that the programmes being developed by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in respect of the system of consultations, the Industrial and Technological Information Bank and technical assistance are of the utmost priority and urgency to developing countries, and hence the momentum of their growth must be maintained in the biennium 1980-1981;
- 3. Requests the Secretary-General, accordingly, to submit, during the current session of the General Assembly, proposals for the proposed programme budget for the bienium 1980-1981 that would enable the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to execute the programmes in respect of the system of consultations, the Industrial and Technological Information Bank and technical assistance, approved by the Industrial Development Board and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council.

Organizational questions

Establishment of UNIDO as a specialized agency

The second session of the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency met at Vienna from 19 March to 8 April 1979 and, at its closing meeting, adopted by consensus a Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, opening it for signature on 8 April, as well as its Final Act.

The Conference had before it a draft prepared in 1976 and 1977 by an Intergovernmental Committee of the Whole to Draw Up a Constitution for the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a Specialized Agency, and further elaborated by the Conference at its first session in February/March 1978.⁵

Three draft resolutions agreed to by the Intergovernmental Committee were also adopted by the Conference on 8 April and annexed to its Final Act. By the first, China's representation in the new organization was to be consonant with the General Assembly's 1971 resolution on the question; by the second, the Conference expressed its expectation that those having observer status in the new organization might establish permanent observer missions to the organization,

In addition, the Conference recommended to the General Assembly for adoption a draft resolution on transitional arrangements.

The Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174, ⁷ the overseeing body for United Nations action towards the establishment of the new international economic order, reporting on its March 1979 session, set forth agreed conclusions by which it emphasized that the conversion of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) into a specialized agency should not be further delayed, and agreed that all Conference participants should commit their best efforts to solve remaining questions so that the constitution might be completed and adopted.

Organization and the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe) were also represented, as were the European Economic Community, the Organization of African Unity, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Secretariat.

The Conference elected K. R. P. Singh (India) as President of the second session. There were 17 Vice-Presidents, and the Conference established a General Committee, Negotiating and Drafting Committees and a Credentials Committee. (For participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

The Constitution as adopted by the Conference consisted of a preamble and 29 articles arranged in six chapters, covering objectives and functions, participation, organs, programme of work and financial matters, co-operation and coordination, and legal matters including a set of final clauses. The Constitution also contained three annexes, listing member States, defining expenses to be covered by the regular budget, and rules governing arbitration and conciliation.

The organization's primary objective (article 1) would be the promotion of industrial development at all levels and its acceleration in developing countries, with a view to assisting in the establishment of a new international economic order.

To fulfil these objectives, the organization would, among other functions (article 2): encourage and assist developing countries to promote and accelerate their industrialization; initiate, co-ordinate and follow up United Nations activities as the central coordinating body in industrial development; create and develop concepts and approaches for industrial development on the basis of studies and surveys; encourage the development and use of planning techniques and assist in formulating programmes and plans in the public, co-operative and private sectors; provide a forum for-contacts, consultations and negotiations between developed and developing countries; assist developing countries to establish and operate industries to maximize the use of their resources; serve as a clearing-house for industrial information; devote particular attention to the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; promote, encourage and assist in the transfer and use of technology; organize and support industrial training programmes; provide pilot and demonstration plants; develop special measures to promote industrial co-operation among developing countries, and between them and developed countries; assist in regional industrial development planning; encourage industrial, business and professional associations and institutional infrastructure providing regulatory, advisory and developmental services; and assist in obtaining fair and equitable external

Articles 3 to 6 stipulated membership eligibility, entitlement to observer status, conditions under which members might be suspended, and withdrawal procedures.

The principal organs of UNIDO (articles 7 to 11) were to be: the General Conference, which would meet biennially to determine the guiding principles, approve the budget and adopt conventions and agreements; the 53-member Industrial Development Board which would meet at least annually to review the Conference-approved work programme, recommend budget assessments, handle unforeseen events, request reports, and prepare the Conference's agenda; the 27-member Programme and Budget Committee; and the secretariat, with the Director-General as the chief administrative officer.

Under chapter IV, each member and observer was to bear the expenses of its own delegation (article 12); administrative, research and other expenses were to be met from assessed contributions, and technical assistance and related activities from voluntary contributions (article 13). Procedures for preparation, submission and approval of programmes and budgets were contained in article 14, assessment of contributions and acceptance of voluntary contributions were discussed in articles 15 and 16, and establishment of a voluntarily funded Industrial Development Fund was outlined in article 17.

That the organization was to be brought into relationship with the United Nations as a specialized agency was set forth in article 18 and the possibility of relations with other organizations was indicated in article 19.

The seat of the organization was to be. Vienna (article 20). The organization was to enjoy in the territory of each of its members the necessary legal capacity and privileges and immunities, stipulated in article 21, for the exercise of its functions. Article 22 set forth procedures for dispute settlement and empowered the organization, subject to Assembly authorization, to request advisory opinions from the International Court of Justice. Articles 23 and 24 were clauses concerning amendment, signature, ratification, acceptance, approval and accession, and article 29 concerned authentic texts. The Constitution was, by article 25, to enter into force when at least 80 States that had deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval notified the Secretary-General- designated as the Depositary in article 28—of their agreement. The Conference was to be convened within three months following the entry into force of the Constitution (article 26), in respect of which no reservations could be made (article 27).

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted without vote, as resolution 34/96, the text on transitional arrangements recommended by the Conference and transmitted to the Assembly in a report on the Conference by the Secretary-General. It had been approved, also without vote, on 1 December by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

By this resolution, the Assembly strongly recommended that States sign and ratify, accept or approve the UNIDO Constitution so that the new agency could come into existence at an early date, and decided on transitional measures to cover the period extending to the close of the year in which its General Conference should first be convened, at which time the existing UNIDO would be terminated. It decided, inter alia, to transfer to the new Industrial Development Board, when elected, and the Director-General, when appointed, the functions of the current Board and Executive Director, whose offices would at that time be terminated. It authorized the Secretary-General to provide in his programme budget for the new agency's expenses during the transition period in question and to loan it up to one half the current organization's appropriations during the last year of its existence, to meet the new agency's initial expenses during its first complete calendar year. It authorized him to transfer to the new agency United Nations assets currently assigned to UNIDO, together with the assets of the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, and requested the Economic and Social Council to arrange for negotiation of an agreement to constitute the new agency as a specialized agency and to enter into such agreement, subject to Assembly approval. It urged that the staff of the existing organization be offered suitable appointments by the new agency and requested that the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board arrange to admit the agency into the Joint Staff Pension

An invitation to all States that had not done so to take early steps to sign and ratify, accept or approve the new Constitution was also included in Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/54 of 2 August 1979, on industrial development co-operation, and in Assembly resolution 34/98 of 13 December; on industrial development co-operation and the Third General Conference of UNIDO. (For details, see preceding subchapter; for texts of resolutions 1979/54 and 34/98, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES following that subchapter.)

Third General Conference of UNIDO

At its April/May 1979 session, the Industrial Development Board, in its capacity as the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, considered preparations for the Conference, to be held at New Delhi, India, in January/February 1980.

On 4 May, the Board noted the progress of preparations, recommended an organizational structure for the Conference and decided to hold a special session, in its capacity as the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, at Vienna in November, to consider substantive matters for the Conference.

The Executive Director of UNIDO reported on the preparatory arrangements to the Economic and Social Council at its July/August 1979 session. By decision 1979/89, adopted without vote on 2 August, the text of which had been similarly approved by the Council's First (Economic) Committee on 30 July as orally proposed by its Chairman, the Council took note of the Executive Director's report.

The Council on the same date, by resolution 1979/54 on industrial development co-operation, stressed the need for active participation by all Member States in the Third General Conference to review progress in implementing the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation⁸ and to adopt policies and programmes for an industrialization strategy as an essential element of the development process in the 1980s and beyond. (For details, see preceding subchapter; for text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES following that subchapter.)

The first special session of the Industrial Development Board, acting in its capacity as the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, was held at Vienna from 12 to 16 November.

The Board established an informal openended working group on organizational matters pertaining to the Conference. On 16 November, it adopted the group's recommendations with respect to the allocation of agenda items to the plenary Conference and its committees, and the size and geographical composition of the bureaux of the Conference and its committees.

Another open-ended working group it had established, to consider rules of procedure for the system of consultations, reported orally to the Board that agreement on a set of rules had not been reached. The Board on 16 November recommended that the Conference invite the Board to examine the subject further and adopt rules at its 1980 regular session.

By resolution 34/98 of 13 December, adopted without vote, the Assembly urged active participation by all Member States in the Third General Conference, and noted with appreciation the preparations described in the Executive Director's report.

The Assembly recommended that the Conference should give special attention to, and where appropriate adopt concrete measures for: accelerating implementation of agreed measures, particularly those in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action, for the industrial development of developing countries; providing substantive input for the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade

(the 1980s); restructuring world industrial production through positive strategies, thus establishing a more effective international division of labour which would facilitate redeployment of industry, strengthen and expand capacities of developing countries and promote domestic processing of their natural resources; providing substantially increased financing by more effectively using, modifying or extending existing international financing facilities; strengthening and enlarging the United Nations Industrial Development Fund; promoting measures to strengthen developing countries' technological infrastructure, taking into account their endogenous capacity and the need for technology transfer on fair, equitable and mutually acceptable terms; maximizing agricultural and mineral commodity processing and developing agro-based and agrorelated industries; and developing manpower training, in particular for women and youth.

The Assembly also invited the Conference to consider the mechanisms and institutions that should be strengthened or established to implement UNIDO decisions, taking into account recommendations and proposals in a UNIDO study entitled Industry 2000-New Perspectives. It asked the Secretary-General and the Executive Director to ensure that the necessary financial and other arrangements were made for the conclusion of national, regional and interregional preparations for the Conference, including those for interregional and other meetings in later stages of the preparatory process, and to seek extrabudgetary resources for the effective participation of representatives of the least developed countries, including financial provisions for the travel expenses and daily subsistence allowances of two representatives from each of those countries.

The eight proposals in the UNIDO study on new perspectives to the end of the century related to setting up an international industrial finance agency, a global fund for the stimulation of industry, a commission for international industrial development law, a system for resolving industrial conflicts, an international industrial technology institute, an international centre for the joint acquisition of technology, an international patent examination centre, and a trade target for manufactured exports from developing countries.

Resolution 34/98 had been approved without vote by the Assembly's Second Committee on 8 December. The text, based on a draft introduced by India on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was submitted for approval by a Committee Vice-Chairman following informal consultations. The Group's text was withdrawn.

Prior to approval of the text in the Committee, a separate vote was taken on the paragraph by which the Assembly requested that financial and other arrangements be made to conclude national, regional and interregional preparations for the Conference; the paragraph was approved by 84 votes to 7, with 24 abstentions. At the request of the United States, a separate vote was also taken in the Assembly on this paragraph, where it was adopted by a recorded vote of 106 to 8, with 28 abstentions.

The final text of several provisions of the resolution differed from the Group's original draft in that a number of the Assembly's recommendations to the Conference were redrafted. A paragraph emphasizing the need for specific support and trade measures for developing countries was recast from a recommendation that the Conference decide on measures supporting world industrial production restructuring through preferential trade liberalization by developed countries. A recommendation urging the establishment by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development of a long-term financing facility for the purchase of capital goods was deleted from recommendations to the Conference, changed to an invitation to consider seriously the proposal, and attached to a paragraph urging developed countries and financial institutions to consider ways of responding to developing countries' requests for resources.

A recommendation to decide on measures for providing industrial development financing "on a massive scale" was changed to financing "at substantially increased levels." The recommendation on restructuring world industrial production had previously been a recommendation that the Conference decide on concrete measures for supporting the restructuring of world industrial production through a range of preferential measures of trade liberalization by developed countries relating essentially to increased access to their markets and elimination of protectionist policies and restrictive business practices, as well as through stable pricing policies. A request that the Secretary-General ensure that necessary arrangements were made for participation in the Conference of representatives of the least developed countries became a request that he and the Executive Director seek extrabudgetary resources for this purpose.

In connexion with the separate vote in the Committee, requested by both Belgium and the United States, a number of States, including Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, France, Ireland, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, indicated that, while supporting the General Conference, they could not endorse a provision calling for United Nations support for preparatory meetings at the regional and interregional levels. Such a request, according to Belgium, France and Italy, violated the basic principle of universality by using United Nations funds to finance activities from which some Members would be excluded. Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom indicated that they could accept United Nations financial support for preparatory meetings, but only when they were held in close proximity in time and venue to the Conference. Australia, Austria, Japan and Sweden (speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries) stated that only meetings held under United Nations auspices and in accordance with its established rules of procedure should be entitled to the Organization's financial and Secretariat support.

Bulgaria, speaking on behalf also of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, expressed the view that interregional meetings were appropriate provided that they did not take specific actions, but they should be financed from the Conference's budget rather than from general funds; for that reason those countries had abstained in the vote on the paragraph. They supported the transfer of industry to developing countries on the understanding that it should take place under national control and in accordance with national development plans. They also considered that solutions to industrialization problems should not be sought through the creation of new Secretariat units or expansion of existing ones but through increases in UNIDO'S efficiency.

Membership in UNIDO

On 13 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/97, by which it decided to include Dominica and Saint Lucia in the group of Latin American and Caribbean countries in the lists of States eligible for membership in the Industrial Development Board of UNIDO. Dominica had become a Member of the United Nations on 18 December 1978 and Saint Lucia on 18 September 1979.

The text had been approved, also without vote, on 1 December by the Second Committee, where it was introduced by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77.

Pledging Conference

On 6 November 1979, the second joint United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was convened in New York for the announcement of pledges or intentions to pledge to funds and programmes of the United Nations system concerned with development, including the United Nations Industrial Development Fund, which completed its second year of operations in 1979.

The Fund, which was intended to supplement assistance provided through the United Nations and the United Nations Development Programme for the industrial development of developing countries, had approved a total of 301 projects and expended $13.1 million by the end of the year.

In considering the item at its April/May 1979 session, the Industrial Development Board expressed the hope that more contributions to the Fund would be made in the form of convertible currencies to reach the desirable annual funding level of $50 million agreed in 1977.

As at 30 June 1980, 80 countries had pledged or delivered a total of $12,043,215 to the Development Fund for 1980 as a result of the Pledging Conference. (For details of pledges, see table on p. 556.)

Chapter IX

Questions concerning transnational corporations

During 1979, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations continued to expand its technical co-operation and research activities, including the development of a comprehensive information system. The Centre's technical co-operation expenditures for 1979, financed mainly by voluntary contributions from donor countries, were approximately $1.1 million, compared to $400,000 in 1978. More than half of the consultants contracted by the Centre for technical co-operation assignments were from developing countries.

Of the 35 advisory projects completed in 1979, 14 were in response to requests from African countries, eight from Latin American countries, 10 from Asian countries and one from a European country. The projects dealt with diverse sectors, such as the automotive industry, forestry, fisheries, citrus processing, copper and nickel mining, hotels and tourism, petroleum, telecommunications and aluminium smelting, as well as assistance in respect of foreign investment laws and regulations in general.

The Centre also organized eight national workshops and three regional workshops, and awarded its first fellowship during the year. The national workshops dealt with general issues and specific sectors such as petroleum, transnational banking and joint venture arrangements. They were held in Indonesia, Jamaica, Peru (2), the Philippines, Romania and Suriname, and in Zambia as part of the United Nations Nationhood Programme for Namibia. Regional workshops were convened on commercial fisheries for the South China Sea and Pacific area, on technology transfer for the Asia and Pacific region, and on mineral agreements for Pacific islands.

In addition to maintaining close co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Centre continued to strengthen its co-operative arrangements with the regional commissions and with several organizations within and outside the United Nations system carrying out technical cooperation programmes, including the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation and the World Tourism Organization. In July 1979, the Centre became an executing agency for UNDP with the authorization to administer and implement UNDP-financed projects within its mandate.

Research studies completed in 1979 included reports on transnational corporations in the pharmaceutical and advertising industries, an indepth study of the activities of transnational corporations in the industrial, mining and military sectors of southern Africa, and reports on methodological issues related to the social, political and legal impact of transnational corporations, on the relationship between regional and corporate integration, and on technology transfer through transnational corporations. Research in progress during 1979 covered topics such as transnational banks and reinsurance operations, transnational linkages in developing countries, and transnational corporations in international tourism, food and beverage processing, the international bauxite-aluminium industry, the international copper industry, and the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of South Africa.

During 1979, the comprehensive information system on transnational corporations was able to meet a wide range of requests, more than double the volume of the previous year. The Centre made considerable progress in developing each of the system's components, including: policies, laws and regulations on matters related to transnational corporations; industry analyses; trends in the activities of transnational corporations; information on individual corporations; contracts and agreements between transnational corporations and host country entities; and data on information sources and expertise. During the year, the Centre also commenced work on a user's guide to the system to help meet the growing number of requests for information.

The activities of the Centre were reviewed by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its fifth session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 14 to 25 May and on 16 and 17 July 1979. The Commission expressed its general appreciation of the Centre's achievements, stressed the importance of setting work priorities and of obtaining more information on the financial implications of the Centre's programme, and noted a number of recommendations and proposals to be considered by the Centre in the areas of technical co-operation, development of a comprehensive information system and research. It emphasized that research activities, in particular, should be actionoriented and supportive of the Commission's two principal goals, namely the formulation of an international code of conduct and the strengthening of the negotiating capacity of host, particularly developing, countries.

In May 1979, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination evaluated the programme implemented by the Commission and the Centre for the period 1976- 1978. It urged a fuller definition of priorities among the Centre's activities, said the Centre should develop a systematic method of obtaining Government views on its policy analysis and information-gathering work, and recommended better co-ordination of the Centre's comprehensive information system with other United Nations information systems. It felt that the Centre would be acting prematurely if it shifted emphasis from formulation to implementation and monitoring of the code of conduct, agreed that the Centre should systematically make available information it had gained in sending advisory missions to Governments, and recommended that the Commission should give precise guidelines on the role of the joint units set up by the Centre and the United Nations regional commissions. Finally, it recommended that the real growth of the programme on transnational corporations during 1980-1983 should not exceed that of the United Nations budget as a whole.

The Committee's conclusions and recommendations on this and other matters were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1979/66 of 3 August (see p. 964).

Code of conduct and international agreement on illicit payments

In 1979, the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct held its sixth and seventh sessions in New York from 8 to 19 January and from 12 to 23 March, during which it considered the legal nature of the code, alternative modalities for its implementation and common elements regarding intergovernmental cooperation. At its seventh session, the Working Group also discussed a number of formulations prepared by its Chairman on topics such as national sovereignty and transnational corporations, adherence to economic goals and development priorities, non-interference in intergovernmental relations, abstention from corrupt practices, consumer and environmental protection, and the treatment of transnational corporations by countries in which they operated. As at the end of its seventh session, a number of sections to be included in the code remained incomplete and the Group concluded that it needed three more twoweek sessions to present a comprehensive draft of the code to the 1980 session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

The Working Group's report to the Commission's 1979 session described progress made at its 1979 'sessions as well as at its fifth session, held from 18 to 29 September 1978. The Commission took note of the report and instructed the Group to continue its work with a view to submitting a comprehensive draft code of conduct in 1980. It also requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize three more sessions of the Working Group to be held prior to the 1980 sessions of the Commission and the General Assembly.

The Commission also decided that its work relating to a definition of transnational corporations should be continued, particularly in the context of the formulation of a code of conduct, noting that the Working Group would discuss this topic further in 1980.

By another action, it asked the Executive Director of the Centre on Transnational Corporations for a report setting out options for the selection, rotation and participation of the Commission's expert advisers, taking into account suggestions by States at the 1979 session. Several representatives had expressed the view that, pending consideration of the whole question by the Commission, the Working Group should reconsider the manner in which the expert advisers participated in its work. The Commission agreed to prolong the mandate of 12 of its 16 expert advisers for an additional year, up to the 1980 session, and asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with Commission members, to submit to it before that session a list of 48 candidates for the selection of 16 advisers and possibly alternates.

The Committee on an International Agreement on Illicit Payments, established in August 1978,1 held its first and second sessions at United Nations Headquarters from 29 January to 9 February and from 7 to 18 May 1979, during which it discussed and formulated the draft of an international agreement on illicit payments. The Committee's report on these sessions contained the draft agreement as well as a set of notes containing alternative proposals and views expressed by Committee members with regard to each of the 11 articles in the draft. The report's annex contained proposals by France for a convention on the elimination of bribery in international commercial transactions. On 18 May, the Committee decided to transmit the draft agreement contained in its report to the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Transnational Corporations.

Although the Committee's report was not available for consideration by the Commission at its 1979 session, the Council took note of the report at its second regular 1979 session by decision 1979/76, adopted, without vote, on 3 August on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, where it had been approved, without vote, the day before on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

On 24 July, the observer for the Ivory Coast, on behalf of member States of the Council which were members of the "Group of 77" developing countries, introduced a draft resolution in the First Committee whereby the Council would: reaffirm that the formulation of a code of conduct by the Commission should be given the highest priority and in no way be delayed by the conclusion of an international agreement on illicit payments; take note of the reports of the Commission and the Committee on an International Agreement on Illicit Payments, endorsing the Commission's conclusion with regard to three additional two-week sessions of the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct and urging completion of the work of both the Committee and the Working Group; decide that the Committee should hold at least two other two-week sessions; and recommend that the General Assembly decide at its 1979 session to convene in the last quarter of 1980 a negotiating conference to conclude agreement on the basis of the work of the Committee and the Working Group.

On 25 July, the United States introduced a draft resolution in the First Committee whereby the Council would decide to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries, no later than 30 June 1980, in which all States were to be invited to participate for the purpose of concluding an international agreement on illicit payments.

After informal consultations on the two drafts, a Vice-Chairman of the First Committee orally proposed a draft decision by the terms of which the Council would transmit the texts of both draft resolutions to the Assembly's 1979 session for further consideration and would decide that the Intergovernmental Working Group on a Code of Conduct should hold three further sessions in 1980, each of two weeks' duration, and should submit a comprehensive report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its 1980 session.

The decision, annexing the two texts, was approved by the Committee without vote on 2 August and adopted in the same manner by the Council on 3 August, as decision 1979/73.

On the basis of informal consultations on the two draft resolutions annexed to Council decision 1979/73, a Vice-Chairman of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee submitted a draft decision by which the Assembly would transmit both draft resolutions to the Council's second regular 1980 session for further consideration. On 5 December 1979, the Second Committee Chairman stated that during informal consultations it had been decided to take no decision on the two draft resolutions. The draft decision was therefore withdrawn.

Activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa

In March 1979, the Centre on Transnational Corporations issued a comprehensive report on the activities of transnational corporations in the industrial, mining and military sectors of southern Africa, including a description of the patterns and trends of direct foreign investment in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) and a summary of the economic, political and statutory developments relevant to transnational corporations with subsidiaries in those countries. In the report's annex, the Centre listed the transnational corporations that did or did not recognize and negotiate with non-white and multiracial trade unions.

At its May 1979 meetings, the Commission on Transnational Corporations, after considering the Centre's report, approved, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 6, with 5 abstentions, a draft resolution, proposed by States members of the Group of 77, on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes in that area, recommending it for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 3 August, the Council adopted the Commission's text as resolution 1979/75, by which it took note of the Centre's report and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination and permanent sovereignty over their natural resources and economic activities, reiterating that the activities of transnational corporations in the area and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes were detrimental to the interests of those peoples. The Council called upon Governments to ensure the implementation of sanctions adopted and decisions taken by the United Nations with regard to the racist régimes in southern Africa, and strongly condemned continued investments and exploitation of black. labour by corporations collaborating with those regimes and the laws and regulations adopted by those regimes to enlist the support of transnational corporations in the perpetuation of apartheid policies; it called on home Governments to ensure that corporations of their nationality did not collaborate in the enforcement of such laws and regulations.

The Council urged transnational corporations to comply with United Nations resolutions by terminating their investments in the area and their collaboration with the minority regimes, and called upon Governments to take appropriate measures in order to terminate activities of their nationals and transnational corporations of their nationality owning or operating enterprises in southern Africa. It also called upon States: to prohibit their nationals and enterprises from making any royalty or tax payments to, or from transferring any financial resources to facilitate trade or investments in, the territories occupied by racist regimes; to deny tariff and other preferences to exports from those territories; and to refrain from supplying the régimes with petroleum or other strategic materials, from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to them and to corporations registered there, and from directly or indirectly contributing to the strengthening of their military capability.

In addition, the Secretary-General was requested: to instruct the Secretariat to continue its research on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa; to submit to the Commission on Transnational Corporations in 1980 an indepth analysis of the role of corporations in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and Namibia; to update and expand the list of transnational corporations that did and did not recognize and negotiate with non-white and multiracial trade unions; to continue to collect and publish information on the activities of transnational corporations collaborating with the racist regimes; and to organize symposia, workshops, seminars and other programmes, in collaboration with concerned United Nations bodies, with a view to educating the general public in the home countries of the corporations involved in southern Africa on the extent of their collaboration with the racist regimes in that area.

The Council adopted resolution 1979/75 by a roll-call vote of 36 to 4, with 8 abstentions. The text of the resolution, recommended by the Commission on Transnational Corporations, had been approved in the First Committee on 1 August by a roll-call vote of 27 to 4, with 7 abstentions.

Several of the States that abstained on or voted against the resolution stated in explanation of vote that, although they agreed with its basic aims, they questioned the Council's authority to adopt the resolution without infringing the functions of other United Nations bodies. Ireland, on behalf of the member States of the Council belonging to the European Economic Community, and New Zealand also stated that not all the measures proposed were practical or appropriate. Finland, Spain and Sweden felt that on some points the language went beyond what they could support; Sweden added that the resolution did not appear to satisfy some basic elements of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the competence of United Nations bodies. The United States differed in particular with the request for the organization of symposia and other programmes for educating the public in home countries on transnational corporation activities in southern Africa, which it felt was counter-productive and contained unresolved financial implications.

On 6 November, the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Declaration of the International Seminar on the Role of Transnational Corporations in South Africa, a seminar organized by the British Anti-apartheid Movement in co-operation with the Special Committee and held in London from 2 to 4 November. The Declaration called for: international campaigns against key transnational corporations and financial institutions assisting South Africa in military, nuclear, petroleum and other strategic fields; co-ordinated action to implement effective arms and oil embargoes against South Africa and to terminate the flow of finance to the country; exposing the influence of transnational corporations operating in southern Africa on news media in other countries; and the establishment of a central information centre to assist Governments and organizations committed to sanctions against South Africa. (See also p. 174.)

At its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa which included provisions on the activities of transnational corporations in that area. By resolution 34/93 A of 12 December, the Assembly condemned transnational corporations and other institutions that assisted the racist regime of South Africa, inviting all States and organizations to take measures to persuade those bodies to abide by United Nations resolutions, and calling upon all Governments concerned to take measures to prevent transnational corporations, banks and all other institutions under their jurisdiction from collaborating with the apartheid regime (see also p. 179). By resolution 34/93 F of the same date, the Assembly requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to undertake missions to the home countries of transnational oil corporations for consultations on enforcing an effective oil embargo (see also p. 181). By resolution 34/93 R of 17 December, the Assembly authorized the Committee to organize, or participate in the organization of, symposia and other events in the home countries of transnational corporations with a view to educating the general public on the activities of those corporations in South Africa (see also p. 185).

Establishment of a working group on standards of accounting and reporting

At its 1979 organizational session, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/9, approved the draft provisional agenda for its first regular 1979 session, with the addition of an item, orally proposed by the United Kingdom, on the establishment of an ad hoc intergovernmental working group of experts on international standards of accounting and reporting. The Council adopted this decision, without vote, on 9 February on an oral proposal of its President.

Acting on a 1978 recommendation of the Commission on Transnational Corporations,² the Council, on 11 May 1979, decided to establish a 34-member Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting. The Council fixed the regional distribution of seats in the Group and decided that the Group should take into account the 1978 report of the Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, as well as other activities in the field, and should consult with international accounting bodies and elicit views of other interested parties on an ad hoc basis. The Centre on Transnational Corporations would service the Group.

The Group was to report to the Commission in 1980 on further steps to be taken in the field of international standards of accounting and reporting within the scope of the Commission's work, particularly with regard to the comprehensive information system and the code of conduct, concentrating on the formulation of priorities that would take into account the needs of home and host countries, particularly those of developing countries. The Council requested the Secretary-General to endeavour to find extrabudgetary resources to facilitate, when necessary, the effective participation of Group members through payment of their travel and per diem expenses.

The Council took this action in adopting, without vote, resolution 1979/44, as proposed by a Council Vice-President following informal consultations on a draft decision submitted by the Commission in 1978, consideration of which had been postponed that year. In introducing the draft resolution, the Vice-President stated the understanding of the States participating in the consultations that: nothing would prevent a developing country's representative from being chosen as the Group's Chairman; the provision on the payment of members' expenses applied to one representative from each country in the Group; and the rules of procedure for the Council's subsidiary bodies would apply to the Group.

On 17 May, the Commission on Transnational Corporations suggested that the Group focus on national standards within the scope of the Commission's mandate, particularly concerning the comprehensive information system and the code of conduct. It requested the Intergovernmental' Working Group on a Code of Conduct to define questions on which it would like advice from the Ad Hoc Group and expressed hope that the Group would begin meeting as soon as possible so that it could assist the Intergovernmental Working Group before January 1980.

Provisional agenda for the sixth session of the Commission

On 3 August 1979, by decision 1979/74 adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the sixth (1980) session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations. The text had been forwarded by the First Committee, which had approved on 1 August, also without vote, a draft recommended by the Commission in accordance with Council resolution 1979/41 of 10 May. By resolution 1979/41, the Council had] decided, for purposes of document and budgetary controls, that its subsidiary bodies were to submit to it for review a provisional agenda and a list of requested documentation. (For page reference to text of resolution 1979/41, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Report of the Commission

on Transnational Corporations

By decision 1979/75, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on the work of its fifth (1979) session. The decision was adopted, without vote, on 3 August as recommended by the First Committee, where it had been orally proposed by the Committee Chairman and approved, also without vote, on 2 August.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974 containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974 containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, Recalling also the resolutions adopted by the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its third and fourth sessions on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes in that area.

Recalling further the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, and General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations entitled "The activities of the transnational corporations in the industrial, mining and military sectors of southern Africa,"

Gravely concerned at the continued collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist minority régimes in southern Africa, in contravention of United Nations resolutions,

Gravely concerned further about the adverse trends in policies of home Governments which encourage transnational corporations to continue to collaborate with the racist minority régimes in southern Africa in violation of United Nations resolutions and in defiance of the legitimate aspirations of the oppressed peoples,

Considering that the cessation of the activities of transnational corporations in the area would constitute an important step in the struggle against the racist minority régimes,

Conscious of the continued need to enlist the active support of the home Governments of transnational corporations which operate in the territories occupied by the racist minority régimes,

Welcoming as a positive step measures taken by some home Governments to curtail the activities of their transnational and other corporations in southern Africa,

Mindful of the imperative need to maintain and strengthen international solidarity in support of the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa for self-determination and independence,

Recognizing the importance of mobilizing world public opinion against the involvement and collaboration of transnational corporations with the racist minority regimes in southern Africa.

- Takes note of the report of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations entitled "The activities of the transnational corporations in the industrial, mining and military sectors of southern Africa;"
- 2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa to self-determination and permanent sovereignty over their natural resources and all economic activities:
- 3. Reiterates that the activities of transnational corporations in the area and their collaboration with the racist minority regimes are detrimental to the interests of the oppressed peoples in South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and Namibia;
- 4. Recognizes the urgent need to take further and effective measures including sanctions, in order to terminate the continuing collaboration by transnational and other corporations with the racist minority regimes in southern Africa;
- Calls upon all Governments to adhere strictly to and ensure the effective implementation of sanctions and decisions already adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council;
- 6. Strongly condemns the continued investments and the exploitation of black labour by transnational and other corporations which continue to collaborate with the racist minority regimes in southern Africa in contravention of United Nations resolutions, thereby contributing to the perpetuation of oppression and other inhuman practices perpetrated against the majority of the population by the racist minority regimes;
- 7. Further condemns recent laws and regulations, such as that curtailing the flow of information on the activities of foreign subsidiaries, adopted by the racist minority regimes, particularly South Africa, in order to enlist the support of transnational corporations in the perpetuation of its inhuman policies of apartheid, and calls upon home Governments to adopt measures to ensure that transnational corporations of their nationality do not collaborate in the enforcement of such laws and regulations;
- 8. Urges all transnational corporations to comply fully with the relevant United Nations resolutions by terminating all further investments in the area and by ending their collaboration with the racist minority regimes;

- 9. Calls upon all Governments which have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures in respect of their nationals and transnational corporations of their nationality owning or operating enterprises in the area in order to put an end to such activities;
- 10. Calls further upon all States to terminate all forms of collaboration by their nationals and by transnational and other corporations of their nationality with the racist minority régimes in southern Africa and in particular:
- (a) To refrain from supplying petroleum, petroleum products or other strategic materials to the racist minority régimes;
- (b) To refrain from extending loans, investments and technical assistance to the racist minority régimes in southern Africa and to corporations registered in those territories;
- (c) To prohibit economic and financial interests under their national jurisdiction from co-operating with the racist minority régimes and enterprises registered in southern Africa:
- (d) To refrain from all activities which may directly or indirectly contribute to the strengthening of the military capability of the racist minority régimes;
- (e) To deny tariff and other preferences to exports from the territories occupied by the racist minority régimes in southern Africa as well as any inducements or guarantees for investment and trade in the area;
- (f) To prohibit all persons and enterprises of their nationality from making any royalty or tax payments to, or from knowingly transferring any assets or other financial resources in contravention of United Nations resolutions to facilitate trade with or investments in, the territories occupied by the racist minority régimes;
 - 11. Requests the Secretary-General:
- (a) To instruct the Secretariat to continue its useful research on the activities of transnational corporations in southern Africa and their collaboration with the racist minority régimes in the area;
- (b) To submit to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, at its sixth session, an in-depth analysis of the role of transnational corporations in the industrial, military and nuclear sectors of South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and Namibia:
- (c) To update and expand the list of transnational corporations which recognize and negotiate with non-white and multiracial trade unions as well as those which do not, contained in the report mentioned in paragraph 1 above;
- (d) To continue to collect and publicize information on the activities of transnational corporations which collaborate directly or indirectly with the racist minority regimes in southern Africa in contravention of United Nations resolutions;
- (e) To organize symposia, workshops, seminars and other public enlightenment programmes, in collaboration with other United Nations bodies concerned, with a view to educating the general public in the home countries of transnational corporations on the activities of those corporations in southern Africa and the extent of their collaboration with the racist minority regimes in the area.

Application of science and technology to development

The United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development met at Vienna in August 1979 and adopted a Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development. On 19 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/218, endorsed the Programme of Action and took steps to implement its recommendations, including the creation of a United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development and a United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development.

By other decisions, the Assembly took note of a report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information as an aspect of development and endorsed a resolution on development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its fifth (May/June 1979) session.

Details of these and related decisions are given in the subchapters below.

United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development

Preparations for the Conference

The Committee on Science and Technology for Development, acting as the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 21 December 1976, 1 held its third, fourth and fifth sessions at United Nations Headquarters, New York, during 1979.

At its third session, held from 22 January to 5 February, the Preparatory Committee addressed itself to substantive issues, including a preliminary draft programme of action for the Conference requested by the Economic and Social Council on 4 August 1978² and prepared by the Secretary-General of the Conference pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979.³ The draft incorporated recommendations from national and regional papers, and embodied the agenda items recommended by the Council on 4 August 1976⁴ under six target areas: sharing of knowledge and experience by all members of the international community; increasing scientific and technological policy-making capability in the framework of general development planning; transfer of technology to aid development; enhancing endogenous capabilities for national self-reliance; promoting collective self-reliance through co-operation among developing countries; and strengthening the role of the United Nations in the field of scientific and technological co-operation.

The Preparatory Committee asked the Conference Secretary-General to rearrange the Conference's draft programme of action, taking into account the views expressed at its third session. Statements on the objectives of the Conference, made at the session by Tunisia (on behalf of the "Group of 77" developing countries), by France on behalf of States members of the European Economic Community (EEC)), by the United states and by the USSR, were annexed to the Committee's report to the Assembly.

By other decisions, the Committee took note of several reports prepared in connexion with the Conference, made recommendations on the structure of the Conference, amended the Conference's rules of procedure to disallow written records of meetings, and asked the Economic and Social Council to reschedule the Committee's fourth session and to schedule a fifth session.

The draft programme of action, submitted to the Committee's fourth session, held from 23 April to 4 May, was reorganized under the folowing target areas: (a) strengthening the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries; (b) restructuring the existing pattern of international scientific and technological relations; and (c) strengthening the role of he United Nations in the field of science and technology and the provision of increased financial resources.

The Committee also reviewed and formally took note of documentation, approved general preparations for the Conference, requested specific reports for its fifth session, and recommended adoption of the provisional agenda contained in a progress report submitted by the Conference Secretary-General. Statements on the preparatory work for the Conference, made at the session by the Conference Secretary-General, by Bulgaria (also on behalf of seven other socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Mongolia), by China and by Norway (also on behalf of Denmark, Finland and Sweden), were annexed to the Committee's report to the Assembly.

The fifth and final session of the Preparatory Committee, held from 25 June to 7 July, was largely devoted to elaborating the final draft programme of action to be presented to the Conference. Deliberations on the three, main target areas of the programme by two drafting groups, taking into particular account proposals prepared by the Group of 77, produced general agreement on the substance of the first target area. Consensus was not reached, however, on the two remaining target areas, which were referred to the Conference for consideration together with the programme's preamble. Other decisions included taking formal note of several Conference-related documents and setting dates for pre-Conference informal consultations. Having first defeated-by a recorded vote of 19 in favour to 41 against, with 6 abstentions—a United States motion for postponement of action to amend a 1977 Committee decision on national papers for the Conference, the Committee decided, by a recorded vote of 47 to 2, with 19 abstentions, that regional commission members, as well as States, be requested to prepare a national paper.

Additional preparations for the Conference included a pre-Conference International Colloquium on Science, Technology and Society: Needs, Challenges and Limitations, held at Vienna from 13 to 17 August 1979 under the auspices of the United Nations Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development. The Colloquium was attended by some 300 scientists, technologists and planners from nearly 100 countries and representatives of concerned United Nations bodies. Its report to the Conference contained recommendations relating to broad policy considerations -such as endogenous capabilities of developing countries, development planning and global problems -as well as to 11 sectoral areas: agriculture, health, natural resources, transport, communications, industrialization, appropriate technology, human settlements, energy, population and information.

By a decision of 26 June 1979, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), meeting at United Nations Headquarters, requested its Administrator to take the measures needed, including convening a special meeting of the Council, to enable UNDP to respond promptly and effectively to Conference decisions approved by the General Assembly which might be of concern to UNDP.

By decision 1979/48 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council decided, without vote, that the reports of the Preparatory Committee on its fourth and fifth sessions should be transmitted to the Conference for consideration. The text had been approved, without objection on 18 July, by the First (Economic) Committee as orally proposed by its Chairman.

Decisions of the Conference

The United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development was held at Vienna from 20 to 31 August 1979, pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979.⁵ The Conference was attended by representatives of 142 States. The Palestine Liberation Organization attended in the capacity of observer and the African National Congress (South Africa) and the Patriotic Front (Zimbabwe) were represented by observers.

The Conference was also attended by representatives of the United Nations Secretariat, bodies and programmes, including the five regional commissions, and 13 specialized agencies and related organizations. In addition, 29 intergovernmental organizations and a large number of non-governmental organizations were represented. (For participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

At its opening meeting, the Conference established two main committees. The First Committee was to complete the preamble to the draft programme of action on science and technology for development and consider programme recommendations directed at the first two of the Preparatory Committee's three proposed target areas. For this purpose, it set up three working groups to deal, respectively, with the preamble and introductions to the target areas, the transfer of technology, and information exchange. Proposals on which agreement was not reached, as well as compromise texts arising from informal consultations on those proposals and submitted by the Committee Chairman, were annexed to the Committee's report and to the Conference's report for further consideration, if it was felt desirable, in the context of future consultations.

To consider in detail the target area on strengthening the role of the United Nations and providing resources, the Second Committee established a negotiating group which, in turn, set up an open-ended drafting group to prepare recommendations.

Both Committees recommended to the Conference the adoption of their approved passages, reproduced in their reports.

The Conference also established an openended Working Group on Science and Technology and the Future to consider an agenda item on that subject as well as substantive aspects of new science and technology for overcoming obstacles to development. The Group considered a number of background papers, documents, and national and regional reports on meetings and symposia, and adopted a text containing agreed views on its areas of examination, recommending that the text be included in the Conference's report. In opening the Conference, the Secretary-General of the United Nations noted the close relationship subsisting between the entire spectrum of modern global ills and the uses of science and technology in development. Much human ingenuity, he noted for example, had been misdirected into the refinement of military technologies and wasteful consumerism in a world where famine and malnutrition were tragically present. It was thus a major task of the Conference to help ensure that scientific and technological potential were directed to constructive ends.

In addition, there was an enormous imbalance in the world's research and development activities, 97 per cent of which took place in industrialized countries. As a result, the developing countries were excessively dependent on imported technologies and needed help in gathering and sharing scientific knowledge to enhance their technological capabilities and accelerate their development. This required a global programme of action, which the Conference was designed evolve. Three elements, the Secretary-General concluded, were necessary for the success of the programme: the political will to seek remedies within the international framework; increased funding for science and technology at the national and international levels; and the institution efficient mechanisms for implementing the programme.

In an inaugural address, the Federal President of the Republic of Austria stated that science and technology were two decisive contributing factors in the drive for progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations. At the same time, science and technology were responsible for a seemingly endless accumulation of armaments and, while the Conference would hardly be able to resolve this problem, it would be a dereliction of duty to fail to draw attention to the fear and anxiety caused by the armaments race and the nuclear threat. By seeking ways to make science and technology serve development, however, the Conference could contribute to a more just international order and thus serve the cause of peace. With this in mind, he appealed to the participants to be indefatigable in making science and technology truly the instruments for overcoming ignorance, poverty and oppression.

The President of the Conference observed that science and technology were essential components of the development process at the national level, but that the achievement of their potential depended more and more on international collaboration and international action. It would be the task of the Governments represented at the Conference, therefore, to show the political will and readiness to compromise which was necessary for translating ideas into actions, and to harness the forces of science and technology in the service of the balanced development of all nations.

In opening the general debate, the Secretary-General of the Conference stated that the success of the Conference would depend partly on its ability to formulate a coherent programme of action, a set of recommendations addressed to Member States and to the different bodies and organizations of the United Nations system for implementation and formulation of detailed programmes. The three critical issues before the Conference related to the transfer of technology, the establishment of appropriate institutional mechanisms and the solution of financial problems. The issue of technology transfer, he noted, was a complex one with emotional overtones, which had been under consideration for so long that it would be unrealistic to expect it to be definitively settled by the Conference. As to institutional machinery, the structure required to co-ordinate science and technology for development would consist of four elements: a secretariat, and bodies representing Governments, the United Nations system, and the scientific and technological community. Finally, the Conference Secretary-General observed that any recommendations the Conference might adopt would be vain in the absence of a considerable increase in the financial resources necessary for strengthening the scientific and technical capacities of developing countries.

Following the general debate, the Conference considered and, on 31 August, took note of the reports of its main committees and adopted the passages they had recommended for inclusion in the programme of action. The Conference also approved three resolutions and various decisions.

By the first of these resolutions, adopted unanimously, the Conference adopted and annexed its Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, containing agreed recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly. The Conference also thereby urged all Governments to take action to implement the Programme, requested United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations to comply with its recommendations, and invited the scientific and technological community to be guided by its provisions.

The second resolution dealt with women, science and technology (see subsection below on OTHER CONFERENCE DECISIONS).

By the third—a text introduced by Finland on behalf. of the Nordic countries and adopted by acclamation— the Conference. expressed its gratitude to the host country and city and decided that the Programme of Action it had adopted would be known as the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development.

Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development

The Programme of Action encompassed a preamble and three sections containing recommendations directed at the major target areas recommended by the Preparatory Committee.

By the preamble, the Conference proclaimed that the ultimate goal of science and technology was to serve national development and to improve the well-being of humanity as a whole, the achievement of which presupposed full control by developing countries over their own resources and an equitable distribution of scientific and technological capabilites in the world. The Conference was thus an integral part of international efforts for the establishment of the new international economic order, whose recommendations aimed at the use of science and technology for the development of all counand particularly of the developing tries, countries.

To this end the Programme of Action, according to the preamble, set forth the requirements for specific action in the field of science and technology at the national, subregional, regional, interregional and international levels: (a) creation and/or strengthening of the policy-making capacity of developing countries; (b) promotion of efforts to strengthen their self-reliance; (c) strengthening their capacity, inter alia through external support and assistance, to generate scientific and technological knowledge and to apply science and technology to their own development; (d) restructuring international cooperation to improve distribution of world production and resources; (e) allocating adequate financial resources; (f) strengthening co-operation among developing countries and between developing and developed countries; and (g) adoption of special measures in favour of least developed, land-locked and island developing countries and those most seriously affected by economic crises.

The first of the three target areas which comprised the principal focus of the Programme of Action-titled section I, on strengthening the science and technology capacities of the developing countries—contained recommendations for specific action by developing countries at all levels as well as for international action by developed countries and by international organizations; The second target area, covered in section II of the Programme, contained recommendations for restructuring the existing pattern of international scientific and technological relations.

By an introduction to the recommendations in sections I and II, the Conference noted that primary responsibility for the development of developing countries rested with these countries themselves and stated that they were committed to assuming that responsibility, individually and collectively. However, that effective action at the international level, especially by developed countries, was required to create an environment supportive of developing countries' national efforts.

Recommendations applicable at the national, subregional, regional and interregional levels in section I were laid down under three major headings: the scope and dimensions of science and technology policy; major elements of that policy for developing countries; and measures and mechanisms for strengthening the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries.

At the national level, each developing country should formulate a policy for science and technology, integrated with its over-all development plans and covering the simplest technologies to the most advanced. Such a policy should include: development targets for each science and technology sector; a survey of the current state-of-the-art resources and potential for each sector; mobilization of financial resources; appropriate institutional machinery, with attention to manpower and investment requirements; development of managerial capacities in all fields, including research and development; establishment of a capacity for the assessment, selection, acquisition and adaptation of foreign technologies; education and training; and other measures to ensure proper co-ordination, integration and equitable distribution of benefits.

Under a separate subsection on national measures and mechanisms for strengthening the scientific and technological capacities. of developing countries, the Programme set forth recommendations covering: institutional arrangements, including establishment of one or more high-level scientific and technological policymaking and implementing bodies; transfer, acquisition and assessment of technology; scientific and technological information systems; development of human resources; and financial arrangements.

At the subregional, regional and interregional levels, a policy of collective self-reliance was recommended to strengthen internal capacities and improve bargaining positions through bilateral and multilateral measures. This would entail, among other things: a policy framework to make financial, natural and human resources fully effective; co-operative, interlinked institutions; cooperation in choosing topics and priorities; and substantial expansion, where possible, of financial and/or technical assistance to the least developed countries.

Major elements of co-operation policies at these levels included: preferential treatment between developing countries; co-ordinated training and education; strengthening regional research and development institutions; promoting interregional management activities; co-operative projects and symposia; and improved channelling of information on scientific and technological advances.

In a subsection on regional measures and mechanisms for strengthening the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries, recommendations were made for: joint initiatives to explore and utilize natural and other resources; joint industrial projects to maximize the use of resources, capital and skills, including management and marketing arrangements; inventories of skilled manpower; promotion of inter- and intraregional technology transfer; and undertaking regional development projects.

The Programme also set forth recommendations regarding institutional arrangements at the subregional to interregional levels, including the strengthening of scientific and professional associations and the establishment of institutional networks addressed to such activities as promoting of technological innovation, research and development programmes, training, information systems, and negotiations with suppliers of technology, including transnational corporations. Improvements in institutional support structures, including upgrading of national research and training centres to perform international functions, and strengthening or establishing management and engineering consultancy organizations and regional centres for the transfer and development of technology were also recommended.

On the subject of scientific and technological information systems at these levels, measures should be adopted to raise public awareness of the role of science and technology in development and of the problems experienced. Interlinked information networks and data banks should be established to exchange information on training programmes, conditions for technology transfer, terms of foreign investment and activities of transnational corporations, as well as information on agriculture, health, communications and industrialization.

Finally, recommendations were advanced concerning co-operative efforts aimed at developing human resources and increasing financial inputs at the subregional, regional and interregional levels

At the international level, recommendations on strengthening the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries were addressed to developed countries and to international organizations.

The major elements of co-operation policies proposed for developed countries included: support for problem-solving research, to be carried out as far as possible within the developing countries in co-operation with their institutions and in keeping with their priorities; activities involving intensive participation by developing countries and potentially leading to comprehensive agreements covering technology, finance, production and trade; measures to make available systematically, in accordance with national laws, the results of research and development; and substantial increases in the expenditures devoted to research and development of this kind.

Among institutional arrangements needed to support such activities were: direct linkages between the research and development systems of developed and developing countries, allowing for joint programmes; restructuring of international machinery to serve development and international co-operation better; intergovernmental agreements between developed and developing countries and commissions to strengthen co-operation; and improved co-operation between their respective scientific and technological associations.

Recommendations were also put forward for the establishment of information networks above the national level to link and strengthen national information capacity and facilitate access to patent documents. Developed countries should provide fellowships and training programmes, participate in efforts to solve the "brain-drain" problem, and support the establishment of centres of higher education and research in developing countries.

Developed countries were urged to untie development aid, to maximize the use of local technologies and services, and to encourage subregional, regional and interregional coordination by increasing and improving the terms of financing.

Recommendations addressed to international organizations related to institutional arrangements, technology transfer and assessment, scientific and technological information systems and the development of human resources. Organizations in the United Nations system were expected to harmonize their efforts to implement rapidly the recommendations and decisions on strengthening the technological capacity of developing countries. Consideration should continue to be given to the establishment of a global information network within the system, with emphasis on priority needs of developing countries.

In the second broad target area, which comprised section II, on restructuring the existing pattern of international scientific and technological relations, the Programme presented recommendations on: the acquisition and transfer of technology; the restructuring of information systems relevant to the requirements of the developing countries; the promotion of international scientific and technological co-operation for development; and institutional arrangements to implement the structural transformation to be effected in international co-operation in this field.

Under the first topic, action by developing countries included: sharing experiences and coordinating domestic legislation policies and policies for the selection, acquisition, adaptation, assessment and development of technologies; joint purchase arrangements to improve the terms of acquisition; and co-operation on matters subject to international multilateral negotiations.

Developed countries should facilitate technology transfer from their small and medium-sized enterprises, as well as co-operative schemes, including joint ventures with public and private enterprises in developing countries.

More active involvement by organizations in the United Nations system was recommended in informing, advising and assisting in technology transfer through, inter alia, the provision of experienced personnel and training programmes, development of local institutions and establishment of regionally-oriented data banks and information centres.

On the second topic, the restructuring of international information systems, the Conference, by the Programme, recommended, that developed countries should make available information normally available to their own nationals and allow access on favourable terms to specialized information systems and publications. It further recommended the establishment of a global network to channel scientific and technological information to developing countries (see also p. 651).

On the third topic-promotion of international scientific and technological co-operation for development —recommendations concerned: international co-operative action, such as information and personnel exchanges and professional collaboration; co-operative projects between developing countries; the compilation of resource inventories; increased resource allocation by developed countries for solving problems relevant to developing countries and for co-operative development projects; and co-ordinated action by international and regional organizations to reduce their technological dependence on foreign entities by upgrading their policymaking and managerial infrastructures.

On the fourth topic, institutional arrangements to implement structural transformation in international scientific and technological cooperation, the Programme offered methodological recommendations on an international co-operative programme for the application of science and technology and outlined the corresponding actions to be taken at the subregional and regional levels. Such programmes and projects, to be jointly designed, should: involve research and development; relate to training, specialization, updating and postgraduate programmes; strengthen institutions; promote activities such as information and technical aid, services and management training; promote use of local or regional technology; and seek participation of specialists in a supporting rather than a managerial role. Arrangements should be made at the subregional and regional levels to define priori ties, design programmes jointly, promote multilateral activities, and ensure proper resource balance.

In the introduction to section III of the Programme—on strengthening the role of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology and on increasing financial resources - the Conference observed that new arrangements were needed to complement national efforts and enhance and co-ordinate the contributions of science and technology to the development of developing countries. Stress was placed on the need to strengthen the endogenous capacities of the developing countries in accordance with their particular priorities, and on the need to ensure co-ordination of integrated cooperative activities both within the United Nations system and in the formulation of over-all development plans at the national, subregional, regional and interrregional levels.

Emphasized too was the need to treat science and technology as an integral part of the new international economic order, to distribute equitably the global effort to strengthen the endogenous capabilities of developing countries, and to increase the flow of financial resources to them through the system on a predictable, continuous and untied basis.

Specific recommendations were directed to: policy formulation and guidelines; technology transfer and assessment; scientific and technological information systems; development of human resources; institutional arrangements and structural changes; and global financial arrangements.

On policy formulation and guidelines, the Conference called for United Nations organizations to develop medium-term plans compatible with each other and with the Programme's overall policies. These plans should be cross-sectoral and integrated with national and regional development plans.

Evaluation mechanisms should be improved, associating the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination with the work as appropriate. The over-all effectiveness of the United Nations system should be enhanced by: improving co-ordination; decentralizing the decision-making process for strengthening the regional commissions, and improving their co-ordination with other organizations; and increasing the developing countries' participation in the decision-making processes in international organizations engaged in scientific and technological projects.

The Conference also called for United Nations action to increase, on request, developing countries' capacities in all areas of technology transfer and to strengthen the role of the United Nations system in scientific and technological information services.

The Conference recommended that the system should improve training opportunities through scholarships and awards, new international fellowships, rationalization of the existing fellowship programmes, and assistance in higher education, research and professional training. The Conference also recommended aid to deal with the brain-drain problem and support for full participation of women in the application of science and technology for development.

The bulk of the Conference's recommendations in section III related to institutional arrangements and structural transformations in the United Nations system and to global financial arrangements in support of science and technology for development.

On the first of these topics, the Conference recommended that the General Assembly establish a high-level Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development to formulate guidelines for harmonizing policies in the United Nations system, improve linkages and co-ordination between its bodies, identify priorities, prepare an operational plan, monitor activities and new developments, maximize resources, and give policy-making guidance to a United Nations financing system in this field.

The Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation should be responsible for over-all co-ordination in science and technology within the United Nations system, according to the Programme, which saw the need for secretariat support headed by a high-level official to assist him in his tasks; it was proposed that the Director-General report to the Assembly later in the year on the financial and organizational implications.

Addressing itself to institutional arrangements, and the system's training, research and development institutions, the Conference recommended that they: improve and establish interorganizational linkages; support intercountry institutional efforts; help strengthen academic institutions; facilitate professional study tours and exchange visits; arrange technical aid; assess and revise procedures for reviewing and implementing international conference decisions; increase generation and transfer of scientific and technical knowledge; mobilize world opinion in favour of armament reduction and reallocation of armament expenditures; assess scientific advances and their impact civilization; rapidly implement United Nations resolutions; facilitate developing countries' access to information important to the transfer and use of technology; foster scientists' and experts' involvement in developing countries' activities; and help national agencies identify elements of development programmes for proper assessment and co-ordination. United Nations programmes were to pay special attention to negotiations on international codes of conduct on the transfer of technology and on transnational corporations, as well as the revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property.

The Conference invited the General Assembly to initiate a study of the activities, mandates and working methods of all bodies of the system in the field of science and technology for development, for possible improvements.

On the topic of global financial arrangements, the Conference recommended that the Assembly establish a financing system for science and technology for development to support a broad range of activities and, in particular, to help implement the Programme of Action. Direction and policy should be provided by the proposed Intergovernmental Committee. It was recommended that an intergovernmental group of experts be created by the Assembly to study, in collaboration with the Director-General, arrangements for the financing system's operation. Following the Committee's consideration of this study, recommendations were to be made to the Assembly in 1981 regarding long-term financing arrangements to enter into operation in January 1982. Pending their establishment, an Interim Fund would be created and sustained by voluntary contributions, with a target of $250 million for the period 1980-1981, to be administered by UNDP under guidelines to be established by the Assembly and the Intergovernmental Committee.

Other Conference decisions

In addition to the resolutions by which it adopted the Vienna Programme of Action and expressed appreciation to the host country, the Conference unanimously adopted, on 31 August, a resolution on women, science and technology, by which it invited States to facilitate women's participation in the decisionmaking process related to science and technology and their equal access with men to training and careers in the field. It recommended that all United Nations organizations and bodies related to science and technology should promote women's full participation in programme planning and implementation invited the proposed Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development to give due regard to their interests, and recommended that the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women consider the relationships among women, science, technology and development.

The text had been introduced by the United Republic of Tanzania on behalf also of Australia, Austria, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, Hungary, Jamaica, Mongolia, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Somalia, Sweden, Thailand, the United States and Viet Nam.

By another decision of 31 August, the Conference decided to submit several draft recommendations for the Programme, which had been submitted by the Preparatory Committee but on which agreement had not been reached, as an annex to its report to the Assembly, for consideration by the Assembly or referral to the new Intergovernmental Committee or other bodies for further discussion. These related to provisions concerning, inter alia, transfer of technology, information systems, supplementary financing for national capacities, increased support to developing countries for the production and marketing of capital goods, and the role of transnational corporations.

On the same date, the Conference took note of the report of its Working Group on Science and Technology and the Future and included, as an annex to its report, the text the Group had recommended relating to its areas of consideration.

The Conference also annexed to its report comments and statements of position on the Programme of Action made by Poland (on behalf of eight Eastern European countries and Mongolia), by Ireland (on behalf of the members of EEC), by Tunisia (on behalf of the Group of 77), and individually by China, Japan, Switzerland and the United States.

Consideration by the General Assembly

In a report to the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly, the United Nations Secretary-General outlined matters deriving from the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development requiring the Assembly's consideration.

The first substantive section of the report dealt with the establishment and programme of work of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, with the provision of expert advisory support for the Committee and with the establishment of an intergovernmental group of experts to study a financing system for science and technology for development. The report proposed that expert advice be made available to the Committee, on request, by an advisory committee comprising a small nucleus of leading figures experienced in the endogenous development and application of national policies for science and technology.

A separate section of the report, prepared by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, outlined the organizational implications of providing secretariat support for his work in assisting co-ordinating activities of the Intergovernmental Committee. A new and organizationally distinct secretariat for the Committee was suggested, headed by an Under-Secretary-General or Assistant Secretary-General, with ultimate staffing needs to be determined in light of the possibilities of redeploying personnel.

The final section of the report contained estimates of requirements for the initial administrative and programme support costs of the United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development, an initial prospectus of which was included in the first section of the report. The Interim Fund was to provide technical and capital assistance for implementing the recommendations of the Vienna Programme of Action, pending establishment of a long-term financing system.

On 19 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/218, by which it took note of the reports of. the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development. and of the Secretary-General on matters deriving from the Conference. The Assembly reaffirmed the need to strengthen the role of the United Nations system in science and technology through, inter alia, new institutional arrangements and increased financial resources.

By the first operative section of the resolution, the Assembly endorsed the Vienna Programme of Action, urged all Governments to implement it, requested United Nations bodies and other intergovernmental organizations to comply with its recommendations, and invited concerned scientific and technical organizations to be guided by them. It also expressed full support for the Conference's resolution on women, science and technology.

By the second section, the Assembly decided to establish an Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, open to the participation of all States as full members, with representation at a high level, to meet annually and report to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council, whose existing Committee on Science and Technology for Development was to be discontinued. The Assembly set forth the functions of the Committee and organizational arrangements, and referred to it consideration of the issues on which agreement was not reached at the Conference. It invited the Economic and Social Council to take the necessary action regarding its Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, to whose terms of reference the Intergovernmental Committee was to recommend modifications so that the Advisory Committee might provide it with all necessary assistance and advice.

By the third section of the resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to establish a new, organizationally distinct Centre for Science and Technology for Development within the United Nations Secretariat at Headquarters. It would be headed by an Assistant Secretary-General directly responsible to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and assist him in fulfilling his responsibilities under the Vienna Programme of Action, particularly in providing substantive support to the Intergovernmental Committee and in co-ordinating system-wide secretariat activities related to science and technology. The Centre would be funded from the regular United Nations budget, drawing as much as possible on existing resources. The Office for Science and Technology was to be abolished and most of its posts and budgetary resources were to be immediately redeployed to the new Centre. These arrangements were to be reviewed in 1981.

By the fourth section, on co-ordination within the United Nations system, the Assembly decided that the Director-General should be responsible for over-all secretariat co-ordination in science and technology, including co-ordinating the contributions of the United Nations system to the work of the Intergovernmental Committee. Organizations and bodies were asked to take steps to implement the recommendations, dealing with their institutional arrangements and structural transformations, addressed to them in the Vienna Programme of Action (see p. 639).

By the fifth section, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a basic study of the activities, mandates and working methods of the various bodies of the United Nations system in science and technology for development and to examine the possibilities of improving the system's efficiency. He was to submit a preliminary report to the Intergovernmental Committee in 1980 and a final study with proposals in 1981; the Committee's final proposals to the Assembly in 1981 were to be preceded by preliminary recommendations in 1980.

Finally, by the sixth section, on global financial arrangements, the Assembly decided to establish a United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development, along the lines recommended in the Vienna Programme of Action. The Assembly set forth the objectives of the Financing System, considerations to be taken into account in determining its nature and level of resources, and means by which the System might derive additional resources. The Intergovernmental Committee was to establish guidelines for the allocation and distribution of the resources available, in accordance with broad criteria set forth in this section. The long-term arrangements of the Financing System, which were to start in January 1982, were to be determined by the Intergovernmental Committee - the directing and policy-making body of the System-which was asked to recommend to the Assembly an appropriate structure for the System's executive body. The Committee was to elect in 1980, a 27-member intergovernmental group of experts, which, with the support of the Director-General, would study all relevant arrangements for the operation of the System; terms of reference for the study were given in this section. The group's final report to the Committee was to be submitted in time for it to make recommendations to the Assembly at its 1981 session.

Pending the Financing System's full operation, a United Nations Interim Fund for Science and Technology for Development was created, to be funded by voluntary contributions of at least $250 million targeted for the two-year period 1980-1981, and to be administered by UNDP under policy guidelines established in an annex to the resolution and under those to be established by the Intergovernmental Committee. The Assembly, requested that a pledging conference for the Interim Fund be convened not later than March 1980.

The Assembly adopted resolution 34/218 on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 13 December. Section III, relating to the establishment of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, was put to a separate vote in both bodies. The request for a separate vote was made in Committee by Ireland on behalf of the States members of EEC, and the Ivory Coast asked that it be recorded; the section was approved by 97 votes to 0, with 20 abstentions. Ireland reiterated its request in the plenary Assembly, which adopted the section by a recorded vote of 114 to 1, with 22 abstentions.

The text of the resolution had been proposed by Austria, following informal consultations on an earlier version, submitted by India on behalf of the Member States belonging to the Group of 77, which was subsequently withdrawn. The Austrian text added a number of new provisions to, and elaborated on several others contained in, the Group's earlier version.

Among changes in the operative provisions were: the Group's draft would have had the Intergovernmental Committee make recommendations to the Assembly regarding the periodicity of its meetings, whereas the agreed text indicated a more specific meeting schedule for 1980; the former would also have invited participation in the Committee's work at the head-of-secretariat level, whereas the adopted text indicated that level as preferable.

Section III of the Group's draft was titled "Secretariat for science and technology for development" and referred to the establishment of a new, distinct organizational entity, rather than naming it the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, to be headed by an Under-Secretary-General rather than an Assistant Secretary-General.

The entire section V, calling for a system-wide study by the Secretary-General of the efficiency of United Nations activities in science and technology for development, was introduced by the Austrian draft. While both drafts of the section on global financial arrangements had been derived from the Vienna Programme of Action, the adopted text followed more closely the wording and order of the recommendations in that Programme.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Second Committee, Canada, Japan and Sweden (speaking also on behalf of Finland, Iceland and Norway) noted that they had voted in favour of section III of the draft resolution, on the establishment of the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, believing that the assistance it was to render to the Director-General was in keeping with Assembly decisions on his role and functions. Canada, however, expressed concern over the statement of financial implications and proposed to take up the matter of redeploying existing Secretariat resources in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the members of the EEC, noted that they had abstained in the vote on section III because of reservations on the creation of a new and distinct Secretariat body to perform work properly pertaining to the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs.

Bulgaria, speaking on behalf of eight Eastern European States and Mongolia, stated that those countries had abstained in the vote on section III because the assignment of an independent organizational status to the Centre opened the way to possible duplication of effort and because the creation of a new office of Assistant Secretary-General and other high-level posts seemed unjustified. Those States contested the financial implications of the resolution and proposed to pursue the matter in the Fifth Committee. They did not object to the establishment of the Interim Fund, on the understanding that its activities would be financed from voluntary contributions.

In the General Assembly, several States which had supported section III in the Second Committee explained that they had changed their vote in the plenary meeting because of Fifth Committee actions calling for an immediate additional appropriation of $300,000 for temporary posts for the proposed Centre, which, they felt, contradicted understandings reached in the Second Committee.

The United States, which voted against section III in the plenary, stated that the action in the Fifth Committee, which had overturned a recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, disregarded the need to use the resources of the United Nations system to full advantage. Canada observed that the immediate redeployment to the Centre of posts and budgetary resources from the abolished Office for Science and Technology, agreed upon in the Second Committee, made the designation of seven specific additional posts inappropriate; it had therefore abstained in the voting. Japan and Australia, which also abstained, expressed similar views. Finland, speaking also on behalf of Iceland, Norway and Sweden, stated that, while those countries had not changed their vote, the appropriations approved in the Fifth Committee did not correspond to their understanding of agreements reached in the Second Committee.

Speaking as current Chairman of the Group of 77, India rejected allegations that some representatives had gone back on understandings reached during informal negotiations. The resolution approved by the Second Committee, it argued, made clear that resources for the new Centre would not be confined to redeployed posts from the Office for Science and Technology, that additional resources from the United Nations regular budget would be made available, and that immediate appropriations were necessary to prepare properly for the first meeting of the new Intergovernmental Committee early in 1980.

Recognizing that peace, security and national independence are important factors for ensuring the effective utilization and further development of science and technology for all countries, in particular for the developing countries, and that effective measures in the field of real disarmament would increase the possibilities of reallocation. of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

Emphasizing the urgent need to develop and strengthen the scientific and technological capacities of the developing countries in order to enable them to apply science and technology to their own development, with a view to the elimination of existing inequalities between developing and developed countries in science and technology,

Recognizing that concerted and sustained efforts must be made by all sections of the international community in order to achieve the goal of strengthening the endogenous scientific and technological capacities of the developing countries,

Further recognizing the role of the intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in the implementation of scientific and technological development programmes,

Conscious that deliberate and urgent steps are needed in order to achieve the target of reconstructing the existing pattern of international scientific and technological relations,

Affirming the central role of the United Nations in the promotion of science and technology for development and the need to strengthen that role through, inter alia, new institutional arrangements and additional and substantially increased financial resources,

Reaffirming the need to strengthen the role of the United Nations system in the field of science and technology through, inter alia, new institutional arrangements and new substantial resources in addition to those which currently exist.

Recognizing the need for adopting effective means of utilizing new science and technology for overcoming obstacles to development and also the role to be played by science and technology in the development strategies for the future,

Taking note of the report adopted by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development on 31 August 1979, Noting with satisfaction the agreements reached at the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development as contained in the report adopted by the Conference.

Other activities in the field of science and technology

Transfer of technology

Establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information

The Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), at its thirteenth session held in April/May 1979 at Vienna, considered reports by its Executive Director and by a specially convened expert group on the pilot operations of the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB), which had been established by UNIDO in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1975⁶ as a component of a system-wide technological information exchange network. The reports analysed INTIB'S activities from July 1977 to December 1978 in the iron and steel, fertilizer, agro-industry and agricultural machinery sectors.

On 4 May 1979, the Board recommended, inter alia, that INTIB be continued with appropriate resources as an ongoing activity of UNIDO, and that its activities undertaken in accordance with the group's suggestions be expanded to include the sectors covered by the UNIDO system of consultations as well as those chosen by a 1978 UNIDO international forum on appropriate industrial technology. The Board requested its Executive Director to report to it at its fourteenth session on INTIB'S progress.

By resolution 1979/54 of 2 August, on industrial development co-operation, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Board's recommendations regarding INTIB and requested the General Assembly to provide appropriate resources in the budget. (For details, see p. 611; for page

The United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, in its Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development adopted on 31 August, recommended that continuing consideration be given to the establishment of a global and international network within the United Nations system, which was outlined in the Programme of Action as part of the Conference's projected restructuring of the international scientific and technological information system relevant to the requirements of the developing countries. Among the Conference's specific proposals was the creation of a single national focal point for information networks in each country, linked to a common focal information centre operated at the global level under United Nations auspices. The proposed network was to facilitate contact between users and suppliers of information and to meet particularly the needs of developing countries for scientific, technical, socio-economic and legal information needed for decision-making in the selection and transfer of

The Conference also recommended in its Programme of Action strengthening the role of the United Nations in science and technology through improvements in the information services and technological information banks of the various United Nations bodies, which were to form integral parts of the global information network, and through development of the various publications services, to make important world publications in the field available in all the official languages of the Organization. (For details on the work of the Conference, see preceding subchapter.)

By a provision of decision 34/452, adopted without vote on 19 December 1979, the General Assembly took note of a report the Secretary-General had submitted to it on the establishment of a network for the exchange of technological information as an aspect of development and international co-operation.

In outlining the basic premises underlying the proposed network, the report noted the network's need to allow for universal participation, defined its scope and set forth its aims of facilitating access to technological information in developing countries through flows of such information among developing countries and between them and developed countries, as well as of coupling problem-solvers with world-wide problemsolving information resources generally. The report also indicated the nature of the network under consideration as a mechanism linking many independent sources of information at the sectoral, national, regional and international levels, including sources already in operation in the United Nations system, which would form major nodes or components of the network.

In addition, the report: reviewed the question of identifying sectors or subject areas for implementation of the network; took note of the preparation in 1978 of a pilot Directory of United Nations Information Systems and Services by the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems, a subsidiary of the interagency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC); outlined the views of an Inter-Agency Expert Group on the Establishment of a Network for the Exchange of Technological Information, convened at Geneva in February/March 1979 to provide guidance for further work on the proposed network; and offered an assessment of available information resources, including technological information resources in developed countries useful to developing countries and structures required to support the proposed network.

Finally, the report examined areas for possible further work towards establishment of the proposed network, including compilation of a computer-based analytical directory of information services in Member States and international organizations, development of regional and national referral points tied into a common information network, development of problem-oriented subnetworks and formulation of protocols for the transfer of information requests and responses through a United Nations-operated limited electronic mail facility.

The text of decision 34/452 was recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where it was orally proposed by the Committee Chairman and adopted without vote on 14 December.

Reverse transfer of technology

On 27 March 1979, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), at its tenth special session at Geneva, took note of and endorsed recommendations that its Committee on Transfer of Technology had made in 1978 on the problem of the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries - the "brain-drain" problem. These recommendations were: that an in-depth study of the problem, being prepared by the Secretary-General in cooperation with UNCTAD and the International Labour Organisation, be made available to the Committee; that he co-ordinate treatment of the issue within the United Nations system and that, in the light of his decisions, the Trade and Development Board consider steps, including convening an expert group, to examine and report on the feasibility of measuring human resource flows; and that he continue to study the experiences relating to reverse transfer of technology of countries from different geographical areas as a prerequisite for assessing the magnitude, composition, causes and effects of the problem and for considering measures to be taken in

On 30 May, at its fifth session held in May/ June 1979 at Manila, Philippines, UNCTAD approved without dissent resolution 102 (V) on the development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology, by which, inter alia, it invited the Secretary-General to take the action requested by the Committee on Transfer of Technology and endorsed by the Board. In addition, it outlined measures to be taken by developed and developing countries and the international community in connexion with the brain-drain problem. It also asked the Trade and Development Board to consider providing facilities, on request, for a multilateral exchange of views on the development aspects of reverse transfer of technology, within existing institutional arrangements and available resources.

On 20 October, at its nineteenth session at Geneva, the Trade and Development Board authorized the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide those facilities. He reported to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session on the results of UNCTAD'S fifth session relating to development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology, and outlined the main conclusions of an UNCTAD secretariat paper on the subject submitted to that session. 'The paper was based on the 1978 conclusions and recommendations of the Group of Governmental Experts on Reverse Transfer of Technology.

The report indicated that, while migration flows in the 1970s had not increased at the same rate as in the 1960s, the same general trends had been maintained, with continued concentration on flows of skilled workers, including physicians, engineers and scientists. Such migration to developed countries represented not merely a flow of manpower but a transfer of productive resources embodying investment in human capital. Measures to be taken by developing countries were categorized as incentive policies, regulatory policies and "de-linking" policies aimed at indigenizing developing countries' educational systems. Measures suggested for developed countries included bilateral or multilateral agreements for organizing migration flows, greater use of developing country personnel in developed-country or internationally financed projects, and enhanced support for institution building. International co-operation should concentrate on ensuring a more equitable sharing of the burdens and benefits associated with skilled migration; proposals included possible modifications of the current system of resource-flow accounting to give a more balanced picture, extension of the International Monetary Fund's compensatory financing facility to take account of serious fluctuation in migrants' remittances, revenuecollection assistance to developing countries and migration-based contributions by host developed countries for development spending. The results achieved at UNCTAD'S fifth session, the report noted, could best be assessed in the light of resolution 102 (V).

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 20 December 1978,8 the United Nations Secretary-General submitted to it in 1979 an indepth study of the brain-drain problem. The report, which drew on a variety of studies by United Nations, governmental and other sources: assessed the magnitude and composition of the flow of migrant workers, with relevant statistical considerations; surveyed possible causes leading to migration; considered possible methods for imputing monetary values to the migration of skilled personnel; reviewed major policy issues for action at the national level by both developed and developing countries and at the international level; and outlined approaches to collective self-reliance through co-operative exchanges of skills among developing countries.

On 19 December 1979, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/200, whereby it endorsed UNCTAD resolution 102 (V) and called on all Member States and the international community to give urgent consideration to implementing the measures contained therein. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to co-ordinate the treatment of the question of reverse transfer of technology within the United Nations system and, in co-operation with relevant United Nations bodies, to study the feasibility of a Jordanian proposal for establishment of an international labour compensatory facility; a progress report was to be submitted to the Assembly in 1980 and a final report in 1981. The Assembly requested the Trade and Development Board, at its twentieth (March 1980) session, to consider arrangements to examine the feasibility of measuring human resource flows, and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to carry out the studies envisaged in UNCTAD resolution 102 (V), including studies on the experience and policies of countries of different regions affected by such flows, on co-operation at the bilateral, regional and international levels, and on the feasibility of proposals for co-operative exchange of skills among developing countries. The Assembly invited Member States to respond favourably and to co-operate with the UNCTAD Secretary-General in implementing the proposals for action by developed and developing countries and the international community, as elaborated in the UNCTAD resolution.

The text of resolution 34/200 had been approved without vote by the Second Committee on 14 December. It was submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman following informal consultations on an earlier draft, submitted by India on behalf of Member States which were members of the "Group of 77" developing countries, which was then withdrawn.

The operative provisions of the final version differed from the Group's draft chiefly in requesting the United Nations Secretary-General, rather than the UNCTAD Secretary-General, to study the feasibility of establishing an international labour compensatory facility and in seeking a progress report in 1980 and a final report in 1981, rather than a single report in 1980. In addition, a paragraph of the Group's draft, by which resolution 102 (V) was emphasized as a good basis for formulating comprehensive measures of action in the field of reverse transfer of technology at all levels, was deleted. A paragraph to urge the international community to give urgent attention to the formulation of such measures was replaced by a clause, appended to the endorsement of resolution 102 (V), calling on Member States and the international community to give urgent consideration to implementing the measures contained therein.

The request that the UNCTAD Secretary-General undertake the studies called for in resolution 102 (V) was redrafted, and another request, that he invite Governments to submit information to assist in the formulation of measures for action on the development aspects of reverse transfer of technology, was recast to have the Assembly invite Member States to co-operate with him in implementing the proposals in that resolution for remedial action at all levels.

In a statement following approval of the resolution in the Second Committee, Bulgaria, on behalf of eight socialist States of Eastern Europe and Mongolia, said that the increasingly acute problem of reverse transfer of technology was linked above all to the neo-colonialist policies of developed capitalist countries and their transnational corporations; practical measures must be directed towards forcing the countries responsible to compensate for the damage caused to the developing countries' economic development. They had supported the resolution on the understanding that the action recommended would be carried out within existing financial resources.

The United States observed, with respect to the study of an international labour compensatory facility, that suggestions of an international tax on immigrants would not be feasible for it on constitutional grounds, as such a tax could be discriminatory and violate basic human rights.

Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology

Two sessions of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology were held in 1979, both at Geneva: a resumed first session was convened in February/March; and a second session -preceded by preparatory meetings in September-was held in October/November at the request of UNCTAD, by decision 113 (V) of 3 June 1979 adopted at its fifth session.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/195 of 19 December 1979, expressed deep concern that during the second session no agreement was achieved on a number of fundamental issues of interest to developing countries. It decided to convene a third session of the Conference in 1980 and called for the necessary political will and flexibility to complete negotiations and to take decisions for adoption of the code. (For details, see p. 595; for page reference to text of resolution 34/195, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Other matters relating to the transfer of technology

By resolution 112 (V) of 3 June 1979, on strengthening the technological capacity and accelerating the technological transformation of developing countries, UNCTAD at its fifth session requested its Secretary-General to organize, prior to its next session and subject to approval by the Trade and Development Board, up to three meetings of experts to study the transfer, application and development of technologies in the food-processing, energy, capital goods and industrial machinery sectors. (See p. 566.)

On 20 October, the Trade and Development Board requested its Committee on Transfer of Technology, at its 1980 session, to convene expert meetings on these subjects. It also requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit to the Committee studies on agro-industries, pharmaceuticals, design and engineering consultancy, and electronics, possibly also convening expert meetings on these topics. (See p. 595.)

The Committee on Natural Resources of the Economic and Social Council considered the question of the transfer of technology for the efficient development of natural resources, particularly in developing countries, and took a decision on the subject at its June 1979 session (see p. 679).

The United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, in its Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development of 31 August 1979, included a set of recommendations on the acquisition and transfer of technology as part of a plan for restructuring international scientific and technological relations. The recommendations included: for developing countries, sharing experiences and coordinating policies, joint purchase arrangements, and co-ordinating their positions for international multilateral negotiations; measures by developed countries to encourage and facilitate technology transfer by their small and medium-sized enterprises, and to strengthen developing countries' institutional and enterprise capacities; and a more active role in providing information, advice and assistance on the part of organizations in the United Nations system and other international organizations. To strengthen the role of the United Nations system in science and technology for development, the Programme also included a recommendation that the various bodies should, on request, take action to increase the developing countries' capacities in all aspects of technology transfer. (For details of the Programme of Action, seep. 636.)

In another related action, the General Assembly, on 13 December by resolution 34/98 on industrial development co-operation and the forthcoming Third General Conference of UNIDO, to be held in 1980, recommended that the Conference give special attention to promoting measures and policies to strengthen the technological infrastructure of developing countries, taking into account the need for the transfer of technology to them on fair, equitable and mutually acceptable terms. (For details, see p. 612; for

Application of computer science and technology to development

The Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) revised a report he had submitted in 1978 on the Intergovernmental Conference on Strategies and Policies for Informatics (SPIN) for discussion at the second regular 1979 session of the Economic and Social Council. The report had summarized 44 recommendations approved by SPIN-jointly sponsored by UNESCO and the Intergovernmental Bureau for Informatics (IBI) and held in August/September 1978 at Torremolinos, Spain-which collectively constituted an action programme for rational and accelerated use of informatics as a tool for development. The revised report contained, in addition, a summary of the 1978 actions of the Executive Board and General Conference of UNESCO and of the March 1979 session of the General Assembly of IBI relating to the results of SPIN.

On 3 August 1979, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1979/73, whereby it invited UNESCO, in co-operation with IBI, to continue programmes in support of the recommendations of SPIN and requested ACC to continue to co-ordinate programmes of assistance to Member States, with a view to enabling them to take full advantage of the possibilities offered by informatics for furthering their social and economic development. Taking note of the report of SPIN, the Council decided to bring it to the attention of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development to be held later in the month.

The text of the resolution had been proposed by Argentina, Italy and Spain and was approved without vote on 27 July by the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development

The twenty-fifth session of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, held from 5 to 16 March 1979 at Geneva, dealt principally with the nature of the contributions the scientific and technological community could make to the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development. Particular attention was given to preparations for a pre-Conference International Colloquium on Science, Technology and Society: Needs, Challenges and Limitations, at Vienna (see p. 634).

The Advisory Committee also reviewed the reports of several recent symposia or seminars, whose recommendations were taken into account in the planning of working papers for the Colloquium.

In the area of new developments in science and technology and their application for the benefit of developing countries, the Committee recommended the preparation of reports on waste-recycling technology and trends and developments in non-food agricultural material for consideration at its 1980 session.

International year for science and technology

The Secretary-General submitted to the second regular 1979 session of the Economic and Social Council a note circulating recommendations of the General Conference of UNESCO regarding a proposed UNESCO-sponsored international year for science and technology in 1980. These included a resolution adopted at the Conference's twentieth (October/November 1978) session reaffirming its strong belief in the need for such a year and inviting the General Assembly to designate 1980 as "International Year for Science and Technology," as well as proposed objectives and activities for the Year.

On 3 August, the Council adopted without vote decision 1979/65, by which it transmitted UNESCO'S proposal to the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development for its recommendations to the 1979 regular session of the Assembly. The text of the decision had been proposed by the United Republic of Tanzania and was approved without vote on 24 July by the Council's Third Committee. Prior to approval, the sponsor accepted an oral amendment by the United States to transmit with the proposals the views expressed during the Council's debate on the question.

No action was taken on the matter by the Conference.

Reiterating further the importance of technical co-operation among developing countries in the exchange of skilled manpower in the context of economic co-operation towards collective self-reliance.

Recalling the proposals made by His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan bin Talal of Jordan concerning the establishment of an international labour compensatory facility, which are directed towards alleviating the adverse effects of reverse transfer of technology on developing countries,

- 1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on reverse transfer of technology, containing a survey of its main features, causes and policy implications, and of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development entitled "Development aspects of the reverse transfer of technology: an assessment of the results achieved at the fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;"

- 3. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures with respect to the co-ordination of the treatment of the question of reverse transfer of technology within the United Nations system, bearing in mind relevant paragraphs of General Assembly resolution 33/151 and resolution 102 (V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
- 4. Requests the Trade and Development Board, as envisaged in paragraph 6 of resolution 102 (V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to proceed at its twentieth session with the consideration of appropriate arrangements, including the necessity of convening a group of experts, to examine the feasibility of measuring human resource flows;
- 5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Labour Organisation and other relevant United Nations bodies, to carry out, on the basis of the most up-to-date data available, a study on the feasibility of the proposals of His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan bin Talal concerning the establishment of an international labour compensatory facility and to submit a progress report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session and a final report at the thirty-sixth session;
- 6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to carry out the studies envisaged in paragraph 7 of resolution 102 (V) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
- 7. Invites Member States to respond favourably and to cooperate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in the implementation

Chapter XI

Questions relating to food problems

The world food situation in 1979 remained precarious, marked by a substantial decrease in aggregate wheat and coarse grain production and a continued increase in the food-grain import requirements of developing countries. According to the World Food Council, over 1 billion people were affected by hunger and malnutrition and over 450 million suffered from serious undernutrition, while assistance to developing countries continued to fall short of internationally agreed targets.

Measures to alleviate the situation were taken by the Council, the World Food Programme (WFP) and the intersessional Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174. At its March 1979 session, the Committee adopted a set of agreed conclusions on aspects concerning food and agriculture. Taking into account, inter alia, the work of the Committee, the Council, at its September 1979 session, outlined a co-operative framework for national and international action, stressing the use of national food-sector strategies to raise food issues to the highest policy levels within the context of the national development programmes of developing countries. During the year, wfp provided food aid in support of development and emergency activities in developing countries valued at some $580 million, while its governing body, the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, set forth a series of guidelines and criteria for food aid at its May 1979 session that were subsequently endorsed by the World Food Council.

Details of these and other actions are described in the subchapters below.

Report of the Committee of the Whole

The intersessional Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 discussed measures regarding world food problems and agricultural development at six meetings held between 19 and 29 March 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, New York. The Committee had been set up to act as a focal point in negotiations towards the establishment of the new international economic order and for an exchange of views on global economic problems.

On 29 March, the Committee approved a set of agreed conclusions on some aspects concerning food and agriculture presented by an informal working group it had appointed to study the question. Treated in the agreed conclusions were: food and agricultural production in developing countries and the flow of external resources; food security; food aid; agricultural trade; agro-related industries; rural development; and nutrition.

On the first of these topics, the Committee agreed that urgent measures should be taken to reach, if possible by the end of 1980, the 4 per cent annual growth rate for agricultural production in developing countries targeted by the 1974 World Food Conference; to this end, assistance with a high degree of concessionality should be increased by donor countries and international institutions, and reforms and other internal measures should be taken, in the context of their national development strategies, by the developing countries themselves, with which, the Committee recognized, primary responsibility for the development of their food and agricultural production lay.

The Committee agreed that: the resources of the International Fund for Agricultural Development should be replenished on a continuing basis and consideration should be given to increasing its resources; financial and technical assistance should be assured by donor countries, and organizations for specific agricultural cooperation programmes; aid for fertilizers, pesticides and seed-stock for developing countries should be increased and acquisition assured; contributions to the International Fertilizer Supply Scheme should be increased and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) Action Programme for Prevention of Food Losses and its Seed Improvement and Development Programme should be augmented to agreed levels; the FAO fisheries development programme should be supported; and the agricultural research capacity of developing countries should be strengthened and action taken to halt the deterioration of arable and grazing lands.

The Committee further agreed on the need to allocate resources freed through reductions in military spending to finance development - including food development-in developing countries.

On the subject of food security, the Committee urged the establishment of adequate food reserves by all countries as well as an international system for co-ordinating such reserves. It also expressed its deep regret at the suspension of the United Nations Conference to Negotiate an International Arrangement to Replace the International Wheat Agreement, 1971, as extended (see p. 585), and urged an early resumption of the Conference.

The Committee recommended that a proposal for a reserve-stock financing fund be kept under consideration. It agreed that the International Emergency Food Reserve should in 1979 be brought to the agreed level of 500,000 metric tons of cereals. It asked the FAO Committee on World Food Security and other bodies to give careful consideration to FAO's five-point Plan of Action on World Food Security (see p. 1253).

In view of anticipated increases in food deficits during the 1980s, the Committee considered it imperative to improve the scope and flexibility of food aid, which, it agreed, should be provided on a grant basis to needy developing countries and channelled increasingly through the United Nations/FAO World Food Programme (WFP). Further, the Committee agreed that commitments, preferably on a multiyear basis, by donor countries should be enlarged to ensure the flow of at least 10 million tons of cereal in food aid annually. The WFP Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes should consider using food aid in assisting developing countries to establish national reserve stocks and should examine foodaid needs for coming years. Resumption of negotiations on a new international wheat agreement and a new food aid convention was urged.

The Committee noted with concern that only limited progress had been made towards solving long-standing problems in international agricultural trade, that protectionist practices had increased and that access to markets continued to face obstacles. It accordingly agreed that developed countries should adjust those sectors of their agricultural and manufacturing economies that required protection against developing country exports; the generalized system of preferences should be expanded to more processed, semi-processed and agricultural commodities, and the information system on its use should be improved. The Committee further considered that measures should be taken within the Integrated Programme for Commodities (see p. 582) to stabilize commodity prices.

The Committee agreed that it was important to continue the consultation system on agrorelated industries in the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. It also agreed on the need for increased assistance to expand and modernize such industries in developing countries as well as for adequate support for cooperative efforts between developing countries in this sphere.

World Food Council

Report of the World Food Council

The World Food Council held its fifth ministerial session at Ottawa, Canada, from 3 to 7 September 1979. It was preceded by a preparatory meeting in Rome from 4 to 6 July. In introducing the report of the Council for consideration by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee of the General Assembly later in the year, the Executive Director noted that, while on the surface the world food situation seemed to have improved, at a deeper level it was deteriorating. Food production in developing countries was not keeping pace with rising needs, leadingto increasing dependence on food imports, and actual food availability in most low-income countries had declined over the past decade. World food reserves were also unsatisfactory, the Director reported, with stocks well below minimum targets and disproportionately concentrated in North America, far from the areas of greatest

In its report, the Council noted, inter alia, that cereal stocks at the global level were equivalent The Committee stressed the importance of the participation of all segments of the rural population, including women, in national development plans and expressed the hope that all Governments would participate in the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development. (For details of the Conference, see p. 500.)

Finally, in regard to nutrition, the Committee, noting the inadequate flow of assistance from donor countries to programmes designed to eradicate malnutrition in the world, agreed that developed countries and international organizations should increase financial and technical assistance to help meet the nutritional goals set by developing countries, and that the United Nations system should continue to improve its capacity to help those countries formulate nutrition policies as part of their over-all development plans.

These agreed conclusions were contained in the Committee's report to the General Assembly, which considered it at its regular 1979 session during its discussion of development and international economic co-operation. In adopting resolution 34/110 on 14 December, dealing with the work of the World Food Council, the Assembly took note with satisfaction of the agreed conclusions, recognizing them as having been an important input to the Council's work at its 1979 session (see following subchapter).

to only 20 per cent of the aggregate annual consumption at the end of the 1978/79 season. Between May and July, the number of countries with food shortages increased from 17 to 20; those with unfavourable crop conditions increased from 24 to 31. Difficulties of food-importing countries were compounded by higher freight rates, bottle-necks in transportation and grain handling, and 30 to 40 per cent increases in the price of wheat and coarse grains. Of the 39 developing countries that had set national food-stock targets, only 11 were able to achieve their objectives.

To combat these and allied problems, the Council recommended concerted international action on a strategy for structural changes in the world food economy within the context of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.³ In conclusions and recommendations adopted on 7 September 1979, the Council outlined a framework for national and international action developed on the basis of world-wide consultations. While developing countries, the report noted, recognized primary responsibility for the solution of their particular food problems, the task of overcoming hunger and malnutrition remained a joint responsibility of the international community. A framework of mutually supporting actions was therefore needed, with developing countries according a higher priority to food problems within their over-all development plans, donor countries and international agencies increasing development aid, and all parties joining to improve food security through expanded reserves, stabilized prices and efficient systems of distribution.

In particular, the Council recommended the use of national food-sector strategies in developing countries, as a means of raising food issues to the highest policy levels and co-ordinating all aspects thereof. The Council also supported: establishment of interministerial or other high-level co-ordinating authorities to monitor policies and oversee implementation of food strategies; establishment or strengthening of national units to identify, prepare and monitor food projects; and establishment of training centres in each of the world's developing regions to train staff for these units and process loans for projects or technical assistance.

In addition, the Council stressed the need for more direct Government action to overcome malnutrition and improve food distribution, and instructed its secretariat to assess various nutrition measures taken and to report on the most effective kinds of action under varying countryspecific conditions.

The second part of the Council's recommendations outlined the desired scope of international action. The Council noted the urgent measures needed to enable developing countries to meet a minimum agricultural growth rate of 4 per cent a year, including an estimated input of $8.3 billion in aid, at 1975 prices, by the end of 1980, with $6.5 billion of the total on concessional terms. To reverse the trend of food dependency and growing hunger, the Council also: reaffirmed the official development assistance target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for developed countries; called on developed and other donor countries and agencies to increase their aid to food and food-related programmes; urged prompt replenishment and expansion of international agency funds for food and agriculture; and urged simplification of lending procedures and expeditious fulfilment of aid commitments. In addition, the Council urged prompt implementation of the agreed conclusions concerning food and agriculture approved in 1979 by the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 (see preceding subchapter), particularly in regard to replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, fertilizer, pesticide and seed-stock assistance, and strengthening agricultural research capacities. The Council agreed to request a report on agricultural research from the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the United Nations Development Programme.

The importance of a world food security system to minimize the effects of cyclical shortfalls in production was also stressed by the Council. It affirmed the importance of concluding a new international wheat agreement and food aid convention. Pending the conclusion of a new agreement, the Council strongly recommended: commitments so that a new convention could be concluded in 1980, assuring a flow of at least 10 million tons of food aid; increased food aid to help developing countries build food reserves; and stepped-up efforts to identify infrastructural needs to assure food security as the basis for investment by FAO and development banks. The Council endorsed FAO'S five-point Plan of Action on World Food Security (see p. 1253) (Canada reserved its position) as well as International Monetary Fund (IMF) consideration of additional balance-of-payment support to low-income fooddeficit countries. It urged increased contributions to realize the target of a 500,000-ton International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR). The Council also endorsed guidelines and criteria for food aid recommended by the World Food Programme's Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes at its May 1979 session (see subchapter below, under DECISIONS OF DELIBERATIVE BODIES).

Finally, the Council recommended changes in international trade to eliminate protectionist barriers against the products of developing countries. It strongly endorsed and recommended implementation of the initiatives taken in the area of food production and trade by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its May/June 1979 session (see p. 561); supported the relevant section of the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the 1979 World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (see p. 501); and urged developing countries to seek to expand mutual trade in agricultural commodities and manufactures and to report to it on the obstacles encountered and the types of support required in this endeavour. It recommended that efforts be made to increase public awareness of the cost and negative effects of protectionism.

In its conclusions, the Council expressed concern at the rapid growth of world military expenditures and noted with appreciation the agreed conclusions of the Assembly's intersessional Committee of the Whole in this respect.

In view of the vital nature of world food problems, the Council urged a reversal of the structural imbalance in the world food economy. Overcoming hunger and malnutrition should be made a focal point of the international development strategy for the 1980s; it called on the General Assembly to give food and agriculture the highest possible priority in that decade and suggested that the Assembly consider declaring it the Food and Development Decade.

Consideration by the General Assembly

In accordance with an Economic and Social Council authorization-decision 1979/87 adopted without vote on 3 August 1979-the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the World Food Council directly to the General Assembly, which considered it at its 1979 regular session, mainly in the Second Committee.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/110 on the report of the World Food Council; the Second Committee had approved the text, also without vote, on 8 December.

By this resolution, the Assembly took note with satisfaction of the agreed conclusions of the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174, as an important input for the work of the World Food Council at its fifth session, and of the report of the Council itself. It also took note of the concept of food-sector strategies that emerged from Council consultations and invited the Council to examine the matter further, fully respecting developing countries' development plans and priorities, with a view to enabling interested countries, particularly food-deficit developing countries, to consider the advisability of adopting such strategies, and to report thereon to the Assembly in 1980. The Assembly considered that development assistance agencies should not make preparation of a national food strategy a condition for development assistance.

It strongly urged developed countries, international institutions and other donors to increase their assistance to the food sector on concessional terms in an effort to achieve for developing countries the targeted 4 per cent annual agricultural production growth rate, if possible by the end of 1980. It endorsed the Council's call for direct action by Governments to achieve greater equity in food distribution and called upon Governments, relevant United Nations organs and organizations and the international community as a whole to give very high priority to the eradication of hunger and malnutrition everywhere.

The Assembly urged all Governments that had not done so to consider agreeing to a new food aid convention assuring a minimum flow of 10 million tons of food aid annually and urged other efforts to assure conclusion of a new convention without waiting for the conclusion of a new international grain agreement. It recommended that all Member States and concerned international organizations should put into operation FAO's five-point Plan of Action on World Food Security, which the Council had endorsed in 1979, mainly as an interim measure until a new grain agreement was concluded. It also urged achievement and possible enlargement of the 500,000-ton IEFR target.

In addition to calling for increased food aid of sustained nutritional value and increased inputs of fertilizers and seed-stock, and recommending an assessment of the need to improve the food security infrastructure of developing countries, the Assembly invited IMF to consider additional balance-of-payments support to meet the increased food-import bills of low-income food-deficit countries.

The Assembly noted with deep concern that only limited progress had been achieved towards solving long-standing international trade problems in agricultural products, which adversely affected exports, particularly those of developing countries; solution of those problems could make an important contribution to improving world food production. The Assembly called for urgent action in negotiating forums to reduce or eliminate trade barriers in this area so as to facilitate more efficient patterns of production, and urged adjustments by the developed countries of sectors of their agricultural and manufacturing economies which required protection against developing countries' exports. It recommended expansion of the generalized system of preferences in international trade to cover a wider range of processed and semi-processed products and agricultural commodities and enlargement and improvement of the information system on using the generalized system. Finally, the Assembly recommended that the Council give continuing attention to the impact of food trade on world food production, with particular reference to developing countries' economies, utilizing the inputs of other bodies of the United Nations system.

The text of resolution 34/110, submitted by a Vice-Chairman of the Second Committee, had been prepared on the basis of informal consultations on two earlier drafts, one submitted by Canada and the other by India on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. The earlier drafts were withdrawn on approval of the compromise text by the Second Committee.

The text as finally approved differed in one respect from the Canadian draft with regard to the operative paragraph by which the Assembly took note of the concept of food-sector strategies that emerged from Council consultations; this paragraph corresponded to the Group of 77's text. By the Canadian text, the Assembly would have endorsed fully that concept as a means for developing countries to review their food efforts, revise the relevant policies and provide a framework for identifying and preparing food and agriculture investment projects and to step up the capacity for and mobilization of investment, including additional external finance; it would also have called on food-deficit countries which had not done so to consider adopting a food strategy, and on donors to assist them in preparing food-sector strategies.

In another respect, the adopted text differed from the Group's draft regarding the operative paragraph by which the Assembly noted with deep concern that only limited progress- rather than no progress-had been made in solving long-standing problems in international agricultural trade. A parallel text was not included in the Canadian draft.

The Canadian draft differed from the Group's text and from the resolution adopted in several other respects. It would have had the Assembly: endorse the conclusions and recommendations of the Council and urge full implementation of the recommendations by all Governments and organizations concerned; call on all Governments to co-operate with the Council secretariat in assessing experiences and advancing direct Government action in food distribution; and express gratitude to a number of international financial and other institutions which had cooperated with that secretariat in consultations to identify and remove constraints and bottle-necks to increasing food production in developing countries and generating additional resources therefor.

The Group's draft, which more closely corresponded to the resolution adopted, also contained a number of points of difference. It had referred to needed external assistance in the food sector with a high degree of concessionality, rather than the specific amount of $6.5 billion mentioned in the 1977 Manila Communique of the World Food Council: A Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition.⁴ The International Monetary Fund would have been requested to provide, rather than invited to consider providing, additional balance-ofpayments support. Developed countries would have been urged to take urgent action in the different negotiating forums to approve and implement long-standing proposals to remove distortive patterns of production, maintained through a system of subsidies and protectionism. The Assembly would have called for concrete programmes by those countries for adjusting their agricultural sectors to facilitate access of developing countries' food and agricultural products, in raw, semi-processed and processed form. It would also have asked the Economic and Social Council to consider and submit recommendations in 1980 on a proposal to declare a United Nations Food and Development Decade in the 1980s

By both original texts, the World Food Council would have been encouraged to continue and intensify its monitoring, co-ordinating and catalytic role on food matters, and Governments and organizations would have been urged to support and co-operate fully with it in this regard and to accord very high priority to food needs.

In statements made at the time of approval of the resolution, Canada felt that the operative paragraph on examining the concept of food-sector strategies represented a step backwards with respect to that concept, and the United States believed that, in view of the wide interest expressed in the preparation of food-sector strategies by a number of developing countries, it was necessary to implement that concept rather than to continue to study its advantages and disadvantages. Japan and the United States, while agreeing on the need to further liberalize international trade arrangements, pointed out that considerable progress had been made in negotiations on this subject. Japan further stated that the economic and political difficulties confronting each country had to be taken into consideration in dealing with reduction and elimination of trade barriers, and, in adjusting agricultural policies, the natural resources and economic and social-conditions of different countries had to be considered. New Zealand felt that the provisions on the subject should have taken fuller account of the legitimate interests in food trade of developed countries that were mainly

⁴ See Y.U.N., 1977, p. ,535.

China considered that the countries engaged in hegemonistic expansion should be the first to take disarmament measures. It found defective a preambular provision by which concern was expressed that a substantial part of world resources was diverted to armaments and Governments were called on to take effective measures in real disarmament to increase possibilities for transfer of such resources to economic and social development and to upgrading food conditions. China said the text failed to distinguish between different categories of countries.

Resolution 34/110, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/824, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, as well as the agreed conclusions of the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 on some aspects concerning food and agriculture,

Recalling also its resolution 3348 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, by which it established the World Food Council to serve as a co-ordinating mechanism to provide over-all integrated and continuing attention to the successful co-ordination and follow-up of policies concerning food production, nutrition, food security, food trade and food aid, as well as other related matters, by all organizations of the United Nations system,

Recalling further the Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition, contained in the Manila Communique of the World Food Council and adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 32/52 of 8 December 1977, as well as the Mexico Declaration of the World Food Council, adopted by the Assembly in its resolution 33/90 of 15 December 1978,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolution 33/90 concerning the implementation of the decisions, resolutions and programmes regarding food adopted since the World Food Conference in 1974,

Noting with regret the slow progress made in solving the fundamental food problems facing the developing countries, in particular food-priority countries and other developing countries with large food deficits, whose food situation is still deteriorating, and, in this context, noting with deep concern that the target of an annual growth rate of 4 per cent in the food and agriculture sector of developing countries, established in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade and endorsed by the World Food Conference in 1974, has not been achieved,

Noting with concern the strong impact of food-stuff imports on the balance of payments of food-importing developing countries, in particular the least developed countries,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the development of food and agricultural production lies primarily with the developing countries themselves and that there is an increasing effort and growing commitment by developing countries to accelerate the development of their food and agriculture sectors,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to overcoming hunger and malnutrition everywhere and, in that context, the need for greater international action to improve the production and distribution of food.

Taking into account the relevant parts of the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development,

Expressing its deep concern at the fact that a substantial part of world resources, material as well as human, continues to be diverted to armaments with detrimental effect on international security and on efforts to achieve the new international economic order, including the solution of food problems, and calling upon Governments to take effective measures in the field of real disarmament that would increase the possibilities of allocation of the resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, especially development of developing countries, and to upgrading their food conditions,

Hawing considered the report of the World Food Council on the work of its fifth ministerial session, held at Ottawa from 3 to 7 September 1979,

- 1. Expresses its appreciation and thanks to the Government and people of Canada for the excellent facilities and generous hospitality provided for the World Food Council at its fifth ministerial session:
- 2. Takes note with satisfaction of the agreed conclusions of the Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 on some aspects concerning food and agriculture, which constituted an important input for the work of the World Food Council at its fifth ministerial session;
- 3. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the World Food Council on the work of its fifth ministerial session;
- 4. Takes note of the concept of food sector strategies which emerged from the World Food Council consultations, invites the Council to examine this matter further, having due regard for the principle of full respect for the development plans and priorities of developing countries, with a view to enabling interested countries, particularly food-deficit developing countries, to consider the advisability or otherwise of adopting food strategies within the framework of their national development programmes, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, and considers that development assistance agencies, whether national or international, should not make the preparation of a national food strategy a condition for development assistance;
- 5. Strongly urges developed countries, international institutions and others able to provide development assistance to increase substantially their assistance on concessional terms to the food sector in order to facilitate for developing countries the achievement of the agreed target of an annual growth rate of 4 per cent in agricultural production, for which an estimated necessary element of external assistance is $8.3 billion with $6.5 billion on concessional terms, at 1975 prices, as indicated in the Programme of Action to Eradicate Hunger and Malnutrition contained in the Manila Communique of the World Food Council:
- Further urges that this target should be reached if possible by the end of 1980, having regard to the deep concern of the international community as a whole regarding its urgent nature:
- 7. Endorses the call of the World Food Council for greater equity in food distribution through more direct action by Governments and stresses the need for supportive action by all Governments, with due regard to the policies followed and conditions prevailing in the respective countries;
- 8. Calls upon Governments, all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, other international organizations and the international community as a whole to give very high priority in their policies, programmes and actions to the eradication of hunger and malnutrition everywhere in the world;
- 9. Urges all Governments that have not yet agreed to the conclusion of a new food aid convention for securing the achievement of an absolute minimum flow of assistance of at least 10 million tons, even in times of high prices and food shortage, to reconsider their position and urges that every effort should be made to enlist new contributors and to increase the commitments of existing ones in order that a new food aid convention can be concluded without delay, in any case not later than the middle of 1980, and without awaiting the conclusion of a new international grain agreement;
- 10. Urges all countries, particularly those developed countries which are not yet contributing to it, to achieve immediately the 500,000-ton target for the International

Emergency Food Reserve and to consider its enlargement in response to growing emergency needs;

- 11. Urges the traditional donor countries and those in a position to do so to provide additional food aid to developing countries in order to assist them in building national food reserves:
- 12. Strongly calls upon donor countries to do their utmost to preserve the nutritional value, including the protein element, of their food aid;
- 13. Calls upon traditional donor countries and those in a position to do so, considering the growing need of the developing countries for agricultural inputs and the increasing costs of the latter, to increase their assistance for agricultural inputs, especially fertilizer, through the appropriate bilateral and/or multilateral channels, in particular the International Fertilizer Supply Scheme of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and also to make substantial contributions to the Seed Improvement and Development Programme and the Action Programme for Prevention of Food Losses of the Food and Agriculture Organization, so as to reach the agreed funding level of $20 million for each;
- 14. Recommends that the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the regional development banks should consider undertaking a systematic assessment of the need to improve food security infrastructure at the national level as a basis for a major investment effort in the developing countries which request such assistance;
- 15. Invites the International Monetary Fund to consider providing, within the context of its financing facilities, additional balance-of-payments support for meeting the rise in the food import bills of low-income, food-deficit countries;
- 16. Notes with deep concern that only limited progress has been achieved towards the solution of the long-standing problems of international trade in agricultural products which adversely affect exports, particularly of developing countries, and whose solution could make an important contribution to improving over-all food production in the world;
- 17. Calls for urgent action in the different negotiating forums to move towards the approval and implementation of proposals to bring about the reduction and elimination of barriers to trade in agricultural products, in particular in relation to those of export interest to developing countries, and thus to facilitate, inter alia, more efficient patterns of production;
- 18. Urges developed countries to make their best efforts to adjust those sectors of their agricultural and manufacturing economies which require protection against exports from developing countries, thus facilitating access to the markets of food and agricultural products;
- 19. Recommends that the generalized system of preferences should be expanded to cover a wider range of processed and semi-processed products and, whenever possible, agricultural commodities and that the system of information on using the generalized system of preferences, providing technical assistance, including assistance in the field of research, development and marketing, should be enlarged and improved to enable developing countries to take full advantage of such preferences;
- 20. Recommends that the World Food Council, in accordance with its mandate, should give continuing attention to the impact of food trade on levels of food production in the world, in particular with reference to the economies of the developing countries, using to the maximum extent possible the necessary inputs which the different organs and organizations of the United Nations system should provide;
- 21. Recommends that all Member States and international organizations concerned should take appropriate steps to put into operation the Five-Point Plan of Action on World Food Security approved by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its seventy-fifth session and endorsed by the World Food Council at its fifth ministerial session, mainly as an interim measure until a new international grain agreement has been concluded.

World Food Programme

The World Food Programme (WFP), a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), continued in 1979 to provide food aid to developing countries in support of development projects and to meet emergency needs. Since its inception in 1963, WFP had by the end of the year provided support valued at $4.313 billion for some 977 development projects and 428 emergency operations in over 117 countries.

The Programme was governed by the 30-member Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA), which provided general guidance on the policy, administration and operation of WFP. It reported annually to the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council, and presented periodic and special reports to the World Food Council. The resources of WFP were provided mainly through voluntary contributions in commodities, cash or services pledged by Governments at biennial pledging conferences.

In December 1979, the General Assembly set a $1 billion target for voluntary contributions to WFP over the 1981-1982 biennium, up from the 1979-1980 target of $950 million.

As at 31 December 1979, total pledges for the 1979-1980 biennium amounted to $743.5 million, 78 per cent of the $950 million target. Pledges included $538.9 million in commodities, $170.6 million in cash and $34 million in services. In addition, the 12 parties to the 1971 Food Aid Convention contributed to developing countries for the 1978/79 and 1979/80 crop years 379,171 metric tons of grain valued at $57.1 million as well as cash grants of $14.2 million. (For list of pledges for the biennium and contributions under the Convention, see tables below.)

At its 1979 sessions, held at Rome from 14 to 24 May and from 22 to 30 October, CFA approved 31 new development projects at a total cost to WFP of $434.1 million. Also during the year, the Executive Director of WFP approved 22 additional development projects amounting to $26.3 million. Of the 53 new projects approved in 1979, 79 per cent benefited the least developed countries and those most seriously affected by the current economic crisis. Among the larger projects approved by the Committee were: a supplementary nutrition programme for vulnerable groups in India, valued at $57.4 million; a national relief works programme for land and water development in Bangladesh, valued at $53.3 million; and a programme for rehabilitating forest, grazing and agricultural lands in Ethiopia, valued at $37.3 million. (For list of projects approved in 1979, see table below.)

Noting that food aid in cereals had remained short of the 10-million-ton target set by the 1974 World Food Conference,⁵ CFA urged an early resumption of negotiations on a new international grains arrangement and a new food aid convention. It also urged greater efforts to achieve estimated annual food aid requirements in fats and oils, noting that the agreement reached on an International Dairy Arrangement, containing provision for the establishment of an International Dairy Products Council, would facilitate increased supplies of dairy products.

At its October session, CFA agreed on estimates of 17 million to 18.5 million tons of cereals, 300,000 tons of dairy products and 350,000 tons of vegetable oils as useful indicators of requirements for food aid by 1985. Such requirements were likely to increase substantially in the 1980s due to the rising trend in food-import requirements of developing countries, as well as their limited capacity to import on a commercial basis. The Committee also agreed to a number of proposals for establishing and maintaining national food reserves through direct contributions by donors of the required staple food; local purchases by donors from cash resources in support of reserve stocks; commodity exchanges that would not adversely affect local prices and markets; triangular transactions, whereby a donor would purchase the required commodity, preferably from a developing country, for supply to another developing country for security stocks; and assistance to food-aided agricultural development projects providing comprehensive support to the rural poor and couched within national policies and programmes for food security.

In preparation for the 1980 special session of the General Assembly on progress towards the establishment of a new international economic order, CFA submitted a report in 1979 on the progress achieved and obstacles encountered in food aid activities, concentrating on food aid policy, continuity of supplies and arrangements for emergency aid. While noting the improved policy for food assistance and the progress made in giving priority to the most seriously affected countries and to programmes designed to increase self-sufficiency, the report emphasized the need for assuring continuity of food supplies to the poorer developing countries, for improving effectiveness of food aid by combining it with technical and financial assistance, and for channelling a more substantial portion of Food Aid Convention contributions through WFP. The Secretary-General transmitted the CFA report to the Assembly by a note dated 30 November 1979.

During the year, WFP continued to pursue greater co-ordination with other development organizations in the form of technical assistance, training, tools and equipment, and financing. Further progress was made in joint programming, particularly in the context of United Nations Development Programme country programmes. Productive relationships with international financing institutions such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, regional development banks and the International Fund for Agricultural Development resulted in the implementation of several projects involving parallel inputs by these institutions and WFP.

Emergency operations

During 1979, the Director-General of FAO approved, on the recommendation of the WFP Executive Director, 69 operations for meeting emergency food needs, covering more than 14 million beneficiaries in 43 countries. The assistance amounted to about 320,000 metric tons of food commodities valued at approximately $124.8 million, including transportation, superintendence, handling and related costs. The total cost included $69.8 million from WFP emergency allocations and nearly $55 million from the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR).

The refugee situation in South-East Asia elicited massive WFP assistance. Between 1 July and 31 December 1979, 11 operations were approved to provide approximately 50,000 tons of food at a total cost of $21.7 million, of which $21.1 million was drawn from IEFR. The Programme coordinated international food relief to the Kampuchean people and provided services in food procurement, transport and logistics to contributors to the relief effort. Other major operations aided refugees in China ($6.9 million) and Pakistan ($5.4 million), drought victims in Afghanistan ($4 million) and Nepal ($4.1 million), and drought victims ($4.1 million) and cyclone victims ($2.9 million) in India.

The growing demand for emergency food aid resulted in a significant increase in the proportion of WFP resources allocated for emergency operations. The emergency allocation for 1979 out of WFP's regular resources was increased from $45 million to $65 million and was fully committed during the year. As at 31 December 1979, pledges to IEFR amounted to 309,424 metric tons of grain or grain equivalents with an estimated value of $76 million, including cash for transportation. Despite contributions by a greater number of countries, the total remained short of the target of 500,000 tons; CFA urged that contributions to IEFR be increased and that, in so far as possible, a larger proportion of IEFR contributions be laced at the disposal of WFP.

For list of emergency allocations and contributions to IEFR, see tables below.)

Decisions of deliberative bodies

In its fourth annual report to the Economic and Social Council, the FAO Council and the World Food Council, CFA summarized development and emergency food aid activities for the period April 1978 to May 1979. On the basis of a comprehensive review of food aid policies and programmes, it set forth in an annex to the report a series of guidelines and criteria for food aid, and requested the WFP Executive Director to transmit them to member Governments and report on progress in their implementation. The guidelines, which emanated from recommendations of the 1974 World Food Conference and the World Food Council, emphasized that food aid should be provided in forms consistent with the long-term development objectives of recipient countries and be co-ordinated with financial aid and other forms of development assistance. It was recommended that donor countries: make every effort to ensure continuity of food aid by implementing forward planning, preferably on a multiyear basis; give priority to low-income, food-deficit countries; finance transport and storage costs, particularly for the poorest countries; provide food aid essentially on a grant basis; channel more food aid through WFP and other multilateral institutions; and finance triangular transactions, wherever possible, between donors, developing food-exporting countries and recipient countries. The guidelines also called for donor and recipient countries to give priority to: emergency food requirements; activities designed to increase agricultural production, raise incomes and stimulate self-reliance; and nutrition intervention programmes, with special emphasis on vulnerable groups.

The CFA report examined a proposed target of $1 billion in food aid contributions for the biennium 1981-1982, noting that the target of $950 million for the 1979-1980 biennium had not been reached and stressing the need for a satisfactory level of carry-over into the next biennium in order to maintain WFP'S solvency. Two draft resolutions on the 1981-1982 pledging target were contained in the report-one for consideration by the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council, and the other annexed to that resolution for submission to the General Assembly and the FAO Conference.

The Economic and Social Council took note of CFA'S annual report by decision 1979/60, adopted without vote on 2 August 1979, the text having been similarly approved by the First (Economic) Committee on 30 July, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

On those same dates, the First Committee and the Council approved, without objection or vote, respectively, the draft resolution on the 1981-1982 pledging target as proposed by CFA, which became resolution 1979/55. By that resolution, the Council urged United Nations Member States and members and associate members of FAO to prepare to announce pledges at the ninth Pledging Conference for WFP. It also submitted to the General Assembly for consideration the draft resolution on the 1981-1982 pledging target contained in the CFA report.

The draft resolution, annexed to Council resolution 1979/55, was approved without vote by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 1 December 1979 and adopted in like manner by the Assembly on 14 December as resolution 34/108.

By that resolution, the Assembly established a minimum target for voluntary contributions of $1 billion for the 1981-1982 biennium, at least a third of which was to be in cash or services in aggregate. It expressed the hope that, in recognition of the prospective volume of sound project requests and WFP capability, substantial additional contributions would come from other sources. It urged United Nations Member States and FAO members to ensure the full attainment of the target and to surpass it in the event of major increases in costs of commodities and transporation or in food aid requirements. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of FAO, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose early in 1980 and decided that the subsequent pledging conference, for 1983-1984, be convened, at the latest, early in 1982.

Following approval of the text in the Second Committee, the USSR said it had joined in the consensus on the understanding that the measures envisaged referred only to countries participating in WFP and FAO.

Use and development of natural (non-agricultural) resources

Implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan

International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

The third special session of the Committee on Natural Resources was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 26 to 30 March and on 24 April 1979 in order to follow up on the Mar del Plata Action Plan, dealing with integrated water resources development and management and adopted by the United Nations Water Conference in 1977. The Committee reviewed the progress made in implementing the decisions of the Conference and decided on further measures to support and carry out the Action Plan. Among its topics of discussion was a recommendation that an International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade be launched in 1980, as had been proposed in the Action Plan.

At the Committee's request- to facilitate the World Health Organization's consideration of drinking water supply and sanitation at the May 1979 World Health Assembly session - the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular 1979 session in April/May, considered and adopted a resolution on the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade submitted to it by the Committee. By resolution 1979/31, the Council recommended that the General Assembly should hold a special one-day meeting during its regular 1980 session to launch the Decade. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare before then a comprehensive report using information supplied by Governments on the current status of countries in the field of drinking water supply and sanitation, on realistic targets to be achieved by 1990, on programmes planned to achieve these national targets and on plans for information programmes to educate the public on essential basic hygiene.

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) at its June/July 1979 session, adopted a resolution on international co-operation in support of the Action Plan, by which it asked all agencies of the United Nations system to assist the resident representatives in carrying out their functions in connexion with the Decade. It also requested the UNDP Administrator to present to the Governing Council at its 1980 session, after consultations with the regional commissions, information about implementing the Action Plan's recommendations on increasing funds available to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, for water resources development. It asked that the interagency Steering Committee for the Decade, set up under the chairmanship of UNDP to co-ordinate United Nations support for the Decade, meet as soon as possible to help prepare for the special meeting and to define the roles and responsibilities of the various secretariats in co-operating with Governments.

The Economic and Social Council also recommended that resident representatives of UNDP, in consultation with Governments, should serve as the focal point for co-ordinating external technical support for the Decade at the country level, that regional commissions should support countries in their activities, and present regional reviews of preparatory activities and that the Committee on Natural Resources should review the progress made in implementing the goals of the Decade during the 1980s.

It recommended that donors of bilateral assistance and organizations providing multilateral assistance should present before the special meeting their plans for supporting countries in the implementation of the Decade's goals, and that the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy should take into account in its deliberations the preparatory work undertaken for the Decade. The Council adopted resolution 1979/31 on 9 May 1979 without vote.

On oral suggestions of the Council President and the United Arab Emirates, the Committee's recommended text was amended: "special" meeting to launch the Decade was substituted for "high-level" meeting; it was made clear that it was to be a meeting of the Assembly; and to indicate that the comprehensive report asked for would be used throughout the Decade, it was to be prepared as a framework for launching the Decade prior to the meeting rather than merely prepared for the meeting itself. Both France and the USSR expressed reservations on the resolution's financial implications.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/191 of 18 December 1979, recalled the UNDP decision and endorsed Council resolution 1979/31. It decided to hold a special one-day meeting during its 1980 regular session to launch the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, 1981-1990, and asked the Committee on Natural Resources to review at its sessions in the 1980s Governments' progress in implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan and to provide guidance and oversight to supporting water-related activities undertaken by organizations of the United Nations system.

Institutional arrangements for international co-operation

The report of the Committee on Natural Resources on its third special session contained recommendations in the form of draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council concerning institutional arrangements for international co-operation in water development at both the regional and global levels. The resolutions were adopted by the Council on 3 August 1979.

By resolution 1979/67, on regional cooperation, the Council recommended that, in implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan, regional activities on water resources undertaken by United Nations specialized agencies and other organizations should continue to take local needs and requirements of countries and regions into account, and that these activities should be co-ordinated at the regional level through existing institutional mechanisms or through those to be established to strengthen their role in such activities. It recommended that such projects should be specific, taking into account the characteristics of the regions, and urged regional commissions to establish appropriate intergovernmental mechanisms as soon as possible. Member States were invited to provide technical and logistic inputs to commission work programmes dealing with water. The Council also recommended that the commissions be provided with sufficient resources to enable them to discharge the expanded responsibilities assigned to them in relation to the execution of the Action Plan; when necessary, they should explore funding from the regional resources of UNDP for encouraging technical co-operation activities among developing countries.

Resolution 1979/67 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the First (Economic) Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 30 July.

By a second resolution on institutional arrangements for implementing the Action Plan, the Council took note of a report of the interagency Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) on international co-operation for water development. The report had pointed to the desirability of a system for monitoring progress in implementing the Action Plan, outlined the central role to be played by the Economic and Social Council, the Committee on Natural Resources and the regional commissions in monitoring and promoting such implementation, and set out proposals to organize and strengthen Secretariat support services for bodies with activities in the water resources sector. The report had also contained a statement of programme budget implications of the proposed institutional arrangements.

By the same resolution, the Council asked ACC to recast by 1981 the draft terms of reference, set out in its report, of a proposed Interagency Water Resources Board, taking into account matters discussed during the third special session of the Committee on Natural Resources. It requested ACC, organizations undertaking water-related activities and, where appropriate, regional commissions to intensify interorganizational co-ordination in this area and to elaborate appropriate procedures by which those bodies could provide essential support for the periodic intergovernmental review of the Action Plan. It also requested that external organization activities at the country level be fully co-ordinated under the leadership of UNDP resident representatives in consultation with the Governments concerned.

Resolution 1979/68, containing these actions, was adopted by the Council, without vote, as recommended by the First Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 30 July. In approving an amendment sponsored by Argentina and orally subamended by Ireland, the First Committee revised the draft provision proposed by the Committee on Natural Resources containing the Council's request to ACC and concerned organizations - to intensify co-ordination arrangements - to refer specifically to the regional commissions, where appropriate. Argentina also orally added the qualifying words "where appropriate" in reference to the elaboration of procedures for organizational support for the intergovernmental review of the Action Plan.

Other follow-up action to the Mar del Plata Action Plan

The Committee on Natural Resources, at its third special session, proposed that the Economic and Social Council adopt a series of follow-up measures to ensure implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan. Action was to be taken in support of the Plan's recommendations in the following areas: policy, planning and management; assessment of water resources; agricultural and industrial water use; financing arrangements for water resources development; shared water resources; technical co-operation among developing countries in water-related activities; drought loss management; and public information, education, training and research.

On 3 August 1979, in adopting resolution 1979/70, the Economic and Social Council adopted the Committee's proposed text of a resolution containing these recommendations. Taking note of reports and proposals for follow-up action received by organizations throughout the United Nations system, the Council:

- urged Governments to carry out the Plan's recommendations on national water policy, institutional arrangements, legislation, public participation and development of technology, and to exchange experiences and views on national institutional arrangements, and asked the Secretary-General to propose by 1980 ways to ensure such information exchange and to ensure that Action Plan recommendations on policy, planning and manangement and related supporting activities received the necessary attention;
- urged Governments to develop or intensify national activities in water resource assessment, emphasizing data collection and evaluation methods, and endorsed a strategy presented by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Meteorological Organization designed to assist developing countries maintain and strengthen adequate assessment programmes, and asked those organizations, in co-operation with other United Nations bodies, to carry out a project to guide and aid countries in implementing their national assessment plans;

- urged Governments to establish reporting mechanisms for agricultural water development programmes and report regularly on their training and research facilities for irrigation, drainage and conservation programmes, and asked the appropriate organizations for intensified programme execution, studies and training programmes on soil-water-plant relations, and irrigation techniques, as well as studies on obstacles to increased production and productivity of irrigated agriculture;
- urged Governments to economize on industrial water consumption, reduce pollution and systematically exchange experience and knowhow, and recommended that the Industrial Development Board examine proposals of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on water use and treatment; and
- urged Governments to formulate and keep under review a steady flow of properly studied project proposals on different aspects of water resources development and management.

The Council called on Governments to intensify technical co-operation among developing countries in water-related activities and welcomed under financial support and invited preparatory support for a meeting of representatives of international river and lake organizations and interested Governments, planned for 1980. It invited donor and recipient countries to formulate and implement projects to mitigate drought losses and combat desertification. It urged Member States to strengthen their public information, education, training and research programmes and invited the system's organizations to accord the highest priority, within their water resources programmes, to public information, training and research activities.

Resolution 1979/70 was adopted without vote by the Council, having been approved in like manner by the First Committee on 30 July.

The General Assembly, at its session later in the year, endorsed the Council's 1979 resolutions concerning follow-up activities for the implementation of the Action Plan, took note of a report of the Secretary-General describing the results of the third special session of the Committee on Natural Resources, and took action to launch an International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, 1981-1990 (see subsection above).

The Assembly took these actions in adopting, without vote, resolution 34/191 on 18 December 1979. Its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee had likewise approved the text on 8 December, as sponsored by Burundi, Chad, Finland, Guinea, Mali, the Netherlands, the Philippines, the Sudan, Sweden, the United States, the Upper Volta and Zaire.

Reports on the third special session of the Committee on Natural Resources

By decision 1979/77 of 3 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Committee on Natural Resources on the nine meetings of its third special session, held in New York in March and April 1979, convened to discuss follow-up action to and implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan adopted by the 1977 United Nations Water Conference. By decision 1979/80 of the same date, the Council took note of a report by the Secretary-General on the results of the special session.

The Council's First Committee had recommended both actions, orally proposed by its Chairman on 30 July and 1 August, respectively. The decisions were taken in both bodies without vote.

The General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report when it adopted resolution 34/191 on 18 December (see subsection immediately preceding).

United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy

The Economic and Social Council, meeting in July/August, considered the report of the Committee on Natural Resources on its sixth session, held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 5 to 15 June 1979, containing a draft resolution on preparations for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, to be convened in 1981; it also had before it a progress report from the Secretary-General outlining action taken by him and by the General Assembly since February 1979 to prepare for the Conference, and on interagency co-operation in this area.

The Secretary-General's report, submitted in accordance with a 1978 Assembly resolution, noted the appointment of Mohamed Habib Gherab (Tunisia) as Secretary-General of the Conference, the establishment of an internal Secretariat Co-ordinating Committee, and an address given by the Secretary-General of the Conference in which he advised that the main focus of the Conference should be the identification of the contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to meeting national and global energy requirements, an assessment of prospects for the remaining decades of the century, the identification of practical options open to Governments, particularly those of developing countries, and consideration of the scope of further international action and co-operation.

The Secretary-General reported that he had addressed a note verbale to all States inviting Governments to nominate experts for eight technical panels on various power sources. He also reported that the first interagency meeting in preparation for the Conference had been convened by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation at United Nations Headquarters on 1 March 1979. Agencies had been requested to contribute background material for and explore the possibility of hosting some of the technical panels, and to consider outposting staff to assist in preparations for the Conference.

On 3 August 1979, the Council adopted resolution 1979/66, by which, noting the Secretary-General's progress report, it called for support in Conference preparations from organizations in the United Nations system, and recommended that States consider designating national focal points to co-ordinate preparations and link them to Conference secretariat preparations. It also asked the Secretary-General to proceed speedily with the appointment of the technical panels. The Council recommended that the General Assembly designate an intergovernmental preparatory body for the Conference, consider measures to enhance the readiness of developing countries for the Conference, and consider ways in which, pending the holding of the Conference, the United Nations system could more effectively assist those countries in the area of new and renewable sources of energy. The Council asked the Conference Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly later in the year a comprehensive report on preparations, including a calendar and programme of activities.

Resolution 1979/66 was adopted, by 37 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, on the recommendation of the First Committee, which had approved the text on 2 August by 31 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The text had been submitted by the observer for the Ivory Coast on behalf of Council members which were members of the "Group of 77" developing countries. The Group's text superseded the draft on the same subject that had been proposed by the Committee on Natural Resources.

An amendment sponsored by the USSR would have had the Council recommend that the Assembly designate the Committee on Natural Resources as an intergovernmental preparatory body for the Conference, open to the participation of all States as full members and to report to the Assembly through the Council, and would have deleted reference in the same paragraph to taking into account in this connexion the corresponding recommendation contained in the report of the Chairman of the Committee on Natural Resources on its sixth session; the amendment was rejected by a roll-call vote, requested on behalf of the Group of 77, of 15 votes in favour to 25 against, with 2 abstentions.

The USSR, speaking after the vote on the resolution, also on behalf of the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, said they had abstained in accordance with the principle that new bodies should not be established and available resources should be used more effectively. Ireland (on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Community (EEC) in the Council), Japan, New Zealand, Sweden and the United States said they supported the consensus but favoured the designation of the Committee on Natural Resources as the preparatory committee for the Conference. China and the spokesman for the Group of 77 said that they had opposed the USSR amendment, considering it was for the Assembly to designate the new body without prejudice to its right to designate whatever preparatory body it chose.

The General Assembly, when considering preparations for the Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, had before it letters of 19 September and 4 October from Austria, offering Vienna, and Kenya, offering Nairobi, as sites for the 1981 Conference.

A report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with a 1978 Assembly resolution³ and Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/66, outlined the progress of global, regional and national preparations for the Conference, and described measures which could be taken to enhance the readiness of the developing countries for the Conference and possible action by the United Nations system before the Conference to assist developing countries in the area of new and renewable sources of energy. It touched on the role and technical inputs of nongovernmental and intergovernmental organizations, outlined an information programme for the Conference and referred to meetings to be scheduled for the proposed intergovernmental preparatory body. Annexed to the report were the membership and terms of reference of the eight technical panels-on ocean energy, wind power, geothermal energy, solar energy, biomass, hydropower, fuel wood and charcoal, and oil shale and tar sand.

An oral progress report of the Secretary-General of the Conference was made to the Second Committee on 19 November and later reproduced as a document in accordance with a Committee decision.

By resolution 34/190, adopted without vote on 18 December, the Assembly took note of these progress reports, decided that the Conference would be held at Nairobi in August 1981, and designated the Committee on Natural Resources as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference. The Committee was to meet in open-participation sessions, two of which were to be held in time to report to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council in 1980 with recommendations on the duration, dates, invitations and draft agenda for the Conference and on the work programme of the Committee for 1981. The technical panels were to prepare their interim reports for Committee consideration at its second 1980 session; in addition, adequate arrangements should be made for equally detailed consideration of energy sources for which no technical panels had been created, namely, peat and draught animal power. The Assembly recommended that States designate national focal points to co-ordinate their preparations and link them with Conference secretariat preparations, and invited, in addition to United Nations bodies previously invited, interested intergovernmental, in particular regional, and nongovernmental organizations to contribute to those preparations.

The Secretary-General and concerned bodies of the United Nations system were asked to report on ways to assist Members, particularly developing countries, in the energy resources area until the Conference, with particular attention to transfer of technology, research and information exchange, and technical and financial assistance. The Secretary-General, United Nations organs and Governments able to do so were asked to provide appropriate assistance, including technical assistance, to developing countries, at their request and in accordance with established procedures, in their preparations for the Conference at the national level through their national focal points, and at the subregional, regional, interregional and global levels, using, inter alia, to the greatest extent possible, existing resources. The Secretary-General was also asked to accelerate preparations through public information activities to ensure global awareness of the importance and objectives of the Conference, and to report in 1980 on preparations, including recommendations for a detailed programme and calendar of activities and other measures, particularly consideration of the final results of the technical panels by the Preparatory Committee.

The text of the resolution had been approved without vote on 1 December by the Second Committee. It was a compromise text, submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman after informal consultations on a draft resolution introduced by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the Group of 77; that draft was subsequently withdrawn.

In addition to editorial changes, the compromise text differed from that submitted by India in that it: added the provision by which the Assembly considered that arrangements should be made for consideration of energy sources such as peat and draught animal power; modified the invitation to regional intergovernmental organizations that they in particular contribute to Conference preparations, and included interested non-governmental organizations in the invitation; sought identification of ways to assist, before the Conference, Member States and in particular developing countries in energy sources, rather than developing countries alone, and deleted reference to consideration of reports on this matter by the Preparatory Committee at its second 1980 session; recast the provision asking for assistance in Conference preparations, by which the Assembly, by the earlier draft, would have requested the Secretary-General and United Nations bodies to provide all necessary assistance, in particular technical assistance, to developing countries, at their request, in the preparations for the Conference at all levels, and added an invitation to Governments in a position to do so to provide similar assistance; and, among other measures, not specified in the original draft, on which recommendations were to be made in a report on preparations, the final text mentioned particularly the consideration of the final results of the technical panels by the Preparatory Committee.

Speaking in explanation of vote, also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, Bulgaria said they reserved their position with regard to the financial implications of the resolution, maintaining that Conference planning measures should be taken within the framework of existing appropriations and facilities. Positions of their Governments with regard to limitation of expenses and financial implications were also explained by Ireland, speaking on behalf of the States members of EEC, and by the United States.

Multilateral development assistance for exploration of natural resources

The Economic and Social Council, at its 1979 organizational session, adopted a Japanese proposal to invite the World Bank (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) to submit to the Council for consideration at its second regular 1979 session a study on ways in which the Bank's activities in financing natural resources development could be made more responsive to the needs of developing countries. This was one of the provisions of Council decision 1979/3, adopted without vote on 9 February. By the same decision, the Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report to facilitate its compliance with a General Assembly request in a resolution of 29 January 1979⁴ that it consider, in consultation with UNDP, the advisability of adjusting the operating procedures of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see section below).

The Bank's study, which responded to an Assembly invitation in the same 29 January resolution, detailed the Bank's programme to accelerate petroleum production in developing countries. The report analysed the balance of energy in the world, reviewed recent activities of the World Bank and its affiliates in the energy sector, discussed prospects and problems concerning fuels in developing countries, and made proposals for expanding assistance in energy exploration and development.

The Council took note of the report by decision 1979/90 of 3 August 1979, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of its First Committee, which had approved without vote on 1 August the text orally proposed by its Chairman.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/109 of 14 December 1979, took note of a report of the Secretary-General on multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources, prepared in accordance with its January resolution. The report contained information on missions sent to assess States' requirements for the exploration and development of mineral and energy resources, a forthcoming review of the operating procedures of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, proposals concerning the transfer of technology to developing countries in the natural resources field and the World Bank's activities in this field. (For further details, see section below on UNITED NATIONS REVOLVING FUND FOR NATURAL RESOURCES EXPLORATION.)

belonging to the Group of 77, a resolution on multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources. The Committee approved the orally amended text without vote on 1 December. On 19 December, the Assembly adopted it, also without vote, as resolution 34/201.

It thereby decided to provide the necessary finances to undertake missions to developing countries to assess their needs for exploration and development of natural resources, asking the Secretary-General to use resources within the existing regular programme of technical cooperation for this purpose. It requested the working group of governmental experts, to be established by the Economic and Social Council-a decision which the Assembly endorsed- to review and analyse the activities of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, to include among its activities concrete projects for promoting research and development in developing countries. The Assembly noted the recommendations of the Group of Experts on Mineral and Energy Exploration in Developing Countries concerning the transfer of technology⁵ and requested the bodies of the United Nations system to take urgent steps to assist the developing countries in this area; it also noted the action of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in this regard (see p. 594).

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to request the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to coordinate the activities of the United Nations system in the field of assistance in technology transfer, taking into account the relevant recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 636). It also welcomed the World Bank's programme to accelerate petroleum production in the developing countries, and invited the Bank to consider expanding that programme at the request of developing countries and within the framework of their national priorities, particularly in respect of exploration, and to report to the Assembly in 1980 on these matters.

After approval of the resolution, Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that they had not objected to the adoption of the resolution; however, they were not members of the World Bank and were not bound by any obligations implied by the provisions of the resolution concerning the Bank's activities. The United States said that it supported the text but reiterated its long-standing position against funding technical assistance from the regular budget. France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan and the United Kingdom maintained their reservations with regard to the matters referred to in various of the resolutions recalled in a preambular paragraph, on permanent sovereignty over natural resources and all economic activities. Belgium expressed similar reservations, recalling its previously expressed view that such sovereignty should be exercised in strict respect for international law and in conformity with the demands of international solidarity in so far as supplies of products were concerned.

Mineral resources

By a decision of 3 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council- taking into consideration the needs of many developing countries in expanding the base for their fertilizer industries, and noting that reports prepared by the Secretary-General on copper, gas, nickel and chrome had been useful in the Committee on Natural Resources - requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on phosphates and potassium salts for the Committee at its 1981 session.

The Council took this action when it adopted, without vote, resolution 1979/71; its First Committee had approved the text without vote on 1 August. The text had been proposed by the Committee on Natural Resources at its June 1979 session.

The Committee on Natural Resources at that session also considered a report of an eightmember Group of Experts on Definitions and Terminology for Mineral Resources, which had met at Headquarters, New York, from 29 January to 2 February 1979. The report reviewed the terms and definitions of mineral classification currently in use, analysed the classification problem and difficulties in implementing a new system, and discussed adaptation to individual commodities.

On 3 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the report and noted that the Expert Group had not dealt with the problems of definition and terminology relating to mineral production and consumption. It requested the Secretary-General to review current practices in the United Nations and other international organizations in reporting, compiling and publishing statistics on mineral production and consumption, and to convene a group of experts to develop a common set of definitions and terminology for use by the United Nations in this field; the group was to report to the Committee on Natural Resources.

Resolution 1979/72, containing these provisions, was adopted without vote. The First Committee on 1 August had approved, without vote, the text which had been proposed by the Committee on Natural Resources.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, established in 1973⁶ and administered by UNDP, provides risk capital for natural resources development, to be replenished through payments from the results of successful exploration schemes.

During 1979, five new projects were approved by the Fund, in Ecuador, Ghana, Kenya, the Sudan and Suriname, one project was successfully completed and three others became operational. The first successfully completed project involved the identification of lead and zinc and the possible recoverable values in gold and cadmium.

Consideration of the Revolving Fund by the Committee on Natural Resources at its June 1979 session focused mainly on issues concerning the required replenishment contributions and possible expansion of Fund activities. The Committee approved for submission to the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution providing for the establishment of an intergovernmental working group, to be appointed by the Secretary-General, to prepare for a review of the Fund's activities in 1981; the Council would also ask that the group's conclusions be submitted to it at its second regular 1981 session, through the Committee and the UNDP Governing Council.

When the First Committee of the Economic and Social Council discussed the report of the Committee on Natural Resources in July, Japan, the Netherlands, the Philippines and Turkey sponsored a resolution containing a modified version of the Committee's recommendations, including some additional provisions, which superseded the text in the report. The First Committee approved the four-power text without vote on 30 July and the Council adopted it as resolution 1979/65, without vote, on 3 August.

The Council, by this resolution, noted a decision adopted on 29 June 1979 by the UNDP Governing Council, which had also considered the recommendations of the Committee on Natural Resources. By that decision, the Governing Council had invited the Secretary-General, in consultation with the UNDP Administrator, to establish a group of experts to review the Fund's activities, also authorizing the Administrator, pending the 1981 review, to undertake feasibility studies when requested and within the Fund's operational and financial limitations. It had also endorsed his recommendation that the Governing Council continue as governing body of the Fund until that review, and approved projects for precious metals exploration in Liberia and diamond exploration in Ghana.

By other provisions of resolution 1979/65, the Economic and Social Council decided to establish a working group of governmental experts to review and analyse the Fund's activities in order to assist the Council in carrying out a comprehensive review of the Fund's functions, institutional arrangements and repayment system. It invited the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administrator, to appoint the members, decided that the group was to report to it through the UNDP Governing Council and the Committee on Natural Resources, and further decided that the Governing Council should continue as the Fund's governing body until completion of the 1981 review.

The German Democratic Republic, speaking after approval of the text also on behalf of Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that, the provisions of the resolution not being consistent with their position, they would not participate in the activities of the Fund.

When the Second Committee of the General Assembly took up the question of development and international economic co-operation at its regular 1979 session, Japan introduced a resolution also sponsored by Chile, Italy, Kenya, Mali, the Netherlands, the Philippines. and Turkey. The resolution-reclassified on a suggestion by Jamaica as being more related to the agenda item on operational activities for developmentwas orally amended by the sponsors and approved by the Second Committee without vote on 1 December and likewise adopted by the Assembly on 14 December as resolution 34/109.

The Assembly thereby took note of the reports before it on the activities of the Fund as well as the report of the Secretary-General on multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources (see section above). It invited the working group of governmental experts to examine ways to promote the effective operation of the Fund while carrying out the comprehensive review of its functions, institutional arrangements, funding and repayment system. It asked the Secretary-General to invite international organizations, in particular the World Bank, to provide technical, financial and other information to assist the experts in assessing developing countries' needs and organizations' financial and technical resources available for natural resources exploration. Member States were asked to consider contributing substantially to the Fund to help finance projects and feasibility studies authorized by UNDP, whose June decision to undertake such studies was endorsed. The Economic and Social Council and the Governing Council were urged to consider further other proposals of the Administrator on Fund activities.

Sweden, on behalf also of Denmark, Finland and Norway, noted that they had abstained from voting on the establishment of the Fund; their position with regard to separate funds within the United Nations system applied to the Revolving Fund.

By resolution 34/201 of 19 December, concerning multilateral development assistance for the exploration of natural resources, the Assembly also took decisions relating to the Revolving Fund. By that resolution, it endorsed the Council's decision of 3 August (resolution 1979/65) to establish an expert group to analyse the Fund's activities to help the Council carry out a comprehensive review; it asked the group to consider how the Fund should include among its activities projects for promoting research and development in developing countries, at their request, to enhance their indigenous capacities for exploration and development of their resources. (For further details, see section above on MULTILATERAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE FOR EXPLORATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES.)

Pledging Conference

At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held on 6 November 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, the Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration received pledge announcements for 1980. Pledges were received from the Dominican Republic ($2,000), Italy ($1,197,605) and Panama ($1,000), bringing 1980 pledges to the Fund to $1,200,605 as at 30 June 1980.

Other decisions of the Committee on Natural Resources

Among questions discussed by the Committee on Natural Resources at its June 1979 session, were those of energy, permanent sovereignty over natural resources, co-ordination of natural resource development programmes in the United Nations system, transfer of technology and remote sensing.

The Committee recommended that a report submitted by the Secretary-General on some energy problems and issues in developing countries be drawn to the attention of the UNDP Administrator for consideration of prompt funding arrangements for increased energy exploration activities in developing countries; the Committee requested that he submit a report to it and to the UNDP Governing Council. The Committee also asked the Secretary-General for reports on energy (including transfer of technology), natural gas and progress in coal use and development.

Two reports of the Secretary-General dealt with work being done on questions of permanent sovereignty in respect of territories subjected to foreign domination, colonial administration, alien occupation, apartheid or racial discrimination, and with general issues in the field of permanent sovereignty. The Committee asked the Secretary-General to include in his next report on the issue an analytical examination of the work being done by the United Nations system in fulfilling its mandate under resolutions on this question.

The Committee noted but took no formal action on two other reports - on cross-organizational analysis of the mineral resources programmes and of the energy programmes of the United Nations system-in view of the forthcoming consideration of the question by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its September/October 1979 meetings (see p. 969).

The Committee invited the Economic and Social Council to submit to the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development a report before it in which the Secretary-General reviewed recommendations concerning the transfer of technology in the field of natural resources made in 1978 by the Group of Experts on Mineral and Energy Exploration in Developing Countries. It also asked for an analytical report on progress in implementing programmes concerning the transfer of technology regarding natural resources, particularly coal and gas.

Following consideration of a report on the work of the Remote Sensing Unit of the Centre for Natural Resources, Energy and Transport, the Committee expressed interest in receiving more detailed information on the value of remote sensing techniques applied to UNDP-assisted exploration projects and asked for a report on new techniques for exploring, identifying and assessing natural resources, including remote sensing and transfer of technology.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/78, approved without vote on 3 August 1979 the provisional agenda and proposed documentation for the seventh (1981) session of the Committee on Natural Resources. The text, which had been approved without vote by the ⁷ See footnote 5.

First Committee on 1 August, was based on a draft decision proposed by the Committee on Natural Resources; following consultations, and on oral proposals by the First Committee Chairman, some reductions were made by that Committee in the documentation by incorporating some of the requested reports with others of wider scope, and an item on industrial minerals was deleted.

Operational activities

Related decisions

During its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly adopted several decisions relating to natural resources in other contexts. Resolution 34/136 of 14 December dealt with permanent sovereignty over national resources in the occupied Arab territories. Co-operation in the field of the environment concerning natural resources shared by two or more States was acted upon by the Assembly in resolution 34/186 of 18 December. In addition, the Economic and Social Council adopted on 1 August resolution 1979/49 on the interrelationship between population, resources, environment and development.

Resolution 1979/31, as recommended by Committee on Natural Resources, E/1979/63, and as orally amended by United Arab Emirates and by Council President, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the gravity of the problem of drinking water supply and sanitation and the crisis that mankind may have to face unless timely action is taken,

Recognizing that the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan adopted by the United Nations Water Conference includes, inter alia, the launching of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade recommended in paragraph 15 of the Action Plan,

Taking note of the progress report on drinking water supply and sanitation, prepared by the World Health Organization in co-operation with other international organizations, and the reports of the regional meetings held under the auspices of the regional commissions and the proposals contained therein,

Noting the great differences among the needs of countries and the importance of realism and flexibility in identifying national targets within the framework of the Decade,

Noting also that in the development of programmes for the Decade it will be necessary to bear in mind the relationship between drinking water supply and sanitation and the development of water resources for other uses and that rural water supply and sanitation form an integrated part of primary health care programmes.

Bearing in mind the relationship between drinking water supply and sanitation and rural development and the improvement of the quality of life among the urban and rural poor.

Considering the importance of appropriate technology and the participation of the local population in the development of the community water supply and sanitation facilities, and the need for manpower for the design, construction, operation and maintenance of those facilities, as well as the need for the exchange of experiences in the above-mentioned fields and for technical co-operation among developing countries,

Taking note of the preparations for the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade undertaken by the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy established under General Assembly resolution 33/193 of 29 January 1979,

- Recommends that, during its thirty-fifth session, the General Assembly should hold a special one-day meeting to launch formally the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, as a framework for the launching of the Decade and prior to the abovementioned meeting, a comprehensive report on the basis of information supplied by Governments, covering whenever possible the following:
- (a) Data on countries' status in the field of drinking water supply and sanitation, to comprise a general baseline against which to measure progress during the Decade;
- (b) Targets to be achieved by 1990 that are realistic, taking into account national and international constraints;
- (c) The programmes planned to achieve these national targets, including information on the amount of national and external resources needed for the development, rehabilitation, operation and maintenance of drinking water supply and sanitation facilities;
- (d) Plans for information programmes to educate the general public on essential basic hygiene;
- 3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, with the assistance of the interagency Steering Committee for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade and other appropriate United Nations bodies, such guidance as may be requested by Governments in the preparation of national reports for the special meeting referred to in paragraph 1 above, to receive and process those reports in time for them to be issued before the meeting, and to be responsible for the interagency overview of the implementation of the goals of the Decade;
- 4. Recommends that donors of bilateral assistance and organizations providing multilateral assistance should present in time for the special meeting reports presenting their plans and possibilities for supporting countries in the implementation of the goals of the Decade;
- 5. Recommends that resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme, in consultations with and with the consent of the Governments concerned, should serve as the focal point for co-ordinating the external technical support for the Decade at the country level in conformity with paragraph 34 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977;
 - 6. Recommends that regional commissions should support countries in their activities and present regional reviews of preparatory activities;

- 7. Recommends that the Committee on Natural Resources should review the progress made in implementing the goals of the Decade at its meetings during the 1980s;
- 8. Recommends that the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy should take fully into account in its deliberations the preparatory work undertaken for launching the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, bearing in mind that the Mar del Plata Action Plan was approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 32/158 of 19 December 1977.

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering the recommendations and resolutions of the United Nations Water Conference constituting the Mar del Plata Action Plan on integrated water resources development and management, which was approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 32/158 of 19 December 1977.

Recalling that the United Nations Water Conference, in its resolution VIII, entitled "Institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the water sector," recommended that a central role should be played by the Economic and Social Council, the Committee on Natural Resources and the regional commissions in their respective regions in the promotion of intergovernmental co-operation as a follow-up to the implementation of the Action Plan,

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, in which the Assembly called upon the regional commissions to exercise team leadership and responsibility for co-ordination and co-operation at the regional level,

Further recalling its resolution 2121(LXIII) of 4 August 1977, in paragraph 10 of which it requested the regional commissions to strengthen and intensify their responsibilities in the water sector,

Considering also the proposals contained in the reports of the regional meetings held under the auspices of the regional commissions, and particularly taking note of the steps taken in establishing intergovernmental machinery in each region with the aim of expediting the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

- 1. Recommends that:
- (a) In the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan on integrated water resources development and management, the regional activities related to water resources undertaken by the specialized agencies and other organizations should continue to take into account the local needs and requirements of the various countries and regions, as requested;
- (b) For this purpose, the activities of these agencies and organizations undertaken on the basis of the respective regional programmes should be co-ordinated at the regional level through existing institutional mechanisms or those to be established for the purpose of strengthening their role in that area, as requested;

- 2. Urges the regional commissions that have not already done so to take the necessary steps to establish an appropriate intergovernmental mechanism as soon as possible;
- 3. Recommends that the secretariats of the regional commissions should be provided with sufficient manpower and financial resources to enable them to discharge the expanded responsibilities assigned to them by the United Nations Water Conference in relation to the execution of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, including the servicing of their respective bodies dealing with water, and that, should these activities demand additional resources, consideration should be given, infer alia, to the redeployment of existing resources;
- 4. Recommends further that, where additional resources are required for the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan at the regional level, the regional commissions should actively explore funding from the regional resources of the United Nations Development Programme for encouraging activities relating to technical co-operation among developing countries;
- 5. Invites Governments of Member States to provide substantive technical and logistic inputs to the work programmes of the bodies in the respective regional commissions that deal with water.

Questions pertaining to the environment

United Nations Environment Programme

Activities in 1979

During 1979, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) assigned nine experts to projects in Kenya, Lebanon, Mexico, Switzerland and Thailand. Seven of these were from Argentina, India, Lebanon, Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand and the United Republic of Tanzania and two were from the Netherlands.

The Programme sponsored several seminars during the year. These included: a training seminar on biogas as an alternative energy source, jointly organized with the Commonwealth Science Council, held from 25 July to 25 August in China; and four intergovernmental seminars on alternative patterns of development and lifestyles, organized jointly with the regional commissions concerned - for the African region (held from 5 to 9 March at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia), for Asia and the Pacific (held from 14 to 18 August at Bangkok, Thailand), for Latin America (held from 19 to 23 November at Santiago, Chile), and for Europe (held from 3 to 8 December at Ljubljana, Yugoslavia). It also participated in a United Nations Children's Fund seminar on services for the pre-school child, at Port Louis, Mauritius, from 10 to 17 November.

The world-wide environmental information-exchange network of UNEP, INFOTERRA, held its first training course at New Delhi, from 2 to 11 April, organized jointly with the Indian Government. It held its second network management meeting at Moscow from 1 to 6 October to review the network's progress and formulate recommendations for its evaluation and future development.

The UNEP Committee on the Ozone Layer held its third session in Paris from 20 to 23

November and examined research efforts and reports on the stratosphere.

International co-operation on the environment

The Governing Council of UNEP held its seventh session at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya, from 18 April to 4 May 1979. It adopted a number of decisions on 3 May, several of which were based on the work of its two sessional committees established at the opening meeting. Sessional Committee I considered the subjects incorporated into the chapters of the Governing Council's report dealing with implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and arid and semi-arid land ecosystems (see subchapter below), as well as with programme matters. Sessional Committee II discussed topics related to the Environment Fund.

Affirming the importance of environmental considerations in the establishment of the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s), the Council, by a five-part decision on programme policy and implementation, asked the Executive Director of UNEP to participate actively in the formulation of the strategy.

The Council endorsed proposals-by the Executive Director towards the development of a system-wide, medium-term environment programme and noted with satisfaction the cooperation between him and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, between UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, as well as with the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN) and the World Wildlife Fund in preparing a world conservation strategy, to be launched in March 1980, to help Governments manage their living resources.

Other sections of this decision dealt with the periodicity, duration, organization and documentation of Council sessions and decided on topics for the 1982 state-of-the-environment report. The Council urged the Executive Director to strengthen national and regional institutions to tackle environmental problems in developing countries and welcomed his intention to improve environmental assessment activities, focus more sharply on emerging problems in the annual state-of-the-environment report, implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see subchapter below), halt tropical forest depletion and improve public information.

After considering the Executive Director's report on the environment programme, the Council approved new and revised programme objectives and strategies by another decision, by which it also stipulated criteria to be taken into account in determining priorities.

On the subject of terrestrial ecosystems, the Council reaffirmed that humid tropical forest ecosystems constituted a priority concern of UNEP and appealed to United Nations bodies and international organizations to assist Governments and promote co-operation in finding solutions to the problem of their degradation and rapid disappearance. It asked the Executive Director, who was to ensure that such activities were reviewed and co-ordinated, to work in conjunction with Governments and organizations on an integrated conservation and use programme, convening an expert meeting for that purpose. He was also asked to convene a highlevel expert group in 1980 to identify and define elements of a policy to preserve soils from degradation.

Following its consideration of matters relating to the Environment Fund of UNEP, the Council noted with regret that about half of the United Nations Member States had not contributed to the Fund. By a decision, it appealed to Governments to contribute according to their ability, as early as possible and in convertible currencies. It approved a 1979 appropriation level of $43.8 million and the apportionment of that amount among Fund programme activities. Other decisions concerning the Fund's management included approval of its financial reports and accounts for 1976-1977, and programme and programme support costs for 1978-1979 - with a recommendation that the Secretary-General report on the common services of the organizations expected to occupy premises at Gigiri, Kenya, and a request that the Executive Director present to the Council a long-term staffing policy. An appropriation of $19,084,900 for programme and programme support costs for 1980-1981 was also approved.

In separate actions the Council urged ratification and implementation of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora and approved the establishment of two funds-a Trust Fund for that Convention and a Regional Trust Fund for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea against Pollution-both for two-year periods, within the framework of the Environment Fund, to be administered during that period by the Executive Director.

The Economic and Social Council, on 2 August, welcomed UNEP activities, took note of the report of the Governing Council on the work of its 1979 session and transmitted it to the General Assembly. By other provisions of resolution 1979/56, the Council welcomed the Governing Council's decision on programme policy and implementation, by which it had drawn the attention of the regional commissions to the advantages of setting up intergovernmental regional environmental committees, and welcomed UNEP'S participation in the high-level meeting on environmental protection held, within the framework of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), at Geneva in November 1979 (see p. 710).

Welcoming also UNEP'S role in research on the interrelation of population, resources, environment and development, it invited the views of the Governing Council of UNEP on action taken pursuant to a 1974 Assembly resolution asking United Nations bodies to help applicant developing countries undertake integrated studies on the matter.² It also reiterated its appeal for urgent and generous governmental contributions to the UNEP Fund.

Resolution 1979/56, adopted without vote by the Council, had been approved, also without vote, by its First (Economic) Committee on 30 July, as sponsored by Argentina, Kenya, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Somalia, the Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The General Assembly likewise took note of the report of the UNEP Governing Council and of the results of the high-level meeting on the protection of the environment when it adopted resolution 34/188, without vote, on 18 December. It noted with appreciation UNEP'S progress, and other organizations' co-operation, in developing a system-wide, medium-term environment programme, and asked the Council to pursue work on technical aspects of environmental assessment and the integration of environmental factors in development.

The Assembly also: asked financial institutions to consider financing studies on environmental aspects of projects in developing countries; stressed the need for UNEP to increase resources for such projects; welcomed UNEP'S collaboration with IUCN and the World Wildlife Fund in formulating a world conservation strategy; invited ratification, implementation and promotion of international instruments to protect the environment; called for full UNEP cooperation in preparations for the 1981 United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy; welcomed the establishment of the two new trust funds; and appealed for Government contributions to meet the $150 million target for the 1978/1981 medium-term plan period.

This resolution was based on a text introduced in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, and orally revised, by India on behalf of Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries. In addition to their own revisions, the sponsors agreed to a USSR oral amendment to take note of the results of the high-level meeting on environmental protection. They did not accept amendments by the United States to add provisions to take note of Government interest in the possible use of environmental assessment procedures to identify and deal with transboundary environmental problems, and to invite UNEP to consider developing such an assessment so States could evaluate the effects of their activities beyond their territory, including the global commons. These amendments were withdrawn before the Committee approved the text without a vote on 12 December.

Following approval of the text, the USSR observed that it had not opposed it on the understanding that any increase in the funding of projects for developing countries would come from the voluntary fund of UNEP and not entail any reduction in UNEP's role in global, interregional or regional programmes in which most countries had an interest.

Canada recorded its view that the resolution did not envisage any change in the current balance between UNEP'S global and regional programmes. The Netherlands regretted that the text did not give more explicit directions on the Governing Council's role in the elaboration of instruments for integrating environmental factors in the development process during the new development decade.

Environment co-operation regarding shared natural resources

By resolution 34/186 of 18 December, the Assembly took note of a set of 15 draft principles drawn up by an Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on Natural Resources Shared by Two or More States, established by the UNEP Governing Council, as guidelines and recommendations for the guidance of States in the conservation and harmonious use of shared natural resources, without prejudice to already binding rules of international law. The Assembly asked all States to use the principles in formulating bilateral or multilateral conventions. The Governing Council was to report on progress.

This resolution was adopted without vote, having been approved by the Assembly's Second Committee on 11 December by a recorded vote of 94 to 0, with 23 abstentions. Ethiopia had suggested that all votes concerning the resolution should be recorded. The sponsors were Argentina, Bangladesh, Canada, Greece, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden and the Upper Volta, whose text, after two revisions, would have had the Assembly adopt the draft principles. Brazil orally proposed that the Assembly take note of, rather than adopt, them. The Committee rejected, by a recorded vote of 34 in favour to 52 against, with 28 abstentions, a motion by Pakistan that Brazil's amendment be considered a new proposal rather than an amendment as it had the effect, according to the sponsors, of negating the force of their resolution. A subsequent proposal by Pakistan that the Assembly take note with satisfaction and endorse the draft principles was not accorded priority, under the rules of procedure, over the Brazilian amendment, which the Committee adopted by a recorded vote of 59 to 25, with 27 abstentions. In a separate vote requested by Pakistan, it then approved the paragraph, as amended, by 62 votes to 27, with 23 abstentions, before adopting the resolution as a whole.

A number of States spoke in explanation of vote in the Second Committee or to explain their position following adoption of the resolution by the Assembly.

Brazil, Ecuador and Peru noted their reservations on some of the principles, notwithstanding their positive votes on the resolution. These States, as well as Colombia, considered that they affected a State's sovereign right freely to dispose of its natural resources. Guinea, Peru and Turkey noted that as yet there was no legal or agreed definition of shared natural resources. Egypt and Venezuela also considered it premature to adopt draft principles on this subject.

Italy said it could vote in favour because of the voluntary nature of the principles and it believed that work on a definition must proceed. Romania considered that legal obligations could derive only from bilateral or multilateral agreements. Portugal said its positive vote was based on that assumption and that a more just and safe world required the progressive standardization and systematization of State practices and behaviour. Ethiopia said it continued to have some difficulty with the provision by which all States were asked to use the principles as guidelines and recommendations in formulating bilateral or multilateral conventions.

France and the Federal Republic of Germany voted for the text but maintained reservations with respect to provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,³ recalled in a preambular paragraph, in which the principle of full permanent sovereignty of every State over its natural resources was reaffirmed. France restated its view that the authority of States over their natural resources could not be "full."

Uruguay, which abstained, believed the principles of conduct were only acceptable when the responsibility was shared as much as the resources; there must be strong support for them, based on a broad consensus.

Argentina, Canada, the Netherlands and Sweden also abstained, saying they regretted that the Assembly had not given the principles a stronger endorsement. Iraq and Pakistan said they abstained because the amendment had made the resolution too weak.

The Second Committee's consideration of the question took place in the light of a report and recommendations of the Secretary-General on the subject. As the Assembly had requested in 1978,⁴ he transmitted summaries of the views of Governments which had replied to his invitation for comments on the Working Group's draft principles, which the Governing Council had approved in 1978.⁵

The 36 responding Governments were Argentina, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Guyana, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, Nepal, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Poland, Romania, Senegal, the Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Togo, Turkey, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Upper Volta.

Among the principles set forth by the Working Group were recommendations that States should: co-operate in conserving and using shared natural resources; conclude agreements to regulate conduct; ensure that activities did not damage another State's environment; make environmental assessments before undertaking affecting another resource-sharing State; exchange information and consult regularly; notify, consult and otherwise co-operate on plans to change shared resource use or conservation and avoid unreasonable delays in so doing;. engage in joint studies and assessments for solution to problems; inform others of emergency situations arising from the use of a shared resource which might affect them and co-operate in contingency plans and assistance to avert grave situations or counter their effects; consider jointly seeking the services of a competent international organization in clarifying problems; submit disputes on which negotiations had failed to agreed settlement procedures and refrain from aggravating the situation; assume liability under international law for environmental damage resulting from violations of their obligations; co-operate to develop further international law regarding liability and compensation to victims of environmental damage; take account, in domestic activities, of their effects on other States; try to provide to affected nationals of other States access to and treatment in courts equivalent to that accorded to their own nationals; and apply these principles so as to enhance development and the interests of all, and particularly of developing, countries.

Environment and development

The UNEP Governing Council on 3 May requested the Executive Director, in co-operation with specialized agencies, to promote and contribute to studies of the environmental impact of socioeconomic activities in the context of an integrated physical planning policy. It endorsed his programme for classifying and categorizing case studies, approved by an intergovernmental expert group meeting on the evaluation of costs and benefits of environmental protection measures which he had convened on 9 and 10 April 1979, and urged Governments to provide case studies showing new ideas and techniques in cost-benefit analysis.

Marine pollution

Mindful of the dangers posed to the marine environment by the shipping of oil and dangerous substances and of the effects on marine pollution of land-based pollution and the dumping of waste, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/183 of 18 December 1979, urged competent international institutions and organizations, in particular the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO), to expedite and intensify their activities relating to pollution prevention and determination of responsibility, in accordance with the work done on these questions by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. It called on States parties to the 1954 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil to discharge their obligations fully. It urged all States to examine the possibility of ratifying as soon as possible the international conventions and protocols designed to ensure better protection of the marine environment, improve navigational safety and guarantee the competence of crews, and to co-operate in implementing measures to combat marine pollution effectively, without prejudice to the results of the Law of the Sea Conference. The UNEP Governing Council and IMCO were asked to continue considering marine pollution problems.

This resolution was adopted without vote; it had been similarly approved on 5 December by the Second Committee. The text was based on a draft transmitted to the current session from the Assembly's 1978 session.⁶ Following consultations in 1979, a Committee Vice-Chairman submitted a number of amendments which the Committee approved. These added, among other things, preambular references to bearing in mind the effects of land-based pollution and waste dumping, to taking account -a Moroccan amendment would have had the Assembly take note with satisfaction - of progress of the Law of the Sea Conference regarding protection and preservation of the marine environment, and to bearing in mind work done by IMCO in training and certifying seafarers as well as, notably, the 1976 International Labour Organisation Convention concerning Minimum Standards in Merchant Ships.

All references to the Law of Sea Conference were added. Additional operative provisions made particular reference to IMCO in urging expedition and intensification of activities relating to pollution prevention. A call on States parties to the 1954 Convention on oil pollution to ensure that national legislation was stringent enough to have a genuine deterrent effect was replaced by a specific reference to article VI of that Convention.

A list of conventions was removed from a provision urging examination of the possibility of ratifying instruments on the marine environment and replaced by a general description of their purpose. Finally, the date for submission of a report on continued consideration of marine pollution problems was changed to 1981 and IMCO was included in that request as a contributor.

A second Moroccan amendment to the 1978 text would have, in addition to urging expedition and intensification of pollution-prevention activities, urged that similar attention be given to the problems of responsibility, including the determination thereof, and to the adoption of appropriate procedures for the payment of compensation for damage in this matter. The Moroccan amendments were not pressed to a vote.

An Intergovernmental Review Meeting of Mediterranean Coastal States, attended by 17 Governments, was held at Geneva from 5 to 10 February 1979 to discuss the future programme and financing of the Mediterranean Action Plan, a cost-sharing project of UNEP'S regional seas programme, begun in 1975 to carry out pollution monitoring and research projects.

Recognizing the importance of the Mediterranean Action Plan, the UNEP Governing Council on 3 May requested the Executive Director to maintain and strengthen, for 1980-1981, UNEP'S commitment to the Plan.

Environment conventions and protocols

The UNEP Executive Director submitted his annual report on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment to the Governing Council at its April/May 1979 session, and the Secretary-General transmitted it to the Assembly later in the year, pursuant to the Assembly's request of 9 December 1975⁷ that it be kept informed of the status of such instruments. The report gave information on developments during 1978 in respect of environment conventions and outlined action taken to keep the Council informed of the status of existing conventions and protocols. It also contained a supplement to the UNEP register of important conventions adopted since 1933 in this field, updated to 31 December 1978.

On 3 May, the Council asked the Executive Director to recommend to the Working Group of Experts on Environmental Law that it conclude as soon as possible its study of the legal aspects of off-shore mining and drilling carried out within the limits of national jurisdiction, prepare a list of priority areas in international environmental law, meet more often and consider ways to further the development of environmental law. The Council further requested the Executive Director to procure the co-operation of international law institutions and universities to study the areas selected by the Group.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/188 of 18 December 1979, on international cooperation in the field of the environment (see section above), invited Member States to ratify and implement the international conventions and protocols designed to protect the environment in every respect, and urged Governments to promote the conclusion of such instruments. By resolution 34/183 of the same date (see section on MARINE POLLUTION above), the Assembly called on States parties to the 1954 International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil to discharge their obligations under that Convention, in particular those contained in article VI, concerning penalties to be imposed for unlawful discharge of oil.

Interrelations of population, resources, environment and development

Conscious of the importance of the interrelations of population, resources, environment and development and of the need to stimulate research through dissemination of United Nations studies and other activities such as international seminars, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1979/49 of 1 August 1979, requested that, as part of the research activities of the organizations of the United Nations system, multidisciplinary studies, including comparative national and regional studies of such interrelations, be undertaken.

By resolution 1979/56 of 2 August (see section above on INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION ON THE ENVIRONMENT), the Council welcomed the important role played by UNEP in such research, and invited the Governing Council's views on action taken pursuant to the General Assembly's 1974 request⁸ that United Nations bodies help developing countries that so requested to undertake integrated studies on such interrelations at the country level.

The Assembly, by decision 34/450 of 19 December, drew the attention of United Nations bodies to a statement of the United Nations symposium on interrelations among resources, environment, population and development, held at Stockholm, Sweden, in August 1979, in connexion with their ongoing multidisciplinary work in these areas (see p. 787).

(For page references to texts of resolution 1979/49 and decision 34/450, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Other decisions of the Governing Council

A number of other decisions which the UNEP Governing Council adopted on 3 May 1979 concerned Earthwatch, the health of people and of the environment, energy, education and training, non-governmental organization activities and environmental conditions of the Palestinian people.

The Governing Council asked the Executive Director to convene an ad hoc meeting of Government experts to consult and report on mechanisms and procedures for conducting environmental assessment within Earthwatch, a global environment-assessment programme designed to give early warning of impending crises. It requested him to ensure UNEP'S continued co-operation, up to 1983, with a regional programme launched in 1978 under ECE auspices, in co-operation with the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), for monitoring and evaluating the long-range transport of air pollutants. It further asked him to provide national focal points for States, at their request, for the International Referral System, an information component of Earthwatch, and to strengthen the programme of seminars on environmental problems with a view to increasing the use of the System. It asked him to convey to WMO UNEP'S willingness to take responsibility for a study of the impact of climate on human activities, a subprogramme of WMO'S World Climate Programme, and to consult with WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions on developing a plan of action and research procedures on atmospheric carbon dioxide.

The Governing Council requested the Executive Director, in co-operation with United Nations organizations, to continue to pay particular attention to problems and needs in developing countries in the areas of sanitation, disposal and treatment of waste and vector-borne disease control, and asked him to study ways of strengthening the capabilities of these countries to formulate and implement training programmes in these areas.

Concerned about the future prospects of energy resources available to developing countries, the Council urged the Executive Director to promote more activities in this area, particularly those related to the development of renewable energy resources, energy conservation and the development of technologies for the production and use of energy. He was also urged to allocate substantial resources to support activities in this area, to initiate more pilot projects and training programmes, and to explore the possibility of helping developing countries to obtain bilateral and multilateral assistance for their energy needs.

The Council requested the Executive Director to ensure UNEP'S continued co-operation through 1981 with the International Centre for Training and Education in Environmental Sciences, and urged establishment within the Centre of a mechanism to ensure consultation and co-operation with Latin American countries to meet their environmental training needs more effectively. He was also asked to consult with Latin American Governments on the establishment of a system or integrated network of institutions carrying out high-level environmental activities, so as to combine their resources in providing environmental training and education.

The Council called on the Executive Director and UNEP member States to encourage the creation and growth of non-governmental organizations and their activities in the environment field. It also asked him to ensure an adequate assessment of and report on the environmental conditions of the Palestinian people in implementing an Assembly resolution of 18 December 1978 on their living conditions.⁹

Pledging Conference

On 6 November, at the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, States pledged contributions for 1980 to a number of United Nations programmes and funds, including UNEP. As at 30 June 1980, five States had pledged or paid a total of $47,213 to UNEP (see p. 555).

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the grave dangers posed to the marine environment by the shipping of oil and other dangerous substances, Mindful also of the effects of land-based pollution and the dumping of waste on marine pollution,

Recalling that the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization has adopted a number of comprehensive international conventions, recommendations, traffic separation schemes and codes of practice specifically for the purpose of enhancing maritime safety, ensuring efficiency of navigation and protecting the marine environment,

Recalling further the adoption during 1978 by the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization of additional international instruments providing for comprehensive standards dealing with tanker safety and pollution prevention, and also with training, certification and watch-keeping for seafarers.

Taking into account the significant progress achieved at the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea with regard to the protection and preservation of the marine environment.

Bearing in mind also the work done for many years by the International Labour Organisation and by the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization concerning training and certification for seafarers, notably the international Labour Organisation Convention concerning Minimum Standards in Merchant Ships, 1976, Regretting that the various measures to ensure the safety of navigation by the observance of the existing international regulations are not applied stringently by all States parties to those instruments.

- 4. Urges all States to co-operate in order to implement material measures for the effective combating of marine pollution, without prejudice to the results of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea with regard to marine pollution;
- 5. Requests the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consuitative Organization and the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to continue to consider the problems relating to marine pollution and to report thereon, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

Implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

On 3 May 1979, the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) adopted a resolution by which it called on Governments to consider contributing generously to a Special Account¹⁰ set up by the Secretary-General on 15 March 1979 for financing the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification adopted by the 1977 United Nations Conference on Desertification.¹¹

The Governing Council authorized the UNEP Executive Director, after consultations with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), to continue contributing to the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) -formerly the United Nations Sahelian Office - for UNEP/UNDP activities in connexion with their joint venture to co-ordinate United Nations efforts to assist the Sudano-Sahelian region in implementing the Plan of Action (see section below). It also authorized him, in co-operation with specialized agencies, to provide financial aid for-executing an Organization of African Unity (OAU) project for the preparation of a hydrogeological map of Africa, asking him to co-operate closely with African intergovernmental organizations to deepen awareness of and combat the desertification problem. The Council also noted the establishment of the Desertification Unit in the UNEP secretariat and endorsed the proposed role of the interagency Working Group on Desertification - convened by UNEP to ensure efficiency in planning, programming and executing projects developed within the framework of the Plan of Action which reported to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

The UNDP Governing Council on 28 June similarly endorsed the -modalities of the joint UNEP/UNDP venture and authorized financing of UNDP'S share of the costs, after taking note of a report of the UNDP Administrator on implementation of the Plan of Action (see also p. 936).

Having considered the report of the UNEP Governing Council, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1979/56 of 2 August 1979 (see subchapter above under INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION ON THE ENVIRONMENT), welcomed UNEP'S activities relating to the implementation of the Plan of Action.

The Secretary-General, in an October report to the General Assembly, transmitted an analysis and summary of the views of States on measures and means of financing its implementation. The Governments had responded to an invitation for their comments on a 1978 study by a group of specialists in the international financing of projects12 submitted to the UNEP Governing Council, addressed to all States pursuant to an Assembly request of 15 December 1978.¹³ The 29 responding States were Argentina, Australia, the Bahamas, Benin, Botswana, Canada, Chile, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Guatemala, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Seychelles, Singapore, Spain, the Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Switzerland, Thailand, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta and Zambia.

Government attitudes were basically of three types: those generally supporting the measures and means of financing proposed in the study, with the possibility of further clarification; those opposing the measures on grounds that existing resources and channels of assistance would permit the problem to be satisfactorily addressed; and those which felt the proposals called for further study.

The Secretary-General concluded that the Assembly might wish to identify proposals in the study and Government recommendations that warranted further consideration, and ask for a report on them, based on a further study to be prepared by high-level specialists.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/184 of 18 December 1979, stressed the urgency of implementing the Plan of Action. Noting with concern the slow progress towards that end and the lack of adequate resources, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the opening of the Special Account for that purpose, bearing in mind its voluntary nature. Noting also with concern that no contributions had been received, it called on Governments and organizations to contribute generously.

By other provisions, the Assembly expressed appreciation to UNEP for its work as co-ordinator for implementing the Plan of Action, and called on donor countries and interested organizations to participate in the work of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control - UNEP'S main vehicle for mobilizing funds-and to support projects submitted to them through that Group.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the UNEP Governing Council, to prepare for it a report based on a study to be prepared by a group of high-level specialists in international financing to be convened by the Executive Director. It was to contain: a complete inventory of ideas and proposals for extrabudgetary financing; a financial plan and analysis of the costs of a programme to stop desertification; methods for mobilizing domestic resources; a survey of the practicality of obtaining loans on a concessionary basis; a study of the feasibility of creating a public international corporation to attract investment for financing projects with noncommercial rates of return; and means to encourage the participation of foundations in research and training.

The text of this resolution was submitted by India, on behalf of the Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where it was approved on 12 December by 100 votes to 0, with 21 abstentions. The Assembly adopted it by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 21 abstentions.

The sponsors accepted and the Committee approved a USSR oral amendment by which the Assembly, in taking note of the opening of the Special Account, bore in mind its voluntary nature. The voluntary nature of the funding was also stressed when Bulgaria, on behalf also of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, explained their positive votes. The sponsors also orally revised their text to request the Secretary-General, in consultation with the UNEP Governing Council, to submit the report on the study to the Assembly, rather than invite the Council itself to submit it.

Finland (on behalf of the Nordic countries) and Spain said they had abstained because of reference to the Special Account, in keeping with their position of principle in opposition to a proliferation of special-purpose funds. Moreover, the Nordic countries did not consider that making a complete inventory of ideas and proposals for financing fell within UNEP'S sphere of competence and were not convinced of the utility of a study of the feasibility of creating a corporation to attract investments.

Ireland (speaking on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Community) and the United States said they, too, had abstained because of the references to the Special Account. They did not feel it was the best way of attracting funds, which should be obtained through existing bilateral and multilateral channels. The United States also considered that requesting another study before properly evaluating the previous one was imprudent.

Restoration and improvement of the Fouta-Djallon massif

By resolution 34/185, the General Assembly noted a resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of OAU at Monrovia, Liberia, in July 1979 concerning the Fouta-Djallon massif in western Africa, the source of all rivers in the subregion. By the OAU resolution, the UNEP Executive Director had been requested to integrate a pilot project for the rehabilitation of the massif, affected by drought and deforestation, with a transnational project for the establishment of a green belt to the south of the Sahara. The aim of the pilot project was the integrated biological planning of the Fouta-Djallon catchment areas with a view to stabilizing the flow of the African rivers whose headwaters were situated in the massif.

The Assembly invited the Governing Council of UNEP to consider favourably the inclusion of the pilot project in its programme of action against desertification. The Secretary-General was to report on this matter in 1980.

The resolution was submitted in the Second Committee by India, on behalf of the Member States belonging to the Group of 77, and cosponsored by France. The Second Committee approved the text without vote on 16 November and the Assembly similarly adopted it on 18 December.

Measures for the benefit of the Sudano-Sahelian region

The Secretary-General submitted two reports to the General Assembly in 1979 on United Nations assistance efforts in the Sudano-Sahelian region, as requested by the Assembly on 15 December 1978.¹⁴

By the first of these, he reported on measures taken by United Nations bodies for the benefit of the region, notably the signing on 8 January

1979 by the executive heads of UNEP and UNDP of a Memorandum of Understanding establishing the modalities of a joint UNDP/UNEP venture to facilitate the discharge by UNSO of its enlarged mandate, by which co-ordination of United Nations efforts in desertification control, in the 15 countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region was included among its functions. The Memorandum spelled out the legislative authority of the joint venture, the role and objectives of UNSO and its functions with respect to its additional desertification-control activities. The report commented on the administrative programme and financial support being provided and coordinated by the two Programmes, and noted an UNSO meeting at Dakar, Senegal, from 30 May to 1 June, with organizations of the United Nations system and resident representatives in the 15 countries to discuss UNSO's new mandate and ways to ensure collaborative action.

The Secretary-General also submitted a UNEP report which updated, to August 1979, information submitted to the Governing Council at its April/May session. Included was an account of action taken to implement the UNDPAJNEP joint venture, of UNSO relations with UNDP and UNEP, of the cost of the expansion of UNSO'S mandate, and of planning, programme and resource-mobilization efforts. The report also recounted recent legislative action by the two Governing Councils of the Programmes and by the Economic and Social Council.

By resolution 34/187, adopted without vote on 18 December, the Assembly commended the executive heads of UNEP and UNDP for the way they had established the joint venture and asked the two Programmes to continue to support UNSO and help it carry out its additional responsibilities at a level commensurate with the region's pressing needs. It noted with satisfaction UNSO's progress in assisting Governments on behalf of UNEP in implementing the Plan of Action, as well as the efforts of the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations and programmes, especially through the interagency Working Group on Desertification, to ensure the effectiveness of the aid provided.

The Assembly invited the UNEP Governing Council to examine and report back to it in 1980 on the possibility of including Djibouti, Guinea and Guinea-Bissau in the list of countries which received aid through UNSO in implementation of the Plan. It urged Governments, United Nations organizations, other intergovernmental bodies and private organizations and individuals to respond favourably to aid requests from the region's Governments. The UNEP Governing Council was asked to continue to report annually through the Economic and Social Council on implementation in the region of the Plan of Action.

The resolution was sponsored by 52 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) in the Second Committee, where it was approved without vote on 5 December.

The sponsors orally added the provision containing the invitation to the Governing Council to consider including the three countries in the list of those receiving assistance through UNSO.

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on additional measures and means of financing for the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Stressing the urgency of implementing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in view of the acute seriousness of the problem in many countries, particularly developing countries, and of the limited resources which it has thus far been possible to mobilize to combat desertification,

- 1. Takes note with satisfaction of the opening by the Secretary-General on 15 March 1979 of the Special Account for financing the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, bearing in mind the voluntary nature of that account;
- Notes with concern the lack of adequate financial resources for the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification and the slow progress achieved thus far;
- 3. Also notes with concern that no contribution to the Special Account has been made thus far;
- 4. Calls upon donor Governments and financing organizations to contribute generously to the Special Account, with a view to accelerating the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification:
- 5. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Environment Programme for its work in co-operation with Governments and interested organizations of the United Nations system within the framework of its responsibilities as co-ordinator for the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;
- 6. Calls upon donor countries and interested organizations to participate actively in the work of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control and to support the projects submitted to them through the Consultative Group;
- 7. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a report, on the basis of a study to be prepared by a group of high-level specialists in international financing to be convened by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, which will deal with:
- (a) A complete inventory of relevant ideas and proposals put forward in the United Nations system of possible new ways and means to finance programmes of multilateral organizations at the world level, additional to regular assessed budgets and conventional extrabudgetary resources;
- (b) A financial plan and analysis outlining the components and costs of a programme to stop further desertification and identifying what is already being financed and what additional resources may be needed to meet the minimum objectives of stopping the spread of desertification;
 - (c) Methods for the mobilization of domestic resources;
- (d) The practicality of obtaining loans from Governments and world capital markets on a concessionary basis;
- (e) The feasibility of the creation of a public international corporation which would attract investments from countries as well as institutions and would provide financing for suitable anti-desertification projects with non-commercial rates of return;
- (f) The means for encouraging the active participation of foundations in the financing of anti-desertification training and research programmes.

Chapter XIV

Questions concerning human settlements

The second session of the Commission on Human Settlements-its first substantive session-was held at Nairobi, Kenya, from 26 March to 6 April 1979. The Commission called for additional funding for human settlements activities, both by national Governments at home and by international organizations to assist developing countries.

Three resolutions recommended by the Commission were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in July and adopted by the General Assembly in December. They called for the strengthening of human settlements activities (resolution 34/116), the preparation of periodic reports on such activities (resolution 34/114)) and the integration of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements, located at Vancouver, Canada, with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) at Nairobi (resolution 34/115). The Assembly also approved additional resources for regional human settlements activities by the United Nations Secretariat (resolution 34/229).

The year 1979 was the first full year of operation of the Habitat Centre, which was established in 1978 as an outgrowth of recommendations by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held in 1976 at Vancouver.

United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat)

During 1979, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) continued to implement its 1978-1979 work programme, which was organized according to the six subject areas of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, 1976: settlement policies and strategies; settlement planning; shelter, infrastructure and services; land; public participation; and institutions and management.

The Centre continued to give high priority to direct assistance to member Governments through technical co-operation, research and training, and the dissemination of information. It spent $12.5 million on technical co-operation, with most of the resources coming from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Smaller portions of this total came from the United Nations regular budget and from voluntary contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, a component of the Centre.

During the year, the number of countries served by the Centre increased from 47 to 57. The Centre administered 26 projects: 6 in Africa, 13 in Asia and the Pacific, 3 in Europe and 4 in the Middle East. The number of small-scale projects in Africa and Asia rose, due to the establishment of several preparatory assistance and pre-investment projects which were to be followed by full-scale projects.

The Centre collaborated with the African Development Bank and the Commonwealth Development Corporation to organize the establishment of a regional housing finance corporation (Shelter-Afrique) and held discussions with the Asian Development Bank on the possibility of establishing a regional housing finance entity or Asian housing bank.

The Centre published a wide range of studies and reports, often in co-sponsorship with other organizations. These included publications on science and technology in human settlements, human settlements and the new international development strategy, a review of rent control in developing countries which provided information on non-conventional financing for low-income housing, and a preliminary edition of a directory of information and documentation centres for human settlements. Several training manuals were also published-on the formulation of national settlement policies and strategies, improvement of slum and squatter areas, and improvement of low-income settlements.

The Centre was associated with four regional meetings on human settlements finance and management in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, Asia and the Pacific, and Western Asia. These were held at Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), Mexico City (Mexico), Manila (Philippines) and Al-Ain (United Arab Emirates). An international conference on the financing and management of rural human settlements was held in Spain in October, a second meeting of African experts on building materials and construction industries took place at Addis Ababa in July, an International Council for Building Research Studies and Documentation seminar on maintenance and modernization of buildings was held at Rotterdam, Netherlands, in September, and a symposium on new building materials and components took place at Baghdad, Iraq, in October. A preparatory meeting for the establishment of a human settlements information network in Latin America occurred in March in Mexico, and Bangkok, Thailand, was the site of an intergovernmental meeting on human settlements management and information, held in September.

The transfer of the Centre to Nairobi from United Nations Headquarters in New York was completed in 1979 with the establishment of administrative and support services there in October.

Programme and resources of the Centre

The Commission on Human Settlements, at its March/April session at Nairobi, reviewed reports by the Executive Director of the Centre on its current work programme, proposals for the 1980-1981 work programme, and its human and financial resources and technical cooperation capability. The proposed work programme emphasized national, regional and subregional action, limiting global activities basically to support for those levels and assistance to the Commission.

On 4 April, the Commission endorsed the programme of work for 1980-1981, took note of the estimated cost of its implementation, and requested the Executive Director to seek further voluntary contributions from Governments and financial institutions for its implemention.

On the same date, the Commission adopted a resolution endorsing the functional integration with the Centre of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. The Commission also endorsed proposals by the Executive Director, as modified by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on the allocation of the Foundation's resources for the period 1 July 1979 to 30 June 1980. According to these proposals, $775,000 was allocated for programme support costs to staff and otherwise to maintain the Foundation at its current level of activity, $281,600 was to be carried over from an existing reserve fund, and the rest of the Foundation's resources, estimated at $894,700, was availabale for project commitments. The Foundation's total expenditure and commitments for this 12-month period were estimated at $2,346,200, to be financed entirely by voluntary contributions.

The need for additional resources to implement the Centre's work programme at the regional level was the subject of General Assembly resolution 34/229, adopted on 20 December. Noting that the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1980-1981 did not contain any request for additional resources for the Centre for deployment to the regions, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure the immediate availability of additional resources to implement the work programme at the regional level.

To implement this resolution, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved on 18 December, without vote, the addition of $140,000 to the 1980-1981 programme budget, to pay for temporary staff for expanded human settlements activities in the regional commissions for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and Western Asia.

Resolution 34/229 was adopted by a recorded vote of 122 to 10, with 6 abstentions. The text, proposed by India on behalf of United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was approved by the Fifth Committee on 13 December by 72 votes to 9, with 7 abstentions. The draft resolution was originally submitted to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, but that Committee decided on 1 December to refer it to the Fifth Committee.

International co-operation in the field of human settlements

On the recommendation of the Commission on Human Settlements, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions on 14 December dealing with specific human settlements activities. The resolutions concerned reports and information services on human settlements, and the strengthening of national and international activities in this field. The Commission's resolutions were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council before the Assembly adopted them, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had similarly approved them on 23 November.

By resolution 34/114, the Assembly decided that the United Nations should issue periodically two sets of reports on human settlements. The first, to be issued every five years, would be a "Global report on human settlements," replacing the quinquennial housing survey called for by the Assembly in 1969.² The second, to be issued every two years, would cover financial and other assistance for human settlements provided to and among developing countries, the human settlements activities of the United Nations system, collaboration between the Habitat Centre and non-governmental organizations, and human settlements activities of intergovernmental organizations outside the United Nations system. The first biennial report would be prepared in 1982, preceded by an interim report in 1981.

In approving the issuance of a global report on human settlements, the Assembly said it should follow the objectives, contents and format set out in a February report to the Commission by the Centre's Executive Director. He had suggested that the global report should provide information on the global and regional conditions of settlements, encourage and maintain interest in the evolving nature and the significance of settlements, and update and synthesize information generated by the Centre's own activities and other sources. The report would consist of an analytical part and a statistical annex.

By resolution 34/115, the Assembly decided that the functions and transferable assets of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements, known as Vision Habitat, should be transferred to the Habitat Centre on the expiration of the agreement between the Government of Canada and the United Nations on the operations of Vision Habitat. Vision Habitat had been established at Vancouver following the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements held there in 1976, and had been financed by Canada. The agreement on Vision Habitat was due to expire on 31 March 1980.

The Assembly also recommended that steps be taken to establish a unified information service in the Habitat Centre, comprising a range of information and communications skills and capabilities, including an audio-visual component. It appealed to States and organizations to make contributions for the continuation of these activities, and requested the Centre's Executive Director to report to the Commission on Human Settlements at its next session on progress in establishing the information service.

By resolution 34/116, the Assembly urged Member States, within the context of their national priorities, to devote a larger share of national resources to strengthening human settlements activities as vehicles of economic and social change. It suggested that they consider whether an increased allocation could be made for human settlements in their multilateral and bilateral co-operation programmes, particularly those financed by UNDP, and requested them to report every two years to the Commission on $^{^{2}}$ See Y.U.N., 1969, p. 448, resolution 2598 (XXIV) of 16 December 1969.

Human Settlements on progress made in implementing the recommendations for national action made by the Habitat Conference.

Before approving the draft resolution on this subject recommended by the Commission, the Second Committee made two changes, as a result of oral amendments by Venezuela. First, it deleted a preambular paragraph stating that new constraints on energy supplies and natural resources would force most countries to encourage more economical urban and rural living patterns. Second, it added the phrase "within the context of their national priorities" to the operative paragraph by which the Assembly urged Member States to devote a larger share of resources to human settlements.

Under its agenda item on human settlements, the Assembly also adopted resolution 34/113, requesting a comprehensive report on the social and economic impact of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Arab territories (for details, see p. 398; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

On 4 April, the Commission adopted one resolution and two decisions which did not call for Assembly action.

By the resolution, it requested the Executive Director to consult with the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America with a view to setting up an intergovernmental committee on human settlements, establishing a support unit, and arranging to secure resources for regional and subregional human settlements programmes.

By one decision, the Commission deferred to its next session the establishment of a subcommittee on criteria for selecting the nongovernmental organizations that would be authorized to participate in its work.

By the other, it requested the Executive Director: to explore with intergovernmental organizations outside the United Nations system ways to establish or strengthen co-operation and information exchange; to prepare for the Commission a report on the topic and an inventory and analysis of the major programmes and projects of the principal organizations; to establish close working relationships with global and regional financial institutions and regional commissions, and to make arrangements with them for participation at meetings and exchange of documentation; and to prepare a semi-annual calendar of human settlements conferences.

The resolution and decisions adopted by the Commission at its second session were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1976/46, adopted without vote on 27 July. This action was taken on the recommendation of the Council's First (Economic) Committee, which on 23 July similarly approved a draft resolution sponsored by Argentina, Finland, India, Indonesia, Italy, Kenya, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, the Sudan, Sweden, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), at its seventh session held from 18 April to 4 May at Nairobi, noted with appreciation, by a resolution on programme policy and implementation, the close cooperation established between UNEP and the Habitat Centre.

Resolution 34/115, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/793, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/115 of 16 December 1976, by which it established the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre for Human Settlements, Recalling further its resolution 32/162 of 19 December 1977, by which it established the United Nations Centre on Human Settlements (Habitat), entrusted it with responsibility for promoting the further and continued use of audio-visual material relating to human settlements and decided that the Director of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements (Vision Habitat) should report to the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements.

Recognizing that the effective dissemination of information, including the use of audio-visual techniques and materials, will help accelerate the process of development through the effective and rapid dissemination among policy-makers, experts and the public in all countries of information on the need for new awareness and on new approaches, methods and techniques for improving human settlements, especially their social, economic and environmental aspects, as well as through their increasing use for project-monitoring, education, training and public information,

Noting that the agreement between the Government of Canada and the United Nations on the operations of the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements expires on 31 March 1980,

Convinced that the programme developed by the United Nations Audio-Visual Information Centre on Human Settlements should be continued, Noting that the audio-visual activities have been fully integrated into the work programme of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements,

- 1. Recommends that the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) should take the necessary steps to establish a unified information service within the Centre to comprise a suitable range of information and communications skills and capabilities, including an audio-visual component at an appropriate level;

Draft resolution, as proposed by Commission on Human Settlements in its resolution 2/6 and recommended by Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1979/46 for adoption by General Assembly, and as orally revised by Venezuela, approved without vote by Second Committee on 23 November 1979, meeting 48.

A/34/793. Report of Second Committee, draft resolution IV.

Resolution 34/116, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/793, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Noting that in the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its second session Member States are called upon to deal with human settlements programmes as an integral and important element of national development plans,

Recognizing that the goals of the new international economic order encompass both general economic improvements in developing countries and the achievement of social equity in the distribution of benefits from economic growth,

Convinced that human settlements activities can make an important contribution to achieving both those goals of the new international economic order,

Recognizing that one of the most urgent needs in developing countries is to upgrade the living and working conditions of low-income and disadvantaged groups in both rural and urban areas, Convinced that human settlements programmes provide a direct mechanism for redressing imbalances in access to shelter, utility services, health care, education and community amenities, and hence can have a significant impact on the immediate, day-to-day needs of low-income and disadvantaged groups,

Convinced that human settlements programmes offer an effective tool for generating the, energy-conserving and resource-conserving community patterns which will be called for.

- Urges Member States, within the context of their national priorities, to devote a larger share of national resources to the strengthening of human settlements activities as vehicles of economic and social change;
- 2. Suggests that Member States should examine multilateral and bilateral co-operation programmes, particularly those financed by the United Nations Development Programme, to determine whether an increased allocation can be made to the human settlements sector;
- 3. Requests Member States to report every two years to the Commission on Human Settlements on the progress made in implementing the recommendations for national action adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements and, where possible, on the level and sources of international and national funding being devoted to human settlements activities.

Regional economic and social activities

Economic Commission for Europe

At its thirty-fourth session, held at Geneva from 27 March to 27 April 1979, the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) approved a programme of work for 1979-1980 and endorsed in principle its long-term programme for 1979-1983. The Commission reaffirmed the determination of member Governments to work towards implementation of the topics in the Final Act of the 1975 Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) requiring multilateral co-operation in the fields of economics, science, technology and the environment. The ECE Executive Secretary accordingly participated in preparations for a 1980 Scientific Forum and in a Meeting of Experts on the Mediterranean, held at Valletta, Malta, in February/March 1979. The Commission asked him to continue his participation, if invited to do so, in activities resulting from those meetings.

The Commission reiterated its previous call to its subsidiary bodies to consider in their work programmes the interests of member countries which were developing from an economic point of view.

In his report on ECE activities in 1979, the Executive Secretary discussed a USSR proposal to hold all-European or inter-State congresses on co-operation in the major areas of environment, transport and energy. A resolution on the work and future activities of ECE in this regard was adopted by the Commission. Observations were made in the report concerning gaps- particularly in activities related to the transfer of technology. Other matters covered included the concentration and integration of the Commission's programmes of work, with special reference to the field of science and technology, and general energy questions. On the suggestion of the Executive Secretary, the Commission decided to select environmental activities as the next major topic for in-depth consideration.

A high-level meeting within the framework of ECE on the protection of the environment was held in November.

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy, a new body created by the Commission on an ad hoc basis, held its first session at the end of October.

Other decisions taken by the Commission at its thirty-fourth session sought to advance ECE work on energy, water problems, co-operation in the field of science and technology, including engineering industries, better use of ECE resources, studies of trade in chemical products and of economic consequences of migrant labour in the region, co-operation on new technologies of coal extraction and utilization, economic co-operation in the Mediterranean, automation, standardization, and ECE contributions to preparatory work for the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women and the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s).

The ECE secretariat made contributions to the three complementary activities related to the preparation and formulation of the new strategy, through the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination's Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives and the Committee for Development Planning. The secretariat also contributed data and analyses to the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs for its long-term studies, prepared demographic research studies, in particular a study of the causes of recent fertility declines in Europe and an analysis of data from the World Fertility Survey undertaken in conjunction with the Population Division of the United Nations Secretariat, other regional commissions, the International Statistical Institute and the International Union for the Scientific Study of Population.

Problems of the environment

The high-level meeting within the framework of ECE on the protection of the environment, held at Geneva from 13 to 15 November, culminated more than three years of preparatory work. The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems examined in depth, through expert groups, selected topics pertaining to longrange transboundary air pollution, low- and nonwaste technology and reutilization and recycling of wastes, transboundary water pollution, protection of flora and fauna, and control of toxic substances and wastes. The Senior Advisers completed the substantive work on a draft resolution and Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution and a draft Declaration on Low- and Non-waste Technology and Reutilization and Recycling of Wastes, and transmitted them to the Commission in April. At the highlevel meeting, those drafts were formally adopted and the Convention was opened for signature following its adoption. There were 35 signatories before the conclusion of the meeting. They agreed to start its implementation on an interim basis.

The Convention emphasized the implementation and further development of the co-operative programme for the monitoring and evaluation of the long-range transmission of air pollutants in Europe, carried out for the past two years by ECE in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the World Meteorological Organization.

The Declaration reflected the recognition that long-term policies for the protection of the environment must be based on preventive measures. Its recommendation opened up the potential for intergovernmental co-operation.

On 12 December, the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee of the General Assembly was orally informed that the participants in the high-level meeting had formally requested that the Assembly be notified of the conclusions of the meeting, including the Convention and the Declaration. The Executive Secretary of ECE had also been asked to inform the 1980 Madrid meeting of participating CSCE States of the results of the meeting, including its report and the texts of the documents adopted.

By resolution 34/188 of 18 December, on international co-operation in the field of the environment, the Assembly noted the results of the high-level meeting (see p. 691).

In the field of environmental planning, the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems sponsored or co-sponsored seminars on integrated physical, socio-economic and environmental planning (Bergen, Norway, 18-22 June), on environmental impact assessment (Villach, Austria, 24-29 September) and, as a regional contribution to a UNEP global project, on alternative patterns of development and life-styles (Ljubljana, Yugoslavia, 3-7 December). The conclusions and recommendations formed an environmental contribution to the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade.

In April, ECE decided to revise the terms of reference of its Committee on Housing, Building and Planning. It' was to initiate and participate in housing, building and planning activities to encourage and support Government action in the field, undertake studies and research on problems and policies, collect, evaluate, compare and disseminate statistical data on regulations and standards, draw up policy and strategy recommendations for member countries, provide a forum for exchange of experiences, and review and assess the state of human settlements in the region. The Committee organized, at Geneva from 2 to 4 May, a symposium on urban renewal and the quality of life and, at Warsaw, Poland, from 14 to 18 May, a seminar on mechanization in the building industry. The Committee held a seminar on the improvement of housing and its surroundings at The Hague, Netherlands, from 15 to 19 October. Publications were completed on land-use planning and policies and on major long-term perspectives for human settlements in the ECE region.

The group of experts on housing, building and planning problems and policies in the countries of southern Europe, at its 28 May to 2 June session held at Varna and Sofia, Bulgaria, discussed the relationship between housing and tourism development and prepared a publication on the quality of life and human settlements, with examples of protection and improvement in southern European countries.

Under the co-operative programme for monitoring and evaluating the long-range transmission of air pollutants in Europe, 48 stations were in operation in 15 countries by the end of 1979. Samples for the third and fourth interlaboratory tests were distributed by the Chemical Co-ordinating Centre to some 20 laboratories participating in the tests. The results showed an improvement in analytical work.

At the end of 1979, 23 ECE Governments had nominated national focal points for the compilation of a compendium on low- and non-waste technology. Thirty-four monographs were evaluated for inclusion in the compendium. A third meeting of focal points was recommended for the evaluation of additional monographs, as well as those found to require further work.

The Committee on Water Problems completed preparation of the ECE Declaration of Policy on Prevention and Control of Water Pollution, including Transboundary Pollution, for adoption by the Commission. The Declaration was based on 14 principles serving as guidelines for the formulation and implementation of national water policies as well as for international cooperation among ECE member countries. The Committee sponsored a seminar on rational utilization of water from 17 to 22 September at Leipzig, German Democratic Republic.

Emphasis was put on co-operation in the management and use of shared water resources and the development of integrated land-use planning, together with improved water legislation and suitable economic incentives, as part of interrelated measures in a national long-term policy directed towards the reduction of existing water pollution and its prevention.

Energy

The Commission decided in April to establish on an ad hoc basis a new principal subsidiary body-the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy- to undertake an extensive exchange of information, views and experience on general energy problems, to elaborate a programme of work and to examine problems related to a possible high-level meeting on energy within the framework of ECE.

The first session of the Senior Advisers was held from 29 October to 1 November. Representatives provided information on energy resources and national objectives and policies. There was universal agreement on the overriding importance of reducing the growth rate of energy consumption through conservation and diversification policies. It was also generally recognized that energy problems could not be solved through national measures alone, but that international co-operation, including more intensive co-operation within the ECE region, was imperative.

The Senior Advisers examined data on energy resources and demand, and approved a detailed questionnaire to obtain more information.

Further work was done on projections in the energy field. Preliminary papers on energy supply and demand as well as investment requirements were submitted to the Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments. An energy balance model for the ECE region was scheduled to be completed during 1980.

A symposium on the gasification and liquefaction of coal, held at Katowice, Poland, from 23 to 27 April, reviewed progress and future prospects in coal conversion.
