The ECE secretariat co-operated with the Centre for Natural Resources, Energy and Transport in organizing a United Nations symposium on world coal prospects at Katowice from 15 to 23 October and submitted a report on environmental problems arising from the coal industry, as well as five papers describing the work of the Coal Committee in the fields dealt with by the symposium.

The group of experts on the utilization and preparation of solid fuels, in co-operation with the group of experts on coal statistics, continued work on the international ECE coal classification.

The Committee on Electric Power continued work on problems of planning and operating large power systems, on electric power stations, and on the relationship between electricity and the environment. Progress was achieved in work on the interconnexion of electric power transmission systems in the Balkan countries. A symposium on the prospects of hydroelectric schemes under the new energy situation and on related problems took place at Athens, Greece, from 5 to 8 November.

The Committee on Gas continued its work on natural gas resources, transport and storage, and distribution and utilization of gas. A seminar on liquefied natural gas peak shaving was held at Washington, D. C., from 5 to 9 March.

Long-term perspectives

With completion of the first stage in the development of an over-all economic perspective for the ECE region up to 1990, the Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments as well as other principal subsidiary bodies engaged in a concentrated examination of individual economic sectors during 1979.

The Senior Economic Advisers organized a seminar on forms and orientations of international co-operation in relation to long-term growth patterns, at Warsaw from 15 to 18 May. It was stressed that, along with economic development, trade patterns had shown a remarkable shift from goods where comparative advantages based on relative endowments of natural resources, labour or capital were predominant towards skill-, research- and technology-intensive goods, requiring the expansion of markets and the achievement of economies of scale in order to keep down unit costs.

Three macro-economic models (for North America, European market economies and centrally planned economies) were prepared and discussed by the Senior Economic Advisers. These models, together with sectoral projections, also served as a major contribution to a global project on long-term development objectives under study at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

Trade and industrial co-operation

The Committee on the Development of Trade continued its efforts to identify and reduce or eliminate obstacles to trade, providing a basis for study of the longer-term prospects for the expansion of intraregional trade. The relationship between short-term tendencies and long-term prospects for the development and diversification of, and the factors most likely to determine, East-West exchanges were examined at an ad hoc meeting of trade experts to consider the trade aspects of the over-all economic perspective for the ECE region up to 1990, convened by the Committee in association with the Senior Economic Advisers from 8 to 10 October. The meeting sought to understand better the problems and opportunities to which national commercial policies and business activities would have to be adjusted.

Work on the identification and elimination of obstacles to the development of trade was advanced in 1979 by the issuance of an up-to-date and consolidated inventory, drawn up on the basis of notifications from ECE Governments. The inventory listed obstacles to the expansion of exports and replies and explanations furnished by countries in which such obstacles were reported.

Industrial co-operation received special attention at the fifth ECE seminar on East-West trade promotion, marketing and business contacts, held at Poznan, Poland, from 24 to 26 April. The seminar provided a forum for an exchange of views and experience on methods and techniques of market entry for industrial products.

Four major recommendations intended to facilitate maritime- transport document and import clearance procedures, as well as to simplify requirements for signature/authentication on trade documents and shipping marks, were agreed in 1979 by the working party on facilitation of international trade procedures.

The Commission in April invited additional member Governments to answer questionnaires which sought information for a feasibility study on creating a multilateral system for the notification of laws and regulations concerning foreign trade and changes therein.

Science and technology

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology completed work on a manual on licensing procedures in ECE member countries. This publication, to which 20 countries contributed national chapters, aimed at assisting those involved in negotiating licensing agreements.

A project was undertaken by the Senior Advisers in co-operation with the Conference of European Statisticians and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Member countries were asked to respond to a questionnaire which set out to identify indicators useful in measuring the international transfer of technology.

In addition, ECE asked the Senior Advisers at their 1980 meeting to take into account, as appropriate, the results of the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 633) as well as recommendations which resulted from ECE's preparatory work for the Conference.

A seminar on co-operative technological forecasting in the field of solar energy was held in the Canary Islands (Spain) from 2 to 6 July. This seminar laid the foundation for new co-operative initiatives which might be undertaken by ECE and which might have a wider application to technological forecasting in other advanced or high-technology areas.

Industry

The Steel Committee, at its session from 29 to 31 October, decided to undertake two studies on a strategy for energy use in the iron and steel industry, and on the evolution of the-specific consumption of steel.

In April, ECE recommended that the Chemical Industry Committee explore problems of the pharmaceutical industry related to safety requirements and examine ways these problems could be dealt with in the ECE framework.

A seminar on forecasting, planning and programming in the chemical industry, held from 10 to 14 September at Warsaw, provided an opportunity for countries with different socioeconomic systems to exchange experience and compare operational techniques and approaches. Particular emphasis was given to modern concepts of modelling and computer simulation.

A seminar on computer-aided design systems as an integrated part of industrial production, held at Geneva from 14 to 17 May, demonstrated that computer graphics and interactive display systems had considerable impact on traditional work processes and that the trend would spread with the technological development of both hardware and software.

A seminar on development and use of industrial handling equipment was held from 3 to 8 September at Sofia.

Transport

The work accomplished by the Inland Transport Committee and its subsidiary bodies reflected ECE's well established role in reviewing transport problems and policies in the region and in developing international instruments and technical regulations affecting international transport.

The co-operation established with the United Nations Development Programme for the implementation of projects on the Trans-European North-South Motorway, a feasibility study of a navigable waterway between the Danube River and the Aegean Sea, and a proposed project for a survey of transport problems connected with the development of transport through and around the Mediterranean contributed to research in this area.

Substantive work on a fundamental revision of the European Code for Inland Navigation with a view to unifying or harmonizing of its rules was begun, and progress was made on the elaboration of uniform technical requirements for inland waterway vessels to be applied equally by all interested European countries.

A comprehensive study of safety aspects of pleasure navigation was concluded with a view to establishing recommendations on the maximum number of persons permitted on board pleasure craft.

Statistics

The Commission was increasingly involved in work on international comparisons. That work was carried out within the framework of the United Nations International Comparison Project, by comparing the per capita quantity of gross domestic product of different countries and also the purchasing power of their currencies. The fourth phase of that project was under preparation and included more than 20 countries from the ECE region.

The Conference of European Statisticians meeting from 25 to 29 June gave high priority to the development and harmonization of statistics of energy needed for national and international purposes. A framework for a system of general energy statistics was being elaborated.

A seminar on integrated statistical information systems and related matters was held at Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, from 10 to 14 September.

Agriculture and timber

A symposium on the effects of air-borne pollution on vegetation was held at Warsaw from 20 to 24 August under the auspices of the Committee on Agricultural Problems and the Timber Committee, with the support of UNEP and in cooperation with the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems.

A symposium on economic and technological aspects of sugar beet production was held at Kiev, Ukrainian SSR, from 17 to 21 September. The symposium assessed recent advances in breeding, cultivation practices, mechanization and storage, and the use of leaves and beet byproducts in animal feeding.

The joint Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations/ECE working party on agrarian structure and farm rationalization, meeting from 1 to 5 October, stressed the economic efficiency of the main categories of farms with reference to cereals, milk and pork production, providing insights into possible economies of scale and factors influencing efficiency.

A seminar on the utilization of tropical hardwoods, held at Amsterdam, Netherlands, from 15 to 18 May, brought together producers, exporters, importers and users of tropical hardwood and research workers. The Timber Committee continued to monitor the changing patterns of tropical timber markets and utilization. A seminar on mechanization and techniques of thinning operations was held at Nancy, France, from 27 to 31 August and a symposium on economic and technical developments in the furniture industry was held at Poznan from 5 to 9 November.

Role of women in the economic evolution of the ECE region

A seminar was held from 9 to 12 July in Paris, under ECE auspices, as a regional contribution to the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women. The seminar concentrated on the structure of employment, education and training, and time management. A study on the economic role of women in the ECE region was being revised for publication and presentation as a Conference background document.

Decision by the Economic and Social Council

On 3 August, by decision 1979/70, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of ECE for the period 23 April 1978 to 27 April 1979, of the views expressed during the discussion, of the resolutions and decisions adopted by ECE and of the ECE programme of work. The Council adopted this decision, without vote, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee which, on 30 July, had similarly approved the text as submitted by ECE.

Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific

The thirty-fifth session of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) was held at Manila, Philippines, from 5 to 16 March, 1979. The Commission endorsed programme changes for 1979 and the work programme and priorities for 1980-1981. Its membership expanded to 43 with the admission of the New Hebrides and Niue as associate members; its terms of reference were also amended to take account of the admission of Fiji and Solomon Islands as full members.

In his policy statement, the ESCAP Executive Secretary observed that the fluctuations in the international economy during the 1970s had revealed the vulnerability of the region to external market forces. Although ESCAP developing countries had adjusted well, that situation continued to pose major problems of short-term economic management which had diverted attention from longer-term issues of development. He indicated that during the 1980s development patterns should be based on renewable rather than non-renewable resources and that developing countries would need equitable access to the non-renewable resources of the oceans.

By a resolution on regional input for the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s), ESCAP enumerated the essential elements that should be included in the new strategy: liberalization of international trade and terms of trade; food and agricultural development; improving the organization and development of the primary commodities sector of the world economy; enlarging developing countries' shipping services and their share in world industrial production; increasing the flow of resources in real terms; and promoting the transfer of technology. The Commission emphasized that particular attention be given to the problems of landlocked, least developed and developing island countries in the framing of the new strategy.

The Commission requested the United Nations Secretary-General to expedite implementation of the General Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, particularly where it related to ESCAP, and to make adequate resources available. A transfer of management responsibilities took place in 1979 for the first group of regional and subregional projects from United Nations Headquarters, New York, to ESCAP in accordance with that resolution. This, coupled with increased extrabudgetary assistance, raised the total value of the technical co-operation programme administered by ESCAP to more than $21.5 million-an increase of about 37 per cent over 1978. Forty-five missions were undertaken by a corps of 11 regional advisers and experts to countries in the region. Increased attention was given to the needs of the geographically and economically disadvantaged countries and to priority areas indicated by the Commission.

Other actions taken by the Commission through resolutions adopted in March concerned: adoption of the statute of the ESCAP Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre; mobilization of resources for implementation of ESCAP's work programme; requests for country experiences on the roles of the co-operative movement and of the public sector in the socio-economic development of the region's developing countries for preparation of reports on these topics; strengthening technical and economic cooperation among developing countries in shipping matters; organization of proposals for an intergovernmental committee on human settlements at the regional level; and regional activities during the International Year of the Child (1979).

Achievements of the Commission during 1979 included: the establishment of the Asian Reinsurance Corporation on 24 May, with the Corporation underwriting reinsurance business with effect from 1 January 1980; commencement of the Asia-Pacific Telecommunity in July, with the aim of solving telecommunications problems and improving management of facilities in the region; consideration of a regional development strategy for the 1980s at meetings held in April and May 1979 by groups of consultants representing the region's two major geographic segments and at an intergovernmental meeting held in September; and at Bangkok, Thailand, in October, the ESCAP Preparatory Meetings of Ministers of Industry for the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO).

Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

By a resolution adopted in March, ESCAP invited developed countries and intergovernmental organizations to support economic and technical co-operation among developing countries and provide increased external assistance to supplement the resources contributed to such co-operation activities by countries participating in them. It also invited ESCAP developing countries and their institutions to collaborate in a regional information system to promote economic and technical co-operation.

A new programme of increased collaboration among United Nations bodies and other intergovernmental organizations for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries was developed for 1980-1981. The Commission would act as a clearing-house for requests for development assistance. The programme contained a special component to help disadvantaged countries. Some programme activities had begun in the 1978-1979 biennium, and the new concepts informed most of ESCAP's current projects. A regional interagency working group was established under the chairmanship of the Executive Secretary of ESCAP. Interagency discussions sions were held with the aim of developing an Asian and Pacific information system to promote economic and technical co-operation as the regional arm of the global Information Referral System.

Agriculture

The Commission stressed the need for regional action to improve food security in view of the continuing food shortage in developing countries. The ESCAP/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations/UNIDO Fertilizer Advisory Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific completed its second year of operation with 13 member countries. A project was initiated to improve fertilizer distribution capacity at the district level. A regional economic survey and information service on the use of agro-pesticides in ESCAP developing countries was set up under the second phase of the Agricultural Requisite Scheme for Asia and the Pacific.

Socio-economic studies on coarse grains, pulses, roots and tuber crops were undertaken during the year. A project document for a regional co-ordination centre for research and development of the crops was revised. Indonesia offered host facilities, and Japan offered to provide a director with its own funds-in-trust.

Development planning

The Development Planning Division was concerned with: reviews and appraisals of recent economic activities in the region; perspective studies; development planning techniques; regional or subregional co-operation, including problems of external migration of labour, the development of river basin potential, trade co-operation and regional financial institutions; quantitative short-, medium- and long-term projections on national economic performances, linking national models into a global forecasting system; and theoretical work to incorporate aspects of income distribution, employment and sectoral linkages into those models.

Industry, human settlements and technology

The reorientation of industrialization policies and strategies in the region was further stressed at Bangkok by the October 1979 Preparatory Meeting of Ministers of Industry for the Third General Conference of UNIDO to be held in 1980. The ministers urged that programmes be worked out to strengthen manufacturing capacities, emphasizing the development of project generation and implementation capabilities of developing countries. They called for disaggregation of the industrial growth targets envisaged in the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial

With the completion of the first phase of a project on industrialization in non-metropolitan areas, pilot projects were identified, to be implemented during the second phase. A number of subregional programmes and specific projects to improve the technological capabilities of national institutions were currently being implemented. A feasibility study was undertaken on setting up an industrial estate at Surkhet, Nepal, under a "prime-mover industry" project. In the field of investment promotion, preliminary steps were completed for the setting up of a regional bureau on fiscal documentation.

Consultations with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) took place in order to work out an integrated work programme to meet the specific needs of the countries of the region.

International trade

Follow-up activities were undertaken during 1979 on the regional trade expansion and cooperation programme adopted at the Ministerial Conference on Co-operation in Trade in Asia and the Pacific, which had been held at New Delhi, India, in August 1978.

A second round of trade negotiations under the 1975 Bangkok Agreement³ was planned for 1980 to enlarge the product coverage under tariff preferences of the Agreement. Other developing countries were invited to join the negotiations. The Agreement currently offered tariff cuts averaging 36 per cent on 146 selected products. Participating States were Bangladesh, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Republic of Korea and Sri Lanka.

The Agreement for the establishment of the Asian Reinsurance Corporation came into force on 24 May. Members were Afghanistan, Bangladesh, China, India, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka and Thailand. The Corporation functioned from headquarters in Bangkok, underwriting reinsurance business with effect from 1 January 1980.

The value of transactions channelled through the Asian Clearing Union increased from AMU (Asian Monetary Units) 68 million in 1977 to AMU 109.9 million in 1978. An AMU was equivalent to a special drawing right allocated by the International Monetary Fund.

The Trade Promotion Centre continued to provide assistance to developing countries through its four services, namely advisory, trade information, professional development and market product development.

Under the second phase of a project to assist the least developed land-locked countries of the E S C A P region, greater emphasis was placed on the promotion of co-operation between landlocked and transit countries. During the year, field offices-with a resident transport expert -were set up in Kabul (Afghanistan), Vientiane (Lao People's Democratic Republic) and Kathmandu (Nepal).

Assistance in economic and technical cooperation was made available to commodity communities and associations in the region.

Natural resources and mineral prospecting

The Commission assumed executing agency responsibilities for: the Southeast Asia Tin Research and Development Centre (SEATRADC); the Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre (RMRDC); the project on the investigation of the mineral potential of the South Pacific of the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in South Pacific Offshore Areas; and the project of the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Offshore Areas on technical support for regional offshore prospecting in east Asia.

Based in Ipoh, Malaysia, SEATRADC continued to operate under its own Board of Management which met twice during the year. The Board was informed that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) would provide $47,000 for the purchase of equipment for an analytical laboratory at the Centre. The Centre's current work programme contained six projects in the field of exploration, two in mining, two in mineral processing and one in tin smelting.

In August, RMRDC was transferred from Bangkok to new headquarters at Bandung, Indonesia. The Commission had adopted the statute of the Centre in March.

Among various activities in the energy field, ESCAP held a working group meeting on efficiency and conservation in the use of energy and, in cooperation with UNDP, mounted a mission to selected countries to draw up a programme of assistance in various aspects of energy.

Population

Population activities were aimed at monitoring, analysing and reporting demographic trends and situations in the region and at assisting Governments in population policy formulation and in incorporating demographic factors in national development planning.

The Commission felt that more effective national family-planning policies and, programmes supported at the regional level should be undertaken, and indicated the upcoming major issues in population policies and family planning.

An assessment of population training needs and facilities of countries in the region was carried out. In addition, technical assistance was provided to six countries on the development of their information clearing-house systems. A mission to assess the population information capabilities and needs among the South Pacific countries and selected Asian countries was fielded.

Shipping, ports and inland waterways

By a resolution of 16 March, ESCAP urged the developing countries of the region to strengthen technical and economic co-operation in shipping matters. Priority continued to be given to the development of manpower capability, shippers' co-operation, maritime policy and institutions, shipping and port information systems, development of merchant marines and shipping services, and port management and inland water transport.

The development of manpower was supported through workshops, seminars, study tours and assistance to national maritime institutions. Regional and national workshops on shippers' cooperation, shipping and port management as well as on inland waterways administration and maintenance, together with meetings of chief executives of national shipowners' associations and shippers' organizations, were held.

The Commission commended efforts to implement the work programme in the field of shippers' organization and co-operation and suggested that an appropriate association of the national shippers' councils of the region should be established as soon as possible.

Advisory services were provided for: shippers' co-operation, merchant shipping, containerization, port construction and management; legislative, administrative and technical aspects of government policy on shipping and inland waterways; economic statistics of shipping; and shipping information.

The Commission urged that advisory services aid to the development of national shipping policy be continued. Recognizing that shipping data was essential for formulating sound shipping policies, it endorsed assistance to developing countries in implementing a project on economic statistics of shipping (L.2 scheme).

Social development

The Commission endorsed a summary of the five-year regional action programme included in the report of its Committee on Social Development as the broad base of legal authority for future programmes in the field of integration of women in the development process.

An ESCAP regional preparatory conference for the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women was held at New Delhi in November. Its recommendations included a strategy and plan of action for 1980-1985-the second half of the Decade-in education, health and employment as a regional input to the Conference. Greater resources and manpower allocation were called for to assist member countries implement the world and regional plans of action.

The Commission also endorsed recommendations of a regional preparatory meeting for the International Year of the Child, and asked the Executive Secretary to review and report on the Year's activities for the purpose of formulating national and regional programmes for child services and welfare.

A meeting to advise the Executive Secretary on priorities in youth affairs activities in the region was held. Advisory services were provided by Governments in development-oriented training in social work and community development. The mobile training scheme for the training of front-line and supervisory personnel in the least developed and land-locked countries concluded after a follow-up assignment in Bangladesh from March to June.'

Statistics

Implementation of the National Household Survey Capability Programme (NHSCP) was organized through the regional commissions. In December, the Co-ordinator and a member of the NHSCP unit at the United Nations Statistical Office visited Bangkok to assist ESCAP in establishing its unit.

A proposal was submitted for extrabudgetary financing for case studies in at least five countries on statistics for rural development, which would help prepare guidelines for organizing data files on the subject. A complementary programme on environmental statistics was established, forming part of a global project being executed with the support of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

A working group of statistical experts, meeting at Bangkok in October/November, stressed the importance of statistics for rural development and for disadvantaged groups of the population. It recommended that the development of statistics on women, youth and children should receive priority attention.

Advisory services continued in the fields of national accounts, civil registration and vital statistics, population and housing censuses, and data preparation and processing of censuses and surveys. Support continued for training activities of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific.

Transport, communications and tourism

The inaugural sessions of the General Assembly and the Management Committee of the Asia-Pacific Telecommunity were held at Bangkok in May, and the Telecommunity, which started work in July, consisted of 17 members - Afghanistan, Australia, Bangladesh, Burma, China, India, Japan, Malaysia, Nauru, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Viet Nam -one associate member (Hong Kong) and nine affiliate members (two in Hong Kong, two in Japan and five in the Philippines).

Railway experts visited the Philippines National Railway to study the problems of energy conservation in particular. An ESCAP mission to China considered co-operation between the railways of the region and the Chinese railways.

Towards ESCAP'S aim of drawing up an Asian master plan for the railways of the region and to form an Asian Railway Union, a meeting was convened in June in the Federal Republic of Germany on technical innovations leading to an increase of speeds on existing lines and their applicability to developing countries. Top railway executives of Asia and the Middle East met in October in Tokyo.

Major emphasis was given to the improvement of rural/feeder road systems in the context of integrated rural development. Two regional seminars on rural/local roads and rural transport were held in Bangladesh in March/April and in the USSR in October.

Activities in tourism and international travel were broadened, with major emphasis on technical studies and surveys. Maldives received help in drawing up a tourism master plan, and tourism surveys were conducted in Thailand. A study was undertaken on possible improvement of joint tourism marketing 'among member countries.

Environment

The environmental work programme was designed to strengthen and implement a number of activities in four priority areas: creation and enhancement of environmental awareness; development of the institutional and legal framework for environmental protection and management at the national level; environmental management of land ecosystems, particularly of arid and semi-arid lands; and protection of the marine environment and related ecosystems.

Articles were prepared on the relationship between environment and development, as well as a comprehensive survey and a status report on environmental protection legislation in general, based on information collected from 24 countries. Specific studies were made on marine pollution legislation and environmental impact assessment in selected countries; preparatory work was begun to set up a regional technical workshop on desertification and to assess land management practices in the region. A regional project on the protection of the marine environment and related ecosystems was also initiated in co-operation with the Swedish Environmental Protection Service. The Commission also took part in the first phase of the development of the South Pacific regional environment programme, in co-operation with the South Pacific Commission, the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation and UNEP.

The Typhoon Committee continued work on its typhoon operational experiment, which aimed at reducing the risk of life and damage by improving the forecasting and warning capabilities through an exchange of information and data during the early stages of a typhoon.

Integrated rural development

By the end of 1979, of the 47 projects of the integrated programme on rural development for 1978-1979, 15 had been completed and 13 were expected to be completed by early 1980. Thirteen other projects awaited funds, three others were expected to continue into the next biennium, and three had been deleted. In addition, ESCAP was designing and implementing activities in partnership with international organizations to strengthen national efforts to alleviate rural poverty. Activities undertaken during the year covered area development, training, local-level planning, monitoring and evaluation. Country activities included those for Maldives and the Philippines.

An ad hoc intergovernmental meeting, held in December, reviewed an interagency co-ordinated plan of action for integrated rural development in the region since endorsement of the plan in 1977. It also provided guidelines for future activities under the plan, including follow-up activities to the July World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (see p. 500).

Transnational corporations

The Joint Unit on Transnational Corporations of ESCAP and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations developed and intensified activities in the field of information, research and technical co-operation. The Joint Unit undertook research studies, assisted the Centre in research into specific economic sectors, and continued to provide regional support to its efforts to establish a global comprehensive information system on transnational corporations, while focusing on corporations operating in the ESCAP region. In co-operation with the Centre, technical assistance to strengthen the negotiating capacity of developing countries was provided through various workshops. An interregional project on the role of transnational corporations in primary export commodities was begun, in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Economic Commission for Africa.

Mekong project

As a result of a 1978 agreement⁴ between three of the riparian countries of the Mekong River (the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam), the Mekong Committee operated as an Interim Committee for Coordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin, pending the participation of Democratic Kampuchea.

The Interim Committee held three sessions during 1979, at Hanoi, Viet Nam, at the beginning of the year, at which it approved the 1979 work programme, at Manila in March and at Bangkok in October.

As at 31 December 1979, the cumulative total of resources contributed, pledged or likely to be available to the Mekong project generally or to specific projects sponsored by the Committee stood at $415.3 million, representing an increase of more than $32 million during the year. Institutional support of $4.5 million from UNDP (phase V) began on 1 May for a period of three years.

Among highlights of 1979 was the increased hydropower production capacity of the Lao People's Democratic Republic by more than 500 gigawatt-hours as a result of the completion of the Nam Ngum project. A report summarizing all the studies made regarding the Pa Mong project was prepared. The hydrologic network in the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand underwent a major expansion: the number of hydrologic stations in the two countries increased by 23 per cent and that of meteorologic stations by 8 per cent.

Regional institutions

By a resolution of 14 March on regional training and research institutions, ESCAP decided to integrate, by July 1980, four of its five institutes and centres (see APPENDIX III) into a single intergovernmental institution to be known as the Asian and Pacific Development Centre, for which the Executive Secretary was asked to formulate a charter.

The Centre, envisaged as a think-tank to help in the search for development models more suited to the specific needs of ESCAP countries, required $18.8 million for its initial five years; UNDP institutional support would amount to $4.2 million, in addition to programme support, and member countries would contribute $5.6 million. Malaysia offered host facilities at Kuala Lumpur. The Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific was to continue as a separate regional institution. The institutions continued to carry out training courses, seminars, workshops, consultancy and research programmes throughout the year.

Decisions by the Economic and Social Council

On 3 August 1979, by decision 1979/71, the Economic and Social Council took note of the annual report of ESCAP for the period 18 March 1978 to 16 March 1979 and of its recommendations and resolutions. The decision was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the First (Economic) Committee, which had similarly approved, on 30 July, a text proposed by ESCAP.

Also on 3 August, on the First Committee's recommendation, the Council adopted, without vote, resolution 1979/62, by which it noted that Fiji and Solomon Islands had become members of ESCAP, and amended ESCAP's terms of reference to take account of this admission and the admission of the New Hebrides and Niue as associate members. The text, proposed by ESCAP, had been approved in the First Committee without vote on 30 July.

Economic Commission for Latin America

In 1979, the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA), also known by its Spanish acronym CEPAL, continued research and analysis of the principal problems of economic and social development in Latin America and giving technical advice to Governments of the region concerning Latin American presence and participation in international affairs. Changes in international economic relations affected the Latin American socio-economic situation and, with it, the programmes and activities of ECLA. The Commission became aware of the dangers of overextension and laid down clear guidelines and restraints for the work programme approved by the member Governments at the eighteenth session, held at La Paz, Bolivia, from 18 to 20 April at the technical level and from 23 to 26 April at the ministerial level. Also at that session, it admitted Spain as a full member.

It continued its close collaboration with the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning, the Latin American Demographic Centre and the Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation.

Almost 30 conferences, meetings and seminars were sponsored or co-sponsored by ECLA during 1979. It also completed, continued or initiated studies and reports in the fields of regional integration, the environment, protectionism and trade between developed and developing countries, trade facilitation, external relations of Latin America with Western and Eastern Europe, human settlements, science and technology, the integration of women into development, technical co-operation among developing countries, energy and rural social development. Particularly important were ECLA's activities in connexion with the new international development strategy for the 1980s and a regional programme of action for its implementation.

In efforts to rationalize its institutional structure, ECLA decided that in future certain topics would be examined by sessional committees specially established for the purpose, following consultations with Governments, to formulate measures to promote intra- and interregional cooperation activities.

In connexion with its work programme, ECLA

asked its Executive Secretary to report on implementation of recommendations of the United Nations Administrative Management Service on the structure and operation of its secretariat. The Commission also sought ways to decentralize its operational, research and analytical activities and asked that the criteria currently used by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in allocating resources be revised to meet the greater needs and capacities of the region's countries.

Other ECLA decisions supported work on international conferences held or scheduled under the aegis of the United Nations and implementation of their plans of action in the region: it expressed satisfaction at the results of regional preparatory meetings for the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 633); it noted the recommendations of an Ad Hoc Working Group on Financing Machinery for Scientific and Technological Development (Lima, Peru, 26 and 27 March 1979) which set out basic principles for such machinery and requested that an international working group study and report on the question; and it approved preparatory work for the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women. A second Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America was held at Caracas, Venezuela, from 12 to 16 November. In addition, ECLA stressed the need of improving the situation of children in connexion with the International Year of the Child (1979), and sought to strengthen relations with non-governmental organizations.

In September and October, ECLA convened meetings of the Committee of the Whole in New York-and the General Assembly took action in October and November - to obtain emergency aid for Nicaragua (see p. 314), and for Dominica and the Dominican Republic (see p. 937).

In addition, ECLA produced the 1978 edition of its annual Economic Survey of Latin America, which included for the first time since 1963 an analysis of the economic development of Cuba. The 1978 edition of the Statistical Yearbook for Latin America was also published. For list of publications, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.

Social development

As part of ECLA's periodic appraisals of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,⁵ the secretariat prepared a study on the economic and social development and external economic relations of Latin America which was submitted to a meeting of the Committee of High-level Government Experts at Quito, Ecuador, from 12 to 16 March and subsequently adopted as the "La Paz Appraisal" at ECLA's eighteenth session. This was the final part of ECLA's work under a 1970 General Assembly resolution on the International Development Strategy 6 and the fourth and final regional appraisal of progress achieved during the Decade (the 1970s).

According to the study, the gross domestic product of Latin America as a whole in 1978 was more than four times that of 1950, representing an average cumulative annual growth rate of 5.5 per cent. This rate was higher than the corresponding figures for the world economy as a whole (4.8 per cent), the industrialized market economies as a group (4.3 per cent), and the other developing countries, although it was considerably behind the rates for Japan (8.8 per cent), the Eastern European centrally planned economies (7.2 per cent) and the Middle East (7.4 per cent).

With respect to per capita product, the region as a whole achieved an average of approximately $1,300 at current prices. However, given the rate of population increase, the per capita product grew at an average rate of only 2.6 per cent per year, lower than the rate recorded by most of the industrialized countries, particularly those of Western Europe, so that the income gap became even wider. In addition, the rate and pattern of Latin American economic development over the past three decades was not uniform, and the unevenness and differences recorded led to marked contrasts in the evolution of the region's countries.

The economic growth of Latin America was accompanied by the economic and technological transformation of the productive systems of most countries of the region. However, the depth and dynamism of this process varied from one country to another, depending on economic size and development capacity, and the differences between large, medium-sized and, in particular, small countries in degree of economic development and future potential had intensified.

The study emphasized that in all Latin American countries economic and technological changes took place within the context of a markedly heterogeneous structural situation, in which productive segments or units with a high degree of modernization and productivity coexisted with activities of lower productivity where technological progress was very slow or practically nil, as in subsistence farming. This technological differentiation explained important aspects of the conformation of Latin American society, particularly the distribution and concentration of income.

Latin America's share of exports in world trade, about 11 per cent in 1950, declined to 5.6 per cent in 1977. If the value of oil exports was excluded, the drop was even steeper. Several circumstances underlay this performance, including the extraordinary growth of trade among the industrial countries, spurred by the policy of liberalization in that field, and the specialization of their production systems. Between 1950 and 1975, manufactured products increased their share in world trade from roughly 44 per cent to more than 60 per cent and the share of fuels increased from 10 per cent to 19 per cent, whereas food and raw materials declined from 49 per cent to 19 per cent. The study indicated that the constantly shrinking participation of Latin America in world trade was due to an economic and technological structure characteristic of the degree of development of peripheral countries in comparison with that of the central countries. Latin America's share also declined in world trade in commodities as a whole.

Nevertheless, the study noted that since the end of the past decade there had been a diversification of Latin American exports- originally consisting of commodities-into industrial products. In 1975 industrial goods amounted to 14 per cent of total exports, more than twice the 1965 figure. On the other hand, the proportion of the value of exports dispatched to industrial market-economy countries dropped from roughly 80 per cent in 1950-1960 to 65 per cent in 1975. During this period, the share of intraregional trade rose from 17 per cent (1960) to 20 per cent, and exports to the socialist countries from, less than 1 per cent to 8 per cent in 1975, partly because of a shift in Cuba's trade.

The study examined the fundamental contradiction characterizing the prevailing style of Latin American development: the incongruity between a relatively dynamic process of economic growth and technological and productive change on the one hand, and a process of social change which was not accompanied by an equitable distribution of wealth and an improvement of the level of well-being of the population as a whole, on the other. The foregoing aspects were complemented by a study of the dimension and nature of the poverty suffered by a high proportion of the population of Latin America. Finally, problems linked to employment and education were examined.

In conclusion, the La Paz Appraisal examined Latin America's priorities for the 1980s and recommended action to be taken by the ECLA secretariat and by the Committee of High-level Government Experts with regard to regional participation in the preparation and application of the new international development strategy. Annexed to the Appraisal were statements by Canada and the United States, which commented or reserved their position on various provisions.

Also in connexion with the new international development strategy, ECLA adopted a resolution underlining some key aspects of Latin America's basic development objectives and policies connected with international co-operation, economic, social and human development, and co-operation within the region and with other developing countries. It asked for enhanced efforts in studying medium- and long- term projections of the economic and social development of the Latin American countries and for a regional action programme to implement the new strategy for the 1980s. By other resolutions, it asked that special attention be given to problems of protectionism, international monetary and financial aspects and requirements of Latin American economies, and economic relations between Latin America and developed areas.

Work continued on studies on styles of development and social change. A regional seminar on styles of development and the environment was held from 19 to 23 November at Santiago, Chile.

The Commission also undertook studies of the instruments used by selected countries to face inflationary pressure stemming from higher export revenues (from petroleum and coffee, in particular). The studies further analysed how receipts from petroleum could be used to promote a more accelerated and socially just economic development.

Co-operation among developing cow tries and regions

The Commission instructed its Executive Secretary to prepare for 1980 a compendium and study of technical analyses made of regional and subregional co-operation, integration processes and bilateral economic relations, for determining the desirability of drawing up a charter of economic and social relations. of Latin America or some other instrument for contributing to identification of bases for a fair and just Latin American economic order. Another resolution reflected the importance assigned at the La Paz session to co-operation among developing countries and developing regions of different geographical areas and to the recommendations of the Plan of Action adopted at the 1978 United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries.7

The Commission endorsed the work programme of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee, which held its fourth session at Paramaribo, Suriname, from 21 to 27 March; support from specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies and technical cooperation programmes was sought for this purpose. At a first meeting of Caribbean planning experts, held at Havana, Cuba, from 25 to 31 January, member countries' experiences in the substantive and technical aspects of development planning were analysed.

In connexion with efforts to intensify regional co-operation, ecla adopted resolutions aimed at facilitating regional trade and transport; requesting studies on the establishment of an integrated transport system, including the land-locked countries of Bolivia and Paraguay, and on the migration of unskilled labour; providing guidelines and a data bank for statistical activities in support of country activities in censuses and statistics; promoting cultural co-operation, particularly autochthonous traditions; and advancing economic integration.

Poverty

The Commission gave special attention to the assessment of poverty in Latin America. New development strategies were proposed, among them a "growth with redistribution strategy," involving public investment, and a "basic needs satisfaction strategy." Studies were made on sectoral reviews of basic needs (nutrition, education, health and housing) and on poverty profiles for five countries.

A regional seminar on critical poverty was held from 27 to 31 August at Santiago. The main document submitted stressed the importance of the State's role in alleviating poverty.

An analysis was made of the current situation and policies aimed at overcoming extreme poverty among children under six years of age, and ECLA held a regional symposium on critical poverty among children at Santiago from 3 to 7 December in connexion with the International Year of the Child.

Natural resources

The Commission concentrated its efforts on energy and water resources. It decided to promote implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan of the 1977 United Nations Water Conference⁸ through a sessional committee at its regular sessions, and recommended establishment of a water resources unit in the ECLA secretariat. On technical co-operation in water resources, ECLA recommended that, if possible, it be assigned in 1979 and subsequent years $300,000 from the regular United Nations budget to finance the launching of horizontal cooperation projects, or that programme resources be reallocated for this purpose. To increase rapidly the basic information needed in this regard, specialized agencies were requested to study the technical and economic aspects of satellite remote sensing to obtain the needed data.

Studies to determine the energy situation in the region-whose countries depended largely on hydrocarbon energy products for their energy needs-were recommended for planning national energy policies, as well as studies on machinery to cope with price rises and on alternative sources, and a feasibility study on establishing a regional information system to collect and transmit data for countries importing energy resources.

Industrial development

The Commission's industrial development efforts in 1979 dealt mainly with co-operation in specific industrial sectors, such as forestry and mechanical industries. A project run jointly by ECLA, UNDP and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued the study of capital goods in order to provide the countries of the region with complete information on the current situation and future outlook for production and supply in Latin America.

The Second Latin America Conference on Industrialization, sponsored by ECLA and UNIDO, was held from 10 to 14 September at Cali, Colombia.

Economic and social planning

During 1979, the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning carried out a varied range of activities including technical assistance and a series of studies connected with its four main programme areas: research, advisory services, training and planning.

In research, a course/seminar was held at Santiago from 5 March to 2 April. Special attention was given to the role of the State in planning with a view to preparing a report to be presented at a 1980 Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning in Guatemala.

The Institute carried out advisory services missions in Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Haiti, Panama and Venezuela, among others. It co-operated with state governments of Brazil in formulating a development strategy, and provided assistance in executing a programme of integrated rural development.

In the first half of the year, a central planning course and the first international course on social planning were held at Santiago. Various courses were given by officials of the training programme in Brazil, Guatemala, Honduras, Panama and Venezuela. Support was provided for programmes of national training centres.

The Institute held the first Meeting of Planning Experts of the Caribbean (Havana, 25-31 January), co-sponsored a seminar on national strategies in regional development (Bogota Colombia, 17-21 September), and prepared summary versions of the national development plans of Latin America and the Caribbean.

The Commission adopted a resolution in April endorsing recommendations of the Institute's Technical Committee, made within the context of the 1978 Second Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean; the Committee had been established in 1977 at the First Conference. It suggested studies and training and advisory services which the Institute should carry out, including intensification of support for the system of coordination and co-operation among planning bodies of the region. The Committee's Chairman and the ECLA Executive Secretary were asked to seek UNDP support for the sixth phase of the In: stitute's activities, from 1 January 1980.

The Joint Inspection Unit in May submitted a report on the Institute as part of a series of studies on regional training and research institutions with technical co-operation potentials and orientations. It analysed the Institute's organization and functions and suggested measures for the organization of its activities in the context of technical co-operation among developing countries and its potential role for future technical co-operation operations aimed at improving social and economic development techniques.

Human settlements

The Commission maintained active participation in a joint project with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the Comite Interamericano de Desarrollo Agricola. Their studies dealt with, among other subjects, rural settlements and makeshift settlements in metropolitan areas. As part of ECLA's collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme, a series of seminars was prepared on ecotechniques concerning human settlements in the wet tropics.

Human settlement was to be the subject of specific examination by ECLA sessional committees. The Executive Secretary was asked to study the financial implications of setting up an intergovernmental committee on human settlements, and member Governments were asked to send experts to ECLA sessions.

A regional conference was convened at Mexico City from 7 to 10 November to evaluate ECLA's work programme on human settlements.

Population

Within the framework of its regional population programme, the Latin American Demographic Centre was responsible for training, research and direct technical advice in four basic areas: monitoring of demographic tendencies, population and development, training, and documentation and data-processing.

Monitoring included a continuing review of population projections and methodological research and basic studies on infant mortality (on which 13 case studies were published) and on fertility in some countries. Population and development projects covered research on regional development, public policies and migrations, rural development and human settlements, international migration of unskilled labour and development strategies, and population policies, as well as advisory missions in Bolivia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Mexico, Panama and Paraguay. The Centre's training programme included courses at Santiago on basic and advanced demographic analysis and intensive courses of a national and regional character in Brazil and Costa Rica, respectively; it received research fellowship students from Bolivia, Panama and Paraguay and offered post-graduate courses for 19 social scientists during the second academic year of a programme in social studies of population. The documentation system on population provided training for officials connected with national institutions in various countries in dataprocessing and courses on processing systems.

The Commission in April approved the conclusions and recommendations of the first Meeting on Population of the Committee of High-level Government Experts, held at Quito on 12 and 13 March, especially with regard to the Centre's work programme for 1979-1980, the general objectives of the ECLA population programme, and recommendations on priority to be given to technical co-operation, training courses and seminars, planning of professional training, and decentralization of these activities. The Commission instructed the Executive Secretary to convene periodic meetings of the Committee at least every two years to provide general orientation on the Latin American regional population programme, serve as consultative and evaluation mechanisms for ECLA activities under that programme, and take note of the Centre's reports and work programme and present recommendations to ECLA.

Information

The Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation analysed and processed documentation generated by ECLA and the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning. The Centre prepared a thesaurus of the environment for Latin America and a document on environmental information for development. It also made a regional diagnostic report on the situation of information units for development, and published a directory of information units for development existing in international and regional organizations with headquarters in the region.

The Centre continued to advise countries in the operation of systems of information for development and the training of officials in information-documentation techniques. Work advanced in indexing integration terms and particularly in the creation of a system of bibliographical information for planning.

Decision by the Economic and Social Council

On 3 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1979/63, having considered the annual report of ECLA for the period from 8 May 1978 to 26 April 1979, took note with satisfaction of the results of the Commission's eighteenth session held at La Paz. The Council endorsed ECLA's resolution by which it welcomed Spain's application for membership in ECLA and amended the Commission's terms of reference accordingly. Finally, the Council expressed its gratitude to ECLA' for the steps taken in matters of co-operation between developing countries and between developing regions of different geographical areas.

The Council adopted this resolution, without vote, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, where the text was similarly approved on 30 July, on a proposal by Argentina, Brazil, Colombia and the Dominican Republic. The First Committee Chairman orally amended the resolution's title orienting it to the Commission's report rather than the admission of Spain.

Economic Commission for Africa

The fourteenth session of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) (fifth meeting of the Conference of Ministers) was held at Rabat, Morocco, from 20 to 28 March 1979. The Commission adopted 45 resolutions covering a wide range of matters concerning the socio-economic development of Africa. Included were one on the restructuring of intergovernmental machinery for development and co-operation in Africa, and another calling for accelerated development on a self-sustaining and self-reliant basis at the national, subregional and regional levels.

The Commission considered related topics such as the development process and Africa's problems and perspective in the framework of the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s), the development issues of the least developed African countries, the African region and international negotiations, food and agriculture, with particular reference to the Regional Food Plan for Africa, the United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988), acceleration of industrial development, the Commission's medium-term plan for 1980-1983 and its biennial programme of work and priorities for 1980-1981, the integration of women into the development process, population programmes and policies, regional co-operation and integration, and technical and economic cooperation among developing countries.

The year's activities were geared to encouraging and assisting member States towards increased and improved agriculture and food production, and promotion of intra-African trade and improvement of transport and other forms of communications.

Agriculture

The Commission in March recommended that establishment of an ECA Feasibility Study and Investment Promotion Unit be expedited, particularly to assist in major projects relating to food and agriculture within the context of the implementation of the Regional Food Plan for Africa adopted in 1978 by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/ECA Regional Conference of African Ministers of Agriculture.

The Commission completed reports on subregional co-operation in food, livestock, fisheries and forest products in West Africa, and prepared project documents on the agricultural potential of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) area and on the establishment of a West African Agricultural Commodities Intelligence Service.

The Commission evaluated the programmes and projects of African intergovernmental organizations to assess their contribution to current and future food-production efforts. It also assisted an integrated United Republic of Tanzania/Zambia rural development project in setting up priorities and plans of action. It took part in preparatory activities for establishing the Centre for Integrated Rural Development in Africa.

In co-operation with FAO, studies were intitiated to identify the institutional problems of small farmers regarding farm investment and use of improved inputs. Also in collaboration with FAO, the secretariat monitored the food and nutrition situation.

Economic and technical co-operation

Although the main projects of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCS)-the field arm of ECA-remained under the supervision of the ECA secretariat, MULPOCS for the first time became fully responsible for arrangements for convening meetings of their policy organs. The Commission in March called for the integration of their work programmes into ECA's over-all work programme.

Under the auspices of the Lusaka-based MULPOC in Zambia, an intergovernmental negotiating team concluded negotiations on eight protocols of a draft treaty on the creation of a Preferential Trade Area for eastern and southern African countries. Four protocols and the draft treaty remained to be negotiated.

Studies were undertaken at the Gisenyi-based MULPOC in Rwanda to promote subregional economic integration through harmonization of industrial policies, customs arrangements and payments procedures among countries Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire) of the Economic Community of the Great Lakes. Within the Yaoundé-based MULPOC in the United Republic of Cameroon (for the central African subregion), sectoral studies were carried out on industry, trade, agriculture and transport, and the creation of a subregional clearing-house and payments systems were actively considered. The Niameybased MULPOC in the Niger (for west Africa) published the first issue of a periodic liaison bulletin and a directory of west African intergovernmental organizations, and undertook other activities, including identifying training and intermodal transport needs as a first step in assisting west African organizations to rationalize their work programmes. For the Tangier-based MULPOC in Morocco (for north Africa), an interdisciplinary trade mission completed a report planned as the basis for identifying projects for economic cooperation and integration in the subregion.

The Commission continued to render legal services in connexion with the establishment of new economic and technical co-operation organizations. By a March resolution, it endorsed a resolution on an ECA/Economic Commission for Latin America interregional action programme for the promotion of technical and economic cooperation between the two regions, which had been adopted by the Conference of African Planners in December 1978, and called for efforts to formulate similar programmes with the other regional commissions.

Industrial development

The Commission prepared basic documents for a regional symposium on industrial policies and strategies for internally self-sustaining development and collective self-reliance during the period 1978-2000, held at Nairobi, Kenya, from 11 to 18 September, jointly sponsored by ECA, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), with additional input from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The symposium's recommendations were endorsed by the Fifth Conference of African Ministers of Industry at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 17 to 20 October. The Conference requested its sponsoring and other concerned organizations to study the report and formulate basic priority programmes of action. The Conference also requested ECA and the African Development Bank to co-operate in establishing an African Industrial Development Fund. A resolution was also adopted calling for a feasibility study on the establishment of two regional development training centres on composite flour programmes.

The ECA-sponsored African Centre for Engineering Design and Manufacturing began operating in April. Its constitution had been adopted and signed at Cotonou, Benin, at a meeting on 4 and 5 April of African plenipotentiaries and the Council of the African Regional Centre for Engineering Design. Ibadan, Nigeria, was selected as the Centre's headquarters, where its first Executive Board meeting was held on 29 and 30 October.

The first ECA/UNIDO meeting of experts on chemicals, held at Addis Ababa from 26 November to 1 December, recommended creation of multinational industrial enterprises for project promotion, and that pre-investment studies be carried out on fertilizers, pesticides, basic chemicals, pharmaceuticals and petrochemicals.

The first ECA/UNIDO meeting of experts on metals and engineering, held at Addis Ababa from 3 to 8 December, recommended creation of development corporations, and promotion and implementation of a number of project ideas for the manufacture of iron and steel products, brass, bronze, refractories, electrodes, components, spare parts, agricultural machinery and equipment.

Work was started on the preparation of project descriptions for the ideas recommended by both meetings.

The second phase of a UNDP-financed project on forest industries development being executed by the FAO/ECA Forest Industries Advisory Group began in April. Initial steps were also taken on a major survey of current and future timber and forest products consumption in the central African subregion, due to be completed in 1984.

Education, training and manpower

National training workshops in Botswana, Malawi and Togo and a regional workshop in Kenya were organized for trainers, staff development officers and training managers.

An Interregional Conference on Distance Education in September at Addis Ababa, cosponsored by ECA and the German Foundation for International Development, focused on correspondence education and the open university system. A second Conference, organized in conjunction with the Netherlands, considered training policy and co-ordination, non-formal education in manpower development and intra-African co-operation in manpower utilization.

Two field missions visited the north and central African subregions to identify the existence and growth problems of indigenous consultants. In November, ECA assisted in organizing a meeting at which the Association of Eastern and Southern African Consultancy Organizations was formed.

Various ECA-administered fellowships were integrated into the Expanded Training and Fellowship Programme for Africa. Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Morocco made substantial fellowship offers, and Lesotho made a financial contribution. A total of 75 Africans received training awards under bilateral arrangements, 54 trainees benefited from an ECA/Netherlands fellowship scheme, and more than 100 trainers participated in training workshops.

Pursuant to a Commission resolution of 27 March on manpower development, steps were taken towards the establishment of an African Institute for Higher Technical Training and Research at Nairobi, the establishment of a North African Graduate Institute of Management, and the finalization of an agreement on the conversion of the East African Management Institute into a subregional institute serving 17 States.

Activities to help member States improve public administration and management included studies, training and advisory missions to member States, workshops and seminars. An Association of African Tax Administrators was formed at a regional conference and workshop on tax policy and administration at Addis Ababa in June.

International trade and finance

Substantial assistance was given to member States in their efforts to promote subregional trade in compliance with a resolution of 27 March by which the ECA adopted a development strategy for the African region for the third United Nations development decade and stressed, in an annexed Plan of Action, the need to increase intra-African trade from the current 4 per cent to 8 per cent within the next decade. By the same resolution, ECA recommended to member States for adoption a draft Declaration of Commitment of the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on Guidelines and Measures for National and Collective Self-Reliance in Social and Economic Development for the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.

Extensive assistance was provided for the establishment of a Preferential Trade Area in eastern and southern Africa. An intergovernmental negotiating team reached agreement on protocols related to clearing and payments arrangements, co-operation on agricultural and industrial policies, rules of origin, transit trade and transit facilities, transport and communications, and type of product, standardization and quality of goods to be traded within the area.

Regarding intra-African finance, ECA continued to assist the West African Clearing House, the Association of African Central Banks (AACB) and the African Centre for Monetary Studies to improve or facilitate the smooth running of those institutions. It handed over the AACB secretariat to the African Centre for Monetary Studies in September. It also urged membership in the Association of African Trade Promotion Organizations, and appealed to the European Economic Community to co-operate fully in negotiation of a new co-operation agreement with the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries

The Commission participated in a number of regional and interregional activities in relation to economic co-operation among developing countries, most of which were carried out in close collaboration with other regional commissions, OAU and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). It was also actively involved in servicing African meetings for the fifth session of UNCTAD in May/June, the Co-ordination Committee on Multilateral Payments Arrangements and Monetary Cooperation among Developing Countries and a joint OAU/ECA/UNCTAD African regional meeting at Addis Ababa from 7 to 18 December in preparation for an interregional meeting of the "Group of 77" developing countries on economic co-operation among developing countries.

Together with other regional commissions, ECA carried out a number of studies concerning transnational corporations and their impact on various industries: aluminium and cocoa in Ghana, coffee in Burundi, bauxite in Sierra Leone, textiles in the United Republic of Tanzania and primary products in Africa in general. Other papers concerned excessive outflow of financial resources from developing African countries and major issues raised by transnationals. The Commission in March urged establishment of a system of information exchange concerning host country/transnational corporation agreements and negotiations, and of machinery to monitor transnational corporation activities and problems which arose.

Mineral and energy resources

The Commission continued to promote the increased participation of the countries of the subregion in the East African Minerals Resources Development Centre and to assist the Centre to consolidate its position. An ECA-sponsored intergovernmental expert meeting at Yaounde in late 1979 decided that a mineral resources development centre for the central African subregion should be established.

The Commission concentrated on encouraging exploration, systematic planning and optimum development of energy resources in Africa, promoting multinational co-operation in their exploitation and use, as well as co-ordination of development policies.

The preparatory stage of a project on assistance in the formulation of energy policies and in the evaluation, development, exploitation and use of energy resources and technical cooperation was completed, regarding the development of conventional energy resources. A study was begun on the establishment of an African petroleum organization to co-ordinate policies in the field of hydrocarbons, and preparatory work was carried out for the establishment of a Standing Committee for Energy in North Africa.

A regional solar energy seminar was convened at Niamey from 8 to 13 January and ECA continued to give advisory services to Ethiopia, Lesotho, Mauritius and Somalia on the development of solar, wind and biogas energy. A demonstration centre for utilization of these nonconventional energy sources was established in the ECA secretariat.

An exhibition on solar energy equipment was organized at Rabat in March, which included a briefing on techniques. The Commission at 'its March session decided to establish a Regional Centre for Solar Energy Research and Development in Africa.

Cartography

Support from west African countries as participating members was sought to enable the Regional Centre for Training in Aerial Survey at Ile-Ife, Nigeria, one of two regional cartographic centres to embark on its programme of curriculum and physical development. Efforts were also made to obtain teaching staff and fellowships for African students to train at the Centre. An ECA mission visited member States to solicit support for and participation in the Nairobi Regional Centre for Services in Surveying and Mapping which had started 1979 with serious financial difficulties and an ineffective accounting system.

The Commission in March asked for completion and printing of 12 atlases of a cartographic inventory for Africa. Members participated in the Fourth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Africa at Abidjan, Ivory Coast, in November, which called for closer co-operation between ECA and the African Association of Cartography (ACC) and asked ECA and AAC to convene a meeting to improve their working relations. The Conference also appealed to African Governments to supply the Map Documentation and Reference Centre more generously with maps, charts and other cartographic publications. The Conference asked ECA to provide a budget to enable the Centre to purchase maps, atlases and gazetteers.

At ECA'S March session, a remote sensing exhibition was staged in which Kenya, Mali, Morocco, the Sudan, the Upper Volta, Zaire and technical agencies from developed countries participated. A mission composed of Canada, France, the United States and ECA evaluated the activities of the Ouagadougou (Upper Volta) Regional Remote Sensing Centre in June, and proposed extension of the phase I project for one year before proceeding to phase II- the establishment of receiving stations in Africa.

Environment

Under a joint ECA/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) project for strengthening the environmental capabilities of ECA, a review of secretariat programming activities was carried out. The secretariat submitted a report to UNEP on assessment and management of national environmental machinery, and a follow-up study was undertaken to assess progress.

Another ECA/UNEP project, on the development of legislation for environmental protection-in the ECA region, was being implemented; missions were sent to 15 African countries in this regard.

Science and Technology

The Commission took part in preparatory activities for the August United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 633), which it attended. It organized meetings of African experts at Lome, Togo, and Mbabane, Swaziland, to formulate and adopt an African position, sent missions to a number of African countries to assist with their preparations, and ensured that the African position was incorporated in the main Conference document.

The World Intellectual Property Organization and ECA continued to provide the interim secretariat for the Industrial Property Organization for English-speaking Africa, and ECA participated in a mission to countries in the east and west African subregions in late 1979 to discuss with national experts the detailed structure and functions of the Patent Documentation and Information Centre of the last-named organization. A 14 to 21 December meeting of the Council of the organization approved the mission's recommendations on the establishment of the Centre.

In collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, ECA completed details for the joint implementation of a UNDP preparatory assistance project for the development of marine science and technology in Africa.

A seminar on technology policy research, organized jointly with the International Development Research Centre, took place from 3 to 6 December at the University of Ife, Nigeria, aimed at promoting a technology policy studies programme in the region.

Development planning

The Commission prepared the Survey of Economic and Social Conditions in Africa, 1978-1979. Part I covered the African development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, the international economic situation, growth, domestic savings and fixed capital formation in developing Africa, agriculture, manufacturing, external trade and balance of payments, resource flows and external debt, monetary development and inflation. It also contained a special study on economic growth, employment, income distribution and mass poverty. Part II of the Survey covered current economic developments and policies in the individual ECA countries.

In response to a request contained in a 1975 General Assembly resolution⁹ for studies on long-term trends in and forecasts of the economic development of the region, a standard projection model was built for Africa. The secretariat developed several types of models adapted to the characteristics of various groups of countries-the least developed and the oil-exporting countries as well as the more developed and non-oil-exporting countries- all classified by income groups. The models served as bases for three major quantitative studies for a Conference on African Least Developed Countries and the first session in 1980 of the Joint Conference of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers; ECA approved the merger of three separate Conferences into the Joint Conference in March 1979.

Human settlements

The Commission in March endorsed the resolutions of the Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements, which had first met at Addis Ababa from 2 to 6 October 1978. Seven member States were assisted in setting up national advisory committees on human settlements. Three experts were attached to the MULPOC at Niamey and Lusaka. They participated in updating a master plan for the city of Dakar, Senegal, in defining a national policy on economic housing in Ghana promoting the use of local building materials, in assisting in a resettlement project for 28 villages affected by the Manantali Dam on the Bafing River (Mali), in preparing a regional programme of assistance to the nomad population in the Sahelian countries affected by drought and a report on the regional situation and the problems of human settlements, and in arranging, with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Nairobi, training programmes on human settlements for Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland. A workshop was conducted at UNEP headquarters in Nairobi on city environment management.

The Commission convened an expert group meeting on building materials and construction industries to identify programme needs. The meeting facilitated preparation of a project document, approved by UNDP, on the development of components of the subsector. Project documents were prepared on aspects of building materials production on the current status of and ways of improving building and building materials research facilities in the region, and on the formation of a development council for promoting building materials and construction industries in the countries of the Great Lakes Economic Community.

Population

The secretariat continued its work aimed at creating within the region an increased awareness of the implications of population trends in economic and social development. It continued to assist, particularly in analysing demographic data, member countries such as Algeria, Burundi, Djibouti, Guinea, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Mauritius, Nigeria, Rwanda, Somalia and Zaire.

Exploratory missions went to the Congo, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, Senegal and the United Republic of Cameroon to ascertain the type of assistance that the secretariat might give to these countries. Missions to Ethiopia and Somalia assessed population needs. Another was sent to the United Republic of Tanzania to analyse demographic data for the Dodoma region, identify gaps in the data base needed for planning and prepare a project request from the Government to the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

Studies were completed on some indirect mortality estimates for Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United Republic of Tanzania and on fertility differentials in Africa, as well as an analysis of fertility data from the 1972 population census of Mauritius. Case studies on the interrelationship between population factors and socio-economic development in Kenya and the Ivory Coast were published during the year.

Among major meetings organized or cosponsored by ECA was an expert group meeting on fertility and mortality levels, patterns and trends in Africa and their policy implications held at Monrovia, Liberia, from 26 November to 2 December. The secretariat organized the third session of the Conference of African Demographers at Dakar from 19 to 24 February, at which great importance was given to the role of population issues in socio-economic planning. A resolution on merging the Conference of African Planners, the Conference of African Statisticians and the Conference of African Demographers was adopted in March, as well as resolutions on priorities in the population work programme of ECA and on regional training in population studies in Africa.

Social development

In observing the International Year of the Child (1979), a manual of child development family life and nutrition was prepared for trainers in rural areas and a directory of youth organizations in Africa was published. A survey of youth policies, programmes and training require ments in Africa was updated, and ECA continued to collaborate with specialized agencies and regional intergovernmental organizations in implementing its youth programmes. Technical advice and support to the programme activities of the Association for Social Work Education in Africa continued. The Commission took part in meetings of an interdivisional working group or rural development, identifying and classifying ECA rural development projects according to areas of sectoral interest agreed upon by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination's Task Force on Rural Development for the crossorganizational programme-analysis exercises.

The African Training and Research Centre for Women undertook training activities in the areas of national machineries, technology, nutrition education, co-operatives and extension techniques. A seminar to explain the concept and formulation of national machineries on women and development was held in the Niger from 3 to 6 September. A subregional workshop on technology was organized in Sierra Leone in November for English-speaking countries, and a training workshop on textile design and priming was held at Addis Ababa from 14 to 25 May. The Centre continued, with the Pan-African Institute for Development at Douala, United Republic of Cameroon, conducting in-service training in nutrition for rural development, directed at intermediate-level trainers. It organized two workshops on co-operative formation for women in 1979, and a workshop on the participation of women in development through cooperatives was held in the Sudan in October. In conjunction with the Union des femmes burundaises and the International Labour Organisation, the Centre conducted a seminar on women and co-operatives in Bujumbura, Burundi, from 26 November to 6 December. It also made preparations for the second Regional Conference on the Integration of Women in Development, held at Lusaka from 3 to 7 December.

The Centre also acted as secretariat of the African Regional Co-ordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development, whose constitution and terms of reference were amended by ECA in March.

From 5 to 14 November, women leaders from the Central African Republic, Senegal, Togo and the United Republic of Cameroon took part in a Centre-organized study tour on the operation of the National Council on Women and Development, Accra, Ghana, which was regarded as a model machinery. Participants from national liberation movements of southern Africa took part in a study tour of women leaders for liberation movements to women's programmes and centres of better family living in Kenya from 19 November to 7 December.

During the year, the Centre seconded a production specialist to a handicrafts training centre for young girls and women in the Sudan. Its Handicrafts and Small-scale Industries Unit worked on developing indigenous skills and a building materials project for the making of tiles and bricks in Ethiopia as well as integrated rural development projects in Egypt and Ethiopia.

Over $1 million was contributed by UNDP through MULPOCS to finance staffing of women and development co-ordinators and activities in the four sub-Saharan MULPOCS.

Statistics

The emphasis of ECA'S statistical programme was considerably changed towards direct technical assistance. The programme expanded significantly as a result of recruitment to the regional supporting components of the African Household Survey Capability Programme and the Statistical Training Programme for Africa and a new national accounts advisory services project for least developed and newly independent countries.

At its session in March, ECA decided to merge the three Conferences of African Planners, Statisticians and Demographers (three groups of experts constituting a major part of national development infrastructures) to ensure better co-ordination of their activities. It also endorsed the general design and objectives of a proposed African Data Bank.

National accounts and related economic statistics continued to be one of the main features of the over-all programme. Work was maintained on the development of African external trade data, with emphasis on the development of intra-African trade.

In industrial statistics, the secretariat's activities became more country-oriented and aimed at identifying problems and assisting in the production of more timely data. Other activities in economic statistics included detailed work on production and trade in agricultural commodities, transport and communications, tourism and distribution.

Transport, communications and tourism

The Commission did the necessary groundwork for the implementation of the United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa 1978-1988). Ad hoc reports were prepared in March and April, following missions to countries to collect and identify projects for the first phase of activities. A subsequent series of meetings culminated in a Pledging Conference in New York in November, at which countries and institutions indicated the amounts that could be made available for transport and communications development (see section below)

Consultants' field mission reports on commoncarrier and satellite communication, broadcasting, postal services and telecommunications, and manpower development were reviewed, and documents were prepared for a series of interagency and intergovernmental meetings in April to lay the groundwork for the Conference of Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning in May, which adopted a global strategy and programme of activities for the first phase of the Transport and Communications Decade (see also section below).

The secretariat prepared a master plan for the utilization of a $10 million UNDP sum earmarked for transport and communications in the eastern and southern African subregion together with draft projects included in the master plan. A paper on transport problems was prepared for the Conference of African Least Developed Countries and assistance was given in the preparation of an ECOWAS transport and communications co-ordination study.

Field missions provided technical assistance to: the Monrovia City Corporation; the north African subregion on transport aspects of trade promotion; Nairobi and Kigali Rwanda) for negotiating an air transport agreement on behalf of the Comoros; Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania to assess port management problems; and Cape Verde on port infrastructure and inter-island connexions by sea transport.

Statutes of the Trans-African Highway Authority (Lagos, Nigeria-Mombasa, Kenya) were sent to member States for ratification and were ratified by Kenya and the United Republic of Cameroon. A report on administrative and customs barriers adopted by ECA member States was sent to the departments concerned for implementation.

A progress report on the west African road network was prepared, and studies were begun with the collaboration of France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom.

The Commission participated in the two annual meetings of the Co-ordinating Committee for the Implementation of the Pan-African Telecommunication Network project, at Addis Ababa in April and at Geneva in December. It also participated in September meetings of the International Institute of Communications in London and the World Administrative Radio Conference at Geneva.

In addition to undertaking preparation of an African tourist bulletin, ECA completed studies on the tourist potential of insular developing countries in the region and, for the United Republic of Tanzania, on the feasibility of the pleasure-boat industry.

Water resources

Advisory services were provided to Ethiopia and the Sudan on the environmental impact of water development projects, particularly the prevention and control of water-related diseases following the development of irrigation systems and man-made lakes.

Pursuant to a March resolution on the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan of the 1977 United Nations Water Conference, 10 preparations were concluded and invitations sent to member Governments and organizations to take part in a 1980 regional meeting on community water supply and sanitation problems and needs. In addition, a consultancy mission visited eight African countries and collected data on integrated development and management of water resources.

A project on planning and development of hydrometeorological networks and related services in Africa, financed by UNDP for implementation by the World Meteorological Organization in cooperation with ECA, was approved in December.

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988)

At its March session, ECA adopted a resolution by which it noted with interest the global strategy for implementation of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, 11 expressed its thanks to the General Assembly and the UNDP Governing Council for their financial support, and appealed to the international community to ensure a successful pledging conference of donors to Decade activities later in the year. By another resolution, ECA listed projects for inclusion in the programme of action to be drawn up by the first Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning, held at Addis Ababa from 8 to 12 May.

When it considered the subject of the Decade at its July/August session, the Economic and Social Council had before it the report of the May Conference of African Ministers, which had prepared a global strategy and programme of projects and action for launching the first phase of the Decade (1980-1983). The report stated that ECA had continued to define the basis and constituent elements of a strategy to establish an integrated transport and communications network for Africa. The Commission was also responsible for preparation of the development programmes and plans concerning each mode of transport and communications for Africa, focusing on the key sectors of industry, agriculture and trade, with a view to their development during the Decade. Projects would deal with: transport by road, sea, river, air, rail and pipeline; ports; multimodal transport; and various types of communications (telecommunications, radio, television and postal services).

The role and responsibilities of ECA as lead agency for the Decade was defined. It should co-ordinate and implement the preparatory activities for the strategy and work programme of the Decade, monitor and supervise individual projects, assist in mobilizing resources, and report annually on progress to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council. The Ministers had also defined an order of priority for the implementation of projects. The total cost of the first phase of the programme, which amounted to approximately $8 billion, was itemized in the report.

¹¹ Ibid., p. 603, resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977.

The Conference of African Ministers adopted 11 resolutions, encompassing: adoption of a global strategy for implementation of the Decade's programme; mobilization of resources for implementation of the later phases of the Decade; the action programme for the first phase; a pledging conference; support for an international convention on a code of conduct for liner conferences; freedom of the air; approval for the establishment of an African air tariff conference; a feasibility study on a regional satellite system for Africa; an appeal for concessary loans for rural telecommunications; priority during the Decade to the least privileged African countries; and condemnation of an intended threat by the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations to boycott flights to Zambia.

Introducing the report of the Ministers to the Council's First (Economic) Committee on 12 July, the Executive Secretary of ECA recalled that the Conference had been asked to prepare a comprehensive strategy and a plan of action for the Decade. In planning that strategy, the Ministers had considered that its principal goal should be independence, self-reliance and international co-operation among African States in the field of transport and communications.

On 29 June, the Governing Council of UNDP endorsed UNDP-supported activities as a contribution to the Decade's objectives. It requested the UNDP Administrator to continue to support ECA fully in its role as co-ordinator of the programme for the Decade, authorizing him to allocate $3.5 million to increase the possibilities of UNDP's financing first-phase projects for the Decade; $6 million might be disbursed for this purpose should funds be available. He was also asked to consider, in calculating regional indicative planning figures for the African States for 1982-1986, increasing the amounts by 8 per cent as additional contributions to the success of the Decade.

The First Committee of the Economic and Social Council, without vote on 1 August, approved, for adoption by the Council and the Assembly, a draft resolution on the Decade. The text, introduced by the Ivory Coast, was sponsored by Council members belonging to the Group of 77.

Having once revised their text, the sponsors further orally amended it to have the Assembly decide to take a decision on, rather than to consider convening, a further pledging conference. A second amendment changed an invitation to a request that the Secretary-General provide ECA with the necessary resources for it to play its role as lead agency for the Decade.

On 3 August, the Council adopted the text, also without vote, as resolution 1979/61, thus recommending a text for adoption by the Assembly. The Assembly adopted it without vote on 9 November as resolution 34/15, following its approval, also without vote, by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 29 October.

By this resolution, the Assembly, after noting with satisfaction the Secretary-General's progress report containing the report of the Conference of African Ministers, took note of the global strategy for the implementation of the programme for the Decade, noting the estimated cost of $8 billion for the first phase. It noted with satisfaction ECA's role as the lead agency, OAU's co-operation and that of the specialized agencies and UNDP. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to continue organizing a pledging conference of donors to take place as soon as possible, invited all Member States, international, multinational and African regional banking and financial institutions to participate and pledge generous contributions, requested the Secretary-General to submit a report in 1980 on the outcome of the pledging conference, and decided to take a decision, in the light of that report, on the convening of a further pledging conference. It called on specialized agencies and United Nations organs to continue their material and technical support to ECA for implementing the Decade's programme of action, and asked the Secretary-General to provide ECA with the necessary resources.

Statute of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

On 3 August, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/72 adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of its First Committee-which, on 30 July had similarly approved the text as orally proposed by its Chairman-decided to bring to the attention of the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session the revised statute of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning.

The statute was annexed to a resolution adopted on 27 March by ECA. It had previously been submitted to the Assembly in 1977¹² and remanded to ECA for proposed revisions, which were subsequently endorsed by ECA'S Executive Committee. By the resolution, the Commission also urged member States to pay their arrears of financial contributions to the Institute and to pay their annual contributions on time, requested UNDP co-operation through resident representatives in facilitating collection, and asked for scholarships and funds to meet training and staffing costs at the Institute.

Also by decision 1979/72, the Council took note of the report of ECA for the period 5 May 1978 to 28 March 1979.

On 20 December, the Assembly, in adopting decision 34/454 without vote, approved the revised statute. The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, acting on an oral suggestion by its Chairman, had approved the decision the previous day, without objection.

Training courses for

ECA translators/précis writers

On 20 December, the Assembly adopted, with out vote, section V of resolution 34/233, by which it requested the Secretary-General to review the results of the second (October 1979-June 1980) training course for English and French translators/précis writers at ECA (the first such course had been held from September 1978 to May 1979). The Secretary-General was asked to submit a progress report in 1980 so that the Assembly might review the matter before fully committing funds for this purpose for 1980-1981, estimated by the Secretary-General to cost $362,300 for two such courses.

This decision had been approved by the Fifth Committee without vote on 27 November, on an oral suggestion by its Chairman. A recommendation to that effect was proposed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Economic Commission for Western Asia

The course of events in Lebanon since March 1978 made the relocation of the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) to permanent headquarters at Baghdad, Iraq, of primary importance to the Commission. During 1979, it was able to implement the greater part of the work programme approved in 1978 and to meet assistance requests by member countries.

Follow-up action by the ECWA secretariat of resolutions adopted in 1978 included: a study of the situation of potentials of the Palestinian people, for which a director was appointed effective 15 March 1979; a census of the Palestinian Arab people; co-ordination of the regional strategy on labour migration; intensification of cooperation and co-ordinated activities with Arab and regional organizations and a study on the topic; feasibility studies on the establishment of an Arab centre for the transfer and development of technology; and participation in a regional meeting on women and development, held at Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, from 10 to 13 December, preparatory to the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women.

The sixth session of ECWA was held at Baghdad from 28 April to 2 May. The Commission adopted a resolution by which it decided to begin its move to Baghdad on the expiry of the five-year transitional period at Beirut, Lebanon, and with effect from 9 September 1979. However, in view of the financial implications of relocation, it was decided, that the move should take place in accordance with a timetable to be agreed on by the Government of Iraq and the United Nations.

The Commission adopted a resolution on 29 April by which it decided to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that Egypt's membership in ECWA be suspended.

It decided also to set up an intergovernmental committee of development experts from its member States to prepare a report on the views of the ECWA region on the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s), as an ECWA contribution to preparatory work for the strategy.

By other decisions, the Commission: approved a plan of action to combat desertification in the ECWA region; called for strengthening cooperation among developing countries in their development objectives; recommended establishment of a cartographic unit within the ECWA secretariat; asked for recommendations and proposals for follow-up action on a study of the development of an integrated transport system in Western Asia; urged completion of an assessment and evaluation of the state of development finance and administration in the region's countries; recommended the establishment of a regional project to help member countries increase their capabilities in the field of external trade policy and planning services; and requested the Secretary-General to expedite implementation of the General Assembly's 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, 13 particularly as far as it related to the regional commissions.

The Commission approved a programme of work and priorities for 1980-1981, giving priority to agriculture, industrial development, science and technology, natural resources, social development and human settlements, population and statistics.

Development planning

The 1979 economic survey of ECWA countries focused on the final biennial review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s).¹⁴ A position paper on ECWA's viewpoint on the new strategy for the 1980s was prepared for the June 1979 session of the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy. A meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Development Experts from ECWA member countries was convened in August to provide a regional input to the work of the Preparatory Committee.

As a prototype model for non-oil economies of the region, a long-term macro-economic mode of the Syrian Arab Republic's economy was constructed.

The Commission participated in the March/ April session of the Committee for Development Planning in New York and in a regional development seminar at Damascus from 19 to 23 May, to which it contributed a paper on new development concepts and strategies in the Arab world. Consultations with the League of Arab States and the Council of Arab Economic Unity were held to define areas of co-operation.

A study of barriers facing products of export interest to the ECWA countries in selected developed markets was completed, and one on economic co-operation and integration in Western Asia was in preparation. A draft study was completed analysing levels and structures of wages and other income from work in countries of the region.

Work continued on an evaluation of government budgetary systems and its role in development planning in selected countries of the region, and a report on the status of public administration and finance in Western Asian countries was completed.

Studies were also completed on laws and regulations pertaining to foreign business operations, with specific reference to transnational corporations in the ECWA region, and on practices of transnational corporations in the oil industry, and a bibliographical survey of literature on the topic in the region was begun. Work of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations continued on a global survey of government institutions dealing with those corporations.

Food and agriculture

In connexion with the establishment of a reliable data system, work continued on the second issue of the bulletin Agriculture and Development.

To improve agricultural planning, sectoral and subsectoral studies were undertaken with a view to assessing the production potential in relation to the existing and anticipated domestic and export demands for major agricultural commodities.

Lebanon was provided with advisory services in regard to the reconstruction of southern Lebanon.

The Commission collaborated with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in preparing a study on Agriculture: Toward 2000 as it related to the Near East and north Africa, prepared a regional plan of action to combat desertification in the ECWA region, and joined an FAO identification mission on feed and livestock analysis to the Arabian peninsula.

In the field of enhancing food security, an analysis of production and consumption problems was prepared for the World Food Council. A study on food security in Oman was completed, and a mission was launched to Democratic Yemen and Yemen to follow up recommendations made in an earlier study on the subregion.

A comparative analysis of agricultural development plans of selected ECWA countries was made, and data and information were collected on farming systems under dryland farming

Studies were completed on the pastoral system in the ECWA region and on share-cropping and land tenure in Yemen. A discussion paper was prepared on major socio-economic policy issues of feed development in the region's arid areas for the FAO seminar on rainfed agriculture in Oman from 5 to 10 May.

Industrial development

The first part of a study on co-ordination of industrialization plans and programmes was completed, reviewing policies and other instruments influencing industrial development in the region.

Work continued on elaboration of the potentials of the following engineering industries: telecommunications, electrical and construction equipment and fabricated process equipment for the chemical industry, and oil refining. Country surveys on the general status of the chemical industry in Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic, undertaken in 1978, were finalized.

As part of the preparations for the Third General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in 1980, in-depth studies analysing past trends and problems of industrialization were carried out, in co-operation with UNIDO, for Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Assistance to Governments included: preparation for Lebanon of papers on industrialization policy objectives and strategies, and assistance in formulating proposals for the development of rural industries in southern Lebanon; and assistance to Jordan for development of a joint facility for fertilizer and mining companies and for development of inorganic chemical industries.

Natural resources, science and technology

Medium- and long-term projections of the demand for and supply of energy in the ECWA region were presented to the first Arab Energy Conference held in March at Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates. Another study submitted to the Conference covered aspects of the role and operation of energy institutions in three major oilexporting countries (Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates), in two other oil exporters (Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic) and in Democratic Yemen and Yemen. The first draft of an action programme for developing the energy economy of the least developed ECWA countries was completed. Work was begun on the implications of the economics of oil refining for the future utilization of crude-oil production and on non-governmental sources of energy in the Arab world.

Work was started on an expert report on improving national mining codes and assessing the situation with regard to full sovereignty of member countries over their mineral resources, and on an analysis of technical documentation and the collection and processing of mineral economic information with regard to current and future supply and demand.

A preliminary report on the introduction of an adequate system for collecting, compiling and analysing water resources data in the region was completed and circulated. Another study assessed the water resources situation in ECWA countries.

The Commission organized the second regional water meeting from 30 December 1978 to 3 January 1979 at Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, which recommended follow-up action on the Mar del Plata Action Plan adopted at the 1977 United Nations Water Conference. 15 It set up a five-member intergovernmental committee to study the feasibility of establishing a regional water resources council.

The Commission also participated in the first meeting of a technical support team for activities relating to the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1980-1990) proposed in the Mar del Plata Action Plan and in an expert group meeting at Tunis, Tunisia, from 11 to 16 July, which resulted in the preparation of a draft constitution for a proposed Arab Centre for the Transfer and Development of Technology, based largely on an ECWA feasibility study.

Work continued on a project focusing on the role of consulting, engineering and design capabilities in the selection, transfer and development of technology in selected countries, and a report on aspects of the status of computer technology in some ECWA countries was completed.

Population

Preparatory work on a census of Palestinians continued; a census expert was recruited, and advisory and technical committees were formed. A demographic socio-economic survey of nine towns in Oman was completed and published, for which project ECWA was executing agency.

Advisory service missions on population data collection were sent to Democratic Yemen, Jordan, Oman, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen.

As a step towards improving understanding of population and housing censuses in the region, particularly in view of national activities associated with the 1980 round of population censuses, a comparative study of census questionnaires was completed.

The biannual Population Bulletin of the United Nations Economic Commission for Western Asia continued to be the major scientific journal in the field of population in the region, and the Population Reference Centre became a regional focal point for research and information on the topic.

The second Regional Population Conference of ECWA was held at Damascus from 1 to 6 December and its recommendations distributed.

¹⁵ See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 555.

A major study on the legal aspects of intraregional migration was completed. Work continued on an Arabic manual of population terminology containing concepts and a dictionary of demographic terms in English, French and Arabic.

Transport and communications

A study of the master plan for the development of an integrated transport system in 12 countries of the region was completed.

A seminar on port operations, jointly organized by ECWA and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, was held at Basra, Iraq, in November.

The Commission participated in the Coordination Committee meetings of the International Telecommunication Union on a Middle East/Mediterranean regional telecommunications network project.

Social development and human settlements

To implement ECWA's regional plan of action for the integration of women in development, studies were made on recent changes and trends in the situation of women in the ECWA region and on the social and economic conditions of Palestinian women, and a report on special measures of assistance to them was prepared.

In preparation for the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, a regional preparatory meeting at Damascus in December approved a regional programme of action for the second half of the Decade (1981-1985). Three projects were completed to implement the programme financed by the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women: a workshop on integrated development and extension services for rural women, held at Baghdad; a workshop on national development planning for the integration of women in development, held at Damascus; and a training workshop for child-care housemothers/teachers and administrators, held at Al-Smoud, Lebanon. The Commission participated in an interagency mission to assess efforts to increase the participation of women in agriculture and rural development in the Syrian Arab Republic.

Work continued on collecting statistics for a survey of social services in ECWA countries. Research began on programmes for rehabilitation of the disabled, with special focus on Lebanon, and a research study on social development plans and programmes in Democratic Yemen, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen was completed.

The rural communications methods in the region were reviewed. Planning for their improvement was carried out in collaboration with FAO and the International Centre for Agricultural Research in Dry Areas. Work continued on a study of organizational structures dealing with integrated rural development in selected ECWA countries.

As part of a socio-economic study of the Palestinian Arab people and their potential, a survey of pre-1948 Palestinian society in its homeland was completed and a questionnaire developed and pre-tested.

Work on a study on housing finance in the region was completed, and a background report on human settlements was submitted to the Commission on Human Settlements. An overview study of human settlements issues in the region was presented by ECWA to a regional meeting on human settlements finance and management, at Al-Ain, United Arab Emirates, in November.

Statistics

Statistical data was collected and compiled for publication in Statistical Indicators of the Arab World and Statistical Abstract of the Region of the Economic Commission for Western Asia. Studies on the state of foreign trade and industrial statistics in the ECWA countries were being researched. Bulletin No. 2 of the National Accounts Studies and the first bulletin of Consumer and Wholesale Price Indices in the ECWA Region (1960-1977) were published. A summary of the Manual on National Accounts at Constant Prices was prepared.

Technical assistance was provided to Yemen in setting up and publishing, jointly with ECWA, national accounts of Yemen for 1969-1970, to Democratic Yemen in finalizing a first statistical yearbook, and to the Arab Institute for Training and Research in Statistics, Baghdad, in setting up a working group on national accounts at constant prices and in preparing and conducting a training workshop on commodity balances and input-output analysis.

Draft preliminary estimates of real gross domestic products by kind of economic activity for the Arab world (1960-1977) were published. With the United Nations Statistical Office, ECWA organized the first technical meeting of Arab statisticians on national household surveys, and participated in a consultative meeting on the National Household Survey Capability Programme in New York.

Technical co-operation

Nine regional advisers assisted ECWA member countries, at their request, in various fields of activity or shared their expertise at meetings, seminars and conferences.

The Arab Planning Institute in Kuwait (for socio-economic planning) and the Arab Institute for Training and Research in Statistics also received the services of ECWA regional advisers in training courses.

Environment co-ordination

The Environment Co-ordination Unit was established on 1 June 1979. In addition to co-ordination activities with the United Nations Environment Programme and other United Nations bodies, the Unit focused on preparations for a 1980 regional seminar at Beirut on alternative patterns of development and life-styles in Western Asia.

Consideration by the Economic and Social Council

On 23 July, during the Economic and Social Council's second regular session of 1979, the Chairman of the First (Economic) Committee informed the Committee that, following informal consultations with interested members, a consensus had been reached on questions arising from the reports of ECWA on its fifth (1978) and sixth (1979) sessions. On the basis of that consensus, four draft decisions were before the Committee. By those texts, the Council would decide to: (1) approve the relocation of ECWA headquarters from Beirut to Baghdad, in response to Iraq's invitation; (2) postpone consideration of ECWA's recommendation in its 29 April 1979 resolution on suspending Egypt's membership, so that its membership would remain unaffected; (3) endorse the Commission's medium-term plan for 1980-1983 and its programme of work and priorities for 1980-1981; and (4) take note of all other matters referred to in the Commission's two reports.

The Chairman orally amended the decision concerning Egypt, in accordance with agreement reached during the consultations, by changing the words "so that" to "thereby." The draft decisions were then approved by consensus.

On 27 July, the Council adopted without vote the Committee's recommendations as decision 1979/49

Algeria, Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic and observers from Qatar and the Palestine Liberation Organization welcomed the decision to approve relocation of ECWA's headquarters to Baghdad, but expressed regret at the decision to postpone consideration of Egypt's membership in ECWA. Algeria said that, while it had not opposed the consensus, it had the strongest reservations on the latter decision, since the countries of the region considered Egypt's continued presence in ECWA to be undesirable. In view of the fact that all States members of ECWA had severed political and economic ties with Egypt following that country's signing of a peace treaty with Israel on 26 March 1979, Iraq said it would be difficult, if not impossible, for ECWA'S objectives to be achieved as long as Egypt remained a member.

The Egyptian observer, expressing appreciation of the consensus, said ECWA'S mandate, which was solely economic and technical, had directed it to take no action in respect of a member without the agreement of that member. Moreover, Egypt was a member of ECWA by virtue of its membership in the United Nations, and suspending membership went beyond ECWA'S or the Council's competence.

The United States welcomed the consensus as confirming that Egypt's membership in ECWA remained in full force. Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Economic Community's member States, said they accepted and supported the consensus.

Long-term trends in the economic development of regions

The Committee for Development Planning, in its report on its March/April 1979 session, stated that the adoption of an international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s) should be followed by a continuing evolution of regional and subregional strategies to elaborate more specific goals and policy measures for regional needs and circumstances. The Committee's views were based in large part on the findings and conclusions of two working groups -on quantitative studies and on development strategies and policies - that had met in November and December 1978

The regional commissions should serve as major instruments for designing and implementing regional and subregional programmes of action. Regional structures did not have the necessary capacity or responsibility for the creative monitoring of new-policy performance, problems and needs. The commissions should be assigned specific tasks in the formulation, review and appraisal of the regional dimensions of the strategy.

The review process should be centred in the sectors and regions, and monitoring should result in more focused reviews, both at the functional sectoral level and at the regional level. Organizations should take particular care to coordinate sectoral regional reviews as far as possible.

(See also p. 471.)

The Secretary-General provided the General Assembly with a background note in September on the United Nations examination since 1977 of general long-term trends in economic development, focusing on the elaboration of development perspectives that might be of assistance in the formulation of a new international development strategy.

A resolution on long-term trends in economic development was introduced in the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by Poland, on behalf of its 33 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). Its purpose, Poland said, was to recommend continuation of the examination of long-term economic and social trends, to strengthen the scientific research input to policy formulation and to promote a long-term approach to economic co-operation.

The Committee approved the text on 19 November without vote and it was similarly adopted by the Assembly on 29 November as resolution 34/57. By the resolution, the Assembly took note of the activities carried out within the United Nations system relating to long-term economic trends in the regions of the world and of the Secretary-General's progress report. It asked him and United Nations organizations and bodies to continue their examination of long-term economic and social trends. It also asked him, working in consultation with the Committee for Development Planning and taking into account the international development strategy for the third development decade as well as similar work by United Nations organs, particularly the regional commissions and those working on the development strategy, to submit his views in 1980 on the possible outline and method of preparation of an over-all socio-economic perspective of the development of the world economy up to the year 2000, with special emphasis on the period up to 1990 and the problems of the developing countries. The Assembly invited all States and United Nations organizations and bodies to contribute to this text. The Economic and Social Council was to consider in 1980 an outline and in 1981 a preliminary draft of the over-all socio-economic perspective ensuing from the analysis. The Assembly would review progress at its regular 1981

The text was orally amended by the sponsors to have the Secretary-General, in submitting his views to the Assembly, take into account the international development strategy for the 1980s. Another amendment was to ask for Council consideration of the requested documents at its resumed second regular sessions of 1980 and 1981 rather than at earlier sessions during those years.

Resolution 34/57, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/728, adopted without vote by Assembly on 29 November 1979, meeting 82.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3508(XXX) of 15 December 1975 on the examination of long-term trends in the economic development of the regions of the world, which initiated activities in that field in the United Nations system, and its resolution 32/57 of 8 December 1977, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 2090(LXIII) of 25 July 1977,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Conscious that better knowledge of long-term trends in economic and social development can form a sound scientific basis for policies and decision-making processes in relation to development strategies and economic co-operation on a national, regional and global scale, thereby usefully supplementing other efforts towards this end within the United Nations system,

Considering that the prevailing economic and social conditions in the regions of the world and on a global scale call for international economic co-operation to be given a long-term dimension,

Aware of the need for the continuation of efforts to expand international economic co-operation as a development factor of ever-growing importance and an indispensable instrument in the process of establishing the new international economic order as well as for the international development strategy for the 1980s.

Mindful of existing interrelationships and the importance of an interdisciplinary approach to issues of development and international economic co-operation,

Taking into account the views on long-term trends in world economic development submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1978,

- 1. Takes note of the activities carried out heretofore within the United Nations system relating to long-term economic trends in the regions of the world and of the Secretary-General's progress report on the subject;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations organs, organizations and bodies concerned to continue their analytical work devoted to the examination of long-term economic and social trends and to make it available in the process of formulation of economic policies and decision-making, in particular with regard to the development of international co-operation:
- 3. Further requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee for Development Planning and taking into account the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session his views on the possible outline and method of preparation of an over-all socioeconomic perspective of the development of the world economy up to the year 2000, with special emphasis on the period up to 1990 and, in particular, on the problems of the developing countries;
- 4. Emphasizes the necessity of conducting the abovementioned work in close relationship with other similar work carried out by various organs of the United Nations system, in particular by the regional commissions and those working on the development strategy;
- 5. invites all States, as well as the United Nations organizations, organs and bodies concerned, to contribute in their respective areas of competence to the implementation of the recommendations contained in paragraphs 2 and 3 above;
- 6. Requests the Economic and Social Council to consider at its resumed second regular sessions of 1980 and 1981, respectively, an outline and a preliminary draft of the over-all socio-economic perspective ensuing from the analysis stipulated in paragraphs 2 and 3 above;
- 7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item entitled "Long-term trends in economic development" to review the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Regional co-operation and development

Both the Economic and Social Council and General Assembly took decisions during 1979 in pursuit of a policy of decentralization from United Nations Headquarters to the regional commissions, and on the commissions' role as executing agencies for technical co-operation projects.

Reports of the Secretary-General

In a report to the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council on progress made in implementing Council resolution 1978/74 on regional co-operation and development, 16 the Secretary-General gave an account of actions taken at recent sessions of the regional commissions.

The report outlined the commissions' role as executing agencies for technical co-operation projects in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979, 17 by which such a role was to be assigned to the commissions as part of an over-all exercise in restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system 18 The Secretary-General stated that the transfer to the commissions of responsibility for the regional and subregional projects selected for decentralization was proceeding satisfactorily. The requirements of the Organization as a whole for co-ordination and exchange of information arising from those decentralization measures were currently under consideration.

The report cited commission programmes for promotion of regional, subregional and interregional co-operation. Another section indicated how co-operation activities had intensified between the commissions and other regional and subregional bodies in their regions.

The final section of the report discussed the rationalization of the organizational structure of the commissions and the streamlining of their subsidiary machinery.

The Secretary-General also reported to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session on meetings of the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions at Rabat, Morocco, from 18 to 20 March and at Geneva on 10 and 11 July.

The discussions summarized in the report related to preparations for a new development strategy for the 1980s, decentralization of economic and social activities of the commissions, and new reporting procedures concerning regional co-operation. Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries was also considered (see p. 489).

Concerning preparations for a new strategy, it was felt that the strategy should not concentrate only on international aspects of development; consideration should also be given to the different aspects linking national with international efforts. In this respect, the regional approach seemed as vital as the national and global approaches in preparations. The meetings believed that the regional component would also contribute a strong element of realism to the global effort during implementation. In statements to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy in June, the Executive Secretaries had underscored the differing conditions in their respective regions, emphasizing the vital importance of incorporating a regional dimension in the new strategy.

The Secretary-General, in his report on the meetings, indicated his intention to approach decentralization as a continuing exercise and as a functional process which should take full account of the distinct mandates and special characteristics of the regional commissions within the over-all structure of the United Nations. Regional work and co-ordination relating to human settlements and transnational corporations sectors were also reviewed with the executive heads of the United Nations centres for those programmes.

The meetings identified the following broad criteria which should guide decentralization of activities to the commissions: effectiveness and efficiency, concentration of information, and multisectoral requirements of activities. The Executive Secretaries expressed satisfaction with the progress in the decentralization of operational activities to the commissions. They agreed at Rabat that a follow-up technical meeting on decentralization of activities in priority programmes should be convened in New York before the mid-year meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC). At the Geneva meetings, they emphasized the need to expedite decentralization of activities and redeployment of resources from Headquarters to the commissions in response to legislative mandates. Priority areas identified were water, transport., public administration, rural and social development, and certain activities concerned with population and global economic surveys.

Concerning new reporting procedures on regional co-operation, the meetings agreed that it would be appropriate to improve the format and content of the Secretary-General's reports on meetings of the Executive Secretaries to highlight significant developments within each region and draw the Council's attention to specific issues requiring its consideration.

A second part of the Secretary-General's report, issued as an addendum, contained an analytical summary of the annual reports of the regional commissions.

The technical meeting on decentralization of activities in priority programmes was held in New York on 4 and 5 May, at which the areas and types of activities which would be amenable to or required improved distribution between Headquarters and the regional commissions were considered.

Consideration by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly

The First (Economic) Committee of the Economic and Social Council considered regional co-operation and development at meetings in July and August. A resolution sponsored by Canada, Finland, Ghana, Iraq, Kenya, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines and Uganda was approved without vote on 1 August.

 $^{^{\}mbox{\tiny 17}}$ Ibid., p. 456, resolution 33/202. See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 438, resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, esp. annex, sect. IV.

On 3 August, the Council similarly adopted the text as resolution 1979/64.

The Council thereby took note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1978/74, his report on the meetings of the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions, and the section relating to structures for regional and interregional co-operation of 'his first progress report for 1979 on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system (see below). It invited the Secretary-General to pursue actively the process of decentralization to the commissions, in particular to expedite the decentralization of activities, including redeployment of resources, in the priority programme areas identified at the meetings of the Executive Secretaries, and to report to the General Assembly later in the year. The Council welcomed the consideration being given by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the commissions to enhancing the collective involvement of the developing countries of each region in determining priorities, and invited CPC to undertake in 1980 a full review of policy and programme issues relating to the distribution of tasks and responsibilities between the commissions and other United Nations units.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council in 1980 on measures taken to give effect to the above provisions and on: consultations on the commissions' role in determining priorities for intercountry programmes; measures taken to enhance their capacity to serve as executing agencies for technical co-operation projects, in accordance with the provisions of the Assembly's 1977 restructuring resolution containing the recommendation that the commissions be enabled to function expeditiously as executing agencies, and modalities therefor; 19 steps taken to strengthen the commissions' role in exercising team leadership and responsibility for interagency regional co-ordination and co-operation; progress made in rationalizing commission structures; and measures taken to enhance the commissions' role in strengthening interregional co-operation.

The text as approved had been revised by the sponsors, which accepted a further oral amendment by Argentina to refer-in regard to the request for a report on measures taken to enhance the capacity of the regional commissions to serve as executing agencies for technical co-operation projects -to the relevant provision of the Assembly's 1977 restructuring resolution. Argentina said the purpose of the amendment was to make it clear that the projects meant were those of the types indicated in the Assembly's resolution.

A third report by the Secretary-General in this connexion was his July first progress report for 1979 on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, submitted to the Council and subsequently to the Assembly. It outlined action taken to restructure the United Nations system along the lines approved by the Assembly in 1977, ²⁰ including those pertaining to structures for regional and interregional co-operation (see p. 520).

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in November a further report on restructuring (see p. 520) in the context of the Assembly's 1977 resolution. The document also responded to the request for a report by the Economic and Social Council, contained in resolution 1979/64.

The report described decentralization activities and redeployment of resources from the Secretariat Department of International Economic and Social Affairs to the regional commissions, including procedures to be followed and programme proposals to develop the commissions' capacities in the areas of economic surveys and related reports, rural development, social development and population. Means of decentralizing activities and resources from the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development to the regional commissions were outlined, as were regional commission proposals for strengthening their work on water resources (in the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific), on transport (in the Economic Commission for Europe), on financial management (in the Economic Commission for Western Asia), and on public administration and finance (in the Economic Commission for Africa), and related adjustments in the Department's activity. Proposals for decentralizing activities and resources from other organizational units included those relating to human settlements and transnational corporations. The report also presented programme and budget proposals for enabling the commissions to fulfil their envisaged

The proposals in the report constituted the first phase of decentralization and strengthening, with the CPC review in 1980 to constitute the second phase.

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/206, by which it took note of the Secretary-General's November progress report and Council resolution 1979/64. It emphasized the need for more vigorous action to enable the commissions to play their role fully as the main economic and social development centres in the United Nations system for their respective regions, requesting the Secretary-General to intensify decentralization to the commissions, through redeployment of existing Headquarters posts and other measures contemplated in his recent reports. It asked him to support cpc's forthcoming policy review. (For details, see p. 520; for page reference to text of resolution 34/206, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Convinced of the need for further measures to strengthen the capacity of the regional commissions to promote and support co-operation in their respective regions and to enable them fully to play their role, under the authority of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as the main economic and social development centres within the United Nations system for their respective regions,

Noting with satisfaction the criteria for decentralization elaborated at the meetings of the Executive Secretaries, as set out in paragraph 26 of that report,

Statistical developments

Activities in 1979

During 1979, the Statistical Office of the United Nations continued to collect and publish statistics showing major global, regional and national economic and social characteristics, including data on external trade, industrial production, prices, construction, distributive trade, transport, energy, national economic accounts, population, migration and vital events.

In celebration of the publication of the thirtieth issue of the Demographic Yearbook, a Historical Supplement to the Demographic Yearbook, 1978 was published. This presented country statistics covering a 30-year period on population size, age, sex, urban/rural residence, natality, mortality and nuptiality, as well as selected statistics derived from these components of population change.

Also issued during the year were: a study on the development of integrated data bases for social, economic and demographic statistics, focusing on the techniques of collecting, storing, managing and disseminating data; and a publication on the organization of national statistical services and related management issues, which superseded the 1954 Handbook of Statistical Organiza tion.

Long-term statistical training facilities continued to operate under United Nations auspices in Iraq (the Arab Institute for Training and Research in Statistics, Baghdad), Japan (the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific, Tokyo) and Uganda (the Institute of Statistics and Applied Economics, Kampala).

Report of the Statistical Commission

The twentieth session of the Statistical Commission was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 20 February to 2 March 1979. During the session, the Commission endorsed the 1983 World Programme of Industrial Statistics and requested that draft recommendations for the Programme be prepared. It also recommended that national, regional and global over-all energy balances be developed and that a handbook of conversion factors and units of measurement for use in energy statistics be published.

The Commission endorsed proposals for updating the Results of a Pilot Study in Maritime Transport for the Years 7966-7968, published in 1976, encouraged further promotional work on a uniform system for collecting economic statistics on shipping and requested that proposals for the revision of International Trade Statistics: Concepts and Definitions be examined and recommendations prepared.

The Commission supported the convening of an expert group to consider the direction of future work on the United Nations System of National Accounts (SNA), requested publication of guidelines on statistics of tangible assets, agreed that a provisional version of a manual on public sector statistics, incorporating a classification of the functions of government, be published, and further agreed that methodological studies on the links between SNA and the System of Balances of the National Economy should continue, with major attention given to total consumption of the population, capital formation, institutional and socio-economic sectoring, and services.

The Commission stressed the importance of the International Comparison Project (ICP) and of its extension to more countries and supported emphasis on increasing the regional commissions' involvement in IMP work and developing comparisons within regions. It also strongly endorsed the continuation of United Nations Statistical Office work on harmonization of economic classifications.

After consideration of a report on the Census Programme as a whole, the Commission adopted principles and recommendations for population and housing censuses and requested that they be published and widely distributed. It also requested revision and publication of a report on methods of collecting, organizing and retrieving social statistics to achieve integration, asked that a report on social indicators be updated and made available to countries and international authorities, and agreed that work on a classification by age group should continue and that a comprehensive study of national experiences in time-use statistics should be published to promote a broad exchange of experience among interested countries and international agencies.

Development of guidelines on concepts, definitions, classifications and methodologies relating to environment statistics, exploration of the feasibility of developing an over-all structure for their organization, setting up pilot country-studies and completion of a survey of country practices were also called for by the Commission. After discussion of a report on the setting of priorities in national statistics, it also suggested that further work in this area might best be carried out through an exchange of experience between Member States.

The Commission reviewed a report of the Secretary-General on achievements in coordination in selected areas and international statistical programmes for 1979 to 1983. It approved several major statistical policy objectives, including the following:

-to develop, establish and improve international recommendations concerning statistics, including classifications, guidelines and methodology;

-to assist developing countries to develop further their statistical capability and the statistics needed for evaluating and directing their economic and social development;

- to co-ordinate the statistical p_{TO} grammes of the various international agencies
- to collect comprehensive, reliable and internationally comparable statistics;

-to create, maintain and co-ordinate statistical data bases in order to improve the accessibility, quality, variety and timeliness of statistical data and to disseminate the statistics; and

-to provide statistical information, analysis and support services to the United Nations sys tem.

The Commission also considered reports on: international technical co-operation in statistics for 1979 to 1983, which for the first time included information on bilateral assistance in statistics; training of statistical personnel; technical co-operation activities in statistical data processing; and the National Household Survey Capability Programme (see section below for details on the Programme).

Decisions of the Economic and Social Council

On 9 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted, without vote, resolution 1979/5, by which it noted the Statistical Commission's strong endorsement of the National Household Survey Capability Programme and reconfirmed the value and importance of the Programme as a major activity aimed at building enduring capabilities in developing countries to conduct their own integrated survey programmes and to generate continuous and integrated data on important social and economic subjects, in line with national needs and priorities. The Council recommended that provision be made for technical co-operation among developing countries within the Programme and noted the important role of the regional commissions in the Programme. It urged the developing countries to take maximum advantage of the Programme and to prepare long-term plans for survey data collection, within the context of their national and statistical development plans, and urged multilateral and bilateral donor agencies to provide resources to help the developing countries implement their survey development plans within the framework of the Programme.

The Council requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the regional commissions, specialized agencies and other multilateral and bilateral donor agencies, to co-ordinate household survey technical co-operation activities within the context of the Programme, to propose technical standards and procedures for these survey activities and to invite the International Statistical Institute and other specialized institutes to contribute their expertise.

The text, proposed by the Statistical Commission, was approved without vote by the First Committee on 3 May 1979.

The Commission had also recommended that the Council take note of its report on its twentieth session and approve the objectives and work programme recommended therein. Before approving the text without objection on 3 May, the First Committee included a French oral amendment to add that it was understood that questions falling within the budgetary sphere would be reserved wholly for decision by the competent deliberative bodies. The Council adopted the text without vote on 9 May as decision 1979/16.

Also on the Commission's recommendation, the Council on 4 May, by decision 1979/11, rescheduled the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination to meet at Geneva in October 1979, and, by decision 1979/81 of 3 August, scheduled the next session of the Commission for February 1981 in New York (for page references to texts of decisions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

The Working Group met on 29 and 30 Otto-ber to discuss the Commission's 1981 agenda, data-collection activities, co-ordination of questionnaires, the National Household Survey Capability Programme, preparation of a technical co-operation document, and terminology and translations.

Social questions

Social policy and development planning

World social situation

The General Assembly, at its regular 1979 session, considered the 1978 Report on the World Social Situation, presented in preparation for discussion of the new international development strategy for the forthcoming development decade (the 1980s). The Report summarized social trends and conditions, provided an overview of the international context of social change, analysed global trends in population, employment, growth and distribution of income and private consumption, production and distribution of social services and emerging social concerns. A supplement to the Report, entitled Patterns of Government Expenditure on Social Services, reviewed recent public expenditure for education, health, social security and welfare, and housing in developing countries, developed market economies and centrally planned economies in the 1970s. A second annex to the Report contained a summary of measures adopted by Member States and international organizations to ensure effective implementation of the rights and principles laid down in the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons.1

The Commission for Social Development took note of the Report on 9 March 1979 and the Economic and Social Council, on 9 May by decision 1979/22, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit it and its supplement, as well as several other documents, to the General Assembly.

Decision 1979/22 was adopted by the Council, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Social) Committee, which had approved on 19 April, also without vote, a text orally proposed by its Chairman that transmittal of the documents be authorized without debate. In the Council, a USSR oral amendment deleted reference to debate.

With the adoption of resolution 34/152 on 17 December, the General Assembly noted the slow rate of implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development² and called for mobilization of United Nations resources to achieve its objectives. It also noted the disappointing progress made towards realizing the development goals of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,³ and expressed regret that most developed countries had not achieved the specific targets set.

It reaffirmed that all forms of dependence and oppression, such as aggression, foreign occupation, colonialism, neocolonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination, were major obstacles to world social and economic progress and must be eliminated. Further, it reaffirmed the socioeconomic development objectives established during the 1970s regarding the elimination of malnutrition, unemployment and illiteracy and concerning water supplies, life expectancy, the integration of women in development, and health.

The Assembly called on Member States to formulate and implement policy measures to achieve their economic and social objectives in employment, education, health, nutrition, housing, child well-being, and youth and women's participation in development, and recommended that they adopt measures to ensure that all sectors of society participated effectively as an integral element in development plans.

The Assembly then, among other things, emphasized the importance of establishing the new international economic order for social progress, and stressed that rapid social progress in developing countries would require more multilateral and bilateral financial and/or technical assistance adapted to new and appropriate technology and rendered within the framework of the development plans of developing countries.

The Assembly decided that future reports on the world social situation must contribute to the identification of emerging social trends of international concern and to discussion of relationships among major development issues, and requested the Secretary-General to issue a report on the world social situation every three years and to include a report on social progress made during the third United Nations development decade. Further, it requested that the Secretary-General organize, within the programme of advisory services, an international seminar to compare policies, institutions and experiences of Member States in the participation of all sectors of society in their economic and social development and on collective bargaining, worker participation in management and workers' selfmanagement. It requested him to submit a report on the results of the seminar to the General Assembly in 1982.

By a second section of the resolution, the Assembly noted that the methods for collecting, analysing, interpreting and evaluating information and data used to study the world social situation should be further improved. It requested the Secretary-General to undertake, in close cooperation with the executive heads of concerned organizations in the United Nations system, appropriate measures to improve the methodology used in preparing reports on the world social situation and the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development.

Resolution 34/152 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The text, sponsored by India on behalf of the United Nations Member States belonging to the "Group of 77" developing countries, was approved by consensus by the Committee on 4 December. In the Committee, Ireland requested a separate vote on the operative paragraph by which the Assembly expressed regret that most developed countries had not achieved the specific targets of the International Development Strategy for the Second Development Decade. The paragraph was approved by 106 votes to 0, with 18 abstentions.

Ireland also observed that certain aspects of the text- concerning that paragraph in particular, as well as the question of the improvement of methodology —created problems for it, and it had therefore abstained. The United States said that nothing in that or any other paragraph should be interpreted as signifying that it had changed its position regarding the Strategy's objectives. Australia found the paragraph unbalanced; it felt it disregarded the fact that some developing as well as developed countries had not complied with their responsibilities.

By a decision on the Declaration on Social Progress and Development (resolution 34/59, adopted on 29 November), the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to inform it, in annexes to the reports on the world social situation, of measures adopted by Governments and international organizations to realize the provisions of the Declaration. (For details, see section immediately following.)

Implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development

A report on the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development was submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly's regular 1979 session through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council.

The report analysed progress made in achieving some of the Declaration's objectives in nutrition, health, housing, sanitation, education, employment and income distribution, discussed the efficacy of the means and methods called for in the Declaration and noted new approaches being developed to implement it. The report found that, with regard to the factors analysed, a disappointing rate of progress had been made to implement the Declaration, particularly with regard to the distribution of benefits among population groups. It noted that new approaches were being devised and new efforts were being made which could produce a faster rate of progress in the future. It advised further work on measures to implement key areas of the Declaration.

On 6 March 1979, the Commission for Social Development took note of the report and transmitted it to the Economic and Social Council, which in turn, by decision 1979/22 of 9 May (see section above), authorized the Secretary-General to transmit it to the General Assembly at its 1979 session.

On the same date, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1979/15, on the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, which had been proposed by the Commission for Social Development and approved without vote by the Second Committee on 27 April. By this action, the Council recommended the adoption by the Assembly of the Commission's proposed resolution on the question.

On 29 November, the Assembly, after considering the report of the Secretary-General, adopted the recommended text as its resolution 34/59. By this resolution, the Assembly recommended that, in order to realize the provisions of the Declaration, all Governments should take its principles, objectives, means and methods into consideration in their policies, plans, programmes and implementation machinery.

It further recommended that all concerned international organizations and agencies should use the Declaration in formulating programmes and strategies for social progress and development and that it should be taken into account when drafting instruments used by the United Nations in those areas, and decided that it would be taken into account in the formulation of the international development strategy for the third development decade in implementing international action programmes for the decade.

The Assembly invited all Governments to take the provisions of the Declaration into consideration when planning bilateral and multilateral co-operation, and requested that the Secretary-General continue, in co-operation with Governments, to record, analyse and disseminate as widely as possible any significant national and international progress made towards realizing the objectives of the Declaration. The Secretary-General was to continue to inform the Assembly in annexes to the reports on the world social situation of governmental and international organization measures for realizing the provisions of the Declaration and for implementing this resolution.

Resolution 34/59 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the Council-recommended text without vote on 21 November.

Preparations for the new international development strategy

The Economic and Social Council, by a resolution adopted at its first regular 1979 session, expressed concern at the growing disparity in living conditions and income levels between people in the developed and developing countries. Reaffirming the sovereign and inalienable right of all nations to pursue freely their economic and social development and to exercise full and permanent sovereignty over all their wealth, natural resources and economic activities, it emphasized the urgency of establishing a new international economic order on a just and equitable basis as a necessary pre-condition for the economic development and social progress of developing countries. Reaffirming also that the elimination of all forms of dependence and oppression, such as colonialism, imperialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, aggression, occupation and foreign domination, constituted a prerequisite for world economic and social progress, the Council stated that it considered that the new international development strategy should reflect the need for the adoption of adequate policies to promote social development. These were to be defined by each country within the framework of its development priorities, socio-economic structure and stage of development, bearing in mind that the final aim of development must be the improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of full participation in the development process and a fair distribution of the benefits of development.

Considering that the Declaration on Social Progress and Development should serve as a guideline for the preparation of social aspects of the new international development strategy, the Council recommended that the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy take it fully into account as well as the 1979 deliberations of the Commission for Social Development, and requested the General Assembly to pay due attention at its 1979 regular session to the social aspects of the new international development strategy. The Council decided to consider this resolution at its second regular 1979 session, together with a report to be submitted by the Preparatory Committee pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979 on reparations for a new development strategy.4 See also p. 471.)

The Council took these actions on 9 May by resolution 1979/25, which it adopted by 37 votes to 9, with 11 abstentions. The text, which had been submitted to the Council by the Commission for Social Development at its 1979 session, was orally amended by Argentina and approved by the Second Committee on 27 April by 33 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions.

The Argentine amendment added the provision relating to Council consideration of the resolution again in 1979 together with the Preparatory Committee's report. Also acceptable to the Committee was an operative paragraph, recast by Argentina, on policies which the new strategy should reflect. By the Commission's text, the Council would have considered that the strategy should be designed, inter alia, to promote the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the development process and equitable distribution of development benefits, and of national wealth and income as well as the full mobilization of all national resources, both human and material.

Sweden, speaking in explanation of vote also on behalf of Finland, said they had abstained because of formulations of certain paragraphs containing reaffirmations relating to sovereign and inalienable rights and exercise of full and permanent sovereignty over all resources and activities and the elimination of all forms of dependence and oppression and to emphasis on the urgency of the establishment of a just and equitable new economic order as a pre-condition for the economic and social development of developing countries. Japan noted that it, too, had difficulties with the provision containing the first reaffirmation; its position on the question of permanent sovereignty over natural resources had not changed.

The General Assembly decided on 29 November that the Declaration on Social Progress and Development should be taken into account in the formulation of the new international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade and in the implementation of programmes of international action to be carried out during the decade. It took this action when it adopted resolution 34/59 (see section immediately above).

Unified approach to socio-economic development

The Commission for Social Development, on 7 March, took note of-and the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/22 of 9 May 1979 (see section above on WORLD SOCIAL SITUATION), authorized the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly- a report on the application by five Governments of a unified approach to development analysis and planning, which the Secretary-General had prepared pursuant to an Assembly decision of 8 December 1977.⁵

The report, which supplemented a 1977 report on the same subject, presented information on the approaches used by the German Democratic Republic, the Ivory Coast, Kuwait, Seychelles and the Syrian Arab Republic to formulate development goals and to plan, implement and evaluate policies, programmes and projects for achieving these goals, together with their requirements for analytical and statistical information.

The Assembly also took note of the report, on 29 November, and invited willing countries which had not done so to send replies to the Secretary-General's aide-mémoire of 27 February 1976, by which Governments had been invited to supply information for the preparation of a report on Government experience in applying a unified approach to development analysis and planning. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a further report containing practical conclusions and recommendations on the application of a unified approach in the process of socio-economic development and to submit it to the Assembly in 1981.

The Assembly took these actions by decision 34/419, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Social) Committee, which had approved without vote on 19 November a text proposed by its Chairman.

By a related decision of 9 May, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the work of integrated development, including necessary structural changes and co-ordination of social objectives with economic goals, be continued. It also recommended that the exchange of experience among countries, particularly developing countries, which had applied that approach be promoted, that appropriate national studies of integrated development, for which competent United Nations bodies were requested to provide high-quality technical assistance, be intensified, and that national, subregional and interregional training seminars in integrated development be conducted. It further requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on world experience in integrated social and economic planning for use by interested Governments.

The Council adopted resolution 1979/23, containing these recommendations, without vote. The text had been approved, without vote, by its Second Committee on 27 April, as proposed by the Commission for Social Development.

The need for a unified approach to development was also indicated by the Council when it adopted resolution 1979/25 on 9 May, thereby reaffirming the interrelated character of economic and social factors and the basic requirement that economic development and social progress should go together in promoting the well-being of the population and a balanced social and economic development (see section immediately above).

On 11 May, by resolution 1979/45, the Council established an ad hoc working group of experts whose mandate included making recommendations for improvements in dealing with social aspects of development within the United Nations see section below on working group on social ASPECTS OF DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES).

Welfare of migrant workers

In May 1979, the Economic and Social Council took note of a report by the Secretary-General on progress made towards strengthening programmes designed to improve the welfare of migrant workers and their families and expressed its appreciation for the proposals contained therein concerning ways and means of coping successfully with the problems and needs associated with international labour migration.

The report, which had been submitted first to the Commission for Social Development, focused on the international economic migration of people in search of employment. It contained information on the size, source and destination of such current international migration, the general characteristics of migrant workers (skills, age, sex, duration of stay), problems concerning their welfare and that of their families, ways to solve these problems, and major social policy issues raised by international worker migration.

The Commission took note of this report on 7 March, at the same time taking note of a second report of the Secretary-General before it-a study incorporating principles concerning migrant workers and their families which were embodied in international instruments adopted by United Nations organizations. It contained a resume of the study and suggestions for further action, and examined the concept of equality of treatment as well as social policy, with special reference to education and various social services.

A third report, prepared by the International Labour Office, presented information on implementation of the International Labour Organisation programme of action on new international standards concerning migrant workers.

The three reports had been submitted in accordance with a 1975 Economic and Social Council resolution.⁶

The Council, by resolution 1979/12, affirmed the need for the United Nations to consider the situation of migrant workers in an interrelated manner, bearing in mind that equality of treatment included the living conditions of migrant workers and their families, reaffirmed the need for concerted action among labour-employing and -supplying Governments to solve the problems of migratory labour and welcomed progress in international standard-setting. It recommended that further work done on behalf of migrant workers and their families by United Nations organizations and by other specialized bodies should be mutually reinforcing through effective co-operation and co-ordination arrangements. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on existing national legislative and administrative regulations, including bilateral and multilateral agreements, regarding the welfare of migrant workers and their families, for the Commission for Social Development at its 1981 session so that it might recommend future

Resolution 1979/12 was adopted, without vote, on 9 May 1979, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had likewise approved, on 4 May, a text proposed by the Commission for Social Development.

Also on 9 May, the Council adopted resolution 1979/13, on measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of migrant workers (for details, see p. 859).

Field operational activities for technical co-operation

By resolution 1979/17, adopted without vote on 9 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council noted that operational activities to assist Governments in strengthening their social welfare services had declined considerably in recent years and recalled the need to emphasize the importance of technical co-operation in the social sectors of development. It welcomed the proposals contained in the 1980-1983 medium-term plan for the United Nations budget designed to assist Governments in their field operational services, including the training of social welfare personnel.

By the operative paragraph, the Council requested the Secretary-General to support these operational activities in social welfare, bearing in mind that the assistance provided should be compatible with the national objectives and priorities of the recipient countries, and to report to the Commission for Social Development on this matter in 1981.

The Second Committee had approved the resolution without vote on 27 April, after revising the text proposed by the Commission for Social Development. These oral revisions, submitted by Argentina, by India (subamended by Argentina), by the Philippines, by Sweden (subamended by the Philippines) and by the United Arab Emirates, and agreed to without objection by the Committee: added a preambular provision by which the Council recognized that the right and responsibility of each State to determine freely its own objectives of social development, to set its own priorities and to decide in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations the methods of their achievement without external interference were basic to promoting social progress and development; added in the operative paragraph the reference to bearing in mind that assistance should be compatible with national objectives; and changed a preambular provision, by which the Council would have recalled the need to emphasize the social components of technical cooperation, to one by which the Council recalled the need to emphasize the importance of technical co-operation in the social sectors of development. Finally, a preambular paragraph was revised by which the Council recognized that the social welfare policies within the context of development that had emerged from recent intergovernmental conferences had important implications for field operational activities in the developing countries; among other changes to the Commission's text in this paragraph, reference to emphasis on preventive functions of those policies was removed.

Strengthening developmental social welfare policies and programmes

By resolution 1979/18 the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the Secretariat's activities relating to policy, planning, training and operational aspects of social welfare, including those of relevance to integrated rural development, having in mind the guidelines established by the General Assembly with regard to development.

It called upon Governments to intensify their efforts to implement developmentally oriented social welfare policies and urged that the work carried out by regional social welfare centres be strengthened and that any proposed integrated development centres include in their work programmes specific programmes dealing with social welfare. The Secretary-General was asked to examine and analyse developmental activities with social welfare content and objectives, including those undertaken by international and regional centres, and report to the Commission for Social Development in 1981.

Resolution 1979/18 was adopted by the Council on 9 May 1979, without vote. It had been recommended by the Commission and approved, as orally amended, by the Second Committee without vote on 27 April. An Argentine amendment added the reference to the Assembly's guidelines for development in the request to strengthen the Secretariat's activities relating to social welfare. India proposed the wording that the Secretary-General examine and analyse developmental activities with social welfare content; indication of whether national or international activities were involved was omitted.

Social policy and income distribution

In its discussions concerning social policy and the distribution of national income, the Commission for Social Development at its 1979 session considered a note by the Secretary-General, prepared in response to a 1977 resolution of the Economic and Social Council, giving a short overview of recent inflationary trends and their effects on low-income groups, together with a review of literature on the subject. The Commission formally took note of the report on 8 March and approved the text of a draft resolution on the matter for adoption by the Council.

The Council, at its first regular 1979 session, adopted the text without vote on 9 May, as resolution 1979/24, by which it recognized the importance of achieving a just distribution of income for securing people's participation in the development process and for realizing social progress. It expressed concern about the adverse effects of inflation on low-income groups and requested the Secretary-General to include in a report on the conclusions of a study on the needs of Member States in the social field, requested by the General Assembly in 1978,8 more factual information about country experiences regarding methods used to achieve a more just income distribution consistent with balanced social and economic development, to remove rural/urban imbalances, to mitigate the adverse effects of inflation and to benefit the weaker sections of the population.

The Council took these actions on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the Commission's draft text without vote on 27 April.

Working group on social aspects of development activities

At its organizational session for 1979, on 9 February, the Economic and Social Council decided to consider at its first regular 1979 session the question of establishing an ad hoc working group, pursuant to a 1977 Council resolution,9 to study and recommend ways to reinforce the social development sector of the United Nations. This decision was to be drawn to the attention of the Commission for Social Development for comment in the light of recent developments, in particular those relating to restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system and preparations for a new international development strategy.

This action comprised Council decision 1979/7, adopted, without vote, on an oral proposal by a Council Vice-President.

The Commission at its 1979 session noted that the Council's 1977 resolution had not been implemented and requested, by a resolution of 8 March, that the ad hoc group be appointed and convened as soon as possible.

On 11 May, by resolution 1979/45, which superseded the 1977 resolution, the Council decided to establish an ad hoc working group to examine the effectiveness of the implementation of various existing General Assembly resolutions relating to social progress and development, and to make recommendations for improvements within the United Nations in dealing with social aspects of development, in the light of the importance given by the Assembly to a unified approach to development. The Council authorized its President to appoint the members of the group, decided that it should conclude its activities in time to report to the Council at its first regular 1980 session and asked the Secretary-General to seek extrabudgetary financing for its Resolution 1979/45, adopted without vote, was based on a text proposed by a Council Vice-President following consultations and discussion of a draft resolution submitted informally by the Netherlands, Sweden and the United States.

Other aspects of social development and policy

Training for social development

During 1979, teaching-learning materials developed in connexion with a United Nations correspondence seminar conducted between 1976 and 1978 on local- and intermediate-level training for social development were completed for publication by the United Nations. One volume provided an overview of basic issues of local-and intermediate-level development and a second volume contained case studies on selected aspects of such development; the material was based largely on observations and suggestions received from participants in the seminar.

Research and training in regional development

Having examined at its first regular 1979 session a report on the activities of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) for the period from 1 November 1976 to 31 October 1978, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1979/26 adopted on 9 May, expressed satisfaction with the work done by UNRISD.

During the year, UNRISD continued to cooperate closely with national research institutions, especially those in developing countries, and with concerned international and national organizations. The report discussed UNRISD'S research programme under headings of: food systems and society; a unified approach to development analysis and planning; people's participation in development; the role of perceptions, attitudes and values in relation to environmental and developmental measures and programmes; the impact on women of socioeconomic changes; the social and economic implications of large-scale introduction of new varieties of food grain; improvement of development statistics; and measurement and analysis of progress at the local level.

Also by resolution 1979/26, the Council recommended that UNRISD'S activities be pursued to an increasing extent in collaboration with research institutes in interested Member States, particularly the developing countries. It expressed the wish that the social objectives of the new international development strategy should be the principal focus of the UNRISD'S research activities in the coming years and that these activities should include a continuous study of alternative forms and techniques of democratic participation of people in the process of social and economic development.

This resolution was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved without vote on 27 April a text proposed by the Commission for Social Development.

The Commission had also taken note on 8 March of a note by the Secretary-General reviewing social research and training capabilities in developing countries, prepared in response to a 1977 Council resolution. The note, based on a review of developments since a 1971 survey, focused on trends such as the training of field workers, the development of indigenous teaching materials and the increasing rural orientation of training programmes. It discussed social welfare training activities of both the United Nations and non-governmental organizations.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, is a basis for national and

Recalling its resolutions 2771 (XXVI) of 22 November 1971 and 31/84 of 13 December 1976 on the world social situation and 33/48 of 14 December 1978 on world social development, international action in the field of social development,

Recalling also its resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 33/193 of 29 January 1979 on the preparations for an international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade.

Recalling further its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, in which it, inter alia, requested the United Nations Secretariat to prepare, on a regular basis, global economic and social surveys and projections, Bearing in mind that social progress and development are founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person,

Aware that the fundamental aim of development is the sustained increase of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

Conscious that each Government has the primary role and ultimate responsibility of ensuring the social progress and well-being of its people, planning social development measures as part of comprehensive development plans, encouraging and co-ordinating or integrating all national efforts towards this end and introducing, when necessary, changes in the social structure,

Reaffirming the right of every country to adopt the economic and social system that it deems the most appropriate for its own development and not to be subjected to discrimination of any kind as a result,

Considering that rapid economic growth must go hand in hand with qualitative and structural changes in each country and that social and sectoral disparities, where they exist, should be substantially reduced,

Stressing the importance of the adoption of measures to ensure the effective participation, as appropriate, of all the elements of society in the preparation and execution of national plans and programmes of economic and social development, and of the mobilization of public opinion and the dissemination of social information, in support of the principles and objectives of social progress and development,

Noting that the present world socio-economic situation is characterized by deterioration in the economic situation, particularly in the developing countries, and deeply concerned by the fact that inequities and imbalances in international economic relations have widened the gap between the developed and developing countries,

Considering also that the speedy conclusion of negotiations between developed and developing countries for the preparation of the new international development strategy is necessary and would contribute towards achieving the desired pace of socio-economic progress in developing countries

Convinced that it is necessary to achieve the rapid and complete elimination of the obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples and that colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, aggression, occupation and foreign domination and all other forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples constitute major obstacles to the economic and social progress of developing countries and peoples,

Re-emphasizing that the primary responsibility for the development of developing countries rests upon themselves, but that, however great their own efforts, these will not enable them to achieve the desired development goals as expeditiously as they must unless equitable economic and commercial relations between developed and developing countries are developed and increased financial and technological resources are made available to the developing countries,

Having considered the 1978 Report on the World Social Situation, which presents an overview of socio-economic trends and policies,

- 1. Notes that the economic and social situation in the world today remains disturbing;
- 2. Notes also the slow rate of implementing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and the disappointing progress made towards realizing the various over-all development goals adopted and reaffirmed in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade;
- 3. Reaffirms that all forms of dependence and oppression such as aggression, foreign occupation, colonialism, neo-colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination constitute major obstacles to world social and economic progress and therefore must be eliminated without delay;
- 4. Reaffirms the socio-economic development objectives which were established by the international community during the 1970s, such as the elimination of hunger and malnutrition by the year 1985, full employment by the year 2000, the eradication of illiteracy by the end of the 1980s, safe and adequate water supplies by the year 1990, a life expectancy of seventy-four years in all countries by the year 2000, the full integration of women in political, economic and social affairs, and health for all by the year 2000;
- 5. Calls upon all Member States to promote economic and social progress by the formulation and implementation of a set of policy measures to achieve their goals and objectives, within the framework of national priorities and interests, in the fields of employment, education, health, nutrition, housing facilities, the well-being of children, the full participation of youth in the development process and the full integration and participation of women in development;
- 6. Recommends that Member States should adopt measures to ensure the effective participation, as appropriate, of all sectors of society, as an integral element in local, regional and national development plans and programmes, with the purpose of securing the effective mobilization and utilization of human resources as well as more equitable distribution of development benefits;
- 7. Emphasizes the importance of the establishment of the new international economic order for the achievement of social progress;
- 8. Emphasizes also that rapid social progress of developing countries requires considerably enhanced multilateral and bilateral financial and/or technical contributions to national development efforts, adapted to new and appropriate technology and rendered within the framework of the development plans of developing countries;
- 9. Regrets that most developed countries have not achieved the specific targets of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade;
- 10. Calls upon the relevant organizations and bodies in the United Nations system to mobilize the resources at their disposal to aim at achieving the main objectives set forth in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;
- 11. Decides that future reports on the world social situation must contribute to the identification of emerging social trends of international concern and to the discussion of relationships among major development issues, which have both international and national dimensions;

- 12. Requests the Secretary-General to issue a report on the world social situation every three years, taking into consideration the provisions of the present resolution and including a report on the social progress made during the third United Nations development decade, in the light of the goals and objectives of the new international development strategy and following the procedures that will be decided upon for its review and appraisal;
- 13. Also requests the Secretary-General to organize, within the programme of advisory services and bearing in mind the goals and objectives of the new international development strategy when adopted, an international seminar to compare policies, institutions and experiences of Member States in the participation of all sectors of society in their economic and social development, as well as collective bargaining, worker participation in management and workers' self-management, and to submit a report on the results of that seminar to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session under the agenda item entitled "World social situation";
- 14. Decides to consider at its thirty-seventh session the item entitled "World social situation";

П

Noting that the methods for collecting, analysing, interpreting and evaluating information and data used in studying the social situation in the world should be further improved,

Bearing in mind the need for a methodology which would be based mainly on quantitative and qualitative indicators of the world social situation,

Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, in close cooperation with the executive heads of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, appropriate measures for the improvement of the methodology for the preparation of the report on the world social situation and the report on the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and to report thereon, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 33/48 of 14 December 1978, in which the Assembly called upon the Commission for Social Development to make recommendations concerning a new international development strategy, and Assembly resolution 33/193 of 29 January 1979 on preparations for an international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, Recalling further General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969 containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development.

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Considering that the existing unjust international economic system is a major obstacle to the economic development and social progress of the developing countries,

Desiring to achieve the rapid and complete elimination of major obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples, particularly colonialism, imperialism, neocolonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, aggression, occupation and foreign domination, and all other forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples,

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account General Assembly resolutions 2542 (XXIV) of 11 December 1969, containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, 2626(XXV) of 24 October

1970, containing the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1747(LIV) of 16 May 1973, containing recommendations on the application of a unified approach to development analysis and planning by Governments,

Convinced that integrated planning at the national level is one of the most effective instruments for promoting economic, social and human development and for providing the whole population with greater opportunities for a better life,

Considering that the application of an integrated approach is connected with the achievement of structural changes in the social and economic fields,

Considering that development is not a one-dimensional process and that it has both economic and social aspects,

Taking account of the fact that economic growth and social change are integral parts of a single complex process of development,

Taking into account the problems faced, especially by the developing countries, in the application of integrated development,

- Recommends:
- (a) Continuing the work of integrated development, including the necessary structural changes and co-ordination of social objectives with economic goals:
- (b) Promoting the exchange of experience among countries which have applied that approach, particularly among developing countries;
- (c) Intensifying appropriate national studies of integrated development, for which purpose the competent United Nations bodies are requested to provide countries with technical assistance of high quality;
- (d) Conducting national, subregional and interregional training seminars in the field of integrated development;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on world experience in the field of integrated social and economic planning which could be recommended to Governments of interested States for application at the national level, and to submit that report to the Commission for Social Development for consideration at its twenty-seventh session.

Taking note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the welfare of migrant workers and their families,

Aware of the contribution of migrant workers to the economic growth and social and cultural development of their host countries.

Noting that the problems of migrant workers continue to be of major importance to certain countries,

Noting also changing circumstances resulting from current economic trends and the need to consider measures to prevent those circumstances from adversely affecting the welfare of migrant workers,

Recalling the World Population Plan of Action, adopted by the World Population Conference, in which, inter alia, both labour-employing and labour-supplying countries were urged, if they had not yet done so, to conclude bilateral or multilateral agreements which would protect and assist migrant workers and safeguard the interests of the countries concerned.

- Expresses its appreciation for the proposals contained in the progress report of the Secretary-General concerning ways and methods of coping successfully with the problems and needs associated with international labour migration;
- 2. Resolution 1979/17, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/55, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that the social welfare policies within the context of development that have emerged from recent intergovernmental conferences have important implications for field operational activities in the developing countries,

Recognizing that the right and responsibility of each State to determine freely its own objectives of social development, to set its own priorities and to decide in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations the means and methods of their achievement without any external interference is a basic element in promoting social progress and development,

Noting that in recent years the operational activities concerned with assisting Governments to strengthen their social welfare services have declined considerably,

Recalling the deliberations of the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, held at Buenos Aires from 30 August to 12 September 1978, and the need to emphasize the importance of technical co-operation in the social sectors of development,

Welcoming the proposals, contained in programme 2, subprogramme 4, entitled "Delivery of social welfare services," of chapter 13 of the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1980-1983, to assist Governments in their field operational services, including the training of social welfare personnel,

Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind that the assistance provided should be compatible with the national objectives and priorities of the receiving countries, to support these important operational activities in social welfare and to report to the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-seventh session on the progress achieved in this regard.

Resolution 1979/18, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/55, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing that the 1968 International Conference of Ministers Responsible for Social Welfare and the seven subsequent regional conferences of social welfare ministers of the Asian, African, Arab and European States formulated and elaborated the concept of developmental social welfare, emphasizing the roles of prevention, development and the active participation of people, which have special significance for social programmes in developing countries.

Aware that the concept of developmental social welfare is not limited to remedial and curative approaches or to disparate programmes catering to specific population groups but is concerned with maximizing the social functioning of all people and strengthening the integrity of families and communities in rural and urban areas,

Noting that social welfare approaches are not confined to the activities of traditional social welfare departments but are of importance in all developmental activities,

Recalling the establishment of United Nations-sponsored social welfare research and training centres in Europe, Asia and Africa in pursuance of the recommendations of the conferences of social welfare ministers, and appreciative of the significant contributions made by those centres in a short period,

- 1. Calls upon Governments to intensify their efforts to implement developmentally oriented social welfare policies;
- Urges that the work carried out by the regional social welfare centres should be strengthened and that any proposed integrated development centres should include in their work programmes specific programmes dealing with social welfare;
- 3. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the Secretariat's activities relating to policy, planning, training and operational aspects of social welfare, including those of relevance to integrated rural development, having in mind the guidelines established by the General Assembly with regard to development;
- 4. Further requests the Secretary-General to examine and analyse developmental activities with social welfare content and objectives, including those undertaken by international and regional centres, and to report on them to the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-seventh session.

Recalling also the Declaration on, Social Progress and Development contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order contained in Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States contained in Assembly resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, Recalling further section II of General Assembly resolution 33/48 of 14 December 1978, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to it at its thirty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Recognizing the importance of achieving a just distribution of income for securing people's participation in the development process and for realizing social progress,

Concerned about adverse effects of inflation on low-income groups of the population,

Requests the Secretary-General to include in the report requested in General Assembly resolution 33/48 more factual information about country experiences, in different economic systems, with regard to various instruments and methods of implementation used to achieve a more just income distribution consistent with balanced social and economic development, the removal of rural-urban imbalances and measures for mitigating the adverse effects of inflation and for the benefit of the weaker sections of the population.

International Year of Disabled Persons

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session on the first session of the Advisory Committee for the International Year of Disabled Persons, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 9 to 23 March 1979.

Established by the Assembly in 1977, 11 the Committee had met to consider a draft programme for the International Year of Disabled Persons, proclaimed for 1981,¹² prepared by the Secretary-General. The programme included the results of preliminary consultations Member States, the regional commissions and specialized agencies, and made a series of recommendations comprising a plan of action to ensure the observance, implementation and follow-up of the objectives of the Year; these included guiding principles and goals for the Year, activities recommended at the national, regional and international level, a public information programme, and interagency co-ordination of activities within the United Nations system.

Also before the Assembly was the text of a declaration on the Rights of Deaf-Blind Persons, which had been adopted on 16 September 1977 by the Helen Keller World Conference on Services to Deaf-Blind Youth and Adults.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/24, adopted without vote on 9 May 1979, had taken note of the Declaration and annexed it to the decision for submission to the Assembly. the Declaration drew attention to the rights and needs of deaf-blind persons, including the right to: recognition of their aspiration to lead a normal life; the best possible medical treatment; economic security; lead independent lives as integrated members of the family and community; the services of an interpreter without cost; current information and reading and educational material in a form they were able to assimilate; recreational activities; be consulted on matters of direct concern to them; and legal advice. The declaration also contained a definition of deafblind persons.

The United Kingdom had proposed, in the Council's Second (Social) Committee, a draft decision whereby the Council would bring the Declaration to the attention of the Assembly. The United Kingdom orally amended its decision, incorporating oral subamendments by Argentina and by Belgium, so that the decision recorded that the Council took note of the Declaration, annexed the text, and brought it to the Assembly's attention at its 1979 session as part of the documentation submitted in connexion with the International Year of Disabled Persons. The Committee approved the decision without objection on 2 May.

Viet Nam, in a note verbale of 20 April to the Secretary-General, reported on the care given to disabled persons in that country and asked that the note be circulated as a document related to the Assembly's discussion of the Year.

By resolution 34/154, adopted without vote on 17 December, the Assembly approved the Advisory Committee's recommendations, adopted them as the Plan of Action for the International Year of Disabled Persons-in accordance with one of which it expanded the theme of the Year "Full participation and equality"- and requested the Secretary-General to convene a further meeting of the Committee in 1980 to examine implementation of the Plan of Action and to consider a long-term programme of action. Stressing the pragmatic orientation of the activities of the Year, it invited Member States to consider activities at the national level, the major focus of the Year, along the lines of the Plan of Action and in conformity with the culture, customs and traditions of each country. Specialized agencies were also invited to devote special attention to implementing the Plan. They and other United Nations bodies were asked to prepare concrete and co-ordinated plans, to be submitted to the Advisory Committee, and regional commissions and other regional intergovernmental organizations were invited to formulate their contributions to the Year's activities. The Assembly stressed the importance of participation by non-governmental organiza-

12 See Y.U.N., 1976, p. 558, resolution 31/123 of 16 December 1976.

The Assembly affirmed that, in implementing the Plan of Action, special attention should be given to the disabled in developing countries through multilateral and bilateral technical assistance for the prevention of disabilities and for rehabilitation. It asked the Secretary-General to give priority to the organization of an action-oriented international symposium of experts on technical assistance in the field of disability and technical co-operation among developing countries, and to publicize the Year fully.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to explore and report on the possibility of continuing the activities of the International Institute for the Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons in Developing Countries. It welcomed, and appealed for further, voluntary contributions and invited Member States to submit national reports on their implementation of the Plan of Action, and in particular to elaborate national long-term programmes on the basis of their experience.

Resolution 34/154 had been approved without vote by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 28 November. The text was sponsored by 49 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and amended orally by Australia to note by a preambular paragraph that the Secretary-General would appoint an Executive Secretary for the Year.

By the same resolution, the General Assembly also noted a report, annexed to the 1978 Report on the World Social Situation (see subchapter above), summarizing national experiences of Member States and those of international organizations to ensure implementation on the Declaration of the Rights of Disabled Persons.¹³

The Plan of Action adopted by the Assembly consisted of the international programme for 1980-1981 which had been recommended by the Advisory Committee in its report, except that a suggestion was deleted that a draft longterm programme of action to be prepared by the Secretary-General and considered by the Advisory Committee should be submitted to the Assembly at its regular 1981 session through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council. Also deleted were a proposal that the Secretary-General should circulate the Advisory Committee's report to Member States as soon as possible for discussion at the 1979 Assembly session and a recommendation that an international contest be launched during 1979 to design an emblem for the Year.

Introducing the Third Committee's report to the plenary Assembly, the Committee's Rapporteur drew attention to the Committee's approval, on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee, of a change in the title of the Year, from International Year for Disabled Persons to International Year of Disabled Persons.

Prevention of disability

At its April/May 1979 session, the Economic and Social Council approved the conclusions and recommendations contained in a progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of a 1975 Council resolution on prevention of disability and rehabilitation of disabled persons. ¹⁴

The report described national experiences in the prevention of disabilities and rehabilitation of disabled persons and international activities in favour of those persons. It contained recommendations envisaging, inter alia: greater coordination between various social services and social security agencies in programme formulation; decentralization of administration for services nearer to recipients; participation of disabled persons in political life; an important role for regional commissions and organs; attention to prevention and early detection of child disability using community-based services; development of methods to include rehabilitation in country health programming; implementation of international standards to prevent occupational accidents and diseases and provision of vocational rehabilitation; and development of special education to promote the integration of handicapped children into the normal education system.

The Council considered that priority measures should be taken during the third United Nations development decade to prevent hazards which caused disabilities. It recommended that Governments give attention to developing a plan of protection against all kinds of dangers and promote preventive measures designed to inform of the dangers, to educate, to improve knowledge of vaccinations, to expand services, to ensure observance of safety regulations and to train specialists in safety. It requested concerned organizations to co-ordinate their activities with those of the United Nations in order to promote effective measures for prevention of disability and rehabilitation of disabled persons by, among other things, providing assistance to developing countries.

The Council took these actions by resolution 1979/14, adopted without vote on 9 May. The text, recommended by its Second Committee and approved without vote on 27 April, had been proposed by the Commission for Social Development.

Adoption and foster placement

On 9 May 1979, by resolution 1979/28, the Council took note of a portion of the 1979 report of the Commission for Social Development which described the Commission's consideration of a draft declaration on social and legal principles relating to adoption and foster placement of children nationally and internationally — transmitted in a report of the Secretary-General-as well as its consideration of the work of a group of experts convened at Geneva from 11 to 15 December 1978 to prepare the draft declaration, and comments by Commission members on the subject.

The Council submitted the draft declaration to the General Assembly for preliminary consideration and requested the Secretary-General to transmit the text to all Member States for their comments and to submit the results to the Assembly in 1980. The Council drew the Assembly's attention to the Commission's wish that, if the declaration were adopted and if funds were available, the Secretary-General should be authorized to convene a geographically representative group of experts to draft guidelines for use by Governments in implementing the declaration's principles.

Resolution 1979/28 was adopted without vote; the Second Committee had approved the text, also without vote, on 2 May, based on an amended draft resolution proposed by the Commission. The Committee's text differed from that recommended by the Commission as the result of the adoption without objection of a number of French amendments. The operative provisions suggested by the Commission would have had the Council: take note of the draft declaration and submit it to the Assembly for consideration at its 1979 session; ask the Secretary-General to publish and disseminate the text as widely as possible and, following acceptance of the declaration-and subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds — to convene an expert group with relevant experience in family and child welfare, representative of all geographical regions, to draft guidelines for Governments' use in implementing the principles of the declaration; and urge interested Member States to make extrabudgetary funds available for quickly convening the group.

Argentina had orally proposed in the Committee that the Council adopt a decision whereby it would have taken note of the draft resolution recommended by the Commission, requested the Secretary-General to transmit the draft declaration to Member States for their views on the declaration and on the possibility of examining at the regional level principles and measures concerning adoption and foster placement of children, and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development in 1983. This draft decision was subsequently withdrawn.

Resolution 1979/14, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/55, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that the goals stated in its resolutions and in those of the Commission for Social Development concerning action to improve the welfare of the disabled can be attained only by the combination and co-ordination of measures covering both integration into society and prevention of risks,

Aware that the number of disabled persons is growing year by year and that there are still major difficulties standing in the way of the implementation of programmes with regard to both resources and the various equipment sectors,

Desiring that efforts to rehabilitate disabled persons so that they may live a normal life should be continued, particularly with regard to education, equipment, transportation, care and employment, and that the human and social relations of disabled persons in the community should be developed so that they may enjoy equal opportunities,

- 1. Takes note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the prevention of disability and the rehabilitation of disabled persons and approves the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;
- 2. Considers that priority measures should be taken during the third United Nations development decade for the prevention of the various hazards that cause disabilities;
- Recommends that Governments should give particular attention to the development of a plan of protection against dangers of all kinds and should promote all preventive measures designed:
- (a) To inform children and adults of dangers and risks so that they may be on guard against them;
- (b) To educate the population and inculcate in it the idea of protection of the individual in all the activities of daily life;
- (c) To develop prenatal and postnatal supervision and improve knowledge of the importance of vaccination as a preventive measure:
- (d) To expand the activity of medical, paramedical and health services;
- (e) To establish and ensure the observance of safety regulations in places of work, in the streets and in other public places:
- (f) To train specialist personnel in the dissemination of safety instructions and prevention techniques;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Commission for Social Development informed of the progress achieved with respect to prevention and to bring to its attention general policy measures and relevant programmes carried out by Member States which could usefully be made known to other countries if they so wished;
- 5. Requests the specialized agencies concerned and non-governmental organizations to co-ordinate their activities with those of the United Nations in order to promote effective measures for the prevention of disability and the rehabilitation of disabled persons, inter alia, by providing assistance to developing countries.

Resolution 1979/28, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/55/Add.1, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the draft declaration on social and legal principles relating to adoption and foster placement of children nationally and internationally,

Convinced that appropriate measures should be taken to educate the public in order to increase community awareness of the existence of children with special needs,

Fully aware of the urgent need for more active involvement of Governments in matters of family and child welfare,

Recognizing that it is the responsibility of Governments to determine the adequacy of their national services for children and to recognize those children whose needs are not being met by existing services,

Recalling its resolution 1925(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, in which it decided that the Expert Group which was to prepare a draft declaration should also draft guidelines for the use of Governments in the implementation of the principles,

I. Takes note of paragraphs 150 to 154 of the report of the Commission for Social Development on its twenty-sixth session concerning the draft declaration on social and legal principles relating to adoption and foster placement of children nationally and internationally and submits the draft declaration to the General Assembly for preliminary consideration at its thirty-fourth session;

- 2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the draft declaration to all Member States with a view to obtaining their comments on the matter and submitting the results of the inquiry to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.
- 3. Draws the attention of the General Assembly to the fact that the Commission for Social Development, at its twenty-sixth session, expressed the wish that, in the event of the Assembly adopting the declaration on social and legal principles relating to adoption and foster placement of children nationally and internationally and subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds for that purpose, the Secretary-General should be authorized to convene a group of experts, with relevant experience in family and child welfare, representative of all geographical regions, to draft guidelines for the use of Governments in the implementation of those principles.

Social defence

Technical aid activities

During 1979, technical co-operation activities of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice focused on the development of long range preventive strategies designed to minimize the adverse effects of crime on the social and economic development of nations.

Through a network of regional institutes, the United Nations sponsored research, training courses, seminars and conferences designed to promote international collaboration in crime prevention and control and the treatment of offenders. Work was completed, by the expert Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the Secretariat's Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, and regional and interregional groups in preparation for the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to be held at Caracas, Venezuela, in August/September 1980.

An interregional meeting of experts was convened from 9 to 13 July in New York to discuss crime and the abuse of power, offences and offenders beyond the reach of the law.

The United Nations continued to collaborate with and to provide technical support to the regional institutes for crime prevention and the treatment of offenders in San José (Costa Rica), Cairo (Egypt) and Fuchu (Japan), and to the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute (UNSDRI) in Rome, Italy. The year marked the end of a two-year reorganization and restructuring of UNSDRI during which time a director was appointed and an ad hoc advisory group established to guide the Institute's future activities.

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/20 (see subsection below on TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION IN CRIME PREVENTION AND CONTROL), efforts were made to establish a regional institute to serve Africa south of the Sahara.

The United Nations continued to provide technical support to Governments requesting it. Expert advisory services were provided to: Hong Kong, on establishment of psychological services for correctional institutions; Namibia (six experts), on reform of the criminal justice system and prevention and control of economic crime, as part of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; Papua New Guinea, on establishment of probation and parole services; and Colombia, Guinea-Bissau and Nicaragua, on planning in the administration of justice, particularly correctional administration and the treatment of offenders.

At the regional level, two experts were provided for the United Nations Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders under the auspices of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands; interregionally, a senior research expert was provided for UNSDRI under the auspices of Japan.

Publications issued during the year included the International Review of Criminal Policy, No. 35, 1979, containing articles complementing United Nations work in monitoring world crime trends and crime prevention strategies as background documentation for the Sixth Congress.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Preparations for the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

At its first regular 1979 session in April/May, the Economic and Social Council noted from the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its fifth session held in June 1978 15 that the Secretariat had made considerable progress in preparations for the August/ September 1980 Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. The Council supported the Secretary-General's plans to transfer to Vienna the Secretariat's Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch, a unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs charged with the preparation of the Congress, but requested him, nevertheless, to examine the possibility of temporarily deferring the transfer of the Branch's staff who were involved in preparatory work until the end of the Sixth Congress.

The Council took these actions on 9 May when it adopted resolution 1979/29, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee. The Committee had approved the text, sponsored by the United States and Venezuela and twice revised by them, without vote on 4 May.

After the adoption of the resolution, the USSR expressed reservations, stating that it considered the resolution to be superfluous and that the Secretary-General should act in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions concerning the transfer to Vienna of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch.

On the same date, the Council adopted, without vote, decision 1979/25, whereby it approved and appended to the decision the provisional rules of procedure for United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders. The draft provisional rules had been annexed to the report on the 1978 session of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control; following informal consultations held in the light of a number of suggested changes by the Secretariat, several of these draft rules were revised and approved separately by the Second Committee, without objection. Some were further orally amended by member States in the Committee before approval: Argentina added to a rule on subsidiary organs (rule 43) authorizing sections of the whole to set up subsections and, working groups the proviso "to the extent permitted by available facilities," referring to the capacity of congresses to provide interpreters and translators for work in subsections; New Zealand changed the title of the rule on sound recordings of meetings (rule 49) by deleting reference to other recordings.

Separate votes were held on the rule relating to individual experts and consultants (rule 58). The first paragraph, authorizing the Secretary-General to invite individual experts in the field to participate in the congresses, without the right to vote, was adopted by 32 votes to 6, with 6 abstentions. The second paragraph, authorizing the Secretary-General to invite, with due regard to equitable geographical distribution, a small number of expert consultants to participate at United Nations expense, was adopted by 26 votes to 6, with 12 abstentions. The rule as a whole was then approved by 28 votes to 6, with 10 abstentions, before approval of the provisional rules as a whole without objection on 4 May.

Hungary and the USSR expressed reservations on the second paragraph, considering it at variance with normal practices at similar conferences held under United Nations auspices. Poland added that, in exercising his authority to invite experts, the Secretary-General should bear in mind the dissenting opinions of some members. Referring to rule 44 on the election of officers, Ireland and the United Kingdom requested that the record reflect the understanding that the paragraph stipulating the officers to be elected to subsections and working groups would not preclude the election of a rapporteur; in the United Kingdom's opinion, the rapporteur might be elected from among the representatives of States, observers or individual participants. Ecuador and Poland said they were opposed to selecting anyone who was not a member of a delegation.

At its second regular 1979 session, the Council considered a note by the Secretary-General communicating, in a letter of 13 June, regrets from the Government of Australia that it would not be practicable for it to host the Sixth Congress in August 1980, and a second note submitting for Council consideration an invitation from the Government of Austria to hold the Congress in Vienna.

By decision 1979/82, adopted without vote on 3 August, the Council deferred a final decision on the venue of the Congress until November. The decision had been orally proposed by the United States in the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee when it was discussing the calendar of conferences; the Committee had approved it without vote on 23 July

By a letter of 15 October, Venezuela offered Caracas as the venue. In a statement to the Council on 8 November, the observer for Austria stated that his Government's offer had been made with a view to enabling preparations for the Congress to go forward; Austria would in no way oppose a decision to accept Venezuela's invitation.

Taking note of that statement, the Council on that day, by decision 1979/95, decided without objection to accept Venezuela's offer to host the Congress; this decision was orally proposed by the Council President.

Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

In September 1979, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that no comments had been received on a note verbale by which he had transmitted to Member States, in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 20 December 1978, 16 the results of an informal working group which had met in 1978 to discuss preambular paragraphs and articles 1 to 5 of a draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials formulated by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in 1976. Additional articles, which had not been debated by the working group in 1978, were discussed and agreed during the Assembly's 1979 session by a similar openended working group, which reported orally to the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 3 December.

The General Assembly on 17 December adopted this Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, which it annexed to resolution 34/169, and transmitted it to Governments with the recommendation that favourable consideration be given to its use within the framework of national legislation or practice as a body of principles for observance by law enforcement officials.

The Code of Conduct consisted of eight articles, with commentaries to facilitate the Code's use within national legislation or practice or to identify features of legal systems and practices of different States or regional intergovernmental organizations which would promote its application. The articles were concerned with the general duties of law enforcement officials (article 1), their obligation to respect and protect human dignity (article 2), the limited conditions under which force might be used (article 3), the need to keep certain matters in the possession of law enforcement officials confidential (article 4), a prohibition of the use of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (article 5), the obligation to ensure the health of those in custody (article 6), the prohibition of acts of corruption (article 7), and the obligation to respect the law and the Code and to report violations (article 8).

Resolution 34/169, adopted without vote, had first been likewise approved by the Third Committee on 3 December. It was sponsored by Australia, Belgium, Chile, Ecuador, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the Philippines, Spain, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the United States.

Strengthening of United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders

At its April/May 1979 session, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed the importance of co-operation among Member States, the value of international efforts in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, the need to promote the development of this co-operation at interregional and regional levels, and the primary importance of the role of research and training in social defence.

Considering that the results achieved and the services rendered by the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders not only justified their maintenance but also militated in favour of their consolidation and strengthening, the Council requested the Secretary-General to ensure permanent financial resources, in addition to voluntary contributions, by placing the question before the competent bodies of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the regional commissions, and to study how better to co-ordinate the institutes' work programmes. It expressed gratitude to countries, particularly to the host countries Costa Rica, Egypt, Italy and Japan, which, through voluntary contributions, had made possible the establishment and operation of the existing regional institutes.

The Council took these actions on 9 May when it adopted, without vote, resolution 1979/21. The Second Committee had likewise approved the text on 27 April, as recommended by the Commission for Social Development at its 1979 session.

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 34/440, by which it recalled a 1965 Council resolution under which the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence was established,¹⁷ endorsed Council resolution 1979/21 and requested the Secretary-General to put it into effect in the context of relevant United Nations fund-raising mechanisms. The Assembly took this action, without vote,, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved it by consensus on 5 December. The text was sponsored by Costa Rica, Italy, Mexico, Nigeria and the Philippines.

Technical co-operation in crime prevention and control

On 9 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution on technical co-operation in crime prevention and control. Considering that a growing number of countries felt the lack of interregional and technical advisers who could assist them in planning and implementing their crime prevention strategies, the Council recognized the importance of co-operation in this field at all levels and the desirability of sustaining international efforts as a significant element in the achievement of the objectives of the new international economic order and the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.18 Recalling that the United Nations had established institutes for technical assistance and advisory services in crime prevention and control in other parts of the world, the Council requested the Secretary-General to establish such a regional institute for Africa south of the Sahara. It called for the reinstatement and provision through UNDP of interregional and regional advisory services in this field to Member States at their request, and asked that, under the programme of technical co-operation among developing countries, new formulae be explored for providing developing countries with technical experts.

Resolution 1979/20 containing these actions was adopted without vote, having been approved by the Second Committee without vote on 27 April. The text had been recommended by the Commission for Social Development at its 1979 session.

The USSR noted that it had joined the consensus on the understanding that the resolution would be implemented within the framework of the regular budget.

Capital punishment

Recalling previous resolutions by which the General Assembly had confirmed continuing interest in the study of capital punishment, the Economic and Social Council, by a resolution adopted at its first regular 1979 session, expressed concern about the slow rate of progress in achieving the objective of progressive restriction of the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed, with a view to the desirability of abolishing that punishment.

The Council reaffirmed its wish to establish adequate legal safeguards for the accused in capital cases and decided that it was essential to have the fullest possible information on the use of the death penalty in order to prepare reports on capital punishment, in particular the report to be submitted to the 1980 Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. It decided that the questionnaire used to gather that information should be simplified and asked the Secretary-General to make every effort to elicit full responses from all Governments

The Council took these actions on 9 May by resolution 1979/22, adopted without vote; the Second Committee had likewise approved the text on 27 April, as proposed by the Commission for Social Development. France observed that it had joined in the consensus because the resolution was a procedural one but had reservations with regard to it, in view of the current situation regarding legislation in France.

Functions and long-term programme of work of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

On 9 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council expressed its awareness that the main responsibility for solving problems of crime prevention and control lay with national Governments and reaffirmed its own responsibility for promoting international co-operation in crime prevention and control.

These actions were embodied in resolution 1979/19, by which the Council also entrusted the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with enlarged functions, including: preparation of United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders; preparation and submission of programmes of international co-operation in this field to those congresses and the competent United Nations bodies for their approval; promotion of State exchanges of experience; discussion of major issues of professional interest as a basis for international co-operation in this area; and provision of assistance to the Council in co-ordinating United Nations activities concerning crime control and the treatment of offenders.

Resolution 1979/19 was adopted without vote; it had been approved in like manner by the Second Committee on 27 April. The text, proposed by the Commission for Social Development, was orally amended by the Committee Chairman on a suggestion by Ireland. By this amendment, the Council recognized the role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in assisting the Council to organize and coordinate United Nations activities concerning crime prevention and control, modifying the proposed text by which the Council would have recognized the organizing and co-ordinating role of the Committee. Ireland further orally amended a function to be entrusted to the Committee, which was to provide assistance to the Council in co-ordinating United Nations activities rather than itself co-ordinate those activities.

Enlargement of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

The Economic and Social Council, on 9 May 1979, enlarged the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control from 15 to 27 members, distributing the seats as follows: seven to African States; six to Asian States; three to Eastern European States; five to Latin American States; and six to Western European and other States. The Council did this by resolution 1979/30, adopted without vote. The text was sponsored in the Council by Australia and Italy. They had earlier proposed a draft resolution in the Second Committee to enlarge the membership to 23 members, distributing six seats to African States, five to Asian States, three to Eastern European States, four to Latin American States and five to Western European and other States. On 4 May, the Second Committee approved without objection its Chairman's oral proposal that this draft resolution be referred, pending further consultations, to the Council for its consideration. Following those consultations, the sponsors had introduced in the Council the text which became resolution 1979/30.

Human rights in the administration of justice

On 10 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1979/34 on the question of the human rights of persons subjected to detention or imprisonment, by which it solicited comments from Governments on a draft body of principles for protecting such persons.

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted several resolutions concerning human rights in the administration of justice. These related to completing a convention on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and on action taken to put into practice the principles of the 1975 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment 19 (resolution 34/167), a request for comments on a proposed code of medical ethics relevant to the protection of persons subjected to such treatment or punishment (resolution 34/168) and a call for Government guarantees of the right of amparo, habeas corpus or other such legal remedies (resolution 34/178).

Australia, Belgium, Chile, Ecuador, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Netherlands, Nigeria, Philippines, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States: draft resolution and Annex (draft code of conduct for law enforcement officials), approved without vote by Third Committee on 3 December 1979, meeting 66.

A/34/783. Report of Third Committee (on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment), draft resolution III and Annex.

Resolution 34/169 and Annex, as recommended by Third Committee, A/34/783, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Considering that the purposes proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations include the achievement of international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling, in particular, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Mindful that the nature of the functions of law enforcement in the defence of public order and the manner in which those functions are exercised have a direct impact on the quality of life of individuals as well as of society as a whole,

Conscious of the important task which law enforcement officials are performing diligently and with dignity, in compliance with the principles of human rights,

Aware, nevertheless, of the potential for abuse which the exercise of such duties entails,

Recognizing that the establishment of a code of conduct for law enforcement officials is only one of several important measures for providing the citizenry served by law enforcement officials with protection of all their rights and interests,

Aware that there are additional important principles and prerequisites for the humane performance of law enforcement functions, namely:

- (a) That, like all agencies of the criminal justice system, every law enforcement agency should be representative of and responsive and accountable to the community as a whole
- (b) That the effective maintenance of ethical standards among law enforcement officials depends on the existence of a well-conceived, popularly accepted and humane system of
- (c) That every law enforcement official is part of the criminal justice system, the aim of which is to prevent and control crime, and that the conduct of every functionary within the system has an impact on the entire system,
- (d) That every law enforcement agency, in fulfilment of the first premise of every profession, should be held to the duty of disciplining itself in complete conformity with the principles and standards herein provided and that the actions of law enforcement officials should be responsive to public scrutiny, whether exercised by a review board, a ministry, a procuracy, the judiciary, an ombudsman, a citizens' committee or any combination thereof, or any other reviewing agency,
- (e) That standards as such lack practical value unless their content and meaning, through education and training and through monitoring, become part of the creed of every law enforcement official,

Adopts the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials set forth in the annex to the present resolution and decides to transmit it to Governments with the recommendation that favourable consideration should be given to its use within the framework of national legislation or practice as a body of principles for observance by law enforcement officials.

ANNEX

Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

Article 1

Law enforcement officials shall at all times fulfil the duty imposed upon them by law, by serving the community and by protecting all persons against illegal acts, consistent with the high degree of responsibility required by their profession.

Commentary a

- (a) The term "law enforcement officials" includes all officers of the law, whether appointed or elected, who exercise police powers, especially the powers of arrest or detention
- (b) In countries where police powers are exercised by military authorities, whether uniformed or not, or by state security forces, the definition of law 'enforcement officials shall be regarded as including officers of such services.
- (c) Service to the community is intended to include particularly the rendition of services of assistance to those members of the community who by reason of personal, economic, social or other emergencies are in need of immediate aid.

(d) This provision is intended to cover not only all violent, predatory and harmful acts, but extends to the full range of prohibitions under penal statutes. It extends to conduct by persons not capable of incurring criminal liability.

Article 2

In the performance of their duty, law enforcement officials shall respect and protect human dignity and maintain and uphold the human rights of all persons.

Commentary:

- (a) The human rights in question are identified and protected by national and international law. Among the relevant international instruments are the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the, Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.
- (b) National commentaries to this provision should indicate regional or national provisions identifying and protecting these rights.

Article 3

Law enforcement officials may use force only when strictly necessary and to the extent required for the performance of their duty.

Commentary:

- (a) This provision emphasizes that the use of force by law enforcement officials should be exceptional; while it implies that law enforcement officials may be authorized to use force as is reasonably necessary under the circumstances for the prevention of crime or in effecting or assisting in the lawful arrest of offenders or suspected offenders, no force going beyond that may be used.
- (b) National law ordinarily restricts the use of force by law enforcement officials in accordance with a principle of proportionality. It is to be understood that such national principles of proportionality are to be respected in the interpretation of this provision. In no case should this provision be interpreted to authorize the use of force which is disproportionate to the legitimate objective to be achieved.
- (c) The use of firearms is considered an extreme measure. Every effort should be made to exclude the use of firearms, especially against children. In general, firearms should not be used except when a suspected offender offers armed resistance or otherwise jeopardizes the lives of others and less extreme measures are not sufficient to restrain or apprehend the suspected offender. In every instance in which a firearm is discharged, a report should be made promptly to the competent authorities.

Matters of a confidential nature in the possession of law enforcement officials shall be kept confidential, unless the performance of duty or the needs of justice strictly require otherwise.

a The commentaries provide information to facilitate the use of the Code within the framework of national legislation or practice. In addition, national or regional commentaries could identify specific features of the legal systems and practices of different States or regional intergovernmental organizations which would promote the application of the Code.

Commentary:

By the nature of their duties, law enforcement officials obtain information which may relate to private lives or be potentially harmful to the interests, and especially the reputation, of others. Great care should be exercised in safeguarding and using such information, which should be disclosed only in the performance of duty or to serve the needs of justice. Any disclosure of such information for other purposes is wholly improper.

Article 5

No law enforcement official may inflict, instigate or tolerate any act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, nor may any law enforcement official invoke superior orders or exceptional circumstances such as a state of war or a threat of war, a threat to national security, internal political instability or any other public emergency as a justification of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Commentary:

(a) This prohibition derives from the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly, according to which:

"[Such an act is] an offence to human dignity and shall be condemned as a denial of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights [and other international human rights instruments]."

- (b) The Declaration defines torture as follows:
- "... torture means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted by or at the instigation of a public official on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or confession, punishing him for an act he has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating him or other persons. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to, lawful sanctions to the extent consistent with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners."
- (c) The term "cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" has not been defined by the General Assembly but should be interpreted so as to extend the widest possible protection against abuses, whether physical or mental.

Article 6

Law enforcement officials shall ensure the full protection of the health of persons in their custody and, in particular, shall take immediate action to secure medical attention whenever required.

Commentary:

- (a) "Medical attention," which refers to services rendered by any medical personnel, including certified medical practitioners and paramedics, shall be secured when needed or requested.
- (b) While the medical personnel are likely to be attached to the law enforcement operation, law enforcement officials must take into account the judgement of such personnel when they recommend providing the person in custody with appropriate treatment through, or in consultation with, medical personnel from outside the law enforcement operation.
- (c) It is understood that law enforcement officials shall also secure medical attention for victims of violations of law or of accidents occurring in the course of violations of law.

Article 7

Law enforcement officials shall not commit any act of corruption. They shall also rigorously oppose and combat all such acts.

Commentary:

- (a) Any act of corruption, in the same way as any other abuse of authority, is incompatible with the profession of law enforcement officials. The law must be enforced fully with respect to any law enforcement official who commits an act of corruption, as Governments cannot expect to enforce the law among their citizens if they cannot, or will not, enforce the law against their own agents and within their own agencies.
- (b) While the definition of corruption must be subject to national law, it should be understood to encompass the commission or omission of an act in the performance of or in connexion with one's duties, in response to gifts, promises or incentives demanded or accepted, or the wrongful receipt of these once the act has been committed or omitted.
- (c) The expression "act of corruption" referred to above should be understood to encompass attempted corruption.

Article 8

Law enforcement officials shall respect the law and the present Code. They shall also, to the best of their capability, prevent and rigorously oppose any violations of them.

Law enforcement officials who have reason to believe that a violation of the present Code has occurred or is about to occur shall report the matter to their superior authorities and, where necessary, to other appropriate authorities or organs vested with reviewing or remedial power.

Commentary:

- (a) This Code shall be observed whenever it has been incorporated into national legislation or practice. If legislation or practice contains stricter provisions than those of the present Code, those stricter provisions shall be observed.
- (b) The article seeks to preserve the balance between the need for internal discipline of the agency on which public safety is largely dependent, on the one hand, and the need for dealing with violations of basic human rights, on the other. Law enforcement officials shall report violations within the chain of command and take other lawful action outside the chain of command only when no other remedies are available or effective. It is understood that law enforcement officials shall not suffer administrative or other penalties because they have reported that a violation of this Code has occurred or is about to occur.
- (c) The term "appropriate authorities or organs vested with reviewing or remedial power" refers to any authority or organ existing under national law, whether internal to the law enforcement agency or independent thereof, with statutory, customary or other power to review grievances and complaints arising out of violations within the purview of this Code.
- (d) In some countries, the mass media may be regarded as performing complaint review functions similar to those described in subparagraph (c) above. Law enforcement officials may, therefore, be justified if, as a last resort and in accordance with the laws and customs of their own countries and with the provisions of article 4 of the present Code, they bring violations to the attention of public opinion through the mass media.
- (e) Law enforcement officials who comply with the provisions of this Code deserve the respect, the full support and the co-operation of the community and of the law enforcement agency in which they serve, as well as the law enforcement profession.

Resolution 1979/21, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/55, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the importance of co-operation among Member States and the value of efforts already made by the international community in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, and also the need to promote development of this co-operation at the interregional and regional levels.

Recalling its resolution 1086 B (XXXIX) of 30 July 1965 concerning the strengthening of the United Nations social defence programme, in pursuance of which, inter alia, was established the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence, and also General Assembly resolutions 32/58, 32/59 and 32/60 of 8 December 1977.

Reaffirming the primary importance of the role of research and training in the field of social defence,

Aware of the fact that if the United Nations institutes and United Nations-affiliated institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders are to be successful in the work they are doing in the context of economic and social development, they must be able to plan an organic, coherent and long-term policy,

Considering that the results which the institutes have achieved and the services they have rendered both to the international community as a whole and to specific regions or countries not only justify the maintenance of those institutes but also militate in favour of their consolidation and strengthening,

Also aware of the fact that the means hitherto employed may benefit from increased co-ordination and co-operation,

- 1. Expresses its gratitude to all countries, in particular to the host countries Costa Rica, Egypt, Italy and Japan, which, by their voluntary contributions, have so far made possible the establishment and operation of the institutes;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General, with a view to strengthening the above-mentioned institutes, to take all appropriate measures to ensure permanent financial resources -in addition to other voluntary contributions provided by governmental and non-governmental sources- by placing the question before the competent bodies of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations regional commissions;
- 3. Further requests the Secretary-General to study, with the competent bodies of the United Nations and the Secretariat services concerned, the most appropriate steps to secure better co-ordination of the work programmes of the institutes.

TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION IN CRIME PREVENTION AND CONTROL

E/1979/24. Report of Commission for Social Development on its 26th session, Headquarters, New York, 20 February-9 March 1979, Chapter VI (resolution 8(XXVI)).

E/1979/24, Chapter I A. Draft resolution IX, as recommended by Commission for adoption by Economic and Social Council, approved without vote by Second Committee on 27 April 1979, meeting 17.

E/1979/55. Report of Second (Social) Committee, draft resolution VII.

Resolution 1979/20, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/55, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 32/59 of 8 December 1977, by which the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with regard to the report of the Fifth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Concerned about the prevailing trend of criminality in many countries of the world and its impact on the efforts of Member States to promote and sustain a better quality of life in their respective countries, especially in the developing countries.

Aware that Member States, particularly developing countries, are evaluating or willing to evaluate the effectiveness of their criminal justice systems with a view towards restructuring them so as to ensure their capacity to deal with rising crime rates,

Reaffirming the right of each Member State to formulate and implement its national policies and programmes in the field of crime prevention and control in accordance with its own needs and priorities,

Considering that a growing number of countries feel the lack of interregional and technical advisers capable of assisting Governments in planning and implementing their crime prevention strategies,

Recognizing the importance of co-operation among Member States and the efforts already made by the international community in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, as well as the need to promote further collaboration in this field at the regional and interregional levels,

Recognizing also the desirability of sustaining international collaboration and efforts in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, as a significant element in the achievement of the objectives of the new international economic order and the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Noting the importance of the availability of technical assistance and technical advisory services, on a regular basis, to members of the international community which request them, especially among the developing countries of the world,

Concerned that the countries of Africa south of the Sahara, in spite of numerous appeals to the international community for assistance in establishing regional institutes to facilitate research, planning and implementation of crime prevention programmes and strategies, are still without viable regional means of collaborating systematically and in concert in matters pertaining to crime prevention and the treatment of offenders.

Recalling that the United Nations has already established institutes in other regions of the world,

- 1. Requests the Secretary-General to establish an institute for Africa south of the Sahara in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders;
- Also requests the Secretary-General to restore and make available through the United Nations Development Programme the services of interregional and regional advisers in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders to Member States, at their request;
- 3. Further requests the Secretary-General, under the auspices of the programme of technical co-operation among developing countries, to explore new formulae for providing developing countries with technical experts through the United Nations, for instance, providing experts whose basic salary would be covered by the sending country and whose additional expenses would be covered by the receiving country.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

E/1979/24. Report of Commission for Social Development on its 26th session, Headquarters, New York, 20 February-9 March 1979, Chapter VI.

E/1979/24, Chapter I A. Draft resolution XI, as recommended by Commission for adoption by Economic and Social Council, approved without vote by Second Committee on 27 April 1979, meeting 17.

E/1979/55. Report of Second (Social) Committee, draft resolution IX.

Resolution 1979/22, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/55, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2857(XXVI) of 20 December 1971 and 32/61 of 8 December 1977 in which the Assembly confirmed the continuing interest of the United Nations in the study of the question of capital punishment with a view to promoting full respect for everyone's right to life and also reaffirmed that the main objective to be pursued was the progressive restriction of the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed with a view to the desirability of abolishing that punishment,

Concerned about the slow progress in achieving this objective,

Reaffirming its wish for the establishment of adequate legal procedures and the greatest possible safeguards for the accused in capital cases,

Mindful of its resolution 1930(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, in which it requested the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2857(XXVI), to proceed with the report on practices and statutory rules which might govern the right of a person sentenced to capital punishment to petition for pardon, commutation or reprieve, and to report on those questions to the Council at the latest at its first regular session of 1980, together with the basic report of 1980 on capital punishment,

Considering that the General Assembly, in paragraph 5 of its resolution 32/61, requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to give consideration to the appropriate place on the agenda of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders of the issue of capital punishment and to prepare documentation on the question,

Noting the decisions of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its fifth session, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 32/61, dealing with the appropriate place on the agenda of the Sixth Congress of the issue of capital punishment and with the preparation of documentation on the question.

- 1. Decides that it is essential for the preparation of the future reports on capital punishment, in particular for the report to be submitted to the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to have the fullest possible information on the use of the death penalty in all countries;
- Decides further that, in order to accomplish this objective, the questionnaire that has been used for collecting information on the question should be so framed as to simplify to the utmost extent the task of Governments in responding to it;
- 3. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to elicit full responses from all Governments, if necessary by measures that may include the participation of national correspondents or the sending of representatives to make visits to countries requesting such assistance.

Reaffirming its duty to promote international co-operation in solving economic, social, cultural and humanitarian problems and the responsibility assumed by it for promoting international co-operation in the area of crime prevention and control.

Recalling paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 32/60 of 8 December 1977, as well as the other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the need for and importance of more effective and better co-ordinated arrangements for the work of United Nations bodies dealing with crime prevention and the treatment of offenders,

Recognizing the role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in assisting the Economic and Social Council in organizing and co-ordinating activities concerning crime prevention and control in the United Nations system,

- 1. Entrusts the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with the following main functions:

Popular participation and institutional development

Technical aid activities

During 1979, 12 experts and two associate experts provided technical assistance in the field of popular participation and institutional development to Botswana, the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, the Ivory Coast, Oman, Saudi Arabia and Swaziland. These projects were concerned with rural development in many sectors and with community-development training and research. One interregional adviser and two senior technical advisers, together with United Nations staff members, provided short-term advisory services on project formulation, review and evaluation at the request of Governments.

Twelve fellowships were awarded to nationals of Botswana, Democratic Yemen and Swaziland. The Swazi fellowships were executed in cooperation with the African Training and Research Centre for Women of the Economic Commission for Africa and involved study tours to Ghana, Kenya and Sierra Leone in the field of training for income-generating activities among rural families. Other fellowship holders were placed in the USSR and the United States.

Agrarian reform and rural development

In 1979, the Commission for Social Development considered and took note of three reports and one note by the Secretary-General on various aspects of agrarian reform and rural development.

One report considered approaches and issues in integrated rural development and described the scope of rural development policies in relation to over-all strategies for socio-economic development. It discussed the issues of agrarian reform, rural institutions, agricultural production, employment in rural areas and the processes of internal migration and urbanization. The report suggested that the interrelations between agricultural and industrial development, employment and income policies, urbanization and over-all economic policy were difficult to control, and concluded that the success of integrated rural development programmes depended on urban demand for rural goods and on urban stimulation of the whole economy.

A report on the role of locally based organizations in implementing land reform programmes highlighted the importance of people's participation in successful land reform, especially in efforts to increase food production and ensure its equitable distribution. It discussed three main issues affecting the nature and form of locally based organizations: the socio-economic climate, linkages between them and other organizations, and their own organizational structure. The nature and functions of four major types of such organizations that had contributed to implementing land reform programmes were analysed: co-operatives, rural-worker organizations, organizations for community development and those of devolved administration. The report also discussed their role in mobilizing local human and material resources for rural development.

Increased food production and its more equitable distribution were also the subject of a report on the social consequences of the green revolution, whose new agricultural technology had enabled dramatic increases to be made in agricultural yield in the 1960s, but had had unforeseen effects on society. The report discussed a number of such social consequences—changes in agrarian structure, distribution of inputs and income, rural employment and changes in social relations—and contained recommendations for resolving the problems discussed.

The note on the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination's Task Force on Rural Development described the origins of the Task Force and progress made in its three main areas of activity: joint action by the United Nations system to promote a governmental interagency approach to rural development activities at the country level; monitoring and evaluating at that level and in terms of agency budgets; and harmonization of agency programme proposals for such activities.

(See also p. 500.)

In a related decision of 9 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1979/18 on strengthening developmental social welfare policies and programmes, requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to strengthen the Secretariat's activities relating to policy, planning, training and operational aspects of social welfare, including those of relevance to integrated rural development. (For details, see p. 755; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Population questions

Population activities of the United Nations

Research and analysis

During 1979, the first quinquennial review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action was completed and the results published. The monitoring of population trends and policies for biennial review by appropriate United Nations bodies continued. Global research and analysis included work on the relation between population and development, population policies, fertility and family planning, migration and urbanization, and a revision of United Nations estimates and projections was under way.

In 1979, the work programme in population trends and structure included the reinstatement of mortality studies. Research on international migration and urbanization was expanded and new statistical projections were prepared for total population, sex/age structure, urban/rural distribution, and households and families. In fertility and family planning, work progressed on the analysis of World Fertility Survey data, factors affecting the acceptance of family planning programmes and the impact of family planning programmes on fertility. Investigation of the relation of social to economic factors and of the components of demographic change was expanded to include studies of the interrelation of population trends to income disparities, and of demographic variables to levels of consumption.

Research on the interrelations of population, resources, environment and development was carried out and attention was given to policy implications of the changing structure of the world population, to comparative studies of national population policies and to the study of the interrelation between population policies and other development policies.

United Nations expertise in the field of population was provided at meetings, missions, workshops and training seminars. Meetings organized during 1979 included: a second expert group meeting on measuring the impact of family planning programmes on fertility, which met from 19 to 26 March at Geneva to work on a methodology for fertility research; a meeting on the socioeconomic determinants of mortality, which was held from 19 to 25 June at Mexico City to formulate proposals for research on mortality differentials; a workshop on population distribution policies in development planning, convened at Bangkok, Thailand, from 4 to 13 September to prepare guidelines for integrating migration, population distribution and settlement planning into national and regional development plans; and an expert group meeting on population/ development modelling, which took place from 24 to 28 September at Geneva to review existing population/development models and assess their practical value in policy-making and -planning. In addition, interagency co-ordination continued on the monitoring of population trends and policies, demographic projections, population and development, and the interrelations of population, resources, environment and development, and on the analysis of data from the World Fertility Survey.

Technical co-operation

In response to increased awareness by Governments of the need to incorporate population policies into development strategies, the United Nations programme of technical co-operation in population continued to help develop national capabilities in demographic analysis, the formulation of population policies and training in the population disciplines.

Substantive services-expert advice, fellowships, meetings, equipment, project development and assessment missions-were provided in 1979 to approximately 87 countries, and 94 country, regional and interregional population experts provided assistance. A total of 37 experts worked in Africa— 22 in individual countries and 15 at the regional or interregional level; five in Asia, all at the country level; seven in Europe-one at the country level and six at regional/interregional levels; 39 in Latin America-nine at the country level and 30 at regional/interregional levels; and six in Western Asia, all in individual countries.

United Nations fellowships were awarded to 219 persons from developing countries for study at the seven United Nations regional and interregional population training and research centres, and at other institutions: 101 to African nationals —74 for study at United Nations centres, 27 at other institutions; 44 to Asian nationals —28 at United Nations centres, 16 at other institutions; three to European nationals—two at United Nations centres, one elsewhere; 47 to Latin Americans—45 at United Nations centres, two for outside study; and 24 to West Asian nationals—six at United Nations centres, 18 at other institutions.

Action to implement the World Population Plan of Action

The Population Commission, at its twentieth session held in New York from 29 January to 9 February 1979, reviewed progress made during the first five years towards achieving the goals and recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action adopted at the United Nations World Population Conference in 1974.² It appended to its report to the Economic and Social Council a summary of the findings of the review and appraisal of the progress made towards achieving those goals.

With regard to population and its relation to development, the summary noted changes in aggregate population size and rate of growth since 1974, progress in implementing population policies and programmes since then at the national level and by the regional commissions, specialized agencies, the United Nations and nongovernmental organizations, trends in the flow of resources for international co-operation, and sectoral development strategies. In the context of socio-economic policies and population, attention was drawn to some key social and economic conditions in the fields of education, food and nutrition, employment and income distribution and the status of women. Trends in population variables brought about by mortality, fertility, internal distribution and migration and international migration were also discussed.

The Commission approved measures to strengthen actions concerned with implementing the Plan of Action and recommended them to the Council for adoption in the form of a draft resolution.

The Council, at its April/May 1979 session, adopted the text, as orally amended, as resolution 1979/32, by which it urged all Member States and regional and interregional bodies to develop and strengthen activities to implement the Plan of Action. It also urged organizations concerned with providing technical assistance to developing countries to increase their support for activities in the field of population within the framework of the Plan of Action. It called upon those responsible for drafting and adopting the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade and other international instruments for social, economic and technological progress, including those for implementing a new international economic order, to include in such documents full recognition of the interrelationships of population factors and social, economic, cultural and political development, and the need for urgent action to deal with population problems.

The Council asked the Population Commission to advise it on the possibility of holding an international conference to review population developments in the first decade following the World Population Conference in order to contribute further to the quinquennial review and appraisal process and to the implementation of the Plan of Action, and requested the Commission to continue that review process with the continued cooperation of the specialized agencies and regional organizations of the United Nations system.

A number of priority areas for action, which had been identified in the first quinquennial review and appraisal of progress, for implementing the Plan of Action were annexed to the resolution; recommendations contained therein specified such priority areas and urged that certain actions be taken by national Governments and regional and international organizations to implement the Plan of Action. The Council, by the accompanying resolution, urged all Member States, regional and international bodies, both governmental and non-governmental, particularly to take account of these recommendations.

Resolution 1979/32 was adopted, without vote, on 9 May, on a recommendation of the First (Economic) Committee, which had likewise approved the text on 4 May. The draft resolution that had been proposed by the Population Commission was orally amended in the First Committee by Mexico; thereby, the Council called on representatives of governmental Member States-rather than on United Nations bodies, officials and experts, or, as previously proposed by Mexico, on members of the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy—responsible for drafting and adopting international instruments for progress to include in such documents recognition of the interrelationships of population and development.

In addition, Mexico and the United States, by an oral amendment and subamendment respectively, modified a recommendation in the annex, by which States for which international migration was important were urged to conduct consultations with a view to harmonizing policies which affected migration, taking into account international instruments and United Nations resolutions they considered relevant. The Commission's text had referred to Governments significantly affected by such migration and to bilateral and multilateral consultations, and had not mentioned international instruments and resolutions in this context.

Following adoption of the resolution, France reiterated that, although it was not opposed to possibly holding an international conference to review population developments, such a conference should be essentially scientific in character.

Morocco hoped that the Commission would look more seriously into the means available to developing countries and the need to increase the dissemination of information.

Work programme in the field of population

The Population Commission, at its 1979 session, recommended a draft resolution on the work programme in the field of population for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. The Council adopted the text on 9 May as resolution 1979/33.

It thereby asked the Secretary-General, inter alia: to strengthen work on population trends and structure and the demographic estimates and projections component of the work programme; to continue studies on causes of fertility change, on the interrelationships of population and development, and on population policies and their implications; to prepare a manual for national use on ways to incorporate demographic factors in development planning; to publish population studies and projections; to facilitate establishment of a decentralized Population Information Network for co-ordinating regional, national and non-governmental activities, and try to obtain extrabudgetary resources for advisory group and co-ordinating unit operations; to continue monitoring population trends and policies; to expand the technical co-operation programme in population to countries requesting it; to strengthen the United Nations training programme in population through expansion of its training and research centres, support for national training institutions and continuation of the training fellowship programme in population disciplines, particularly in development planning; and to assist Governments on request to establish or strengthen their co-ordinating, research and advisory population institutions.

The Council urged Member States to ensure that census evaluation and analysis methods and data, and their use, formed an integral part of national census programmes by establishing and strengthening national population organizations and institutions; it also emphasized the need for organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen collaboration and co-ordination in planning and executing population programmes.

Resolution 1979/33 was adopted without vote; the First Committee had approved it in like manner on 3 May.

Interrelations of population, resources, environment and development

At its July/August 1979 session, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1979/49, took note with appreciation of a report by the Secretary-General on the study of the interrelations of population, resources, environment and development, prepared in accordance with a 1974 General Assembly resolution³ and a 1978 Council decision.4 The report addressed itself to what constituted an appropriate conceptual framework for the study of the interrelations among the four areas and outlined the nature of the problem and possible directions for research. It reviewed selected work under way or planned within the United Nations system in the areas of: carrying capacity of land and associated ecosystems; soil degradation, desertification and deforestation; resource utilization and incomelevel disparities; integrated rural development; urban concentration of population; industrialization; marine pollution and resources; health aspects of a changing environment; and climatic variability. Arrangements for co-ordinated multidisciplinary activity were also discussed.

Also by resolution 1979/49, the Council urged Member States and United Nations bodies to make full use of available knowledge concerning the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development in all their development activities, and requested that multidisciplinary, including comparative, national and regional, studies of those relationships should be undertaken as part of the United Nations system's research activities. It requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council in 1981 on the result of these activities both throughout the United Nations and in relevant outside organizations.

Resolution 1979/49 was adopted, by consensus, on 1 August on a proposal submitted by Denmark, Finland, Kenya, the Netherlands, Norway, the Philippines, the Sudan, Sweden and Turkey.

At its regular 1979 session, the General Assembly considered a statement, annexed to a letter of 4 October from Sweden, issued by the participants in a United Nations symposium on the interrelations among resources, the environment, population and development, held at Stockholm from 6 to 10 August 1979. The statement contained observations of the participants, in their personal capacities, on the capacity of the earth to support growing populations, the impact of human development on the total system, consumption patterns and life styles, and the use of resources.

On 19 December, the Assembly took note of the statement and drew it to the attention of relevant United Nations bodies. Decision 34/450, containing this action, was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved on 11 December, also without vote, a text proposed by Sweden.

Report on the world population situation

A summary and conclusions of the concise report on the world population situation in 1979—a biennial report on the world population situation, scheduled for publication-were presented to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular 1979 session. The report outlined demographic trends during the last quarter of the century, outlined governmental perceptions and policies concerning the demographic process and gave an over-all picture of some current and future problems associated with population policies.

By decision 1979/28, adopted without objection on 9 May, the Council took note of the report and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session. The text of the decision was orally proposed by the Chairman of the First Committee and approved by that Committee without vote on 3 May.

Report of the Population Commission

On 9 May 1979, by decision 1979/27 adopted without objection, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Population Commission on its twentieth (January/February 1979) session, together with the appendix summarizing the findings of the review and appraisal of the progress made towards achieving the goals and recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action (see subsection above). The text of the decision was approved, without vote, by the First Committee on 4 May, as orally proposed by the Committee Chairman.

United Nations Fund for Population Activities

Operational activities

In 1979, pledges to the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) from donor countries reached almost $112 million, an increase of $10 million over 1978.

The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which also serves as the governing body of UNFPA, at its session in New York from 6 June to 16 July 1979, approved total allocations of $156.5 million to UNFPA, including funds for projects, overhead payable to the United Nations and administrative expenses. The cumulative total of pledges to UNFPA since its establishment in 1969 passed $600 million.

The total allocated for projects during the year was almost $149 million, of which family planning continued to receive the major share—over 40 per cent, which was more than twice the allocation to basic data collection. These were followed, in descending order, by communication and education, population dynamics, multisectoral activities, formulation and evaluation of population policies, implementation of policies and special programmes.

During 1979, fewer allocations were made to intercountry projects as the emphasis continued to shift to country programmes and activities which emphasized human resource development in developing countries through training programmes, exchange of skills, knowledge and experience, the strengthening of existing national institutions and the building of new ones, and the improvement of managerial, administrative and productive capabilities, together with operational research and pilot projects in fertility regulation, migration and spatial distribution.

Much of the intercountry programme support was allocated to UNFPA'S task force for technical co-operation among developing countries, which continued to monitor the progress of the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries⁵ as it related to population activities. Demographic centres continued to receive UNFPA support for training demographers and population-data analysts. Several workshops were held during the year. In particular, a workshop designed to initiate fertility research and integrated family planning and health programmes in South-East Asia was held for countries in the Association of South-East Asian Nations, and workshops on integrated nutrition and family planning were organized in Africa. A regional interagency meeting was also convened to streamline intercountry programmes in Africa and to develop a regional strategy to set priorities and make possible an increase in financial assistance to the region's population activities.

Among UNFPA-sponsored international gatherings was a Latin American ministerial conference on population and development planning, organized in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Latin America to provide the first forum for an exchange of experience among ministers of planning, held at Cartagena, Colombia, in May.

From 28 August to 1 September, an International Conference of Parliamentarians on Population and Development was convened jointly by UNFPA and the Inter-Parliamentary Union at Colombo, Sri Lanka, to familiarize legislators with current demographic trends and to define areas for national action. By a letter of 5 October, Sri Lanka transmitted to the General Assembly the text of the Colombo Declaration on Population and Development, approved at the Conference by 58 country representatives and subsequently affirmed by the Inter-Parliamentary Council, which called for, among other things, strengthening of the role and functions of UNFPA.

Population activities of the organizations within the United Nations system continued to receive UNFPA support. International Labour Organisation regional teams were responsible for technical advisory assistance to more than 50 UNFPA-supported national projects related mainly to family welfare education for organized labour and to labour policy research. World Health Organization (WHO) technical advisers in fields related to maternal and child health and family planning programmes were funded. With the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), UNFPA supported the creation and servicing of an international network of population educators on issues such as the multidisciplinary integration of population education into school and non-formal education programmes. Projects by UNESCO on the relation between the education of women, fertility and age at marriage were also funded by UNFPA during the year. Other projects were executed by the United Nations Children's Fund for UNFPA. Contributions to programmes of nongovernmental organizations were also increased for analysing and disseminating information on emerging population issues, organizing training projects and preparing information programmes.

Legislative decisions

The UNDP Governing Council, meeting in June/July 1979, adopted two resolutions on the work of UNFPA.

The Council took note of the report of the Executive Director of UNFPA on activities in 1978 and on the future programme of work. It approved, in addition to 23 large-scale country programmes and projects, a regional project in the Caribbean, allocations to the United Nations Romanian Demographic Centre and funding for the remaining years of previously approved UNFPA support for the World Fertility Survey.

The Council agreed that, unless it decided otherwise, allocations to new large-scale projects and programmes would be approved for their whole duration up to five years and information would be requested on projects costing $250,000 and upwards approved under the Executive Director's authority. It took note of his report on UNFPA support of intercountry activities and approved recommendations therein on priority areas for UNFPA support. The Council also agreed that UNFPA would increase its contribution to the WHO Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction.

The Council took note of a progress report on U N F P A infrastructure support to organizations within the United Nations system and requested the Executive Director to continue discussions with the parties concerned. It also gave the Executive Director authority to approve, within available resources, additional funds in 1979 of up to $16 million, an additional $95.5 million for 1980, $49 million for 1981, and $34.5 million for 1982.

By a second resolution, the Council approved $6,672,697 in appropriations to UNFPA to finance administrative and programme support services for 1980, including staffing changes.

The Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1979/55 on 2 August 1979, whereby it took note of the Governing Council's 1979 decisions and authorized the Secretariat to submit that Council's report to the General Assembly, which, by resolution 34/106 of 14 December, took note of the report.

(For further details, see p. 544; for page references to texts of decision 1979/55 and resolution 34/106, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Also on 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/104, by which it affirmed that UNFPA was a subsidiary organ of the Assembly, and invited the UNDP Governing Council to give adequate and separate consideration to UNFPA items. It also invited the Secretary-General to arrange for UNFPA to participate in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and its subsidiary machinery. It reaffirmed that UNFPA should continue to avail itself of the services of UNDP and its resident representatives, and invited Governments to increase their contributions to UNFPA in view of the rapidly growing needs for population assistance in developing countries.

Resolution 34/104 was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Second Committee, which had approved it without vote on 28 November, as sponsored by 45 powers (see DocUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Pledging Conference

At the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 6 November, a number of States made pledges to UNFPA for 1980. By 30 June 1980, 91 Governments had pledged $124,859,419 to the Fund's activities for that year (for details, see p. 557).

Resolution 1979/32 and Annex, as recommended by First Committee, E/1979/59, adopted without vote by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 14.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3344(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, in which the Assembly affirmed that the World Population Plan of Action was an instrument of the international community for the promotion of economic development, quality of life, human rights and fundamental freedoms within the broader context of the internationally adopted strategies for national and international progress,

Noting with appreciation the population policies and programmes adopted by international agencies, non-governmental organizations and many States pursuant to the provisions of the World Population Plan of Action, and the progress already made,

Conscious of the magnitude and urgency of the tasks still remaining,

Recalling also its resolution 2051 (LXII) of 5 May 1977, in which it requested the Secretary-General, in pursuing the task of collecting data and information relevant to the formulation of a new international development strategy, to take due account of the World Population Plan of Action as one of the inputs of particular relevance to that task, with the aim of helping the General Assembly to give due weight to the role of population and the importance of population policies and activities in their relationship to the establishment of a new international economic order, and also of ensuring that population policies and activities should be integrated into the goals, objectives, policy measures and targets to be contained in any new strategy,

Having considered and approved the findings of the first quinquennial review and appraisal of the progress made towards achieving the goals of the World Population Plan of Action, which was called for in paragraph 108 of the Plan of Action and in Council decision 87(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, as reported by the Population Commission in the report on its twentieth session,

Recognizing the need to observe priorities for action in the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action,

- 1. Urges all Member States and regional and international bodies, both governmental and non-governmental, to develop and strengthen further activities designed to implement the World Population Plan of Action, and in particular to take account of the recommendations concerning priority areas for action identified in the first review and appraisal of the progress made towards the implementation of the Plan of Action, annexed to the present resolution;
- 2. Urges governmental and intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations and United Nations agencies concerned with providing technical assistance and aid to developing countries to increase their support for activities in the field of population within the framework of the World Population Plan of Action, and in particular to take action in accordance with the recommendations for priority areas identified in the first review and appraisal;
- 3. Calls upon the governmental representatives of States Members of the United Nations responsible for drafting and adopting the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, the Action Programme to be produced by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development and other international instruments for economic, social and technological progress to include in such documents full recognition of the interrelationships of population factors and social, economic, cultural and political development, and the need for full and urgent action to deal with population problems; these interrelationships should also be borne in mind in all instruments developed for the implementation of a new international economic order;

- 4. Requests the Population Commission, in consultation with appropriate United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations, to consider at its twenty-first session, and advise the Council on, the possibility of holding an international conference to review population developments in the first decade following the World Population Conference, with the aim of contributing to the process of quinquennial review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action and to the further implementation of the Plan of Action;
- 5. Requests the Population Commission to continue with the process of the monitoring, review and appraisal of progress towards the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action and requests the specialized agencies and regional organizations of the United Nations system to continue to contribute to that process.

ANNEX

Priority areas for action identified in the first review and appraisal of the progress made towards the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action

A. Preamble

- A central point in the World Population Plan of Action is the view that population is an integral part of socio-economic development aimed at improving the quality of life of all people. The population issue does not stand alone; rather, it is one of the set of central factors that interact closely. As such, it must be taken into account along with others in order to promote quality of life, human rights and fundamental freedoms.
- 2. The review and appraisal of the progress made towards achieving the goals and recommendations of the Plan of Action, undertaken by the Secretary-General with the collaboration of Governments of Member States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations, shows that the guidance provided by the Plan to national Governments and international organizations for concerted action in the population field has been crucial for the promotion and actual implementation of many measures related to demographic variables.
- 3. In population, as in many other fields, however, change is a never-ending process. Issues which were very controversial in 1974 and on which Governments represented at Bucharest achieved consensus are less controversial today; certain population problems are more acute and more diversified in 1979 than they were five years ago; others are showing signs of evolution that can be considered positive; and still others, which were only beginning to surface when the World Population Conference was convened, are now new causes of concern in several countries. These changes made it advisable to take steps to reinforce and adapt the Plan of Action and identify priority areas for action.
- 4. In its operative paragraph the Plan of Action is described as a policy instrument within the broader context of the internationally adopted strategies. It is a matter of first priority that when the new long-term objectives for development are drawn up, special efforts should be made to incorporate in them an adequate treatment of population problems and policies. The same attitude should be adopted in the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade, which is now being drafted; in a new international economic order; in any plan emanating from a United Nations conference or body on subjects such as science and technology, the child, agrarian reform and rural development; and in any revision of an existing programme on employment, food and nutrition, the status of women, human settlements, the environment and so on. In like manner, the goals, objectives, measures and recommendations of all such instruments, when pertinent, should be conducive to modifications and clarifications of the World Population Plan of Action.

- 5. Accordingly, the recommendations which follow specify priority areas for action urged on national Governments and regional and international organizations, as appropriate, for the implementation of the World Population Plan of Action. They clarify certain provisions of the Plan of Action, call attention to new population issues and give further emphasis to others, already considered in the Plan, which have not received adequate attention at the national or international levels. These recommendations should be circulated to all national Governments, United Nations bodies, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations.
- 6. The review and appraisal of the progress made towards achieving the goals of the World Population Plan of Action during the past five years indicates that an enormous task remains to be done. However, the limited and partial moves which have already been started towards these goals demonstrate that progress on a wider front is possible, if the needed actions are forthcoming. The recommendations formulated to that end reaffirm the principles and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action.

B. Recommendations concerning priority areas for action

- 1. Governments which consider that population trends hamper the attainment of their national development objectives and the enhancement of the quality of life of their people are urged to adopt population policies in accord with their national objectives and consistent with the World Population Plan of Action. To this end, all States Members of the United Nations which have not done so are urged to establish, without delay, a unit staffed with qualified personnel at a high level of their administrative structure to integrate population measures and programmes into their social and economic goals, strategies and plans and to evaluate progress towards those goals.
- 2. Countries with high levels of mortality, especially those whose populations have not yet attained a life expectancy of 50 years or more or an infant mortality level below 120 per thousand live births, are urged to take special measures to reduce mortality rapidly, particularly by means of the provision of primary health services to all of their people by 1985. Countries which have already attained a high level of life expectancy still need to take action to reduce mortality further. All countries are urged to develop programmes with the objective of reducing differences in the incidence of illness and death among different regions and social groups. These programmes should include measures to improve access to better and wider health and social programmes, such as improved sanitation, water supply, and nutrition education, and stronger efforts to eliminate or reduce infectious and parasitic diseases.
- 3. All Governments are requested to examine their national development objectives, programmes and projects in order to determine their effects on national fertility levels and goals and, as recommended in paragraph 31 of the Plan of Action, to give priority to those development strategies, programmes and projects which, while contributing to the well-being of their population and to economic and social progress, will have a decisive effect on demographic trends, including fertility.
- 4. Governments are urged, in accordance with paragraph 29 of the Plan of Action, to respect and ensure, regardless of their over-all demographic goals, the right of persons to determine, in a free, informed and responsible manner, the number and spacing of their children; to provide, as soon as possible, appropriate education on responsible parenthood and to make available to persons who so desire advice and the means of achieving it; and to provide assistance in overcoming involuntary sterility and subfecundity for all individuals desiring such help.

- 5. Governments are urged, in accordance with paragraph 32 of the Plan of Action, to give high priority to the following development goals:
- (a) The full integration of women into the development process, particularly by means of their greater participation in educational, social, economic and political opportunities;
- (b) A more equitable distribution of income, land, social services and amenities;
 - (c) The promotion of wide educational opportunities;
 - (d) The elimination of child labour;
- (e) The establishment of an appropriate minimum age at marriage.
- 6. Governments which consider the birth-rates in their countries detrimental to their national purposes and which have undertaken national population programmes are urged, consistent with paragraph 37 of the Plan of Action, to set quantitative goals and implement policies that may lead to the attainment of such goals by specific dates—1985 for intermediate objectives and 2000 for long-term objectives -and to use such goals in guiding their programmes and evaluating their progress.
- 7. All Governments need to consider carefully changes in the distribution of the population of their countries. As a matter of priority they also need to expand their capacity to deal with problems of redistribution, regional planning conducive to a more balanced spatial distribution of urban and rural population, and the special problems of metropolitan areas.
- 8. Governments of countries for which international migration is important are urged to conduct consultations with a view to harmonizing policies which affect such migration, taking into account international instruments and resolutions of United Nations bodies they consider relevant. This recommendation is of particular urgency in view of the substantial changes that have occurred in the volume, direction and content of international flows during the past five years.
- 9. All Governments are urged, when formulating their social and economic policies and programmes, to take fully into account the existing and anticipated demographic and social structure of the population. Governments are urged to consider the implications of population growth-both in countries where it is high and in those where it is very low-and the relationship of population structure to:
- (a) The number of students and the need for teachers and schools:
 - (b) The changing role and status of women;
 - (c) The changing organization and role of the family;
 - (d) The formation of new households and housing needs;
- (e) The growth and composition of the labour force, with particular reference to age, sex, skills and experience;
- (f) The well-being of older persons, with particular reference to their needs for social and economic security.
- 10. In planning their socio-economic development policies, especially in the fields of education, health, production and technology, as recommended in paragraph 69 of the Plan of Action, Governments should recognize the impact of such policies on all aspects of population trends, qualitative as well as quantitative. Likewise, Governments should evaluate the consequences of demographic trends for their social and economic development strategies. The interrelationships of population trends and development have to be stressed not only in the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade as explicitly stated in section A above, but also in national development strategies.
- 11. Governments are urged to expand the participation of their people—particularly young people-and communities in the formulation and implementation of population and development programmes, using all community services possible.
- 12. Governments are reminded of the urgent need to take a population census as part of the 1980 World Population and Housing Census Programme, with due consideration of the need for data disaggregated by social and other groups and then to analyse and use the data for development planning and the formulation of population policies. Equally important is the need to develop and improve vital registration systems and demographic statistics in order to obtain accurate and timely information on the evolution of fertility, mortality and migration; and to develop and improve capability for taking household sample surveys.

- 13. Governments are urged to set priorities for research on population and on its relationships to cultural, political, social and economic factors and to the environment, natural resources and similar issues. In setting priorities, an appropriate balance between the research projects on various population issues should be maintained, in the light of each country's particular needs.
- 14. Governments are urged to take steps to ensure the training of an adequate supply of personnel and their distribution, as may be needed to implement their population programmes. The training provided should be suited to the functions of personnel at all levels of programme activity. Governments are reminded of the crucial importance of well-trained managerial personnel to an effective population programme.

C. Recommendations for implementation

- 1. In implementing the above recommendations for action within the framework of the World Population Plan of Action, international organizations with relevant programmes are urged to give maximum assistance to countries. Countries, in turn, are urged to seek the advice and assistance of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations. Full use should also be made of opportunities for technical co-operation among developing countries in the area of population.
- 2. Finally, in view of the rapid changes that are occurring in various dimensions of population, and given the need for an informed response to those changes, the importance of continued periodic monitoring, review and appraisal, regional consultations on population and development, and associated activities by appropriate agencies of the United Nations is stressed. The results of such activities should be fully taken into account in the formulation of any new international development strategy.

Chapter XIX

Human rights questions

United Nations bodies continued during 1979 to investigate situations involving violations of human rights in several parts of the world, to develop international standards, and to pursue other means of promoting and protecting fundamental rights and freedoms.

The General Assembly adopted a new programme of activities for the second half of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983), while the Economic and Social Council established a working group composed of all of its members to evaluate the results of those activities. Four States adhered to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, bringing the total number of States parties to 106. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination continued to examine reports by States parties on what they had done to implement the Convention.

The International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, observed each year on 21 March, marked in 1979 the closing of the International Anti-Apartheid Year and the beginning of the international mobilization against apartheid. Five States became party to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, raising the number of adherents to 54, and the Commission on Human Rights pursued its efforts to prepare a list of individuals and organizations responsible for the crime as defined in the Convention. A Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities presented a revised provisional general list of 2,605 banks, companies and international sports bodies giving economic, military or other types of assistance to the colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa.

Acting on a report by the Human Rights Commission's Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the General Assembly arrange for a study of the South African Government's legitimacy in view of its apartheid policy. The Council also renewed the Group's mandate, asking it for a special report on torture and murder of detainees in South Africa.

The Commission on Human Rights adopted the first three articles of a draft declaration on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief, and decided to continue work on the draft in 1980. The Economic and Social Council decided to disseminate widely a new report on the protection of the rights of non-citizens.

Investigations continued into alleged violations of human rights in territories occupied by Israel and in Chile. Acting on reports by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the Commission and the General Assembly again condemned a number of Israeli practices in these territories and Assembly by the newly appointed Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in that country and the Expert on the Question of the Fate of Missing and Disappeared Persons in Chile. The Commission and the Assembly expressed concern that the situation had not improved and urged the Chilean authorities to respect human rights.

United Nations bodies also considered alleged human rights violations in Democratic Kampuchea, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Iran and Nicaragua. Communications from nongovernmental sources containing similar allegations with regard to a number of countries were handled by the Commission under a confidential procedure.

The Commission and the Assembly adopted resolutions on the right of peoples to self-determination, by which they reaffirmed the legitimacy of the liberation struggle and the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa and the Palestinian people to self-determination and independence. The Economic and Social Council decided to publicize two studies on self-determination prepared by Special Rapporteurs.

The Assembly reminded States to consider adhering to the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 concerning respect for human rights in armed conflicts. Eleven States had become party to one or both of the Protocols by the year's end.

With the aim of safeguarding the rights of prisoners and detainees, a working group of the Commission on Human Rights approved several articles of a draft convention on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the Economic and Social Council sought the comments of States on a draft body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment; and the General Assembly requested comments on a draft Code of Medical Ethics for physicians treating prisoners and detainees. The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities proposed a procedure for United Nations consideration of complaints relating to the disappearance of persons taken into custody.

Attention was given to ways of improving United Nations machinery for dealing with human rights questions. The Economic and Social Council enlarged the Commission on Human Rights from 32 to 43 States to make it more representative, and the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to consider redesignating the Secretariat's Division on Human Rights as a Centre for Human Rights. A United Nations seminar proposed the establishment of an African Commission on Human Rights, and the Assembly noted with satisfaction the adoption of this proposal. The Sub-Commission set up a working group to consider ways of encouraging States to adhere to international human rights conventions.

The International Covenants on Human Rights gained additional adherents. Five States became party to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, raising the total to 63, and six States became party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bringing the total to 61.

The Council's Sessional Working Group on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held an organizational session and prepared to consider in 1980 the first reports by States parties to the Covenant. The Human Rights Committee continued reviewing reports from States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The Council requested the organization in 1980 of a United Nations seminar on the effects of the existing unjust international economic order on the economies of the developing countries, and the obstacles which that represented for the implementation of human rights.

The General Assembly decided to begin work in 1980 on an international convention to protect migrant workers. It also requested the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to make suggestions on the possibility of reinforcing that organization's programme and activities to promote the right to education. The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities called for action by Governments and United Nations bodies to combat the exploitation of child labour, and decided to review the matter annually. A working group of the Commission on Human Rights began drafting a convention on the rights of the child.

The Commission on Human Rights held its thirty-fifth session at Geneva from 12 February to 16 March. Its recommendations were acted on by the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1979, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 10 April to 11 May. The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its thirty-second session at Geneva from 20 August to 7 September, making recommendations that were to go before the Commission in 1980.

Details of these and other matters are described in the subchapters below.

Action against racism, racial discrimination, apartheid and racial intolerance

International action to combat racism and racial discrimination

Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

Implementation of the Programme for the Decade On 15 November 1979, by resolution 34/24, the General Assembly adopted a programme of activities for the last four years of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. The Decade was launched by the Assembly on 10 December 1973 in an effort to accomplish the rapid elimination of all forms of racial discrimination.

The new programme updated the original Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, adopted by the Assembly in 1973. The 1973 Programme called for national, regional and international activities, including action by the United Nations.

Other United Nations organs were active during 1979 on matters relating to the Decade. The Economic and Social Council decided to establish a working group of all of its members which was to meet in 1980 to evaluate the activities of the Decade. The Commission on Human Rights made suggestions to the Council on some elements of future activities. Its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided on additional studies in this sphere. The Secretary-General organized two non-governmental meetings on aspects of the subject, as part of the Programme for the Decade.

The first action of the year was taken on 5 March, when the Commission on Human Rights recommended that the Economic and Social Council, while considering specific activities which could be undertaken during the second half of the Decade, should ensure: (a) full coordination and co-operation within the United Nations system in implementing the activities of the Decade; (b) evaluation of the support given to victims of racism and racial discrimination; (c) proper focus on the social, economic, cultural, political and other roots of racial discrimination; and (d) wider adherence to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination² and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,3 as well as the International Covenants on Human Rights.4

During the Commission's discussion of this item, India and others cited reports of indignities and hardships suffered by non-white immigrants in the United Kingdom as a result of what was described as racially discriminatory treatment by that country's immigration authorities. The United Kingdom rejected the allegation that the treatment was racially discriminatory. India proposed a draft decision on the subject, but the Commission adopted instead, without a vote on 5 March, a draft resolution proposed by Sweden after consultations. By this resolution, the Commission expressed deep concern about the problems reflected in the statements on this matter, took note of the willingness of the Indian and United Kingdom Governments to exchange information so that the situation could be clarified and resolved, and expressed hope that a satisfactory outcome would be reported at the 1980 session.

When the Economic and Social Council considered the Decade in April and May, it had before it two reports by the Secretary-General. The first was his annual report on activities related to the Decade, describing actions taken by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, United Nations seminars and fellowships, activities of non-governmental organizations, work of the United Nations Department of Public Information, and actions of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research. Supplementary information on non-governmental organization activities was submitted by the Secretary-General in a report to the Assembly at its 1979 regular session.

The second report of the Secretary-General suggested specific activities by the United Nations during each year of the second half of the Decade (1979-1983), including the preparation of reports, research and studies, organization of seminars and other meetings, and dissemination of information. The report also discussed questions relating to the establishment of an international voluntary fund, proposed in the Assembly's 1973 Programme, to assist peoples and movements in their struggle against racism and apartheid.

After discussing this subject in plenary meetings, the Council on 9 May, by a recorded vote, requested by Barbados, of 39 to 9, with 1 abstention, adopted resolution 1979/3, on implementation of the Programme for the Decade. The sponsors were Algeria, Barbados, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Hungary, India, Lesotho, Mauritania, Morocco, Pakistan, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, the Ukrainian SSR and Zambia.

By this resolution, the Council recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly, according to which the Assembly would adopt a five-year programme of activities designed to accelerate progress in implementing the Programme for the Decade.

In addition, the Council decided to establish a working group to meet in 1980 to assist in evaluating the activities of the Decade. The resolution incorporated a revision made orally by the sponsors, specifying that the working group would be a group of the whole Council and that it would meet during the Council's first regular session of 1980.

by the Commission and its Sub-Commission, the Council, by the same resolution, instructed the Sub-Commission's Chairman to appoint a working group of five of its members to meet just before its 1979 session to formulate specific proposals concerning the work programme for attaining the goals and objectives of the Decade.

Authorization to appoint the group was also given on 10 May by Council decision 1979/31, adopted without vote after being similarly approved by the Council's Second (Social) Committee on 4 May. The draft decision had been submitted by the Commission for Council action.

On 5 September, the Sub-Commission recommended that it be authorized to prepare a study on discriminatory treatment in the administration of criminal justice proceedings, and on ideologies which contributed or led to racism (see p. 816). It also recommended that it be authorized to appoint special rapporteurs to undertake two other studies during the second half of the Decade: on political, economic, cultural and other factors underlying situations leading to racism, including a survey of the increase or decline of racism or racial discrimination; and on recourse procedures available to victims of racial discrimination. The Sub-Commission further requested the Secretary-General to prepare for its 1980 session a report on recourse procedures and a background paper on the dissemination to the public of information on combating racial discrimination.

Following consideration of the matter in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural). Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/24, jointly with an annexed programme of activities to be undertaken during the second half of the Decade. The resolution was adopted on 15 November by a recorded vote of 82 to 17, with 6 abstentions, after having been approved in the Committee on 18 October by a recorded vote, taken at Ireland's request, of 109 to 19, with 2 abstentions.

By this resolution, the Assembly proclaimed that the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination were matters of high priority for the international community and the United Nations. It strongly condemned the policies of apartheid, racism and racial discrimination practised in southern Africa and elsewhere, including the denial of the right of peoples to self-determination. It reaffirmed its strong support for the national liberation struggle against such policies, as well as against colonialism and alien domination, and for self-de termination by all means, including armed struggle. It called again on Governments to take legislative, administrative and other measures in respect of their nationals and corporations that owned and operated enterprises in southern Africa, in order to put an end to such enterprises immediately. It appealed to all mass media and educational and cultural institutions to co-operate fully in implementing the Programme for the Decade.

The Assembly adopted a four-year programme for the second half of the Decade, designed to accelerate progress in implementing the 1973 Programme. Annexed to resolution 34/24, the programme called for international, regional and national action, including: regional annual seminars on specific subjects; a seminar on measures to prevent collaboration between transnational corporations and the racist régimes in southern Africa; a colloquium on the elimination of apartheid and racism; a round-table of newspaper editors; and studies on women and children in southern Africa and the occupied Arab territories, the implementation of United Nations resolutions on racism, means of implementing international legal instruments relating to racism, and links between racial discrimination and social inequalities. An important feature would be the holding of a second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, preferably at the end of the Decade, to review and appraise the Decade's activities and to chart new measures where necessary. The Security Council was requested to consider urgently the imposition of complete and mandatory sanctions against the apartheid régime of South Africa and the racist regimes in southern Africa.

The resolution was based on the draft submitted to the Assembly by the Economic and Social Council, with four paragraphs added by a Nigerian amendment which the Third Committee approved without a vote. These additions consisted of: a commendation to national liberation movements, anti-apartheid and anti-racist movements and other non-governmental organizations for their co-operation in efforts to attain the purposes of the Decade; an appeal to mass media and educational and cultural institutions to cooperate in implementing the Programme for the Decade; a preambular paragraph recognizing the serious plight of women and children subjected to apartheid and racial discrimination, and an endorsement of the conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, held in Paris in June (see p. 174).

The programme annexed to the resolution was based on a draft introduced to the Third Committee by Lesotho, Chairman for October of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, on behalf of 43 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The Committee approved a version of this draft revised by its sponsors on the basis of amendments proposed separately by Nigeria and Guinea. As a consequence, three changes were made in the draft. First, the phrase "in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid" was added to the provision, which became part of paragraph 18, proposing a 1981 seminar to be organized by the Commission on Human Rights on the collaboration of transnational corporations with racist régimes (the sponsors changed "consultation" to "co-operation"). Second, a similar reference to co-operationwith that Committee, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the United Nations Council for Namibia-was added to that paragraph in connexion with a recommendation for a joint Commission on Corporations/Human Transnational Commission study of measures to end collaboration with the racist regimes of southern Africa and prevent any commercial, financial or technological aid to them. Third, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations was mentioned as one of the organizations to be involved in a 1981 study on the links between racial discrimination and social inequalities (paragraph 24).

The sponsors also changed paragraph 5, on United Nations publicity efforts, to call for the issuance of a stamp to mark the Decade, rather than a postmark. While agreeing to this element of the Nigerian amendments, they did not accept its proposal to add posters, broadcasts and films to the publications and brochures mentioned as vehicles for publicity against racism, but they added "etc." to the list.

The amendment by Guinea specified that the newspaper editors to take part in the 1980 roundtable on the role of the mass communication media in combating racism should come from regions concerned in informing public opinion about the evils of racism and racial discrimination (paragraph 25).

Paragraph 2 of the programme-stating that particular attention should be paid to measures for implementing past resolutions, declarations and other documents on racism and racial discrimination adopted by United Nations bodies and conferences-was approved in the Third Committee by a recorded vote of 85 to 19, with 21 abstentions. Guatemala requested the separate vote and Ireland asked that it be recorded. Those conferences included the 1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva,5 the 1977 World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos, Nigeria,6 and the 1976 International Seminar on the Eradication of Apartheid and in Support of the Struggle for Liberation in South Africa, held at Havana, Cuba.⁷ The paragraph, as approved, also incorporated drafting changes by Nigeria accepted by the sponsors.

The Committee rejected by a recorded vote, requested by Ireland, of 12 in favour to 61 against, with 51 abstentions, an amendment by Nigeria which would have replaced paragraph 23, calling for a study on women and children in southern Africa and in the occupied Arab territories and other occupied territories, by a paragraph specifying that these topics should be dealt with in two separate and detailed studies, which should be widely publicized.

In explanation of vote in the Committee following approval of the draft resolution, Ireland (on behalf of the nine member States of the European Economic Community (EEC)). New Zealand, and Sweden (on behalf of the five Nordic countries) said they had voted against the text as a whole because the programme of activities mentioned the final documents adopted by the 1978 Geneva World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. Australia and Austria said their negative votes had been cast because extraneous elements had been injected into the text.

Chile, Colombia, the Ivory Coast, Mexico, Peru, Portugal and Suriname, which abstained in the vote on paragraph 2 but supported the text as a whole, expressed reservations with regard to some of the documents mentioned in the paragraph. Chile, Peru and Portugal specifically mentioned the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted at the Geneva Conference,8 as did Spain and Uruguay, which voted against the paragraph but in favour of the text as a whole. The Ivory Coast recalled that those documents had equated zionism with racism.

Israel said, in explanation of its negative vote, that the references to the Middle East in the programme were based on false allegations and were the outcome of another attempt to reintroduce the infamous equation of zionism with racism.

Brazil, Chile and Uruguay also objected to the mention of the Programme of Action against Apartheid recommended by the 1976 Havana International Seminar.

A reservation on paragraph 15 of the programme, which called for States to adopt measures to punish by law any dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred and to prohibit organizations based on such ideas, was expressed by Colombia on the ground that freedom of expression was enshrined in its Constitution.

The Nordic countries, Colombia, Greece, Spain and Uruguay entered reservations on the reaffirmation of support for armed struggle in paragraph 3 of the resolution. Malaysia said in reference to that paragraph that it recognized only those national liberation movements recognized by the League of Arab States and the Organization of African Unity.

Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland had reservations on the endorsement of the June 1979 International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, as well as references in the programme to possible Security Council sanctions to prohibit loans to, investments in and trade promotion with South Africa, and to impose an embargo on oil and other strategic commodities to that country. Greece voiced reservations on the request for legislative and other measures to end enterprises in southern Africa and on the appeal to the mass media and educational and cultural institutions to co-operate in implementing the Programme for the Decade.

SEMINAR AND ROUND-TABLE
ON ASPECTS OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

As part of the activities under the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, the Secretary-General convened a United Nations Seminar on Recourse Procedures Available to Victims of Racial Discrimination and Activities to be Undertaken at the Regional Level. This regional seminar for Europe met at Geneva from 9 to 20 July 1979. It reviewed constitutional, legislative and administrative guarantees relating to recourse procedures for persons claiming to be victims of acts of racial discrimination, and sought to evaluate the effectiveness of existing recourse procedures. In its conclusions, it agreed that effective recourse procedures - those which were adequate, efficient and easy to institutewere of great importance to the victims of acts of racial discrimination. Conditions of access to such procedures should be as broad as possible and all persons - citizens, non-citizens and groups - should have access to them.

Also at Geneva, the Secretary-General organized, from 5 to 9 November, a round-table on the teaching of problems of racial discrimination. Invitations were sent to 25 university professors and directors of race relations institutions throughout the world. Participants from the following countries attended: Australia, Brazil, France, Ghana, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Sweden, Tunisia, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia. The round-table assessed the world situation with regard to the teaching of racial discrimination problems and studied some of the problems encountered in drawing up appropriate programmes.

Elimination of racial discrimination

Status of the International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly on 21 December 1965, 9 entered into force on 4 January 1969.

As at 31 December 1979, the Convention had been ratified or acceded to by the following 106 States, of which four (Bangladesh, Cape Verde, El Salvador and Israel) became parties during the year: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, the Holy See, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, the Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Seven of the States parties- Costa Rica, Ecuador, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Uruguay-had made declarations in previous years under article 14 of the Convention, recognizing the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups within their jurisdiction claiming to be victims of a violation by a State party of any of the rights set forth in the Convention. Under article 14, the Committee was to be competent to exercise this function when at least 10 States parties were bound by such declarations.

The Commission on Human Rights, in a resolution adopted on 5 March concerning activities during the second half of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, recommended to the Economic and Social Council that there be wider adherence to the Convention.

The Secretary-General submitted in September his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention, listing the States which had signed, ratified, acceded or succeeded to it.

By resolution 34/26, adopted without vote on 15 November, the Assembly took note of this report, expressed satisfaction with the increase in the number of States which had ratified or acceded to the Convention, reaffirmed its conviction that universal ratification of or accession to and implementation of the Convention's provisions were necessary to realize the objectives of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, requested States which had not become parties to do so, and appealed to States parties to study the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14.

This last appeal was the result of an amendment proposed by Ecuador and Uruguay when the draft resolution was discussed in the Third Committee. The amendment was adopted by 60 votes to 0, with 46 abstentions, in a vote taken at the request of Belgium, and the text as a whole was approved by consensus on 10 October. The draft resolution was sponsored by 27 States (see DOCUMENTARYREFERENCESbelow).

By resolution 34/28 of 15 November, on the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (see following subsection), the Assembly called for full observance of the Convention by States parties, and urged States which were not parties to become parties, pending which they should be guided by its basic provisions.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up in accordance with the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to oversee implementation of the Convention, held its nineteenth session from 26 March to 13 April 1979 at the headquarters of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), Paris, and its twentieth session from 30 July to 17 August at United Nations Headquarters, New York. The Committee submitted its tenth annual report to the General Assembly's thirty-fourth (1979) session.

At its two sessions, the Committee examined reports and information submitted by 43 States parties under article 9 of the Convention, requiring the submission of biennial reports by the parties on measures taken to give effect to the Convention. Representatives of 40 reporting States participated in the consideration of their respective reports. The Committee's report to the Assembly contained the views expressed by Committee members on each report, as well as a summary of the statements by the representatives of the States parties concerned.

Also, the Committee examined, as authorized by article 15 of the Convention, copies of petitions, reports and other information concerning the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and non-self-governing territories transmitted to it by the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. ¹⁰ It submitted to the Assembly its opinions and recommendations concerning the situation in individual territories with regard to matters directly relating to the principles and objectives of the Convention.

During both 1979 sessions, the Committee considered matters concerning the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. Members stated that the Committee should play a greater role in implementing the Programme for the Decade and take a more active role in United Nations seminars and other activities. Two of its members represented the Committee in the Seminar and the round-table organized by the Secretary-General in 1979 as part of the Programme for the Decade (see preceding page).

The Committee adopted three decisions during the year. On 9 April, it decided that, when taking a decision on information supplied by a State party relating to conditions in its territory, it would ask the representative of that State to withdraw from the Committee as soon as consideration of the report had been completed, though the representative could be present when the decision was announced. On 12 April, it invited UNESCO to submit periodically information on its experience in teaching, education, culture and information, with a view to combating prejudices leading to racial discrimination and to promoting understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations and racial or ethnic groups. On 13 August, it recommended that the Assembly consider measures to facilitate the holding of Committee sessions in various regions by taking account of the difficulties of developing countries with respect to paying the costs of such meetings.

By resolution 34/28 of 15 November, adopted without vote, the Assembly took note with appreciation of the Committee's 1979 report, and welcomed its interest in further participation in activities for the Decade and its continued cooperation with specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies. The Assembly expressed grave concern that some States parties, for reasons beyond their control, were being prevented from fulfilling their obligations under the Convention in parts of their territories. It invited the States parties to supply the Committee with all requested information on their implementation of the principles and provisions of the Convention, and called on them to observe fully the provisions of the Convention and other international instruments and agreements to which they were parties concerning the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination. Noting with due attention the Committee's 13 August decision on its future meetings, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1980 on the possibility of providing assistance for the holding of such meetings in developing countries.

The resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which approved it without vote on 10 October, on the basis of a draft by 26 nations (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

On behalf of the sponsors, Yugoslavia made several oral revisions to the original draft which were accepted by the Third Committee. In paragraph 4, by which the Assembly commended the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for continuing to focus on the just cause of peoples struggling against colonialism, oppression and occupation wherever they existed, particularly in southern Africa, the phrase "as is within its mandate" was added to accommodate a suggestion by Sweden. Paragraph 8, which originally would have had the Assembly call for effective measures to protect the rights of "national, ethnic, linguistic and other minorities, including" full protection of the rights of migrant workers, was revised, following suggestions by France, to refer to the rights of "every person, group of persons or national or ethnic minority, as well as" full protection of the rights of migrant workers, "by preventing all practices of racial discrimination;" the final phrase was added by the sponsors. At the suggestion of the Byelorussian SSR, paragraph 10, by which the Assembly would have endorsed the Committee's decision on its future meetings and requested the Secretary-General to provide assistance for the holding of such meetings in developing countries, was changed to note the decision with due attention and request the Secretary-General to explore and report on the possibility of providing such assistance.

The Third Committee rejected two oral amendments by the United Kingdom. The first, to change paragraph 4 so that the Assembly would have commended the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for continuing, "within its mandate," to focus attention on the just cause of peoples struggling against colonialism, oppression and occupation, was rejected by 31 votes in favour to 68 against, with 14 abstentions. The vote was taken at the request of the United States. The second amendment, by which the Assembly would have invited States parties to consider supplying, rather than to supply, all requested information on their implementation of the principles and provisions of the Convention, including demographic data and information on their relations with the racist regimes in southern Africa, was rejected by 25 votes in favour to 64 against, with 22 abstentions.

Paragraph 6 of the resolution, by which the Assembly expressed grave concern that some States parties were prevented for reasons beyond their control from fulfilling their Convention obligations in parts of their territories, and supported the opinion expressed by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination regarding the persistence of that problem in the Syrian Arab Republic, was approved in the Third Committee by 95 votes to 0, with 24 abstentions, and by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 115 to 0, with 25 abstentions.

Following approval of the resolution in the Committee, Australia, Malawi, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Singapore, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed reservations or reserved their position on this paragraph, on which the United Kingdom had requested a separate vote. It was felt that its provisions exceeded the Committee's mandate, which did not extend to political issues; moreover, the Committee was not a subsidiary organ of the United Nations and the Assembly was therefore not empowered to change its mandate.

Brazil expressed a reservation on the request in paragraph 7 for information on demographic composition; it was Brazil's policy to exclude any reference to race from its censuses. Austria, Portugal, Sweden and the United Kingdom considered that that paragraph—which also asked for information on State party relations with racist regimes in southern Africa—as well as paragraph 4 commending the Committee's focus on struggles, particularly in southern Africa, were attempts to change the Committee's mandate. Japan expressed a reservation on paragraph 4 also, and Malawi reserved its position on paragraph 7. Ireland added that the nine member States of EEC considered that the Assembly should not be asked to approve decisions of the Committee or highlight certain of its activities.

Malawi and the United States reiterated reservations on references to the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. With reference to the Committee's decision concerning future meetings in developing countries, the USSR drew attention to a 1969 Assembly decision that United Nations bodies could meet away from their headquarters when the Government issuing an invitation agreed to defray the additional costs.

In another action of 15 November, the Assembly, by resolution 34/24 on implementation of the Programme for the Decade (see previous section), invited the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to monitor the implementation of articles 4 and 7 of the Convention. These articles concern measures to eradicate incitement to racial discrimination and to combat prejudices leading to such discrimination.

International Day

In 1979, the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, 21 March, marked the closing of the International Anti-ApartheidYear and the launching of the international mobilization against apartheid.

A special meeting held on that day by the Special Committee against Apartheid was addressed by the President of the 1978 regular session of the General Assembly, the United Nations Secretary-General, a representative of the Special Committee on implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Chairman of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the chairmen of the regional groups of Member States at the United Nations, and representatives of the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania. Messages were received from a number of States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations.

At the request of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Director-General of the United Nations Office at Geneva organized a ceremony on 21 March in observance of the Day and the launching of the international mobilization against apartheid.

The International Day marked the anniversary of the incident at Sharpeville, South Africa, on 21 March 1960, in which 69 demonstrators against "pass laws" of the apartheid system were killed and 180 others wounded. (See also p. 171.)

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolve to achieve the total eradication of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling once again that, in its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973 and in the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination annexed thereto, it called for a continuing effort by all peoples, Governments and institutions to eradicate racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling its resolutions 31/77 of 13 December 1976, 32/10 of 7 November 1977 and 33/98 of 16 December 1978,

Taking into account its resolutions 33/99 and 33/100 of 16 December 1978,

Aware of the serious threat to international peace and security resulting from the continued defiance by the racist regimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia of the resolutions adopted by the international community and of the will manifested by the latter to put an end to the abhorrent policies of apartheid and racial discrimination, the continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia and the refusal to respect the right of peoples to self-determination,

Recognizing in particular the serious plight of women and children subjected to apartheid and racial discrimination,

Recalling the importance of the attainment of the objectives of the Decade,

Expressing its satisfaction at the results of the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva from 14 to 25 August 1978,

Convinced that the Conference, which was held at the midpoint of the Decade and constituted an outstanding event therein, has made a valuable and constructive contribution to the achievement of the objectives of the Decade by its adoption of the Declaration and the Programme of Action,

- 1. Proclaims that the elimination of all forms of racism and discrimination based on race and the attainment of the objectives of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and of the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are matters of high priority for the international community and, accordingly, for the United Nations;
- 2. Strongly condemns the policies of apartheid, racism and racial discrimination practised in southern Africa and elsewhere, including the denial of the right of peoples to self-determination;
- 3. Reaffirms once again its strong support for the national liberation struggle against racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, colonialism and alien domination and for self-determination by all means, including armed struggle;
- 4. Invites all Member States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and nongovernmental organizations to strengthen and enlarge the scope of their activities in support of the objectives of the Programme for the Decade;
- 5. Calls once again upon all the Governments which have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative and other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in southern Africa, in order to put an end to such enterprises immediately:
- 6. Appeals to all States to continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General by submitting their reports to him in accordance with paragraph 18 (e) of the Programme for the Decade;
- 7. Commends the national liberation movements, antiapartheid and anti-racist movements and other nongovernmental organizations for their co-operation in international efforts for the attainment of the purposes of the Decade;
- 8. Appeals to all mass media and educational and cultural institutions to co-operate fully in the implementation of the Programme for the Decade;
- 9. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, held in Paris from 18 to 20 June 1979;
- 10. Requests the Economic and Social Council to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session its report on the evaluation of the activities undertaken in connexion with the Decade, in accordance with paragraph 18 of the Programme for the Decade, taking into account the results of the Conference set out in the Declaration and the Programme of Action which it adopted;

11. Adopts the four-year programme of activities designed to accelerate progress in the implementation of the Programme for the Decade, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

12. Expresses its satisfaction to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Commission on Human Rights, through its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, for their contribution to the implementation of the Programme for the Decade;

13. Invites in particular the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to monitor the implementation of the provisions of articles 4 and 7 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination in order to prevent any incitement to racism and racial discrimination and to promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations and racial or ethnic groups;

14. Decides to consider at its thirty-fifth session, as a matter of high priority, the item entitled "Implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination."

ANNEX

Programme of activities to be undertaken during the second half of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

- 1. During the second half of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, efforts should be intensified by all States, United Nations organs and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to achieve the speediest attainment of the objectives of the Decade, aimed at the complete and final elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination.
- 2. Particular attention should be paid to specific measures designed to ensure the implementation of the main provisions of the Programme for the Decade, of the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and of the other pertinent United Nations resolutions on racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, decolonization and self-determination, of the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Lagos from 22 to 26 August 1977, the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, and the Programme of Action against Apartheid recommended by the International Seminar on the Eradication of Apartheid and in Support of the Struggle for Liberation in South Africa, held at Havana from 24 to 28 May 1976, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 31 /6 J of 9 November 1976.
- 3. Every effort should be made to bring about the complete isolation of the racist regimes and the strict application by all States Members of the United Nations of sanctions against those regimes, since any co-operation with them in the political, economic, military and other fields constitutes an impediment to the liberation of southern Africa. Governments are duty-bound to create the necessary conditions to ensure that transnational corporations shall cease to grant any assistance or support to the racist regimes of Pretoria and Salisbury or to exploit the peoples of southern Africa and the natural resources of their countries.

4. The Security Council is requested to consider urgently the possibility of imposing complete and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations against the apartheid regime of South Africa and the racist regimes in southern Africa, in particular:

(a) The cessation of all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field;

- (b) The prohibition of all technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies in South Africa;
- (c) The prohibition of all loans to, and all investments in, South Africa and the cessation of all promotion of trade with South Africa;

(d) An embargo on the supply of petroleum, petroleum products and other strategic commodities to South Africa.

- 5. The efforts undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system should be intensified in order to keep public opinion constantly on the alert against the evils of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through publications of the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, the dissemination of various brochures and the issue by the Universal Postal Union, beginning in 1980, of a stamp to mark the Decade, etc.
- 6. The efforts of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat should be intensified in order to generate publicity and disseminate information with a view to mobilizing public support for the goals and objectives of the Decade. An annual report on the activities of the Department of Public Information should form part of the report prepared by the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 18 (f) of the Programme for the Decade.

7. All States, international agencies and non-governmental organizations should intensify the campaigns organized to obtain the release of all political detainees imprisoned by the racist regimes for their brave struggle against apartheid, racism and racial discrimination and in defence of their peoples to self-determination and independence independence.

8. The appropriate organizations of the United Nations system should continue their investigation of the policies and practices in occupied Arab territories, including Palestine, based on various forms of racial discrimination against the peoples of those territories.

9. The World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in 1980, should contribute to the struggle against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid by recommending the adoption of other measures aimed at ensuring the active participation of women in the struggle against those evils.

- 10. The Secretary-General should ensure the widest possible dissemination of the study on the work of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2057(LXII) of 1 2 May 1977, and of the brochure on the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, prepared by the Committee as its contribution to the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.
- 11. Regional seminars should be organized on an annual basis, at the level of the regional commissions, on specific subjects.
- 12. The United Nations should adopt other measures aimed at improving the situation and ensuring the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers, including the drawing up of a convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers.
- 13. Activities should be undertaken to encourage the effective contribution of youth to the struggle against racism, racial discrimination and apartheid.
- 14. A week of solidarity with the peoples struggling against racism and racial discrimination, beginning on 21 March, should be organized annually in all States.

15. All States should adopt, as a matter of high priority, measures to declare punishable by law any dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred and to prohibit or ganizations based on racial prejudice and hatred, including neo-Nazi and Fascist organizations and private clubs and institutions established on the basis of racial criteria or propagating ideas of racial discrimination and apartheid.

16. All States should eliminate, through legislation and administrative measures, all discriminatory practices against members of immigrant communities. They should ensure that immigrants and their families are given treatment which is no less favourable than that accorded their own nationals in matters such as education, employment, acquisition of property, health and housing facilities and travel within and outside the country.

17. The main activities to be undertaken for the achievement of these objectives are set forth below. This implies that:

(a) The United Nations should provide adequate financial and human resources according to the priorities established by the General Assembly to combat racism, racial discrimination and apartheid;

(b) The specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned must, within their respective fields of competence, make an essential contribution to the attainment of these ends. In addition to the preparation of the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 18 (f) of the Programme for the Decade, a certain number of activities should be undertaken during the second half of the Decade in particular.

- In the light of paragraph 13 (b) of the Programme for the Decade, a seminar should be organized in 1981 by the Commission on Human Rights, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, in order to study the formulation of effective measures to prevent transnational corporations and other established interests from collaborating with the racist regimes in southern Africa. The Commission on Transnational Corporations and the Commission on Human Rights should make a study in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia with a view to enumerating specific measures whose application by all States, intergovernmental organizations, private institutions and non-governmental organizations will make it possible to end all collaboration with the racist regimes and prevent the supply of capital, loans, credits, foreign currency and any other form of commercial, financial and technological assistance to the economies of South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and Namibia by private banks, Governments and international agencies, such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Finance Corporation, the International Monetary Fund and similar institutions.
- 19. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 3377(XXX) of 10 November 1975, the Commission on Human Rights, in co-operation with the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, should undertake a study on ways and means of ensuring the implementation of the United Nations resolutions on apartheid, racism and racial discrimination and submit its conclusions to the Assembly at its thirty-seventh session through the Economic and Social Council.

20. A study should be undertaken in 1980 by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa on ways and means of implementing international instruments, such as the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, including the establishment of the international jurisdiction envisaged by the Convention.

21. The United Nations Institute for Training and Research should organize an international colloquium in 1980 on the elimination of apartheid, racism and racial discrimination and the achievement of self-determination in international law, with special attention to the principles of non-discrimination and self-determination as peremptory norms of international law.

A study should be prepared by the Secretary-General in 1981 on the links between the struggle against racism and the struggle for self-determination in southern Africa

23. A study should be prepared in 1981 by the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of women and children living under the racist minority regimes in southern Africa, especially under the apartheid regime, and of women and children living in the occupied Arab territories and other occupied territories.

24. A study should be undertaken in 1981 by the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization, on the links between racial discrimination and inequalities in the fields of education, nutrition, health, housing and cultural development.

25. Under the auspices of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, a round-table of editors of newspapers concerned in informing public opinion about the evils of racism and racial discrimination, with wide circulation and from the various geographical regions, should be convened in the second half of 1980, on the basis of equitable distribution, to study the role of the mass communication media in combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid. A report on the work of the round-table should be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1981.

26. An important feature of the second half of the Decade should be the holding of a second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, preferably at the end of the Decade, in order to review and appraise the activities undertaken during the Decade and to chart new measures where necessary. In accordance with the mandate given it, defined in paragraph 18 of the Programme for the Decade, the Economic and Social Council would act, as it did in the case of the first Conference, as a preparatory committee for this Conference.

27. The Economic and Social Council should plan to begin considering the preparations for the Conference at its first regular session of 1980.

INTERNATIONAL DAY

A/34/22 (S/13596). Report of Special Committee against Apartheid, Chapter I N 1.

Apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and

Punishmen t of the Crime of Apartheid

During 1979, five more States—Barbados, Cape Verde, El Salvador, Sao Tome and Principe, and Trinidad and Tobago—adhered to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973¹² and entered into force on 18 July 1976.

This brought the number of States having ratified or acceded to the Convention to 54 as at 31 December 1979: Barbados, Benin, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Kuwait, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mongolia, Nepal, the Niger, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

The Group of Three established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures they had taken to implement its provisions held its second session at Geneva from 29 January to 2 February. It considered and commented on reports from five States—the Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, Madagascar, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR—of which all but Madagascar sent representatives to attend the meetings and supplement the information in the reports. It also reiterated a recommendation it had made in 1978 stressing the desirability for States parties to make suggestions for the establishment of the international penal tribunal envisaged in article V of the Convention to try persons accused of the crime of apartheid.

On 5 March, the Commission took note with appreciation of the Group's report, appealed to States to accede to the Convention, and called on States parties to implement article IV by adopting legislative, judicial and administrative measures to prosecute, try and punish persons responsible for or accused of the acts defined in article II. It requested the Secretary-General to invite States parties to suggest ways to establish the international penal tribunal referred to in article V. It called for information from United Nations organs on individuals, organizations and State representatives allegedly responsible for the crimes enumerated in article II, as well as on measures taken in regard to such individuals believed to be under the jurisdiction of nonindependent territories. It decided also that the Group of Three should meet again before the 1980 session of the Commission to consider the reports submitted by States parties in accordance with article VII.

In another action, also taken on 5 March, the Commission recommended wider adherence to the Convention as one of the measures which the Economic and Social Council should ensure while considering specific activities for the second half of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983) (see.797).

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention, included a list of States which had signed, ratified or acceded to it.

The Assembly took note of this report on 15 November in adopting resolution 34/27 by a recorded vote of 116 to 0, with 26 abstentions. It also commended the States parties to the Convention that had submitted their reports under article VII, urged others to do so as soon as possible and appealed again to all States that were not parties to ratify or accede to the Convention without delay. It called on States parties to implement article IV by adopting measures to prosecute, try and punish persons responsible for or accused of the acts covered in the Convention. It also sought the views of States parties and United Nations organs on conclusions and recommendations in the Group of Three's 1979 report.

The Assembly invited the Commission on Human Rights to continue its efforts to prepare periodically a list of individuals, organizations, institutions and State representatives allegedly responsible for crimes under the Convention, called on United Nations organs to continue to provide the Commission with information relevant to this list as well as information on obstacles preventing the suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid, and requested the Secretary-General to distribute the list to all United Nations Member States.

Resolution 34/27 was adopted on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved the text on 10 October by 87 votes to 0, with 30 abstentions. The draft was sponsored by 29 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Separate votes were taken in the Committee and in the Assembly on the third and fourth preambular paragraphs of the resolution. The third preambular paragraph, by which the Assembly welcomed the texts on southern Africa adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Havana, Cuba, 3-9 September), was adopted in the Committee by a vote (requested by Canada) of 83 to 11, with 24 abstentions, and in the Assembly by a recorded vote of 113 to 10, with 18 abstentions. The fourth preambular paragraph, referring to the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted at Geneva by the 1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination¹³ as an important and constructive contribution to the struggle against apartheid and racial discrimination, was adopted in the Committee by a vote, requested by Israel, of 85 to 20, with 12 abstentions, and in the Assembly by a recorded vote of 109 to 18, with 12 abstentions.

In the discussion and explanations of vote on this resolution, Canada, which voted against the third preambular paragraph and abstained in the vote on the text as a whole, said it objected to the charge contained in the Political Declaration adopted by the Havana Conference that it was an imperialist State with respect to its relations with South Africa. Chile and New Zealand said they had abstained on that paragraph because they could not support passages in the Havana Declaration. Japan also had difficulty in accepting that paragraph.

Israel, which voted against the two preambular paragraphs and abstained in the vote on the text as a whole, said the Declaration and the Programme of Action of the 1978 Geneva Conference, mentioned in the fourth preambular paragraph, were marred by prejudice against Israel and zionism. Also voting against that paragraph were Canada, which objected that the Geneva documents had introduced extraneous political elements into the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and Ireland, speaking for the nine member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), which recalled that they had dissociated themselves from the documents. The Ivory Coast expressed reservations on the Geneva documents in explaining its vote on the paragraph, which it wished to be recorded as an abstention. Suriname said it had voted for the text as a whole but with a reservation on the Geneva documents in so far as they equated racism and zionism. Ecuador, Guatemala, Peru and Turkey also voiced reservations on those documents but voted for the resolution. Brazil also maintained reservations on those documents, and abstained. Norway voted against both paragraphs, stating that the documents they mentioned were unacceptable.

Australia, Canada, Chile, Japan, New Zealand, Portugal and Spain, as well as Ireland speaking for the EEC members, cited legal difficulties with regard to the Convention in explaining their abstentions on the resolution as a whole. Norway also abstained because of its position on the Convention. Greece and Turkey mentioned legal problems relating to the Convention but voted for the resolution. The United States, which abstained in the final vote, explained that it had not attended either of the Conferences mentioned in the preamble, did not plan to accede to the Convention, rejected a reference in the sixth preambular paragraph to apartheid as a threat to international peace, and felt that the request in operative paragraph 9 for information from United Nations bodies would further politicize the specialized agencies.

The Assembly made another appeal to States to accede to the Convention in resolution 34/93 A of 12 December on the situation in South Africa. (For details, see p. 179; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Adverse effect s on human right s resulting from aid to colonial and racis tregime s in souther n Afric a

In July 1979, Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt), Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, presented a report containing a revised provisional general list of 2,605 banks, insurance companies, other firms and institutions, and international sports bodies giving economic, military or other types of assistance to the colonial and racist regimes in south-Africa. Preparation of the list was originally requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1977. [4]

On 5 March, by a resolution adopted prior to the publication of the list, the Commission had invited the Special Rapporteur, in preparing material for the list, to bear in mind those Governments, transnational corporations and individuals whose military, economic, financial and other forms of assistance, including nuclear aid, to the colonial and racist regimes in southern Africa constituted a denial of the enjoyment of human rights in Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa. It had requested States, as well as United Nations and other organizations and individuals, to provide information for the completion of the list, and asked the Special Rapporteur to submit an updated version of the first draft he had prepared in 1978.15

When he submitted his final report to the Sub-Commission in August, the Special Rapporteur characterized the list as an international warning which should influence world mass media to unmask the hidden support of apartheid.

On 5 September, the Sub-Commission decided to send to the Commission the revised report together with replies from Governments regarding its contents. It requested the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, to append the report and list to the Special Rapporteur's 1978 report. It asked that the report be printed and widely disseminated, and that States give wide publicity to the list. It requested the Commission to decide how the list should be kept up to date.

Ad Hoc Workin g Group of Experts on southern Africa

Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1967 to examine the human rights situation in southern Africa, submitted a report to the Commission in January 1979 on developments concerning policies and practices in violation of human rights in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. The report also contained information on infringements of trade union rights in South Africa (see also p. 858).

Concerning South Africa, the Group concluded that the situation with regard to the system of apartheid had not improved during the previous two years. Some signs of a hardening of Government policy could even be detected. Therefore the Group recommended that the Commission ask the General Assembly to have a study made of the problem of the South African Government's legitimacy in view of its apartheid policy, and draw from that study all appropriate conclusions of law and fact. The Commission was also asked to decide that a comprehensive study be carried out on the action taken to implement the Group's recommendations since its establishment, with a view to improved assessment of the further efforts needed in the struggle against apartheid, colonialism and racial discrimination in southern Africa. The Group also recommended a study on ways of establishing the international tribunal envisaged in the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid.

Concerning Namibia, the Group noted that the most important development during the period was the steps taken by South Africa with a view to granting, unilaterally, ostensible "independence" to Namibia. The basic purpose of those measures was to assure South Africa of the maintenance of its control over Namibia and to facilitate the accession to power of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, which was favourable to it. Therefore the Group recommended that the Economic and Social Council draw the attention of the Assembly and the Security Council to the desirability of adopting enforcement measures under the Charter of the United Nations to end South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia.

With regard to Zimbabwe, the Group found that, contrary to the expectations of two years earlier, the situation had not developed in a satisfactory manner. The "internal settlement" in that country violated the right to self-determination, and the intensification of guerrilla warfare had served as a pretext for severe repressive measures. Therefore the Group recommended that the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity continue their efforts to induce the rebel regime in Salisbury faithfully to apply the principle of self-determination. It recommended the installation of a majority Government and the creation of a multiracial society.

After examining the Group's report, the Commission, on 6 March, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence and their right to enjoy all the rights recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of and declared that in the case of Namibia that right could be legally exercised only in accordance with directives given by the competent United Nations organs.

The Commission strongly condemned the increased South African military presence in Namibia, the consequences of which included harassment of civilians, mass arrests and arbitrary detentions accompanied by torture, illtreatment and torture of captured freedom fighters, massacres of the population of villages and refugee camps, and violations of the territorial integrity of Angola. The Commission also condemned the activities of the countries which, either directly or through their nationals, were helping to perpetuate the situation in Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa, and urged them to refrain from such activities. It adopted in general the Group's conclusions and recommendations.

The Economic and Social Council incorporated in decision 1979/33 of 10 May, adopted by 37 votes to 4, with 9 abstentions, a number of recommendations proposed by the Commission. It recommended the preparation of an international convention on the rights of migrant workers, the granting of special assistance to South Africa's neighbours to enable them to take effective action against the South African system of exploiting migrant workers, fresh efforts to enable the Group to study on the spot prison conditions in South Africa and Namibia, and an investigation into the lot of black children in South Africa, on the occasion of the International Year of the Child (1979).

The Council requested the General Assembly to urge United Nations bodies to consider devoting a special meeting at each session to the struggle against apartheid, to ensure that bodies dealing with apartheid and racial discrimination considered the possibility of a joint meeting each year to discuss their experiences and co-ordinate activities, to arrange for the organization at least once a year of a symposium on apartheid and the various aspects of racial discrimination, and to arrange for a study of the South African Government's legitimacy in view of its policy of apartheid and in particular its systematic refusal to apply the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law.

The decision was approved by the Second (Social) Committee on 4 May by 34 votes to 4, with 9 abstentions.

Objections to the decision in the Council centred on the provision for a study of the legitimacy of the South African Government. Explaining their votes, France and the Netherlands said they had voted against because United Nations economic organs were not competent to discuss questions of legitimacy, a view endorsed by the Federal Republic of Germany. The United States opposed the proposed study as setting a dangerous precedent that would improperly call into question fundamental norms of international law. Ireland and Sweden said they had abstained because the legitimacy of a Government, however abhorrent its policies, did not depend on those policies or on its compliance with United Nations resolutions. Turkey said it had voted for the decision despite its reservations concerning the proposed study.

The United States also felt that the call for preparation of another convention on migrant workers was premature and that existing International Labour Organisation conventions were adequate.

Mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group

On 6 March, the Commission on Human Rights decided to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa. It decided also that the Group should continue to study the policies and practices which violated human rights in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, and that it should carry out a comprehensive study on the action taken to implement the recommendations it had made since its establishment, with a view to assessing what further efforts were needed. The Group was asked to submit a progress report in 1980 and a report on its findings in 1981 at the latest. It was also asked, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to investigate cases of torture and murder of detainees in South Africa, and to submit a special report to the Commission in 1980.

At the same time, the Commission requested the Group to bring particularly serious violations immediately to the attention of the Commission's Chairman, so that he might take whatever action he deemed appropriate.

By decision 1979/34 of 10 May, adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision to renew the Group's mandate. The Second Committee approved this decision on 4 May by 46 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, as recommended by the Commission.

Other relate d decision s

In another resolution adopted under the item on violations of human rights in southern Africa, the Commission, on 6 March, expressed its profound appreciation to Iran, which had recently severed all relations with South Africa and stopped all oil supplies to that regime. It also commended all other Governments which had adopted similar measures.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/41 of 21 November on the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding decolonization, also commended Iran for having severed diplomatic, military, economic, trade and other links with South Africa and particularly for enforcing the oil embargo against that regime. The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and its resolutions 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/80 of 13 December 1976, 32/1 2 of 7 November 1977 and 33/103 of 16 December 1978,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 13(XXXIII) of 11 March 1977, 7(XXXIV) of 22 February 1978

and 10(XXXV) of 5 March 1979,

Welcoming the part of the Political Declaration and the resolutions concerning the situation in southern Africa adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Convinced that the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination constitute an important and constructive contribution to the struggle against apartheid, racism and all forms of racial discrimination,

Noting that the conduct of the International Anti-Apartheid Year contributed to the achievements of the goals of the Convention,

Reaffirming its firm conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and is a gross violation of human rights and a crime against humanity seriously disturbing and threatening international peace and security,

Noting that the racist regime of South Africa is stepping up its policy of apartheid, repression, "bantustanization" and aggression in flagrant defiance of United Nation resolutions, is continuing to occupy Namibia illegally and is perpetuating on

Namibian territory its odious policy of apartheid and racial

Deeply concerned at the continued collaboration of certain Governments and transnational corporations with the racist regime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields, thus encouraging it to persist in the brutal suppression of the peoples of South Africa,

Emphasizing that ratification of and accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions without any delay are necessary for its effectiveness and would be a useful contribution towards achieving the goals of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Taking into account Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 as a useful step towards achieving the purposes of the Convention,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa against apartheid, colonialism and racial discrimination and for the effective implementation of their inalienable and legitimate rights, including their right to self-determination, demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the increase in the number of States which have ratified the Convention or acceded thereto;

3. Commends the States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII of the Convention and urges other States to do so as soon as possible, taking fully into account the guidelines prepared by the Working Group on the Implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid established in accordance with article IX of the Convention:

4. Appeals once again to all States which have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede to it without delay;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take measures through appropriate channels on the dissemination of information on the Convention with the aim of promoting further ratification thereof or accession thereto;

6. Calls upon States parties to implement fully article IV of the Convention by adopting legislative, judicial and administrative measures to prosecute, bring to trial and punish in accordance with their jurisdiction persons responsible for, or accused of, the acts defined in article II of the Convention;

7. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention and the competent United Nations organs to consider the conclusions and recommendations of the Working Group contained in its report and to submit their views and comments to the Secretary-General;

8. Welcomes the efforts of the Commission on Human Rights to undertake the functions set out in article X of the Convention and invites the Commission to continue its efforts, especially with a view to preparing periodically a list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representives of States that are alleged to be responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as of those against which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

9. Calls upon the competent United Nations organs to continue to provide the Commission on Human Rights, through the Secretary-General, with information relevant to the periodic compilation of the above-mentioned list as well as with information concerning the obstacles which prevent the effective suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to take into account, in preparing the above-mentioned list, General Assembly resolution 33/23 of 29 November 1978 as well as all the documents on the subject prepared by the Commission and its subsidiary organs;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to distribute the above-mentioned list among all States parties to the Convention and all States Members of the United Nations;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention, taking into account the views and comments of States parties to the Convention called for in paragraph 7 above.

1. At its 15th plenary meeting, on 10 May 1979, the Council, noting resolution 12(XXXV) of 6 March 1979 of the Commission on Human Rights, decided to recommend that:

(a) The appropriate United Nations bodies, acting in consultation with the competent specialized agencies, particularly the International Labour Organisation, should take the initiative of preparing an international convention on the rights of migrant workers;

(b) Special assistance should be granted to the countries neighbouring South Africa so as to enable them to take effective action against the system of exploiting migrant workers which is in force in South Africa;

(c) Fresh efforts should be made to provide the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts with the opportunity of making an on-the-spot study of living conditions in the prisons of South Africa and Namibia and of the treatment of prisoners in those countries;

- (d) On the occasion of the International Year of the Child, the United Nations Children's Fund, acting in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should publish an investigation into the lot of black children in South Africa.
- 2. The Council also decided to request the General Assembly:
- (a) To urge United Nations bodies to consider reserving, at each of their sessions, a special meeting which would be devoted to the struggle against apartheid, on which occasion the participants would censure the policy of apartheid and provide information concerning specific new measures which their respective countries or national institutions had taken or were planning to take to combat apartheid;

(b) To ensure that subsidiary bodies dealing with the problems of apartheid and racial discrimination should consider the possibility of a joint meeting each year for the purpose of discussing their respective experiences and coordinating their future activities;

(c) To arrange for the organization at least once a year, in some part of the world, of a symposium on apartheid and the various aspects of racial discrimination, in which the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts would be invited to participate;

(d) To arrange for a study to be made of the South African Government's legitimacy, in view of its policy of apartheid and in particular its systematic refusal to apply the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, of international law and of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and then to draw from that study all appropriate conclusions of law and of fact

Other matters concerning prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities

Elimination of religious intolerance

The Commission on Human Rights adopted on 14 March 1979 the first three articles of a draft declaration on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief. It decided to continue work on the draft in 1980.

The articles on which agreement was reached were drawn up in 1979 by an informal sessional working group open to all Commission members. Article 1 stated that everyone was to have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, that no one was to be subject to coercion which would impair such freedom, and that freedom to manifest one's religion or belief could be limited only by law to protect public safety, order, health, morals or the rights of others. Article 2 ruled out discrimination based on religion or belief, defining such discrimination and intolerance as "any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on religion or belief and having as its purpose or as its effect the nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms on an equal basis." Article 3 condemned such discrimination as a violation of human rights and an obstacle to friendly and peaceful relations between nations.

On 23 November, the General Assembly, which had requested the Commission in 1974 to prepare such a draft declaration,¹⁷ asked it to continue to give high priority to the drafting and try to complete it so that a single draft declaration could be submitted to the Assembly in 1980.

This request was made in resolution 34/43, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved the text on 9 November, also without vote. Thirty-one nations (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) sponsored the draft.

Measure s agains t terroris m or incitemen t to racial discrimination or group hatre d

On 14 March, the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone to its 1980 session consideration of the question of measures to be taken against ideologies and practices based on terror or incitement to racial discrimination or any other form of group hatred.

On 14 December 1973, the General Assembly had decided to defer consideration of the question until the Commission had concluded discussion of it.¹⁸

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination agains t Women

By resolution 34/180 of 1.8 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The Convention binds States parties to take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in political and public life, education, employment, health care, and other economic and social areas. Studie s

Rights of national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities

The Commission on Human Rights on 14 March 1979 requested its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to submit its opinion on a draft declaration proposed to the Commission in 1978 by Yugoslavia, dealing with the rights of minorities. This had been the topic of a report completed in 1977 by a Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission, recommending that the Commission consider drafting a declaration on the subject. ²⁰

In the Sub-Commission, differing views were expressed about the draft declaration, with some members supporting it and others questioning whether it was needed. The Sub-Commission decided on 4 September to submit to the Commission the summary record of its discussion.

On another aspect of minority rights, the Sub-Commission recommended on 5 September that it be authorized by the Economic and Social Council to appoint one of its members, Abu Sayeed Chowdhury (Bangladesh), to prepare a study on discriminatory treatment against members of racial, ethnic, religious or linguistic groups at various levels in the administration of criminal justice proceedings, such as police, military, administrative and judicial investigations, arrest, detention, trial and execution of sentences. The study would encompass ideologies or beliefs which contributed or led to racism.

Discrimination against indigenous populations

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on 5 September requested Jose R. Martinez Cobo (Ecuador), Special Rapporteur for a study of the problem of discrimination against indigenous populations, to continue and finalize his work.

Genocide

On 14 March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights endorsed a recommendation made in September 1978 by its Sub-Commission that the study of the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide, submitted in 1978 by a Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission, Nicodeme Ruhashyankiko (Rwanda),²¹ should be given the widest possible distribution.

Protection of human rights of non-citizens

A Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Baroness Elles (United Kingdom), presented a study on the human rights of individuals who were not citizens of the country in which they lived. The study gave a brief historical outline of the development of the protection granted to aliens, of the status of aliens and of their treatment. It outlined the international protection of the human rights of aliens, stateless persons and refugees provided for in human rights instruments and in international law. It examined the rights guaranteed to aliens by States and rights attributable exclusively to nations or citizens. The study also analysed the restrictions, reservations, limitations and derogations which might be made on human rights on the ground of nationality, for which provision was made in human rights instruments. It reviewed and evaluated the machinery available to non-citizens and other remedies for redress of injuries. It drew conclusions and made recommendations for more effective protection of the human rights of non-citizens.

A draft declaration on the human rights of non-citizens, suggested for adoption by the General Assembly, was annexed. This stipulated that non-citizens must observe the laws in force and respect the customs and traditions of the country in which they resided. It listed a number of rights which non-citizens would be entitled to enjoy, including those of: security of person and protection against violence; equal access to and equal treatment before organs administering justice; freedom of movement and choice of residence; leave the country and return to their own country; marriage and choice of spouse; own property; freedom of thought, conscience, expression, peaceful assembly and association; and work. The draft declaration would also prohibit their arbitrary arrest, torture, inhuman and degrading treatment, arbitrary and collective expulsion or deportation, and arbitrary confiscation of assets they had lawfully acquired.

On 14 March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights requested the Economic and Social Council to consider the text of the draft declaration with a view to submitting it to the Assembly for consideration. The Council, by decision 1979/36 of 10 May, decided to submit the draft declaration to Member States for their comments, as well as to the Commission. The Commission would consider the draft in 1980 along with the comments of States, with a view to transmitting a report to the Council. As recommended by the Commission, the Council decided that the study itself should be printed and given the widest possible dissemination.

The Council adopted this decision without vote. The Second (Social) Committee had approved on 4 May, by 42 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions, a draft decision referring only to dissemination of the study. In the Committee, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR said there was no need to spend money to publish a study that had already been widely disseminated.

In the Council, the clause relating to the draft declaration was added to the decision on a proposal of the United Kingdom, approved without vote. The United Kingdom originally proposed that the draft declaration be submitted to the Assembly for consideration, but it modified this proposal orally, after the USSR, supported by the German Democratic Republic, proposed instead that the Commission be asked to consider the draft and submit its comments to the Council. Brazil abstained in the vote in the Committee, in the belief that the matter required further consideration.

Duties to the community and limitations on human rights

In September 1979, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered part of the final report on the individual's duties to the community and the limitations on human rights and freedoms under article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,²² prepared by the Special Rapporteur, Erica-Irene Daes (Greece). This part of the report contained the preface, an introduction and part one of the study, concerning the duties of the individual to the community.

After discussing this part of the report, the Sub-Commission decided on 5 September to request the Special Rapporteur to continue and finalize her work.

DUTIES TO THE COMMUNITY AND LIMITATIONS ON HUMAN RIGHTS

E/CN.4/1350. Report of Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on its 32nd session, Chapters XI and XVIB (decision 3).

Violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms

Human rights in the territories occupied by Israel

During 1979, the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly repeated their calls for a halt to violations of human rights in the territories occupied by Israel since the 1967 war. Also, the Assembly's three-member Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories reported on evidence of what it found to be continued violations.

Decision s of the Commissio n on Human Rights

On 21 February, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two resolutions on the question of the violation of human rights in the occupied territories, including Palestine.

By the first, the Commission expressed grave anxiety and concern over the deteriorating serious situation in the territories resulting from continued Israeli occupation and aggression, particularly the intensification of the establishment of settlers' colonies, the continued and increasing use of arbitrary detention, torture, ill-treatment and cruel treatment of Arab detainees and prisoners, and collective punishment.

The Commission called on Israel to take immediate steps for the return to their homes of the Palestinians and other displaced inhabitants of the territories. It declared that Israel's grave breaches of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) of 12 August 1949 were war crimes and an affront to humanity. The Commission condemned a number of Israeli policies and practices as well as administrative and legislative measures taken to encourage, promote and expand the establishment of settlers' colonies, which further demonstrated Israel's determination to annex territories. The Commission reaffirmed that all such measures were null and void, and that Israel's settlement policy in the occupied territories constituted a flagrant violation of the fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions. It demanded that Israel desist forthwith from such policies and practices and that it cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Arab detainees and prisoners, calling on Israel to release them. It renewed its request to the Secretary-General to collect information on detainees, such as their number, identity, place and duration of detention, and to make the information available to the Commission at its 1980 session. It condemned the destruction of Quneitra perpetrated prior to Israel's withdrawal from that Syrian city in 1974.

The Commission reiterated its call to all States and international organizations not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions or aid which Israel might use in its pursuit of annexation, colonization or any other policies and practices referred to in the resolution. The Commission called on Israel to report to it through the Secretary-General in 1980 on its implementation of the Commission's resolution. It also asked for a report by the Secretary-General.

By the second resolution, the Commission expressed concern at the consequences of Israel's refusal to apply fully and effectively the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, and reaffirmed that that Convention was applicable to the territories. It strongly deplored Israel's failure to acknowledge the Convention's applicability and called on Israel to abide by its obligations under that Convention and under international law. The Commission urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the occupied territories.

Also on 21 February, the Commission adopted a resolution by which it affirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination without external interference and to the establishment of a fully independent and sovereign State in Palestine. It reaffirmed the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property, and called for their return in the exercise of their right to self-determination. The Commission recognized the right of the Palestinian people to regain their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and urged all States and international organizations to support them through their representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

Earlier, on 14 February, the Commission decided to send a telegram to the Government of Israel expressing deep concern about the systematic torture practised by Israel against Palestinian detainees, as reflected in international reports. It also expressed grave concern about the repression and collective punishment practised by Israeli occupation forces against the Palestinian people in Palestine and the occupied territories, particularly the bulldozing, blowing up and bricking up of houses. It called on Israel to cease those practices forthwith and to inform the Commission urgently on the matter.

Decision s of the Economi c and Social Council

On 10 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council commended the Commission for its vigilance and its decisions for the protection of human rights in the occupied territories, including Palestine. It requested the Commission to pursue its efforts and continue to take appropriate measures in that respect.

These decisions were contained in resolution 1979/40, which the Council adopted by 37 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions. Its Second (Social) Committee had approved the text on 4 May by 39 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions. The sponsors were Algeria, Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Mauritania, Pakistan, Senegal, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates.

The observer for Israel expressed the view that the Commission's decisions were the product of predetermined conclusions, distortion and prejudice. Israelis and Arabs were destined by history to live side by side as good neighbours, even though some entertained the illusion that there could be a Middle East without Israel.

Mexico said it had voted for the resolution because of its concern for human rights but it had reservations on inclusion of the word "Palestine."

Decisions of the Sub-Commission

On 5 September 1979, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities adopted two resolutions relating to human rights in Palestine and the occupied Arab territories. By the first, it urged all States and international organizations to enable negotiations to begin immediately between Israel and the Palestinian people, through PLO, to restore all rights in accordance with the United Nations Charter and resolutions. By the second, it deeply deplored Israel's violation of the fundamental rights of the Arab population in Palestine and the occupied territories, called on Israel to desist from bombing civilians and from other military and paramilitary activities in southern Lebanon, demanded that Israel end human rights violations in the occupied territories and requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1980 a detailed report on those violations.

Report of the Special Committee on Israeli Practices

The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in a report adopted, on 9 November 1979, concluded that the Government of Israel continued to follow a deliberate policy of annexation, implemented by the expropriation of property, the establishment of settlements and the implantation of Israeli Jewish civilians in them (for details, see p. 393). In a report prepared at the request of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General described what he had done to provide facilities to the Committee, make additional staff available and ensure the widest dissemination of the Committee's report.

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted three resolutions in connexion with the Committee's report. By resolution 34/90 A, the Assembly condemned the settlement policy and other policies and practices in the occupied territories, demanded that Israel desist forthwith from following them, and requested the Committee to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories, including the treatment of civilians in detention.

By resolution 34/90 B, the Assembly reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was applicable to Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and urged all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions. By resolution 34/90 C, the Assembly determined that the measures taken by Israel to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the territories had no legal validity and constituted a serious obstruction to Middle East peace efforts, and called on Israel to desist forthwith from taking such actions in the territories, including Jerusalem.

(For further details, see p. 394; for texts of these resolutions and voting details, see p. 402.)

On 16 November, by resolution 34/29, the Assembly called on the Israeli authorities to rescind their deportation order against the Mayor of Nablus. On 24 November, the Secretary-General reported that the Prime Minister of Israel had informed him by cable on 20 November that the expulsion decision was based on local regulations in force since 1945 and that the decision would be reviewed by the Supreme Court of Israel. (For details, see p. 397.)

Other actions

On 22 March 1979, the Security Council, by resolution 446(1979), determined that Israel's settlements policy constituted a serious obstruction to a Middle East peace, called on it to desist from any action to change the status of the occupied territories and established a three-member Commission to examine the situation relating to the settlements. Reporting to the Council on 12 July, the Commission recommended that the Council call on Israel to cease the establishment, construction and planning of settlements in the occupied territories. The Council accepted this and the other recommendations of the Commission by resolution 452(1979) of 20 July. (For details see pp. 385 and 390; for page references to texts of resolutions 446(1979) and 452(1979), refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

During 1979, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of communications from Member States relating to the situation in the occupied territories (see pp. 381, 386 and 391).

Human rights situation in Chile

During 1979, the new machinery authorized by the General Assembly in 1978 to deal with the human rights situation in Chile began functioning, succeeding the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile established by the Commission on Human Rights in 1975. Reports were submitted to the Assembly by the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile and the Expert on the Question of the Fate of Missing and Disappeared Persons in Chile, and the Assembly reiterated an appeal for contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Chile. The Commission and the Assembly adopted resolutions on the matter, expressing concern that the situation had not improved and urging the Chilean authorities to respect human rights.

Decisions of the Commission on Human Rights

The Commission's resolution was adopted on 6 March. By that resolution, the Commission acknowledged the conclusion of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Situation of Human Rights in Chile, contained in its final report to the Assembly and the Commission,²³ that although a certain improvement had taken place as compared to previous years, often serious violations of human rights had continued to occur. The Commission expressed shock at the discovery in December 1978 of a mass grave near the town of Lonquen containing bodies of persons reported as having been detained and who had subsequently disappeared. It expressed undiminished concern and dismay at the Chilean authorities' refusal to accept responsibility or account for the large number of persons reported to have disappeared for political reasons, or to undertake an adequate investigation.

The Commission urged the Chilean authorities to restore and safeguard basic human rights and fundamental freedoms without delay. It urged them in particular to cease the state of emergency and siege, to establish effective control over and to assume full responsibility for the State security agencies, to cease arbitrary arrest and detention, to release persons imprisoned for political reasons, to ensure an immediate end to torture and other inhuman treatment, to prosecute and punish those responsible for torture and other acts leading to the death of detainees, to restore the right of habeas corpus, to restore Chilean nationality to persons deprived of it for political reasons, to respect fully the rights of Chilean citizens to return to their country, to restore democratic institutions and constitutional safeguards and the right of the Chilean people to take part freely in public affairs, to re-establish freedom of association and expression, to guarantee international labour protection standards and restore trade union rights, and to safeguard the human rights of the Mapuche Indians and other indigenous minorities.

Also by this resolution, the Commission acted to implement the Assembly's 1978 resolution on the human rights situation in Chile²⁴ by authorizing its Chairman to appoint the officials who were to continue inquiring into that situation. It authorized the appointment of Abdoulaye Dieye (Senegal) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile. He was to report to the Assembly in 1979 and to the Commission in 1980. The Commission authorized the appointment of Felix Ermacora (Austria) and Waleed M. Sadi (Jordan) as experts, in their individual capacity, to study the question of the fate of missing and disappeared persons in Chile, reporting to the Commission in 1980 and, through the Special Rapporteur, to the Assembly in 1979. The Chilean authorities were urged to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and the experts.

Decision of the Economic and Social Council

On the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision on these appointments and requested the Assembly to provide adequate funds and staff to implement it. Decision 1979/32 was adopted by the Council on 10 May by 39 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions, after having been approved by the Second (Social) Committee on 4 May by 38 votes to 2, with 7 abstentions.

In the discussion preceding the adoption of this decision, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and Zambia welcomed the Commission's resolution on the human rights situation in Chile, though the Byelorussian SSR thought that the most effective remedy lay through extension of the Ad Hoc Working Group's mandate and the Ukrainian SSR could not agree with the statement in the preamble that the situation had improved. The United Arab Emirates hoped that the Chilean Government would co-operate with the United Nations. Finland agreed with the resolution but would have preferred action on a more general basis with regard to missing persons. The German Democratic Republic thought it regrettable that the principle of equitable geographical distribution had not been observed in the appointment of the experts on missing persons.

Colombia said the decision failed to take account of the changes that had occurred in Chile during the past year; moreover, the Commission's resolution was selective in its application since the same approach had not been adopted for other countries where the situation was as bad or worse.

The observer for Chile said the Commission's resolution was unlawful, discriminatory and unjust, and the procedures it established lacked legal or moral force. Chile would not accept any ad hoc or ad cassum procedure, because it vitiated the principle of the legal equality of States. Chile would co-operate with the United Nations to the extent that its activities conformed to existing objective and universally valid standards.

By a letter dated 29 August, addressed to the Director of the United Nations Division of Human Rights, one of the appointed experts, Mr. Sadi, resigned from the assignment.

Reports of the Special Rapporteur and the Expert on missing persons

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in November 1979 the first reports prepared by the Special Rapporteur and the Expert on the Question of the Fate of Missing and Disappeared Persons in Chile.

The Special Rapporteur stated in his report that, in certain respects, the human rights situation in Chile had deteriorated since the Ad Hoc Working Group had last reported. A law promulgated on 25 April, ostensibly aimed against terrorism, seriously affected an individual's right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty, the right to freedom of association, the right to privacy and the right not to be subjected to unlawful attacks on honour and reputation. Moreover, the powers of the security agencies and the number of cases of torture had increased, without any improvement in judicial protection from unlawful activities. Another change for the worse related to reports of killings by members of the armed forces and security services.

The Special Rapporteur found that the state of emergency declared on 11 September 1973 continued to be in effect, although the threat to public order that had purportedly justified it was non-existent. Further, Chilean courts generally continued to refuse to exercise all their powers under Chilean law to protect the rights of individuals, prevent arbitrary acts or punish unlawful activities, particularly those of security agencies. The number of arrests for political or national security reasons in the first half of 1979 had declined from the same period in 1978, although it continued above the 1977 level. The Government had not changed its negative attitude on the return of Chileans living outside the country.

Information media expressed a wide range of views, and a certain degree of divergent opinion or criticism of the Government was permitted. Nevertheless, freedom of information was curtailed by legal restrictions in politics, trade unions and universities, which were also applied to information media, sometimes arbitrarily. Freedom of expression and information depended on the tolerance of the authorities, which did not hesitate to take extreme measures when an organ of the press expressed opinions exceeding the limits of that tolerance.

The Special Rapporteur further stated that, despite the repeal of some earlier legislation limiting trade union rights, new legislation tended to establish permanent restrictions on freedom of association, the right to strike and the right to collective bargaining. Workers were compelled to negotiate as if dealing with civil law contracts, without taking into account the inequality between the parties to a labour contract.

The Expert on missing and disappeared persons, in his report, noted that between 1,000 and 2,000 persons were reported to have disappeared as a result of actions by the Chilean authorities since the military Government came to power on 11 September 1973. In almost all of the cases of missing persons he had examined, there was substantial and reliable evidence that the person had been arrested and/or subjected to detention by government agents prior to his disappearance. Even though no persons were reported to have disappeared in Chile during 1978 and 1979, the numerous persons who had disappeared between September 1973 and the end of 1977, and whose whereabouts were still unknown, presented a continuous situation of gross and flagrant violations of human rights.

During the last quarter of 1973, the military and carabineros had arrested people in an independent and uncontrolled manner, without respecting established legal rules, and the Government failed to require respect for those rules or to investigate and punish abuses. Between 1974 and 1977, a large but varying number of persons had been arrested each year in connexion with political or national security matters, and members of the Revolutionary Left Movement, the Socialist Party and the Communist Party had disappeared.

The Expert said that legal remedies to protect individuals from illegal arrest and detention had been inoperative during the period following 11 September 1973. Of 5,000 applications for release under the legal remedy of amparo (similar to habeas corpus], only four had been granted and one of those had not to date been put into effect. Although more than 500 criminal cases concerning missing persons had been filed between 1973 and 1978, no missing person's fate had been clarified and no one had been punished for actions leading to the disappearance of a detainee. Thus, the phenomenon of missing persons in Chile was the result of the peculiar circumstances produced by the system of government installed in 1973 and the failure of the courts to control the independent actions of government agents. The pressure brought to bear by the relatives of missing persons, the Roman Catholic Church and the concern expressed by the international community, together with the discovery of a number of unidentified bodies at an abandoned mine near Lonquen, appeared to have encouraged the courts to take a more positive attitude in investigating cases of missing persons.

By tolerating and then establishing a system or practice which had resulted in the disappearance of detainees between 1973 and 1977, Chile had failed to fulfil its obligations under international law, the Expert concluded. Its obligations included the duty to provide reliable and adequate answers in each case of a person reported missing, and a moral and legal responsibility to pay damages for injuries caused by its agents. When the missing person was an employee of the United Nations, as in the case of Fernando de la Cruz Olivares Mori, a staff member of the Latin American Demographic Centre arrested in 1973, the Government bore a responsibility to that Organization.

In his recommendations, the Expert said measures should be taken so that emergency situations or states of siege were not used to exempt State organs or agents from the obligation to obey the law or remove their responsibility for human rights violations. The law governing arrest and detention should clearly specify which government agents were empowered to make arrests and in what circumstances, written arrest orders should be required, registers of arrests should be kept, no secret places of detention should be permitted, and the Government and courts should be responsible for ensuring that the laws on arrest and detention were obeyed. Courts should be empowered to make full use of the remedy of habeas corpus, and civilian judges should be able to visit all places of detention. In cases of large-scale disappearances, government action to ensure a speedy and thorough investigation should be guaranteed. It would be advisable for the Government to co-operate with the United Nations on a comprehensive report on missing persons in Chile.

By a letter dated 23 November, Chile transmitted a document presenting its Government's position on the human rights situation in that country. The Government stated that between September 1978 and November 1979 there had been no accusations of executions or disappearances, only one accusation of torture had been submitted to the courts, there were no political prisoners, the remedy of amparo was fully in effect, proceedings had been instituted and penalties applied in cases of excesses by security forces, no one had been expelled from the country, and the rights of association, collective bargaining and election of trade union leaders and the right to strike had been restored. The statement added that the special procedure to investigate the situation of human rights in that country should cease to exist, as stated by the Commission on Human Rights in 1975 when it established the Ad Hoc Working Group.25 Only then would it be possible for Chile to renew its cooperation with the United Nations in the matter of human rights.

Consideratio n by the General Assembly

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/179, on human rights in Chile, by a recorded vote of 96 to 6, with 33 abstentions. By this resolution, the Assembly commended the Special Rapporteur and the Expert on missing and disappeared persons for their work, and reiterated its indignation at the continued violation of human rights in Chile, concluding that the Assembly should continue to exercise vigilance with regard to the human rights situation there. Expressing concern at the deterioration in a number of areas, it urged the Chilean authorities to respect and promote human rights, and in particular to cease the state of emergency; restore democratic institutions and constitutional safeguards; ensure an immediate end to torture and degrading treatment; prosecute and punish those responsible; restore freedom of expression and trade union rights; allow citizens freely to enter and leave the country; restore the right of amparo; respect the rights of the indigenous population; and adopt measures to improve the enjoyment of economic and social rights by the population at large. Although noting that no persons were reported to have disappeared in Chile during 1978 and 1979, it expressed deep concern that numerous previous disappearances represented a continuous situation of human rights violations. It also urged the Chilean authorities to investigate and clarify the fate of persons reported to have disappeared for political reasons, inform relatives of the outcome, institute criminal proceedings against those responsible for such disappearances and punish those found guilty.

The Assembly invited the Commission on Human Rights to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and to consider further the most effective ways of clarifying the whereabouts and fate of missing and disappeared persons in Chile. It urged the Chilean authorities to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and the Expert.

This resolution was approved by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 5 December by a recorded vote, taken at the request of Chile and Mexico, of 93 to 6, with 28 abstentions. The sponsors of the draft were Algeria, Austria, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Grenada, Jamaica, Mexico, Mozambique, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Sweden, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia. They revised their original draft by deleting a preambular reference to the Assembly's 1978 resolution on disappeared persons,26 by replacing "Chilean Government" with "Chilean authorities" and by adding a phrase urging that those authorities punish persons found guilty of responsibility disappearances.

Explaining that this text covered most of their concerns, Algeria, Cuba, Mexico and Yugoslavia withdrew a draft they had submitted and joined the other 10 States as sponsors of this resolution. The withdrawn text contained most of the same points, and also would have had the Assembly express concern at the deterioration of the situation in Chile in the area of legislation. It did not contain a clause similar to one in the approved text noting that no persons were reported to have disappeared in Chile during 1978 and 1979.

Canada and Ireland proposed amendments to the 14-power text, including the addition of the phrase "as the authorities of all countries" to the paragraph urging the Chilean authorities to protect—a word subsequently orally changed by the sponsors to "respect"—and promote human rights; these States said they believed the standards expected of Chile should be no different from those expected of other States. They also proposed the inclusion of a separate paragraph to note that no new cases of disappearances had been reported since the end of 1977, and the sponsors orally recast a phrase to embody that provision. The two States later withdrew their amendments after stating that their concerns had been met by the sponsors' revisions.

In the discussion on this subject, a number of delegations—including Benin, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia-expressed concern at what they regarded as a worsening of the human rights situation in Chile. Australia and Finland said the United Nations should continue its vigilance in regard to the situation. Ireland, speaking for the nine member States of the European Economic Community, also criticized the Chilean Government for its actions affecting human rights, adding that the United Nations should concern itself as well with other cases of violations. Canada, Colombia and Ecuador voted for the resolution but warned against a concentration on violations only in selected countries. New Zealand doubted the propriety of addressing only to Chile the appeal for measures to improve the enjoyment of economic and social rights. The United States, while voting for the text, expressed reservations about its statement that the situation had deteriorated.

Chile described the Special Rapporteur's report as an indictment of Chile that had turned into a diatribe. Chile rejected the resolution, regarding it as contradictory in acknowledging that the problem of missing persons no longer existed while expressing hope that judicial inquiries would clarify the fate of such persons. It was illegal in claiming the right to impose norms on a State in an area strictly within that State's domestic legislation. It was unreal and arbitrary in singling out for selective treatment a country which had always been noted for its co-operation with international organizations. Chile would not co-operate with the United Nations so long as the Organization persisted in refusing to apply applicable rules and procedures universally.

Costa Rica abstained in the vote, stating that the resolution was either hypocritical or naive in singling out Chile as though it were the only and most serious violator of human rights in the world. The Dominican Republic also abstained, explaining that it had not agreed in 1978 with the appointment of a Special Rapporteur.

Uruguay, explaining its negative vote, said there was an ominous silence about many human rights situations which really offended the conscience of mankind; moreover, the anonymous information cited in the Special Rapporteur's report should be treated with caution.

United Nations Trust Fund for Chile

The five-member Board of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for Chile, appointed by the Secretary-General on 14 August 1979, held its first session at United Nations Head-quarters, New York, from 20 to 24 August. The Fund had been established under a 1978 resolution of the General Assembly²⁷ as a voluntary fund to receive contributions and distribute, through established channels, humanitarian, legal and financial aid to persons whose human rights had been violated by detention or imprisonment in Chile, to forced exiles and to relatives of such persons.

The Board of Trustees reviewed the situation of persons likely to fall within the Fund's area of competence and concluded that there was an urgent need to provide the assistance called for by the Assembly. The Board indicated preliminary priority areas of future assistance programmes. It decided to appeal to all States, selected intergovernmental organizations, private organizations and individuals for contributions to the Fund. The Board requested the Secretary-General to make an appeal to Member States, which he did in a letter dated 28 September. In a report to the Assembly, the Secretary-General said that no contributions or pledges had been received as of 31 October. However, Sweden informed him on 9 November that it had decided to contribute $50,000 and, on 5 December, Denmark and Norway announced to the Assembly's Third Committee that they would each give $25,000, while the Netherlands announced a $50,000 contribution.

On 17 December, by a recorded vote of 89 to 5, with 39 abstentions, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/176, by which it appealed to Member States to respond favourably to the Secretary-General's request for contributions to the Fund. This resolution was recommended by the Third Committee, which approved it on 5 December by a recorded vote, requested by Chile, of 81 to 5, with 36 abstentions. It was sponsored by Denmark, the Netherlands and Sweden.

Canada, explaining its abstention, said it would be better to set up a fund for contributions to help all victims of human rights abuses everywhere.

Trade union rights;

The presumption of innocence of accused persons;

To restore fully the right of amparo (habeas corpus); (g) To respect the rights, in particular the economic, social and cultural rights, of the indigenous population;

(h) To adopt measures to improve the enjoyment of economic and social rights by the population at large;

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/174 of 20 December 1978, by which it established the United Nations Trust Fund for Chile as a voluntary fund to receive contributions and distribute, through established channels of assistance, humanitarian, legal and financial aid to persons whose human rights have been violated by detention or imprisonment in Chile, to those forced to leave the country and to relatives of persons in the above-mentioned categories,

Recalling also the appeal to Member States for pledges and contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Chile made by the Secretary-General in his letter dated 28 Septem-

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 8 November 1979 on the implementation of resolution 33/174, in which he informed the General Assembly that, as at 31 October 1979, no contributions or pledges of contributions had been received,

Notes that some Governments have since 31 October 1979 decided to contribute or make pledges of contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Chile;

2. Appeals to Member States to respond favourably to the request for contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Chile made in the letter of the Secretary-General dated 28 September 1979.

Other matters relating to violations of human rights

Human right's situation s in specific countries

During the 1979 sessions of the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the human rights situation in a number of countries and territories was raised in connexion with an agenda item on the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories. These were in addition to the situations dealt with under separate items, relating to the territories occupied by Israel (see p. 818), Chile (see p. 822) and southern Africa (seep. 809).

Cyprus

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in 1979 a report on the question of human rights in Cyprus. This report, prepared in response to a 1978 request by the Commission,²⁸ contained information relevant to the implementation of the Commission's repeated calls for the full restoration of all human rights to the population of Cyprus, particularly to refugees.

After consultation with the interested parties, the Commission decided on 12 March to postpone the debate on the question to 1980, with due priority at that session, and with the understanding that its resolutions on this subject remained operative, including the request for a report from the Secretary-General.

On 5 September, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities requested a report from the Secretary-General on implementation of its 1978 resolution on human rights in Cyprus²⁹ and decided to defer consideration of the question until its 1980 session.

(For information on the question of missing persons in Cyprus, see p. 433.)

Democratic Kampuchea

On 13 March, the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone to 1980 consideration of a report by the Chairman of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities analysing materials received by the Secretary-General on the human rights situation in Democratic Kampuchea. It also approved a motion not to act on a draft resolution by Australia, Austria, Canada, Sweden and the United Kingdom, by which the Commission would have concluded that gross and flagrant violations of human rights had occurred in Democratic Kampuchea and that the Commission should keep the situation under review, nor on a Cuban amendment by which the Commission would, in the light of the new situation in that country, have co-operated with and helped its people in ensuring respect for human rights.

In a resolution adopted on 5 September, the Sub-Commission urged the Government of Democratic Kampuchea to take urgent measures to restore full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in that country and to prevent such violations from recurring. It also invited the Government to present to it and to the Commission in 1980 information on recent violations, their root causes, and measures taken to prevent their recurrence. Finally, the Sub-Commission drew the Government's attention to the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, under which the United Nations provided experts to advise or assist Governments on measures to strengthen the protection of human rights.

Equatorial Guinea

On 13 March, the Commission on Human Rights decided that its Chairman should appoint a Special Rapporteur to make a thorough study of the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea and report in 1980.

Acting on the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council decided on 10 May, by decision 1979/35, to appeal to the Government of Equatorial Guinea to co-operate in implementing the Commission's resolution. It also approved the Commission's recommendation to derestrict material relating to the question which was before the Commission.

This decision was adopted by the Council by 26 votes to 6, with 17 abstentions, following its approval by the Second (Social) Committee on 4 May by 29 votes to 5, with 13 abstentions. In the Committee, the United Kingdom welcomed the decision to take public action in the case of what it described as the atrocious human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea, while the USSR objected, stating that the procedure established by the Council for confidential consideration of communications on human rights must not be violated.

In a letter dated 11 May to the Secretary-General and the Council President, Equatorial Guinea said the Commission had followed a biased and unjust procedure. The Council's recommendations were unfounded and unacceptable, since on various occasions the Government had confirmed that no human rights problems existed in Equatorial Guinea.

On 27 September, in an address to the General Assembly, the representative of Equatorial Guinea stated that, following 11 years of a regime characterized by systematic and flagrant violations of human rights, a coup d'etat had taken place on 3 August and the new Government was respecting all the freedoms and rights of its citizens.

Guatemala

The Commission on Human Rights decided on 14 March to send a telegram to the Government of Guatemala expressing its profound egret at the assassination on 25 January of Alberto Fuentes Mohr, Deputy of the Guatemalan Congress, ex-Minister for Foreign Affairs and Finance, and a former member of the United Nations Secretariat. The Commission took note of a communication from Guatemala on that event and recorded with satisfaction the Government's declaration condemning the crime and stating that it was acting to apprehend those responsible. The Commission said it would welcome information on this matter before its 1980 session.

Iran

On 7 September 1979, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided to send a telegram to the Government of Iran expressing its deep sense of shock at reported summary executions of numerous Kurds in Iran and requesting the immediate cessation of those inhuman practices.

Nicaragua

The Commission on Human Rights, on 13 March, condemned violations of human rights md fundamental freedoms by the Nicaraguan authorities and expressed deep concern that the Government had taken no steps to respect such rights and freedoms. It demanded that the Nicaraguan authorities end the grave situation and ensure respect for human rights, as the General Assembly had urged in 1978. It requested the Secretary-General to keep the situation under review and report to it through the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination md Protection of Minorities.

The Sub-Commission, after considering the Secretary-General's report following a change in that country's regime, requested him on 5 September to supplement it for the Commission's 1980 session. It urged Nicaragua to take urgent measures to restore full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and take measures to prevent a recurrence of violations, and invited it to present information to the Commission and the Sub-Commission. It also drew attention to the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights.

Western Sahara and camps of Tindouf and neighbouring area

On 13 March, the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone consideration of two draft resolutions to its 1980 session. By the first, sponsored by Algeria, Benin, Burundi, Cuba, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Panama, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia, the Commission would have decided to examine at its 1980 session the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Western Sahara. By the second, sponsored by Gabon, Morocco, Senegal and Zaire, the Commission would have included in the Commission's 1980 agenda an item concerning violations of the human rights of persons living in the camps of Tindouf and the adjacent area.

(For consideration of the question of Western Sahara by the Security Council and the General Assembly, see p. 1046.)

Question of large-scale exoduses

Canada submitted a draft resolution at the 1979 session of the Commission on Human Rights proposing the appointment of a special rapporteur to investigate situations which had led to large-scale exoduses from certain States and territories in order to determine their possible relationship to violations of human rights. The Syrian Arab Republic submitted amendments emphasizing the relationship of exoduses to colonialism, settler-colonialism, foreign occupation and apartheid. Canada then withdrew its proposal, explaining that the amendments would adversely affect its global thrust. The Commission decided on 14 March to postpone consideration of the question to its 1980 session.

Questions concerning procedures

Study of situations revealing a consistent pattern of human rights violations

At its 1979 session, the Commission on Human Rights adopted, in closed meetings, a number of decisions under the procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970 for dealing with communications relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms.31 According to this procedure, particular situations which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations requiring consideration by the Commission were to be brought to its attention by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The Chairman of the Commission announced that these decisions concerned Bolivia, Burma, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Malawi, Paraguay, the Republic of Korea, Uganda and Uruguay.

Prior to the Commission's 1979 session, a working group of five of its members, established in 1978,³² met for one week to examine the documents referred to the Commission by the Sub-Commission and submitted a confidential report to the Commission. All actions taken under this procedure were to remain confidential until such time as the Commission decided to make recommendations to the Council.

Also within the framework of this procedure, the Sub-Commission's Working Group on communications held its eighth session from 6 to 17 August to consider 13,124 communications concerning human rights, including replies of Governments, received by the Secretary-General since its seventh session in 1978. The Working Group's task was to bring to the Sub-Commission's attention those communications which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Sub-Commission considered the Working Group's confidential report at closed meetings and adopted a confidential resolution on the matter on 5 September communicating its findings to the Commission.

Procedures for dealing with human rights violations

At its 1979 session, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two decisions relating to its procedure for handling communications relating to violations of human rights.

On 9 March, it decided to set up a fivemember working group to meet one week prior to its 1980 session to examine situations referred to it by its Sub-Commission, as well as situations which the Commission had decided to keep under review. On 12 March, it authorized any future working groups established under this procedure to communicate their recommendations as soon as possible to the Governments directly concerned, in order to facilitate their participation in the examination of situations concerning their countries.

The Commission's decision to establish a working group was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council without vote by decision 1979/40 of 10 May. This action was recommended by the Second Committee on 4 May, also without vote.

The Commission also decided, on 7 March, that an analysis of existing United Nations procedures for dealing with communications concerning violations of human rights, which had been prepared by the Secretary-General at the Commission's request, should be updated and resubmitted in 1980.

The Sub-Commission, by a resolution adopted on 5 September, repeated a request it had made in 1978³³ that, to safeguard confidentiality, decisions by the Sub-Commission and its Working Group on communications dealt with in closed session should be taken by secret ballot unless those bodies decided otherwise.

Action against mas s and flagrant human right s violations

By resolution 34/175, adopted without vote on 17 December 1979, the General Assembly expressed satisfaction that during the year several situations of mass and flagrant violations of human rights had ceased, though many serious situations remained to be resolved. Reaffirming that such violations were of special concern to the United Nations, it urged the appropriate United Nations bodies, within their mandates, particularly the Commission on Human Rights, to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases, and stressed the important role of the Secretary-General in such situations.

The resolution was approved without vote by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 5 December. It was sponsored by Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Lesotho, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Sweden, Uganda and Venezuela. In accordance with suggestions by Nigeria, Yugoslavia and Zambia, the sponsors orally revised their text by: replacing references to "gross and persistent" violations with "mass and flagrant" violations; adding the phrase that many serious situations remained to be resolved; adding to the paragraph urging United Nations action the phrase "within their mandates, particularly the Commission on Human Rights;" and changing a provision drawing attention to the Secretary-General's good offices role to one stressing the important role he could play.

Resolution 34/175, as recommended by Third Committee, A/34/829, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the importance given in the Charter of the United Nations to promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recognizing that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ideal of free human beings enjoying civil and political freedom and freedom from fear and want can be achieved only if conditions are created whereby everybody may enjoy his civil and political rights as well as his economic, social and cultural rights,

Conscious of the responsibility of the United Nations, expressed inter alia in General Assembly resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in dealing with situations of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Believing that disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind,

Recalling the statements made at the current session of the General Assembly by representatives of countries which have recently experienced mass and flagrant violations of human rights. 1. Expresses satisfaction that during the current year several situations of mass and flagrant violations of human rights have ceased, though many serious situations remain to be resolved:

2. Notes with appreciation the assistance being offered by the Secretary-General and by various United Nations bodies to countries which have recently experienced situations of mass and flagrant violations of human rights;

3. Reaffirms that mass and flagrant violations of human rights are of special concern to the United Nations;

4. Urges the appropriate United Nations bodies, within their mandates, particularly the Commission on Human Rights, to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights;

5. Stresses the important role that the Secretary-General can play in situations of mass and flagrant violations of human rights.

Right to self-determination

Realization of the right to self-determination

In the context of its continuing consideration of the question of the right of peoples to self-determination, the Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution adopted on 21 February 1979, reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity and liberation from colonial or foreign domination or occupation by all available means, including armed struggle. It also reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia, Zimbabwe, South Africa and Palestine and of all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without external interference.

The Commission condemned the practice of using mercenaries against States and national liberation movements as a criminal act and the mercenaries themselves as criminals, and called on all Governments to enact legislation to punish the organizers of mercenaries. It also condemned States which continued to maintain relations with the racist regimes in southern Africa and elsewhere. It demanded the immediate release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and full respect for their individual rights.

The Commission expressed appreciation for the assistance received by the peoples under alien domination or occupation. Finally, it decided to continue to give the question of selfdetermination priority consideration in 1980.

Also in connexion with its item on self-determination, the Commission adopted a resolution on the same date on the right of Palestinians to self-determination and a sovereign State (see p.819).

At its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly again considered the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to selfdetermination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. The discussion took place mainly in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

The Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing information from 18 Member States—Australia, Austria, the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, Iran, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Norway, Poland, Seychelles, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR—and from five non-governmental organizations on action they had taken in response to the Assembly's 1978 request for the strengthening of assistance to colonial territories and peoples under foreign domination and control.³⁴

On 23 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/44 by a recorded vote of 105 to 20, with 16 abstentions. By this text, it reaffirmed the legitimacy of the liberation struggle and the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, the Palestinian people and all peoples under alien and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty.

Touching on specific cases, the Assembly strongly condemned all partial agreements and separate treaties that were in flagrant violation of the rights of the Palestinian people, and invited all Member States to implement the decision on Western Sahara taken in July at Monrovia, Liberia, by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (see p. 1049). It also took note of contacts between the Comoros and France on the integration of the Comorian island of Mayotte into the Comoros. It condemned the policy of "bantustanization" in South Africa, reiterated its support for the struggle against the Pretoria regime and condemned violations of Security Council sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe).

The Governments of all countries were called upon to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in, and the transit of mercenaries through, their territory to be punishable offences, and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries.

The Assembly condemned the policies of those members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and of other countries whose political, economic, military, nuclear, strategic, cultural and sporting relations with the racist regimes in southern Africa and elsewhere encouraged those regimes to persist in their suppression of aspirations for self-determination and independence. It again demanded the immediate application by all countries of the Security Council's mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

The Assembly strongly condemned all Governments which did not recognize the right to selfdetermination and independence, notably for the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people. It also strongly condemned the increasing massacres of innocent and defenceless people, including women and children, by the racist minority regimes in southern Africa. It further condemned the expansionist activities of Israel in the Middle East as well as the continuous bombing of civilian Arab and, in particular, Palestinian populations and the destruction of their villages and encampments. It urged all States and international organizations to support the Palestinian people through its representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization, in its struggle for self-determination and independence.

The Assembly: demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for selfdetermination, and full respect for individual rights; reiterated its appreciation for the assistance that peoples under colonial and foreign rule continued to receive from Governments, United Nations agencies and intergovernmental organizations; and called for a maximization of that assistance. It also called for a maximization of all forms of assistance by all States and organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through their national liberation movements recognized by OAU. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to give the widest possible publicity to the struggle by oppressed peoples for self-determination and independence.

This resolution was approved by the Third Committee on 8 November by a recorded vote of 97 to 22, with 14 abstentions. The text was introduced by Lesotho, current Chairman of the African group of Member States at the United Nations; the Comoros, Egypt and the United Republic of Cameroon later withdrew from the list of sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Burundi, Cape Verde, the Congo, Cuba, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Viet Nam.

The text as adopted incorporated several amendments which the Committee approved by vote. The Committee also voted separately on several paragraphs, as did the Assembly with regard to the paragraph on Western Sahara, at the request of Morocco. All these votes were recorded.

The Committee approved two amendments concerning the Palestinian people submitted by Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen. The first, adopted by 65 votes to 11, with 53 abstentions, added a reference to an OAU resolution on the Palestinian question to the fourth preambular paragraph, by which the Assembly also recalled OAU resolutions on Zimbabwe and Namibia adopted in July at Monrovia. The second amendment inserted operative paragraph 4, by which the Assembly condemned all partial agreements and separate treaties which were in flagrant violation of the rights of the Palestinian people; the vote was 59 to 36, with 36 abstentions.

Paragraph 5, which in the original would have had the Assembly endorse the OAUJuly resolution on Western Sahara, was altered in two votes, on the basis of an oral Uruguayan amendment subamended by Algeria. The Uruguayan amendment would have had the Assembly take note of this resolution rather than endorse it. By 64 votes to 7, with 49 abstentions, in a vote requested by Morocco, the Committee approved the Algerian subamendment to add "with satisfaction." Then, by 71 votes to 6, with 44 abstentions, it approved the revised amendment, to have the Assembly take note of the resolution with satisfaction. The Committee rejected, by 10 votes in favour to 57 against, with 54 abstentions, another Uruguayan amendment which would have deleted the phrase in this paragraph inviting Member States to implement the OAU decision. The amended paragraph was approved in the Committee by 76 votes to 5, with 42 abstentions, and in the Assembly by 81 to 6, with 44 abstentions.

In regard to paragraph 12, by which the Assembly condemned Governments which did not recognize the right of peoples to self-determination and independence, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people, the Committee rejected, by 18 votes in favour to 52 against, with 51 abstentions, an oral amendment by the Ivory Coast to replace "Africa" by a reference to South Africa, Zimbabwe and Namibia.

In paragraph 2, reaffirming the legitimacy of the liberation struggle by all available means, including armed struggle, the last three words were approved in the Committee by a vote, requested by Colombia, of 91 to 25, with 16 abstentions.

In the Third Committee's discussion of the amendments, Lesotho and Liberia suggested that the proposal to add a paragraph on the Palestinian issue be withdrawn in the interest of African unity. Australia also urged its withdrawal. Egypt, which voted against the amendment but in favour of the resolution as a whole, said the Third Committee was not the appropriate forum for the topic. Papua New Guinea and Singapore also voted against the amendment and Chile and Peru abstained, on the ground that the matter was not within the Committee's competence. Fiji, Gabon, the Ivory Coast, Sierra Leone, Uganda, the Upper Volta and Zaire also opposed the amendment and Costa Rica abstained, referring to the importance of peace initiatives in the Middle East. Also abstaining were Suriname, because the amendment implied that the agreement between Egypt and Israel (see p. 355) was an obstacle to Palestinian selfdetermination, and Turkey, which said the strong language was not conducive to normalizing relations among Arab nations. Israel, which voted against the amendment and the resolution, said the amendment was designed to sabotage the only positive development in the Middle East since the beginning of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Favouring the amendment, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Syrian Arab Republic noted that the paragraph had been accepted by the OAU summit meeting in July. The amendment was also endorsed by Benin, the Congo, Cuba, Mauritania, Nicaragua, Senegal, Viet Nam and Zambia.

With regard to the paragraph on Western Sahara, Colombia and the Upper Volta supported the amendment to have the Assembly note rather than endorse the OAU resolution on that territory. The Ivory Coast also supported it, stating that it had not participated in the OAU decision in the belief that nothing should be done to impede a solution of the Sahara question. Gabon expressed reservations on the paragraph. Not participating in the Committee's vote on the paragraph were Jordan, out of sympathy with the peoples of Morocco and the Greater Ma ghreb, and Senegal, because it regarded the OAU decision as illegal and out of order. Chile abstained on the ground that the matter lay outside the Committee's competence. Morocco voted against the resolution because of this paragraph statingthatthe Assembly could not endorse a political decision.

Concerning the paragraph on support for the liberation struggle, Canada, Colombia and Papua New Guinea opposed the three words on which a separate vote was taken, and Costa Rica abstained, because they felt it inappropriate to recommend armed struggle. On the other hand Zambia said it was not happy to see the phrase "including armed struggle" in place of the word; "particularly armed struggle," which the Assembly had used in its 1978 resolution on this agenda item; 35 armed struggle had been decisive in bringing the colonial rulers to the negotiating table.

Among those voting against the resolution Ireland, speaking for the nine member States of the European Economic Community, said the text was negative and unbalanced, specifically on the Middle East, and contained condemnations that were inappropriate at a time of in creased efforts to make progress in difficult situations. The United Kingdom added that the resolution failed to take note of settlement efforts in regard to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and contained language that was not realistic or helpful. Canada objected to the parallel drawn between the problems of the Middle East and southern Africa, which were totally different New Zealand was disappointed that the text focused on specific situations rather than the right of all peoples to self-determination, and firmly opposed any decision which might jeopardize chances for peace in the Middle East and southern Africa. The United States said the text was ambiguous and of dubious credibility because the sponsors, in attempting to accommodate certain delegations, had condemned others.

Among those abstaining on the resolution were Greece, believing that certain provisions did not accurately reflect the current situation Panama, with reservations on the condemnation of Israel's expansionist policies, and Spain, because the text contained many controversial points.

Among those voting for the resolution, Indonesia and Turkey voiced reservations on the paragraph by which the Assembly condemned the policies of NATO and other countries providing

ing encouragement to the racist regimes. The Dominican Republic had reservations on the paragraphs mentioning NATO members and Israel's expansionist activities. The United Republic of Cameroon had reservations on the vagueness of the paragraph on NATO, and abstained on the paragraph concerning the Palestinian issue because it did not want to encourage war or pass judgement on an agreement with which it was not associated.

Studies on self-determination

The Economic and Social Council decided on 10 May 1979 that two studies on the right to self-determination, prepared by Special Rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, should be printed and given the widest possible distribution, including distribution in Arabic. This action, contained in decision 1979/39, was taken, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Social) Committee, which similarly approved it on 4 May. Wide distribution of the studies had been proposed by the Sub-Commission in September 1978³⁶ and by the Commission on Human Rights on 21 February 1979

The studies were by Aureliu Cristescu (Romania), on the historical and current development of the right to self-determination, and Hector Gros Espiell (Uruguay), on the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the right of peoples under colonial and alien domination to self-determination.

The General Assembly took note of the Council's decision in resolution 34/44 of 23 November (see preceding section).

Respect for human rights in armed conflicts

Status of Protocols to the Geneva Conventions

By resolution 34/51, adopted by consensus on 23 November 1979, the General Assembly reiterated that all States should consider without delay the matter of ratifying or acceding to the two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 concerning the respect for human rights in armed conflicts. Although 101 States had become parties to the Conventions, the Assembly noted that only a limited number of States had adhered to the Protocols, which were adopted in 1977 by the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts.³⁷

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to inform it annually, preferably at the beginning of each calendar year, of the state of ratifications of and accessions to the two Protocols.

In the preamble, the Assembly cited the need for continued improvement and further expansion of the humanitarian rules relating to armed conflict, and noted in this context the importance of the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, whose first meeting was held in September 1979 (see p. 70).

This resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee, which approved it by consensus on 14 November. It was sponsored by Bangladesh, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Ghana, Honduras, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Senegal, Sweden, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

Sweden, which introduced the resolution, expressed concern that only 11 States had adhered to the Protocols. Austria, Iraq and Yugoslaviajoined Sweden in expressing hope that more countries would soon ratify them, and Finland said that a bill for ratification had been submitted to its Parliament. Mexico said the subject would not be concluded until all States adopted standards to prohibit or restrict the use of certain conventional weapons that had indiscriminate effects.

Israel said it had not joined in the consensus on the resolution because some of the provisions in the Protocols did not strike a fair balance between the different interests of States, threatened to revive the spectre of the pernicious theory of just and unjust wars, and discriminated against Israel's relief organization, the Mogen David Adom Society, and its emblem, the Red Shield of David.

As of 31 December 1979, the 11 States that had ratified or acceded to Protocol I, on the protection of victims of international armed conflicts, were Botswana, Cyprus, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Niger, Sweden, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. All of these States except Cyprus had also adhered to Protocol II, on the protection of victims of non-international conflicts.

The following States had signed but not ratified or acceded to the Protocols as of 31 December: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece (Protocol I only), Guatemala, the Holy See, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Iran, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines (Protocol I only), Poland, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Romania, San Marino, Senegal, Spain, Switzerland, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, the Upper Volta, Viet Nam (Protocol I only) and Yemen.

As requested by the Assembly in its previous resolution on this subject,³⁸ the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on 10 September on the state of signatures and ratifications of the Protocols as of 30 June.

Resolution 34/51, as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/34/702, adopted by consensus by Assembly on 23 November 1979, meeting 76.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/44 of 8 December 1977,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the state of signatures and ratifications of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 concerning the respect for human rights in armed conflicts, Noting the fact that thus far only a limited number of States have ratified or acceded to the two Protocols,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflict and the need to secure the full observance of human rights in armed conflicts pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Mindful of the need for continued improvement and further expansion of the body of humanitarian rules relating to armed conflict, of which the two Protocols form part,

Noting in this context the importance of the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, whose first meeting was held in September 1979 and whose second meeting is to be held in 1980,

1. Reiterates its call contained in resolution 32/44 that all States should consider without delay the matter of ratifying or acceding to the two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 concerning the respect for human rights in armed conflicts;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly annually, preferably at the beginning of each calendar year, of the state of ratifications of and accessions to the two Protocols with a view to enabling the Assembly to consider the matter at a later stage if it deems it appropriate.

Advisory services in human rights

A United Nations Seminar on the Establishment of Regional Commissions on Human Rights with Special Reference to Africa took place at Monrovia, Liberia, from 10 to 20 September 1979, under the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights. It was attended by participants from States belonging to the Economic Commission for Africa. It adopted a Monrovia Proposal for the setting up of an African Commission on Human Rights as well as other conclusions and recommendations.

Twenty-five fellowships in various aspects of human rights were granted under the programme in 1979 to recipients from the following 25 countries: Austria, Barbados, Botswana, Bulgaria, Cuba, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Gabon, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Mali, Mauritius, the Niger, Peru, Singapore, Sri Lanka, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the Upper Volta, Uruguay and Yemen. Subjects of the fellowships included: protection of human rights in the administration of justice; protection of the rights of the child, with special reference to the rights of the children of refugees; dissemination of information on human rights; advancement of human rights in the formulation and implementation of economic and social legislation; protection of human rights of immigrants and resident aliens; the institution of the ombudsman in the developing countries; and legal aid and legal advice provisions in civil and criminal courts.

The value of the advisory services programme was emphasized by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1979/36 of 10 May 1979, containing a number of recommendations designed to promote and encourage human rights (see p. 848). The Council reaffirmed that the programme should be maintained and developed.

The Commission on Human Rights decided on 14 March to postpone consideration of the advisory programme until its 1980 session. Its Sub-Commission on Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 5 September, drew the attention of the Governments of Equatorial Guinea and Nicaragua to the programme.

The Commission, the Council and the General Assembly took decisions with regard to two future seminars within the programme's framework. On 14 March, the Commission invited the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of organizing a seminar on the rights of the child in the light of international instruments concerning human rights and questions of their implementation and progressive development (see p. 863). On 10 May, the Council, by decision 1979/30, endorsed a Commission recommendation that a seminar be held in 1980 on the effects of the existing unjust international economic order on the economies of the developing countries, and the obstacle this represented for the implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms. On 23 November, the Assembly, in resolution 34/46, requested the Secretary-General to give priority to the holding of this seminar in 1980. (For further details, see p. 858; for page references to texts of decision 1979/30 and resolution 34/46, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

By resolution 34/171 of 17 December, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Monrovia Seminar had been held and had adopted a proposal for setting up an African Commission on Human Rights. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to explore with States, in areas where regional arrangements did not exist, the possibility of holding a seminar as soon as possible under the advisory services programme to discuss methods for promoting and protecting human rights. (For details, see p. 854; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Human rights of prisoners and detainees

The United Nations continued work during 1979 on four proposed international instruments to safeguard the human rights of detained or imprisoned persons, studied means of dealing with the disappearance of persons, especially after detention or imprisonment, and considered proposals for new studies on human rights in the administration of justice.

Standard-setting in this area concentrated on: a draft convention on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, several articles of which were approved by a working group of the Commission on Human Rights; a draft body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment, which the Economic and Social Council transmitted to States for their comments; and a draft Code of Medical Ethics, also transmitted for comments following its endorsement by the Executive Board of the World Health Organization (WHO). In addition, the General Assembly adopted a Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials (see p. 771).

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities proposed a procedure for United Nations consideration of complaints pertaining to the disappearance of persons. It also proposed for future study two topics relating to the administration of justice. The Assembly adopted a resolution on the legal remedies known as amparo in Latin American legal codes and habeas corpus in Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, calling attention to their importance in ensuring the liberty of persons.

Draft convention on torture and other inhuman treatment

A working group of the Commission on Human Rights, open to all its members, continued work in February and March 1979 on a draft convention on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Preparation of the draft convention had been requested by the General Assembly in 1977.³⁹

The work began in a pre-sessional working group which met from 5 to 7 February before the Commission's 1979 session, as authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1978. It continued in a sessional working group which the Commission set up on 13 February and which met between 23 February and 12 March. The Chairman/Rapporteur was Nina Sibal (India).

The working group based its work on a draft submitted by Sweden, which was a revised version of a text that country had submitted to the Commission in 1978. The group approved several articles, including a definition of torture and paragraphs prohibiting the invocation of exceptional circumstances to justify torture and requiring prison officials to be educated regarding the prohibition against torture. It failed to reach agreement on a clause prohibiting States from expelling or extraditing persons to a State where they were in danger of being tortured.

The Commission recommended on 14 March that the Economic and Social Council authorize a meeting of a working group for one week prior to the Commission's 1980 session to complete work on the draft convention. The Council approved this recommendation by resolution 1979/35 of 10 May, adopted without vote, after the Second (Social) Committee had approved it on 4 May by 39 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions. Poland said it had abstained in the vote because it saw no reason to accord special priority to the subject; the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR said the topic could be dealt with during the Commission's session.

Reports by the Secretary-General

The Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session two reports on action taken by Governments to implement the Assembly's 1975 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.⁴¹ The reports were follow-ups, requested by the Assembly in 1978,⁴² to earlier reports on the same subject.

The first report contained replies by 19 Governments to a United Nations questionnaire requesting information on steps they had taken, including legislative and administrative measures, to put into practice the principles of the Declaration. The respondents were Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Haiti, Hungary, India, Iran, Iraq, Japan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mali, Malta, Morocco, Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, and Turkey.

The second report contained the texts of declarations by 12 States—Barbados, Democratic Yemen, India, Japan, Mauritius, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Senegal, Spain and Yugoslavia—to the effect that they would comply with the Declaration and implement it through legislation and other effective measures. The Assembly had called for such unilateral declarations in 1977, and this was the second in a series of annual reports requested by it at that time.⁴³

Action by the General Assembly

On 17 December 1979, without a vote, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/167, dealing with the draft convention against torture and implementation of the Declaration on the subject. The Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee recommended this action without a vote on 5 November, by approving a draft resolution sponsored by Costa Rica, Greece, India, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and Uganda.

⁴⁵ See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 719, resolution 32/64 of 8 December 1977.

By this resolution, the Assembly:

- (a) took note with satisfaction of the significant progress made by the Commission on Human Rights in drafting a convention on torture, welcomed the decision to have a working group complete work on the draft prior to the Commission's 1980 session, and requested the Commission to continue to give high priority to completing the draft;
- (b) called for additional replies to the questionnaire on implementation of the Declaration against torture, and requested the Secretary-General to submit such information to the Commission, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Caracas, Venezuela, 1980); and
- (c) invited Member States which had not done so to submit unilateral declarations against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Assembly informed in annual reports.

In addition to accepting a drafting change suggested by Morocco, the sponsors orally added to their text a phrase to specify that the information to be submitted to the Commission and other bodies was to be that received in response to the questionnaire on implementation of the Declaration.

In a related action, the Assembly adopted on 17 December a Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials. According to article 5 of this Code, no law enforcement official could inflict, instigate or tolerate any act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, nor could such official invoke superior orders or exceptional circumstances as a justification of torture or mistreatment. (For details, see p. 771; for page reference to text of resolution 34/169 annexing the Code, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Draft body of principle s to protect detaine d or imprisone d person s

At the request of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General, by a note verbale of 15 June 1979, transmitted to Governments, for their comments, a draft body of principles for the protection of all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment. The draft, consisting of 35 principles, was adopted in September 1978 by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.⁴⁴

The draft principles called for humane treatment of prisoners and detainees, controlled by a legal authority and applied without personal distinction. They would outlaw torture and other cruel punishment, and require impartial investigation of complaints about ill-treatment and proper recording of interrogations.

A series of procedural safeguards was provided for, including separate authorities for investigation and detention, the right of self-defence, the right to be informed of charges and rights, the proper recording of arrests, the use of interpreters where needed, and notification to the family of the whereabouts of detainees. Detained persons would be entitled to legal assistance, communication with counsel, family visits, educational materials and medical attention. They could not be compelled to testify against themselves. Convicted criminals would be segregated from other detained persons.

Persons under detention would be entitled to seek relief from a judicial authority on grounds of unlawful detention or inhuman treatment. Deaths and disappearances of detained persons would be subject to investigation by proper authorities and claims for compensation on the part of the family. Detained persons would be presumed innocent until proved guilty, and could be kept in detention pending investigation or trial only on the written order of a proper authority. They would be entitled to trial within a reasonable time and to seek provisional release under reasonable conditions.

The Council's decision to have this draft transmitted to Governments was taken by resolution 1979/34, adopted, without vote on 10 May, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had similarly approved the resolution on 4 May. The resolution originated in the Commission on Human Rights, which approved the text on 14 March.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to solicit the comments of Governments on the draft body of principles and to report to the General Assembly in 1980 so that the Assembly might consider adopting them. In the Second Committee, Hungary, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR expressed the view that the comments should go to the Commission before they were considered by the Assembly.

In another provision of resolution 1979/34, the Council authorized the Sub-Commission to request its Special Rapporteur, Nicole Questiaux (France), to continue her study of the implications for human rights of states of siege or emergency. This authorization had been requested by the Sub-Commission in 1978. 45

The Secretary-General transmitted the text of the draft principles to the Assembly by a note dated 11 September 1979.

In November, during discussion of the Council's report in the Assembly's Third Committee, Sweden introduced a draft resolution sponsored also by Barbados, Bolivia, Colombia, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Jamaica, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Portugal, Senegal, Spain, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Venezuela.

By this text, the Assembly would have stated that the arrest and detention of numerous persons in many parts of the world—on grounds of political or other opinions or convictions or as a result of their trade union activities—often gave rise to serious human rights problems. Recognizing that effective measures should be taken to eliminate these problems, the Assembly would have reiterated the request it had made to Member States in 1977 and 1978⁴⁶ to take measures aimed at securing the release of such persons and ensuring that their fundamental human rights were protected during arrest or detention.

On behalf of the sponsors, Sweden revised a preambular paragraph by which, in the original version, the Assembly would have noted that certain prisoners in those categories might have been duly convicted of common-law offences which justified their detention or imprisonment, or might be detained pending a trial for such offences. The revision added a clause specifying that the convictions it covered were those under legislation that was not contrary to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.47 The purpose of the addition, Sweden said, was to make it clear that the paragraph did not cover offenders against South African apartheid legislation. However, Mauritania, Nigeria and Zambia sought to have the text refer explictly to such legislation, and Barbados, Nigeria and the United Republic of Tanzania withdrew their sponsorship. After consultations, Sweden announced that the sponsors would not press for a vote on the draft resolution.

In other action relating to the rights of political prisoners, the Assembly, by resolution 34/44 of 23 November, demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned because of their struggle for self-determination and independence, as well as full respect for their individual rights (see p. 833). By resolution 34/93 H of 12 December, it again demanded the release of persons detained, imprisoned, restricted or charged under arbitrary repressive laws for their opposition to apartheid (see p. 182).

Draft Code of Medical Ethics

On 17 December 1979, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/168 adopted without vote, requested the Secretary-General to seek comments and suggestions from Member States and organizations on the text of a draft Code of Medical Ethics relevant to the protection of persons under any form of detention or imprisonment against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. To this end, the Assembly asked that Member States, the specialized agencies concerned and interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations be sent a copy of a draft prepared under the auspices of WHO.

This resolution was approved without vote by the Third Committee on 5 November. It was sponsored by Greece, Ireland, the Netherlands and Portugal.

The draft Code had been submitted to the Assembly by WHO, which had been invited by the Assembly in 1974 to prepare such a document. It was intended for use by physicians and other health personnel in a clinical relationship with prisoners or detainees. The six principles in the draft were endorsed by the WHO Executive Board in January 1979.

The first principle was that prisoners and detainees had the same rights as free citizens to the protection of health and the treatment of disease. The participation of physicians in torture, their involvement in any non-medical relationship with prisoners or detainees, their assistance in any interrogation or their certification of prisoners or detainees as fit for punishment that could harm their health were characterized as contraventions of medical ethics (principles II to IV). Physicians' participation in any procedure for restraining prisoners or detainees would not conform to medical ethics unless it was determined by purely medical criteria and was necessary for the health and safety of a prisoner, fellow prisoners or guardians (principle V), and no reason, including public emergency, could be used to justify derogation from the principles (principle VI).

Disappeared persons

At its 1979 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered the question of disappeared persons, as it had been requested to do by the General Assembly. Two draft resolutions were proposed to the Commission, one by Australia and Canada, and one by Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden and the United Kingdom. Algeria, Argentina, Iraq, Panama, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yugoslavia proposed amendments to the latter draft. Following unsuccessful attempts to reach a compromise, the Commission decided to defer consideration of these proposals until 1980.

On 10 May, by resolution 1979/38, adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council requested the Commission and its Sub-Commission to consider the question of disappeared persons at their next sessions as a matter of priority, with a view to making recommendations. The Council also requested the Sub-Commission to consider communications on the subject.

This resolution was recommended on 4 May by the Second Committee, which approved without vote a draft sponsored by Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom. During the discussion, Australia, Canada, Finland, Iraq, Ireland and the Netherlands expressed regret that the Commission had not had sufficient time to deal with such a pressing issue.

The original text, a draft decision, would have had the Council address its request only to the Sub-Commission; it was revised by the sponsors to take into account an oral amendment by Argentina.

On 5 September, following a discussion of what the United Nations could do about reported disappearances of persons in many parts of the world, the Sub-Commission adopted a resolution by which it pointed out that, according to information brought to its notice, enforced or involuntary disappearances continued to occur as a result of excesses on the part of law enforcement or security authorities or similar organizations, warranting urgent reaction by individuals, institutions and Governments. It proposed that the emergency action called for might be entrusted to a group of experts, which would be given all available information for locating such persons and would contact the Governments and families concerned. It requested the Commission on Human Rights to authorize members of the Sub-Commission designated by its Chairman to undertake the task. Pending a decision by the Commission, the Sub-Commission transmitted to the Secretary-General, for whatever action he deemed possible as part of the good offices urged upon him by the Assembly in 1978,50 the lists of missing persons communicated to him by Sub-Commission members.

The Sub-Commission also suggested that, if this phenomenon continued, its extreme gravity would justify envisaging some form of emergency remedy, based on the notion of habeas corpus or other legal protection, designed to induce official organs to devote the necessary means to the search for missing and disappeared persons.

On 7 September, the Sub-Commission designated five of its members to serve on the proposed working group.

On 17 December, by resolution 34/178 on the right of amparo, habeas corpus and similar legal remedies, the General Assembly expressed its conviction that the application of such remedies within the legal system of States was of fundamental importance for clarifying the whereabouts and fate of missing and disappeared persons (see following section).

The questions of disappeared or missing persons in Chile and Cyprus were dealt with separately during 1979. After receiving a report by the Commission's Expert on the Question of the Fate of Missing and Disappeared Persons in Chile, the Assembly, on 17 December, adopted resolution 34/179, by which it urged the Chilean authorities to investigate and clarify the fate of persons reported to have disappeared for political reasons, and invited the Commission further to consider ways of clarifying their whereabouts and fate (see p. 824).

Concerning Cyprus, the Secretary-General, in response to a 1978 Assembly resolution,⁵¹ sought the co-operation of the parties for the establishment of a body to investigate the matter of missing persons (see p. 433).

Human rights in the administration of justice

Amparo, habeas corpus and similar legal remedies

On 17 December 1979, by resolution 34/178, adopted without vote, the General Assembly expressed its conviction that the application within the legal system of States of amparo, habeas corpus or other legal remedies to the same effect was of fundamental importance for protecting persons against arbitrary arrest and unlawful detention, effecting the release of persons detained by reason of their political opinions or trade union activities, and clarifying the whereabouts and fate of missing and disappeared persons. The Assembly called on all Governments to guarantee to persons within their jurisdiction the full enjoyment of the right of amparo, habeas corpus or analogous legal remedies. It decided that an international seminar on the matter would be timely and useful.

The resolution was approved without vote on 5 December by the Third Committee, where it was sponsored by Australia, Canada, El Salvador, Ireland, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. Introducing the draft, and revising it slightly on behalf of the sponsors, the United States said the aim of the proposed seminar would be to impart a broader understanding of these remedies for safeguarding the liberty of persons and their practical application.

Studies on discrimination in the administration of justice

On 5 September 1979, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities recommended that it be authorized to designate one of its members, L. M. Singhvi (India), to prepare in 1980 a report on the independence and impartiality of judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, with a view to avoiding discrimination in the administration of justice and maintaining and safeguarding human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Commission on Human Rights was requested to seek authorization for this study from the Economic and Social Council.

On the same date, the Sub-Commission requested similar authorization for the preparation in 1981 of a study on discriminatory treatment against members of racial, ethnic, religious or linguistic groups at the various levels in the administration of criminal justice proceedings, such as police, military, administrative and judicial investigations, arrest, detention, trial and execution of sentences. The study would also cover ideologies or beliefs which contributed or led to racism. The Special Rapporteur for this study would be Abu Sayeed Chowdhury, Sub-Commission member from Bangladesh.

Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

By resolution 34/169 of 17 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted a Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and recommended to Governments that favourable consideration be given to its use within the framework of national legislation or practice as a body of principles to be observed. Article 2 of the code provided that law enforcement officials were to respect and protect human dignity and uphold the human rights of all persons. (For details, see p. 771; for page reference to text of resolution 34/169, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

and Social Council), draft resolution IX.

Resolution 34/178, as recommended by Third Committee, A/34/829, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1 979, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Mindful, in particular, of article 9, paragraph 4, of the said Covenant, which stipulates that anyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that that court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of his detention and order his release if the detention is not lawful.

Recalling its resolution 32/121 of 16 December 1977, concerning the protection of the human rights of persons who are detained in respect of offences which they have committed, or are suspected of having committed, by reason of their political opinions or convictions,

Recalling also its resolution 33/169 of 20 December 1978, concerning persons arrested or detained for trade union activities, and 33/173 of 20 December 1978 on disappeared persons,

Noting that the year 1979 marks the three hundredth anniversary of the act which in 1679 gave statutory force to the remedy of habeas corpus,

Recalling that, from 15 to 28 August 1961, a seminar on amparo, habeas corpus and other similar remedies was organized by the United Nations at Mexico City, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights,

- 1. Expresses its conviction that the application within the legal system of States of amparo, habeas corpus or other legal remedies to the same effect is of fundamental importancefor:
- (a) Protecting persons against arbitrary arrest and unlawfuldetention;
- (b) Effecting the release of persons who are detained by reason of their political opinions or convictions, including in pursuance of trade union activities;
- (c) Clarifying the whereabouts and fate of missing and disappeared persons;

2. Considers that the use of those remedies may also forestall opportunities for persons exercising power over detainees to engage in torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

3. Calls upon all Governments to guarantee to persons within their jurisdiction the full enjoyment of the right of amparo, habeas corpus or other legal remedies to the same effect, as may be applicable in their legal system;

4. Decides that, in order to extend the global understanding and larger applications of institutions such as amparo, habeas corpus or other legal remedies to the same effect, an international seminar on the matter would be timely and useful;

5. Decides further to consider this question again at its thirty-fifth session.

Other human rights questions

Further promotion and encouragement of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took action during 1979 on several institutional aspects of the promotion and protection of human rights. With regard to United Nations machinery, the Council enlarged the membership of the Commission from 32 to 43 States and authorized it to hold longer annual sessions (resolution 1979/36). The Assembly requested the Commission to give priority in 1981 to a study on co-ordination of human rights activities in the United Nations system (resolution 34/25). It also requested the Secretary-General to consider redesignating the United Nations Secretariat's Division of Human Rights as a Centre for Human Rights (resolution 34/47) and asked the Commission to consider the staff and other resources available to the Division (resolution 34/46). The Assembly also decided to consider again in 1980 the long-discussed proposal to create a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (resolution 34/48). The Council approved guidelines for future editions of the United Nations Yearbook on Human Rights (resolution 1979/37). The Commission requested Governments and the Secretary-General to develop public information activities for human rights.

Regarding institutional matters outside the United Nations system, the Commission and the Assembly invited States to take steps to establish national human rights institutions (resolution 34/49). The Assembly noted with satisfaction the adoption by a United Nations Seminar of a proposal for an African Commission on Human Rights (resolution 34/171).

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities set up a working group to consider ways of encouraging States to adhere to international human rights conventions.

Details of these and related matters follow.

Role and functioning of the Commission on Human Rights

By resolution 1979/36, adopted without vote on 10 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council expanded the membership of the Commission on Human Rights from 32 to 43 States, added interagency co-ordination of human rights activities to the Commission's terms of reference, and authorized it and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to hold longer sessions each year. The Council acted by approving a draft resolution, which a working group of the Commission co-chaired by Nina Sibal (India) and Alioune Sene (Senegal) drew up between 5 February and 14 March, and which the Commission approved on 14 March. The Second (Social) Committee approved it without vote on 4 May.

The Council enlarged the Commission's terms of reference by deciding that that body would assist it in co-ordinating human rights activities in the United Nations system. It noted that the Commission might wish at its 1981 session to set up a working group to make proposals for the coordination of specific human rights activities and programmes, taking account of surveys, to be submitted by United Nations organizations and bodies, of work they were doing in this field. It requested specialized agencies and other bodies in the United Nations system to provide short surveys of their human rights activities and programmes, in order that the Commission might carry out the study the Assembly had requested of it in 1978⁵² on existing modes of coordination, co-operation and communication in human rights in the United Nations system.

The Council authorized the Commission to hold six-week annual sessions, with an additional week for working groups, and noted that in certain circumstances it might need to hold special sessions to complete unfinished business, including the drafting of human rights instruments.

⁵² See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 737, resolution 33/54 of 14 December 1978.

The Council decided that the annual session of the Sub-Commission could be extended to four weeks, and asked it to identify specific areas of its work programme for its concentrated attention. It asked the Commission to continue work on the further promotion and encouragement of human rights, including the question of the Commission's programme and methods of work.

The Council expressed appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to continue rendering good offices in the field of human rights.

The Commission's programme and working methods were also among the matters dealt with in General Assembly resolution 34/46, adopted on 23 November by a recorded vote of 136 to 1, with 7 abstentions. The resolution was approved by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 6 November by a recorded vote, requested by the United States, of 132 to 1, with 9 abstentions, under the title "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms." The draft was sponsored by 36 nations (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and was introduced by Cuba.

By this resolution, the Assembly requested the Commission to continue work on an analysis of the United Nations approach to human rights, including the question of the Commission's programme and working methods. It reiterated its conviction that human rights and fundamental freedoms were indivisible and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to both civil and political, and economic, social and cultural rights, and it reaffirmed the need to eliminate massive and flagrant violations and to encourage standard-setting through international instruments. It emphasized that the right to development was a human right and that equality of opportunity for development was as much a prerogative of nations as of individuals.

The Assembly stated that it recognized the necessity of guaranteeing the right to work, worker participation in management, and the right to education, health and proper nourishment, through adoption of national and international measures, including the establishment of the new international economic order.

The resolution contained a request for priority for a seminar decided on by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 858) concerning the effect of the existing unjust economic order, and for a study on the way in which human rights and fundamental freedoms were affected by current international conditions.

The Secretary-General was asked to provide the Commission with data on the resources that the Secretariat's Division of Human Rights had at its disposal for implementing Assembly resolutions. The Commission was asked to consider those resources and make recommendations in 1980, with a view to improving the working of the Division.

The draft resolution went through two revisions before it was approved in the Committee. The sponsors further agreed to a suggestion by Ireland that the Commission should be asked to "consider" rather than "study" Division resources.

The United States orally proposed several amendments to this text, which the sponsors did not accept. One of them would have changed paragraph 7 to delete worker participation in management as one of the rights cited as necessary to guarantee human rights, and to add "based on respect for human rights" after the reference to the new international economic order. Another amendment would have replaced paragraph 8, emphasizing that the right to development was a human right, by a paragraph emphasizing that the exercise of the right to development implied a reign of peace and the establishment of an international economic order based on respect for human rights. The sponsors also did not accept an oral amendment by the Federal Republic of Germany to add, after the reference to the right to development as a human right, the phrase "as emphasized in the International Covenants on Human Rights."

Another United States amendment would have altered the paragraph on studies of the resources of the Division of Human Rights to request the Secretary-General to fulfil the Council's request to examine, in the light of the Division's increased workload, the question of the staffing and other resources of the human rights sector of the Secretariat, bearing in mind that it would always be at a level allowing it to discharge its duties efficiently. Paragraph 12, on the study of the effects of international conditions on human rights, would have been altered to request the Secretary-General to present in 1980 a study on the nature and extent to which the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms were affected by current international conditions.

After the sponsors declined to accept these amendments, the United States withdrew them, announcing that it would vote against the resolution because the text contained a perception of human rights in which the individual was not the basic social unit and which put the nation ahead of the individual.

Belgium abstained in the vote on the resolution on the ground that it did not achieve a balance between collective and individual rights. A similar point was made by Canada, Denmark and Sweden, although they voted for the resolution. Objections to or reservations on the reference to a right to development were voiced by Belgium, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, which abstained in the vote, and by Japan, which voted in favour. Finland, Ireland, Italy and the Netherlands, which also voted for the resolution, said there was no universally accepted definition of that concept. Belgium, Finland, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom were of the view that worker participation in management did not constitute an internationally recognized human right, and New Zealand said it conflicted with that country's domestic policy. The United Kingdom said no State could fully guarantee the right to work.

Austria, Belgium, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the United Kingdom voiced dissatisfaction with the proposal for a study on human rights and current international conditions.

Italy and the United Kingdom said the organization of the Division of Human Rights was the responsibility of the Secretary-General, and the Commission on Human Rights should not concern itself with the matter.

Review and co-ordination of international human rights programmes

The Commission's role with regard to coordination of human rights activities in the United Nations system was the subject of Assembly resolution 34/25, adopted without vote on 15 November.

By this resolution, approved without vote by the Third Committee on 30 October, the Assembly welcomed the action taken by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1979/36, in regard to the study on coordination the Assembly had requested in 1978⁵³ (see previous subsection). It urged the specialized agencies and other United Nations organs to co-operate in preparing materials for the study, requested the Commission to give priority to completing the study in 1981, and decided to include in the provisional agenda of the Assembly's 1981 session a item on review and coordination, giving it high priority.

This resolution was sponsored by Colombia, Ecuador, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and the United States. Before its approval in the Committee, the sponsors added a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly noted the Council's decision to add system-wide human rights co-ordination to the Commission's terms of reference. Also, to the first operative paragraph, by which the Assembly welcomed the Commission's response to the Assembly's 1978 request for a study, the sponsors added a similar reference to the Council's action in this regard.

Introducing the text, the United States said the sponsors felt that a review might reveal human rights areas that were being neglected and others in which there might be some duplication.

Secretariat services concerned with human rights

In resolution 1979/36 of 10 May 1979, concerned mainly with the role of the Commission on Human Rights (see subsection above), the Economic and Social Council also requested the Secretary-General, in the light of the increased workload of the Division of Human Rights, to examine the staffing and other resources of this sector, bearing in mind that it should always be at a level which would allow it to discharge its duties effectively. By resolution 34/46 of 23 November (summarized in the same subsection) the General Assembly requested the Commission to consider the existing human and other resources of the Division for the implementation of Assembly resolutions, and to make recommendations, through the Council, to the Assembly with a view to improving the Division's work.

The question of Secretariat services concerned with human rights was also the subject of Assembly resolution 34/47, adopted on 23 November by a recorded vote of 103 to 0, with 39 abstentions, following its approval by the Third Committee on 7 November by 86 votes to 0, with 49 abstentions. It was sponsored by Italy.

By this resolution, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to consider redesignating the Division as a Centre for Human Rights. It also invited him to ensure adequate financial and other resources for the Secretariat sector concerned with human rights, in the light of the study of this matter to be conducted by the Commission in 1980 under resolution 34/46. It asked him to report on the matter in 1980.

The initial version of the resolution by Italy would have had the Assembly request the redesignation of the Division as a Centre, to be headed by an Assistant Secretary-General. It also contained a request that the Secretary-General ensure that the place of human rights as one of the most important United Nations programmes be reflected in its percentage share of the budget. Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic proposed amendments that would have had the Assembly request the Commission to examine the feasibility of recommending such a redesignation, and would have dropped the reference to an Assistant Secretary-General as the head of the renamed unit. Also, the mention of budgetary resources would have been changed to speak of a shift of resources already allocated to human rights so that they would go to the most important activities, such as those laid down in a 1977 Assembly resolution on ways to improve enjoyment of human rights.⁵⁴

Italy then revised its text, retaining the request to redesignate the Division as a Centre but dropping references to its executive head and to a percentage of the budget. It orally revised the text again by accepting oral amendments by India, according to which the Secretary-General was asked to consider a redesignation in the light of views expressed in the Commission in 1980, and to report directly to the Assembly rather than through the Commission. Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic withdrew their amendments, which had pertained to the original text.

On the Third Committee's recommendation, approved without vote on 6 November, the Assembly adopted on 23 November, also without vote, decision 34/417, by which it requested the Commission to consider the proposals in resolution 34/47 and take them into due account in formulating its own recommendations to the Assembly. The request that the Commission take these proposals into due account was added on an oral proposal by Italy, accepted by the sponsor, India. It replaced a phrase in the Indian draft by which the Commission would have been asked to consider the views expressed in the Assembly on the proposals.

In the discussion of the Italian resolution, Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Democratic Yemen, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mali, the Syrian Arab Republic and Viet Nam saw no need to change the structure of the Secretariat unit dealing with human rights; for this reason, these States opposed redesignation of the Division as a Centre. In Brazil's view, no organ became more effective through a change of name. Argentina thought that more time and information was needed before a decision could be taken.

Support for upgrading the Division to a Centre headed by an Assistant Secretary-General was expressed by the United Kingdom, which said that it was unjustified to argue that the proposal would threaten national sovereignty or that it was part of a Western propaganda drive. Austria, Finland and Ireland also supported the proposed redesignation. The Netherlands voiced support for strengthening the Division.

Proposal for a High Commissioner for Human Rights

In discussions during 1979 in the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly, opinions continued to be divided about the desirability of creating a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. In resolution 1979/36 of 10 May (see subsection above On role and functioning of the commission on HUMAN RIGHTS), the Economic and Social Council noted that the Commission had been unable to reach agreement on this proposal. Following a discussion in the Third Committee, the Assembly, by resolution 34/48 of 23 November, decided to consider the question again in 1980. This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 72 to 26, with 40 abstentions, after it was approved in the Committee on 7 November by a recorded vote of 60 to 28, with 44 abstentions. The draft resolution was sponsored by Costa Rica and Uganda.

The sponsors revised their original draft to incorporate an oral amendment by Lesotho specifying that the consideration of this question in 1980 would take place under the agenda item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms."

Support for the creation of a post of High Commissioner was expressed by Colombia and the United Kingdom. Among the arguments advanced for the post was that such an official would have to play a conciliatory role and work on the basis of mutual co-operation, rather than interfering in countries' internal affairs.

Hungary, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam spoke against further consideration of the matters. Viet Nam remarked that the continuation of human rights violations was not due to a lack of appropriate United Nations structures, and that the establishment of additional posts and bodies would only add to bureaucracy. Brazil doubted the usefulness of considering the matter in 1980, though it should be dealt with from time to time until conditions were favourable for taking it further.

India proposed that the draft resolution by Costa Rica and Uganda be referred to the Commission along with the proposals contained in resolution 34/47 (see preceding subsection, decision 34/417), but deleted reference to the two-nation text before its proposal was adopted.

During this discussion in the Third Committee, Canada introduced and later withdrew a draft resolution that would have had the Assembly invite the Secretary-General to appoint a Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, at the level of Under-Secretary-General. This official, who would be an eminent person of international stature, would carry out human rights tasks, including good offices functions, assigned to him by the Secretary-General, and would be provided with staff and funds to discharge the assigned duties.

Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic proposed amendments to this draft, according to which the Secretary-General would be asked to consider the possibility of appointing such an official provided that there was general agreement among Member States. Also, the reference to human rights tasks and good offices would have been deleted.

In presenting the proposal, Canada said it differed from the plan to establish a post of High Commissioner in that a Special Representative would not be assigned duties which exceeded the Secretary-General's competence and thus could not interfere in the internal affairs of States. Supporting the proposal, the United Kingdom made a similar point, saying that such an official would be an international civil servant whose appointment would allay fears regarding a High Commissioner's excessive independence.

Opposition to the proposal was expressed by Democratic Yemen, Hungary and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. They said the Special Representative's proposed mandate was not clearly defined, might overlap existing machinery and might generate controversy; they favoured instead the use of existing machinery. Benin said the mandate of any such post should be carefully defined to avoid the danger that a Special Representative might become an instrument for politically motivated manipulation against small countries.

In withdrawing the proposal, Canada said there did not appear to be sufficiently broad agreement for its adoption at the 1979 session.

Yearbook on Human Rights

By resolution 1979/37, adopted without vote on 10 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council approved guidelines for the contents and format of future editions of the United Nations Yearbook on Human Rights. This resolution was approved without vote by the Second Committee on 4 May, substantially in the form recommended by the Commission on Human Rights on 14 March. The original draft was submitted by the Commission's Ad Hoc Committee on Periodic Reports on Human Rights, following a 1978 request by the General Assembly that the Commission review the objectives, contents and format of the Yearbook with a view to making recommendations on the need for changes.⁵⁵

By this resolution, the Council decided that the part of the Yearbook devoted to national developments would contain extracts of reports by States under international instruments and of reports by States to the United Nations under existing periodic-report procedures. States would no longer be invited to submit separate contributions for the Yearbook, though they would remain free to do so.

According to the approved guidelines, annexed to the resolution, the Yearbook would henceforth consist of three parts, dealing with national developments, activities of international supervisory bodies and other international developments. The first part would consist of material reflecting legislative, administrative, judicial and other national measures and court decisions, selected from government reports submitted under international human rights instruments, periodic reports to the United Nations on national human rights developments, or contributions submitted by States specifically for the Yearbook. Part two would consist of extracts of the reports of supervisory bodies to their parent organs, and the decisions, recommendations and comments of those bodies in connexion with their examination of reports by Governments and specialized agencies, as well as resolutions of parent bodies. Part three would consist of an account of other international developments and activities in the United Nations system concerning human rights.

The resolution incorporated an amendment by the USSR, approved without vote by the Second Committee, which added the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid⁵⁶ to the list of instruments involved in the reporting procedure. The Committee rejected two amendments by the USSR to the guidelines. One of these, which would have changed the title of part two of the Yearbook to limit its scope to activities of the supervisory bodies established pursuant to international instruments relating to human rights, was rejected by 11 votes in favour to 12 against, with 23 abstentions. The second amendment, which would have deleted references to reports by specialized agencies, was rejected by 10 votes in favour to 13 against, with 25 abstentions. Explaining its position, the Ukrainian SSR said it had not opposed the text on the understanding that material in the Yearbook relating to individual countries would be taken from official government reports and would be approved by the States concerned.

Public information activities in the field of human rights

On 14 March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution urging all $^{\rm 55}$ See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 738, resolution 33/171 of 20 December 1978. $^{\rm 56}$ See Y.U.N., 1973, p. 103, resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, annexing text of Convention.

Governments to consider action to give publicity to United Nations activities in the field of human rights, with particular reference to the Commission's work. It requested the Secretary-General further to develop public information activities in the field of human rights, and to present to the Commission in 1980 a summary of such activities and proposals for their further development. It also requested him to utilize United Nations information centres and the Department of Public Information to publicize United Nations human rights activities and to disseminate the International Bill of Human Rights57 in as many languages as possible. Finally, it decided to consider in 1980 ways of developing public information activities in the field of human rights.

In resolution 34/45, relating to the International Covenants on Human Rights and adopted on 23 November, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in preparing the report on public information activities in human rights requested by the Commission, to bear in mind the question of improving publicity for the work of the Human Rights Committee. (For details, see p. 855; for page reference to text of resolution 34/45, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

National human rights institutions

During 1979, the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly invited all Member States to take appropriate steps for the establishment of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights. They were invited, in doing so, to bear in mind guidelines on the structure and functioning of such institutions adopted by the international Seminar on National and Local Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, held at Geneva in September 1978 under the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights. 58

A Commission resolution on this subject was adopted on 14 March. The Commission endorsed the Seminar's guidelines, requested the Secretary-General to transmit them to States and organizations, and invited Governments to inform the Commission, through him, of the extent of national human rights institutions. States were requested to ask for regular reports from these bodies and to transmit information on their activities to the Commission, through the Secretary-General, once every three years, beginning in the first half of 1981. The Secretary-General was asked to compile the information received and submit it to the Assembly in 1981 and to the Commission every three years.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/49, adopted without vote on 23 November, emphasized the importance of the integrity and independence of national human rights institutions and drew attention to the constructive role which national non-governmental organizations could play in their work. It requested the Secretary-General, in reporting to the Assembly in 1981 as requested by the Commission, to describe existing types of national institutions as reflected in government reports and other sources, such as the papers of the 1978 Seminar and the July 1979 Seminar on Recourse Procedures Available to Victims of Racial Discrimination and Activities to be Undertaken at the Regional Level (see p. 800).

This resolution was sponsored by Australia, Bangladesh, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Mauritius, Morocco, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and the Syrian Arab Republic. It was approved by consensus by the Third Committee on 9 November, as revised by the sponsors to take account of suggestions by Guinea and the United Kingdom. Paragraph 2, emphasizing the importance of the integrity and independence of national institutions, was included on the proposal of the United Kingdom, with the addition by the sponsors of the phrase "in accordance with national legislation." The sponsors also added the adjective "national" before "non-governmental organizations" before accepting a United Kingdom amendment to include a paragraph drawing attention to the role such organizations could play in the work of national institutions. On a proposal by Guinea, the sponsors revised paragraph 1, which originally would have had the Assembly urge all Member States where national human rights institutions did not exist to take appropriate steps to establish them, and they added a preambular paragraph recalling that, in resolution 34/46 of 23 November (see subsection above on ROLE AND FUNCTIONING OF THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS), the Assembly had emphasized the need to create conditions for the full promotion and protection of human rights.

As recommended by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council, the Assembly decided by resolution 34/49 to include as a subitem in its 1981 provisional agenda the topic of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, and recommended that Member States associate representatives of their national institutions with the contents of the debate on this subitem. This recommendation was adopted by the Council without vote on 10 May as decision 1979/38, following its approval by the Second Committee on 4 May, also without vote.

Regional human rights arrangements

A United Nations Seminar on the Establishment of Regional Commissions on Human Rights with Special Reference to Africa, held at Monrovia, Liberia, from 10 to 20 September 1979 under the programme of advisory services in human rights, concluded that it would be desirable to establish an African Commission on Human Rights as soon as possible. Accordingly, it requested the Secretary-General to transmit its proposal to the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

Such a body, according to the Monrovia Proposal, would conduct studies, promote education and teaching, organize meetings, disseminate information, encourage national organizations, advise Governments, study alleged violations and their causes, provide good offices, make recom $mendations \, to \, OAU \, and \, formulate \, standards \, for \, na$ tional legislation. It would consist of 16 experts from different States serving in their personal capacity, to be elected by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government.

The Seminar was attended by participants from 30 African States. The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in November a report on the Seminar, including the Monrovia Proposal and its conclusions and recommendations.

By resolution 34/171, adopted without a vote on 17 December, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that the Seminar had met and had adopted the Monrovia Proposal for an African Commission on Human Rights. Expressing hope that the Seminar's recommendations would be given due consideration by Governments and organizations, the Assembly reiterated its appeal to States in areas where regional human rights arrangements did not exist to consider agreements to establish them. It again requested the Secretary-General to explore with the States in the regions concerned the possibility of holding a seminar as soon as possible to discuss methods for promoting and protecting human rights, and it asked him to report back in 1980.

This resolution, sponsored by 26 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved without vote by the Third Committee on 5 December. In introducing it, Nigeria said regional arrangements would make it possible to study human rights questions with greater frankness and without the climate of suspicion which generally characterized foreign intervention. Liberia supported the proposal for an African Commission on Human Rights. Sri Lanka, another sponsor, offered its capital as host city for a future seminar at which measures could be considered for formalizing regional arrangements in Asia and the Pacific.

On the other hand, Guinea saw no need to establish such a body in Africa, which had always shown itself to be sufficiently responsible in the matter, and Yugoslavia said there was no urgency in organizing seminars on the subject, since States should be left to decide on regional arrangements. Benin regretted that Africa had been singled out in the text, since it was not the only region without a human rights commission. India said it could join in the consensus on the text with the reservation that a regional seminar could be organized only with the agreement of all States in the region.

At the request of Guinea, a separate vote was held in the Committee on paragraph 1, referring to the Monrovia Seminar. It was approved by 82 votes to 1, with 39 abstentions.

Status of international human rights conventions

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided on 5 September 1979 to establish each year a working group of five of its members to meet during Sub-Commission sessions to consider ways of encouraging Governments to adhere to international human rights instruments, such as the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and its Optional Protocol,59 the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 60 the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 61 the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, 62 the 1926 Slavery Convention and the 1953 Protocol amending it, 63 and the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery.64

The Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to ask Governments for information on why they had not adhered to those instruments, explaining any particular difficulties in respect of which the United Nations could assist. The replies would be examined by the new working group, which could, if necessary, invite Government representatives for discussions and clarifications. The Sub-Commission further requested the group to consider, in appropriate cases, what forms of assistance the United Nations could provide to help Governments adhere to the conventions as speedily as possible.

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in September his annual report on the status of adherence to human rights conventions for which he performed depositary functions. It listed 19 instruments and the States which had ratified or acceded to them as of 30 June.

Status of the International Covenants

During 1979, six additional States became party to one or both of the International Covenants on Human Rights adopted by the General Assembly on 16 December 1966. El Salvador, Iceland, India, Japan and Morocco ratified or acceded to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, raising the total number of parties to 63 as of 31 December. Those five States plus the Gambia ratified or acceded to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, raising the total of States parties to 61. Iceland acceded to the Optional Protocol to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which thus had 22 adherents at the end of the year.

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which entered into force on 3 January 1976, had the following States parties at the end of 1979: Australia, Austria, Barbados, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, the Gambia, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lebanon, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which entered into force on 23 March 1976, had been ratified or acceded to by all the above States except Australia and the Philippines. The Optional Protocol to that Covenant, which entered into force on the same date, had the following States as parties: Barbados, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, Iceland, Italy, Jamaica, Madagascar, Mauritius, the Netherlands, Norway, Panama, Senegal, Suriname, Sweden, Uruguay, Venezuela and Zaire.

In addition, Canada and Iceland made declarations during 1979, pursuant to article 41 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee, established under that Covenant, to receive and consider communications by a State party claiming that another State party was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant. This brought to 12 the number of parties to the Covenant which had made such a declaration: Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom. The provisions of article 41 came into force on 28 March 1979, three months after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the tenth declaration, made by New Zealand in December 1978.

By a resolution of 2 March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It again invited all States which had not done so to become parties to the Covenants and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol, and it invited the States parties to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41.

On 5 March, in a resolution on implementation of the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (see p. 797), the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council, while considering the activities during the second half of the Decade, should ensure wider adherence to the Covenants.

In addition, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided on 5 September to establish a sessional working group to consider ways of encouraging Governments to adhere to international human rights instruments, including the Covenants and the Optional Protocol (see p. 854).

After receiving an annual report from the Secretary-General on the status of ratifications, accessions and signatures to the Covenants and the Optional Protocol, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/45, adopted without vote on 23 November, again invited States to become parties to the Covenants and to consider acceding to the Protocol. It requested that a similar report be submitted in 1980. It also urged the Secretary-General to take all possible steps to ensure that the Secretariat's Division of Human Rights was able to assist effectively the Human Rights Committee and the Economic and Social Council in the implementation of their functions under the Covenants, taking into account two Assembly resolutions relating programme planning and activities to budgetary costs and effectiveness.66

The Assembly's resolution also dealt with aspects of implementation of each Covenant (see subsections below).

This resolution was approved without vote on 9 November by the Third Committee, where it was sponsored by Barbados, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Italy, Peru, Uganda, the United Kingdom and Venezuela. Before the sponsors revised it orally, the paragraph concerned with Secretariat services would have had the Assembly urge the Secretary-General to take all possible steps to provide additional staff and services to the Division of Human Rights, including reference services, to enable it to assist effectively the two bodies concerned with implementation of the Covenants.

Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

The Sessional Working Group on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, set up by the Economic and Social Council in 1978 to consider the reports of States parties to the Covenant, 67 held its first session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 17 April to 3 May 1979, devoted to organizational matters. The 15 States making up the Group were appointed by the Council President, and the Council took note of these appointments by decision 1979/14 (which listed the members), adopted without vote on 17 April. (For officers of the Working Group, see APPENDIX III.)

On the Group's recommendation, the Council, without vote on 11 May, adopted resolution 1979/43, setting out the Group's methods of

According to this resolution, the Group would consider reports of States in accordance with the programme established by the Council in 1976.⁶⁸ Under that programme, States were to report in three biennial stages, each stage to deal with a selected group of articles pertaining to particular rights dealt with in the Covenant. Representatives of reporting States might attend the Group's meetings at which their reports were considered, make statements on them and answer questions. The Group would also consider reports by specialized agencies. It could submit general recommendations to the Council, and might also make suggestions with reference to the transmission of national and agency reports to the Commission on Human Rights for study or information, and on the advisability of international measures for implementing the Covenant.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/45 of 23 November (see subsection above), welcomed the information that the Council had finalized arrangements for the consideration of reports under the Covenant and expressed the hope that it would consider them as soon as possible.

In 1979, three additional States—Jamaica, Spain and the Syrian Arab Republic — submitted reports on their implementation of the four articles selected for attention in the first stage of the reporting procedure. Twenty-four States had submitted reports in 1978.⁶⁹ The reports dealt with the rights specified in articles 6 to 9 of the Covenant (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, rights of trade unionists and the right to social security). The International Labour Organisation (ILO) also submitted a report by its Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations of ILO relating to progress achieved in a number of the reporting countries with reference to these articles, and the Philippines submitted additional information by way of comment on a similar report prepared by ILO in 1978. The Secretary-General submitted an analytical summary of the 24 national reports received up to 1 December 1978. All these documents were to be examined by the Working Group in 1980.

In a letter of 21 September 1979, Turkey transmitted a letter to the Secretary-General signed by Rauf R. Denktash as President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, objecting to the contents of the 1978 report to the Council from Cyprus.

Implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

The Human Rights Committee, established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, continued during 1979 to consider reports submitted by States parties to the Covenant on the measures they had taken to implement it. The Committee dealt with reports of Bulgaria, Chile, Cyprus, Finland, Poland, Romania, Spain, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the United Kingdom.

In the case of Chile, the Committee found, as stated by its Chairman on 26 April, that the information provided on the enjoyment of human rights and the impact of the state of emergency in that country was still insufficient, and it invited the Government to furnish specific information on restrictions applicable to rights and freedoms during the current state of emergency. Chile considered that it had complied with its obligations under the Covenant but said it was prepared to submit a new report.

For the first time, the Committee concluded consideration of a communication submitted to it under the Optional Protocol to the Covenant by adopting final views. This procedure permits individuals who claim that their rights have been violated and who have exhausted all available domestic remedies to submit written communications to the Committee for consideration. In the case in question, the Committee found on 15 August that the rights of three detained Uruguayans had been violated by virtue of the fact that they had been denied the safeguards of fair trial, denied visits by any family member and, in one case, because the victim was tortured during detention, resulting in permanent physical damage. It expressed the view that Uruguay was obliged under the Covenant to provide effective remedies to the victims. The case was brought by Moriana Hernández Valentini de Bazzano, and the findings referred to the circumstances of detention of her husband, Luis Maria Bazzano Ambrosini, her stepfather, Jose Luis Massera, and her mother, Martha Valentini de Massera.

On 26 October, the Committee adopted its conclusions in a second case, finding that the rights of the Uruguayan Edgardo Dante Santullo Valcada had been violated because he had been denied an effective remedy to challenge his arrest and detention. It expressed the view that Uruguay was obliged to provide effective remedies, including compensation.

The Committee had a total of 16 communications before it under this procedure at the time of its final session of 1979.

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 12 October, Uruguay transmitted a note of 17 September from its Permanent Mission to the United Nations Office and the Specialized Agencies at Geneva, denying the validity of the Committee's findings in the first case. The note said that the three persons concerned had been sentenced on charges of subversive association, that they had not been tortured, that medical attention was available at all times in Uruguayan detention establishments and that the case of Mr. Massera was still before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, rendering it inadmissible before the Committee.

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 1 November, Panama transmitted a letter of 20 October from Mrs. Hernández de Bassano, refuting the arguments advanced by Uruguay and stating that the Committee's decision should be complied with.

On other aspects of its work, the Committee adopted further rules of procedure concerning article 41 of the Covenant, on inter-State complaints, and it expressed the wish to hold some of its sessions in developing countries in order to publicize the Covenant and its own activities.

The Committee held three sessions during the year: its sixth, at United Nations Headquarters, from 9 to 27 April; its seventh, at Geneva, from 30 July to 17 August; and its eighth, at Geneva, from 15 to 26 October.

On 3 August, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/87, adopted without vote, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the Committee's report on its first two 1979 sessions directly to the General Assembly.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/45 of 23 November (see subsection above), urged States which had been requested by the Committee to provide additional information to comply with that request. It requested the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of holding sessions of the Committee in developing countries and to report to the Assembly in 1980. It also asked him, in preparing a report for the Commission on Human Rights on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights (see p. 852), to bear in mind the question of improving publicity for the Committee's work.

Realization of economic, social and cultural rights

A seminar and two new studies on different aspects of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights were authorized or proposed during 1979.

On 2 March, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution by which it reiterated that the right to development was a human right and that equality of opportunity for development was as much a prerogative of nations as of individuals. Reaffirming the right of all nations to pursue freely their economic and social development, the Commission declared that the denial of the right to self-determination, foreign occupation, colonialism, apartheid, racism and racial discrimination constituted an impediment to social and economic progress.

Recognizing the need for a more equitable and just international economic order, it expressed concern that qualitative and human rights conditions were being imposed in bilateral and multilateral trade policies to perpetuate the existing trade structure. It called on all States to take steps to remove all obstacles to the full realization of economic, social and cultural rights, and to promote all actions to secure their enjoyment.

On a recommendation of the Commission as contained in this resolution, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/30, requested the Secretary-General to organize in 1980, in the framework of the United Nations programme of advisory services in human rights, a seminar on the effects of the existing unjust international economic order on the economies of the developing countries, and the obstacle that it represented for the implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly the right to enjoy adequate standards of living proclaimed in article 25 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The Council adopted this decision on 10 May by 40 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions, the Second Committee having approved it on 4 May by 36 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions. In explanation of their votes, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, the Netherlands and New Zealand expressed doubts about the wording of parts of the Commission's resolution on this topic.

On 23 November, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to give priority to the holding of this seminar in 1980. This request was contained in resolution 34/46, on alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Also by this resolution, the Assembly recognized the need to guarantee certain economic, social and cultural rights, and emphasized that the right to development was a human right (see p. 849).

In explanation of vote on this resolution, Ireland recalled its abstention in the Council's vote with regard to the seminar, while the United Kingdom said it did not support the holding of a seminar based on a premise which it did not accept.

By decision 1979/29, adopted without vote on 10 May, the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission, invited the Secretary-General to prepare a study of the regional and national dimensions of the right to development as a human right, paying particular attention to the obstacles encountered by developing countries in their efforts to secure the enjoyment of that right. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and other competent specialized agencies were to cooperate on the study, which was to be made available for the Commission at its 1981 session. This decision was approved by the Second Committee on 4 May, also without vote.

The Commission and the Council envisaged this study as a follow-up to an earlier one by the Secretary-General, presented to the Commission in 1979, on the international dimensions of the right to development as a human right in relation with other human rights based on international co-operation, including the right to peace, taking into account the requirements of the new international economic order and fundamental human needs. The earlier study had been requested in 1977.

In its resolution of 2 March 1979 proposing the new study, the Commission also requested the Secretary-General to transmit the earlier one to Governments and organizations for their comments. It invited the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s) to pay due attention to the integration of human rights in the development process, and it stressed the duty of all States, jointly and severally, to create the necessary conditions for realization of the right to development.

On 5 September, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities requested authorization to appoint one of its members, Raúl Ferrero Costa (Peru), as Special Rapporteur for a study on the new international economic order and the promotion of human rights. The Sub-Commission proposed that the author take account of the conclusions of the 1980 seminar on the effects of the existing economic order, and also that he examine the effect, if any, that the new international economic order had on the implementation of some human rights. The Sub-Commission would receive a preliminary report on this study in 1980 and the final report in 1982. The Sub-Commission's proposal was to be considered by the Commission and the Council in 1980.

Allegation s of infringement s of trade union rights in South Afric a

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights submitted a comprehensive report in January 1979 on violations of human rights in southern Africa (see p. 811). A part of that report, pertaining to infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, was transmitted separately to the Economic and Social Council in March. The report, prepared pursuant to a 1978 request of the Council, ⁷² analysed information obtained by the Group in a 1978 mission to Africa, and from other sources, on suppression of the right to organize trade unions, and persecution of workers because of their activities, especially as a consequence of strike action.

The Working Group reached the conclusion that the position of workers, particularly agricultural workers, was increasingly precarious. The workers' attempts to organize themselves were stifled and any initiative in that field met with severe exemplary punishment. The Group noted that serious reservations had been expressed about the European Economic Community's code of conduct, which recommended to companies operating in South Africa that they apply certain minimum and fair wages, employment and training opportunities, and workers' rights. It cited the view of those concerned that the real solution lay in halting investments in South Africa. Moreover, no hope was placed in the Wiehahn Commission, set up to consider ways of reforming industrial relations in South Africa.

On 10 May, the Council, noting with appreciation the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group, adopted without vote resolution 1979/39, by which it requested the Group to continue to study the question and to report to the Commission on Human Rights and the Council when it considered it appropriate. The Council demanded the immediate and complete abolition of all restrictions on the trade union rights of African workers in southern Africa, including migrant workers, and the immediate and unconditional recognition of all existing African trade unions.

This resolution was sponsored by Algeria, Argentina, Barbados, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Ghana, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Lesotho, Mauritania, Morocco, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Philippines, Senegal, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey and Zambia. It was approved by the Second Committee on 4 May, also without vote.

Human rights of migrant workers

The protection of migrant workers was the subject of resolutions adopted in 1979 by the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. The Assembly decided to begin work in 1980 on an international convention on the subject.

On 14 March, the Commission adopted a resolution suggesting action by States and organizations to safeguard the rights of migrant workers. It invited all States to work to create conditions that would avoid discrimination against migrant workers, take measures to safeguard their rights under domestic legislation, and apply international instruments or conclude new ones to improve the conditions of such workers and eliminate the illicit traffic in foreign labour. The Governments of countries hosting migrant workers were invited to assure them and their families equal treatment in the labour field, ensure that they were familiar with and could avail themselves of all their rights, promote normalization of family life through family reunification, give special attention to the adjustment of migrant workers' children to the society of the host country while preserving their national values through the educational system, and implement social development policies for such workers similar to those for citizens. States where such workers originated were invited to protect them and inform them fully of their rights and obligations. Host countries and countries of origin were invited to co-operate through agreements and to pay special attention to smooth reintegration of voluntarily returning workers in their country of origin.

Addressing itself to organizations in the United Nations system, the Commission recommended that they intensify action in this field. It requested those organizations and others outside the system, as well as States, to communicate any agreements they formulated in this sphere.

Finally, the Commission decided to supervise the application of the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to all migrant workers. It said it would do this with the assistance of ILO, UNESCO, the World Health Organization (WHO), other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental bodies. It decided to give priority at its 1980 session to the protection of migrant workers' children against discrimination, human rights violations resulting from illicit traffic in such workers, and their access to legal remedies.

This resolution was prepared by a working group open to all United Nations Member States which met at Geneva in December 1978 with the authorization of the Economic and Social Council.⁷³

The Council adopted two resolutions on migrant workers on 9 May. Resolution 1979/12, containing a request for a report by the Secretary-General on the welfare of migrant workers, was adopted on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development (see p. 754). Resolution 1979/13, on human rights aspects, was adopted by a recorded vote of 39 to 0, with 6 abstentions, after it was approved by the Second Committee on 4 May by a recorded vote, requested by Mexico, of 41 to 0, with 7 abstentions.

By the latter resolution, the Council requested the Secretary-General to invite ILO, UNESCO, WHO and other interested United Nations bodies to continue co-operating towards the preparation by the General Assembly of an international convention on protection of the rights of all migrant workers. He was asked to report in 1980 on the results of such co-operation, and also to communicate to Member States in 1979 the results of consultations which the Assembly had requested him to undertake⁷⁴ in order to explore the possibility of drawing up a convention.

This resolution was sponsored by Algeria, Barbados, Jamaica, Mexico, Morocco, Pakistan, the Philippines, Senegal and Turkey. It was adopted with an oral revision made by the sponsors in the Committee, adding a preambular phrase stating that the problems of migrant workers were a cause for serious concern.

Countries which abstained in the vote expressed doubts about the desirability of having the Council take a decision with regard to an international convention on migrant workers before the Assembly decided on such a course. New Zealand voted for the text in the Council but reiterated its misgivings on this point. Italy, which voted for the resolution, and France and the Federal Republic of Germany, which abstained, said they could not associate themselves with the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the 1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, 75 referred to in a preambular paragraph. Venezuela said it would have liked to see recognition of the unilateral efforts by some host countries to improve the social and working conditions of migrant workers.

In another context, by decision 1979/33 of 10 May on human rights violations in southern Africa, the Council recommended that the appropriate United Nations bodies, in consultation with the competent specialized agencies and particularly ILO, should take the initiative of preparing an international convention on the rights of migrant workers. It also recommended that special assistance be granted to countries neighbouring South Africa to enable them act effectively against the South African system of exploiting migrant workers. The Commission on Human Rights had adopted the same recommendations on 6 March. (See p. 812; for page reference to text of decision 1979/33, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

As requested by the Council in May, the Secretary-General presented a report to the Assembly at its 1979 regular session on the results of his sounding of States and United Nations organizations concerning the possibility of drawing up an international convention on the rights of migrant workers. Analysing the comments of 32 States and three specialized agencies, he said that support for a global convention was expressed by Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Cyprus, El Salvador, the German Democratic Republic, Italy, Mexico, Morocco, Panama, the Philippines, Portugal, Somalia, Togo, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia, while Barbados and the United Republic of Cameroon said they would have no objection to such an instrument. On the other hand, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany and Sweden felt that it would be premature to choose between the wider acceptance of existing instruments and the preparation of a new one, while the United Kingdom expressed concern that a new convention might overlap or conflict with existing ones, and Belgium and Swaziland thought priority should be accorded to gaining full acceptance of instruments already drawn up. Observations were also received from Greece, Honduras, Mauritius, Senegal, Thailand and nine United Nations bodies.

On 17 December, by resolution 34/172, the Assembly decided, by a recorded vote of 118 to 0, with 19 abstentions, to create at its 1980 regular session a working group open to all United Nations Member States to elaborate an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families. The resolution was sponsored by Algeria, Barbados, Benin, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Kenya, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Nicaragua, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Yemen and Yugoslavia. The Third Committee approved it on 30 November by a recorded vote of 101 to 0, with 17 abstentions.

The Committee rejected, by a recorded vote of 17 in favour to 65 against, with 34 abstentions, an oral amendment by Sweden to change the mandate of the working group by having it determine the need for adopting additional measures to improve the situation of migrant workers and their families and to elaborate an appropriate instrument if necessary. Another Swedish amendment would have replaced a reference in a provision welcoming the large number of replies "favouring" a convention by one which spoke of replies "concerning" a convention; it was rejected by a recorded vote of 18 in favour to 63 against, with 34 abstentions. Following these votes, Sweden withdrew two further amendments, requesting Secretariat support for the working group and inviting participation in it by international organizations; Sweden said these were dependent on the proposed change in the working group's mandate.

The Swedish amendments were opposed in the discussion by Kenya, Mexico, the Philippines, Tunisia, Turkey and Yugoslavia, which pointed out that the changes would alter the substance of the proposal and erode efforts to prepare a convention. The amendments were supported by France and the Federal Republic of Germany, which said there were no human rights that belonged exclusively to one group.

Among the countries abstaining on the resolution, Belgium and Finland thought it might be better to promote ratification of existing ILO conventions rather than to prepare a new one. The Netherlands said it was not in the interests of migrant workers for the Assembly to prepare yet another instrument to protect their rights when ILO had undertaken to review existing conventions. Canada, Denmark and the United States also said that ILO was the appropriate organization to deal with the subject, and Austria said the Assembly should await the results of that organization's review. Norway felt that the procedure set out in the resolution was inappropriate. The United Kingdom was not convinced of the need for a new convention, while New Zealand doubted the wisdom of starting to draft such a text and Australia favoured a cautious approach. Ireland, which voted in favour, expressed regret that the sponsors had been inflexible about the Swedish amendments, which Ireland regarded as reasonable.

On 17 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/170, proposing measures aimed at implementing the right to education. The resolution, sponsored by 41 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was recommended by consensus by the Third Committee on 5 December.

By this resolution, the Assembly invited all States to consider adopting legislative, administrative and other measures, including material guarantees, to ensure full implementation of the right to universal education through such measures as free and compulsory primary education, universal and gradually free-of-charge secondary education, equal access to all educational facilities and access of the young to science and culture. It appealed to all States, in particular the developed countries, to support through fellowships and other means the education and training efforts of the developing countries.

The Director-General of UNESCO was requested to present reports—preliminary in 1980 and final in 1981—containing information on UNESCO'S education and training activities for developing countries, views and suggestions on the need for and the possibility of reinforcing UNESCO programmes and activities in this area, information on the difficulties and obstacles encountered in implementing the right to education, particularly in developing countries, and conclusions on action to be taken.

The resolution, introduced by Romania, was twice revised by its sponsors before it was approved. The final version, incorporating oral changes, omitted a provision in the earlier drafts by which the Assembly would have requested States and specialized agencies to transmit their opinions and suggestions on the establishment of a programme within the United Nations system for the development of education and training of national personnel for the developing countries. The earlier drafts also contained a request for UNESCO'S views and suggestions on this matter and for a report from that organization on implementation of the right to education throughout the world, including conclusions on practical actions that could be taken to develop education and training in the developing countries.

The sponsors also agreed to an oral suggestion by Brazil to alter a phrase in paragraph 3, stipulating one of the elements in UNESCO'S final report. Originally requested was information on difficulties and obstacles obstructing full implementation of the right to education in developing countries, "in conformity with the requirements of their over-all progress and development;" the phrase was modified to read "in conformity with their own requirements of over-all progress and development."

Following approval of the draft in the Committee, Mali expressed reservations about the paragraph by which the Assembly invited States to consider measures to ensure full implementation of the right to universal education. Mali stated that it must be left to States to determine their own educational priorities, having regard to their resources.

Human right s and scientifi c and technologica l development s

On 14 March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone to its 1980 session consideration of the question of human rights and scientific and technological developments.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on 5 September requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report with a view to formulating guidelines regarding the medical measures that might properly be employed in the treatment of persons detained on the grounds of mental illhealth, and procedures for determining whether adequate grounds existed for detaining such persons and applying such medical measures.

Thirtiet h anniversar y of the Universa l Declaratio n of Human Rights Reports on the observance on 10 December 1978 of the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption by the General Assembly of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁷⁶ were presented by the Secretary-General to the Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights. The report to the Assembly, dated 19 November 1979, summarized information received from 23 States: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Greece, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Japan, Kuwait, Malta, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR.

Draft principle s on equality and non-discrimination in respect of person s born out of wedloc k

On 10 May 1979, by decision 1979/42, the Economic and Social Council decided without vote to take note of a note by the Secretary-General containing comments of Governments on a set of draft general principles on equality and non-discrimination in respect of persons born out of wedlock, drawn up in 1976 by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The Council had requested the comments in 1977.

The Council acted on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which approved the decision on 4 May, without objection, at the oral suggestion of its Chairman, who noted that no proposal had been submitted with regard to the documents.

The 16 States whose replies were circulated in 1979 were Barbados, Botswana, Burma, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Hungary, India, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Kuwait, Luxembourg, Portugal and Spain. Thirty-eight other Governments had replied in 1978.7

Slavery, includin g slavery-lik e practice s of apartheid and colonialis m

On 14 March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights decided to defer to its 1980 session consideration of two resolutions on slavery adopted in September 1978 by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The Sub-Commission had proposed further action by the United Nations to study the problem.75

The Sub-Commission's Working Group on slavery held its fifth session at Geneva on 16, 17 and 24 August 1979. In its report, to be submitted to the Sub-Commission at its 1980 session, the Group made recommendations for action by Governments, United Nations agencies, the Sub-Commission and the Secretariat on the questions of debt bondage, slavery and the slave trade, exploitation of child labour, sale of children, the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism, traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others.

Exploitatio n of child labour

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered a new agenda item on the exploitation of child labour at its 1979 session, adopting two resolutions on 5 September.

one of these resolutions, the Sub-Commission decided to review the question annually and requested its Working Group on slavery to report each year on this and other matters. It requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Governments concerned, for information and comments, reports submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1979 on the exploitation of child labour in some countries. It urgently appealed to all Governments to ensure the enactment and proper enforcement of adequate legislation to protect working children, and to make consideration of the needs of working children an important aspect of their economic and social planning. It recommended that the Commission on Human Rights take into account the documents and debates of the Sub-Commission and the Working Group in drafting a convention on the rights of the child (see following section). Finally, it requested all bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate in eliminating the exploitation of child labour, and it addressed a number of specific requests to ILO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, UNESCO, WHO, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations University.

In its other resolution on this topic, the Sub-Commission requested authorization from the Economic and Social Council to appoint one of the Sub-Commission's members, Abdelwahab Bouhdiba (Tunisia), as a Special Rapporteur to prepare a report on the exploitation of child labour, taking into account all the economic, social, cultural and psychological dimensions. The report would be submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1981.

Draft convention on the rights of the child

A Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights, open to all members of the Commission, began work in 1979 on a draft convention on the rights of the child. Meeting between 14 February and 2 March at Geneva during the Commission's annual session, the Working Group adopted the title of the draft convention, subject to change, and approved four preambular paragraphs, including one which stated that the family, as the basic unit of society and the natural environment for the growth and well-being of all its members and particularly children, should be afforded protection and assistance so that it could fully assume its responsibilities within the community. The Group, whose Chairman/Rapporteur was Adam Lopatka (Poland), worked on the basis of a draft convention submitted by Poland in 1978, 80 as well as a number of amendments proposed by other countries.

By a resolution adopted on 14 March on the Working Group's recommendation, the Commission decided to continue this task in 1980 as a matter of priority, with a view to completing the convention then, if possible, for transmission to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. By another resolution of that date, it invited the Secretary-General to consider organizing a two-week seminar on the rights of the child in the light of international instruments concerning human rights and questions of their implementation and progressive development.

On the Commission's recommendation, the Council, on 10 May, by decision 1979/37, brought to the Assembly's attention the Commission's discussion and action on this subject as well as the comments made in the Council's Second Committee. This decision, adopted without vote, was similarly approved by the Committee on 4 May; the Commission's text was first orally amended to take into account a proposal by Poland to have the relevant records of the Council transmitted to the Assembly.

In the Committee, support for the adoption of a convention, in 1980 if possible, was expressed by Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Iraq, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, while Cuba, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Ireland and Jamaica welcomed the work being done on the subject. Several of these speakers regretted that the Commission had not been able to complete the draft in time for the observance of the Internationa] Year of the Child (1979) (see p. 908).

The Assembly, after receiving a note by the Secretary-General reviewing developments relating to the draft convention, decided, without vote on 21 September, on the recommendation of its General Committee, to postpone until its 1980 session the agenda item on the draft convention on the rights of the child. This action was contained in decision 34/402.

Periodi c report s on human right s

The Ad Hoc Committee on Periodic Reports on Human Rights of the Commission on Human Rights met at Geneva from 29 January to 2 February 1979 to review documents submitted under the system by which Governments and specialized agencies reported periodically to the United Nations on human rights developments in individual countries. It took up reports on civil and political rights for the period 1 July 1971 to 30 June 1977 received from 20 Governments and five specialized agencies, as well as contributions on this subject from non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

Committee members expressed regret that half the membership of the United Nations had provided no information under either the periodic-report system or the reporting procedures of the International Covenants on Human Rights (see p. 855). The Committee concluded that the limited number of reports received on civil and political rights precluded a meaningful determination of trends and developments in those rights.

On 2 February, without vote, the Committee adopted a draft resolution for consideration by the Commission, proposing to change the reporting schedule so that States would be asked to submit reports in 1980 on economic, social and cultural rights, and in 1982 on civil and political rights and freedom of information, in a four-year cycle to be repeated thereafter. This would replace the six-year cycle adopted in 1971⁸¹ with reports due every second year in three successive groups: (1) civil and political rights; (2) economic, social and cultural rights; and (3) freedom of information.

The Committee also adopted a draft resolution on the contents and format of the Yearbook or Human Rights (see p. 852).

The Commission decided on 14 March to postpone to its 1980 session consideration of the item on periodic reports, including reports on freedom of information outstanding from 1977.82

Youth and human rights

On 14 March 1979, the Commission on Human Rights postponed until 1980 consideration of its agenda item on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the question of conscientious objection to military service. (See also p. 983.)

In conformity with General Assembly resolutions 32/130 of 16 December 1977 and 33/104 and 33/105 of 16 December 1978,

Recalling the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights, in further promoting international co-operation in respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as required by the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the increase in the workload of the Division of Human Rights as a result, inter alia, of the entry into force of the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,

1. Notes that, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant international instruments, the Commission on Human Rights, in fulfilling the functions set forth in Council resolution 5(I) of 16 February 1946 and amended by Council resolution 9(II) of 21 June 1946, should take into account the concepts enumerated in General Assembly resolution 32/130;

- 6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to prepare suggestions on the possibility of convening meetings of the officers of the Commission in intersessional periods in exceptional circumstances;
- 7. Requests, in order to enable the Commission on Human Rights to carry out the study requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 33/54 of 14 December 1978, those specialized agencies and other organs and bodies within and related to the United Nations system which are, according to their explicit mandates, concerned with the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms, to provide the Secretary-General with a short survey of their human rights activities and programmes;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to compile for the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-seventh session an analytical presentation of the material submitted pursuant to paragraph 7 above;

9. Notes that the Commission on Human Rights, at its thirty-seventh session, may wish to set up a sessional working group to study the material compiled and to make proposals, if it deems it appropriate, for the co-ordination of specific human rights activities and programmes within the United Nations system;

Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of the increase in the workload of the Division of Human Rights, to examine the question of the staffing and other resources of the human rights sector of the Secretariat, bearing in mind that it should always be at a level which will allow it to discharge its duties efficiently;

11. Emphasizes the value of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights and reaffirms that this programme should be maintained and developed;

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in further promoting international co-operation for respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental

Considering that the acceptance by Member States of the obligations contained in those Covenants is an important element for the universal realization of and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can be achieved only if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy economic, social, and cultural rights, as well as civil and political rights,

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to the future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution.

Recalling also its resolution 33/104 of 16 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue with high priority the over-all analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, which will contribute to the implementation of resolution 32/130,

Recalling further its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, in particular paragraphs 5 (b) and 41 of the annex thereto, regarding the responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council to monitor and evaluate the implementation of over-all strategies, policies and priorities established by the General Assembly,

Noting with interest Economic and Social Council decisions 1979/29 and 1979/30 of 10 May 1979, and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 4(XXXV) and 5(XXXV) of 2 March 1979, in which the Commission reiterated that the right to development is a human right and that equality of opportunity for development is as much a prerogative of nations as of individuals within nations,

Recognizing the need to create satisfactory conditions at the national and international levels for the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples,

Noting with interest that in the Political Declaration adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979, the non-aligned countries called on the United Nations to continue working towards ensuring human rights in a comprehensive manner to ensure the dignity of human beings and, in this regard, reaffirmed their own willingness to work actively for the implementation of the steps outlined in General Assembly resolution 32/130 in the form which it prescribes, through the existing structures of the United Nations system.

Taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/36 of 10 May 1979,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report on the work relating to the over-all analysis of the United Nations approach to human rights submitted to the General Assembly by the Commission on Human Rights, through the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with paragraph 2 (a) of

General Assembly resolution 32/130;

Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue at its thirty-sixth session its ongoing work on the over-all analysis with a view to further promoting and improving human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the Commission's programme and working methods, and on the over-all analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with the provisions and concepts of resolution 32/130;

Reiterates its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent, and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political, and economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reaffirms the absolute necessity, under all circumstances, of eliminating massive and flagrant violations of human rights and of the rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those enumerated in paragraph 1 (e) of resolution 32/130;

5. Reaffirms also that it is of paramount importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms that Member States should undertake specific obligations through accession to or ratification of international instruments in this field and that, consequently, the standardsetting work within the United Nations system in the field of human rights and the universal acceptance and implementation of the relevant international instruments should be encouraged;

6. Emphasizes the need to create conditions at the national and international levels for the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples;

7. Recognizes that, in order fully to guarantee human rights and complete personal dignity, it is necessary to guarantee the right to work, participation of workers in management, and the right to education, health and proper nourishment, through the adoption of measures at the national and international levels, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

8. Emphasizes that the right to development is a human right and that equality of opportunity for development is as much a prerogative of nations as of individuals within nations;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its thirty-sixth session, to consider the existing human and other resources that the Division of Human Rights of the Secretariat has at its disposal for the implementation of General Assembly resolutions, on the basis of complete data which the Secretary-General is requested to provide to it, and thereafter to make recommendations, through the Economic and Social Council, to the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session, with a view to further improving the working of the Division;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to give, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, priority to the holding in 1980 of a seminar, as already decided by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1979/30, on the effect of the present unjust international economic order on the economies of developing countries and the obstacle that this constitutes for the implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular for the right to enjoy an adequate standard of living as stated in article 25 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

11. Requests the Secretary-General and concerned organs and bodies of the United Nations system to implement fully the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/36;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, taking into account relevant information already available within the United Nations, and to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session a study on the nature and extent to which the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms is affected by present international conditions, with particular reference to situations resulting from apartheid, from all forms of racial discrimination, from colonialism, neocolonialism and imperialism, from policies tending to divide the world into spheres of influence, from the arms race, from foreign domination and occupation, from aggression and threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity, from refusal to recognize the fundamental rights of peoples to self-determination and of every nation to the exercise of full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, from intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States, particularly with reference to developing countries, as well as from the existence of the unjust system of international economic relations, taking also into account the conclusions of the seminar mentioned in paragraph 10 above;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the specialized agencies concerned and to all United Nations bodies that deal with human rights;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/54 of 14 December 1978 on review and co-ordination of human rights programmes of organizations in the United Nations system and co-operation with other international programmes in the field of human rights,

Noting that, pursuant to that resolution, the General Assembly will resume discussion of the subject of review and co-ordination of human rights programmes upon receipt of the study requested of the Commission on Human Rights in paragraph 2 of the resolution,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 22(XXXV) of 14 March 1979, by which the Commission decided to carry out the study asked for by the General Assembly in resolution 33/54, on the basis of preparatory material to be submitted to the Commission at its thirty-seventh session, and of Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/36 of 10 May 1979 in which the Council requested it to do so.

Mindful of the important contribution which the Division of Human Rights of the Secretariat has made to United Nations activities for the promotion and protection of human rights since the inception of the Organization,

Believing, however, that the activities of the human rights sector of the Secretariat should be enhanced so as better to enable it to meet the needs of the Organization and the international community, particularly after the entry into force of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and bearing in mind policy-making decisions of the General Assembly such as resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977,

The General Assembly,

Recalling that one of the purposes of the United Nations under Article 1 of the Charter is to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms as embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Bearing in mind its resolution 33/105 of 16 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to take into account, in continuing its work on the overall analysis of the United Nations approach to human rights, the views expressed on the various proposals during the general debate on the item at the thirty-second and thirty-third sessions of the General Assembly, including a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Considering that the Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights was nevertheless unable, in its consideration of the over-all analysis, to make a thorough evaluation of the proposal to create a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Decides to consider at its thirty-fifth session the question of the creation of a post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms."

Resolution 1979/37, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/57, adopted without vote by Council on 10 May 1979, meeting 15.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1793(LIV) of 18 May 1973,

Having noted General Assembly resolution 33/171 of 20 December 1978,

Considering that the Yearbook on Human Rights is an important means of disseminating information on developments at the national and international levels concerning the promotion and protection of human rights,

Bearing in mind that States which have become parties to such international instruments as the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid submit reports on an established basis in accordance with the requirements of those instruments,

Mindful that the system of periodic reports established under its resolution 1074 C (XXXIX) of 28 July 1965 continues to provide a useful source of information on human rights developments in States which are not participating in reporting procedures established under the relevant international instruments,

Considering that the Yearbook on Human Rights should be conceived to reflect human rights developments in a maximum number of States,

1. Decides that henceforth the part of the Yearbook on Human Rights devoted to national developments shall consist of extracts from reports made by States under such instruments as the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination or the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and from the periodic reports submitted by States under the reporting procedure established under Economic and Social Council resolution 1074 C (XXXIX);

2. Decides that States will no longer be invited to submit separate contributions either directly or through correspondents for inclusion in the Yearbook; however, individual States wishing to provide a contribution intended specifically for the Yearbook shall be free to do so;

3. Further decides that, beginning as soon as possible, the Yearbook shall be issued annually in accordance with the guidelines annexed to the present resolution;

4. Recommends that an appropriate date should be adopted for the issuance of the Yearbook and that the same date should be adhered to thereafter.

Considering the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975, and the Recommendation concerning Migrant Workers, 1975, adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation,

Considering the provisions relating to the question of migrant workers contained in the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Aware of the important contribution made by the International Labour Organisation in protecting the rights of migrant

Appreciating, moreover, the efforts made by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with regard to migrant workers,

The General Assembly,

Affirming the need to establish international co-operation by resolving international problems of an economic, social, intellectual or humanitarian nature and by developing and encouraging human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling in this connexion the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the international instruments elaborated by the International Labour Organisation, notably the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975, and the Recommendation concerning Migrant Workers, 1975, adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation,

Taking account of the provisions relating to the question of migrant workers of the Declaration and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling that the family is the natural and fundamental element of society and has a right to protection by society and by the State and that, in this context, the families of migrant workers are entitled to the same protection as the migrant workers themselves,

Recognizing, therefore, the need to devote all necessary attention to the families, in particular the children, of migrant workers in all spheres, notably those of housing, health and education,

Reaffirming that the relationship between worker and employer is in itself a source of rights and obligations and that consequently a violation, or even a limitation, of those rights of migrant workers may be tantamount to a violation of the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Continuing to express its deep concern at the fact that, despite the general effort made by the States Members of the United Nations, the regional intergovernmental organizations and the various agencies of the United Nations, migrant workers still are not exercising their rights in the sphere of work as defined by the relevant international instruments,

Affirming that close co-operation between the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission for Social Development, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization will contribute to the search for solutions aimed at improving the situation of migrant workers and their families, Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/13 of 9 May 1979,

Recalling its resolution 33/163 of 20 December 1978,

Resolution 34/170, as recommended by Third Committee, A/34/829, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2200 A (XXI) of 16 December 1966, which recognizes the right of everyone to education,

Bearing in mind the importance of the Convention against Discrimination in Education, adopted on 14 December 1960 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational,

Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Convinced of the topicality of the provisions of General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development which, inter alia, stresses the importance of the training of national personnel and cadres for the over-all development of society,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of the implementation of the right to education for the full development of human personality and for the enjoyment of other fundamental human rights and freedoms,

Considering that the educational process could bring a substantial contribution to social progress, national development, mutual understanding and co-operation among peoples and to strengthening peace and international security,

Reaffirming the decisive importance of the training of national personnel and cadres, including the establishment of, and improvement in, the legislative framework, which should ensure the implementation and guarantee the full enjoyment of the right to education,

Recalling that the establishment of the new international economic order requires effective support for the improvement and expansion of educational systems and for the training of specialized personnel and qualified cadres for the economic development of the developing countries,

Convinced that the United Nations and the specialized agencies, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, could continue to play an increasing role in supporting the implementation of the right to the education, the development of education and the training of national personnel needed by all sectors of activity in conformity with the requirements of the over-all progress and development of the developing countries,

Bearing in mind the valuable work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the education and training of national personnel, as well as the importance of its contribution to the preparation and implementation of the new international development strategy, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 33/193 of 29 January 1979,

- 1. Invites all States to consider the adoption of appropriate legislative, administrative and other measures, including material guarantees, in order to ensure the full implementation of the right to universal education through, inter alia, free and compulsory primary education, universal and gradually free-of-charge secondary education, equal access to all educational facilities and the access of the young generation to science and culture;
- 2. Appeals to all States, in particular the developed countries, actively to support through fellowships and other means the efforts of the developing countries in the education and training of national personnel needed in industry, agriculture and other economic and social sectors;
- 3. Requests the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a preliminary report and, at its thirty-sixth session, a final report containing:

(a) Information on the activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in relation to support for education and training of national personnel of developing countries;

(b) His views and suggestions, in accordance with the organization's mandate and after consultation with Member States and specialized agencies, on the need for and the possibility of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization reinforcing its programmes and activities for the purpose of co-operating with developing countries in their efforts to ensure adequate education networks at all levels as well as fellowships and facilities for the training of qualified national personnel, bearing in mind also the proposals contained in General Assembly resolution 33/135 of 19 December 1978;

(c) Information on the difficulties and obstacles encountered in the full implementation of the right to education, particularly in developing countries, in conformity with their own requirements of over-all progress and development, as well as his conclusions on action to be taken in this regard.

Chapter XX

Status of women

Although the Commission on the Status of Women did not meet in 1979, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took a number of decisions to advance the status of women and towards ensuring more effective and equitable participation of women in development. The Council considered preparations for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to be held in July 1980, the establishment of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and the importance of the integration of women in the development process for achievement of the goals of the 1975 World Plan of Action.

On 18 December, the General Assembly completed its work on, adopted and opened for signature the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

The Assembly also took up the question of preparations for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women. In addition, it took decisions on the programmes and management of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, the effective mobilization and integration of women in development and the status and role of women in education and in the economic and social fields.

These and other decisions are described in the following subchapters.

United Nations Decade for Women

Preparation s for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, 1980

On 9 February, at its 1979 organizational session, the Economic and Social Council accepted an invitation from Denmark to hold the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace—which the General Assembly had decided, by a resolution of 15 December 1975, to convene at the mid-term of the Decade—at Copenhagen from 14 to 30 July 1980. It took this action in adopting decision 1979/4, without objection, as proposed by the Government of Denmark.

On the same date, by decision 1979/5 adopted following informal consultations, the Council deferred consideration of a note prepared by the Secretariat on the effects the provisional agenda of the 1980 World Conference might have on the work programmes of the Council and the Commission on the Status of Women, so that consequential modifications in those bodies' work programmes and documentation might be made. The Council decided that the note, which mainly reviewed the Commission's related work programme, should be revised to take into consideration discussion at the Council's organizational session and the appointment of the Secretary-General of the Conference, and be transmitted to its first regular 1979 session in April/May.

The revised note annotated the provisional agenda for the World Conference and dealt with related documents, outlined the sequence of Conference-related meetings and document deadlines, discussed the programme of work of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women and the Conference-related work programme of the Commission on the Status of Women, and, commenting on the interrelationship between the work of the Preparatory Committee and the Commission, proposed that the Committee meet between the Commission's February/March 1980 session and the July Conference.

Annexed to the report were provisional agendas for the Conference, for the Preparatory Committee at its second (August/September 1979) session, and for the Commission at its 1980 session, as well as a list of Conference documents, indicating any prior consideration by United Nations organs.

The Council took note of the revised note by decision 1979/20 adopted on 9 May 1979, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, which had approved the text, orally proposed by its Chairman, without objection on 4 May.

The USSR reaffirmed its reservations with regard to the document, which included what it considered an insufficient balance of activities mentioned therein to achieve the interrelated goals of equality, development and peace for the Decade, and its concern over doubts which had been expressed about the Commission's ability to prepare a draft declaration on the participation of women in the struggle for strengthening international peace and security and against colonialism and racism.

Also on 9 May, the Council gave advance authorization to the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session the report of the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on its second session, which was to be held in August/September 1979. The Council adopted decision 1979/21, embodying this action, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had approved it in like manner on 4 May. The text was proposed by India, Jamaica, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Senegal, the United States and Zambia.

The Preparatory Committee's second session was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 27 August to 8 September. Its report listed those matters which were to be brought to the attention of, or required action by, the General Assembly, together with rules of procedure and other outstanding questions on the organization of the work of the Conference. It examined preparatory work on the substantive items on the provisional agenda for the Conference and other activities related to the preparation of the Conference, and suggested a provisional agenda for a third session of the Preparatory Committee.

Annexed to the report were preliminary guidelines for a programme of action for the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women (1981-1985), designed to implement the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, adopted in 1975 at Mexico City.²

In accordance with a decision of the Preparatory Committee, the Secretary-General presented to the Assembly detailed proposals, including budgetary provisions, for carrying out the Committee's recommendations on the Conference. His note outlining these proposals also contained resource requirements for 1980 additional to those requested in the 1980-1981 programme budget estimates.

The Assembly considered the Committee's report at its 1979 session and, by resolution 34/162, approved the recommendations it contained concerning activities related to the preparations for the Conference. It requested the Secretary-General to seek extrabudgetary funds for post-Conference information activities and to ensure the participation in the Conference of island and land-locked developing countries, and asked him to provide appropriations for participation of the least developed countries and for a number of specific preparatory and other Conference-related meetings, documents, staff—including staff to carry out post-Conference information activities—and activities, including the holding of a third session of the Preparatory Committee in 1980.

The Assembly strongly urged Member States to ensure adequate preparation for the Conference, including the presentation of studies. It called upon those States and relevant United Nations organs and organizations to mobilize public opinion in support of the Conference and its objectives.

The Assembly adopted resolution 34/162 on 17 December, without vote, on a recommendation by its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, where it was sponsored by 33 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), orally revised by them, and approved on 29 November by 122 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

The USSR said it could not accept, and requested a separate vote on, the paragraph by which the Secretary-General was asked to provide budgetary appropriations in a number of specific areas, including areas which the USSR felt bore no direct relation to Conference preparations, such as expenditures in respect of an information programme and of an increase in the size of the secretariat once the Conference was over. The paragraph was adopted by 114 votes to 8, with 6 abstentions.

Poland felt that paragraph entailed costs that should not be charged to the United Nations regular budget. The Federal Republic of Germany also had reservations regarding requests for funds to meet travel costs of delegations to a conference. Ireland said the contents of that paragraph should not serve as a precedent for future world conferences. The United Kingdom also reserved its position on the financial implications of the resolution.

On 17 December, the Assembly, by resolution 34/155 on the United Nations Decade for Women, requested the World Conference to consider: means to ensure more effective participation of women in the planning and policy processes of their Governments and more adequate reflection of women's needs and concerns in those processes; and the conditions necessary for ensuring equal access of women and men to positions of responsibility which would enable them to participate in the formulation of national policies in employment, health and education.

The Assembly called on Member States to ensure, as regards education and access to public social, economic, administrative or political functions, conditions of equality between men and women and promotion without discrimination; it also called on Governments to ensure the effective participation of women in the decision-making process with respect to foreign policy and international economic and political cooperation, including equal access to diplomatic functions and representation in the United Nations and other international organizations.

Resolution 34/155 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had likewise approved the text, after oral revision by the sponsors, on 28 November. It was sponsored by Australia, Canada, the Central African Republic, France, Gabon, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Morocco, the Philippines, Thailand, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon and the United States.

The United Kingdom pointed out, after approval, that the criterion it applied when considering suitability for posts was merit and not sex.

Among the documents before the Assembly in connexion with the Decade and the World Conference were letters of 8 March and 30 July 1979 from Angola to the Secretary-General transmitting messages issued by the Organization of Angolan Women on 8 March, on the occasion of International Women's Day, and on 31 July, on the occasion of African Women's Day. On 26 November, Democratic Kampuchea addressed to the Secretary-General a statement of its representative at the Regional Preparatory Conference for the World Conference, held at New Delhi, India, in early November, requesting that an item on Kampuchean women be included in the Conference agenda.

By another resolution adopted on 17 December, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda for the World Conference an item on the effects of Israeli occupation on Palestinian women inside and outside the occupied territories.

The Assembly took this action by resolution 34/160, adopted, by a recorded vote of 122 to 2, with 20 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved it on 29 November by a recorded vote of 109 to 2, with 20 abstentions. The text was sponsored by 40 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Ireland, on behalf of the member States of the European Communities, stated after the vote that, having reservations regarding the inclusion of special situations in the agenda of the Conference, they had abstained. The United States voiced similar concern. Portugal felt the Conference should deal only with the humanitarian aspects of the situation of Palestinian women; as worded, Portugal felt, the item could give rise to misinterpretations.

Also on 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/158 on the World Conference, thereby calling on Member States to make every effort in preparing and carrying out the Conference, requesting the Preparatory Committee to intensify its preparation of an effective programme of action, and urging the Commission on the Status of Women to consider at its 1980 session the elaboration of a draft declaration on the participation of women in the struggle to strengthen international peace and security and against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, foreign aggression and occupation and all forms of foreign domination, in accordance with a 1977 Assembly resolution by which the Commission had been requested to draft such a declaration in preparation for the 1980 World Conference.

Also by resolution 34/158, the Assembly took note of a report of the Secretary-General on women's participation in the strengthening of international peace and security and in the struggle against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, foreign aggression and occupation and all forms of foreign domination. It had been prepared in accordance with the same 1977 resolution asking for a report on action taken to implement a 1975 resolution,4 by which the Assembly had called for intensified efforts to end all such practices and policies, to strengthen peace, expand detente, bring about disarmament and convene a world disarmament conference. The report was based on replies from Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Mali, Mauritius, Nepal, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Arab Emirates, as well as from specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations. Included was an analysis of major obstacles to greater participation by women in international co-operation and strengthening peace, based on replies to a questionnaire on implementation of the World Plan of Action adopted at the 1975 World Conference of the International Women's Year, 5 a record of the participation of women as Government representatives at United Nations meetings and quantitative data provided by Governments on women's participation in international co-operation and strengthening of international peace.

Resolution 34/158 was adopted by a recorded vote of 121 to 2, with 21 abstentions. The resolution was approved by the Third Committee on 29 November by a recorded vote of 103 to 2, with 23 abstentions. Its sponsors were Afghanistan, Benin, Bulgaria, Cape Verde, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Gabon, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Iraq, Madagascar, Mali, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, the Niger, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam.

To a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly considered that equal participation of women in development and political life would contribute to peace and to creating the new international economic order, Senegal submitted but later withdrew an amendment referring also to their contribution to creating a new world cultural order. The sponsors accepted a Canadian/ United Kingdom amendment to include in this paragraph mention of women's contribution to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. On a proposal of these two countries the sponsors also deleted, when they revised their original text, reference to the Commission's considering "with priority" the question of elaborating a draft declaration on women's participation in the struggle for peace, but did not accept insertion of "all situations of violations of human rights" in the scope of the declaration. They also accepted a drafting amendment by Lesotho.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States said it continued to oppose the recommendation that a draft declaration of the kind proposed should be elaborated. It reiterated its concern at including politically controversial questions among the activities of the World Conference. New Zealand also felt that the Commission's and the Conference's limited time should be devoted to a strong programme of action to benefit women rather than to discussion of such a specialized question.

Chile said that it had voted for the resolution because of the importance it attached to the Conference but it had reservations about a preambular paragraph, included on a proposal by Iraq, by which the Assembly took into account the report of the Conference on Non-Aligned and Other Developing Countries on the Role of Women in Development, held at Baghdad in May 1979—which Iraq had transmitted to the Assembly by a note verbale of 13 June — because Chile did not endorse a number of its conclusions. Israel said it opposed the resolution because it included the Iraqi proposal, which referred to a document denouncing Zionism and stressing the equation of zionism with racism. Ireland said the nine member countries of the European Communities had abstained because of the problem that that proposal would cause for them.

Algeria said that, since the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order⁶ already covered the question, it would vote against the resolution.

On the question of women refugees, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/161, whereby it requested the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to review the situation of women refugees the world over and make recommendations for action that could be taken to assist them, taking into account the requirements of the regions concerned, to be included in a draft report for the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference at its third session and a final report to be submitted to the Conference. The topic was to be included in the Conference agenda as a subitem of the item on the programme of action for the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women.

The Assembly took this action, without vote, on 17 December on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text without vote, as orally revised by the sponsors, on 29 November. The resolution was sponsored by Australia, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Guinea, Kenya, Morocco, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, the Sudan, Thailand, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Venezuela.

Hungary, speaking after the vote, said that it had not opposed the text but had reservations about the Assembly adopting a special resolution on women refugees.

By other resolutions and decisions adopted in 1979, the Assembly also took action relating to the World Conference.

On 19 December, by resolution 34/204, it called on the World Conference to include in its programme of action for the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women concrete measures for the effective mobilization and integration of women in all sectors of development. It stressed the important role of the interagency programme in the Decade for co-ordinating activities relating to the integration and participation of women in the development process, and asked participating United Nations organizations to implement the interagency programme. The Assembly also urged the Secretary-General to submit to the third (1980) session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference the comprehensive report on the effective mobilization and integration of women in the development process it had requested earlier in 1979. (For details, see p. 900.)

Status of women 883

On 17 December, by resolution 34/159 on the importance of improving the status and role of women in education and in the economic and social fields in order to achieve equality of women with men, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to circulate the analytical report he had prepared on the subject as a background document for the World Conference and invited the Conference to give due attention to the question. (For details, see p. 902.)

Also on 17 December, by decision 34/434, the Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular 1980 session, to adopt a decision on the number of Vice-Presidents to be elected at the Conference and on the distribution of officers of the Bureau, in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution, taking into account views that might be expressed as a result of consultations in the Preparatory Committee.

This decision was sponsored in the Assembly by Algeria, Australia, Brazil, Egypt, India, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, the Philippines and Yugoslavia and adopted without vote.

Voluntar y Fund for the Unite d Nation s Decade for Women

Programmes and management

For its consideration of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, the General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the management of the Fund and on the decisions of the Consultative Committee on the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women.

The report reviewed developments from October 1978 to September 1979, including the Committee's recommendations and decisions at its fifth (March) and sixth (September) sessions, and examined innovative activities supported by the Fund.

The Committee recommended the allocation on an exceptional basis of $30,000 to the Economic Commission for Africa to provide legal aid to women victims of apartheid, and also recommended that posts for senior women's programme officers in the regional commissions —excluding the Economic Commission for Europe—supported by Fund resources be extended for two years, while reaffirming its expectation that all posts would be converted to established posts under the regular budget. Unless at least one of the posts was provided in the regular budget of each of the commissions concerned, the Committee recommended discontinuance of Fund financing of the posts after existing commitments expired.

The Committee recommended an additional 33 projects for implementation—21 at the country level, mainly in rural and community development and in small-scale industry, 11 regional and one global.

In the report, the Secretary-General noted with satisfaction a new orientation for country-level activities and, in particular, an improved procedure for submission and review of project proposals through resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), to help ensure that projects receiving Fund aid were integrated into wider development efforts. He urged multiyear pledges and more contributions by a wider range of countries.

In adopting resolution 34/156 on 17 December, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the Consultative Committee's decisions and expressed its desire to see the activities developed by the Fund continued beyond the United Nations Decade for Women; it requested the Secretary-General to study this matter and report to it in 1981. The Assembly would also review at its 1981 session its decision, set forth in the resolution, to maintain the Fund at Headquarters; the review would be made on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General on his consultations with the Consultative Committee, the UNDP Administrator and United Nations agencies directly concerned, as well as views by Member States to be submitted by 1 June 1981. The Assembly expressed appreciation for the voluntary contributions pledged at the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see subsection immediately below) and appealed to Member States to consider giving or increasing their support to the Fund in order to meet the rapidly multiplying demands from developing countries. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to include the Fund annually in the Pledging Conference and to report annually on the management of the Fund and the progress of its activities.

Resolution 34/156 was adopted, without vote, on a recommendation of the Third Committee, which approved it in like manner on 29 November.

The text was sponsored by Barbados, the Dominican Republic, Fiji, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Jamaica, Mozambique, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Somalia, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Kingdom. The sponsors accepted a Moroccan oral drafting change to a revised provision on the review of the decision to continue to situate the Fund at Headquarters.

The Third Committee rejected—by 32 votes in favour to 41 against, with 47 abstentions—a Senegalese oral amendment to have the Assembly review the decision on the location of the Fund in 1980 rather than 1981. The paragraph containing the decision to continue to situate the Fund at Headquarters was approved by a separate vote of 64 to 29, with 31 abstentions.

Austria also proposed a resolution on the Voluntary Fund, which it did not press to a vote, by which the Assembly, bearing in mind its previous decisions to transfer to Vienna the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs—the Secretariat unit responsible for women's questions-would have, by operative paragraphs which differed from the 18-power text adopted: stressed the need for continuous co-operation between the Fund and relevant organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions; reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to ensure, if possible within existing resources, that the Centre possessed adequate personnel and resources to discharge its functions under the 1975 World Plan of Action; asked him to ensure that the Fund received adequate personnel and resources within those allocated to the Centre and, if necessary, to strengthen those resources; and asked him to provide, through the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the necessary assistance in the Fund's operational activities.

Although the Austrian draft included an expression of hope that the Fund's operation would be continued beyond the Decade, it did not refer to a report on such activities, nor did it contain a decision on the Fund's location at Headquarters.

Speaking after the vote, Benin expressed regret that a consensus had not been possible; it felt that the Fund should be administered at the same location as the Centre.

Pledging Conference

At the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held in New York on 6 November, voluntary contributions were pledged to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women for 1980. As at 30 June 1980, amounts pledged or paid to the Fund totalled $2,141,469 (for details, see p. 558).

Conscious of the inadequacy of the information available from Member States concerning the participation of women in local and national political institutions,

Bearing in mind the importance of equal access to all forms of education and training for men and women to the achievement of a balanced distribution of positions of political and economic responsibility in society,

1. Calls upon Member States to ensure, as regards both education and access to public functions of a social, economic, administrative or political character, conditions of equality between men and women and promotion without discrimination;

2. Requests the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace to consider, under the general theme "Development," appropriate means of ensuring the more effective participation of women in the planning and policy processes of their Governments and more adequate reflection of their needs and concerns in those processes;

3. Further requests the Conference to consider, under the subtheme "Employment, Health and Education," the conditions necessary for ensuring equal access of women and men to positions of responsibility which will enable them to participate in the formulation of national policies in those fields;

4. Calls upon Governments to take steps to ensure effective participation of women in the decision-making process with respect to foreign policy and international economic and political co-operation, including steps to ensure that they have equal access to diplomatic functions and that they are represented in the United Nations and other international organizations.

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

At its regular 1979 session, which was convened in September, the General Assembly adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to present the text to the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women for its information and to submit a report to the Assembly in 1980 on the status of the Convention.

These decisions were incorporated in resolution 34/180, which the Assembly adopted on 18 December by a recorded vote of 130 to 0, with 10 abstentions. The text of the Convention was annexed to the resolution.

The Convention consisted of a preamble and 30 articles, divided into six untitled parts. By the preamble, the States parties to the Convention would note various international instruments reaffirming the principle of equal rights of men and women, despite which extensive discrimination against women continued to exist. Convinced that the establishment of the new international economic order based on equity and justice would contribute significantly towards promotion of equality between the sexes, they would emphasize that the eradication of apartheid, racism, racial discrimination, colonialism, neo-colonialism, aggression, foreign occupation and domination, and interference in the internal affairs of States was essential to the full enjoyment of men's and women's rights.

States parties would affirm that the strengthening of international peace and security, the relaxation of international tension, mutual cooperation among all States, general and complete disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament under strict arid effective international control, the affirmation of the principles of justice, equality and mutual benefit in inter-State relations and the realization of the right of peoples under alien and colonial domination and foreign occupation to self-determination and independence, as well as respect for national sovereignty and territorial integrity, would promote social progress and development and contribute to the attainment of full equality between men and women.

Bearing in mind the great contribution of women to the welfare of the family and to the development of society, and aware that women's role in procreation should not be a basis for discrimination and that a change in the traditional role of men as well as the role of women in society and in the family was needed to achieve full equality, the States parties would express their determination to implement the principles set forth in the 1967 Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and adopt measures needed to eliminate such discrimination in all its forms and manifestations.

Discrimination against women Was defined in article 1 and condemned under article 2; States parties would agree to pursue policies to eliminate it without delay, undertaking to ensure realization of the principle of equality of men and women through laws and other means, to adopt legislation to prohibit such discrimination, to establish legal protection of women's rights on an equal basis with men and ensure them against discriminatory acts, to take appropriate measures, including legislation, to modify or abolish existing laws, regulations, customs and practices that constituted discrimination against women and to repeal all national penal provisions which discriminated against women.

By article 3, States parties would take all appropriate measures, including legislation, to ensure women full development and advancement to guarantee them human rights and freedoms on a basis of equality with men. Temporary special measures adopted by States parties aimed at accelerating equality between men and women and protecting maternity were not to be considered discriminatory, according to article 4. By article 5, appropriate measures would be taken to modify social and cultural patterns of conduct in order to eliminate prejudices and practices based on the idea of inferiority or superiority of either of the sexes or on stereotyped roles, and to ensure that family education included a proper understanding of maternity as a social function and a recognition of the common responsibility of men and women in the upbringing and development of their children, it being understood that the interest of the children was the primordial consideration. Article 6 called for legislation and other measures to suppress all forms of traffic in women and exploitation of prostitution of women.

Article 7, the first of three articles of part II, provided for women's right to full political and public life on equal terms with men; by article 8, their right to represent their Governments at the international level and to participate in the work of international organizations would be ensured. By article 9, women were to be granted equal rights with men in matters relating to nationality and to the nationality of their children.

Article 10, the first of part III, provided for the elimination of discrimination against women to ensure them equal rights with men in the field of education. Article 11 was to ensure the same rights in employment, including benefits, social security and safe working conditions; measures were to be taken to prevent discrimination against women on the grounds of marriage or maternity, and relevant protective legislation was to be updated periodically in the light of technological knowledge.

Women were to be protected from discrimination in the field of health care under article 12, ensuring access to such services as those relating to family planning, pregnancy, confinement and post-natal care, free where necessary, and nutrition, and from discrimination in other areas of economic and social life by article 13, ensuring equal rights to family benefits, bank loans, mortgages and other forms of financial credit, and participation in recreational activities, sports and cultural life. Article 14 applied the provisions of the Convention to rural women.

Part IV contained two articles: article 15 was to ensure women equality with men before the law, and article 16 was to ensure the absence of discrimination in matters relating to marriage and family relations. Also by article 16, the betrothal and marriage of a child would have no legal effect, and action was to be taken to specify a minimum age for marriage and make marriage registration compulsory.

Article 17, of part V, provided for the establishment by States parties of a Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to consider progress made in the implementation of the Convention, with staff, facilities and emoluments for its members to be provided by the United Nations. By article 18, States parties would report to the Secretary-General on legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures adopted by them to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. Articles 19 to 22 dealt with the Committee's rules of procedure, officers, meetings, reports (which were to be transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women for its information), and representation of specialized agencies at meetings.

The first article of part VI, article 23, indicated that the Convention's provisions should not supersede any State-party legislation or other convention or agreement in force whose terms were more conducive to the achievement of equality between men and women. Parties undertook by article 24 to adopt all necessary national measures aimed at achieving the full realization of the rights recognized in the Convention.

Articles 25 to 30 contained technical provisions for the operation of the Convention, including its signatories, the depositary (the Secretary-General), ratification, accession, revision, entry into force (30 days after deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession), reservations, settlement of disputes concerning interpretation or application, and official languages.

Report of the Working Group

The Convention, which had annually been referred to the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee for consideration since a draft text had first been elaborated by the Commission on the Status of Women and approved in 1976,9 was again referred to that Committee during the Assembly's 1979 session. On 24 September, the Committee re-established its Working Group of the Whole on the Drafting of the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to consider the final provisions and to reconsider articles not completed at previous sessions.

The Working Group held 12 meetings from 26 September to 29 November, at which it considered part V, dealing with the establishment of a body to consider progress made in implementing the Convention, and part VI containing the final provisions. The Group approved the title of the Convention and decided on texts for a number of other provisions on which agreement had not been reached at the 1978 session. It transmitted in its report a few still unagreed texts (including those for part V) to the Third Committee for decision, including a preambular paragraph and articles dealing with the new body and with the report of that body.

On 22 November, the Working Group established a style committee composed of Canada, China, Spain, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR and the United Kingdom, later joined by France. The committee recommended a number of technical and stylistic changes. The Group on 29 November approved the text of the draft Convention as amended by the style committee, including a recommendation that the Convention be divided into six parts, without titles. On the same date, the Group adopted its report and transmitted it to the Third Committee.

Work of the Third Committee and action by the General Assembly

The Third Committee considered the draft Convention at four meetings on 6 and 7 December and approved a number of amendments to it. The Committee approved tentative wording proposed by the Working Group to two preambular paragraphs, one emphasizing that the eradication of a number of policies and practices was essential for the full enjoyment of the rights of men and women, and the other affirming policies and principles which would promote social progress and development and contribute to the attainment of full equality between men and women.

To the first of these paragraphs, the Committee approved by 90 votes to 1, with 25 abstentions, an amendment sponsored by China, revised to take account of a Syrian proposal, whereby aggression and interference in the internal affairs of States were included among the practices whose eradication was essential for the full enjoyment of equal rights. The preambular paragraph was approved by a separate recorded vote of 88 to 1, with 23 abstentions.

To the second of these preambular paragraphs, the Committee approved by 90 votes to 1, with 22 abstentions, an Algerian oral amendment, subamended by India, to include, among the elements whose affirmation would promote social progress and development and contribute to the attainment of full equality, the realization of the right of peoples under alien and colonial domination and foreign occupation to self-determination and independence. This paragraph was subsequently approved by a separate recorded vote of 85 to 1, with 23 abstentions.

The separate votes on these paragraphs were requested by Algeria, France and the United Kingdom in the Third Committee, and Singapore asked that they be recorded. The paragraphs were also put to the vote in the Assembly, where they were approved together by a recorded vote of 108 to 0, with 26 abstentions.

Speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Economic Community (EEC) in explanation of their abstentions in the vote on these two paragraphs, Ireland said that the provisions introduced new elements which raised problems for the EEC countries. The United States said it opposed their adoption because they reflected political influences and were not properly related to the purpose of the Convention. On behalf of the five Nordic countries, which abstained, Denmark said the paragraphs were polemic and inappropriate although this fact did not affect those countries' position on the substance of the question. Spain also abstained, not because it disagreed with the concepts of the paragraphs, it said, but because of their context and because they were unnecessary.

The Committee approved two Moroccan amendments. By the first—approved by 85 votes to 0, with 28 abstentions—a preambular paragraph by which States parties bore in mind the great contribution of women to the development of society was expanded to include their contribution to the welfare of the family. By the second—approved by 60 votes to 1, with 54 abstentions—Morocco added to a provision of article 5, stating that family education would include recognition of the common responsibility of men and women in child upbringing, a clause stating that it was understood that the interest of the children was the primordial consideration in all cases.

The Committee rejected a number of amendments by separate vote:

- —an Argentine oral amendment, to replace the word "traditional" by "stereotyped" in the preambular paragraph expressing awareness that a change in the traditional roles of both sexes was needed, was rejected by 20 votes in favour to 26 against, with 55 abstentions;
- —an Argentine oral proposal to delete from article 9 the paragraph whereby States parties were to grant women equal rights with men with respect to their children's nationality was rejected by 34 votes in favour to 58, with 22 abstentions; and
- —a Moroccan oral amendment whereby the same paragraph would be rephrased to stipulate that States parties were to grant their nationals equal rights with respect to the nationality of their children was rejected by 10 votes in favour to 83, with 11 abstentions.

The unamended paragraph in article 9 was approved by the Committee by a separate vote, requested by Mauritania, of 61 to 25, with 21 abstentions. It was also put to a separate vote in the Assembly, which adopted it by a recorded vote of 92 to 13, with 28 abstentions.

Algeria, speaking in explanation of vote, said that it could not support the provision because Algerian law automatically granted children the nationality of the father.

Other rejected Moroccan amendments were:

- —an amendment to insert, in a subparagraph of article 2, whereby States parties were to undertake all appropriate measures, including legislation, to modify or abolish laws, regulations, customs and practices "which constituted discrimination," a phrase referring instead to those "which in their view constituted discrimination" against women—rejected by 25 votes in favour to 60 against, with 25 abstentions;
- —an oral amendment to include prostitution among the practices to be suppressed under article 6, as well as traffic in women and exploitation of prostitution of women—was rejected by a recorded vote of 19 in favour to 48, with 46 abstentions:
- —an amendment to a subparagraph of article 16 (indicating measures to be taken to ensure against discrimination in marriage and family matters), whereby ensurance of the same rights and responsibilities during marriage and its dissolution would be changed to ensurance of respect for the rights of women during marriage and its dissolution—rejected by 13 votes in favour to 68, with 24 abstentions (this provision was also adopted by the Assembly by a separate recorded vote of 104 to 0, with 32 abstentions); and
- —a further amendment to article 16 seeking to add a subparagraph to the effect that, in the event of separation or divorce, the custody of minor children would be given as a matter of priority to the mother, in the absence of an express and reasoned decision by the competent courts—rejected by 28 votes in favour to 58, with 23 abstentions.

The Committee then voted on the section of the Convention outlining the machinery for considering progress made in implementing the Convention (part V). It approved, as articles 17 to 22, a set of articles proposed by Sweden which provided for a Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, consisting of initially 18 and later 23 experts elected by the States parties, and which set forth the method of electing them, their terms of office and the method of filling casual vacancies.

These articles were one of three alternative sets of texts not agreed upon by the Committee's Working Group, which had forwarded, in addition to the Swedish proposal, an original version, envisaging an ad hoc group of 10 to 15 persons to be elected by the Commission on the Status of Women (a Norwegian amendment to this version would have allowed for establishment of such a group by any other body under the Economic and Social Council that the States parties might nominate), and an Ecuadorian proposal for establishment of a 23-member ad hoc working group of the Council.

A Swedish provision that States parties would be responsible for the expenses of Committee members while in performance of Committee duties was replaced by an alternative text by Bangladesh—that the Committee members would, with the Assembly's approval, receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as the Assembly might decide, having regard to the importance of the Committee's responsibilities, and that the Secretary-General would provide needed staff and facilities for the effective performance of the Committee's functions—approved by 72 votes to 12, with 27 abstentions. This text superseded a Swedish provision that the Committee's secretariat would be provided by the Secretary-General. With the consequential necessary drafting changes, the balance of the Swedish proposals on the new body, which became articles 17 to 22, was approved by 98 votes to 1, with 12 abstentions. Consequential changes were also made in numbering the articles that followed—former articles 17 to 24 became articles 23 to 30.

By a separate vote requested by Argentina, the article that became article 29, dealing with machinery and methods to resolve disputes concerning the interpretation of the Convention, was approved by 62 votes to 1, with 39 abstentions. The draft Convention as a whole was then approved on 6 December by 104 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions.

Following its approval of the Convention, the Third Committee rejected, by 33 votes in favour to 69 against, with 25 abstentions, a proposal by Mexico which had been submitted first as a draft decision and subsequently withdrawn and replaced by an amendment to an 18-power draft resolution before the Committee to adopt the Convention. The Mexican text, with a number of revisions to take account of various suggestions and proposals, was intended to replace operative provisions relating to adopting the Convention and hoping for its early entry into force. Mexico would instead have had the Assembly transmit the draft Convention to Governments of Member States for their final observations, to be considered by the General Assembly at its 1980 session prior to adoption of the Convention. Mexico later added to its amendment a paragraph by which the Secretary-General would also have been asked to present the text to the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women.

Instead, the Committee approved, on 7 December, by a recorded vote, requested by Italy, of 112 to 1, with 13 abstentions, a resolution, sponsored by Australia, the Bahamas, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Finland, Guatemala, India, Jamaica, Kenya, the Netherlands, Norway, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Sao Tome and Principe, Romania and Yugoslavia, to have the General Assembly adopt the Convention at its current session.

This was the text the Assembly adopted on 18 December as resolution 34/180, annexing the Convention. By a separate recorded vote, the Assembly adopted the Convention itself by 130 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions, after having adopted, by separate recorded votes, two of the preambular paragraphs and two other provisions in articles 9 and 16 (see above).

Before adopting the resolution, however, the Assembly adopted without vote an amendment by nine of the sponsors—Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Finland, India, the Netherlands, Norway and the Philippines—to add a final paragraph by which the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1980 a report on the status of the Convention under an agenda item on that subject.

A proposal by France and the United Kingdom, subsequently withdrawn, to replace the preamble to the Convention would have had the States parties: recognize that the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights¹⁰ and the International Covenants on Human Rights,¹¹ as well as several other United Nations instruments, had sought to promote equality between women and men; express concern that, despite these, extensive discrimination continued to exist, conviction that world economic and social development would contribute significantly towards the promotion of such equality, and awareness that further evolution in the traditional role of women in society and in the family would be needed to achieve full equality; and state their determination to implement the principles set forth in the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, to that end adopting measures required for the elimination of such discrimination in all its forms.

The United Kingdom said it would have been better to have had a shorter, non-political preamble to the Convention, but withdrew the two-power amendment on the understanding that this action would not preclude separate votes on preambular paragraphs, on some provisions of which it had serious reservations. Canada and New Zealand also reserved their positions with regard to the preamble, while the United States said it believed that extraneous elements had been introduced which should not have been.

Costa Rica, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and Uruguay were among those expressing reservations on the preambular paragraphs on which separate votes had been taken, France and the Federal Republic opposed the restrictive definition given of the right of peoples to self-determination, considering that that right could not be limited solely to peoples under colonial domination or foreign occupation.

The United Kingdom and Uruguay also had reservations about the procedure followed: Mexico and the United Kingdom were concerned at what they felt was undue haste in the consideration of many important aspects.

While various States, such as Democratic Yemen and the USSR, said they supported the text fully, a number of others, speaking in explanation of vote, expressed reservations on the Convention or various articles or provisions thereof.

Brazil and Yemen felt the text required further work and study, and they therefore abstained, According to Brazil, there had been insufficient consideration of the legal implications of the Convention and, if it came into force, it was likely to be accompanied by so many reservations that it would be of doubtful value.

Because of their reservations, several other Members said they had had to abstain, among them Mauritania and the Upper Volta, which said they had reservations on several articles. Certain provisions, Bangladesh noted, were not in accord with its laws. Morocco expressed regret at the seeming lack of understanding of how vital it was that the Convention strike a fair balance among all existing legal systems.

A number of States indicated that their votes in favour were without prejudice to any reservations their Governments might have after further study. Among these were Bahrain, Benin, Chile, Colombia, the Congo, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, the Ivory Coast, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Viet Nam and Zaire.

Chile, the Congo, Egypt, Japan, New Zealand, the Niger, Oman, Pakistan and the United Republic of Tanzania were among States which had reservations on or were not in full agreement with particular provisions, but nevertheless supported the Convention. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates said a number of provisions conflicted with Islamic law. The United Arab Emirates had difficulties with other provisions as well, and felt a more detailed study was needed. Costa Rica and Yemen said they would have preferred the procedure of transmitting the text to Governments for comments.

Guinea and Jordan said they would have preferred that article 6 on the suppression of the exploitation of prostitution of women include suppression of prostitution itself. The provision of article 9 concerning the granting to women of equal rights with men in respect of the nationality of their children conflicted with Algerian, Jordanian and Yemeni legislation, according to their representatives, and was also the subject of Argentine and Malagasy reservations. Algeria and the United Kingdom noted that they had legal difficulties with article 15 on according women equality with men before the law. Article 16 on the elimination of discrimination against women in all matters relating to marriage and family relations gave Algeria, Bahrain, Jordan, Kuwait, the United Kingdom and Yemen difficulties. Guinea regretted rejection of an amendment to give the mother custody of minor children in the event of separation or China said it had reservations with regard to several provisions. Referring in particular to a preambular reference to general and complete disarmament, China said it was in favour of genuine disarmament but stated that as long as imperialism and hegemonism existed it would not be achieved.

The General Assembly,

Considering that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms without distinction of any kind, including any distinction as to sex,

Recalling the proclamation by the General Assembly, in its resolution 2263(XXII) of 7 November 1967, of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women,

Taking into account the conventions, resolutions, declarations and recommendations of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies designed to eliminate all forms of discrimination and to promote equal rights for men and women, Noting, in particular, its resolution 33/1 77 of 20 December

Noting, in particular, its resolution 33/1 77 of 20 December 1978 concerning the drafting of a convention on the elimination of discrimination against women,

Considering that discrimination against women is incompatible with human dignity and the welfare of society and constitutes an obstacle to the full realization of the potentialities of women.

Affirming that women and men should participate and contribute on a basis of equality in the social, economic and political processes of development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recognizing that the welfare of the world and the cause of peace require the full participation of both men and women in society.

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure the universal recognition in law and in fact of the principle of equality of men and women,

- Adopts and opens for signature, ratification and accession the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;
- 2. Expresses the hope that the Convention will be signed and ratified or acceded to without delay and will come into force at an early date;
- 3. Requests the Secretary-General to present the text of the Convention to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women for its information;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a report on the status of the Convention under an item entitled "Status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women."

Conventio n on the Eliminatio n of All Forms of Discriminatio nagains tWomen

The States Parties to the present Convention, Noting that the Charter of the United Nations reaffirms faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women, Noting that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights affirms the principle of the inadmissibility of discrimination and proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, including distinction based on sex,

Noting that the States parties to the International Cove-

Noting that the States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights have the obligation to ensure the equal right of men and women to enjoy all economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Considering the international conventions concluded under the auspices of the United Nations and the specialized agencies promoting equality of rights of men and women.

Noting also the resolutions, declarations and recommendations adopted by the United Nations and the specialized agencies promoting equality of rights of men and women,

Concerned, however, that despite these various instruments extensive discrimination against women continues to exist,

Recalling that discrimination against women violates the principles of equality of rights and respect for human dignity, is an obstacle to the participation of women, on equal terms with men, in the political, social, economic and cultural life of their countries, hampers the growth of the prosperity of society and the family and makes more difficult the full development of the potentialities of women in the service of their countries and of humanity,

Concerned that in situations of poverty women have the least access to food, health, education, training and opportunities for employment and other needs,

Convinced that the establishment of the new international economic order based on equity and justice will contribute significantly towards the promotion of equality between men and women,

Emphasizing that the eradication of apartheid, all forms of racism, racial discrimination, colonialism, neo-colonialism, aggression, foreign occupation and domination and interference in the internal affairs of States is essential to the full enjoyment of the rights of men and women,

Affirming that the strengthening of international peace and security, the relaxation of international tension, mutual cooperation among all States irrespective of their social and economic systems, general and complete disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament under strict and effective international control, the affirmation of the principles of justice, equality and mutual benefit in relations among countries and the realization of the right of peoples under alien and colonial domination and foreign occupation to self-determination and independence, as well as respect for national sovereignty and territorial integrity, will promote social progress and development and as a consequence will contribute to the attainment of full equality between men and women,

Convinced that the full and complete development of a country, the welfare of the world and the cause of peace require the maximum participation of women on equal terms with men in all fields,

Bearing in mind the great contribution of women to the welfare of the family and to the development of society, so far not fully recognized, the social significance of maternity and the role of both parents in the family and in the upbringing of children, and aware that the role of women in procreation should not be a basis for discrimination but that the upbringing of children requires a sharing of responsibility between men and women and society as a whole,

Aware that a change in the traditional role of men as well as the role of women in society and in the family is needed to achieve full equality between men and women,

Determined to implement the principles set forth in the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and, for that purpose, to adopt the measures required for the elimination of such discrimination in all its forms and manifestations,

Have agreed on the following:

PARTI

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Convention, the term "discrimination against women" shall mean any distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality of men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field.

Article 2

States Parties condemn discrimination against women in all its forms, agree to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating discrimination against women and, to this end, undertake:

(b) To adopt appropriate legislative and other measures, including sanctions where appropriate, prohibiting all discrimination against women;

(c) To establish legal protection of the rights of women on an equal basis with men and to ensure through competent national tribunals and other public institutions the effective protection of women against any act of discrimination;

obligation;

(e) To take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women by any person, organization or enterprise;

(f) To take all appropriate measures, including legislation, to modify or abolish existing laws, regulations, customs and practices which constitute discrimination against women;

(g) To repeal all national penal provisions which constitute discrimination against women.

Article 4

1. Adoption by States Parties of temporary special measures aimed at accelerating de facto equality between men and women shall not be considered discrimination as defined in the present Convention, but shall in no way entail as a consequence the maintenance of unequal or separate standards; these measures shall be discontinued when the objectives of equality of opportunity and treatment have been achieved.

2. Adoption by States Parties of special measures, including those measures contained in the present Convention, aimed at protecting maternity shall not be considered discriminatory.

Article 5

States Parties shall take all appropriate measures:

(a) To modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women, with a view to achieving the elimination of prejudices and customary and all other practices which are based on the idea of the inferiority or the superiority of either of the sexes or on stereotyped roles for men and women;

stood that the interest of the children is the primordial consideration in all cases.

Article 6

(a) To vote in all elections and public referenda and to be eligible for election to all publicly elected bodies;

(b) To participate in the formulation of government policy and the implementation thereof and to hold public office and perform all public functions at all levels of government;

(c) To participate in non-governmental organizations and associations concerned with the public and political life of the country.

Article 8

States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure to women, on equal terms with men and without any discrimination, the opportunity to represent their Governments at the international level and to participate in the work of international organizations.

Article 9

1. States Parties shall grant women equal rights with men to acquire, change or retain their nationality. They shall ensure in particular that neither marriage to an alien nor change of nationality by the husband during marriage shall automatically change the nationality of the wife, render her stateless or force upon her the nationality of the husband.

2. States Parties shall grant women equal rights with men with respect to the nationality of their children.

PART III

Article 10

States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in order to ensure to them equal rights with men in the field of education and in particular to ensure, on a basis of equality of men and women:

- (a) The same conditions for career and vocational guidance, for access to studies and for the achievement of diplomas in educational establishments of all categories in rural as well as in urban areas; this equality shall be ensured in pre-school, general, technical, professional and higher technical education, as well as in all types of vocational

(a) The right to work as an inalienable right of all human beings;

(b) The right to the same employment opportunities, including the application of the same criteria for selection in matters of employment;

(c) The right to free choice of profession and employment, the right to promotion, job security and all benefits and conditions of service and the right to receive vocational training and retraining, including apprenticeships, advanced vocational training and recurrent training;

(d) To provide special protection to women during pregnancy in types of work proved to be harmful to them.

Protective legislation relating to matters covered in this article shall be reviewed periodically in the light of scientific and technological knowledge and shall be revised, repealed or extended as necessary.

Training of women for development

Mobilizatio n of women in developmen t

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session, which opened in September, on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, bringing to its attention, in accordance with an Assembly request of 29 January 1979, 12 development-oriented studies by United Nations—related bodies focusing on the impact of policies aimed at mobilizing and integrating women in the development process and on ways of promoting such policies. Inasmuch as, by 31 August 1979, only four United Nations organizations had been able to provide him with the information required for preparation of a comprehensive report, the Secretary-General proposed that the report be submitted to the Assembly at its 1980 session.

Noting that it had not been possible for the Secretary-General to submit the comprehensive report as requested, the Assembly, by resolution 34/204 of 19 December, urged him to prepare it as soon as possible and submit it to the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy at its fifth session and to the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace at its third session—both sessions to be held in April 1980—and to the 1980 regular Assembly session. It also urged United Nations agencies that had not done so to submit the information called for in its 29 January resolution.

The Assembly called on the World Conference to include in the programme of action for the second half of the Decade (1981-1985) concrete measures for the effective mobilization and integration of women in all sectors of development, stressed the important role in the Decade of the interagency programme with regard to coordinating activities on this subject, and asked participating United Nations organizations to implement the programme. It also asked Governments to provide information on successful projects or programmes aimed at ameliorating the current situation of women in development.

By other provisions of resolution 34/204 on the effective mobilization and integration of women in development, the Assembly welcomed the inclusion in the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, held at Rome in July 1979 (see p. 500), of special provisions relating to the integration of women in rural development. It called on the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and other United Nations organizations to aid Governments in implementing those provisions and to initiate research, projects and programmes to facilitate the integration of women in rural development by examining inter alia women's rural-to-urban migration problems, training programmes for them in new agro-technology, the impact on them of agro-business, their participation in the co-operative movement, and their access to land, credit and marketing facilities.

The Assembly also welcomed and asked the Secretary-General to implement a resolution on women, science and technology (see p. 640), adopted by the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development, and to report thereon.

The Assembly emphasized the importance of women's integration and participation in industrial development, and asked the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to consider this question at its Third General Conference in January/February 1980, particularly the impact of new technology and the deployment of modern industries on women's traditional skills and occupations, and identification of ways to enhance their equal participation in industrial development.

The Assembly also welcomed Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/11 of 9 May 1979 relating to the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, its location and programme priority (see section immediately following).

Resolution 34/204 was adopted, without vote, on a recommendation by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved it by consensus on 8 December on a proposal by 35 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The original text was twice revised, the second time taking into account joint amendments, concerning the establishment, location and activities of the International Research and Training Institute, by Colombia, Costa Rica and the Dominican Republic, which then withdrew their amendments. The text was further orally amended by the sponsors to incorporate an Iraqi proposal to take note, by a preambular paragraph, of the part of the Economic Declaration adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana, Cuba, in September 1979, relating to the role of women in development.

Status of women 901

Israel, speaking after the vote, said that, although it had joined in the consensus, it had reservations concerning the preambular reference to the Economic Declaration. Egypt also had misgivings about the reference to a conference that had made recommendations unacceptable to Egypt. With reference to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said those countries understood that the resolution would complement relevant resolutions approved by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee; to avoid duplication of Conference preparations and reports, account should be taken of existing documents and resolutions.

Other resolutions adopted in 1979 also dealt with the integration of women in development efforts.

When the Economic and Social Council, on 9 May, adopted recommendations on priority areas for action to implement the 1974 World Population Plan of Action¹³ and to achieve its goals, it urged Governments to give high priority to the full integration of women into the development process, particularly by greater participation in educational, social, economic and political opportunities, and, when formulating policies and programmes, to consider the relationship between population structure and the changing role and status of women.

These actions were contained in an annex to resolution 1979/32, dealing with strengthening actions concerned with the fulfilment of the World Population Plan of Action. (For details, see p. 785.)

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/130 of 14 December, commended Lesotho's efforts to integrate women more fully into its development efforts and asked the Secretary-General to consult with the Government on the type and amount of assistance required to achieve this. (For details, see p. 240.)

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 29 January 1979, 14 the Secretary-General reported in April 1979 on recent developments concerning the establishment of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women.

He reported that on 12 January he had received a note verbale from Iran informing him of its decision to withdraw its offer to act as the host country to the Institute. Alternative offers of host facilities had been received from Austria the Dominican Republic and Tunisia, and dis cussions were currently being held. Preparatory work for the establishment of the Institute was continuing under the auspices of the United Nations Secretariat's Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs at Vienna, with resources provided by the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women. The Secretary-General reported that he had opened a United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women to receive and administer contributions.

The Economic and Social Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report at its April/May 1979 session and having taken note with appreciation of the offers of host facilities recommended that: the Institute be located in the Dominican Republic; pending signature of the agreement with the host country, substantive and administrative preparations for the establishment continue in New York; and the appointment of the Board of Trustees be postponed until the Council's second regular 1979 session to allow for consultations to identify candidates The Council recommended termination of the arrangements whereby administrative costs for preparatory work to establish the Institute were charged against the Voluntary Fund and that all further expenditure, after the appointment of Board members, should be charged to the United Nations Trust Fund for the Institute.

The Council took these actions on 9 May when it adopted resolution 1979/11, without vote, similarly approved by its Second (Social) Committee on 27 April. The text was sponsored by Argentina, Barbados, Colombia, Spain, the United States and Venezuela.

The Secretary-General submitted a further report on the Institute in October by which he informed the General Assembly that facilities had been assigned for the Institute by the host country, that by Council decision 1979/58 of 2 August the members of the Board of Trustees had been appointed (see APPENDIX III), and that the first session of the Board had taken place at Geneva from 22 to 26 October to consider a proposed programme of operations and budget. The amounts pledged to the Institute as at 30 June 1979 were annexed to the report.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/157 of 17 December, accepted with appreciation the Dominican Republic's offer to act as host for the Institute, invited Governments to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for the Institute and requested the Secretary-General to consult Member States with a view to nominating the Director of the Institute as soon as possible/The Secretary-General was asked to submit a report to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council on the work of the Institute, together with the Board's report.

Resolution 34/157 was adopted without vote by both the Assembly and its Third Committee, which considered the item. The Committee had approved the text on 28 November as sponsored by 32 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By resolution 34/204 of 19 December, the General Assembly asked the Institute to give priority to the question of the effective mobilization and integration of women in development (see section immediately preceding).

Pledging Conference

At the 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held in New York on 6 November, voluntary contributions were pledged to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women for 1980. As at 30 June 1980, amounts pledged or paid to the Trust Fund totalled $137,579. (For details, see p. 558.)

Status and role of women in education and in the economic and social fields

At its regular 1979 session, the General Assembly considered a report of the Secretary-General on the status and role of women in education and in the economic and social fields. The report examined the situation of women both in less developed and mere developed countries in each of these fields and concluded that the nature of the integration of many developing countries into the existing international economic order had caused the role and status of women in society to deteriorate. Conversely, the depressed status of women and limitations on their productivity and effective participation in the economy had constrained many aspects of national development, thereby contributing to the developing countries' economic weaknesses and hence to the maintenance of an unbalanced international economic order. A simultaneous and closely coordinated strategy at both the international and national levels was required to break the cycle; changes in both international and national development processes, together with special measures on behalf of women, would be needed to solve the problems which were depressing the role and status of women. The report stressed the urgency of the situation.

The report also presented, in an addendum, updated in May 1980, analytical information on factors associated with the conditions of women and their participation in development. Economic indicators, demographics of the female population, their enrolment in formal education, urban employment of women, the percentage of rural women, international migration of women, their illiteracy rate and reproductive behaviour were listed separately by State.

On 17 December 1979, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/159, requested the Secretary-General to circulate his report as a background document for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women and invited the Conference to give due attention to this question for the achievement of the equality of women with men. The Assembly urged States to take necessary measures to promote such equality in education and in the economic and social fields. It recommended that States should envisage in their policies all appropriate measures to create the conditions necessary to enable women to participate in work on an equal footing with men and should expand an exchange of experiences in matters concerning the improvement of the status and role of women in education and in the economic and social fields for the achievement of equality with men.

Resolution 34/159 was adopted without vote; it had been similarly approved on 29 November by the Third Committee. The text was sponsored by 38 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Other action to promote the advancement of women

Technica I co-operatio n activitie s

In 1979, grants from the regular programme of technical co-operation activities for the advancement of women were made to women from the least developed countries and from those most seriously affected by economic crises to attend the regional preparatory meetings for the 1980 World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women.

For travel and subsistence costs, six countries in the region of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific received sums for representatives to attend a meeting at New Delhi, India, from 5 to 9 November; seven Economic Commission for Latin America members were granted funds to attend a meeting at Caracas, Venezuela, from 12 to 16 November; costs were defrayed for 32 countries in the Economic Commission for Africa region for participation in a Lusaka, Zambia, meeting from 3 to 7 December; and four members of the Economic Commission for Western Asia received grants to attend a meeting at Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, from 10 to 13 December.

These grants allowed women from the developing countries to review the progress made and the obstacles encountered by their countries in implementing the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year, 15 with attention to their respective regional plans of action on the integration of women in development. They also examined the accomplishments and problems associated with establishing and strengthening national, subregional and regional machinery at governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental levels, considered the role of United Nations interagency co-operation in accelerating these trends and innovations, and proposed programmes and strategies for the second half of the United Nations Decade for Women.

Another regional preparatory meeting for the Conference was held in Paris from 9 to 12 July 1979.

Women and childre n under apartheid

The General Assembly, when it adopted resolution 34/93 K on 12 December 1979, took a number of actions concerning women and children under apartheid, requesting Governments and organizations to contribute generously to assist them. Other action to be taken included publicizing the oppression of such women and children and their heroic resistance, thereby mobilizing world opinion for action against apartheid, and promoting solidarity with them through conferences, seminars and other activities. (For details, see p. 183.)

ChapterXXI

United Nations Children's Fund

Activities in 1979

The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) held its annual session from 21 May to 1 June 1979 in Mexico City where it reviewed UNICEF'S major policies, including the progress of the International Year of the Child (1979), problems in child health, education, services for children in low-income urban areas, handicapped children, assistance to women and children under liberation movements, emergency relief and rehabilitation, and questions of water supply and sanitation in primary health care.

Preceding this session, a special meeting, held under the Board's auspices with representatives of members and associate members of the Economic Commission for Latin America, considered the situation of children in Latin America and the Caribbean, and adopted a Declaration on Attention to Children in Latin America and the Caribbean (Declaration of Mexico), setting a target of providing, with international assistance, basic services for all children by the year 2000.

Planning and programming

At its 1979 session, the Board approved UNICEF'S first medium-term work plan, as distinct from a financial plan, for 1978-1982, designed to achieve firmer longer-term planning of UNICEF'S work, lead to more long-term country programming and encourage contributions on a longer-term basis. Performance in implementing programmes received detailed attention in the Programme Committee.

With regard to setting programme targets, the Board agreed that UNICEF, rather than defining global goals of its own, should assist countries to apply to their needs relevant global targets adopted by international conferences or United Nations assemblies.

The Board considered two separate reports on problems of programming and budget. One, from the Executive Director of UNICEF on programme performance, noted that the system for monitoring and controlling call-forward, procurement and delivery of UNICEF supplies, and logistics management support to field offices, was being strengthened; the other, prepared for UNICEF by the Joint Inspection Unit, pointed out that the monitoring and evaluation of UNICEF-assisted programmes could be improved if better information about the situation of children in different countries were available.

The Board agreed that monitoring and evaluation of UNICEF-assisted programmes should be strengthened and that interpretation of data in programming should be improved. It approved in principle the adoption of a biennial budget for administrative services, programme support and related services starting with 1982-1985, and accepted a recommendation that research be carried out to develop more precise indicators for programme evaluation.

Water supply and sanitation

The Board approved a series of recommendations in the UNICEF/World Health Organization (WHO) Joint Committee on Health Policy report, which discussed water supply and sanitation as components of primary health care, training in maternal and child health, and child mental health. The Board agreed that UNICEF should: continue to advocate primary health care at the policy level; support intersectoral planning and co-ordination for health development; strengthen training, research and advisory services in developing countries; support the introduction of primary health care in rural and peri-urban programmes; and support community-based activities aimed at safeguarding and promoting the mental health of children as an integral part of primary health care.

It also agreed that, in order to obtain the full benefit from water supply and sanitation programmes, UNICEF should consider personal hygiene, supplies of clean water for drinking and household use, refuse and excreta disposal, the cleanliness of the neighbourhood, and food storage and handling.

The Board therefore decided that UNICEF, in co-operation with countries, should support water and sanitation projects as components of comprehensive primary health care, with particular emphasis on underserved rural and fringe urban areas. Increasing emphasis was placed on involving communities, and especially women, in water supply projects, on expanding UNICEF'S concern with sanitation and on using innovative low-cost technologies.

Throughout 1979, one of the major objectives of UNICEF'S co-operative programmes was to strengthen technical co-operation among the developing countries in order to extend services in primary health care, water supply and sanitation at the local level. It also held seminars for officials of Governments, WHO and UNICEF in order to build an informed and convinced body of personnel in primary health care at the policyand decision-making levels.

In 1979, UNICEF spent $42 million on water supply and sanitation installations, including 75,000 small water-supply units serving 15 million people (6.5 million children) and 130,000 units for excreta disposal serving nearly 1.3 million people.

The Board approved UNICEF support for expanded programmes of immunization, essential-drug supplies, diarrhoeal disease control and technology suited to community health care. It agreed to provide training for all health personnel concerned with maternal and child health together with orientation courses for personnel in allied services: teachers, agricultural workers, community workers, home economists and others in contact with communities.

In total, $94 million was spent on child health services in 1979 including water supply and family planning services. It Was again the largest single component of UNICEF co-operative programming and absorbed 53 per cent of the UNICEF programme budget. Basic child health services were allocated $49 million.

International Year of the Child

The Board discussed UNICEF'S work as lead agency for the International Year of the Child (IYC). It agreed that IYC had created an interest in the well-being of children far exceeding original expectations and that this momentum should be maintained, that the IYC secretariat should not continue beyond the end of 1980 but that care should be taken to phase it out smoothly, and that UNICEF should consider maintaining the minimum level of activities required to maintain the impetus generated by IYC until the Board could determine the extent to which UNICEF should be further involved in this work. The Fund might facilitate a useful exchange of information among developing and industrialized countries on common problems.

There was wide agreement that UNICEF should continue as lead agency for children in the United Nations system and that the Executive Director's 1980 report should examine ways in which UNICEF could respond to requests from developing countries for additional co-operation.

Child nutrition

From 9 to 12 October 1979, some 150 scientists and representatives of Governments, the infant-food industry, consumer and professional groups and women's organizations met at a UNICEF/WHO-sponsored meeting in Geneva. The participants asked WHO and UNICEF to take the lead in developing an international code of marketing infant formula and other breastmilk—substitute products. They recommended that there be no sales promotion of breast-milk substitutes, bottle-fed supplements or feeding bottles and that WHO and UNICEF should give more support to the promotion of breast-feeding and the timely introduction of semi-solid and solid weaning foods.

Measures to improve child nutrition accounted for 7 per cent of UNICEF'S programme expenditure in 1979 and underpinned much of its work in other areas.

Education

In 1979, UNICEF expenditure on primary education was $27 million (13 per cent of the total programme expenditure), and on non-formal education, $7 million (3.5 per cent). Non-formal education included women's education and training, an important component of which was to teach women and girls about health, food and nutrition, child and family care, home improvement and training in practical skills. Some 93,300 educational institutions received equipment and supplies; 99,200 education personnel received training with UNICEF stipends.

Emergency relief and rehabilitation

Emergency assistance assumed a prominent place in UNICEF'S activities during 1979 largely because of the relief programme in Democratic Kampuchea. On 7 September, the Secretary-General had designated UNICEF as the lead United Nations agency, in co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, for carrying out the programme. Other agencies associated with this project included the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. In August, UNICEF had begun to provide food, medical supplies and other humanitarian assistance and in October launched a major programme to provide increased assistance.

The Fund also continued to provide assistance to refugee mothers and children cared for by liberation movements in southern Africa and in the Middle East.

Income and expenditure

During 1979, UNICEF'S revenue totalled $253 million. Of that, $183 million was allocated to general programmes and $70 million, including $31 million for Kampuchean relief work, was earmarked for specific purposes. By source of revenue, 71 per cent, excluding contributions for Kampuchea, came directly from 125 Governments as regular and special contributions, 20 per cent from private sources, such as fundraising campaigns, greeting-card profits and individual donations, 1 per cent from the United Nations system, and 8 per cent from miscellaneous sources.

Not included in the recorded revenue were donations-in-kind delivered through UNICEF in 1979, mainly in the form of children's foods, valued at $34 million. Also not counted as revenue was $27 million handled by UNICEF as funds-in-trust not subject to Board commitment, mainly for reimbursable supply procurement on behalf of Governments, organizations in the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations.

Expenditures in 1979 amounted to $259 million: $191 million for programme assistance ($146 million for supplies and $45 million for non-supply assistance); $30 million for programme support services; $19 million for administrative services; $18 million for Kampuchean relief; and nearly $1 million for IYC operational costs.

Decisions of deliberative bodies

International Year of the Child

The Economic and Social Council, at its second regular 1979 session, considered a March 1979 progress report of the UNICEF Executive Director on activities undertaken by States and organizations in connexion with IYC.

The report, prepared in accordance with a 1978 General Assembly resolution, discussed reasons for the success of IYC, which it said was due to five main factors: the international awareness of the need for such a Year; the work of national IYC commissions and Government support; the role played by the organizations of the United Nations system; the enthusiasm of nongovernmental organizations and other groups; and the activities of the IYC secretariat. The report also discussed the IYC Trust Fund and various other questions that had arisen regarding follow-through on the interest created by IYC, and contained recommendations thereon.

The Council also heard an oral report of the Special Representative for IYC on the progress achieved at the national and international levels in implementing the objectives of the Assembly's 1976 resolution proclaiming the Year.²

By a resolution adopted on 3 August 1979, the Council expressed appreciation for the manner in which UNICEF had carried out its responsibilities as lead agency for IYC and commended the efforts of participating agencies and non-governmental organizations, in particular the Committee of Non-Governmental Organizations for the International Year of the Child. The Council urged Governments to include in their national plans and programmes measures aimed at improving the situation of children, and invited all Governments to participate in the Assembly's forthcoming debate on IYC. International organizations, in particular those within the United Nations system, were asked to continue to co-operate with UNICEF in developing a co-ordinated and interdisciplinary approach to the welfare of children. The Council also recommended that the Assembly consider ways of ensuring adequate follow-up to IYC.

Resolution 1979/57, containing these actions, was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee, which had similarly approved the text on 24 July. It was sponsored by Barbados, Colombia, India, Mauritania, Mexico, Norway, the Philippines, Poland, Senegal, Turkey, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly at its regular 1979 session considered a later version of the Executive Director's report, which presented some preliminary conclusions and suggestions on projects and programmes initiated, included information on the enthusiasm with which the Year had been received world-wide, and summarized plans and activities to which IYC had given rise in some 170 countries and territories. An addendum described the work of organizations in the United Nations system participating in the Year and that of the Committee of Non-Governmental Organizations for IYC, containing reports by the members of the Inter-Agency Advisory Group brought together by UNICEF to co-ordinate and stimulate activities in the system.

Several times during the year, the Secretary-General transmitted communications and special messages from Governments in connexion with IYC. In addition, the Assembly had before it, among other documents, a number of communications circulated at the request of Governments: the USSR transmitted the text of a New Year's television message to children by its President and, in October, the texts of documents adopted by the World Conference for a Peaceful and Happy Future for All Children, held at Moscow in September; Romania transmitted the text of a decree of 1 March on an increase of State allowances for children and a decrease in military expenditures; Cuba on 12 June transmitted messages sent by the President of the Cuban Committee for IYC; Poland on 13 June transmitted a joint letter to the Secretary-General from officers of national commissions to investigate Nazi crimes and for IYC, as well as an appeal of the International Scientific Session on "The Child in the Second World War," held at Warsaw in April; and Bulgaria on 5 October forwarded an appeal made by children who took part in the International Children's Assembly "Banner of Peace" in August at Sofia.

In addition, the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid transmitted the conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, held at Paris in June 1979, which was organized by the Special Committee in co-operation with the Non-Governmental Organizations Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization.

By a resolution adopted without vote on 18 October, the General Assembly expressed satisfaction to Governments for their national programmes and to those which had initiated major regional and international events. It expressed deep appreciation to UNICEF, the Executive Director and his Special Representative and staff and commended the efforts of other organizations. The Assembly urged Governments to consolidate and build on the results of IYC in order to achieve lasting benefits for children. It suggested measures such as: including programmes and services benefiting children in national development planning; identifying, defining and documenting the situation of children; setting specific national targets for meeting their needs, inter alia in health and education and for the development of intellectual and cultural abilities; and increasing budgetary provision for programmes for children.

Recognizing the importance of aiding and protecting the family as a basic unit of society and the natural environment for the development and welfare of its members, especially children, the Assembly asked Governments and organizations to develop special assistance programmes for children oppressed by apartheid, to review their assistance policies to developing countries and to give more recognition and aid to programmes benefiting children. It stressed the importance of following up on activities of the Year through long-term plans and action, asked Governments and United Nations organizations to do so, to evaluate IYC'S impact on their activities and to inform the Secretary-General, invited non-governmental organizations to expand their programmes, and designated UNICEF as lead agency to co-ordinate the developmental aspects of follow-up activities in consultation with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. It further requested the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to take the interests and needs of children into account in elaborating its goals and objectives.

These were among the provisions of resolution 34/4, the text of which, twice revised, was sponsored by 68 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The final revision incorporated amendments jointly sponsored by Nigeria and Zambia; Nigeria then became a sponsor of the text.

Programme and revenue target

The Economic and Social Council at its second regular 1979 session considered the report of the Executive Board of UNICEF on its May/June 1979 session held in Mexico City.

By resolution 1979/53, the Council endorsed the conclusions in the report, noting with approval the conclusion that UNICEF should continue as the lead agency for children within the United Nations system. It endorsed in particular the joint UNICEF/WHO efforts in co-operating with the developing countries to integrate primary health-care policies in national planning strategies and programmes. In view of the magnitude of the tasks that would follow IYC, it appealed to all Governments to increase their voluntary contributions to UNICEF in relation to their capacity so that the revenue target of $290 million for 1981 could be reached and the rapidly increasing needs of children in developing countries could be met.

The Council adopted this resolution on 2 August without vote. The Third Committee had approved it without vote on 27 July. The text was sponsored by Barbados, China, Cyprus, Finland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, the United Arab Emirates, the United States and Zambia.

The General Assembly at its regular 1979 session adopted resolution 34/105 by which it endorsed Council resolution 1979/53. It expressed full appreciation of UNICEF'S enlarged responsibilities and range of activities to be undertaken in the light of unmet needs of children in developing countries and the importance of enhancing the new impetus generated by IYC. It also appealed with a sense of urgency to Governments to increase their contributions to UNICEF, on a multiyear basis if possible, so that the Fund might reach its revenue target for 1981.

Resolution 34/105 was adopted on 14 December, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved it without vote on 28

November. The text was sponsored by 50 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Convention on the rights of the child

The Commission on Human Rights continued work on drawing up a draft convention on the rights of the child at its February/March 1979 session. Unable to complete its task, it decided, by a resolution of 14 March, to continue work on the draft convention in 1980.

The Economic and Social Council decided, by decision 1979/37 of 10 May, to bring the Commission's work and discussions on the convention to the attention of the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session.

(For further details, see p. 863.)

Pledging Conference

The 1979 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 6 November to announce pledges for 10 United Nations funds and programmes, including UNICEF. In all, 83 Governments announced pledges of $78,380,657 for UNICEF'S general resources for 1980. Further contributions amounting to $8.8 million were also announced for specific projects and for the administrative costs of the IYC secretariat. The timing of national budget preparations and need for governmental approval meant that a number of States were unable to announce their pledges for 1980 at the Conference. (See also p. 556.)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 33/83 of 15 December 1978, by which it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fourth session an item entitled "International Year of the Child: plans and action to improve the situation of children in the world, particularly in the developing countries," and inter alia requested the United Nations Children's Fund to submit a comprehensive, action-oriented report on the project and programmes initiated by Governments and specialized agencies in connexion with the Year,

Recalling also Council resolution 1978/40 of 1 August

1978 on the International Year of the Child,

Having considered the progress report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund on the International Year of the Child, 1979, and having heard the report of the Special Representative for the International Year of the Child on the progress achieved at the national and international levels in the implementation of the objectives of General Assembly resolution 31/169 of 21 December 1976, proclaiming 1979 the International Year of the Child,

Noting with satisfaction that the Year has already generated widespread interest in ail countries in the objectives of the Year and concern for the problems facing children everywhere, particularly those in developing countries, and that this is leading to meaningful programmes of action at the national level to meet the needs of children,

Mindful of the fact that 1979 is also the twentieth anniversary of the adoption by the United Nations of the Declaration children and the observance of their rights, and the broader and more comprehensive framework of over-all economic and social development in conditions of peace,

Recognizing in this regard that the observance of the Year has contributed towards the reaffirmation of the goals of a new international economic order,

Recognizing also that the situation of children in developing countries depends on the economic and social development of those countries and consequently on the establishment of a new international economic order,

Deeply gratified by the world-wide response of the international community in observing the Year as a first essential step towards achieving the longer-range objectives of the Year, while also highlighting the international co-operative efforts towards the improvement of the well-being of children and the attainment of the harmonious development of their personalities,

Bearing in mind the conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, held in Paris from 18 to 20 June 1979 at the headquarters of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in observance of the Year,

Noting that the approach adopted by the United Nations in organizing the Year contributed to its success,

Convinced that the fresh and necessary impetus to activities, generated by the Year, should be maintained and that the new perspectives it has created should be followed by appropriate action in the years to come,

Having considered the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund on the International Year of the Child, 1. Expresses its deep satisfaction to all Governments which elaborated national programmes for the implementation of the aims of the International Year of the Child and to those among them which became initiators of major regional and other international events;

(b) Further identifying, defining and documenting the situation of children:

(c) Setting specific national targets and goals for meeting the needs of children, inter alia, in the fields of health and education and for the development of their intellectual and cultural abilities;

in the developing countries;

Resolution 1979/53, as recommended by Third Committee, E/1979/117, adopted without vote by Council on 2 August 1979, meeting 39.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its session held at Mexico

City from 21 May to 1 June 1979,

Noting with satisfaction that many developing countries participating in the International Year of the Child are preparing to meet more fully the needs of their children, in certain instances planning country coverage in essential basic services, with an emphasis on primary health care, a clean water supply and primary education,

Bearing in mind that to reach the goals that developing countries are setting for themselves in order to improve the situation of their children a significant increase in external assistance will be required in the years following the International Year of the Child, in pursuit of one of the objectives of the new international economic order,

Aware that the new and enlarged programmes of developing countries benefiting their children offer greater opportunity for effective co-operation with the Fund, provided that the level of its revenue rises,

Noting with approval the activities of the Fund as reflected in the report of the Executive Board, especially the programmes assisted, the adoption of a medium-term work plan and efforts to improve co-ordination and strengthen collaboration with organizations of the United Nations system and other sources of aid,

Noting also with approval the conclusion reached by the Executive Board that the Fund should continue as the lead agency for children within the United Nations system,

1. Endorses the conclusions contained in the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund;

2. Endorses in particular the joint efforts of the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization in co-operating with the developing countries to integrate primary health-care policies, in harmony with the Fund's approach to basic services for children, in national strategies, plans of action and programmes;

3. Appeals to all Governments to increase their contributions to the Fund in relation to their capacity, so that it may reach the revenue target of $290 million for 1981, as projected at the session of the Executive Board, and meet the rapidly increasing needs of children in developing countries, particularly in view of the expected magnitude of the tasks that will follow the International Year of the Child.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/53 of 2 August 1979,

Having considered the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its session held at Mexico City from 21 May to 1 June 1 979,

Having in mind its resolution 34/4 of 18 October 1979 on the International Year of the Child, in particular paragraphs 6, 7, 8 and 12 thereof,

Commends the policies and activities of the United Nations Children's Fund;

2. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1979/53;

3. Fully appreciates the enlarged responsibilities of the United Nations Children's Fund and the broad range of activities on behalf of children to be undertaken by it in the light of the still enormous unmet needs of children in developing countries and the importance of maintaining and enhancing the new impetus to activities on their behalf generated by the International Year of the Child;

4. Commends the United Nations Children's Fund for its elaboration and implementation of the basic services approach for children as part of a comprehensive development strategy and emphasizes the importance of co-ordinating, in connexion with that approach, the activities of the Fund with those of other organs and specialized agencies in the United Nations system;

5. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments that are contributing to the United Nations Children's Fund and appeals, with a sense of urgency, to all Governments, especially those not contributing at a level commensurate with their capacity, to increase their contributions, if possible on a multiyear basis, so that the Fund may reach its revenue target of $290 million for 1981, as projected at the session of the Executive Board held at Mexico City from 21 May to 1 June 1979;

6. Expresses its deep appreciation to Mr. Henry R. Labouisse for his distinguished service, dedication and personal involvement in the work of the United Nations Children's Fund for almost fifteen years as its Executive Director.

Chapter XXII

Assistance to refugees

Activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Increased tensions in various areas in 1979 continued to place further demands on the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). With the number of refugees rising, particularly in Africa and South-East Asia, UNHCR was called upon to provide international protection and material assistance both to asylum-seekers traditionally falling within the High Commissioner's mandate and to groups of displaced persons within their country of origin.

On 29 November 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 34/60, 34/61 and 34/62 concerned, respectively, with: the report of the High Commissioner for the period April 1978 through March 1979; the situation of African refugees, considered at a pan-African conference on the problem held in May 1979 at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, partly under UNHCR sponsorship; and the report of the Secretary-General on a Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia, convened at Geneva in July. By resolution 34/62, the Assembly also took note of a Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea, convened at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 5 November 1979.

International protection

In 1979, activities of UNHCR in the field of international protection of refugees chiefly concerned questions of asylum, rescue at sea and violations of the generally accepted principle of non-refoulement, under which no person was to be returned to a territory where he had reason to fear persecution.

While the majority of States continued to grant either temporary or durable asylum in 1979, large-scale refusals of even temporary asylum to refugees arriving by land or sea in South-East Asia led to serious consequences, including, in many cases, loss of life.

The Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme, in decisions and conclusions taken at its thirtieth session, held at Geneva from 8 to 16 October 1979, stressed the importance of international protection of refugees and called upon all States to respect their rights, especially in regard to the fundamental principles of asylum and non-refoulement. It also stressed the need for assistance to States of first asylum in cases involving the large-scale influx of refugees, in accordance with the principle of equitable international burden-sharing, and expressed appreciation for the practical results including pledges, resettlement opportunities and plans for establishing refugee processing centres—arising from the Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia, convened by the Secretary-General at Geneva on 20 and 21 July 1979 (see subsection below). The Executive Committee severely condemned recent attacks on refugee camps in southern Africa and expressed the hope that steps would be taken to protect refugees and assist victims. It also decided to establish a working group to study proposals by the High Commissioner for creation of a UNHCR fund for durable solutions and invited the High Commissioner to convene the Committee, at the latest by 31 January 1980, to consider the group's report.

The special problems of South-East Asian refugees departing by sea were considered by a Meeting of Experts on Rescue Operations for Refugees and Displaced Persons in Distress in the South China Sea, convoked by the High Commissioner at Geneva on 14 August 1979. The meeting, attended by representatives of 10 Governments and by experts from the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization and the World Meteorological Organization, recommended, inter alia, that the international community provide guarantees of resettlement opportunities to receiving States where the flag States of the rescuing vessels were not prepared to make such provisions.

Other aspects of international protection involving UNHCR in 1979 included the processing of complaints of expulsion, detention and violations of the personal safety of refugees, and establishment of refugees' economic and social rights, including rights to education, employment, naturalization, and the provision of identity and travel documents.

Notable progress was made in 1979 in family reunification of Vietnamese; a programme for reuniting separated families was the subject of a Memorandum of Understanding concluded on 30 May between Viet Nam and UNHCR. The Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme, at its October session, urged further efforts by Governments towards the resettlement of refugees and displaced persons from Indo-China, including liberalized admission criteria and the earmarking of resettlement opportunities for those rescued at sea. The Committee also encouraged Governments to participate in the programme of orderly departures from Viet Nam called for in the Memorandum of Understanding, and cautioned against prematurely placing unaccompanied refugee minors for adoption.

Significant progress was also made in the area of voluntary repatriation of refugees, considered the most desirable of durable solutions. Large numbers returned to Burma, Nicaragua and Zaire in 1979, and UNHCR was appointed to coordinate the eventual return of more than 200,000 refugees to Zimbabwe following the signing of the Lancaster House agreements in December 1979. (For further information, see p. 1108.)

In accordance with his mandate, the High Commissioner continued to encourage accessions to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and to its 1967 Protocol. In 1979, the number of parties to the Convention rose from 76 to 77 and the number of parties to the Protocol—which extended the personal scope of the Convention and its application to new groups of refugees—rose from 71 to 72.

The High Commissioner also continued to encourage accession to regional agreements and adoption of appropriate national legislation affecting the status of refugees. In 1979, the number of States parties to the 1969 Organization of African Unity (OAU) Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa rose to 19.

A pan-African Conference on the Situation of Refugees in Africa was held from 7 to 17 May 1979 at Arusha, under the auspices of UNHCR, OAU and the Economic Commission for Africa. Recommendations concerning the international protection of refugees and asylum-seekers were approved by the Conference, including the right of asylum, non-refoulement, rights and obligations of refugees in countries of asylum, the determination of refugee status, illegal entry and expulsion, the rights and safety of refugees, conditions of rural and urban refugees, questions of training, counselling and employment, the establishment of appropriate national machinery for dealing with refugee problems, and the need to formulate assistance programmes and secure for them maximum support.

The recommendations of the Arusha Conference were endorsed by the OAU Council of Ministers at a July 1979 session held at Monrovia, Liberia, and its conclusions and achievements were welcomed by the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme at its October session. The Committee invited African States to facilitate the resettlement in Africa of African refugees of urban background, in line with recommendations of the Conference.

Material assistance to refugees

In 1979, approximately $270 million was spent on relief and other assistance to refugees and displaced persons, doubling the figure for 1978. Of this amount, some $162.3 million went to finance UNHCR'S general programmes of assistance and $107.7 million to special programmes. Assistance continued to be aimed at finding durable solutions, whether through voluntary repatriation, local integration or resettlement, though immediate relief measures were extended in emergency situations.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN AFRICA

In numerical terms, Africa continued to be the region of greatest concern to UNHCR. The population of refugees and displaced persons in the Horn of Africa and the Sudan continued to grow, exceeding 1.5 million by the end of 1979, prompting special assistance measures and the appointment of a Special Co-ordinator for the area. The High Commissioner appealed for humanitarian assistance in the region to fund, among other projects, a proposed $2.2 million programme for Djibouti. A total of $16.9 million was spent by UNHCR for aid to refugees in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan.

In Somalia, where the camp population, composed mainly of women and children, was increasing by some 1,500 a day by year's end, UNHCR concentrated its assistance on immediate relief requirements, including transportation, water-supply systems, education and small-scale agricultural projects. In the Sudan, the number of refugees from Chad, Ethiopia, Uganda and Zaire grew to 42,000 by the end of 1979, and UNHCR opened suboffices in Port Sudan and Juba to administer emergency relief and resettlement programmes.

Refugees from Angola, Burundi, Namibia,

Rwanda, South Africa and Zaire were among the other groups receiving UNHCR aid in Africa. With the assistance of UNHCR, numerous refugees returned in 1979 to Angola, Equatorial Guinea, Uganda and Zaire, where conditions were favourable for voluntary repatriation.

The bulk of the $72 million spent for assistance in Africa was devoted to local, rural resettlement programmes, though refugees in urban areas also received benefits, such as salary subsidies, vocational training and counselling.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN THE AMERICAS

The total refugee population in South America at the end of 1979 was estimated to consist of 65,000 elderly refugees of European origin and some 45,000 Latin Americans. Early in the year, some 100,000 Nicaraguans—many of whom later returned voluntarily to their countrywere receiving UNHCR assistance. New refugees benefited from UNHCR emergency material assistance as well as from programmes aimed at local integration or resettlement. Total expenditures for the Latin American countries amounted to $8.6 million.

In Canada and the United States, UNHCR was primarily concerned with promoting the resettlement of refugees from other regions. The United States accepted 110,452 Indo-Chinese refugees in 1979 and Canada admitted 24,729. Both countries also continued to accept refugees from Latin America and elsewhere.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN ASIA AND WESTERN ASIA

In 1979, total UNHCR expenditures in Asia and Western Asia amounted to $162.5 million as compared with $48.5 million in 1978, an increase of over 300 per cent. This reflected the growing seriousness of the area's refugee problems, particularly in South-East Asia.

In addition, an influx of Afghan refugees into Pakistan provided new cause for concern. By the end of the year, more than 400,000 such refugees had been registered. Responding to a request for assistance by the Pakistan Government in April, UNHCR made available $190,000 from the Emergency Fund to meet immediate needs. An assistance programme of $4.1 million was approved in October to provide food, clothing, shelter, domestic utensils and other supplies for the remainder of 1979.

In South-East Asia, the number of 1979 arrivals in Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand amounted to 270,000 persons (nearly 204,600 of whom were so-called Vietnamese "boat people" arriving by sea). Resettlement efforts by UNHCR in cooperation with individual Governments were intensified, allowing the relocation of 192,500 Indo-Chinese refugees to third countries. At the same time material assistance, including emergency food and medical supplies, continued to be provided for refugees in their countries of first asylum.

By the end of 1979, approximately 250,000 refugees had crossed the Vietnamese border into China, and assistance provided by UNHCR included funds for local integration and durable shelter. Total assistance amounted to $6.2 million.

A Memorandum of Understanding, concluded in May 1979 between UNHCR and Viet Nam, established procedures for orderly and legal departure of emigrants, under which some 2,000 Vietnamese were resettled abroad by year's end.

A total of $139.8 million was spent in Hong Kong, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, the Philippines, Thailand and Viet Nam to assist refugees. Almost $133,000 was committed by UNHCR for activities in Australia and New Zealand, which admitted, respectively, 14,347 and 1,047 refugees from South-East Asia.

The repatriation programme from Bangladesh to Burma was completed successfully by the end of 1979, expenditures under the programme amounting to more than $2.5 million, while in Burma, obligations to resettle the returnees totalled $3.1 million.

In Western Asia, UNHCR expended $268,800 to assist refugees in Iran, Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen. The refugee population in Lebanon for which UNHCR had responsibility in 1979 increased to an estimated 2,900, due largely to the arrival of Ethiopians. As in previous years, resettlement and integration efforts there were impeded by local conflict.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN EUROPE

In spite of a sizable number of naturalizations and departures, the number of refugees in Europe increased in 1979, for the second consecutive year, to some 555,000, due to a large influx of asylum-seekers from other regions. Responsibilities for the well-being of these refugees continued to be shared by UNHCR, individual Governments and non-governmental and semipublic bodies, and employment, health care and social and legal counselling for refugees awaiting resettlement or naturalization continued to be major components of the UNHCR programme.

The High Commissioner also continued to coordinate United Nations humanitarian assistance for Cyprus, disbursing nearly $6 million in aid in 1979. In co-operation with the World Health Organization and the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, UNHCR provided medical supplies and continued efforts to reactivate agriculture and other forms of traditional employment aimed at re-establishing the self-sufficiency of the local population. Consideration by the General Assembly

Situation of African refugees

On 29 November 1979, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/61, on the situation of African refugees, by which it fully endorsed the recommendations of the May 1979 Arusha Conference on the Situation of Refugees in Africa, appealed to Governments and international and non-governmental organizations to intensify their assistance activities in support of African refugees, and stressed the urgent necessity of securing a constant flow of resources to UNHCR for implementing long-term programmes in this area. It requested the High Commissioner to report to its 1980 regular session on UNHCR contributions towards implementing the recommendations of the Arusha Conference and on his efforts to mobilize additional resources for African refugees. The Secretary-General and specialized agencies were called on to help him disseminate information as widely as possible on the plight of those refugees.

The resolution was approved by consensus in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on 15 November. The text had been submitted by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, of which it was current Chairman; these sponsors were joined by Jordan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. The United Kingdom, while joining in the consensus, expressed a reservation on the wording of the paragraph containing the Assembly's full endorsement of the recommendations of the Arusha Conference, which it felt should have been more moderate.

Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia

In November 1979, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the 20 to 21 July Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia. The Secretary-General said his concern over the growing humanitarian problem of refugees in South-East Asia had led to his designating, on 11 June, liter Turkmen

(Turkey) as his Special Representative for Humanitarian Affairs in South-East Asia to report regularly on the problem in all its aspects. Following intensive consultation with a large number of interested Governments, the Secretary-General had informed Governments of his intention to convene a meeting of States in a position to make a contribution to a solution of the problem, preferably at the ministerial level, concentrating on the humanitarian aspects and aimed at producing additional support for UNHCR.

The Meeting-in which 65 Governments participated, in addition to observers from several other Governments and representatives of interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations — agreed on a framework for an international plan of action, to include: greater and speedier efforts at resettlement of refugees; implementation of the May Memorandum of Understanding concluded between Viet Nam and UNHCR, but not at the expense of refugees in camps in South-East Asia; establishment of processing centres, sites for which had been made available in Indonesia and the Philippines, to reduce the burden placed by the influx of refugees on countries of first asylum; and international co-operative efforts to ensure the rescue of refugees in distress at sea. In addition, the Meeting endorsed the principles of asylum and nonrefoulement, and stressed the need to reduce the disorderly exodus of persons from their homelands without due regard for safety.

The Secretary-General's report also outlined initiatives taken subsequent to the Meeting to implement the plan of action. These included the convening in New York on 5 November of a Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea and the creation by UNHCR of a standing co-ordinating mechanism, grouping together United Nations organizations, the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the League of Red Cross Societies and other non-governmental agencies. The first meeting of this liaison group took place on 29 August and established a broad framework for co-ordination of assistance, services and exchange of information. The report annexed a background note prepared for the Meeting by the High Commissioner, his suggested plan of action, and proposals that had resulted from a Consultative Meeting with Interested Governments on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia, convened by him at Geneva on 11 and 12 December 1978.

On 29 November 1979, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/62, dealing with the Secretary-General's report on the July Meeting. It commended him for convening and chairing both the Meeting and the Pledging Conference, commended UNHCR, and commended Governments and international relief organizations for their assistance and pledges. The Assembly also urged concerned Governments to continue their co-operation with the Secretary-General, UNHCR and other United Nations agencies in humanitarian activities designed to serve the needs of displaced persons and civilian refugees and no other purpose, while avoiding actions that might cause human suffering and ensuring safe and orderly departures. Countries were urged to expand and accelerate their intake of refugees from Indo-China, with priority for those already in camps in South-East Asia and adjacent territories. Specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies were asked to participate on a priority basis, without prejudice to refugee programmes in other regions, in alleviating the problem and to co-operate with Governments in seeking durable solutions. Finally the Assembly requested the High Commissioner to report to it in 1980 and asked the Secretary-General to follow the situation closely and report if the situation so required.

The resolution had been approved by consensus in the Third Committee on 15 November, where it was sponsored by Argentina, Indonesia, Jordan, Lesotho, Liberia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Yugoslavia. Viet Nam expressed serious reservations on a clause indicating that due priority in resettlement was to be given to those already in camps in adjacent territories as well as in South-East Asia. Though it approved the resolution, France said it felt the text lacked balance in failing to make reference to countries of first asylum as well as countries of origin and of resettlement; it regretted that a provision it had proposed to rectify this omission had not been included.

Other decisions

A number of other decisions taken by the General Assembly in 1979 related to refugees in various parts of the world and to the work of UNHCR.

By resolution 34/122 of 14 December, it endorsed appeals for humanitarian assistance to Uganda, called upon Member States and international organizations to respond generously and requested the High Commissioner to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes in the country.

By resolutions 34/124, 34/128 and 34/129 adopted on the same date, the Assembly asked the High Commissioner to maintain and increase his assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Djibouti, Zambia and Mozambique, respectively, and urged the international community to provide him speedily with the means to carry them out.

On 17 December, the Assembly, by resolution 34/161 on women refugees, requested UNHCR to review, for final report to the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women to be held at Copenhagen, Denmark, in July 1980, the situation of women refugees throughout the world and to make recommendations concerning measures to assist them which could be undertaken by Member States, the United Nations system and non-governmentalorganizations.

By resolution 34/174 of the same date, the Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations contained in a report of the Secretary-General on assistance to South African student refugees. It commended him and the High Commissioner for their efforts to mobilize resources and organize a programme of assistance to those refugees, requested him and the High Commissioner to organize a programme of educational and other assistance for student refugees from southern Africa in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia, and called upon all United Nations agencies and programmes to co-operate with them to implement these programmes. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the High Commissioner and relevant agencies and organizations, to mobilize assistance to facilitate the resettlement of refugee families from the border areas of South Africa, and to provide for the well-being of their children.

Pledging Conference for Emergency Relief to the People of Kampuchea

The Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea, convened by the Secretary-General at the United Nations Headquarters on 5 November 1979, was attended by 76 States and a representative of the European Economic Community. A total of $210 million was pledged in cash and kind, including $47,268,838 specifically earmarked for UNHCR. Also included in the total was some $20 million earmarked for the World Food Programme, $59 million for the United Nations Children's Fund and ICRC, and $84 million in funds not specifically earmarked. This last figure did not include $1,807,229 contributed by Switzerland on 11 November.

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

By decision 1979/85 of 3 August, adopted, without vote, on an oral proposal by its President, the Economic and Social Council transmitted without debate to the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the period 1 April 1978 to 31 March 1979.

On 29 November, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/60, by which it commended the High Commissioner and his staff for the efficient discharge of their responsibilities and requested him, in close co-operation with Governments, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, to continue to promote durable and speedy solutions to refugee problems. The Assembly urged Governments to intensify their support for his humanitarian activities by, among other things: granting asylum to refuge-seekers and scrupulously observing the principle of non-refoulement; considering accession to relevant international instruments, including the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the status of refugees; and facilitating the High Commissioner's efforts to promote durable solutions through voluntary repatriation and rehabilitation of refugees, integration in countries of asylum or settlement in other countries. The Assembly urged Governments to strengthen their support for the High Commissioner's efforts and to provide increased opportunities for durable solutions to refugee problems, particularly in Africa, Asia and Latin America, and called upon them to continue to contribute generously towards financing his humanitarian activities.

The resolution had been submitted in the Third Committee by Denmark, on behalf of 40 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), and was approved by consensus on 15 November.

Afghanistan expressed serious reservations regarding paragraphs that it believed would encourage aid by UNHCR, in contravention of its statute and the 1951 Convention, to fugitive insurgent elements in Pakistan launching attacks against Afghan territory.

Communications

A number of communications relating to refugee situations of concern to UNHCR were received during 1979.

In a statement of 19 December 1978, transmitted by a note verbale of 30 December, Democratic Kampuchea rejected claims, by what it termed a delegation of the Le Duan—Pham Van Dong clique recently sent to Geneva, of the presence of Kampuchean refugees in Viet Nam. Such claims, the statement charged, were intended to secure aid from countries and international organizations to be used to carry out acts of aggression against and annexation of Democratic Kampuchea.

In a statement of 28 October 1979, transmitted to the Secretary-General by a letter of the following day, Democratic Kampuchea welcomed the proposal for an international Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea and suggested the appointment of a sufficiently large United Nations force to ensure the direct distribution of this aid.

On 30 October, Viet Nam transmitted the texts of the May 1979 Memorandum of Understanding concluded between its Government and UNHCR, of a statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, dated 20 June, on the question of Vietnamese fleeing abroad, and of a speech by the Vietnamese representative at the Geneva Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia in July.

On 5 November, Viet Nam transmitted a statement by the "Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea" in which it said that the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea had been receiving foreign humanitarian aid and was prepared to receive assistance and co-operation on a bilateral or multilateral basis, without political conditions.

A letter of 24 July from Lebanon transmitted an appeal of 23 July by its High Relief Committee for aid for southern Lebanon in the form of food, emergency supplies, shelters and funds for reconstruction.

In a note verbale of 24 October, Israel brought to the attention of the Secretary-General steps it had taken to aid refugees from South-East Asia.

A letter of 7 December from South Africa called attention to the presence of nearly 250 recent refugees from Lesotho in South Africa and asked the Secretary-General to request the High Commissioner to provide the necessary assistance.

Contribution pledges

Resolution 34/62, as recommended by Third Committee, A/34/724, and as orally amended by Third Committee Rapporteur, adopted without vote by Assembly on 29 November 1979, meeting 82.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia, held at Geneva on 20 and 21 July 1979 under his chairmanship, and having heard his statement,

Taking note of the progress mentioned in the Secretary-General's report, indicating a decrease in the number of boat cases arriving in other South-East Asian countries since

August 1979,

Expressing its deep concern with the serious plight of the refugees and displaced persons in South-East Asia and the severe burden that the problem causes for many countries and territories, particularly the developing countries of South-East Asia.

Noting that further action is required to deal adequately with the land cases.

Gravely concerned about the large number of refugees recently arrived in the region and their urgent need of prompt and effective international assistance,

Noting the results of the Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea, held at United Nations Headquarters on 5 November 1979 under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for his initiative in convening and for his chairmanship of the Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia and the Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea;

2. Also commends the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his Office as the competent organ in the United Nations system for their active role;

3. Further commends Governments and international relief organizations for their assistance and pledges to increase such assistance, in cash and kind, for the immediate relief of the refugees in South-East Asia;

4. Urges all Governments concerned to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other United Nations agencies in humanitarian activities to deal with this problem, while avoiding any action that may cause human suffering and while ensuring safe and orderly departures; such humanitarian activities should serve the needs of civilian refugees and displaced persons and not any other purpose;

5. Further urges the resettlement countries and other countries in a position to do so to increase the number and speed of their intake of refugees and displaced persons from Indo-China, with due priority given to those already in camps in South-East Asia and adjacent territories, for resettlement in their countries;

6. Requests specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies concerned to give priority, without prejudice to assistance provided to refugees and country programmes in other regions, to their participation in rendering assistance to alleviate the problem, and to co-operate closely with Governments to find durable solutions to the problem;

7. Also requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to follow the situation closely and to submit a report to the Member States if the situation so requires.

cern to his Office, Noting with deep concern the continued gravity of the problems of refugees and displaced persons in various parts of

Commending Governments for their humanitarian approach to refugee problems, for the spirit in which they have received refugees and for their generous support of the work of the High Commissioner,

Emphasizing the continuing need to ensure the basic human rights, protection and safety of refugees, inter alia, through the accession to and more effective implementation of relevant international instruments,

Chapter XXIII

International drug control

Although improvements did occur in some counries, drug abuse throughout most of the world continued to spread in 1979 and its victims included a growing number of adolescents and children. More countries were affected, both developing and developed.

The international control system as it related to the licit movement of narcotic drugs for medial and scientific purposes was generally satisfactory. The International Narcotics Control Board INCB) continued to monitor the situation world-vide and maintained a dialogue with Governments to achieve a balance between supply and demand, thereby making some progress towards educing the over-supply forecast by the Board in 1978.

Non-medical use of psychotropic substances posed an increasingly serious threat, although, some progress was made towards their control with many Governments establishing national control systems. The 1971 Convention on Psycho-Topic Substances had been in force since 1976, and more than 100 Governments were providing at least partial statistics. Pending formal adherence to the Convention, all Governments not supplying information—particularly manufacturing md exporting countries—were urged to supply data to INCB. The major responsibility for overseeing developments in the field of drug abuse control was entrusted by the international treaties to the Secretary-General, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and INCB. The specialized agencies, particularly the World Health Organization (WHO), had specific areas of expertise in the field.

In 1979, the Inter-Agency Advisory Committee on Drug Abuse Control of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) was abolished. Both the Economic and Social Council md the General Assembly continued to call for the active participation of multilateral financing institutions, specialized agencies and other international organizations in the fight against drug abuse. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the policy-making subsidiary body of the Council—adopted at its February 1979 session a number of decisions to strengthen international cooperation in drug abuse control, launch an international control strategy, encourage support for international treaties and co-ordinate activities in this field. The Council adopted several Commission-recommended resolutions in support of these efforts.

The Assembly at its regular 1979 session adopted a resolution on international cooperation in drug abuse control (resolution 34/177), with special reference to the strategies and policies recommended by the Commission.

Details of these and other decisions are given below.

Implementation of drug treaties

Ratifications and accessions

During 1979, Liechtenstein became a party to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, bringing the total number of parties to 110.

Honduras, Portugal, and Trinidad and Tobago acceded to the 1972 Protocol amending the Single Convention. The number of parties to the Convention as amended thus stood at 68.

Hungary and Trinidad and Tobago ratified the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, and Guatemala, Kuwait, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Peru, Portugal and Tunisia acceded to it, bringing the total number of parties to 62.

By a resolution of 22 February adopted at its twenty-eighth session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs strongly urged States which were not parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to adhere to it as soon as possible. It recommended that States parties should avail themselves of the protection against unwanted imports afforded by an article thereof stipulating that they might notify other parties that they prohibited such imports; it was then the other parties' obligation to ensure that none of the substances specified were exported to the notifying party.

The Economic and Social Council, on 9 May, adopted resolution 1979/7—by 44 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions—by which it invited Latin American nations which had not done so to ratify or accede to the South American Agreement on Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances—a 27 April 1973 Agreement which had entered into force in 1977, to which Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Ecuador, Paraguay and Venezuela were parties. The Council also urged other Governments as well as the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) to support the initiatives of parties to the Agreement. In so doing, the Council emphasized the importance of regional programmes in the international effort to contain drug abuse.

The Council's Second (Social) Committee had approved the text on 16 April, by 40 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions, as proposed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its February session.

On 17 December, by resolution 34/177, the General Assembly again urged States which had not become parties to the international drug control treaties to adhere to and make every effort to implement them (for details, see section below on PROGRAMME OF INTERNATIONAL DRUG ABUSE CONTROL STRATEGY AND POLICIES).

Reports of Governments

During 1979, Governments submitted annual reports to the Secretary-General on the working of the international treaties on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in 100 countries and territories. Also, 28 Governments communicated a total of 57 legislative texts concerning implementation of such treaties at the national level.

Recognizing the importance of having access to full and accurate information, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in a resolution of 21 February, urged Governments to submit, in an accurate and timely manner, annual reports and information concerning illicit drug traffic cases.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

During its twenty-eighth session, held at Geneva from 12 to 23 February, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reviewed the world situation with regard to drug abuse and measures to reduce illicit demand. It further examined the continuing increase in the illicit traffic in drugs and national and international action to contain and reduce that traffic.

The Commission received reports by specialized agencies and other international bodies active in drug control and a report on the drug-related research carried out by the United Nations Narcotics Laboratory and several collaborating national laboratories.

When considering the INCB report for 1978, the Commission turned its attention to world requirements of opiates for medical and scientific purposes and the current situation with respect to their supply. Emphasis was placed on the achievement of a long-term balance between supply of and demand for licit opiates.

The Commission reviewed the current control status of certain substances under international treaties. It decided that nicocodine should be included in the list of preparations derived from codeine under Schedule III of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, and that methaqualone should be transferred from Schedule IV of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to Schedule II, thus requiring medical prescriptions and stricter controls over import and export.

In 1978, the Commission had requested that Governments furnish it with data that it felt were necessary for proper implementation of the international treaties on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. While some data had been supplied, the Commission decided to renew its request for information on the exemption of preparations containing psychotropic substances from some of the control measures provided for in the 1971 Convention. Governments were also asked again to notify the Secretary-General, as authorized by article 13 of the 1971 Convention, of any decision to prohibit the import of any psychotropic substance. The Commission also reiterated its appeal for information which would permit it to propose uniform rules for the carriage by international travellers of small quantities of preparations containing psychotropic substances for personal use, and also to recommend safeguards in respect of first-aid kits containing narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances when such kits were carried across international frontiers in the course of commercial travel.

The Secretary-General was asked to submit to the Commission a uniform model authorization for the international transfer of seized drugs for forensic and evidential purposes, small quantities of drugs for laboratory research, and drugs needed aboard ships where they were unavailable at overseas ports. Pending the Commission's decision on a model authorization, Governments could adopt procedures recommended by the International Criminal Police Organization.

International Narcotics Control Board

During 1979, INCB—the treaty organ entrusted with the supervision of the licit production of drugs—held, at its former headquarters in Geneva, an ad hoc session from 14 to 27 February and its twenty-fifth session from 21 May to 1 June. The next session, its twenty-sixth, was held at its new seat in Vienna from 15 October to 2 November. During the year, INCB reviewed the world situation and maintained a dialogue with Governments to promote their compliance with the drug control treaties. It published statistics on psychotropic substances in addition to its traditional publications on estimates and statistics on narcotic drugs.

In its annual report to the Economic and Social Council for 1978, INCB noted that that year marked the fiftieth anniversary of the entry into force, in 1928, of the International Opium Convention of 19 February 1925, and of the creation of INCB'S predecessor, the Permanent Central Narcotics Board. This half century had been very fruitful, in particular in dealing successfully with the problem of the diversion of manufactured narcotic drugs from legitimate international trade to illicit traffic. However, illicit production and manufacture of narcotics presented an ever-growing problem to be fought in parallel with efforts to combat illicit demand and trafficking. Determined action should likewise be taken in the matter of psychotropic substances.

The Board also called attention to the overproduction of raw materials for the licit manufacture of opiates and warned that, unless the situation was reversed, by 1982 supply could be expected to exceed demand by 50 per cent. The Board had, therefore, in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolutions of 5 May 1978¹ as confirmed by the General Assembly on 20 December 1978,² initiated consultations with some 20 Governments with a view to correcting the imbalance in an orderly way. The Board concluded that intensive efforts, both on a national and international scale, were urgently needed if the world was to achieve significant progress in drug abuse control.

On 9 May 1979, the Council, by decision 1979/19, took note of the 1978 INCB report. The Council took this action, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the text, without objection, on 17 April, on an oral proposal of the Chairman.

By resolution 1979/8 of 9 May, the Council noted with serious concern INCB'S assessment of over-supply of opiates and recognized the importance of a proper balance between global supply and demand. The Council called on importing countries to acquire their licit opiates in so far as possible from traditional producing countries in order to avoid proliferation of sources of supply. Governments of major producing countries were urged to restrict their production programmes so as to restore a balance between supply and demand, and to prevent drug diversion to illicit channels. The Board was requested to continue its efforts to make realistic projections of supply and demand in opiates.

Resolution 1979/8, which had been approved by the Second Committee on 16 April by 43 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, was adopted by the Council by 44 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions. The text had been proposed in February by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

With a view to ensuring support for the implementation of Assembly resolutions calling for the active participation of multilateral financing institutions, the specialized agencies and other international organizations in the fight against drug abuse, the Council also adopted on 9 May resolution 1979/9. By that text, the Council, noting that ACC'S Inter-Agency Advisory Committee on Drug Abuse Control had been abolished in January,3 requested the Secretary-General to ensure the maximum practical degree of co-ordination of international drug abuse control, taking into account the specific treaty-entrusted responsibilities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the maintenance of the full technical independence of INCB.

The Council requested ACC to consider the possibility of holding a substantive meeting on drug abuse control and to arrange for further indepth consultations between operational staff of the bodies concerned.

Both the Council and its Second Committee approved the resolution by 43 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, the latter body on 16 April. The text had been recommended by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Operational activities

Drug abuse and measures to reduce illicit demand

Reviewing the extent, patterns and trends of drug abuse, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its February session, noted that opiate addiction—particularly to heroin and, to a lesser extent, morphine and other opiates—continued to spread in most countries. Cocaine was increasingly abused in the Americas and Western Europe, and abuse of cannabis remained a worldwide problem. Abuse of amphetamines, barbiturates and non-barbiturate sedatives, especially methaqualone, showed a rising trend in many countries. Among hallucinogens, the abuse of LSD (lysergic acid diethylamide) was found to be on the decline in all regions, while PCP (phency-clidine) was more frequently abused in North America. There was an accentuated tendency towards the use of more potent drugs as well as multiple-drug abuse, frequently in combination with alcohol. Although more common among men, drug abuse showed an upward trend among women. It predominantly affected the younger population, but was also encountered in all age groups and social strata.

The Secretariat's Division of Narcotic Drugs continued preparation of a resource book on measures to reduce illicit demand for drugs, as a practical guide for national authorities in designing and implementing programmes on prevention of drugabuse and treatment and rehabilitation of drugdependent persons. The Commission further requested the Division to ensure appropriate use of the resource book in working groups, workshops, seminars, training courses, pilot projects and the like, undertaken by the United Nations and specialized agencies.

The Division, in response to a request by the Economic and Social Council, published the preliminary report and background papers of a proposed study on measures to reduce illicit demand, a framework for policy-making in this area of drug control.

Illicit traffic in drugs

The Commission, at its February session, noted that the total amounts of many drugs seized from world-wide illicit traffic continued to grow. Sources of supply of illicit opiates had changed but the over-all quantity apparently moved in the traffic had not been reduced. Trafficking routes had become more diversified and more couriers were being used, thus increasing the quantities of drugs moved by traffickers using all available means of transport. The most rapid rise in quantities available was apparent in the amounts of cannabis seized. Total quantities of cocaine removed from the traffic also were at record levels, and clandestine laboratories producing psychotropic substances as well as morphine, heroin and cocaine were reported from a number of countries.

The Commission, deeply concerned with the growing use of all means of transport, and noting the advances in scientific and technological aids, asked the Division of Narcotic Drugs, with the help of a small working group if necessary, to prepare a catalogue of such aids and how they could be made more readily available to interested countries.

A meeting of the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East was held on 12 February, at which a paper prepared by the Secretariat on progress made from 1972 to 1979 in implementing the Sub-Commission's decisions and recommendations was examined. The Sub-Commission considered a proposed feasibility study on narcotics laboratory services in the region, aimed at helping identify the sources of opiates seized from illicit traffic.

To encourage interregional contact between affected regions, the Commission authorized a meeting of experts of representatives of law enforcement agencies in European countries affected by illicit drug traffic with their counterparts in countries which were members of the Sub-Commission. They met at Geneva on 9 and 10 May to exchange information, establish close working links and discuss how enforcement agencies could move more effectively against illicit drug traffic.

A working group of the Sub-Commission met from 22 to 25 October at Ankara, Turkey, to discuss practical regional measures against drug traffickers and to improve links to enable operational information to be passed quickly within and between countries.

Convinced that the dismantling of major trafficking groups could be achieved by closer attention to financial transactions and acquisition of assets by persons involved, the Commission asked Governments to co-operate with the Division of Narcotic Drugs in examining all legislative and other measures that had been taken in this respect. The Division was asked to synthesize these and to provide practical guidelines for other Governments as a basis for improved international co-operation. The Commission also pointed to the need for complete and accurate information on seizures to be transmitted under treaties to the Secretary-General and asked Governments to make available to the Division information on legislative and administrative measures they had taken and research work they had done to control the chemical precursors of abused drugs.

Assistance to national narcotics laboratories and the training of scientists in methods for the identification and analysis of abused drugs continued to be essential components for effective international control, as recognized and emphasized by the Commission on several occasions. In 1979, the Division of Narcotic Drugs provided training in the United Nations Narcotics Laboratory for fellowship-holders from Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, Thailand and Tunisia.

Thanks to a special contribution from Norway, through UNFDAC, the Laboratory provided scientific literature on drugs to national laboratories in several countries. In addition it furnished, also with financial support from the Fund, equipment and/or chemicals to laboratories in Afghanistan, Thailand, Tunisia and Turkey.

Pursuant to a 1977 request of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Laboratory began assembling data for the preparation of a multilingual dictionary of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances under international control, in order to facilitate implementation of the international drug control conventions.

The Laboratory continued to provide WHO with certain components of khat (Catha edulis Forsk) for pharmacological testing. In addition, it co-ordinated work carried out by collaborating scientists on the manipulation of the alkaloid production system in the opium poppy plant.

From 25 to 27 July, a study group met at Geneva to examine possible ways of eradicating illicit narcotic plants. After examining chemical and mechanical methods of destruction, fire, biological agents and genetic manipulation, the group was of the opinion that the best means to destroy narcotic drugs was by chemical attack.

United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control

During 1979, voluntary contributions to UNFDAC totalled $4.9 million. Estimated expenditures during the year were $6 million, supporting some 50 projects in the field of drug abuse control. Total contributions to the Fund since its creation in 1971 were $42.6 million as at 31 December 1979.

Following the trend established at the beginning of 1978, UNFDAC'S programme was divided into two parts, support being given under the first to regular activities executed by specialized agencies on a regional and an international basis to reduce illicit demand for drugs, international co-ordination of control measures to combat drug traffic, and research into chemical and pharmacological questions.

Under the second part of the programme, more emphasis was put on funding developmentoriented activities in the form of country programmes. Programmes to reduce the supply of illicit drugs were carried out in Afghanistan, Burma, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Pakistan and Thailand, demonstrating that an integrated rural-development approach could induce farmers to abandon voluntarily the illicit cultivation of narcotic plants. Country programmes, usually multisectoral, dealt not only with production but also with reduction of demand and illicit traffic. The first phase of a United Nations/Thai crop-substitution project was successfully concluded, and in September an agreement was signed between Thailand and UNFDAC to proceed to the second phase involving wider application of the programme to an area encompassing some 200 villages. This highlands agricultural marketing and production project was executed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in co-operation with various specialized agencies.

The pilot phase of a similar United Nations/Pakistan programme was nearing completion. In discussions between the Executive Director of UNFDAC and the Government of Pakistan, it was agreed that an expanded programme for drug abuse control would be started in 1980.

The Fund's role in these country programmes was essentially to generate bilateral and multilateral development-aid funds.

In February, a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the organization and management of drug abuse control activities in the United Nations was published. Recommendations in the report included the purpose and use of funds contributed to UNFDAC, evaluation of its projects and the relationships among the United Nations narcotics bodies.

The study, which originated from a request by UNFDAC'S Executive Director for an evaluation of programmes financed by the Fund, examined the work of the Division of Narcotic Drugs in terms of its responsibility for advising the Fund, directing the Narcotics Laboratory and, on behalf of the Fund, executing projects directly and co-ordinating projects executed with the cooperation of specialized agencies. Also examined were: UNFDAC'S operations and finances; the relationship between the Division and the Fund; their evaluation mechanisms; the relationship between the Division, acting as secretariat to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and the secretariat of INCB; and the activities of the Division's regional and liaison offices.

The JIU Inspectors recommended the institution of a panel of perhaps five members to advise UNFDAC'S Executive Director. Ways of raising money for the Fund—currently spending $8 million to $9 million yearly—were also examined. Attention was drawn to an apparent tendency to use UNFDAC to replace, rather than supplement, funds originally available from regular budgets.

The Fund should devote more time and effort to evaluating its projects and programmes. Outside evaluators should undertake or help evaluate major projects, which should be designed with clearly stated objectives and indicators to facilitate their evaluation.

The Inspectors recommended some internal changes for the Division of Narcotic Drugs but concluded that it and UNFDAC should remain separate organizations for the time being, and the secretariats of INCB and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs should also remain separate; a review of staffing of both secretariats was recommended. It was JIU's opinion that the activities of the Regional Narcotics Co-ordination Officer for South-East Asia were too law-enforcement oriented and needed to be broader in scope.

The Secretary-General commented on the report in June. He welcomed the implicit thrust of JIU's recommendations, commenting on each, and pointed out that JIU's comments must be considered in the light of the financial resources available to UNFDAC and the apparent downward trend in the availability of funds. Contributions were not expected to exceed $5.5 million in 1979, he reported, and UNFDAC should not only continue its efforts to raise funds but also carefully review every aspect of its activities, with a view particularly to minimizing administrative costs, as suggested in the JIU report.

Programme of international drug abuse control strategy and policies

In February, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered a working paper prepared by its officers on the possibility of launching a meaningful programme of international drug abuse control strategy and policies, in response to an Assembly request of 16 December 1977.4 By a resolution of 23 February, the Commission requested the Secretary-General: to have the Division of Narcotic Drugs elaborate a practical and dynamic drug abuse control programme; to provide that the Division's regular statutory activities were funded by the regular budget, and extrabudgetary activities by extrabudgetary resources; to encourage other bodies and organizations to allocate more financial resources for drug-related activities; and to provide for Commission monitoring of programme implementation.

In establishing the drug abuse control programme, the Division was requested to take into account the following 10 principles annexed to the resolution: (1) strengthening the treaty system; (2) improvement of international, regional and bilateral co-operation; (3) eradication of illicit production; (4) reduction of illicit demand through various means, including implementation of aid programmes in developing countries; (5) pursuit of the fight against illicit drug traffic; (6) strengthening the work of UNFDAC through various means, including encouraging developing countries to give the highest priority to rural development programmes when applying for development aid; (7) achievement of a balance between demand and supply in licit narcotic drugs; (8) co-ordination of research activities and information exchange; (9) identification of areas of responsibility of each United Nations body and specialized agency involved in international drug abuse control; and (10) achievement of above-average priority for this sector in the United Nations regular budget.

In order to examine more effectively the envisaged development assistance programmes within its international drug abuse control strategy and policies, the Commission decided to invite as observers to its future sessions representatives of multilateral development banks, namely the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and regional development banks.

The Commission invited the Economic and Social Council to transmit its 23 February resolution and the annexed principles to the General Assembly with the Council's comments.

When the Council considered the Commission's text at its April/May 1979 session, Argentina, Brazil and the Ukrainian SSR expressed reservations concerning the final paragraph of the annex, because it proposed to achieve aboveaverage priority for international drug abuse control through the United Nations regular budget. The Ukrainian SSR felt that that proposal concerned matters not within the competence of the Commission. Argentina and Brazil reserved their positions because, in their view, the paragraph did not conform with a 1977 Assembly resolution urging subsidiary bodies not to make recommendations on the relative priority of major programmes. Brazil also had reservations concerning a proposal in the annex to reduce illicit demand by, among other means, implementing primary health care, educational, socio-economic and rehabilitation programmes in developing countries; that seemed in Brazil's opinion improperly to attribute illicit demand for drugs to developing countries alone. It also did not accept the implication in another proposal that multilateral development aid should be subject to the assignment of highest priority to programmes for the eradication of illicit cultivation.

The Chairman of the Council's Second Committee proposed an amendment to an oral draft decision he had earlier introduced, by which the Assembly would take into account the comments made by Council members during the session. The Committee then approved the text without objection on 17 April. The Council adopted this text without vote as decision 1979/17 on 9 May, thereby bringing to the Assembly's attention the text of the Commission's resolution of 23 February, together with the annexed principles and the comments made by Council members.

Recognizing the need for the Commission to monitor the implementation of its drug abuse control programme, the Council, by resolution 1979/6, adopted by 43 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions, on 9 May, decided in principle that the Commission should hold a special two-week session in 1980, between its regular biennial sessions. It agreed to take a final decision at its second regular 1979 session when considering the calendar of conferences for 1980 and 1981.

This resolution had been proposed for Council action by the Commission in February. The Second Committee Chairman orally proposed that consideration of the resolution be deferred to the Council's second regular session. After amending the Commission's original text, the Committee, on 17 April, by 46 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, approved the draft. It agreed to include a preambular paragraph, suggested by the USSR and supported by the United States, referring to Council and Assembly decisions concerning the periodicity of sessions of the Council's subsidiary bodies, in particular a provision of an Assembly resolution of 14 December 1978 requesting bodies to review the length and cycle of their sessions with a view to shortening them or meeting less frequently.6 It also added the provision by which the Council agreed to take a final decision at its second 1979 session. Both these amendments were originally proposed by the United Kingdom, also on behalf of the Federal Republic of Germany, following consultations. Argentina orally subamended the last provision to have the Council agree, rather than decide, to take a decision later in the year. To the provision by which it was decided that a special session be held in 1980, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, on a suggestion by the United States, added the qualifying words "in principle." The United Kingdom, which introduced the amendments, said that the principle of holding the special session had been agreed in the Commission by 23 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, and that the Council should make a clear distinction between whether there should be a special session and the practical question of the calendar of activities. The amendments were adopted by the Committee by 46 votes to 5.

At its second regular session, in adopting decision 1979/81 by which it approved its calendar of conferences and meetings for 1980 and 1981, the Council confirmed the decision contained in resolution 1979/6 to hold a sixth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 1980 (see also p. 1211).

A resolution concerning international cooperation in drug abuse control was introduced in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee by the United States on behalf also of Australia, the Bahamas, Denmark, Italy, Lesotho, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Sweden and Thailand. The Committee approved the text without vote on 5 December and the Assembly adopted it on 17 December, also without vote, as resolution 34/177.

By this resolution, the Assembly requested agencies and organizations to help implement the Commission's drug abuse control programme, noting the principles annexed to the Commission's resolution of 23 February, and to provide regular-budget resources for Commission monitoring of its implementation. It asked the Commission to finalize that programme at its next special session and to report on progress to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1980. It invited Member States to take into account the principles set forth by the Commission in allocating national resources to drug abuse control programmes and called for greater technical and financial aid to developing countries that needed it. The Assembly further invited Member States to prevent uncontrolled or illicit manufacture and export of psychotropic substances and chemical precursors of drugs of abuse. It urged States not parties to the international drug control treaties to adhere to and implement them and further urged greater action by specialized agencies and UNDP to develop and consider regularly programmes to reduce illicit demand and production. The Assembly asked United Nations agencies and programmes, international financial institutions and their members to consider providing abuse- and prevention-control aid, when requested, within their assistance programmes and further requested United Nations organs and agencies with programmes on narcotics to report annually to the Assembly on their activities. Reiterating its continued support for UNFDAC, the Assembly expressed its disappointment at the low levels of financial support given to the Fund and appealed for new and increased contributions. Finally, it asked the Secretary-General to report annually to the Assembly on progress made in implementing this and the Commission's resolution.

The text, once revised by the sponsors, was further orally amended by them to include an oral proposal by the USSR. This was to have the Assembly take note of, rather than take into account, the principles proposed by the Commission.

Enforcement Agencies, Far East Region, held at Colombo, Sri Lanka, from 6 to 11 November 1978, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs commended the work of the Meeting and invited Governments to streamline communications channels through their respective embassies and consulates for the exchange of data on illicit traffic in drugs and rapid mutual assistance in dealing with drug traffic questions, possibly by appointing drug-control liaison officers. The Secretary-General was asked to invite Governments to take counter-measures to halt an increase in the use of false or forged passports by drug traffickers.

When the decision had been made to transfer from Geneva to Vienna the three United Nations Secretariat units concerned with international drug control (the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the secretariats of INCB and UNFDAC), a number of Commission members had stated that it would be inappropriate to utilize UNFDAC resources to cover the costs of the transfer. By resolution 1979/10, the Economic and Social Council expressed the inadvisability of such action.

In the draft of this resolution before the Second Committee, which had been proposed by the Commission, a second provision would have had the Council ask the General Assembly to reconsider its resolutions of 19767 and 1978,8 according to which the Fund should finance the cost of the transfer of staff paid by UNFDAC, in view of the concern expressed by the Commission, and find other ways of financing the transfer. At the suggestion of the United Stateswhich accepted oral subamendments by the Philippines and by Spain—that paragraph was amended so as to request the Secretary-General to seek Assembly approval for the financing, "existing" (Spain's addition) regular budget resources, of "the costs of (the Philippine addition) the transfer of UNFDAC to Vienna. The United States amendment was adopted by 37 votes to 5, with 8 abstentions. The Second Committee on 17 April then approved the resolution, as amended, by 39 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions. The Council adopted resolution 1979/10 on 9 May by 32 votes to 5, with 11 abstentions.

Also on 9 May, the Council took note, by decision 1979/18 adopted without vote, of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its twenty-eighth session. This decision was proposed orally by the Second Committee Chairman and approved without objection on 17 April.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, relevant to limiting the cultivation, production, manufacture and use of narcotic drugs to an amount required for medical and scientific purposes,

Noting that in recent years there has been a considerable increase in morphine producing capacity for export, leading to a situation of substantial over-production of opiates,

Having considered the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1978 on world requirements and supply of narcotic drugs for medical use, Noting with serious concern the Board's assessment that, unless there is a large and unforeseen increase in demand between 1978 and 1982, morphine manufacturing capacity will be, on average, 50 per cent greater than requirements,

Recognizing that it is essential to bring about the proper balance between global supply and demand,

Taking note of the continued reliance placed by the world community on countries constituting the traditional sources of supply for its medical needs of opiate raw materials and the positive response of those countries in meeting the world requirements and their contribution to the maintenance of effective control systems,

Bearing in mind that the treaties establishing those systems are based on the concept that the number of producers of narcotic materials for export should be limited in order to facilitate effective control,

1. Calls upon importing countries, in so far as their constitutions and legal authority permit, to support the traditional supply countries and give all possible practical assistance in preventing the proliferation of producing and manufacturing sources for export;

2. Urges the Governments of major producing countries which have set up additional capacities in recent years to take effective measures to restrict their production programmes so as to restore a lasting balance between supply and demand and to prevent drug diversion to illicit channels;

3. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to continue its efforts to make realistic projections of supply and demand in opiates and to continue its dialogue with the Governments concerned to ensure that the provisions of the relevant Conventions are strictly adhered to by the producing, manufacturing, exporting and importing countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments for their consideration and appropriate action.

Resolution 1979/9, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/53, adopted by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 13, by 43 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of General Assembly resolutions 32/124, 32/125 and 32/126 of 16 December 1977, as well as earlier resolutions of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, in which they, inter alia, called for the active participation of multilateral financing institutions, of the specialized agencies and of other international organs and organizations in the fight against drug abuse,

Reaffirming the necessity for efficient co-operation and coordination in this essentially multisectoral activity,

Noting that the Inter-Agency Advisory Committee on Drug Abuse Control has been abolished as a result of General Assembly resolution 33/202 of 29 January 1979 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system,

Recognizing the need to have clearly defined areas of responsibility for each of the United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies and, if possible, to achieve strong central co-ordination, avoiding duplication and overlapping,

1. Requests the Administrative Committee on Coordination to consider the possibility of holding, within its regular sessions, a substantive meeting on drug abuse control, in order to ensure appropriate support for the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 32/124, 32/125 and 32/126 and to arrange for further in-depth consultations between operational staff of the bodies and specialized agencies directly concerned within the framework of the new structures envisaged for the subsidiary machinery of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure the maximum practical degree of co-ordination of international efforts in the field of drug abuse control, taking into consideration the assignment of specific responsibilities entrusted to United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies under the treaties and the maintenance of the full technical independence of the International Narcotics Control Board.

Acknowledging that drug abuse and illicit production of and trafficking in drugs continue to pose a grave international problem calling for persistent international action,

Recognizing the need, identified in General Assembly resolution 33/168 of 20 December 1978, for the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to monitor the implementation of its programme of international drug abuse control strategy and policies,

Bearing in mind the decisions of the Economic and Social Council and of the General Assembly concerning the periodicity of sessions of the subsidiary bodies of the Council, in particular paragraph 5 of Assembly resolution 33/55 of 14 December 1978,

1. Decides in principle that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs should hold a special session of two weeks in 1980 at a time when it will not overlap with other meetings, so that the costs will be minimized;

2. Agrees to take a final decision on the matter at its second regular session of 1979 when considering the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1980 and 1981.

Resolution 34/177, as recommended by Third Committee, A/34/829, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Noting the continuing spread of drug abuse in many parts of the world and its harmful impact on developing and industrialized countries,

Viewing with concern the detrimental effects drug abuse can have on all societies and individuals, particularly young people,

Recognizing that illicit traffic in drugs and the profits accruing therefrom to traffickers and criminal organizations pose a threat to the socio-economic well-being of many countries and should be addressed through development assistance programmes together with intensified law enforcement, education and demand reduction efforts,

Noting with satisfaction the positive results that have been achieved in a number of countries, but at the same time expressing concern for the lack of realization of many of the objectives for drug abuse control set forth in the drug control treaties as well as in the resolutions and documents of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization,

Recalling its resolution 33/168 of 20 December 1978, in which it requested more extensive and co-ordinated co-operation between Governments and relevant bodies of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the designing and implementation of programmes aimed at the eradication of illicit demand for and illicit traffic in drugs,

Bearing in mind the necessity for international drug abuse control strategy and policies, as requested in General Assembly resolution 32/124 of 16 December 1977 and reiterated in Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 8(XXVIII) of 23 February 1979,

Having received the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, noted in Economic and Social Council decision 1979/18 of 9 May 1979, in which are proposed, in the annex to resolution 8(XXVIII), principles to guide future international drug abuse control activities,

1. Takes note of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and requests all agencies and organizations concerned to implement paragraphs 2 and 3 of Commission resolution 8(XXVIII), to elaborate a practical and dynamic drug abuse control programme, noting the principles annexed to that resolution, and to provide, within the existing regular budget, for the monitoring of the implementation of the programme by the Commission;

2. Requests the Commission to finalize at its next special session, to be held in 1980, a meaningful programme of international drug abuse control strategy and policies aimed at eradicating illicit demand for, production of and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of

1980 on the progress achieved in this respect;

3. Invites MemberStatestotakeintoaccounttheprinciples set forth by the Commission in allocating, within their capabilities, national resources to drug abuse control programmes—including programmes to combat the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic and psychotropic substances and to reduce the demand for those drugs—and calls for greater technical and financial contributions to those developing countries which are constrained by limited national resources in their efforts to implement drug abuse control programmes;

4. Further invites Member States to take appropriate measures for the prevention of uncontrolled or illicit manufacture and export of psychotropic substances and the chemical precursors of drugs of abuse such as acetic anhydride;

5. Urges States which have not yet become parties to the international drug control treaties to adhere to them and to make maximum efforts to implement them;

6. Further urges greater action by the specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations, especially the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Development Programme, in developing and implementing, within their mandates, programmes aimed at the reduction of illicit production of and demand for drugs, and specifically requests those agencies to make this activity a regular item on the agendas of their governing bodies;

7. Requests the agencies and programmes of the United Nations, the international financial institutions and member Governments within their bilateral and multilateral development assistance programmes to consider providing, when requested by a recipient State and if possible, appropriate assistance for the implementation of drug abuse prevention and control measures, particularly activities which promote new income sources that can substitute for illicit production of narcotic raw materials and which promote the reduction in demand for dangerous drugs;

8. Further requests the organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies with programmes having an impact on narcotics, as a means of expediting a concerted international effort substantially to reduce illicit drug activities, to report annually to the General Assembly on their activities and proposed projects in this field;

9. Appeals to Member States, in accordance with their individual development goals, to consider within their national development programmes the inclusion of appropriate drug abuse control measures;

- 10. Reiterates its continued support for the initiatives of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in helping countries reduce the demand for, production of and traffic in illicit narcotics;
- 11. Expresses its disappointment at the low levels of financial support being provided to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and appeals to Member States to make new, sustained or increased cash contributions to the Fund as well as further financial or in-kind contributions in support of its projects and activities;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly on the progress being made in the implementation of the present resolution and Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 8(XXVIII) and to transmit the present resolution to Governments and concerned international agencies.

Resolution 1979/10, as recommended by Second Committee, E/1979/53, adopted by Council on 9 May 1979, meeting 13, by 32 votes to 5, with 11 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware that the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the secretariats of the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control will be transferred from Geneva to Vienna in 1979 and that the Secretary-General intends to call upon the Fund to meet partially the cost of that transfer.

Bearing in mind that contributions to the Fund by Governments, many of which actively participate as States members or observers in the work of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, are solely and exclusively intended to assist the international community and Governments in need of such assistance, through appropriate programmes and projects financed by the Fund, to supplement and improve international and national drug control activities and to solve the manifold drug abuse problems in the world, and that such funds are therefore not intended, and should not be used, to cover the costs of the above-mentioned transfer,

Recognizing that some donor Governments may wish to reconsider their contribution to the Fund if its funds are not used in projects designed to solve drug abuse problems,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 31/194 of 22 December 1976 and 33/181 of 21 December 1978, according to which the Fund should finance the cost of the transfer of staff paid by it,

- 1. Reiterates the inadvisability, from the point of view of the donor and recipient Governments, of using resources of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to cover costs emanating from or related to the above-mentioned transfer to Vienna;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the views expressed by the members of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its twenty-eighth session and by the members of the Council at its first regular session of 1979, to seek General Assembly approval for the financing, from existing regular budget resources, of the costs of the transfer of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to Vienna.

Assistanc e activitie s in 1979

Aid to the Sudano-Sahelian populations

During 1979, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), an organization within the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), continued to co-ordinate United Nations activities relating to the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the eight drought-stricken countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region—Cape Verde, Chad, Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and the Upper Volta—and to assist, on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the efforts of 15 countries of the region situated south of the Sahara and north of the Equator to implement the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.² The 15 States involved were the above eight countries and Ethiopia, Kenya, Nigeria, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda and the United Republic of Cameroon.

The Office, according to an April 1979 report of the Secretary-General, had maintained a close working relationship with these countries, the donor community, specialized agencies and the regional organization, the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS), mobilizing technical and financial assistance for priority requirements of the Governments concerned and in support of three principal objectives: to mitigate the effects of future droughts, to achieve self-sufficiency in food staples and to stimulate socio-economic development in the region.

As in previous years, UNSO financed and coordinated activities in the United Nations system to implement a number of regional projects which would assist the rehabilitation and development of the region as a whole and of individual countries within it. These included major regional programmes, with sizable national components, for the construction, improvement and maintenance of a region-wide system of allweather feeder roads (of which, as at January 1980, about 500 kilometres had been constructed); and a programme for strengthening agrometeorological and hydrological services both regionally and nationally, prepared by the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) with UNDP assistance. The Office also supported a project of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) on preparation of a plan for the integrated development of continental fishery resources, and it financed an FAO seminar on the development of the forestry sector, to identify projects which would have an impact on combating desertification and on the over-all sylvo-pastoral problems in the region.

Other interorganizational regional projects were formulated or under way for: the establishment and operation of the Institute of the Sahel to acquire and disseminate information on socioeconomic development; a feasibility study for an inventory of water points and earth dams; use of rural telecommunications and radio for rural development; seed multiplication programmes; and planning local manufacture of fertilizer, pesticides and agricultural tools and equipment. In co-operation with UNDP, UNSO provided financing for a post-graduate training programme in pasture management for livestock services personnel of the CILSS member States. More than half the national projects implemented with UNSO financing were Government-executed or were carried out by Government force account arrangements.

In addition to regional programmes, UNSO financed a number of national priority projects. Projects to strengthen national crop-protection capability, inter alia by procurement of pesticides and equipment, were under way or completed in Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania and Senegal.

¹Formerly called the United Nations Sahelian Office, the name was changed following the adoption, on 15 December 1978, of General Assembly resolution 33/88 (for text, see Y.U.N., 1978, p. 655) to reflect more accurately the enlarged geographical scope of its responsibilities.

²See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 509.

Projects of exploration, development and management of water resources and water-supply systems were under way in Cape Verde, the Gambia, Mauritania, Senegal and the Upper Volta; financial participation in irrigation canal construction was undertaken in the Niger; reconstitution, preservation and improvement of livestock herds and other animal health services projects were financed in Chad, Mali and Mauritania; and a feasibility study for mountain road construction was completed in Cape Verde.

Scarcity and irregularity of rainfall caused severe crop failures during 1979, particularly in Cape Verde, Chad and Mauritania, and cereal production in the Gambia, Mali, Senegal and the Upper Volta was insufficient for their needs. Funds were provided for an agricultural development project in Senegal, seed improvement projects were executed in Cape Verde and the Gambia, the activities of a seed multiplication centre in Kaedi and a grain-storage study were underwritten in Mauritania, and the Niger was executing a project for local manufacture of agricultural implements. In addition to projects financed through UNSO'S special resource mobilization efforts, several of these projects were financed and implemented by organizations of the United Nations system and co-ordinated by UNSO.

During 1979, UNSO conducted a series of planning and programming missions to the countries of the region and prepared, in collaboration with the Governments, a report on desertification and a review of ongoing and proposed activities to implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. Seventy-seven desert control projects, at an estimated cost of $260 million, were delineated in the CILSS member countries in the areas of afforestation, water management, arid land agriculture, land range management, fuel-wood plantations, sand-dune fixation and institutional support.

The Office financed a joint UNSO/CILSS/Club du Sahel meeting at Dakar, Senegal, in November to design a unified UNSO/CILSS plan of action in the eight States for co-ordinating the respective desertification control activities of the two bodies.

The activities of UNSO were reported by the UNDP Administrator and by the Secretary-General to the Governing Council of UNDP at its June/July 1979 session held at United Nations Headquarters, New York. The Administrator reported in May 1979 on implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region, and gave information on the expansion of UNSO as a joint UNDP/UNEP venture to co-ordinate United Nations efforts to assist the 15 countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region. The Secretary-General's report included information on UNSO'S accomplishments in mobilizing resources and implementing priority projects, as well as on activities it had undertaken in accordance with its enlarged mandate.

The Governing Council adopted, on 27 and 28 June, two resolutions. By the first, it noted the intention of the Administrator to develop a special programme of assistance for 1982-1986 to protect the environment in arid and semi-arid zones of Africa. By the second, the Administrator was asked to enhance UNSO'S capacity to respond to aid requests from CILSS members through use of UNDP resources, particularly the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Capital Development Fund and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration; it asked UNSO to continue close cooperation and co-ordination with CILSS in implementing the assistance programmes. By a second section of this resolution, it authorized the Administrator to continue to finance the UNDP share of the administrative costs of UNSO relating to the UNDP/UNEP joint venture to assist the 15 countries to combat desertification and to use funds of up to $330,000 for 1980 and $368,000 for 1981 as UNDP'S contribution to support UNSO'S ongoing operational activities as backing for Government efforts to implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. He was asked to continue examining the needs of these countries and to grant them, within UNDP'S available resources, additional assistance through UNSO.

The Economic and Social Council, at its second regular 1979 session, adopted resolution 1979/51 by which it took note of the Secretary-General's report, expressed its gratitude to Governments, United Nations agencies, intergovernmental and private organizations and individuals which had contributed to development programmes in the Sahel, and urged them to intensify their assistance either bilaterally or through UNSO. It asked UNSO to consult with concerned United Nations organizations and programmes to ensure the full effectiveness of contributions towards the recovery, rehabilitation and development of the Sahel and to increase its capacity to respond adequately to further requests by CILSS.

Resolution 1979/51 was adopted, without vote, on 2 August, as recommended by the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 16 July. The sponsors were Belgium, Cyprus, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Iran, Ireland, Kenya, Lesotho, Mauritania, Morocco, the Netherlands, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States, the Upper Volta and Zambia.

In an August 1979 report to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General again reviewed UNSO activities and the action taken subsequent to his April report on implementing the mediumand long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region. The report noted that UNSO assistance had been requested for 24 regional and 84 national priority projects requiring $550 million, $300 million of which had been mobilized either bilaterally or multilaterally or by contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities, managed by UNSO. The Trust Fund had provided approximately $54 million for 45 priority projects of which 20 were completed. An additional $10 million had been mobilized through the Trust Fund during the year and used immediately for expanding ongoing activities and initiating new ones.

By resolution 34/16, adopted on 9 November, the Assembly noted with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General and expressed gratitude to contributors to the programme for the region. It requested all Member States, concerned United Nations—related organizations and FAO in particular, intergovernmental and private organizations and individuals to give special attention to the current food situation in Cape Verde, Chad and Mauritania, and urged all Governments, those bodies and individuals to continue to respond favourably to requests for assistance from CILSS and the Governments of its members. Further, the Assembly reaffirmed the role of UNSO as the principal body responsible for coordinating United Nations efforts to help the countries of the Sahel. It invited UNSO to continue its co-ordination efforts to ensure an effective contribution by the United Nations system to the region's recovery and rehabilitation programme and to increase its ability to respond adequately to additional requests for assistance.

Resolution 34/16 was adopted, without vote, as recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where it was similarly approved on 29 October. The text was sponsored by Botswana, Cape Verde, Chad, France, the Gambia, the Ivory Coast, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal, Togo, Uganda and the Upper Volta.

On 18 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/187, on implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification. (For details, see p. 701.)

Aid to the Dominican Republic and Dominica

Following the devastation caused by hurricanes "David" and "Frederic" in the Dominican Republic and Dominica in August and September 1979, the representative of Panama, Chairman of the Latin American group of Member States at the United Nations for September, requested that an item on measures to assist those two countries be included in the current General Assembly agenda. An explanatory memorandum attached to the request stressed the severity of the damage.

By a letter of 12 October to the Secretary-General, the President of the Dominican Republic conveyed the gratitude of his country for United Nations concern and assistance. Letters of 8 and 29 October from the representatives of the Dominican Republic and Barbados requested circulation of two reports prepared by a group of experts of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) on the effects of the hurricanes on the Dominican Republic and Dominica, respectively, and identified areas in which international assistance was needed.

On 9 November, the Assembly adopted resolutions 34/18 and 34/19, inviting international assistance for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of the Dominican Republic and Dominica, respectively. By these parallel resolutions, the Assembly endorsed two resolutions adopted by consensus by the Committee of the Whole of ECLA at its thirteenth special session held on 19 October 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, by which the Committee had appealed for increased international aid to alleviate the economic and social problems faced by those two countries as the result of the hurricanes. The Committee had also recommended that the Dominican Republic and Dominica should receive the same treatment as that granted to the group of countries termed least developed by the Assembly, until the situation was normalized.

The Assembly urged Member States and international organizations urgently to provide the assistance envisaged in the ECLA resolutions and asked the Secretary-General to keep the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly informed during the coming two years of the results achieved.

The Assembly adopted resolutions 34/18 and 34/19 without vote; the texts, each sponsored by the same 40 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), had been approved, also without vote, by the Second Committee on 29 October. Speaking after approval of the resolutions in that Committee, France and Sweden (which also spoke on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway) stressed the clear differentiation they considered should be made between according the status of least developed to a country on a temporary basis and conferring such status on a regular basis.

An appeal for world solidarity with the Caribbean countries affected by the hurricanes was also the subject of one of several resolutions adopted by the sixty-sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference, held at Caracas from 13 to 21 September 1979, and transmitted to the Assembly by Venezuela by a letter of 16 October.

By a letter of 15 November, the representative of the Dominican Republic transmitted a note from his country's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs containing a proposal by the Dominican President, for United Nations consideration, for the establishment of a permanent special fund for use specifically for aid to the islands of the Caribbean area, which regularly suffered from hurricanes.

Aid to Jamaica

Having considered a recommendation by the UNDP Administrator for assistance to Jamaica following widespread flooding, the UNDP Governing Council on 2 July 1979 approved a special assistance programme for Jamaica in the amount of $1 million.

The Economic and Social Council, noting by resolution 1979/60 which it adopted without vote on 3 August—the vigorous efforts made by the Jamaican Government to relieve the suffering of the flood victims and noting with appreciation the aid rendered by some Member States and non-governmental and United Nations organizations, particularly UNDP and FAO, and the role played by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, especially in mobilizing relief assistance, invited all Member States, specialized agencies, United Nations organizations and international financial institutions to intensify their efforts in support of Jamaican measures to rehabilitate and reconstruct the affected areas. Resolution 1979/60 was recommended for adoption by the Third Committee, which had approved without vote on 23 July a text sponsored by 35 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Aid to Yugoslavia

The UNDP Governing Council, by the same resolution by which it approved special assistance for Jamaica, also approved such a programme for Yugoslavia, in the amount of $1,350,000, following a severe earthquake which had struck the Montenegrin sea coast in April 1979.

By resolution 1979/58, adopted without vote on 3 August, the Economic and Social Council, noting the tragic consequences of the earthquake—loss of many lives, enormous destruction and more than 100,000 people left homeless—and noting with appreciation international assistance already given and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator's role in informing the world community of the extent of the damage, invited all States to offer further assistance for the reconstruction and development of the stricken area and invited United Nations organizations to bear in mind the area's long-term reconstruction needs when deciding on assistance and services to be extended to Member States.

The resolution was recommended by the Third Committee, which had approved the 31-power text by consensus on 17 July (for sponsors, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The General Assembly subsequently endorsed the Council's recommendations when it adopted resolution 34/56, by which States were invited to consider what further assistance they could offer to Montenegro. The Assembly also noted with appreciation the assistance already rendered by the international community and, in particular, by UNDP and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

The Assembly adopted resolution 34/56, without vote, on 29 November on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had similarly approved the 40-power text on 16 November (for sponsors, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Aid to Ethiopia

During 1979, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) and other United Nations organizations continued their programmes of assistance to Ethiopia for the relief and recovery of its drought-stricken areas in accordance with a 1978 resolution of the General Assembly.³

During the year, UNDP and FAO supported projects in soil and water conservation, cereal seed and quality control, seed processing and land-use planning, valued at over $3 million. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) assistance to Ethiopia focused on child feeding through the provision of food to mothers, and water supply schemes involving drilling and digging of wells to alleviate emergency drought conditions. The total cost of UNICEF'S 1979 programme was almost $5.6 million.

Early in 1978, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had initiated a humanitarian assistance programme for victims of the Ogaden conflict. By 1 June 1979, UNHCR had obligated more than $7 million for food, resettlement and reconstruction assistance to these displaced persons. Seeds and tools were distributed to enable agricultural activities to continue, self-help programmes for the reconstruction of communal facilities and private dwellings were established, water-supply systems were improved, and the construction of grain stores and health centres was begun.

The Economic and Social Council on 4 May, at its first regular 1979 session, took note with satisfaction of an oral report of the Secretary-General on assistance activities in the droughtstricken areas of Ethiopia. The report, presented on 30 April by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, noted that the intractable nature of the problem could be gauged from the fact that this was the sixth successive year in which the Secretary-General had reported on the progress of assistance to Ethiopia. Occasional notes of cautious optimism, sounded in earlier reports had been followed by new setbacks, caused either by conflict and the consequent displacement of people or by crop failure resulting from recurrent drought or excessive rainfall and flooding, and devastation by locusts and other pests.

It was reported that, in response to appeals by FAO and UNDRO in the latter part of 1978, more than 200,000 tons of cereals and complementary foods provided by the World Food Programme, the European Economic Community and a number of Governments had reached Ethiopia or had been pledged for 1979. The response of the international community to an appeal for logistic and technical assistance for port management and inland transport was also encouraging. Pledges were received in cash or in kind for 163 trucks and 124 trailers; assistance from the International Labour Organisation (ILO) valued at $702,000 and funded by UNDP complemented Government services for their operation and maintenance. In addition, ILO continued to implement a project, also funded by UNDP, for staff training in the operation and maintenance of rural water supply installations.

With regard to the situation in Ethiopia, the Council also heard statements by UNDP'S Deputy Assistant Administrator for Africa on UNDP aid being provided to deal with emergency relief, and by the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia, who outlined his Government's measures to deal with emergency relief and rehabilitation in the drought-stricken areas. Despite the tremendous efforts made by the Government and the international community, he said, the catastrophic effects of the drought remained unchecked. Well over 3 million people would urgently require food assistance during the next 12 months, he added; about 2.5 million of them were victims of drought and more than a million had been adversely affected by strife and unrest in the southern and south-eastern parts of the country.

By resolution 1979/2 of 4 May, the Council requested concerned United Nations organizations and programmes to continue and intensify their assistance to Ethiopia's relief and rehabilitation efforts, particularly the Government's resettlement programme. The Council appealed to Member States and intergovernmental, nongovernmental and voluntary organizations to continue and increase their assistance to Ethiopia.

Resolution 1979/2 was adopted without vote as proposed by 31 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

A further report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia was considered by the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session.

The report reviewed relief assistance in food programmes, assistance to displaced persons and trends in development aid, and presented information on the amount of assistance given in agriculture, education, health, relief, natural resources and other developmental programmes. It noted that there had been a considerable increase in relief assistance over the previous two-year period, while agriculture, education and health had received approximately the same external support.

By resolution 34/54, adopted without vote on 29 November, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report, requested concerned United Nations organizations to increase aid to Ethiopia in its relief and rehabilitation efforts, appealed to Member States and intergovernmental, non-governmental and voluntary organizations to do likewise, and called upon all concerned to ensure that the international assistance provided was used for the sole purpose of relief and rehabilitation. The Second Committee had approved the text without vote on 7 November, as sponsored by 47 powers (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

France, speaking after the vote, said that it considered the question of assistance to drought-stricken countries in Africa to be a long-term one, not a matter of emergency disaster relief; UNDRO could not handle problems of this magnitude and France agreed with an Australian proposal that the Joint Inspection Unit make a study of UNDRO operations.

Measures to expedite international relief

The Secretary-General noted in his 1979 report to the General Assembly that the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator had continued to identify and remove obstacles impeding the delivery of international relief assistance. Examination of replies to a questionnaire which the Co-ordinator had sent to Member States revealed that many countries still required entry visas for United Nations and other emergency relief personnel. In order to overcome difficulties associated with visa delays, the Co-ordinator had requested that one-year visas be issued to his staff most likely to be involved in assistance work by the 48 Member States judged especially prone to natural disasters.

Disaster preparedness and prevention

The Secretary-General, in his 1979 report on the activities of UNDRO, reviewed UNDRO'S activities in the field of disaster preparedness and prevention. He noted that UNDP was already funding regional projects in preparedness and that in past years UNEP had provided funds to UNDRO for studies designed to form a compendium of current knowledge about disaster prevention and mitigation. The report stated that more attention should be given to the preparedness and prevention needs of countries whose own resources made it less likely that they would be able to put recommendations of technical assistance missions into effect; it was these countries—the disaster-prone among the least developed countries and those most seriously affected by economic crises—to which the Co-ordinator was according priority.

Most improvements in a country's state of preparedness called for investment in new equipment, buildings or non-perishable supplies. The Co-ordinator, the report noted, was uniquely placed to appeal to donors to offer whatever was required if it could not be provided within the framework of multilateral or bilateral assistance.

The Secretary-General noted that UNDRO had sent survey missions to Madagascar, Mozambique and the United Republic of Tanzania during October 1978 and March 1979 to evaluate the state of flood and drought preparedness, and to review their need for assistance to strengthen their administrative and technical capabilities to investigate the risk of natural disaster. Two UNDRO representatives made presentations during a seminar on disaster preparedness in Delhi, India, in January 1979. At the sixth session of a WMO/Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific panel on tropical cyclones, held at Rangoon, Burma, from 27 February to 6 March, UNDRO announced its decision to finance overseas training fellowships in disaster preparedness for Bangladesh, Burma, India and Pakistan. During March, arrangements were made to send a consultant to the Philippines to advise on the establishment of a disaster research and training institute.

Technical co-operation missions, jointly undertaken in April and November by UNDRO and the United States Agency for International Development, studied disaster preparedness in Haiti and Jamaica, respectively, and made recommendations for the establishment of national disaster planning and preparedness offices. In May, an UNDRO representative visited floodprone areas of Afghanistan to review its state of disaster preparedness and prevention; in July, another visited Nepal to advise on flood contingency planning, and in December an expert arrived there to advise on flood control and flood damage mitigation. An UNDRO/UNDP preparatory mission visited Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras in September/October to study reviving a regional project in disaster prevention and preparedness covering Central America, Mexico and Panama. In October, an UNDRO officer made specific recommendations for improvement of disaster preparedness in four disaster-prone provinces. Senegal and Zaire requested technical advisory services to reinforce their relief organizations, plans and operations following UNDRO exploratory missions in September. During September and October, UNDRO missions visited Lesotho, Malawi and Rwanda to review their needs in pre-disaster planning, and in October an UNDRO representative visited Mozambique to discuss preparedness and technical assistance needs.

The Co-ordinator convened a meeting of experts at Geneva in July to examine and clarify techniques of assessing vulnerability to natural hazards with a view to their wider application.

With the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Cooperation and the League of Red Cross Societies, UNDRO co-sponsored a seminar in November at Suva, Fiji, to discuss the effectiveness of existing pre-disaster planning measures, effective use of resources and improvements of relief coordination in the South Pacific region.

Report of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

The Economic and Social Council, at its second regular 1979 session, noted the Secretary-General's report on the activities of UNDRO and commended the Co-ordinator for his continued efforts. It welcomed the decision of the UNDP Governing Council at its June/July 1979 session to invite the UNDP Administrator to continue his efforts to assist Governments requesting technical assistance in disaster preparedness and prevention at the national and regional levels.

By resolution 1979/59 on UNDRO, containing these provisions, the Council also invited Governments to contribute to the trust fund for strengthening UNDRO and the technical and emergency assistance subaccounts, and renewed its invitation to Governments, intergovernmental agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned with relief operations to co-operate with the Co-ordinator to ensure rapid delivery of international relief and to consider adopting legislative and other measures to remove obstacles and expedite international relief assistance to disaster victims. It also asked the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy for the third United Nations development decade to take into account matters concerning disaster relief, preparedness and prevention.

Resolution 1979/59 was adopted, without vote, on 3 August as recommended by the Third Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 25 July. The text was sponsored by Barbados, Jamaica, Lesotho, Malta, Pakistan, Romania, Senegal, the Sudan, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia.

The USSR, speaking after approval of the text, said it did not object to its adoption on the understanding that none of its provisions would give the Secretariat the right to transfer UNDRO operational activities to the regular budget of the United Nations.

Introducing the report of the Secretary-General on UNDRO'S activities to the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session, the Coordinator noted that funding for emergency assistance activities continued to pose a major problem. The decrease in the value of money and the increase in the incidence of disasters in which UNDRO assistance had been sought made the $200,000 annual provision from the regular budget inadequate.

By resolution 34/55, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report, commended the Co-ordinator, asked him to develop further his working arrangements with donors and recipients, and reaffirmed the necessity of ensuring a continued sound financial basis for UNDRO. It requested additional funds in the 1980-1981 regular budget for UNDRO to permit the Co-ordinator to respond to at least 12 requests for emergency disaster assistance in any one year, with a normal ceiling of $30,000 per country for any one disaster. It urged all Governments to contribute to the UNDRO trust fund, taking into particular consideration the financial problems of the subaccount for emergency assistance. It also renewed its call on Governments and international organizations to provide detailed information on current and intended relief contributions in order to avoid duplication of effort and to ensure the necessary assistance to survivors.

The Assembly asked the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy to take disaster relief, preparedness and prevention into account in its deliberations, invited concerned Governments and organizations to consider adopting appropriate legislative and other measures to remove obstacles and expedite international relief assistance, and welcomed UNDP'S decision to consider including technical co-operation activities in this field in national and regional programmes.

Resolution 34/55 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 15 abstentions, on 29 November as recommended by the Second Committee, which had approved the text on 23 November by 119 votes to 0, with 17 abstentions. The text was sponsored by Bangladesh, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Honduras, Indonesia, Jamaica, Madagascar, Mozambique, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Peru, Somalia, Tunisia, Turkey, the Upper Volta and Yugoslavia.

At the request of the United Kingdom, a separate vote was taken on the paragraph by which additional funds were requested from the regular budget, a provision on which France and Italy also expressed reservations; they considered that UNDRO activities should be funded from extrabudgetary sources. This view was shared by the USSR, which spoke on behalf also of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR. The paragraph was adopted by 114 votes to 14, with 8 abstentions. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom regretted that the text had been submitted to the Second rather than the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. The United States said it had voted against the paragraph and the resolution because of its policy that there should be zero growth in the regular budget. Belgium said it had abstained in the vote on, rather than opposed, that paragraph, adding that additional funds did not necessarily mean that additional operational activities would be undertaken.

Consultative arrangements with non-governmental organizations

The Economic and Social Council's Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations met from 26 February to 2 March 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, New York, to consider new applications for consultative status with the Council and requests for reclassification received from non-governmental organizations (NGOs), as well as requests that had been deferred by the Committee in 1978. The Committee also reviewed the quadrennial reports submitted by organizations which had been in Category I or II consultative status for at least four years.

At its first regular (April/May) 1979 session, the Council considered and approved the Committee's recommendations concerning the categories of consultative status to be granted to various NGOs, in accordance with the criteria set forth in a 1968 Council resolution establishing arrangements for obtaining and maintaining consultative status.¹

Thus, at the end of 1979, there were 593 NGOs which the Council could consult, divided into three groups. In Category I were 30 organizations broadly representative of major population segments in a large number of countries, closely involved in the economic and social life of the areas they represented, and which had marked and sustained contributions to make to the achievements and objectives of the United Nations.

In Category II were 206 internationally known organizations having special competence in, and specifically concerned with, only a few of the fields of activity covered by the Council. On the Roster were 357 NG0s which the Council, or the Secretary-General in consultation with the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, considered able to make occasional and useful contributions to the Council's work.

Recommendations of the Committee

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations recommended that two organizations be reclassified to Category I, that two be reclassified to Category II and that four others requesting reclassification be maintained in their current status: the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, the International Federation for Home Economics, the International Movement ADT—Fourth World, and Quota International, Incorporated.

The Committee recommended that one new applicant be granted Category I status, that seven be granted Category II status and that 23 be placed on the Roster. It further recommended that no status be granted to four applicants and deferred consideration of the applications of eight other organizations to its next session.

The Committee reviewed the quadrennial reports of NGOs in Categories I and II and recommended placing on the Roster five organizations which had failed to comply with a Council request for additional information. It recommended that the Council lift the 1978 suspension of one organization which had submitted a report and that it suspend for one year an organization which had failed to submit a report, after which consultative status would be withdrawn if no report were received.

Review of non-governmental organization s grante d consultativ e statu s

By a note of 2 April 1979, the Secretary-General informed the Economic and Social Council that he intended to place on the Roster the Centre for Research on the New International Economic Order.

By decision 1979/12 of 11 April, the Council, on an oral proposal by its President, adopted without vote, took note of the Secretary-General's note and of the report of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. By the same decision, it also decided, in approving the Committee's recommendations without objection, to reclassify the Muslim World League and the World Muslim Congress from Category II to Category I and to reclassify from the Roster to Category II the International Electrotechnical Commission and Pax Christi International.

The International Social Security Association was granted Category I status and the Conference of European Churches, the International Centre for Industry and the Environment, the International Committee for European Security Co-operation, the International ordinating Committee of Financial Analysts' Associations, the International Fellowship of Reconciliation and the International Union of Young Christian Democrats were granted Category II status. In addition, Category II status was granted to the Federation of Arab Scientific Research Councils on condition that it did not seek consultative status as an intergovernmental organization with other organizations of the United Nations system.

Placed on the Roster were: the American Foreign Law Association, the American Society for Engineering Education, the Association for World Education, the Bureau international de la recuperation, the Caribbean Conservation Association, the Council on Religion and International Affairs, Data for Development International Association, the European Federation for the Welfare of the Elderly, the European Union of Women, the Federation of National Committees in the International Christian Youth Exchange, the Friedrich Ebert Foundation, the International Association for Housing Science, the International Association for the Promotion of Democracy under God (Pro Deo), the International Council for Commerical Arbitration, the International Council for Game and Wildlife Conservation, the International Institute of Rural Reconstruction, the International League for the Rights and Liberation of Peoples, La Leche League International, Movement for a Better World, the Overseas Education Fund of the League of Women Voters, the Romani Union, the World Council of Indigenous Peoples and the World Environment and Resources Council.

In approving further recommendations of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, the Council, by decision 1979/13 adopted without objection on 11 April, decided that five organizations—the Catholic International Union for Social Service, the International Abolitionist Federation, the International Institute of Public Finance, the Movement for Colonial Freedom, and Rotary International—should be removed from Category II and placed on the Roster, since they had failed to comply with the Council's request for additional information necessary for a valid assessment of their quadrennial reports. By the same decision, the Council suspended the International Union of Railways, which had not submitted a report, for one year, after which its consultative status would be automatically withdrawn if it failed to submit a report on its activities, and it lifted the suspension of the International Association of Educators for World Peace, which had submitted its quadrennial report.

Operating consultative arrangements

Written statements

Fifteen written statements by 12 individual NGOs were submitted to the Economic and Social Council during 1979 under the arrangements for consultation. In addition, statements were submitted jointly by 34 NGOs on the new international development strategy and by 35 NGOs on the integration of human rights in the new international development strategy, as contributions to the general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments. Written statements were also submitted to: the Commission on Human Rights, the Preparatory Committee for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women and the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology Development.

Hearings of non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations met at New York on 10 April and at Geneva on 5 July 1979 to consider requests from organizations to be heard by the Council or its committees in connexion with various agenda items.

During the Council's April/May session, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) and the International Council of Women made statements on measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers. The latter also made a statement on the agenda item dealing with activities for the advancement of women and the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace. In addition, the World Council for the Welfare of the Blind was heard on social development questions, and ICFTU on human rights questions.

During the second regular (July/August) session of the Council, seven organizations—the Afro-Asian Peoples' Solidarity Organization, the International Association of French-Speaking Parliamentarians, ICFTU, the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources, the Inter-Parliamentary Union, the Women's International Democratic Federation and the World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU)-made statements during the general discussion of international economic and social policy.

Statements were also made by WFTU on three additional agenda items: transnational corporations, science and technology for development and restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system. The World Confederation of Labour and ICFTU likewise made statements on transnational corporations, and the Inter-Parliamentary Union was heard on international co-operation on the environment. In addition, the International Catholic Child Bureau, the International Organization of Consumers Unions, the League of Red Cross Societies and the World Federation of United Nations Associations made statements on co-operation and coordination within the United Nations system.

Co-ordination and organizational questions

During 1979, the new subsidiary committees of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) held their first sessions. The component of the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (ccsq) that dealt with programme and related policy matters focused its attention on the planning- process, joint planning among organizations of the United Nations system and cross-organizational programme analyses. Preliminary consideration was given by CCSQ'S component that dealt with operational activities to: the outline of a report on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities, which was submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly later in the year; designation and arrangements for the exercise of the function of a resident co-ordinator; enhancing the responsiveness of operational activities to national policies and priorities, as well as to the requirements of the new international economic order; the utilization of the country programming process of the United Nations Development Programme as a frame of reference for operational activities; the need for linkages between pre-investment activities and investment; and technical and economic co-operation among developing countries.

In the area of administrative policies, ACC's work concentrated on questions assigned to the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). Through the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions, ACC provided ICSC with information and views on matters with which ICSC had dealt at its most recent sessions.

A study of the feasibility and practicability of establishing a single tribunal in place of the two existing Administrative Tribunals- those of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation -was also undertaken by ACC in 1979. In December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General and ACC to pursue a progressive harmonization of the two Tribunals and to report in 1981.

Other matters dealt with in ACC'S annual report for 1978/ 1979 included relations between the United Nations and national parliaments, the financial situation of the periodical Development Forum, activities relating to youth, and the functioning of ACC'S Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB). Responding to a report of the Joint Inspection Unit, ACC decided that IOB should continue as a focal point for furnishing comprehensive information to intergovernmental bodies about the information systems and services of the United Nations family.

Other reports submitted by ACC to the Economic and Social Council in 1979 were on progress achieved in the field of nutrition under the new institutional arrangements, on interagency action in rural development, and on expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes.

At its 1979 session, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) considered and made recommendations on the process of programme planning in the United Nations and cross-organizational programme analyses, the reports of ACC and of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC, evaluation of the work programme on transnational corporations, and the proposed programme budget for 1980-1981.

The two main items considered by both CPC and ACC at their Joint Meetings, held at Geneva in July, were programme planning in the United Nations system, and information systems and the role of IOB.

Details of these and other co-ordination activities of the United Nations system are described below.

Functioning of co-ordination machinery

Restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system

Operational activities for development

At its first regular 1979 session, held from 2 to 4 April at Geneva, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) reviewed an outline of a report, requested by the General Assembly on 29 January 1979, 1 on policy issues pertaining to the United Nations system's operational activities for development. The report was to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly in 1980 by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. In this connexion, ACC gave further consideration to the implementation of an Assembly resolution of 20 December 1977 on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system² It approved the text of a standard letter of designation of an official at the country level (the resident coordinator) for the system's operational activities (see p. ,521), and requested the component of its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions dealing with operational activities (ccsq (OPS)) to discuss practical arrangements for the exercise of the official's functions. The text of the standard letter was annexed to ACC's annual report to the Council covering its work from mid-1978 to mid-1979.

The results of the consideration of the arrangements by CCSQ (OPS) were discussed by ACC in July. A text setting out provisional arrangements for the exercise of the functions of resident coordinator was annexed to an addendum to ACC's report, outlining the co-ordinator's functions and mechanisms for co-ordination and consultations. It was also recommended that the coordinator submit annual reports.

The review of operational activities and the text of the standard letter of designation were also considered by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) at the first part of its nineteenth (1979) session. The Committee recommended that the report of the Director-General on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities should be submitted through CPC in 1980. It expressed concern about various aspects of the letter of designation; these related to the role of the national authorities in co-ordinating operational activities, the responsibilities of the, resident co-ordinator vis-a-vis the Government and the agencies operating in a country, and the requirements needed for effectively ensuring that the system's operational activities responded fully to countries' needs and priori ties. It recommended that these concerns be borne in mind in the further elaboration of the co-ordinator's responsibilities and arrangements for the exercise of his functions.

The report on CPC's session and the annual report of ACC were considered at the Council's second regular (July/August) 1979 session by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee. On 27 July, the Committee approved an 18-power draft decision on CPC's report. It was adopted on 3 August as decision 1979/66, by which the Council inter alia recommended that the Assembly examine at its regular 1979 session the question of the responsibilities of the resident co-ordinator, including the text of the standard letter of designation and the arrangements for the exercise of his functions proposed by ACC.

In the Third Committee, Argentina had orally proposed, and the sponsors accepted, an amendment to add that the question be examined also on the basis of other relevant elements. (For further details on decision 1979/66, see p. 964.)

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/213, by which it took note of the standard letter and requested the Secretary-General to proceed with the designation of resident coordinators. (For details, see p. 522; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

(See also p. 541.)

Role of the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems

In 1979, efforts were contentrated on defining more precisely the role of ACC'S Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB).

See Y.U.N., 1978, p, 473, resolution 33/201.

² See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 438, resolution 32/197, esp. annex, para. 34.

The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), in a report circulated in April, recommended a strengthened role for 10B, a body composed of representatives of the United Nations and a number of specialized agencies. The report examined the historical background and current IOB work programme, suggesting that more attention be given to preparing cost estimates for information systems. The Inspectors suggested that 10B be given more impetus and guidance through revised terms of reference; its purpose should be defined as to identify common information needs among members of the United Nations family and to initiate measures to ensure the coordinated development of the information systems and services of the family. All member organizations of ACC should be members of IOB. Its work should include financial and administrative, as well as technical and scientific, systems. Before developing or expanding any technical, scientific or administrative information system, each organization should conduct a feasibility study which should be sent to IOB for comments, to be taken into account in the organization's final decision. The need for closer governmental involvement with 10B's work was emphasized. Its reports and programmes should be submitted to CPC and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions through ACC, and a revised budgetary procedure was suggested. Some broad programme objectives, with some specific objectives for 1980-1985, were put forward. The Common Register for Development Activities (CORE) project, an intergovernmental project register, was examined and a pilot continuation suggested.

Responding to the JIU report, ACC decided, following an ad hoc interagency meeting on the future of IOB held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 9 and 10 March, that the Board should continue as a focal point for furnishing comprehensive information to intergovernmental bodies about the information systems and services of the United Nations family. It agreed that no major development of an interorganizational system should be undertaken until organizations had assessed the probable costs and had made budgetary arrangements.

At its nineteenth session, CPC expressed concern that the administrative and substantive information systems in the United Nations family were generally not co-ordinated and were often incompatible. It agreed that IOB should identify needs and formulate proposals for co-ordinating both systems. Also, all proposals for new information systems and major modifications of existing ones should be referred to IOB for information. There must be rigorous cost-feasibility and cost-benefit analyses of any proposed information system project. All member organizations of ACC should also be members of 10B, and the level of representation should be such as to ensure competent handling of policy issues and technical questions. Continued efforts must be made to formulate common terminology, classifications and systems elements.

Responding to CPC'S recommendations at the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC, held at Geneva on 2 and 3 July, the IOB Chairman, speaking for ACC, said that IOB'S main task would be to formulate information system policies for the United Nations family to respond to the needs expressed by Governments. However, the CPC proposal that new information system efforts should be referred to IOB presented difficulties; to establish a mechanism for that purpose would cost more than $1 million a year. As to the cost of information systems, ACC had instructed IOB to look into the question of developing methods and criteria for assessing costs. (For a decision on IOB's budget for 1980-1981, see p. 1220.)

In addition, the Committees at their Joint Meetings discussed the co-ordination and compatibility of information systems, the definition of requirements for cross-organizational information, the membership and level of representation in 10B, development of common terminology and classification, and CORE.

General agreement was reached at the Joint Meetings that every effort should be made to identify areas where information was required on an interagency, system-wide basis and where the United Nations family needed to establish policies and set priorities for the development of greater uniformity, and that IOB should play an active role in that respect. Satisfaction was expressed at the efforts made by IOB, particularly in developing common terminology classifications and indexing tools and also in its proposals to develop methods and criteria for assessing the costs of information systems. There was also agreement that the possibility should be further explored of referring to IOB for its information all new information systems (and major modifications of existing ones) of concern to several organizations.

It was agreed also to implement without delay CORE 1, the first phase of the Common Register. This phase was designed to produce a financial analysis of the development expenditures of United Nations organizations by sector and country. However, no decision would be taken regarding CORE 2, a more elaborate indexing of activities in development projects, until thought had been given to how such information was related to the needs of intergovernmental programmes.

In 1979, within the framework of its coordination activities, 10B published a bibliography of United Nations thesauri, classifications and nomenclatures, broad terms for United Nations programmes and activities and the third edition of a directory of United Nations data and word-processing facilities. The format of the 10B Newsletter was improved to place emphasis on the exchange of information on system development. Work was carried out on system costs, information policy, the second edition of a directory of United Nations information systems and services (to be published in mid-1980), and a common decentralized information system for United Nations-family substantive documents. In response to CPC's recommendation that CORE 1 be implemented by 1 June 1980, input from members was requested and processed by 10B.

Interagency co-ordination

By decision 1979/67, on co-operation and coordination within the United Nations system, the Economic and Social Council inter alia requested CPC to consider ways of implementing the provision of the annex to the General Assembly's resolution on restructuring of 20 December 1977, by which the Assembly had called for arrangements to be made to improve communications between ACC and intergovernmental bodies, including wider access to the results of ACC discussions by these bodies on matters of concern to them; mutually convenient procedures should be worked out, according to the Assembly's directive, to enable the Chairman or designated representative of any of these bodies to be associated in an appropriate manner with Acc discussions of particular concern to that body.3

The Council's request was the final provision of decision 1979/67, adopted, without vote, on 3 August 1979, on the recommendation of the Council's Third Committee, which had approved it on 27 July, also without vote, on a proposal by the Netherlands. The sponsor accepted a USSR oral amendment to shorten the text. As originally proposed, CPC would have been asked to consider ways and means for improving communications between ACC and the intergovernmental bodies concerned, particularly the Council and CPC, with a view to giving effect to that particular provision of the Assembly's restructuring resolution.

On 19 December, the Assembly, by resolution 34/214, requested the Council, as envisaged in the 1977 resolution, to work out mutually convenient procedures for improving communications between ACC and the intergovernmental bodies concerned, including procedures to enable the members of the Council's and CPC's bureaux to participate in the work of ACC. (For details, see p. 523; for page reference to text of resolution 34/214, refer to index of resolutions AND DECISIONS.)

Also on 3 August, by decision 1979/68 adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council decided to keep under review, in accordance with the terms of the Assembly's 1977 restructuring resolution⁴ and of a resolution of 29 January 1979,⁵ the implementation of the relationship agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, with view to determining how the application of those agreements could best contribute to the achievement of the aims set forth in the 1977 resolution." The aims to which particular reference was made were measures to maximize uniformity of administrative, financial, budgetary, personnel and planning procedures, including establishment of a common procurement system, harmonized budget and programme cycles, a unified personnel system and a common recruitment and training system. There should also be improved coherence of action and integration of the various sectoral inputs from the United Nations system, and the country programming process of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) should be used as a frame of reference for organizations' operational activities. Other objectives were those in sections of the 1977 resolution relating to planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation, and to interagency co-ordination.

The text of the decision had been orally proposed by Finland-originally as an amendment to be added to the Netherlands draft decision on co-operation and co-ordination within the United Nations system (see above)-in the Council's Third Committee, where it was approved without vote on 31 July.

Work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

In its annual report to the Economic and Social Council covering its work from mid-1978 to mid-1979, acc noted the progress it had achieved in streamlining its subsidiary machinery and discussed the functioning of its new committees that had been established in 1978⁷-the Organizational Committee, the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) with its two components dealing with personnel questions (CCAQ (FBR)) and financial and budgetary matters (CCAQ (FB)), and the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (CCSQ) with its two components dealing with programme and related policy matters (CCSQ (PROG)) and operational activities (CCSQ, (OPS)) — all of which held their first sessions in 1979.

At its first regular 1979 session, from 12 to 16 March, CCSQ (PROG) focused its attention on the planning process, joint planning among organizations of the United Nations system, and crossorganizational programme analyses.

Preliminary consideration was given by CCSQ (OPS), at its first regular 1979 session held from 25 April to 1 May, to: the outline of a report on a comprehensive policy review of operational activities to be presented to the General Assembly in 1980 by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, and designation and practical arrangements for the exercise of the function of resident coordinator (see subsection above on OPERATIONAL ACTIVITIES FOR DEVELOPMENT); selection of items for future discussion concerning enhancing the responsiveness of operational activities of the United Nations system to national policies and priorities, as well as to the requirements of the new international economic order; the utilization of the UNDP country programming process as a frame of reference for operational activities (the Committee arranged for a review of experience in the United Nations system in programming non-UNDP resources in order to formulate guidelines for such utilization); the need for linkages between pre-investment activities and investment, noting that a further report on linkages between technical co-operation, pre-investment activities and investment should be prepared; and technical and economic co-operation among developing countries. On this last subject, the Committee decided that a meeting should be held to consider implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries adopted at the United Nations Conference on Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries in 1978, implementation of decisions of the fifth (May/June 1979) session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (see p. 571) and combined economic and technical co-operation operational activities.

The two components of CCAQ — CCAQ (PER) and CCAQ (FB) — met from 22 January to 2 February and from 5 to 9 March, respectively.

Also covered in ACC's report was its work on the future of IOB and related activities (see subsection above) as well as on administrative questions, closer relations between the United Nations and national parliaments, and the financial situation of Development Forum (see subchapter immediately below).

Other reports submitted by ACC to the Economic and Social Council in 1979 were on progress achieved in the field of nutrition under new institutional arrangements, on interagency action in rural development, and on expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes (see pp. 970, 971 and 968, respectively).

On 3 August 1979, the Council took note of inter alia ACC's annual report for 1978/1979 and its reports on progress achieved in nutrition and on interagency action in rural development. This action was incorporated in decision 1979/67, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 27 July as part of a proposal by the Netherlands.

Joint meetings of CPC and ACC

The two main items considered by CPC and ACC at the fourteenth in their series of Joint Meetings, held at Geneva on 2 and 3 July 1979, were programme planning in the United Nations system, and information systems and the role of IOB (for discussion of the latter subject at the Joint Meetings, see subsection above). The Administrative Committee had suggested that an item on evaluation in the United Nations system be considered at the Joint Meetings, but CPC had recommended, at its 1979 session, that the question of evaluation could be discussed as an element of programme planning, on which CPC had begun an in-depth study on the process in the United Nations system.

During the debate on programme planning, attention focused on the duration, frequency and flexibility of the medium-term plan, the introduction to the medium-term plan and the question of evaluation. Although no agreement had been reached in the United Nations as to whether its medium-term plans should be for a fixed period or of a rolling nature, the two Committees noted that their common position on having a six-year time-frame for medium-term plans would facilitate co-ordination of programme planning among the organizations in the system. While total harmonization of programme planning throughout the system was neither practical nor desirable, it was agreed that harmonization of programme planning should seek the optimum balance between benefits to be derived from greater harmonization and the particular requirements of individual organizations. Work of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

Documentation

The Committee for Programme and Coordination in 1978 had recommended to the Economic and Social Council that it review for CPC, during its organizational and first regular sessions each year, the situation with respect to documentation and issue the necessary directives in order to ensure that all the required documents were available to CPC in all the official languages of the United Nations at least six weeks before the beginning of its session.

In a note dated 5 February 1979, the Secretariat informed the Council that, precluding unforeseen developments, most of the documents for CPC's next session, scheduled to convene on 7 May, would be distributed by 26 March. The note listed the documentation to be issued under the various agenda items.

On 9 February, on an oral proposed by its President, the Council adopted, without vote, decision 1979/6, by which it took note of the note by the Secretariat.

Further Secretariat notes submitted in April updated the document-status report, noting that, for a variety of reasons, none of the documents being submitted could be issued by 26 March

The Committee, at its nineteenth session, adopted a decision by which it deplored in the strongest terms the failure to provide documentation on time, which it said literally paralysed and prevented it from carrying out its work, particularly its examination, of the proposed programme budget for 1980- 1981. (See also p. 1215.)

Report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination

The Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its nineteenth session held at United Nations Headquarters from 7 May to 1 June (first part) and from 24 to 28 September and on 4 October 1979 (second part), considered and made recommendations on the process of programme planning in the United Nations and cross-organizational programme analyses (see p. 969), the report of ACC, the report of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (see section above), evaluation of the work programme on transnational corporations, the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1980-1981 (see p. 1186) and the provisional agenda for its twentieth (1980) session.

On evaluation of the programme of work on transnational corporations, CPC agreed with recommendations of the Secretary-General that the Commission on Transnational Corporations should refer to the relevant parts of the mediumterm plan and programme budget in assessing progress in implementing the programme, and that the Centre on Transnational Corporations should develop a system of obtaining on a regular basis the views of 'Governments on policy analysis (research) work. It recommended that: the resources allocated among the components of a comprehensive information system on transnational corporations should be commensurate with the tasks and priorities assigned to them; coordination with related systems within the United Nations should be strengthened and duplication avoided; and a feedback system should be established to monitor changing needs and user responses. The Committee agreed that greater attention should be given to means of promoting understanding of the code of conduct for transnational corporations, currently in preparation, but stressed that these activities could only be implemented as negotiations on the code drew to a close. The Centre's efforts to organize information and experience gained through advisory missions should be continued and strengthened and this information should be systematically accessible within the limits of confidentiality. With regard to the mandate of the regional joint units of the Centre, CPC recommended to the Economic and Social Council that they should be the focal point of all regional matters relating to transnational corporations, while the Centre should continue as the focal point for all such corporations and related matters in the United Nations system. The Commission should give precise guidelines to the role of the joint units and should call on regional commissions to assist the Secretary-General in ensuring that any proposals to modify the units' mandates were submitted for review and approval by the relevant bodies and legislative organs. (See also Chapter IX on QUESTIONS CONCERNING TRANSNATIONAL CORPORATIONS.)

The report of CPC on its nineteenth session was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular 1979 session. By decision 1979/66, adopted without vote on 3 August, the Council took note of the chapters of the report relating to the process of programme planning in the United Nations, evaluation, crossorganizational programme analyses, and the reports of ACC and the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC. Endorsing CPC's conclusions and recommendations, it decided to transmit its report and the views expressed on it in the Council to the General Assembly for consideration at its regular 1979 session. Another provision of the decision concerned examination of the responsibilities of the resident co-ordinator (see p. 960).

The draft decision had been proposed by Barbados, Belgium, Cape Verde, Cyprus, Finland, France, Ghana, Indonesia, Japan, Kenya, Lesotho, Norway, Romania, the Sudan, Sweden, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the United States, and was approved without vote by the Third Committee on 27 July.

On 25 October, by decision 1979/93 adopted, without objection, on an oral proposal by its President, the Council took note of the chapter of cpc's report pertaining to consideration of the provisional agenda for cpc's twentieth session and approved the agenda and documentation for that session. The provisional agenda and documentation list had been submitted to the Council by cpc pursuant to Council resolution 1979/41 of 10 May, by which the Council had decided, for purposes of document and budgetary control, that its subsidiary bodies were to submit to it for review a provisional agenda and a list of requested documentation. Co-ordination of administrative activities

Administrative policies relating to the International Civil Service Commission

In its annual report for 1978/1979, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) stated that, in the area of administrative policies, its work concentrated on the important questions assigned to the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC). Through its subsidiary body, the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions, ACC provided ICSC with information and views on various matters with which ICSC had dealt at its most recent sessions. Among these were: the effect of currency instability on the operation of the salary system generally and on the determination of pensionable remuneration in particular; policies, standards and methods of recruitment and career development; surveys of local conditions of employment in headquarters duty stations for the purpose of recommending the salary scales of the General Service category; and review of certain allowances requested by the General Assembly. (See also p. 1166.)

Feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal

In accordance with a 1978 General Assembly resolution, ⁹ ACC, in 1979, undertook a study of the feasibility of establishing a single administrative tribunal for the common system. It indicated in its report for 1978/1979 that a report on this study would be submitted to the Assembly at its thirty-fourth (1979) session.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination, in its report to the Assembly, noted with satisfaction that ACC was undertaking the study and recommended that it be further pursued so that the Assembly might give the matter due consideration at its 1979 session.

A report of the Secretary-General, submitted to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in November (see p. 1221), discussed the feasibility and practicability of establishing a single tribunal in place of two existing Administrative Tribunals- those of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation.

On 17 December, by decision 34/438, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General and ACC to pursue a progressive harmonization and further development of the statutes, rules and practices of the two Administrative Tribunals with a view to strengthening the common system and aiming at the establishment of a single tribunal. The Secretary-General was to report on the matter to the Assembly in 1981.

(For details, see p. 1221; for page reference to text of decision 34/438, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

a It was understood that the programme would also contain proposals setting out the precise procedure for the preparation and review of the proposed programme budget.

⁹ See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 995, resolution 33/119 of 19 December 1978, esp. section I, para. 2.

Expenditures in relation to programmes

The fourteenth report of ACC on expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes, submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1979, incorporated the revised and improved method of programme classification, a review of which ACC completed in March 1979.

Unlike previous reports which had dealt with three financial periods, the current report reviewed only two years, and it was envisaged that future reports would cover a period of two successive biennia. The report showed total expenditures by all organizations during 1978 (actual) and 1979 (estimated), broken down by year and main source of funds. The revised programme classification comprised 16 broad programme headings, divided into a total of 64 subheadings and organized on the basis of programme sectors. The report also included explanatory notes which were presented in conjunction with the breakdowns by organization and by subsector. The organizations for which expenditures were identified separately were the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, each of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency. The figures for the United Nations covered a number of programmes, units and funds, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The report also included 1978 expenditures financed by UNDP for technical co-operation activities, and 1978 and estimated 1979 expenditures of the International Trade Centre which were financed by the General Agreement on Tariffs and

In its report, ACC stated that it intended to continue studying the revised programme classification and the presentation of the report with a view to further improvements.

Budgeting for the effects of currency instability and inflation

In its 1978/1979 report to the Council, Acc indicated that, in pursuing its study of the problems involved in budgeting for the effects of currency instability and inflation, it gave further attention to the question of arrangements for the reimbursement of support costs incurred by the organizations of the United Nations system in connexion with extrabudgetary activities, and formulated views for consideration by UNDAP'S

Intergovernmental Working Group on Support Costs (see p. 544).

The increasing number of requests by central intergovernmental organs in connexion with their reviews of system-wide financial and budgetary questions placed considerable demand on the organizations of the system and on ACC'S subsidiary machinery to provide information and analyses. To meet this demand, ACC agreed to strengthen its subsidiary machinery.

Relations between the United Nations and national parliaments

The Council of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, a non-governmental organization in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, had adopted a resolution in 1978 by which it recommended that international organizations take all appropriate steps to meet parliaments' needs for information regarding their activities, in particular to ensure that the documentation they issued would reach parliaments and their sources, that the services of their regional or national offices were strengthened, and that courses on their activities and documentation were made available to parliamentary officials.

Having been informed of this resolution, ACC agreed that the executive heads of organizations, bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, in agreement with Governments, should supply commissions of parliaments with information regarding their activities and, where possible, organize visits by parliamentarians to their headquarters or offices and arrange for meetings with parliamentary groups. In addition, ACC proposed that the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) prepare information and material addressed specifically to parliamentarians.

Development Forum

Concern at the financial situation of Development Forum-the single publication of the organizations of the United Nations system reflecting the joint purposes of their public information activities, particularly in the economic and social field-was expressed by ACC, which recommended that the organizations of the system make financial contributions to guarantee the periodical's continuation during 1979. It instructed Junic to present proposals to ACC for strengthening the financial and organizational structure of the publication and to prepare a statement on its editorial policy.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination, in its 1979 report to the General Assembly, no ted Acc's recommendation that United Nations organizations make financial contributions to Development Forum. Questions were raised by some members about financing, through regular budgets, activities originally funded from extrabudgetary sources, and attention was drawn to the considerable funds currently spent on public information activities. The Assistant Secretary-General for Programme Planning and Co-ordination pointed out that ACC's recommendation had been addressed to the short-term liquidity problem, based on the view that the publication was valuable and covered important economic and social development issues.

On 18 December 1979, the Assembly, by resolution 34/182, affirmed the importance of the role played by Development Forum in disseminating the objectives of the new international economic order, decided that its continued publication as an interagency project was essential and that United Nations participation in its production should be ensured, and requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1980 a report on developments in the public information activities of the Secretariat, including those relating to interagency co-ordination, in particular in the light of Assembly decisions on the need to establish a new and more effective world information and communication order. (For details, see p. 452; for page reference to text of resolution 34/182, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Co-ordination of programme activities

Planning process, joint planning and cross-'organizational programme analysis

The Administrative Committee on Co-(ACC, in its annual report for ordination 1978/1979 to the Economic and Social Council, reported on its discussions on joint planning and noted that it had agreed on preliminary measures to be taken on a general framework which would assist in identifying areas amenable to joint programming and planning. It suggested that such areas could be derived from General Assembly decisions on subjects for intensified international attention and from the experience gained from the current cross-organizational programme analyses. It emphasized that initially joint planning exercises should be undertaken selectively in a small number of well-defined areas. The results of these exercises would ultimately be reflected in programme budgets and work programmes.

The report emphasized the need to have precise and clear definitions of the scope of crossorganizational analyses and noted that agreement had been reached on procedures for the development of a conceptual framework for the preparation of the analyses. It was proposed that future cross-organizational programme analyses might include marine affairs, youth activities, public administration, and new and renewable sources of energy.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) noted ACC'S conclusions and agreed that a clear definition of the scope of each cross-organizational analysis was desirable. It suggested, however, that lack of such definitions should not preclude undertaking analyses in areas where activities interfaced. The Committee reaffirmed that rural development would be the subject of analysis in 1980 and agreed to consider youth in 1981, in lieu of statistics, which was currently under review in other forums.

The Committee opened discussion of the item on the cross-organizational analysis of the energy programmes of the United Nations system. Owing to lack of time, however, it was unable to consider a report of the Secretary-General on the matter and agreed to consider an updated version at its 1980 session.

The Committee resumed its analysis of United Nations information systems, concentrating its discussion on: the role and mandate of the Inter-Organization Board for Information Systems (IOB), including identification of information needs, co-ordination of information systems and costing of systems activities; strenthening the mandate of IOB; membership of and participation in IOB; IOB'S work programme; and the interagency project register known as CORE (Common Register of Development Activities). (See p. 961.)

With regard to programme planning, CPC undertook an in-depth study of the programme planning process in the United Nations. It considered the duration of the planning period, the involvement of intergovernmental organs in the planning process, possible alterations in the structure of the medium-term plan, use of the plan as a tool for co-ordination within the United Nations system, use of time-limited objectives and achievement indicators, the relationship between the medium-term plan and the programme budget, and priority-setting. In its conclusions and recommendations, CPC outlined the principles on which it agreed the programme planning process should be based (see p. 1186).

Programme planning in the United Nations system was also discussed at the 1979 Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC. It was agreed that the introduction to the medium-term plan should indicate the goals and direction of efforts to be made by the system as a whole, which would enable the plan to be considered in the wider context of the entire system and contribute to improved coordination between constituent organizations. (See also p. 963.)

By resolution 34/224 of 20 December 1979, on medium-term planning in the United Nations, the General Assembly endorsed cpc's conclusions and recommendations, and established 18 principles and guidelines for medium-term planning along the lines of those cpc had suggested. (For details, see p. 1187; for page reference to text of resolution, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted decision 34/451 by which it decided to review in 1980 the implementation of the recommendations on planning, programming, budgeting and evaluation set forth in its 1977 resolution on restructuring the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system ¹⁰ and asked for a report in that regard from the Secretary-General. (For details, see p. 522; for page reference to text of decision, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Activities relating to nutrition

In response to a 1977 request of the Economic and Social Council, 11 ACC submitted a report on the progress achieved in the field of nutrition under new institutional arrangements it had proposed to co-ordinate nutrition-improvement efforts. The report comprised two parts: harmonized policies of United Nations organizations for collaborating with developing countries in improving the state of nutrition; and actions of the ACC Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its eight-member Advisory Group on Nutrition, consisting of individuals from different disciplines with experience in nutrition improvement in developing countries. In the first part, ACC noted that, to support action at the national level, the executive heads of the United Nations organizations participating in the ACC Sub-Committee on Nutrition had agreed: to recommend that nutrition improvement be included in medium- and long-term plans and to develop a strategy to achieve this; to investigate opportunities for contributing to nutrition improvement within existing programmes; to assist countries where their organizations were co-operating in development programmes; to review resource and to foster increased coavailabilities; operation between their organizations at the country level.

The Sub-Committee on Nutrition held its fifth session at Geneva from 26 February to 2 March 1979. Interested bilateral aid agencies attended and Acc reported substantial agreement among the agencies on the approach and policy to be followed in support of national actions. The Sub-Committee was examining constraints on progress and endeavouring to initiate measures to reduce them.

Considering it important to give people in developing countries concerned with the planning and management of nutrition-improvement activities an opportunity to elaborate what external support they would find most effective, the Sub-Committee held a workshop for this purpose in July 1979. At its fifth session, the Sub-Committee created a working group for coordinating support by United Nations and bilateral organizations with national nutritional surveillance activities. It was decided to start on a trial basis a Resource Identification Facility to provide general information on funding sources, speeding up project preparation by facilitating the collaboration of national authorities, funding organizations and technical agencies from the earliest preparatory stage.

A consultative group on maternal and young child nutrition, established as a task force of the Advisory Group on Nutrition, held its first meeting in February. Its principal recommendations were for use at a high-level meeting on infant and young-child feeding sponsored by the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund in October.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its 1979 session, agreed with ACC that an increase in food production alone would not solve the nutrition problem, but increased production needed to be associated with a more equitable distribution of benefits and the alleviation of disease.

On 3 August 1979, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1979/67, by a provision of which it took note of Acc's report. The Netherlands had proposed the draft decision in the Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee, which approved it without vote on 27 July. (See also p. 657.)

Activities relating to rural development

In a report to the Economic and Social Council in May on interagency action in rural development, ACC noted the progress made by its Task Force on Rural Development in three main areas: joint action at the country level; monitoring and evaluation; and harmonization of programme proposals.

At the country level, ACC noted that an experimental approach to combining national efforts for poverty-oriented rural development with improved international assistance was under way in five countries - Bolivia, Lesotho, Liberia, Samoa and Somalia-and described the activities in each. It observed that the effort had proved useful and that it had been decided in principle to expand the effort to additional countries. In terms of monitoring and evaluation, ACC noted that a working definition of rural development terms applicable to evaluation of headquarters and field projects had been elaborated, and procedures to permit implementing system-wide monitoring and evaluation had been suggested. The programme harmonization effort had led to the threshold of joint execution of policy research, as well as field action, including elaboration for the first time of joint objectives in a multisectoral field. The Task Force concluded that future interagency action would be decided by the results of the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development (see p. 500).

The report of ACC was considered by CPC at its 1979 session. The Committee expressed concern as to whether the amount of progress at the country level justified the five-year effort. Some members felt that the work was too abstract and others expressed concern about the definition of poverty groups, which the Task Force had defined as the less-advantaged segment of the rural population. The Committee requested a further report in the context of the cross-organizational programme analysis of rural development activities being prepared for its 1980 session.

On 3 August 1979, by decision 1979/67, the Economic and Social Council took note of ACC'S report and requested it to continue speedily and effectively with joint planning on rural development, and to report further to the Council in 1980, including a table showing the costs of the exercise. Decision 1979/67 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved without vote, on 27 July, a text proposed by the Netherlands.

Activities relating to youth

In its annual report for 1978/1979, ACC proposed to CPC that youth activities might be a suitable subject for a cross-organizational programme analysis in 1980. In view of the importance attached by Governments to youth activities and the need to promote co-operation in that area, as well as the General Assembly's decision in principle to proclaim an international youth year, CPC agreed that it would be useful to carry out such an analysis. However, bearing in mind the heavy work-load for its 1980 session, it decided to do this in 1981.

The Economic and Social Council, on 9 May 1979 by resolution 1979/27, recognizing the need for better co-ordination in the field of youth, requested the Secretary-General to pay special attention to improving co-ordination, cooperation and communication in the youth field within the United Nations system, and further requested him to report to the Assembly at its regular 1979 session on the work of the Interagency Task Force on Youth. By decision 1979/69 of 3 August, the Council authorized the Secretariat to submit the report on the work of the Task Force directly to the Assembly. The Assembly, by resolution 34/163 of 17 December, took note of the report. It annexed to its resolution, for comments and suggestions, draft guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, one of which affirmed that ACC should continue to make arrangements for the promotion and co-ordination of activities in the field of youth and the integration of those activities into the over-all programmes on social and economic development. United Nations Institute for Training and Research

During 1979, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), an autonomous organization within the framework of the United Nations, continued to carry out research, training and related activities. Its primary aim was to increase the effectiveness of the United Nations system, particularly in the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of economic and social development. The Institute continued to emphasize practical assistance to developing countries and assistance on problems connected with the creation of a new international economic order.

Concentrating on longer, more substantive courses than in the past, UNITAR's training programmes dealt with problems facing the United Nations and with topics relevant to evolving world issues. A number of courses were organized in collaboration with other international organizations and agencies, and national institutes and universities. The UNITAR office at Geneva expanded its training activities, which were designed to orient diplomats and national and international civil servants to United Nations-related issues and responsibilities.

A major emphasis in 1979 was placed on assistance to Member States through regionally based programmes. The training department initiated the development of the Institute of Diplomatic Studies in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, provided advisory assistance for the establishment of a similar institute in Saudi Arabia, held an extensive training programme for national officials in Suriname, and started an on-going series of training courses for national officials from the Portuguese-speaking African countries of Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe.

Seminars, courses and symposia covered such subjects as international finance, economic development and its international setting, disarmament, multilateral co-operation for young civil servants, the law of the sea, the process of drafting resolutions and treaties, and United Nations documentation. Twenty-three fellowships were awarded under the UNITAR/United Nations Fellowship Programme in International Law.

The research activities of UNITAR focused on two major programmes: the United Nations and the new international economic order; and international law, security and diplomacy.

Some of the topics researched were: problems of legal regulation in the international system; structures and functions of the system; the institutional framework for a new international economic order; methodological issues in development-related decision-making and forecasting; creative women in changing societies; science and technology for development; regional co-operation for development; and the role of the United Nations in advance planning for disaster relief.

The Project on the Future, one of the Institute's main programme areas, continued to explore alternative development strategies and policies and to analyse factors affecting the supply of energy and natural resources.

Technology, domestic distribution and North-South relations were also studied under the Project. Work focused on the construction of a global model describing the dynamics of the world economy through the operation of six international markets. Strategies for the future of Africa and Asia were studied; these analysed the difficulties of achieving a new international economic order in the light of what had happened in the past 30 years and the specific nature of current relationships and trends.

In co-operation with several co-sponsors, the Project on the Future organized two major international conferences in Canada on energy and natural resources. One, on heavy crude oil and tar sands, took place in Edmonton, Alberta, in June, and the other, on long-term energy resources, took place in Montreal, Quebec, late in the year.

The journal Important for the Future, issued five times a year, continued to contribute to the debate on global energy prospects and to serve as a forum for the exposure of ideas on nutrition, agriculture, scientific and technological innovations, and global environmental and climatological problems.

Decision of the General Assembly

On 12 October 1979, the Executive Director of UNITAR introduced his annual report on the activities of UNITAR for the period 1 July 1978 to 30 June 1979 to the General Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, noting the progress made in research and training programmes and under the Project on the Future.

On 9 November, the Assembly acknowledged the value of the research and futures studies undertaken by UNITAR and recognized its role in assisting, through training and other services within its mandate, members of permanent missions to the United Nations and other national officials concerned with the work of the United Nations.

The Assembly took note with appreciation of the Executive Director's report and of his statement to the Second Committee. It welcomed the emphasis on and urged continuation of the work in economic and social training and research. It also called upon Member States and organizations to provide greater and wider financial support to UNITAR.

The Assembly took these actions when it adopted, without vote, resolution 34/17 on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 29 October. The resolution was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Canada, Chile, Ecuador, Egypt, the Gambia, India, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Kuwait, Norway, Panama, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sweden, Venezuela and Zambia.

On 11 December, by resolution 34/83 M, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to hold consultations with unitar regarding the establishment of a United Nations institute for disarmament research within the framework of UNITAR as an interim arrangement until the second special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, scheduled to take place in 1982. (See also p. 96; for page reference to text of resolution 34/83 M, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Contributions

In 1979, the contributions listed in the tables below were received by UNITAR. In addition, at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 6 November 1979, the United Republic of Tanzania pledged $20,948 to UNITAR for 1980.

United Nations University

Activities in 1979

During 1979, the United Nations University (UNU) continued its work in research, advanced training and dissemination of knowledge, its main areas of responsibility. Eighteen research and training networks were established in UNUS three programmes - human and social development, use and management of natural resources, and world hunger. Fifty UNU fellowships were granted and a similar number of fellows returned to their home institutions after completing their training.

The publications programme grew considerably as the results of UNU'S initial research activities became available. Two periodicals- the quarterly Food and Nutrition Bulletin and the monthly ASSET (Abstracts of Selected Solar Energy Technology) -appeared regularly and 25 other publications were issued.

Fifty-four programme meetings, in which some 1,500 scholars, scientists and policy makers participated, were organized by UNU in 28 countries.

The 1978/1979 report of the Council of the United Nations University, submitted to the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session, noted that UNU had made substantial progress and reaffirmed its confidence in the basic approach taken, but considered that it should take further action to enhance the distinctiveness of its approach. The Council decided that it should begin to plan medium-range goals. The Council's report also contained the report of the Rector of UNU to the Council for July 1978 to June 1979.

As at 31 December 1979, pledges and contributions to UNU'S Endowment Fund and General Operating Fund from 29 States totalled $142,553,661 of which $93,940,693 had been paid. During 1979, the following States announced pledges or made contributions for the first time: Ethiopia. the Federal Republic of

For its consideration of UNU, the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session had before it a report, transmitted by the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in November, which discussed methods to promote awareness and understanding of the activities of UNU. The report, prepared by two consultants, discussed the difficulties faced in fund-raising, alternative fund-raising possibilities, new orientation possibilities for future development; and new programmes and activities to improve appreciation of UNU. It also provided suggestions to assist UNU to establish a more stable financial position.

By resolution 34/112 of 14 December, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that the research and advanced training activities of UNU had made substantial progress and had achieved increasing distinctiveness in the three priority areas as well as in the development of interprogramme projects.

The Assembly welcomed the active participation of UNU in the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 635) and encouraged it to continue to concern itself with major activities in the United Nations system and to develop further its co-operative relationships with relevant agencies and bodies of the system.

The Assembly recognized that UNU'S major activities were concerned with problems and institutions in developing countries and supported its efforts to ensure broader geographical coverage in its activities.

The Assembly noted that, while gratifying progress in fund-raising had been made, the results were not sufficient to support UNU programmes at an adequate level. It therefore urged the Secretary-General, the Director-General of UNESCO and the Rector of UNU to increase their efforts to obtain financial support from all possible sources. It also appealed to all Member States to recognize the achievements of UNU and to make substantial contributions so that its work could progress.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction the report transmitted by the Secretary-General and the Director-General of UNESCO and invited the UNU Council to consider the suggestions and recommendations therein and to submit its findings to the Assembly in 1980.

Resolution 34/112 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 1 December. It was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Chile, Ghana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Malaysia, Nepal, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Thailand and Venezuela.

The report of the Council of UNU had been submitted to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council along with a report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 18 December 1978, on the question of the establishment of a University for Peace. The proposal for its establishment had been submitted to the Assembly in 1978 by the President of Costa Rica² From the replies received to a request for comments from Member States and United Nations agencies and bodies and through consultations, the Secretary-General said there appeared to be general support for the basic idea underlying the proposal and identified three main questions requiring further consideration and clarification: the relation of the University for Peace to UNU, possible duplication of activities with those of existing institutions, and financial resources.

By decision 1979/87 of 3 August 1979, the Council approved without vote a Secretariat proposal to authorize the Secretary-General to transmit both reports directly to the Assembly.

On 14 December, the Assembly decided to establish an international commission which, in collaboration with the Government of Costa Rica, would prepare the organization and structure of the proposed University for Peace as an international centre of higher learning for postgraduate studies, research and dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training for peace, with its headquarters in Costa Rica. It was to be borne in mind that the University for Peace was to be part of the UNU system and any link with UNU would be determined by common agreement, it should not duplicate efforts of other international institutions, and it would be financed by voluntary contributions and should not have financial implications for the budget of the United Nations or UNU.

The Assembly entrusted the Secretary-General with the task of constituting the Commission on the University for Peace, stipulated its composition and asked it to report in 1980.

These actions were taken by resolution 34/111, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, which had similarly approved the text, sponsored by 47 countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), on 27 November.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2951 (XXVII) of 11 December 1972, 3081 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3313(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, 3439(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 31/117 and 31/118 of 16 December 1976, 32/54 of 8 December 1977 and 33/108 of 18 December 1978,

Having considered the report of the Council of the United Nations University on the work of the University and the note by the Secretary-General, by which he and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization transmitted the report on fund-raising efforts for the University,

Noting decision 5.2.4 of 11 October 1979 adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred and eighth session, in which the Board, inter alia, noted with satisfaction the expansion of the activities of the United Nations University in general and the development of interprogramme projects in particular, emphasized the need for strengthening further cooperation with the agencies of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with a view to avoiding duplication and assuring complementarity between the respective activities, encouraged the University to enhance its distinctiveness through developing specific approaches for the implementation of its programme, affirmed its conviction that the growing activities of the University required and deserved greater financial support than it had so far received and reiterated its appeal to Member States to contribute generously to the University Endowment Fund and, additionally or alternatively, to make special contributions for research and training activities,

- 1. Notes with satisfaction that the research and advanced training activities of the United Nations University have made substantial progress and achieved increasing distinctiveness in the three priority areas-world hunger, human and social development and use and management of natural resources and also in the development of interprogramme projects;
- 2. Welcomes the active participation of the United Nations University in the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development and encourages the University to continue to intensify its efforts to concern itself with major activities taking place in the United Nations system and thereby further develop its co-operative and co-ordinated relationships with relevant agencies and bodies of the system;
- 3. Recognizes that the major activities of the United Nations University are especially concerned with the problems and institutions in developing countries and supports the University's endeavours to ensure broader geographical coverage in its activities;
- 4. Notes that, while gratifying progress in fund-raising has been made during the past year, the results have not yet proved sufficient to support the programmes of the United Nations University at an adequate level;
- 5. Notes with satisfaction that the report transmitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General Organization on the question of ways and means of promoting the awareness and understanding of the programmes and activities of the United Nations University, with a view to establishing a more stable financial situation, provides promising suggestions for overcoming difficulties confronting the University in this area which require careful study;
- 6. Invites the Council of the United Nations University to consider the valuable suggestions and recommendations contained in the above-mentioned report and to submit its findings and, if any, opinions to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session for its further consideration;
- 7. Urges the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as the Rector of the United Nations University, to increase their efforts to obtain financial support for the University from all possible sources:

- 8. Appeals to all Member States to take cognizance of the achievements of the United Nations University in the important areas of its three programmes and to make substantial contributions to the University Endowment Fund and/or to specific programmes of the University, so that its work can continue to make steady progress.

Resolution 34/111, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/792 and Corr.l, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the President of the Republic of Costa Rica submitted for the consideration of the General Assembly at its thirty-third session a proposal for the establishment of a University for Peace, as a specialized international institute for post-graduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training for peace, within the system of the United Nations University, and offered it to the international community through the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 33/109 of 18 December 1978, it expressed its appreciation of the proposal made by the President of Costa Rica and asked the Secretary-General to request Member States and various agencies of the United Nations system to communicate their views to him,

Considering that both the Member States that have replied to the Secretary-General and the agencies and bodies consulted-the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations University, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the Centre for Disarmament of the Secretariat- have closely studied and commended the initiative of the Government of Costa Rica, Acknowledging with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in pursuance of resolution 33/109, in which it is stated that general support has been expressed for the basic idea underlying the proposal for the establishment of a University for Peace,

Considering that the report of the Secretary-General identifies three principal questions relating to the implementation of the project which require consideration and clarification, namely:

- (a) The relation of the new institution to the United Nations University,
- (b) Possible duplication between the activities of the University for Peace and those of other existing institutions,
 - (c) Provision of the necessary financial resources,
- 1. Approves the idea of establishing a University for Peace as an international centre of higher learning for post-graduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training for peace, with its head-quarters in Costa Rica:
- 2. Decides to establish an international commission which, in collaboration with the Government of Costa Rica, shall prepare the organization, structure and setting in motion of the University for Peace, bearing in mind the following conditions:

- (a) The University for Peace should be international in character and should be a part of the system of the United Nations University;
- (b) The association which may link the University for Peace with the United Nations University should be determined by common agreement between the two institutions;
- (c) The University for Peace should be organized and structured in such a manner as not to involve any duplication of effort with other, similar international institutions;
- (d) It should be guaranteed that the constitution and operation of the University for Peace will be financed by voluntary contributions and should not have any financial implications for the budget of the United Nations or the United Nations University;
- 3. Entrusts the Secretary-General with the task of constituting the Commission on the University for Peace, composed of eleven members, as follows:
 - (a) A representative of the Secretary-General;
- (b) A representative of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

- (c) A representative of the Rector of the United Nations University;
- (d) A representative of the international academic community, to be appointed by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;
- (e) Five experts to be appointed by the Secretary-General from candidates recommended by the Governments of Member States, taking into account the principle of geographical distribution;
 - (f) Two representatives of the Government of Costa Rica;
- 4. Requests the Commission on the University for Peace to submit to the Secretary-General a report on its findings, in accordance with paragraph 2 above, for subsequent submission by him, together with his comments, to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Preservation and further development of cultural values

In October 1979, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the work done by that organization between September 1977 and June 1979 to promote the return or restitution of works of art and other cultural property to countries victims of expropriation.

The Director-General reported on the launching of unesco's public information activities to develop public awareness and to create a favourable climate of opinion about the need for the restitution of cultural property. He reported on the establishment in November 1978 of the 20-member advisory Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation, whose first meeting scheduled for November 1979 was deferred to May 1980. He also reported on other unesco activities related to the restitution or return of cultural property, among which were continued efforts to extend the application of its 1970 Convention on the 'Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property. The Director-General had asked UNESCO member States for reports before 15 December 1979 on difficulties experienced in implementing the Convention.

The General Assembly, on 29 November, took note with appreciation of the Director-General's report, expressed awareness of the importance countries attached to the return of cultural property, and reaffirmed that the return or restitution of objets d'art and other cultural or artistic treasures to the country of origin was a step towards strengthening international cooperation and preserving and developing cultural values. The Assembly commended UNESCO for its work in this area, asked it to continue its efforts to find solutions, urged Member States to co-operate with UNESCO in this field and invited them to take all needed steps for the return or restitution of cultural property through, inter alia, bilateral arrangements. The Assembly welcomed the establishment of unesco's Intergovernmental Committee, invited all Governments to accede to the 1970 Convention, appealed to Member States to encourage the mass media and educational and cultural institutions to arouse greater awareness of the return or restitution of cultural property, and asked the Secretary-General to associate the United Nations with unesco's efforts, including the mobilization of its information media for that purpose.

The Assembly took these actions in adopting, without vote, resolution 34/64, the text of which was sponsored by Benin, Bolivia, Burundi, Colombia, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Mauritius, Mozambique, Panama, Peru, Rwanda, Senegal, the United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

In explaining its position after adoption of the resolution, the United States, while supporting the principle of the return of cultural property, said it was troubled by a call for governmental interference with mass media; it did not believe that the disposition of all art objects, some of which belonged to more than one nation, could be predetermined by a general pronouncement.

Ireland said the individual member States of the European Community, on behalf of which it spoke, wished to maintain their reservations on this text, and in particular their view that UNESCO was the proper forum for further consideration of the question.

Questions relating to youth

Technical co-operation activities

During 1979, the United Nations interregional adviser on youth policies and programmes undertook missions in Grenada, Papua New Guinea, Saudi Arabia and Tuvalu.

A United Nations expert group meeting on training programmes for youth workers responsible for youth participation in development was organized by the United Nations Secretariat's Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs at Vienna, Austria, from 10 to 14 December. Experts attended from Madagascar, New Zealand, the United States and Viet Nam.

International Youth Year (1985)

In accordance with a 1978 General Assembly resolution, ³ the Secretary-General in October 1979 reported on and forwarded the written views and proposals of 53 Member States and Switzerland for the observance of an International Youth Year. The report also referred to oral interventions made by 75 Member States during the 1977 and 1978 regular sessions of the Assembly, as well as in the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council. Most States favouring the observance of the Year emphasized that specific action should be taken at the local, national, regional and international levels. They were confident that an International Youth Year would serve to mobilize efforts at each of these levels to promote the best educational, professional and living conditions for young people, to ensure their active participation in the over-all development of society and to encourage the preparation of new national and local policies and programmes in accordance with each country's experience, conditions and priorities.

The report contained specific proposals of the Secretary-General for the observance of the Year. He suggested that, as a general principle, the purpose and thrust of all activities prior to and during the Year should address and deal with the specific needs and aspirations of youth. The primary focus of the Year's activities should be on youth at the national and local levels, and activities at the international and regional levels should be supportive of these.

The Secretary-General proposed that a National Co-ordinating Committee for International Youth Year be established in each Member State to serve as a liaison organization to the United Nations for the Year's programmes. The majority of members should be between the ages of 15 and 24, and chosen by representative youth organizations.

At the international and regional levels, the Secretary-General proposed that suitable provision be made for evaluating the activities and results of the Year and for ensuring adequate follow-up. Consideration should be given by the General Assembly, following the conclusion of the Year, to a decade and plan of action for the world's youth.

He also proposed that the Assembly establish an Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year to formulate a specific programme for the Year.

By resolution 34/151, adopted without vote on 17 December 1979, the Assembly recognized the importance of the direct participation of youth and the valuable contribution that youth could make in the establishment of the new international economic order based on equity and justice. It reaffirmed the importance of United Nations activities designed to increase opportunities for youth.

It considered that the preparation and observance of an International Youth Year would offer a useful opportunity to draw attention to the situation, needs and aspirations of youth, to increase co-operation at all levels in dealing with youth issues, to undertake concerted action programmes in favour of youth and to involve them in the study and resolution of major international, regional and national problems.

The Assembly decided to designate 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, and invited all States, specialized agencies, and concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to exert all possible efforts for the preparation and observance of the Year. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in accordance with proposals made by Member States and in consultation with those agencies and interested organizations, a draft programme for the preparation and observance of the Year.

It decided to establish a 23-member Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year, to be appointed by the Chairman of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, and requested the Secretary-General to convene three sessions of the Committee before 1985 to formulate, for Assembly consideration, a specific programme of activities to be undertaken prior to and during the Year based on the Secretary-General's draft programme.

The Assembly asked him to give widespread publicity, through all communications media at his disposal, to United Nations activities relating to youth and to increase the dissemination of information on youth. The Assembly appealed to all States, international governmental and nongovernmental organizations and the public to make generous voluntary contributions towards the costs of the Year's programme.

Resolution 34/151, sponsored by 63 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text, as amended, without vote on 27 November.

Amendments submitted by nine powers-Canada, Denmark, France, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom -were orally subamended and accepted by the sponsors. These pertained to: designating 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace; extending an invitation to youth organizations to exert all possible efforts for the preparation and observance of the Year; requesting that youth organizations be consulted by the Secretary-General in relation to a draft programme for the preparation and observance of the Year; and requesting the Secretary-General to convene three meetings of the Advisory Committee between 1980 and 1985.

Channels of communication with youth and youth organizations

In accordance with two 1976 General Assembly resolutions⁴ and a 1977 resolution of the Economic and Social Council⁵ the Secretary-General reported to the February/March 1979 session of the Commission for Social Development on measures taken to implement the 1965 Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples.6 The report contained, inter alia: information on national policies relating to youth, in particular national programmes concerning the role of youth in nationbuilding; national legislation concerning the rights and responsibilities of young people; administrative structures relating to youth programmes at the national level; and the activities of United Nations specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and UNV, as these related to the participation of young people in the nation-building process and in the promotion of international co-operation and understanding.

The report listed a number of studies and reports which the Secretary-General had previously submitted containing observations and suggestions on how the participation of young people in development activities might be increased. These studies contained specific principles and criteria for action which would assist Governments and international institutions to do this: institutions should make deliberate efforts to understand and deal with the situation, needs and aspirations of young people. They should consider the availability of information, research, financing, communication with young people, training, services by youth, mobilization of the support and opinion of young people, and machinery for co-ordination of efforts. Although financial resources alone would not provide effective action, there would have to be adequate funds to implement programmes effectively. It would be necessary: to define "youth participation" and to decide whether there would be directed participation or a laissez-faire approach; to take advantage of the unique characteristics of youth in relation to participation in the attainment of national goals; and to gather and analyse data in order properly to accommodate youth organizations, subgroups of youth and youth with special problems.

In response to a 1977 Commission request,⁷ the Secretary-General in December 1978 submitted a progress report on the establishment of a co-operative arrangement among youth research and information centres. The report contained an annotated listing of institutions around the world which were concerned with youth, a description of their research projects and, publications, and a list grouping institutions engaged in similar areas of study.

The Commission took note of these reports on 6 March 1979. On 9 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/22, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the report on implementation of the 1965 Declaration, among others, to the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly. Decision 1979/22 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Social) Committee, which had approved, without objection on 19 April, the text orally proposed by its Chairman.

Also on 9 May, the Council adopted, without vote, resolution 1979/27, on co-ordination and information in the field of youth, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 27 April. The text was sponsored by Algeria, Argentina, Colombia, Cyprus, Ecuador, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Lesotho, Mauritania, Mexico, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Turkey, the United Kingdom, Venezuela and Zambia.

By this resolution, the Council requested the Secretary-General: to continue to analyse the documents of the specialized agencies and of various United Nations bodies containing views, observations and suggestions on the situation, needs and aspirations of young people in the contemporary world; to pay special attention to ways of improving the existing modes of coordination, co-operation and communication in the field of youth within the United Nations system; to continue to give widespread publicity to youth-related activities of the system; and to report, through the Council, to the General Assembly in 1979 on the work of the interagency task force drawn from the United Nations Secretariat and the specialized agencies concerned with youth policies and programmes, which had been set up pursuant to a 1977 Council resolution.8

Owing to technical reasons, it was not possible to submit the Secretary-General's report on the work of the interagency task force to the Council at its July/August 1979 session. On 3 August, therefore, by decision 1979/69 adopted without vote, the Council authorized the Secretariat to submit the report directly to the Assembly at its regular 1979 session, as orally suggested by the Chairman of the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee and approved without vote by that Committee on 2 August.

The Assembly subsequently considered the report on the task force, which had met twicein October 1977 and May 1978-and was composed of officials of the Secretariat and of the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, UNICEF, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and unv. The report presented information on: the activities of the task force in support of International Youth Year; a project proposal for joint United Nations-system training workshops for youth leaders and workers in southern Africa; an interagency mission to Madagascar in 1978 and in January 1979; national, employment-oriented, youth-service programmes; publication of a directory of youth organizations; and environmental education for young people.

The report noted that, as a result of restructuring the subsidiary machinery of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), the work covered by the task force had been assumed by the new consultative committees of ACC. In October 1979, the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) decided to consider in 1980 ways of strengthening co-ordination and co-operation in this area in the light of any Assembly decisions on International Youth Year, and to convene a meeting of specialists to advise it in this respect.

The Assembly also considered at its 1979 session a report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with a 1978 Assembly resolution,⁹ forwarding comments and suggestions from 21 Member States, the Holy See, and three regional commissions on the guidelines adopted by the Assembly in 1977 for the improvement of channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations. 10 The report noted the progress that had been made to implement those guidelines and included specific action-oriented recommendations further to implement and develop the guidelines and promote co-operation between the United Nations and its specialized agencies and between national and international youth organizations. The interagency task force on youth had previously considered the guidelines.

After considering these two reports, the Assembly, by resolution 34/163, adopted additional guidelines for national, regional and international action which could be taken to improve the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations. It requested that the Secretary-General transmit these to all Member States, regional commissions, and regional and international youth organizations which had consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, for their comments and suggestions. It also invited Member States to communicate the substance of the resolution to national youth organizations for their views. The comments would be the subject of a report to be submitted in 1980.

Resolution 34/163 was adopted, without vote, on 17 December 1979 on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 27 November. It was sponsored by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Kenya, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Sweden, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela and Zaire.

Prior to the vote in the plenary Assembly, Denmark, Egypt and the Netherlands submitted an amendment to the guidelines annexed to resolution 34/163 to reflect the fact that the work of the interagency task force on youth had been assumed by ACC'S new Consultative Committee. The Assembly approved the amendment without vote.

The guidelines suggested that attention should be given to expanding the youth advisory services provided by the United Nations to Governments and to the establishment of liaison and focal points on youth within each country. Co-operation in activities relating to youth should be facilitated between regional commissions and regional non-governmental organizations, especially those active with young people. Regional commissions should also pay attention to the question of the active participation of youth in the development process.

Internationally, the guidelines suggested that ACC should arrange for the promotion and coordination of activities in the field of youth and for the integration of these into social and economic development programmes. Governments and non-governmental organizations with youth programmes should be encouraged to contribute material to the Youth Information Bulletin, and the Joint United Nations Information Committee should be invited to consider the views of youth organizations representative of all regions of the world.

Youth in the contemporary world

On 9 May 1979, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General: to bring to the attention of the General Assembly in 1979 all relevant documents on the question of youth in the contemporary world prepared for the Commission for Social Development; to continue consultations with Member States, regional commissions and non-governmental organizations concerned about improving channels of communication between the United Nations and relevant specialized agencies, and between national and international youth organizations; to invite Member States, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to continue to submit replies on measures taken to implement the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples,11 and on the role of youth in nation-building and in promoting international co-operation and understanding. The Commission was to consider youth in the contemporary world at its next session and the Secretary-General was asked to prepare a second report on the situation of youth for consideration by the Council in 1983.

The Council took these actions when it adopted, without vote, resolution 1979/16. The Second Committee had approved without vote on 27 April the text recommended by the Commission for Social Development.

Role of youth in promoting and protecting human rights

The Commission on Human Rights, on 14 March 1979, postponed consideration of an item on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the question of conscientious objection to military service, until 1980.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/7 of 3 November 1978, by which it decided to proclaim an international youth year,

Recognizing the profound importance of the direct participation of youth in shaping the future of humanity and the valuable contribution that youth can make in the establishment of the new international economic order based on equity and justice,

Considering it necessary to disseminate among youth the ideals of peace, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, human solidarity and dedication to the objectives of progress and development,

Convinced of the imperative need to harness the energies, enthusiasms and creative abilities of youth to the tasks of nation-building, the struggle for national independence and self-determination, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and against foreign domination and occupation, the economic, social and cultural advancement of peoples, the implementation of the new international economic order, the preservation of world peace and the promotion of international co-operation and understanding,

Emphasizing that the United Nations should give more attention to the role of young people in the world of today and to their demands for the world of tomorrow,

Recalling the topicality of assessing the needs and aspirations of youth, and reaffirming the importance of current and projected United Nations activities designed to increase the opportunities for youth and for its active participation in national development activities,

Believing that it is urgently desirable to consolidate the efforts of all States in carrying out specific programmes concerning youth and to improve the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the field of youth, including youth exchanges in the cultural, sporting and other fields,

Considering that the preparation and the observance of an international youth year will offer a useful and significant opportunity for drawing attention to the situation, needs and aspirations of youth, for increasing co-operation at all levels in dealing with youth issues, for undertaking concerted action programmes in favour of youth and for involving young people in the study and resolution of major international, regional and national problems,

Confident that an international youth year will serve to mobilize efforts at the local, national, regional and international levels to promote the best educational, professional and living conditions for young people, to ensure their active participation in the over-all development of society and to encourage the preparation of new national and local policies and programmes in accordance with each country's experience, conditions and priorities,

Recognizing that the preparation and the observance of an international youth year will contribute to the reaffirmation of the goals of the new international economic order,

Recalling also in this connexion Economic and Social Council decision 1979/64 of 3 August 1979 on international years and anniversaries,

Aware that, for the international youth year to be successful and to maximize its impact and practical efficiency, adequate preparation and the widespread support of Governments, all specialized agencies, international intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public will be required.

Mindful of the fact that 1985 is the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 2037(XX) of 7 December 1965, and the fifteenth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Volunteers programme by the Assembly in its resolution 2659(XXV) of 7 December 1970.

Taking note with interest and appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the international youth year,

- 1. Decides to designate 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;
- 2. Invites all States, all specialized agencies and the international intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, as well as youth organizations, to exert all possible efforts for the preparation and the observance of the International Youth Year;
- 3. Decides to establish an Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year, to be composed of twenty-three Member States appointed by the Chairman of the Third Committee on the basis of equitable geographical distribution;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in accordance with the proposals made by Member States and in consultation with all specialized agencies and interested international intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as youth organizations, a draft programme for the preparation and observance of the International Youth Year;
- 5. Requests the Secretary-General to convene three sessions of the Advisory Committee in the period 1980-1985 so that it may formulate, for consideration by the General Assembly, a specific programme of measures and activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year on the basis of the draft programme prepared by the Secretary-General;
- 6. Also requests the Secretary-General to convene the Advisory Committee in 1980, to provide it with all necessary assistance and to submit the report on its first session to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;
- 7. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to take concrete measures, through all the communications media at his disposal, to give widespread publicity to the activities of the United Nations system in the field of youth and to increase the dissemination of information on youth;
- 8. Appeals to all States, to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and to the public to make in due time generous voluntary contributions to supplement funds provided under the regular United Nations budget for the costs of the programme of the International Youth Year;
- Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace" and to grant it high priority.

The elderly and the aged

At its April/May 1979 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a progress report on the question of the elderly and the aged which had been submitted by the Secretary-General to the Commission for Social Development at its February/March 1979 session, in accordance with a 1977 General Assembly resolution.¹² The report, which summarized action taken by the United Nations system in implementation of the 1977 resolution, outlined current and projected United Nations activities in the field of aging, including interagency co-ordination, information exchange, technical assistance to individual countries, seminars, workshops and specialized studies, cooperation with non-governmental organizations, and future activities.

The report noted the holding in May 1979 at Kiev, Ukrainian SSR, of an interregional seminar on aging to discuss recent demographic, medical, social and economic trends resulting from aging population structures, especially in developing countries. The seminar was convened by the United Nations in co-operation with the USSR and was attended by representatives from Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Burma, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Greece, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Mexico, Nigeria, Panama, the Philippines, the Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

The Council, by decision 1979/22 adopted without vote on 9 May, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the report to the regular 1979 session of the General Assembly. The decision had been orally proposed by the Second (Social) Committee Chairman and approved without vote by that Committee on 19 April.

On 17 December, the Assembly, taking note of the report, recognized the serious economic and social implications of the increase in the number and proportion of older people in, a growing number of countries. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to strengthen activities in this field in co-operation with agencies, in particular: to consider measures for strengthening the activities of regional bodies designed to increase awareness of and collect data on the situation of the aging preparatory to the 1982 World Assembly on the Elderly; to assist Governments in planning and implementing programmes for the elderly and in the preparatory work leading to their active participation in the World Assembly; and to collect national and regional data on the number and proportion of the aging and on the implications of this for national planning.

The Assembly also requested: specialized agencies to continue to give attention to the major issues of aging and to co-ordinate their work with the United Nations; intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to join with the United Nations, in a well co-ordinated set of activities, to assist Governments which so wished to formulate and implement policies and programmes for the aging and in preparatory activities for the World Assembly; and United Nations funding agencies to strengthen their support of activities in the field of the aging.

The Assembly took these actions in adopting, without vote, resolution 34/153 on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 27 November. The resolution was sponsored by Algeria, Austria, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Greece, Guyana, Iceland, Italy, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, the Philippines, Singapore, the United States and Yugoslavia.

Conference on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport

The Intergovernmental Preparatory Group on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport—a body of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) — held its sixth (and final) session from 21 February to 9 March 1979 at Geneva. The Group transmitted to the Trade and Development Board draft articles for a convention on international multimodal transport prepared by its working group, together with draft final clauses prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, for submission to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. It recommended that arrangements be made to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries early in November 1979 to consider the draft convention.

In accordance with the Group's request, the Trade and Development Board on 26 March, at its tenth special session held at Geneva from 19 to 27 March, asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to circulate the draft text and comments received from Governments and place them before the conference, for which he was asked to make the necessary arrangements.

The Secretary-General, in a note of 31 May to the Economic and Social Council, presented a summary of the action of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Group and the Trade and Development Board and transmitted the text of the draft convention to the Council and the Assembly.

On 3 August, the Council, by decision 1979/83—which was orally proposed by its President and adopted without vote—took note of the Secretary-General's note and decided to transmit the Preparatory Group's report and related documents to the 1979 regular session of the Assembly.

The United Nations Conference on a Convention on International Multimodal Transport was convened, under the auspices of UNCTAD, at Geneva on 12 November 1979. The Conference, attended by representatives of 86 members of UNCTAD, elected E. Selvig (Norway) as President, P. R. Moreira (Brazil) as Rapporteur, and 15 Vice-Presidents from Algeria, Argentina, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Sri Lanka, Sweden, the USSR, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Venezuela.

The work of the Conference was divided between the plenary Conference and two main committees; a General Committee, a Credentials Committee and a Drafting Committee were also established. B. Mbakileki (United Republic of Tanzania) was elected Chairman of the First Committee—which considered draft articles of the convention dealing with general provisions, documentation, liability of the multimodal transport operator, liability of the consignor, claims and actions, and supplementary provisions—and D. Popov (Bulgaria) was elected Chairman of the Second Committee—which considered customs matters, and preambular and final clauses.

Although substantial progress was made on a number of issues covered by the draft convention, such as preambular clauses, customs questions and documentation, there was not sufficient time to cover the rest of the convention nor for all groups to reach agreement on all those articles considered. At its final meeting on 30 November, the Conference adopted a resolution by which it requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to take the necessary measures for reconvening the Conference in May 1980.

Container standards for international multimodal transport

Taking into account the report of its Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group on Container Standards for International Multimodal Transport on its November/December 1978 session, 13 the Trade and Development Board, on 27 March 1979 at its tenth special session, remitted to the UNCTAD Committee on Shipping the question of container standards for regular review and examination of the question of drawing up a flexible international agreement.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the Group's report on 3 August by decision 1979/84, which it adopted without vote on an oral proposal by the Council President.

World Communications Year

The Secretary-General, in June 1979, submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council in accordance with its 1978 decision to consider again in 1979 the question of a proposed World Communications Year, 14 possibly in 1983. The report contained suggestions regarding: the scope of the Year; a programme of promotional activities as well as studies and surveys, expert group meetings, symposia, seminars, regional and global conferences, institutional support and strengthening of infrastructure; and a proposed organizational structure at the international, national and regional levels. The report also included information on financial implications of the Year and possible sources of funding.

¹³ See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 801.

Having considered the report, the Council, by decision 1979/63 adopted without vote on 3 August, deferred to its second regular 1980 session a decision on the scope, proposed programme of activities and organizational structure for the World Communications Year, and asked the Secretary-General to consult with Member States on these topics and to report to that session. The text was recommended by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, which had approved without vote on 26 July a draft proposed by Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

The Council, and subsequently the General Assembly, adopted resolutions on a general strategy for a United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, 1978-1988. The Council, by resolution 1979/61 of 3 August, recommended a text which became, on 9 November, Assembly resolution 34/15. The Secretary-General was asked to continue organizing a pledging conference of donors to mobilize the necessary financial resources to implement the programme for the first phase of the Decade. (For further details, see p. 734; for page references to texts of resolutions 1979/61 and 34/15, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Transport of dangerous goods

March 1979, the Secretary-General brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on harmonizing codes and regulations relating to such transport. The Secretary-General's report discussed the amendment and publication of the recommendations contained in the report of the Committee of Experts on its session held in December 1978.15 It also referred to the enlargement of the Committee, the possible drafting of an international convention on the carriage of dangerous goods by all modes of transport, and the work of the Committee's subsidiary bodies the Group of Experts on Explosives and the Group of Rapporteurs—as well as questions to be taken up by those bodies in the period 1979-1981.

The Group of Experts, at its session held at Geneva from 6 to 10 August 1979, worked on the development of a system of test procedures for substances and articles that might have explosive properties, to standardize classification assignment for use by regulatory authorities. It formulated basic provisions for the loading and carriage of freight containers with explosives, discussed the treatment of substances with explosive properties but which were appropriate to other classes, and continued its routine classification of new substances and articles to take account of technological developments.

The Group of Rapporteurs, at sessions held at Geneva in February and August, discussed the need for and scope of a possible convention on the transport of dangerous goods by all modes of transport, and continued work on the listing and classification of environmentally hazardous substances; it also considered provisions for the construction and testing of gas cylinders, the topics of multimodal tank-containers and intermediate bulk-containers, and general matters on packaging and performance testing, among other questions.

On 11 May 1979, the Council took note of the work of the Committee of Experts and its recommendations. It asked the Secretary-General to incorporate the Committee's amendments in a revised set of recommendations, to publish the recommendations and to circulate them to Member States and concerned international organizations and agencies for their comments. It urged Member States and international organizations to take account of the recommendations when developing both national and international codes and regulations.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to convene meetings of the Committee of Experts and its subsidiary bodies, as proposed by the Committee, with a view to making satisfactory progress on the harmonization of codes and regulations relating to the transport of dangerous goods as well as on the studies on the possibility of drafting an international convention on the transport of dangerous goods.

The Council took these actions when it adopted without objection resolution 1979/42, as orally amended in plenary meeting by the United Kingdom, which had sponsored the text in the First (Economic) Committee. That Committee approved the resolution without vote on 4 May.

The amendment, submitted following receipt of the financial implications of publishing the Committee of Experts' recommendations in loose-leaf form—indicated in the draft text as the preferable form—stipulated that they were to be published in the most cost-effective manner possible, preferably in a form permitting of easy reference and amendment. Concern over costs was also expressed, at the time of adoption of the resolution, by the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States.

International tourism

In May 1979, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a report called for by the General Assembly in 1978,16 prepared by the World Tourism Organization (WTO). The report detailed efforts by WTO to promote tourism in the world, with special reference to the developing countries. It reviewed the growth of tourism, examined its economic and social importance, and emphasized the need for a balanced development of tourism, for guarding against haphazard growth and for protecting the quality of the products offered to consumers. It also examined WTO technical programmes and operational activities to aid countries to achieve these objectives and action planned to face future developments. Activities included those in the areas of: data compilation for tourism promotion, efforts to improve the statistical base, training needs, physical planning and area development, impact on the environment, study of a possible tourism data bank, assessment of national tourism resources, master plans and feasibility studies, joint national efforts to exploit tourism resources, economic analysis and financing techniques, impact on economic development, tourism marketing, improvement of the tourist image, domestic, intraregional and interregional tourism development, co-ordination between tourism and air transport, facilitating tourist flows, and accommodation management. Further, the report noted plans for the World Tourism Conference, which was to be convened at Manila, Philippines, in 1980.

Among 1979 activities, a technical handbook compiling domestic and international tourism statistics was prepared with the assistance of experts from various regions.

Four regional statistical workshops were organized at Havana (Cuba), Dakar (Senegal), Blantyre (Malawi), and Madrid (Spain), to define and clarify issues and to seek solutions to the particular problems of the Americas, Africa and Europe. Operational missions by WTO experts were made to several countries in each region following the workshops to assess their requirements and make recommendations for appropriate action.

Vocational training activities for the hotel and tourism trades were expanded. These included an international training course in tourism held at the WTO International Centre for Advanced Tourism Studies at Mexico City, and a regional training meeting held in May 1979 at Nairobi, Kenya, the first of a series to encourage information exchange between developing countries. Throughits regional structure, WTO sought to encourage technical co-operation among developing countries in tourism training. A world-wide study of tourism-training needs was completed in 1979, and a study on hotel management contracts was elaborated. Negotiation was continued with other agencies which had been giving technical assistance in tourism fields in order to avoid duplication of efforts.

On 3 August, by decision 1979/61 adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report and transmitted it to the General Assembly for its consideration. The Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee Chairman had orally proposed this action and the Committee approved it without vote on 10July.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/134, by which it expressed recognition that WTO programmes and activities contributed to global economic and social development and to international understanding, peace and progress. It asked WTO to continue its efforts, especially in the developing countries, through closer international co-operation. It urged States to give due attention and co-operation to the preparatory work for the 1980 World Tourism Conference and to ensure their representation at the highest level. The Assembly asked that the report and recommendations of the Conference be submitted to the Assembly in 1981, and reiterated its invitation to United Nations Member States to consider becoming members of WTO.

Resolution 34/134 was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 23 November. The sponsors were Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Greece, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Lebanon, Peru, the Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, Senegal, Spain, Uganda and Yugoslavia.

International co-operation in cartography

Activities in 1979

During 1979, 24 experts were assigned under the United Nations programme of technical assistance to Burundi (1), Fiji (1), Guyana (7), Iran (2), Jordan (1), Nepal (8), the Philippines (3) and Trinidad and Tobago (1), in such branches of cartography as geodesy, photogrammetry, land and cadastral surveying, map reproduction and hydrography.

Fifty fellowships for studies in cartography, surveying and mapping, topography, remote sensing and photogrammetry were awarded to nationals from Burundi (1), Ethiopia (4), Guyana (4), India (20), Iran (11), Jamaica (1), Madagascar (1), Nepal (1), the Philippines (3), Trinidad and Tobago (1) and the Upper Volta (3), for study in Canada, France, Mexico, the Netherlands, Singapore, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Second United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas

The Second United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas, held at Mexico City from 3 to 14 September 1979, was attended by 138 participants, representing 33 countries, and observers from the International Civil Aviation Organization and six intergovernmental and international scientific organizations. The Conference elected J. Alberto Villasana (Mexico) as President, Jose Alberto González Garcia (El Salvador) and Ivho Ramón Acuña Tournaben (Uruguay) as Vice-President and Second Vice-President, respectively, and Jorge Alberto Bavastro (Argentina) as Rapporteur.

The work of the Conference covered, inter alia, the latest techniques and developments in geodesy, topographic mapping (including space imagery and conventional photography), cadastral surveying and mapping, hydrographic surveying and nautical charting, automated cartography and computer mapping; thematic and small-scale mapping, including national and regional atlases; geographical names standardization; technical assistance within the Americas; and the training of personnel.

On 14 September, the Conference adopted 22

resolutions, giving special attention to education and training, including the organization of technical education institutes, the formation of a Pan-American Institute of Geography and History international training committee, technical workshops, and the retention by Government agencies of trained personnel in, and the promotion of education and training in, surveying and mapping. Other resolutions concerned information exchange on satellite geodesy, inertial geodesy and remote sensing, strengthening cooperation and education in the application of automation, machinery to compile and disseminate information on technology to inventory natural resources and study the environment, environmentalists/development planners coordination, compilation of a directory of thematic mapping institutions reflecting censuses cartographically, the need for aeronautical charts and national and regional atlases, and exploitation of space imagery for nautical charting.

The Conference endorsed the work of the United Nations Group of Experts on Hydrographic Surveying and Nautical Charting, including recommendations that the countries of the western hemisphere establish or strengthen hydrographic services, that these countries establish geographical regulatory organizations paying special attention to the standardization of geographical names, that a Third United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas be held in 1984, and that thereafter the conferences for the Americas be held every four years.

World Climate Programme

In accordance with a 1978 Economic and Social Council resolution,¹⁷ the Secretary-General of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) reported to the Council at its second regular 1979 session detailing developments with regard to its plans for a new World Climate Programme.

The report noted that WMO had convened a World Climate Conference of experts at Geneva from 12 to 23 February 1979. The Conference had dealt with virtually all aspects of climate change and variability and their impact on climate-sensitive activities, notably food production. It adopted a Declaration of the World Climate Conference, concluding that the proposed World Climate Programme deserved the support of all nations, that it required co-ordination among international bodies and nations, and that there was an immediate need to use existing knowledge about climate in social and economic development planning.

After considering the conclusions of the Conference and the programme proposed by the WMO Secretary-General, the Eighth Congress of WMO, meeting at Geneva in April/May 1979, adopted the World Climate Programme containing four major components: a climate data programme, a climate applications programme, a climate impact study programme and a climate change and variability research programme.

On 3 August 1979, the Council took note of the report on the World Climate Programme and requested WMO to provide an oral progress report on the Programme to the Council in 1980. This action was contained in decision 1979/62, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Third (Programme and Coordination) Committee, which had similarly approved on 12 July a text orally proposed by its Chairman.

Argentina had orally proposed in the Committee adoption of a decision by which the Council would have: expressed appreciation for WMO's prompt and effective response to the Council's 1978 resolution; urged WMO to continue to give attention to the Programme; asked for a report in 1980 on progress and developments; and considered that information on the Programme would constitute a valuable input for the August 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development (see p. 635). Argentina subsequently agreed to accept the oral reporting procedure as a compromise and supported the Chairman's proposal.

Decision 1979/62, as recommended by Third Committee, E/1979/116, adopted without vote by Council.

At its 40th plenary meeting, on 3 August 1 979, the Council took note of the report on the World Climate Programme, submitted by the World Meteorological Organization in compliance with the request contained in Council resolution 1 978/45 of 1 August 1978, and decided to request the World Meteorological Organization to provide an oral progress report on the Programme at the Council's second regular session of 1980.

International years and anniversaries

In May 1979, the Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council on international years and anniversaries, as had been requested by the Council in 1978.18 The report contained the views of Governments and of organizations within the United Nations system on proposed criteria for choosing international years, on suggested procedures to be followed prior to their proclamation, on proposals as to how such years should be organized to gain maximum results, and on suggested procedures for promoting a timely, comprehensive review and evaluation of those results. The report included the Secretary-General's conclusions and recommendations on the question of international years, together with proposed guidelines for the selection, organization and evaluation of future years.

Replies to a questionnaire seeking their views were received from 20 organizations and Austria, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Luxembourg, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Qatar, Romania, Seychelles, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom and Yemen. In July, the Secretary-General summarized in an addendum additional replies from Bahrain, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Czechoslovakia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Guatemala, Guyana, Japan, New Zealand and Peru. Replies were subsequently received from the German Democratic Republic, Italy, Pakistan and the USSR.

A draft resolution sponsored by Ireland, New Zealand, Sweden and Zambia was introduced in the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee but was not put to the vote. By the final version of this text, the Council would have adopted the criteria and procedures which were annexed to the text as its guidelines regarding future proposals for international years, submitted them to the General Assembly for consideration, invited organizations of the United Nations system to adopt them, and invited Member States to take them into account in considering proposals for international years. New Zealand, which introduced the text, said the guidelines were based largely on those proposed by the Secretary-General, as well as views expressed during the discussion.

A number of amendments to those guidelines were submitted by the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR. Following informal consultations, changes were made to the original draft and two revisions were introduced, but agreement on the text was not reached.

On behalf of the sponsors of the amendments,

the German Democratic Republic orally proposed a draft decision which, with oral amendments by Cyprus, by Ireland, by New Zealand and by the Upper Volta accepted by these sponsors, was approved by the Third Committee without vote on 31 July.

Ireland proposed that, rather than the Council merely taking note of the Secretary-General's report, it be noted with satisfaction.

Cyprus and Ireland subamended an oral USSR amendment to consider in 1980 the latest revision of the draft resolution and the eight-power amendments currently before the Committee by expanding the provision to consider the question again in 1980 in the light of the Secretary-General's report as well as all versions of the resolution and the eight-power amendments.

New Zealand's amendment replaced provisions to postpone consideration of the question until the second regular 1980 session and to invite the Secretary-General to continue consultations with a view to reaching consensus on the guidelines with a single provision to invite him to circulate the guidelines in his report for revision and resubmission.

The Upper Volta's amendment added an expression of appreciation of the efforts exerted by all delegations which had participated in the debate, rather than the efforts of some delegations.

Following further informal consultations, the Committee Chairman read out the text of the decision ultimately adopted by the Council on 3 August, without vote, as decision 1979/64. By this decision, the Council took note with appreciation of the Secretary-General's report, expressed its appreciation of the efforts of all who had participated in the debate at the current session with a view to formulating guidelines for future international years, and invited the Secretary-General to circulate the guidelines in his report to Member States for comment and to submit guidelines, revised as appropriate, to the Council at its second regular 1980 session, when it would resume consideration of the question in the light of the forthcoming report and of all formal proposals submitted during the current session.

Exchange of information on banned hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products

During discussions of the report of the Economic and Social Council by the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee at the regular 1979 session of the General Assembly, 29 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) sponsored a resolution to urge States to exchange information on hazardous chemicals and unsafe pharmaceutical products that they had banned, and to discourage, in consultation with importing countries, the exportation of such products. The Secretary-General, in cooperation with United Nations agencies and bodies concerned, especially the World Health Organization, would be requested to assist Governments in exchanging this information and to report in 1980 on their experiences.

The Third Committee approved the text on 5 December and the Assembly adopted it on 17 December as resolution 34/173; both bodies took this action without vote.

Questions relating to the Declaration on the granting of independence and to the International Trusteeship System

ChapterI

International Trusteeship System

General aspects

Territory under the Trusteeship System

Under the International Trusteeship System established by the Charter of the United Nations, Member States administering Trust Territories were accountable to the United Nations for the discharge of their responsibilities and obligations in the administration of the Territories.

During 1979, only one Trust Territory remained under the System: the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the United Nations Charter) administered by the United States.

Examination of annual report

In supervising the administration of the remaining Trust Territory on behalf of the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council in 1979 examined the annual report submitted by the Administering Authority. It also examined, among other things, petitions and communications affecting the Territory and reports of visiting missions.

Under the procedures followed by the Trusteeship Council, a Special Representative of the Administering Authority made an opening statement bringing the Council up to date on events in the Territory. This statement was supplemented by comments of Special Advisers—representatives of the Territory attached to the delegation of the Administering Authority. The Administering Authority's representative on the Council, the Special Representative and the Special Advisers then replied to Council members' questions. Following a general debate in which Council members gave their opinions on conditions in the Territory, the Council considered the adoption of a report containing its conclusions and recommendations. A summary of observations made by individual Council members was included in that report.

The Trusteeship Council held its forty-sixth regular session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 21 May to 15 June 1979, during which it examined the annual report submitted by the Administering Authority on the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and adopted conclusions and recommendations on it. (For further details, see the following subchapter on CONDITIONS IN THE TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS.)

In accordance with its normal practice, the Council adopted a report to the Security Council containing a section on conditions in the Trust Territory.

The Council held its fourteenth special session on 12 and 15 February 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, during which it considered an invitation of the Administering Authority to send a visiting mission to the Marshall Islands to observe the constitutional referendum in March 1979. It also considered the question of its periodic visiting mission to the Trust Territory, which had been scheduled for early 1979.

Composition of the Trusteeship Council

During its 1979 sessions, the Trusteeship Council was composed of one Administering Authority—the United States—and four non-administering members: China, France, the USSR and the United Kingdom, which sat on the Council by virtue of their being permanent members of the Security Council. China did not participate in either session.

For text of Article 83 of the Charter and other Charter Articles referred to herein, see APPENDIX II.

Petitions and oral hearings

The examination of petitions concerning Trust Territories derived from Article 87 of the United Nations Charter, which provided that the General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council might accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the Administering Authority. Petitions relating to a strategic area were governed by Article 83 of the Charter and the terms of the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

Under its rules of procedure, the Council considered petitions and communications concerning specific complaints, as well as general questions pertaining to a Trust Territory or to the operation of the International Trusteeship System. The Council considered these in the course of its examination of the annual report. Hearings might also be granted to petitioners.

During its 1979 regular session, the Council considered five written petitions, heard 12 petitioners and examined 19 communications with regard to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

Visiting missions to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

On 15 February 1979, during the Council's fourteenth special session, the United Kingdom noted that a visiting mission had spent seven weeks in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands in 1978, a mission was scheduled to visit the Marshall Islands in March 1979, and another mission was to observe a constitutional referendum in Palau in July 1979 (see below). In the view of the United Kingdom, it would be sensible if visits to the Trust Territory during the remaining period of Trusteeship were reasonably spaced. The United Kingdom, supported by France, therefore proposed the postponement of the dispatch of the periodic mission scheduled for 1979² until early 1980. The USSR said that, while not against the deferment of the mission to 1980, it disagreed with the reasons adduced to justify that postponement.

On the same day, the Council decided without objection to defer until early 1980 the dispatch of the periodic mission that had been scheduled for 1979.

The visiting mission which had been sent to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands from 23 June to 27 July 1978, to observe a constitutional referendum held on 12 July 1978, reported to the Council at its May/June 1979 session. The mission had been sent in accordance with a 1978 decision of the Council.³

The mission, which was composed of representatives of France and the United Kingdom, observed the campaign and polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results. In its report to the Council, the mission stated that the referendum was well organized by the Trust Territory Constitutional Referendum Board in Saipan (Northern Mariana Islands) and by the special district referendum commissioners and boards. The mission saw no sign of improper intervention in the political campaign by the executive branch of the Trust Territory Government. The Administration sought to maintain a position of complete impartiality, and the mission believed that it had succeeded in doing so.

On 13 June 1979, the Council, by resolution 2169(XLVI), adopted by 3 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, on a proposal by France, took note of the visiting mission's report and expressed its appreciation of the work accomplished.

Earlier, on 15 February, with the adoption of resolution 2167(S-XIV) at its fourteenth special session, the Council decided to send a visiting mission to observe the constitutional referendum to be held on 1 March 1979 in the Marshall Islands, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The proposed Marshall Islands constitution had been adopted by the Marshall Islands Constitutional Convention on 21 December 1978. The mission was composed of representatives of France and the United Kingdom.

The mission was directed to observe the referendum, including the campaign and polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results and, to the extent that the primary purpose of the mission permitted, to obtain first-hand information concerning political, economic and social developments in the Marshall Islands.

Resolution 2167(S-XIV) was adopted by 3 votes to 1. During the discussion, the United States, recalling that the voters in the Marshall Islands and Palau had not accepted the constitution of the Federated States of Micronesia, said that, by the terms of the Congress of Micronesia law, that constitution would not apply to those two districts. They must therefore adopt their own constitutions. Recalling that the Speaker of the Marshall Islands Legislature and the Constitutional Convention had requested the Council to observe the referendum on the Marshallese constitution, the United States said it had endorsed the invitation and would welcome the dispatch of a mission.

The USSR said it was against the dispatch of a mission to the Marshall Islands to observe the referendum and it would not therefore participate in the mission. It stated that, in accordance with the Charter, any change in the status of a strategic Trust Territory must be made only through a decision of the Security Council, and any other decision had no legal force.

According to the United Kingdom, since the people of the Marshall Islands had voted against the constitution for the Federated States of Micronesia, they would have to take a decision about what other constitutional arrangements they wished to make for their future self-government.

France, in underscoring the importance it attached to the right to self-determination, said it supported sending a mission to observe the referendum in the Marshall Islands.

The mission was in the Marshall Islands from 25 February to 7 March. Its report to the Trusteeship Council stated that the people of the Marshall Islands had adopted a constitution, through a free, democratic referendum, by a substantial majority. During the campaign, the mission said, both the parties in favour of and those opposed to the constitution had been able to defend their points of view before the voters. The mission noted that the poll had been secret and no pressure had been exerted on the voters.

On 13 June, the Council, by resolution 2170(XLVI), adopted by 3 votes to 1, on a proposal by the United Kingdom, took note of the visiting mission's report and expressed its appreciation of the work accomplished.

On 6 June, with the adoption of resolution 2168(XLVI), the Council decided to send a visiting mission to observe the constitutional referendum to be held on 9 July 1979 in the Palau District of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The Palau Constitutional Convention, meeting between 28 January and 2 April 1979, had completed drafting a proposed constitution. The visiting mission was composed of representatives of France and the United Kingdom.

The mission was directed to observe the referendum, including the campaign and polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results and, to the extent that the primary purpose of the mission permitted, to obtain first-hand information concerning political, economic and social developments in Palau.

Resolution 2168(XLVI), proposed by France and the United Kingdom, was adopted by 3 votes to 1.

During the discussion, the USSR declared that the holding of the referendum in Palau would be an illegal action by the Administering Authority. The Council should not be party to such an action, which would be a violation of the Charter.

The mission, which visited Palau from 3 to 12 July, reported that a majority of voters had voted for the constitution. However, the results were not ratified by the Palau Legislature, and a revised constitution presented by a new constitutional commission was defeated in October. The Legislature then called for a further referendum on 9 July 1980 to confirm the results of the July 1979 referendum, with new election and installation dates.

Action agains tracism and racial discrimination

At its regular 1979 session, the Trusteeship Council considered together the questions of cooperation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.⁴

During the Council's discussion, the United States said that it strongly supported the development of the important role being played by the Committee in overseeing the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.⁵ It would continue to participate in sincere efforts to end racism and racial discrimination but it continued not to take part in the activities of the Decade.⁶

The USSR recalled that numerous decisions of the United Nations urged the international community to intensify its efforts towards ensuring the rapid eradication of racism and racial discrimination and stated that the Trusteeship Council should co-operate closely with the Committee. The USSR noted that the Committee in its report again expressed regret that none of the reports contained adequate information on the political, economic and social conditions in the Trust Territory and requested that information on constitutional developments and progress towards selfdetermination be provided, with special attention to the maintenance of the unity of the Territory. The General Assembly had required the Trusteeship Council to take an active part in the Decade, and a positive response from the Council was therefore obligatory, the USSR said.

On 6 June, the Council, without adopting a formal resolution, took note of the statements made on this item.

Attainment of self-government or independence and implementation of the Declaration on granting independence to colonial countries and peoples

At its regular 1979 session, the Trusteeship Council considered together the questions of attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and cooperation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.⁷

During the Council's discussion, the USSR said that nothing in Article 83 of the Charter prohibited other United Nations bodies, particularly the Special Committee, from monitoring as organs of the General Assembly the situation in the Trust Territory. The Assembly performed certain functions under the Charter relating to the Territory, and the Administering Authority should co-operate with it and with all the bodies established by the Assembly, including the Special Committee.

The United States and the United Kingdom maintained that Article 85 of the Charter clearly limited the functions of the Assembly to Trusteeship areas not designated as strategic. Article 83 charged the Security Council with the performance of all functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas. In those countries' view, the Trusteeship Council was responsible only to the Security Council concerning strategic areas.

On 6 June, the Trusteeship Council decided, without adopting a formal resolution, to draw the attention of the Security Council to the conclusions and recommendations that had been adopted concerning the attainment, under the Council's guidance, of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory and to the statements made by members of the Trusteeship Council on that question.

The Trusteeship Council's conclusions and recommendations with regard to the Trust Territory are summarized in the following subchapter.

Offers of study and training facilities

Under procedures adopted by the Trusteeship Council for the administration of the programme of scholarships and fellowships for inhabitants of Trust Territories, initiated by the General Assembly in 1952,* the Secretary-General reported to the Council on the programme. The report, covering the period 25 May 1978 to 24 May 1979, stated that scholarships and training facilities were offered by the following 11 Member States: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, the USSR and Yugoslavia. According to information made available to the Secretary-General, no applications for scholarships offered by these States were received from the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands during the period under review.

During the Council's consideration of the report, the United States said it continued to make every effort to prepare Micronesians for responsibilities that they were already assuming as the Territory approached the end of the Trusteeship period.

A total of 1,150 grants and loans had been made to Micronesians by the Government of the Trust Territory and from special federal programmes, the United States said. An estimated 1,500 students were studying in colleges outside the Trust Territory in 1979. Although language differences made it difficult for Micronesians to take full advantage of the offers of scholarships made by United Nations Member States, a number of scholarships had nevertheless been accepted. Expressing its gratitude to countries that had extended such assistance, the United States urged others, particularly those in the Pacific region, to offer further educational opportunities.

On 30 May 1979, the Trusteeship Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Dissemination of information on the United Nations and the Trusteeshi p System

The Secretary-General reported to the Trusteeship Council in 1979 on arrangements undertaken for distributing official records of the United Nations and for disseminating information concerning the aims and activities of the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The report submitted by the Secretary-General to the Council's 1979 regular session, covering the period from 1 May 1978 to 30 April 1979, described the activities carried out in the Territory by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) through the United Nations Information Centre in Tokyo. The publications furnished to the Territory included press releases, newsletters and special features on United Nations activities.

It was noted during the discussion of the report that recordings of the Council's debates and decisions were distributed in the Territory. The United States added that, besides the regular United Nations radio programme transmissions, several programmes of educational interest provided by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization had been duplicated for distribution in the Territory. The United States welcomed the continued efforts made by DPI to disseminate United Nations information in the Territory.

Conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, administered by the United States, includes more than 2,100 islands and atolls scattered over an area of some 7.8 million square kilometres of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. The islands, with a total land area of about 1,850 square kilometres, form three major archipelagos —the Marianas, the Carolines and the Marshalls —and are collectively known as Micronesia (Guam, the largest island in the Marianas, is not part of the Trust Territory). In 1977, the population of the Trust Territory totalled approximately 126,000.

Ultimate executive and administrative authority for the Government of the Trust Territory and responsibility for carrying out international obligations undertaken by the United States with respect to the Territory are vested in a High Commissioner, appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the United States Senate.

Pursuant to Secretarial Order No. 2989 of the United States Department of the Interior, a separate administration was established in the Northern Mariana Islands (the former Mariana Islands District) as of 1 April 1976. Saipan, in the Northern Mariana Islands, is the provisional headquarters of the Administration.

In a referendum held on 12 July 1978, Kosrae, Ponape, Truk and Yap—in the Caroline archipelago-approved and ratified a draft constitution for a proposed Federated States of Micronesia. The four districts subsequently held elections. The Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia was inaugurated on 10 May 1979.

The Marshall Islands and Palau rejected the draft constitution and continued drafting their own constitutions.

On 21 December 1978, the Marshall Islands Constitutional Convention approved a draft constitution and, in a referendum held on 1 March 1979, the voters of those islands adopted it by a substantial majority. Legislative power in the Marshall Islands was vested in the Nitijela (legislature); the first general election under the new constitution took place on 10 April 1979.

On 2 April 1979, the Constitutional Convention of Palau adopted a draft constitution, which a majority of the district's voters approved in a referendum on 9 July. An interim legislative authority for the district currently resided in the Palau Legislature in accordance with Secretarial Order No. 3027 issued on 29 September 1978, pending installation of a constitutional government in Palau.

In 1979, conditions in the Trust Territory were considered by the Trusteeship Council and by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.9

Consideration by the Trusteeship Council

The Trusteeship Council considered the report of the United States Government on the administration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands at meetings held from 21 May to 15 June 1979. It subsequently reported to the Security Council on this Territory, a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the Charter of the United Nations.10

In formulating its conclusions and recommendations, the Trusteeship Council took into account the observations of its visiting missions, which had observed the referenda in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Marshall Islands in July 1978 and March 1979 respectively (see subchapter above).

A summary of the Council's discussion and main conclusions and recommendations follows.

Population movements

The Trusteeship Council noted that it was estimated that it would be another 30 to 60 years before Bikini Atoll was safe for agricultural purposes. It noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority shared its concern and that the High Commissioner was exploring with Bikinians alternative areas for resettlement.

The Council said it was pleased that steps were being taken to improve conditions on Kili Island and noted with satisfaction that a clean-up of Enewetak Atoll would be completed in 1980 as scheduled. It urged the Administering Authority to take all precautions to ensure that the Marshallese were not further exposed to radiation hazards.

The Council noted with concern the continuing influx of people into the island of Ebeye and hoped that the Administering Authority and the Government of the Marshall Islands would urgently consider solutions on both a short- and long-term basis.

War and post-war damage claims

The Trusteeship Council reiterated its concern over the fact that war damage claims had not been settled. It noted with satisfaction, however, that full payment of all outstanding postwar claims against the United States was virtually completed.

The Council further noted with satisfaction a statement by the Administering Authority that the United States Congress was currently considering a proposal authorizing payment of 50 per cent of the war claims, without making this payment contingent on a comparable gesture by Japan. The Council appealed for further urgent efforts to resolve that long-standing issue in the best interests of the innocent victims.

Political advancement

The Trusteeship Council welcomed the fact that Kosrae, Ponape, Truk and Yap had declared themselves in favour of the draft constitution for the Federated States of Micronesia. While respecting their wishes, it noted with regret that the Marshall Islands and Palau, in rejecting that constitution, had chosen to form separate entities. The Council noted that the Marshall Islands had adopted their own constitution on 1 March 1979 and that the Nitijela had been inaugurated on 1 May. It welcomed the fact that the Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia had been inaugurated on 10 May.

The Council further welcomed the fact that virtually all executive posts in the Territory were currently held by Micronesians. It particularly welcomed the election of the President and Vice-President of the Federated States of Micronesia who had officially assumed their duties on 15 May. It noted with satisfaction the election by the Marshall Islands Nitijela of a President who had taken office on 1 May and had appointed his cabinet members.

The Council noted with satisfaction Secretarial Order No. 3039 of 25 April which transferred a number of powers to the Governments of the new entities thereby giving them greater autonomy, and urged completion of the transfer of those powers by 30 September.

The Council was pleased that the Federated States of Micronesia, under the terms of their Constitution, had their own judiciary. It also noted with interest the provisions in the Marshall Islands Constitution concerning the judiciary.

Economic advancement

In May 1979, the Administering Authority reported that it was continuing to implement a capital improvement programme for the Trust Territory aimed at providing the administrative districts and states with a basic and workable infrastructure upon which each island nation could start to build its economy, before termination of the Trusteeship Agreement.¹¹

The Trusteeship Council noted with regret that the level of the Territory's economy did not provide sufficient funds to meet its administrative and social expenditures. Dependence on grants from the Administering Authority was as great as in the past and exports amounted to only one fifth of imports.

The Council also noted the Administering Authority's statement that it continued to support the five-year indicative development plan, the implementation of which was the responsibility of the local governments. It noted with interest that the Administering Authority hoped that all the capital improvement projects prepared in 1976 would be completed before termination of the Trusteeship Agreement.

The Council noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority had extended to the Territory a generalized system of tariff preferences, as had Canada and Japan. It asked for continued efforts to obtain similar benefits from other countries.

The Council strongly urged the leadership of the Territory to avail itself of the assistance of various regional and international agencies. It noted with satisfaction that the United Nations

¹¹ See Y.U.N., 1946-47, p. 398, text of Trusteeship Agreement.

Development Programme (UNDP) was continuing to assist in carrying out certain studies, and noted with interest that the World Health Organization (WHO), the South Pacific Commission and the Asian and Pacific Development Institute of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific were providing training assistance.

The Council noted with satisfaction the entry into force of Public Law 7-71 concerning the exploitation, management and conservation of marine resources in the 200-mile zone under the jurisdiction of the Federated States of Micronesia, and the establishment of the Micronesian Maritime Authority. It noted with interest that the Marshall Islands and Palau had also established a 200-mile zone and that Palau had created a Maritime Authority.

The Council reiterated its concern at the absence of small industrial enterprises in the Territory and noted that an adequate transport and communications system continued to be a serious problem.

During the discussions in the Council, France stated that the current resources of the islands could not provide the means to maintain the Micronesians' standard of living. It was therefore understandable that some of them sought to obtain safeguards for their future from the Administering Authority. France pointed out that an effort should be made by both the Trust Territory and the Administering Authority to build up an economic system that would not systematically take its guidelines from the industrial countries, since Micronesians would run the risk of serious difficulties if they tried to copy those countries. France referred in particular to investments in costly infrastructure needing expensive maintenance and out of all proportion to the benefits they could bring.

In the view of the United Kingdom, it was crucial that by the end of the Trusteeship period plans should have been drawn up and if possible implemented to ensure an economic infrastructure with the resources and capabilities to make Micronesian self-determination a reality. The key was the development of productive industries, which alone could generate wealth and employment simultaneously. Both the Administering Authority and Micronesia had a part to play, the former in providing assistance and expertise and the latter in formulating needs and supervising the execution of plans, the United Kingdom said.

The USSR stated that, despite the Administering Authority's reports on the social and economic progress achieved in the Trust Territory, the actual situation there remained serious, as testified to by Micronesians and by those who had travelled in the Territory. It cited, for example, the report of the 1978 visiting mission which, it said, carefully but at the same time clearly criticized the results of the Administering Authority's policies in the Territory. If the Trusteeship Council was truly concerned with the fate of Micronesians, it must demand that the Administering Authority quickly and effectively eliminate all the impediments it had created in the way of economic development and lead the Territory towards self-determination and independence.

Social and educational development

The Trusteeship Council noted with satisfaction the progress made in strengthening the Territory's health and hospital infrastructure, including the fact that corrective measures had been taken to improve the serious deficiencies in the Marshall Islands District Hospital at Majuro, where a new hospital was to be built. It noted with concern, however, the adverse report of a Medicaid team on the hospital in Saipan, which was found to be antiquated, dangerous and impossible to renovate. It hoped that appropriations would be forthcoming for construction of a new building.

The Council continued to be concerned at the serious unemployment problem and the imbalance between wage-earners employed in the public and private sectors. It noted with satisfaction the creation of a Young Adult Conservation Corps in the Territory employing 300 men and women to build and maintain public facilities.

The Council reaffirmed its satisfaction with the excellent record of the Administering Authority in the field of education. It welcomed the fact that students in the Territory could obtain grants and loans for higher education from the United States and other Governments and international institutions. It hoped that students would be encouraged to choose areas of study that would equip them to assist in the development of Micronesia. In addition to students enrolled at the College of Micronesia, 212 students were attending teacher-training colleges overseas. The Council noted with interest efforts being made to strengthen vocational training programmes both at the secondary school level and for rehabilitating disabled persons.

Attainment of self-government or independence

The Trusteeship Council reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Micronesia to self-determination, including the right to independence in accordance with the United Nations Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement.

The Council considered that the constitutional referenda of July 1978 and March 1979 had been essential steps towards termination of the Trusteeship. It noted with satisfaction that the Chairmen of the visiting missions sent by the Council to observe those referenda had concluded that they had been held in conditions which guaranteed the free expression of the wishes of the population, as a result of which those concerned had their own Governments. It also noted that the Palau District had invited the Council to observe its July 1979 constitutional referendum.

In 1979, the Administering Authority reported that the role played by the former Congress of Micronesia concerning the negotiations on the Territory's future political status would be assumed by the Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia representing Kosrae, Ponape, Truk and Yap. The Marshall Islands and Palau would be represented by their future political status commissions.

In this connexion, the Council noted with interest the statements of the Administering Authority and the Special Advisers concerning the status of negotiations on free association that had been undertaken with the Micronesians on the basis of the 1978 Hilo (Hawaii) statement of agreed principles. ¹² In particular, it noted that all Micronesian parties had emphasized their desire to maintain preferential and close relations with the Administering Authority after termination of the Trusteeship Agreement.

As in 1978, the Council did not wish to make precise recommendations on the future political status of the Territory. It reiterated its view that free association, if freely accepted by the population, was an option that was not incompatible with the Trusteeship Agreement. The Council again expressed the hope that the Micronesians would take all necessary steps to establish, after termination of that Agreement, the all-Micronesian entity which they had agreed upon at Molokai, Hawaii, in October 1977.

The Council urged the Administering Authority to consider in any event maintaining the amount of its aid, after the end of its mandate, at a level comparable to the current one.

During the Council's deliberations, the United States said that representatives of the Administering Authority, the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and Palau were translating the Hilo principles into draft language of a single compact of free association and subsidiary agreements to be signed by the United States and each of the three Micronesian Governments. While the United States felt bound by the results of the 1978 constitutional referendum of the Federated States of Micronesia, it would continue to encourage the closest possible co-operation among the three Micronesian Governments during their transition and post-Trusteeship periods. It would also facilitate co-operation between the Northern Mariana Islands and the rest of the Trust Territory as much as possible.

The United States reaffirmed its intention to seek agreement with the Micronesian parties to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement by 1981 simultaneously for all areas of the Trust Territory, including the Northern Mariana Islands.

France pointed out that Micronesians had voted on the draft constitution of the Federated States of Micronesia with full knowledge that the unity of Micronesia was at stake. It was regrettable, it said, that the wish for unity had not been unanimous. France felt that the populations concerned would have been better able to ensure the representation of their interests as part of a larger unit. France said that the 1978 Hilo agreement and subsequent negotiations reflected the desire of all concerned to achieve a solution that respected the dignity of the peoples of the Territory.

The United Kingdom noted the conviction of all members of the United Nations visiting mission that the referendum on the draft constitution of the Federated States of Micronesia had been conducted fairly and that the result had been an accurate reflection of public sentiment in the six districts. The United Kingdom had consistently favoured the maintenance of the greatest possible degree of unity between the component parts of the Territory, and it might be regretted that the outcome of the referendum amounted to a decision not to preserve a single constitutional framework for all of the Territory apart from the Northern Mariana Islands. Despite this decision, the United Kingdom trusted that the people and their Governments would make it one of their highest priorities to foster close links in all fields. The United Kingdom was pleased that progress was being made in the negotiations on the future status of Micronesia, although much remained to be resolved.

The USSR said that, as the deadlines arbitrarily set for ending the Trusteeship over Micronesia approached, the Administering Authority had been increasing its efforts not only to dismember the Territory but also to impose on the individual parts various types of dependence on the United States. It stated that in the referendum, the majority of Micronesians had voiced their support of the draft constitution of the Federated States of Micronesia, thereby affirming their aspirations to achieve self-determination and to maintain the unity and territorial integrity of the Territory. Neither pressure nor legal obstacles created by the Administering Authority had succeeded in preventing widespread endorsement of the constitution.

The USSR again stressed that the question of the future of Micronesia constituted a component part of the problem of decolonization. Any measures taken by the Administering Authority aimed at annexing the Trust Territory, under whatever pretext, were in clear violation of the Charter, the Trusteeship Agreement and the Declaration on the granting of independence. Any change in the status of the strategic Trust Territory could be carried out only by a decision of the Security Council in accordance with Article 83 of the Charter.

Report of the Trusteeship Council

On 15 June 1979, by 2 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, the Trusteeship Council approved a recommendation of its Drafting Committee to adopt its conclusions and recommendations on conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. On the same date, the Council approved its report to the Security Council by 3 votes to 1.

The United States said that, although it had voted for the report in its entirety, it had, as customary, taken no position on the Council's conclusions and recommendations.

The USSR stated that it had voted against the report because it contained many conclusions which were in sharp contrast to the real situation in the Territory and not in keeping with Charter principles or provisions of the Trusteeship Agreement or the Declaration on granting independence. The dispatch of the Council's missions to observe the referenda in the Territory did not change the illegality of those votes and made the Council an accomplice to illegal measures.

The USSR said that, under conditions of secrecy and with pressure being exerted on the Micronesians, so-called negotiations were being conducted on the future status of individual parts of Micronesia. Micronesian participants in those negotiations had repeatedly complained to the Council about that pressure. Any change in the status of a strategic Trust Territory must be made only by a decision of the Security Council, and unilateral actions by the Administering Authority concerning the Territory or individual parts of it could not be acknowledged as legitimate or as having legal force.

Stating that the USSR had implicitly accused it of encouraging illegal activities of the Administering Authority, France said it encouraged the Micronesians to exercise their right to self-determination, and it was indeed an accomplice to the Micronesians' exercise of that right.

Consideratio n by the Special Committe e

The question of the situation in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands was also discussed in 1979 by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples at a meeting held on 16 August, having been first referred to the Committee's Sub-Committee on Small Territories for consideration and report. The Committee also heard statements by representatives of the International League for Human Rights who appeared before it as petitioners. The Administering Authority did not participate in the work of the Special Committee during consideration of the matter.

Adopting a set of conclusions and recommendations, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people to self-determination, including the right to independence in conformity with the Charter and the Assembly's 1960 Declaration on the granting of independence.

The Committee continued to note with regret the Administering Authority's refusal to cooperate with it and called on the United States to comply with its repeated requests that a representative be present to assist the Committee in formulating conclusions and recommendations.

The Committee noted the intention of the Administering Authority to terminate the Trusteeship Agreement in 1981 and, recognizing that it was ultimately for the Territory's people to decide their political destiny, called on the Administering Authority to preserve the unity of the Territory until those people had exercised their right to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration.

Noting that the Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia had been inaugurated in May, the Committee reiterated its concern regarding the High Commissioner's veto power and urged the transfer of the remaining powers to the Territory's elected leaders.

It continued to regret the lack of significant economic development in the Trust Territory and in particular the lack of sufficient funds to meet administrative and social expenditures. It endorsed the Trusteeship Council's recommendation urging promotion of production that could meet the people's needs, especially food, and discouragement of purchases of similar products from abroad.

Noting that the High Commissioner retained extensive powers to make decisions and supervise the budget of the Territory, and bearing in mind recent institutional changes and the approaching end of the Trusteeship period, the Committee reiterated its strong view that the Territory's elected leaders should participate fully in the budget process, particularly in determining priorities.

The Special Committee noted with satisfaction the material assistance provided to the Trust Territory by WHO, UNDP, the Asian and Pacific Development Institute and the South Pacific Commission, and urged the Territory's leadership to avail itself of the assistance provided by various regional and international agencies, in particular those in the United Nations system.

General questions

General aspects of implementation of the Declaration

System of examinatio n

During 1979, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continued to use the methods of work developed in preceding years and endorsed by the General Assembly. Under this procedure, it examined a number of questions relating to the implementation of the Declaration, as well as its implementation with regard to specific territories, the order of priority being decided on the basis of the recommendations of the Committee's Working Group, which functioned as a steering committee, and suggestions by the Committee Chairman.

To assist in its examination of conditions in each territory, the Committee had before it an information paper prepared by the United Nations Secretariat describing recent political and constitutional developments as well as current economic, social and educational conditions in the territory concerned. This information was derived from published sources and in some cases from information transmitted by administering powers under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations.²

In addition, the Committee heard statements from the administering powers, inviting those not members of the Committee to participate in its examination of the territories under their administration (similar invitations might be extended to other States not members of the Committee). Representatives of national liberation movements of colonial territories also participated in the proceedings of the Committee concerning their countries.

Petitions were circulated, as appropriate, and the Committee also heard petitioners at its meetings. The Committee was empowered by the Assembly to send visiting groups to territories to obtain first-hand information. It also held meetings away from United Nations Headquarters, New York, as required for the effective discharge of its functions.

The Committee formulated its decisions or recommendations either as a consensus statement or a resolution. It established subsidiary bodies whenever necessary.

Following normal practice, the Committee submitted to the Assembly in 1979 a report containing an account of its consideration of the situation in each territory or group of territories coming under its purview and of special questions that it decided to take up separately. On the basis of this report, the Assembly considered the implementation of the Declaration both in general and with respect to individual territories.

Between 5 February and 5 November the Committee held 30 plenary meetings and its subsidiary bodies a total of 40 meetings.

The Committee considered general aspects of the implementation of the Declaration and also its implementation with respect to the following territories: American Samoa, Antigua, Belize, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Brunei, the Cayman Islands, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, East Timor, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, the Gilbert Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Namibia, the New Hebrides, Pitcairn, St. Helena, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Vincent, Southern Rhodesia, Tokelau, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands, the United States Virgin Islands and Western Sahara.

At the beginning of its 1979 session, the Committee decided to maintain its Working Group, its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance and its Sub-Committee on Small Territories.

During the year the Special Committee granted three requests for hearings concerning East Timor, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and Western Sahara.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The Special Committee, at its 1979 session, continued to give particular attention to the major colonial problems and, as in previous years, considered a number of general questions arising in connexion with the implementation of the Declaration and other related Assembly decisions. These included activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the Declaration in colonial territories (see subchapter below) and military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration that were incompatible with the provisions of Assembly resolutions.

The Committee continued its examination of the question of the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations (see following subchapter), the question of sending visiting missions to colonial territories and the question of publicity to be given to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization.

At the invitation of the Government of Yugoslavia, the Committee held meetings at Belgrade in April, when it reviewed developments in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia. Its decision to hold this special series of meetings reflected its concern over the gravity of the situation in those territories and was intended to arouse world public opinion to the international community's need for intensifying its support for the struggle of the peoples of Southern Rhodesia and Namibia to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence.

In accordance with relevant Assembly decisions and established practice, representatives of national liberation movements of colonial territories in Africa recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) again were invited to participate as observers in the Committee's proceedings both in New York and Belgrade. They provided the Committee with information on the situation in their respective countries.

During the year, the Committee also paid close attention to the implementation of the Declaration with respect to other colonial territories throughout the world, and in this context approved a series of recommendations and proposals in regard to specific territories, described elsewhere in this chapter. In this connexion, the Committee, at the invitation of the United States, dispatched in August a visiting mission to Guam to observe a constitutional referendum, to acquire information on the situation in the territory and to ascertain the views of the people concerning their future political status. On the basis of the conclusions and recommendations of the mission, the Committee made a number of recommendations concerning the problems confronting the island and its people (see subchapter below on OUESTIONS CONCERNING INDIVIDUAL TERRITORIES).

During its consideration of the question of sending visiting missions to colonial territories, the Committee had before it a report by its Chairman setting out the views expressed by Australia, New Zealand, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States, administering powers, regarding the implementation of the resolutions and decisions of the Committee and the Assembly on this question. The representatives of those States had expressed the willingness of their Governments to continue to cooperate with the Committee concerning missions to the territories under their administration.

On 3 August, the Committee adopted, without objection, a resolution by which it stressed the need to continue to send missions to colonial territories to facilitate the full, speedy and effective implementation of the Declaration. It called upon the administering powers to continue to cooperate by receiving missions in the territories under the administration and requested its Chairman to continue his consultations with those powers in that respect.

On the question of military activities and arrangements by the colonial powers in territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration, the Committee, on 8 August, adopted a consensus statement.

By this decision, the Committee again deplored that the colonial powers had taken no steps to implement relevant United Nations resolutions and reiterated its conviction that, in a number of instances, the activities and arrangements in the territories concerned constituted a serious impediment to the implementation of the Declaration. In the Committee's view, a particularly critical situation prevailed in southern Africa owing to continued attempts and manœuvres of the racist minority regimes of Pretoria and Salisbury to perpetuate their illegal occupation of Namibia and Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe); in the latter territory, the illegal regime had resorted to desperate measures to suppress by force the legitimate aspirations of the people and maintain control. In its escalating war against the Zimbabweans and their national liberation movement, the illegal regime had repeatedly committed acts of aggression against neighbouring independent States.

In Namibia, the South African Government had continued to expand its network of military bases and had carried out a massive build-up of military forces to perpetuate its illegal occupation and prevent achievement of genuine independence. The Committee condemned any continuing co-operation of Western and other States in supplying South Africa with arms, military equipment and technology, including nuclear technology and equipment capable of being utilized for military purposes.

The Committee condemned all military activities and arrangements in colonial territories that denied their peoples the right to self-determination and independence, in particular the use of massive armed force to suppress the liberation struggle in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia. Accordingly, the Committee demanded the cessation of the wars of oppression in southern African territories and the dismantling of all military bases in those territories. In reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve their freedom and independence, the Committee appealed to all States to increase their moral and material assistance to the oppressed colonial peoples of southern Africa and their national liberation movements.

The Committee also condemned the continued military collaboration and support rendered by certain Western and other States to the minority regimes in southern Africa and called on all States to cease such collaboration. It also condemned the continued recruitment of foreign mercenaries by the regime in Southern Rhodesia for its war against the people of Zimbabwe and their liberation movement and again demanded that all States concerned take steps to prohibit the recruitment of their nationals for that purpose.

In reiterating its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration that were detrimental to the interests and rights of colonial peoples, the Committee again requested the powers concerned to terminate such activities and eliminate military bases in compliance with relevant Assembly resolutions. In that connexion, the Committee deplored, in particular, the continued alienation of land for military installations and considered that large-scale utilization of local economic and manpower resources to service such installations diverted resources which could be more beneficially used to promote economic development.

With regard to publicizing the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, the Committee, on 9 and 10 August, approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance and the report of a five-member mission sent to consult with a number of United Nations specialized agencies in Europe.

The conclusions and recommendations of the mission, endorsed by the Committee, stressed the importance of information centres, particularly those in Western Europe, in publicizing the processes of decolonization in southern Africa. In addition, the mission considered that certain non-governmental organizations were playing a very useful role in promoting the ideals of the United Nations Charter as well as the Declaration and other resolutions, and should be encouraged to continue their information activities in mobilizing public support for the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and Namibia. The mission and the non-governmental organizations had agreed that joint activities could be organized and that an exchange of information with the Committee would facilitate an increase in public awareness about the situation in southern Africa.

The Committee also gave attention to the observance, in mid-May, of the Week of Solidarity with the Colonial Peoples of Southern Africa

Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Equal Rights. Activities were undertaken in observance of the Week with the co-operation of the Secretariat's Department of Public Information, assisted by United Nations information centres throughout the world.

In connexion with its review of the territories to which the Declaration was applicable, the Committee adopted a resolution on 15 August by 11 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions, sponsored by Cuba and Iraq, by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, and the Declaration's full application to Puerto Rico, as affirmed in its previous decisions concerning Puerto Rico. It noted with preoccupation that the United States had not taken steps to transfer all powers to the people of Puerto Rico and urged measures be taken in that direction without delay, under conditions of full political equality and on the basis of recognition of the sovereignty of the Puerto Rican people. It condemned the persecution, harassment and repressive measures to which organizations and individuals struggling for independence and self-determination had been subjected, and expressed the desirability that a fact-finding mission be admitted to compile data, including in particular information on such persecution and harassment. It urged again that four political Puerto Rican prisoners in the United States serving terms of more than 25 years be immediately and unconditionally released, and demanded that United States armed forces terminate their operations in Vieques municipality. It affirmed the right of the people of Puerto Rico to full enjoyment of the wealth in its continental shelf and maritime economic zone, and recommended that that right be fully respected by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. The Committee decided to keep the question under continuous review.

With respect to the list of territories to which the Declaration was applicable, the Committee also had before it a letter dated 7 August from Papua New Guinea requesting that the Committee consider the inclusion of New Caledonia in its list of non-self-governing territories. On 16 August, Papua New Guinea and Fiji made statements supporting the principles of self-determination and independence with regard to all Pacific island peoples. The Committee decided to consider the letter and statements in 1980.

Consideratio n by the General Assembly

General aspects of the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence were considered by the General Assembly at five plenary meetings held between 2 November and 13 December 1979, during which 15 Members explained their positions on the question.

The Assembly had before it the report of the Special Committee covering its work in 1979. Chapters of the Committee's report dealing with specific territories were allocated by the Assembly to its Fourth Committee for consideration and report.

By a letter dated 25 May, the USSR transmitted a message of congratulation of the same date from Leonid I. Brezhnev, General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, to African States on the occasion of African Liberation Day.

In accordance with previous decisions of the Assembly and established practice, representatives of the national liberation movements of colonial territories in Africa recognized by OAU participated as observers in the proceedings of the Fourth Committee relating to their respective countries.

On 12 December, speaking in his capacity as the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee, the representative of Trinidad and Tobago noted with satisfaction that in 1979 three former non-self-governing territories, the Gilbert Islands, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, had acceded to independence as Kiribati, Saint Lucia, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines respectively, and that one of them, Saint Lucia, had become a Member of the Organization at the outset of the current Assembly session (see p. 435). Equally satisfactory was the fact that the two administering powers concerned, France and the United Kingdom, had committed themselves to bringing the New Hebrides to independence in 1980. The Acting Chairman said that the very real progress made in the* process of decolonization in the past two decades could be viewed with a certain measure of satisfaction; however, much remained to be done. He said that the April meetings in Belgrade had proved most constructive and, he trusted, would be remembered not only in terms of their immediate achievements but also in the broader perspective of further uniting the international community's efforts to hasten decolonization, particularly in southern Africa.

It was evident, he said, from the proceedings of the Committee and the recommendations it had placed before the Assembly that the active participation in its work of the Patriotic Front and the South West Africa People's Organization had continued to enhance the Committee's knowledge of the situation in Zimbabwe and Namibia and thus its ability to deal effectively with the issues involved. The Committee would continue to lend its full support to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia in their continuing struggle to achieve their legitimate rights.

Some two and a half years had elapsed since the last round of intensive negotiations had begun with a view to settling the Namibian question, the Acting Chairman continued. Regretably, the oppressed people of Namibia had yet to exercise their acknowledged right to self-determination and independence and free their country from foreign domination. It was quite obvious that the current lack of progress had to be blamed solely on South Africa's dilatory tactics.

In its manœuvres to perpetuate its illegal occupation of the territory, the Acting Chairman said, the South African Government had established a so-called Constituent Assembly with the attribution of legislative and executive powers, in open defiance of the will and resolutions of the international community, had continued its repression of the Namibian population, and had continued to use the territory as a base to attack neighbouring States.

The only acceptable political solution was one based on the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation and on the free exercise by all Namibians of their right to self-determination and independence within a united Namibia, in accordance with the Declaration.

With regard to Southern Rhodesia, the Acting Chairman said that for the past three months the Patriotic Front, which represented the true aspirations of the people of Zimbabwe, had been engaged in a difficult and patient exercise aimed at achieving a negotiated settlement. Their efforts—given added impetus by the commitment of Commonwealth leaders at their Lusaka (Zambia) meeting in August to seek a negotiated solution—had yielded encouraging results.

The Acting Chairman said that it was most regrettable that the plunder and exploitation of the human and natural resources of those territories continued. Such activities, by reinforcing the economic potential of the regimes concerned, strengthened racist and colonialist domination and clearly hampered the struggle for liberation.

A corollary of the efforts of the world community was the need for increased support and assistance to the peoples of the territories in southern Africa at both governmental and intergovernmental levels. Assistance still fell far short of meeting actual needs, the Acting Chairman continued, and, in regard to the major international funding institutions in particular, much remained to be done to create conditions which would ensure that the people concerned could exercise their legitimate rights. The continued efforts being made within the framework of the United Nations Development Programme and the co-operation of several specialized agencies deserved particular commendation and encouragement. He expressed his earnest appeal to all United Nations organizations to do their utmost to meet the needs of the millions who awaited their help.

During the year, the Special Committee also gave its attention to other territories which, because of their size, isolation or limited resources, were often faced with highly complex problems. The obligation of the administering powers to comply faithfully with the decisions of the people of those territories with regard to their future could not be over-emphasized. In its consideration of the situation in the small territories, the Committee had again received the cooperation of all the administering powers concerned, the Acting Chairman said.

The Committee was able in 1979 to dispatch missions to Guam and the New Hebrides and, in view of the importance of such missions in securing information on conditions in the territories and the aspirations of their peoples, the Committee intended, with the co-operation of the administering powers, to continue the practice when appropriate.

During the general debate, many speakers expressed satisfaction at the significant advances in the process of decolonization during the past 19 years and at the accession to independence of a number of former colonial territories. They spoke of the contribution of the United Nations to the process of emancipation of colonial countries and peoples, referring in particular to the adoption by the Assembly in 1960 of the Declaration on the granting of independence. In the view of most speakers, it was the United Nations responsibility, by supporting the struggle of the peoples in the remaining colonial territories, to ensure that the last phase of the decolonization process would be concluded without further delay.

Most of those taking part in the discussion underscored the gravity of the situation in the colonial territories of southern Africa, a situation which Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, among others, characterized as constituting a threat to international peace and security. In the opinion of those States, as well as of the Byelorussian SSR, Hungary, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Venezuela, one of the main obstacles to the implementation of the principle of self-determination and national independence, particularly in regard to southern Africa, continued to be the direct or indirect support given to the racist regimes by foreign companies that exploited the colonial territories' resources. A number of speakers believed that only the full implementation of the relevant Security Council and Assembly resolutions by all Member States with regard to Southern Rhodesia and Namibia would bring about a peaceful transition to majority rule and independence in those territories. The Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia and the USSR held the view that the measures provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter³ should be adopted in regard to South Africa. They, as well as Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and the United Republic of Tanzania, referred to colonial territories in other parts of the world and emphasized that all territories, regardless of size and resources, warranted United Nations attention and assistance in ensuring that their populations were accorded the right to determine their future.

Australia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Venezuela remarked that it had been repeatedly demonstrated that visiting missions provided the best means for the United Nations to satisfy itself that the wishes of the people regarding their future status were taken into account.

On 13 December, the Assembly, by the adoption of resolution 34/94, took a series of decisions on the implementation of the Declaration, incorporating a number of the findings of the Special Committee. The Assembly reaffirmed all its resolutions on decolonization and called on the administering powers to take the steps necessary to enable dependent peoples to exercise fully and without delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

The Assembly, inter alia, affirmed again: that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations was incompatible with the Charter, the Declaration and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights⁴ and posed a serious threat to international peace and security; its determination to eradicate colonialism and ensure strict observance by all States of those instruments; and its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all necessary means.

It condemned the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration, particularly in southern Africa, as well as all collaboration, particularly nuclear and military, with South Africa, calling on the States concerned to cease such collaboration. The colonial powers were requested to withdraw their military bases and installations from colonial territories and refrain from establishing new ones.

The Assembly requested all States, directly and through action in the specialized agencies and other organizations, to withhold assistance from South Africa and from the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until they restored to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. It asked all States to refrain from any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the territories by those regimes.

The Assembly urged all States likewise to provide moral and material assistance to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe and requested the administering powers of the other territories to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance to strengthen their economies.

The Assembly approved the Special Committee's report on its work during 1979 and its proposed work programme for 1980, and called on States and United Nations organizations to give effect to its recommendations. Among other things, the Assembly requested the Committee to formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to make suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering measures under the Charter with regard to developments likely to threaten international peace and security. It also asked the Committee to continue examining compliance with the Declaration and other resolutions on decolonization, to enlist support among Governments and organizations in achieving their objectives, particularly with regard to Namibia and Zimbabwe, and to continue paying particular attention to the small territories. It also called upon the administering powers to continue co-operating with the Committee and, in particular, to permit visiting the under territories missions in administration.

Resolution 34/94 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 125 to 7, with 7 abstentions, on a proposal by 39 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Reservations on the paragraph by which all States were requested to withhold all assistance from South Africa and the minority regime in Southern Rhodesia were expressed by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Costa Rica, Ireland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Singapore, Spain, Sweden (on behalf of the Nordic countries) and Turkey. In their view, the paragraph did not reflect constitutional developments that had taken place in Southern Rhodesia as a result of the ongoing Lancaster House (London) negotiations (see p. 1108). In addition, the use of the phrase "the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia" was considered by some to be inconsistent with the latest political developments in the territory.

Sweden pointed out that the paragraph concerning the legitimacy of the struggle to exercise the right to self-determination and independence by all necessary means contained a formulation which might be considered contrary to the principle upheld by the Nordic countries that the United Nations should seek peaceful means. The United States stated that it could not support this paragraph, with its suggestion that terrorism might be a legitimate means of bringing about political change. Guatemala considered that the use of force could not be endorsed by a body whose task was to maintain international peace and security and to settle disputes by peaceful means. A similar view was expressed by Austria.

With regard to condemning foreign economic interests, the United States remarked that in non-self-governing territories these could not be categorized as impeding the free expression of the right to self-determination, nor could the mere presence of military bases; the actual circumstances in each individual case should be examined. In addition, it could not accept the report of the Committee in its entirety, because that report dealt with Puerto Rico and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, both of which it considered were beyond the scope of the Committee's authority.

France believed that it was not within the competence of the Assembly to determine the status of a territory. France said it did not administer any territory to which the Declaration applied. The resolution contained a number of elements that, in its view, were not in line with reality.

Also on 13 December, the Assembly took decisions concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization. By resolution 34/95, the Assembly approved the chapter of the Committee's report relating to publicity for United Nations work in decolonization and reaffirmed the importance of such publicity. It requested the Secretary-General to continue to publicize this work through all the media at his disposal and to seek the co-operation and support of administering powers, OAU, information centres and non-governmental organizations for this purpose. He was also asked to continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, collecting, preparing and disseminating basic material, studies and articles about the problems of decolonization.

The Assembly invited all States, specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, the large-scale dissemination of information on decolonization.

Resolution 34/95 was adopted, by a recorded vote of 137 to 0, with 4 abstentions, on a proposal by 42 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

In addition, the Assembly on 23 November adopted a resolution (34/44) concerning the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights (see p. 833; for page reference to text of resolution 34/44, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS).

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolution 33/44 of 13 December 1978, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Condemning the continued colonialist and racist repression of millions of Africans, particularly in Namibia, by the Government of South Africa through its persistent, illegal occupation of the international Territory and its intransigent attitude towards all efforts being made to bring about an internationally acceptable solution to the situation obtaining in the Territory,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all necessary measures to eliminate forthwith the remaining vestiges of colonialism, particularly with respect to Namibia and Zimbabwe where desperate attempts to perpetuate illegal racist minority rule have brought untold suffering and bloodshed to the people,

Strongly deprecating the policies of those States which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, have continued to collaborate with the Government of South Africa and with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia in their domination of the peoples of the Territories concerned,

Conscious that the success of the national liberation struggle and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the total elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in Africa,

Aware of the conference being held at Lancaster House in London by the administering Power for the purpose of securing a negotiated settlement of the problem of Southern Rhodesia,

Warmly welcoming the accession to independence of Saint Lucia on 22 February 1979, Kiribati on 12 July 1979 and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on 27 October 1 979,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee with a view to securing the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as the continued readiness of the Governments concerned to receive United Nations-visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration, in particular in Namibia and Zimbabwe, and by the speediest possible complete elimination of the presence of the racist minority regimes therefrom.

- of the presence of the racist minority regimes therefrom,

 1. Reaffirms its resolutions 151 4(XV) and 2621 (XXV) and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all the necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;
- 2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid, the exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources, and the waging of colonial wars to suppress the national liberation movements of the colonial Territories in Africa—is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a serious threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples under colonial and alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1979, including the programme of work envisaged for 1980;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Condemns the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the colonial Territories, particularly in southern Africa;

8. Strongly condemns all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and calls upon the States concerned to cease forthwith allsuchcollaboration;

- 9. Requests all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of South Africa and from the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until the inalienable right of the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe to selfdetermination and independence has been restored, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of the legitimacy of the domination of the Territories by those regimes;
- 10. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones;
- 11. Implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and other associated international institutions

Consideratio n by the Special Committe e

In 1979, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁵ again examined the question of the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Committee considered this question at plenary meetings held in April and August.

The Committee had before it a report by the Secretary-General, submitted also to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in accordance with a 1978 Assembly resolution, 6 containing replies to a request for information on the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant Assembly resolutions by specialized agencies and international institutions. Replies were received from the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Food Programme (WFP), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research.

The Committee took into account the views expressed by representatives of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the national liberation movements of colonial territories who participated in its work during the year.

The Committee also had before it a report by its Chairman on his consultations with the President of the Economic and Social Council on means to co-ordinate the policies and activities of United Nations organizations in implementing Assembly resolutions on this question, and a report of its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance to which it had allocated consideration of the matter. The Committee approved the report of the Sub-Committee and endorsed its detailed conclusions and recommendations. The report also contained an account of the Sub-Committee's consultations during the year with representatives of OAU, national liberation movements, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, the World Bank, IMF, UNICEF and UNDP, as well as the conclusions and recommendations of a Sub-Committee mission, consisting of Bulgaria, Cuba, Sierra Leone, Sweden and the Syrian Arab Republic, sent to consult further with officials of ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO and WFP at their headquarters.

On 10 August, the Committee adopted without objection a resolution sponsored by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia. By this decision, the Committee among other things reaffirmed that the recognition by United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve independence entailed, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of all necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements. It expressed its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations that had continued to co-operate with the United Nations, notably by providing assistance within the framework of UNDP, in the implementation of the Declaration. However, the Committee expressed concern that the assistance extended to colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements was far from adequate in relation to their needs and deplored the fact that the World Bank and IMF had not taken the necessary measures to implement the Declaration and other relevant Assembly resolutions.

6 See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 836, resolution 33/41 of 13 December 1978.

 $^{^{\}rm 5}\, See~Y.U.N.,~1960,~p.~49,~resolution~1514(XV)$ of 14 December 1960, containing text of Declaration.

The Committee recommended that the organizations concerned should initiate or broaden contacts with colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in consultation with OAU, review their procedures with respect to assistance programmes and projects and make those procedures more flexible in order to speed up assistance to colonial peoples in their struggle for independence.

Urging governing bodies of agencies and other organizations to include in their agendas an item on progress made in implementing the Declaration and other United Nations resolutions, the Committee requested organizations in the system to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from South Africa and Southern Rhodesia and to discontinue all support to them until they restored the right of self-determination and independence to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe. The Committee also requested United Nations organizations to assist the Governments of the front-line States in their support of the struggle for independence of those territories. It noted with satisfaction the arrangements of several organizations enabling representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by OAU to participate fully as observers in proceedings concerning their countries, and called upon organizations which had not done so to make the necessary arrangements without delay. It requested the Assembly to recommend that Governments intensify their efforts in the organizations of which they were members to ensure full implementation of the Declaration, according priority to providing emergency aid to colonial peoples and their national liberation movements. It urged the heads of United Nations organizations, particularly those of the World Bank and IMF, to draw up, with the co-operation of OAU, proposals to be submitted to their governing and legislative organs for full implementation of the United Nations decisions, including specific aid programmes to colonial peoples and their national liberation movements.

Finally, the Committee decided, subject to any Assembly directives, to continue to examine this question and to report in 1980.

Consideratio n by the Economi c and Social Council

The implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular 1979 session held in July/August. Among other things, the Council discussed a report of its President on consultations he had held with the Chairman of the Special Committee. The President informed the Chairman that a meeting of representatives of the agencies, the United Nations, the general secretariat of OAU and the national liberation movements was scheduled to take place in June during the twenty-sixth session of the UNDP Governing Council. Past meetings, it was noted, had provided useful guidance on the priorities of the national liberation movements, had clarified a number of issues and had strengthened co-operation between the organizations involved. Accordingly, they considered such regular consultations extremely useful.

The two presiding officers noted that United Nations organizations had expanded the volume and scope of their assistance to peoples in colonial territories, particularly within the framework of UNDP programmes, although such assistance fell far short of needs, particularly in Zimbabwe and Namibia, and the international community should enlist all available resources to help them.

Efforts should be intensified to secure increased funds for extended aid programmes, for which the support of major United Nations funding institutions was essential. The presiding officers hoped that the heads of these institutions would quickly make specific proposals for increasing aid, particularly to colonial territories and national liberation movements, for consideration by their legislative organs.

The two presiding officers noted with satisfaction the closer liaison established by the United Nations organizations with the national liberation movements, OAU and the United Nations Council for Namibia, welcomed arrangements for active participation by liberation movements at meetings, and noted measures to defray travel costs and related expenses of liberation movement representatives to attend such meetings.

The officers expressed confidence that closer contacts would facilitate increased assistance and help agencies respond to needs faster, and they hoped co-ordination would continue to improve. They noted with satisfaction the considerable increase in international assistance to refugees from Zimbabwe and Namibia through UNHCR in co-operation with a number of United Nationsorganizations and OAU.

The officers agreed that the United Nations system should strengthen measures to isolate the regimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. They also agreed that they should maintain close contact on the question.

On 2 August, the Council adopted a resolution on the subject, by which, among other things, it endorsed the observations and suggestions in its President's report. It urged United Nations organizations, in consultation with OAU, to do everything possible urgently to give increased ssistance to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe and their liberation movements in their struggle for liberation.

It also urged governing bodies to include in heir agendas an item on progress made in implementing the Declaration and called on them to arrange for the national liberation movements to take part in meetings concerning their countries, it further urged the heads of United Nations organizations, in co-operation with OAU, to submit to their governing and legislative bodies specific id programmes for the peoples and their liberation movements and recommended that all governments should give priority to providing emergency aid to those peoples and movements, it requested the organizations to continue to withhold any kind of assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

The Council also requested its President to continue consultations with the Chairman of the Special Committee and to report to the Council. Deciding to keep the question under continuous review, it also requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the activities of the United Nations—related organizations were effectively co-ordinated and to report to the Council.

These decisions were set forth in Council resolution 1979/50, adopted, without vote, on a proposal submitted in the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee by Algeria, Barbados, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Nigeria, Pakistan, Romania, Senegal, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Zambia. The Third Committee had approved the text by consensus on 13 July.

In explanation of its position on the text, the United Kingdom said that it would have wished he resolution to be more clearly expressed, and therefore had reservations about certain aspects of it. The United Kingdom intended to make firm proposals to bring Southern Rhodesia to legal independence on a basis that should prove acceptable to the international community, and believed every effort should be made to find a negotiated settlement in Namibia.

The Federal Republic of Germany said that although it had supported the consensus it was unable to endorse all the observations and suggestions of the Council's President, a position shared by the United States. The Federal Republic of Germany also had reservations about the text; the expression "struggle for liberation" did not, in its view, exclude the use of force, which it had renounced.

France advocated humanitarian action towards the peoples of Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, but maintained the view that the specialized agencies should not deal with political problems.

The United States said it had reservations about references to the provision of assistance to and through national liberation movements; that assistance should be available to all the people concerned, regardless of their political affiliations, and carefully supervised in accordance with the regulations of the United Nations bodies concerned.

Japan said it understood that the assistance to liberation movements would not be used for armed struggle. It said that South Africa was a Member State of the United Nations, and the paragraph concerning suspension of assistance to South Africa was therefore inappropriate.

By decision 1979/53, also adopted on 2 August, the Council transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Secretary-General containing replies received from specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations concerning their assistance to the Palestinian people in connexion with implementing the Declaration. (For details, see p.372.)

Consideratio n by the General Assembly

At its 1979 regular session, the Assembly had before it the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations, previously considered by the Special Committee and the Economic and Social Council (see p. 1020). The report summarized replies by specialized agencies and United Nations organizations and programmes to a request by the Secretary-General, in identical letters of 23 January 1979, for information on action taken by those organizations to assist colonial peoples in Africa. The organizations reported variously on provision of assistance to refugees from the colonial territories, assistance to the peoples of those territories in consultation with OAU and with the active collaboration of the national liberation movements, discontinuance of all support and aid to South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and arrangements to ensure observer representation of the territories in the organizations by the liberation movements.

Pakistan stated in the Fourth Committee, where discussion of the report mainly took place, that the assistance provided by the specialized agencies had been satisfactory in some cases, but in general it had been far from adequate. The United Nations organizations should broaden their contacts with the peoples and review their programmes and projects to ensure wider and quicker assistance. Pakistan stressed the need for Member States to intensify their cooperation with the specialized agencies. Egypt said that aid should be related more closely to the real needs of the peoples and that Member States should increase their contributions to United Nations organizations.

Tunisia expressed gratification at the expansion of the scope of the assistance from the specialized agencies, and asked them to intensify their efforts so as to enable the liberation movements to continue their struggle and to pursue the economic and social development of the liberated regions. It also felt the specialized agencies and international organizations should give urgent economic and other assistance to the front-line States to enable them to support the liberation struggle in Namibia and Zimbabwe, and urged them to take an active part in the work of decolonization.

Ghana also deplored the fact that certain United Nations bodies, in particular financial institutions, were assisting apartheid. It stated that the financial and other resources of the United Nations agencies could not be used both to attack and to defend apartheid, recalling that Member States' obligations under the Charter prohibited them from assisting the apartheid system.

The Ukrainian SSR noted that the majority of United Nations institutions contributed actively to implementing the Declaration and supported a proposal to expand their aid. However, in its view, the actions of the World Bank and IMF were calculated to give support to South Africa's racist regime.

Mali felt that at the current stage of the struggle for independence it was necessary to go beyond mere affirmation of support, and the role of the specialized agencies in development should be strengthened.

On 21 November, the Assembly adopted a resolution setting forth its decisions on the implementation of the Declaration by organizations related to the United Nations. The Assembly, among other actions, approved the chapter of the Special Committee's report on the question and reaffirmed the necessity for moral and material assistance by the specialized agencies to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements, asking those agencies to provide such assistance to newly independent and emerging States as well.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to those United Nations organizations that had continued to co-operate with the United Nations in the implementation of the Declaration and other Assembly resolutions, but it expressed concern that the assistance was inadequate in relation to actual needs.

The Assembly regretted that the World Bank and IMF had not taken the necessary measures to implement the Declaration and deplored in particular the fact that they continued to maintain co-operation with the South African regime. It urged their executive heads to draw the attention of their governing bodies to this resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia.

It recommended that the United Nations organizations should initiate or broaden contacts with colonial peoples in consultation with OAU, review procedures for preparing assistance programmes and projects, and introduce greater flexibility in those procedures.

The Assembly urged those United Nations organizations that had not done so to include in the agenda of the meetings of their governing bodies an item on progress made in implementing the Declaration and other United Nations resolutions.

It again urged those organizations to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restored the inalienable right to self-determination and independence to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe, and to refrain from taking any action that might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of their domination of the territories.

The Assembly called upon organizations that had not done so to make arrangements without delay to enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by OAU to participate fully as observers in their relevant proceedings. It recommended that all Governments accord priority to the question of providing emergency assistance to peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

The Assembly urged the heads of United Nations organizations to draw up, with the cooperation of OAU, proposals for submission to their governing and legislative organs for full implementation of the United Nations decisions, in particular specific aid programmes to colonial peoples and national liberation movements.

It requested the Secretary-General to continue to assist organizations in working out measures to implement this and other resolutions and to prepare a report on the action taken. The Economic and Social Council was asked to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, measures for co-ordinating the policies and activities of the organizations within the system in implementing the relevant Assembly resolutions.

The Assembly adopted this text as resolution 34/42 by a recorded vote of 137 to 0, with 8 abstentions. It acted on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 5 November by a recorded vote, requested by Bulgaria, of 117 to 0, with 8 abstentions. The text was sponsored in the Fourth Committee by 44 Members (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

At the time of the vote in the Fourth Committee, reservations with respect to certain aspects of the resolution were expressed by Australia, Austria, Botswana, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guatemala, Ireland, Israel, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay.

Speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, Norway said they had voted in favour of the draft resolution, since they whole-heartedly endorsed the view that the United Nations institutions had a special responsibility to assist colonial peoples. However, they had reservations about the inclusion of the paragraph concerning the World Bank and IMF.

Australia, Austria, Guatemala, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Portugal also expressed reservations on this provision, since they did not share the criticism of the work of the World Bank and

Israel and the United States said they objected to the politicization of the specialized agencies which, the United States added, undermined their effectiveness in performing the technical and humanitarian functions for which they had been established. France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and Uruguay expressed similar views. Israel said it rejected certain provisions of the Declaration and Programme of Action of the 1978 World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, recalled through a preambular reference to an Assembly resolution of 13 December 1978.8

Botswana and Japan stated that they had reservations about the operative paragraphs concerning the withholding of assistance to South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. Japan also said it was unable to support some portions of the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana, Cuba, in September 1979, referred to in the preamble.

Having heard the statement of the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule,

Noting with concern that, although progress has been maintained through the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the extension of assistance to refugees from Zimbabwe and Namibia, the action taken hitherto by the organizations and agencies concerned in the provision of assistance to the peoples of those territories through their national liberation movements is still far from adequate to meet the urgent and growing needs of the peoples concerned,

Noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements concerned and commending the initiative taken by that organization in establishing channels for closer, periodic contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and United Nations institutions and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements of Zimbabwe and Namibia in the formulation of assistance programmes,

Noting also the support given by the organizations within the United Nations system to the implementation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1 977,

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements;

- 3. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and organizations within the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;
- 4. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in the light of the intensification of the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe and Namibia, to do everything possible as a matter of urgency to render, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, increased assistance to the peoples of those territories and their national liberation movements in their struggle for liberation;
- 5. Urges further those specialized agencies and organiza-tions within the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made by those organizations in their implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies;
- 6. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to continue to take all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance to the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restore to the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the illegal domination of the territories by those regimes;

- 7. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and United Nations institutions which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those international institutions which have not yet done so to follow this example and make the necessary arrangements without delay;
- 8. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies and, in that connexion, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial territories and to their national liberation movements;

9. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, having regard to the recommendations contained in paragraphs 4 and 5 above, to formulate, with the active cooperation of the Organization of African Unity, and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements;

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,"

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, contained in its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, as well as all other relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council on this subject, including in particular Assembly resolution 33/41 of 13 December 1978,

Having examined the reports submitted on the item by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the related report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

Taking into account the relevant provisions of the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Aware that the struggle of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia for self-determination and independence is in its final and most crucial stage and that it is therefore incumbent upon the entire international community to intensify concerted action in support of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and their national liberation movements for the attainment of this goal,

Deeply conscious of the critical need of the peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and of other colonial Territories for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their struggle for liberation from colonial rule and in their efforts to achieve and consolidate their national independence,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the provision of moral and material assistance, on a priority basis, to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements,

Deeply concerned that, although there has been progress in the extension of assistance to refugees from the colonial Territories in Africa, the actions taken hitherto by the organizations concerned in providing assistance to the peoples of the Territories through their national liberation movements still remain inadequate to meet the urgent needs of those peoples,

Expressing its confident hope that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity and the national liberation movements of the colonial Territories will help to overcome procedural and other difficulties which have impeded or delayed the implementation of some assistance programmes,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued cooperation and assistance extended by it to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connexion with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the extension of assistance to the national liberation movements concerned,

Noting also the support given by the organizations of the United Nations system to the formation of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia called for in General Assembly resolution 32/9 A of 4 November 1 977,

Mindful of the necessity to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various decisions of the United Nations relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial

Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

- 2. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;
- 3. Expresses its appreciation to certain specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system which have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

4. Expresses its concern that the assistance extended thus far by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to the colonial peoples, particularly those of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and to their national liberation movements is far from adequate in relation to the actual needs of the peoples concerned;

5. Regrets that the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund have not yet taken the necessary measures towards the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, deplores in particular the fact that those agencies continue to maintain co-operation with the colonialist racist minority regime of South Africa and urges the executive heads of those agencies to draw the particular attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution with a view to formulating specific programmes beneficial to the peoples of the colonial Territories, particularly Zimbabwe and Namibia;

6. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples in Africa struggling for liberation from colonial rule;

7. Requests once again the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all moral and material assistance to the newly independent and emerging States;

8. Recommends that the organizations concerned should initiate or broaden contacts with the colonial peoples in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, review their procedures with respect to the formulation and preparation of assistance programmes and projects and introduce greater flexibility in those procedures so as to be able to extend the necessary assistance without delay to help the colonial peoples and their national liberation movements in their struggle to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

9. Urges those specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system which have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress made by those organizations in the implementation of the Declaration and the other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

10. Urges once again the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to take all necessary measures to withhold any financial, economic, technical or other assistance from the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, to discontinue all support to them until they restore to the peoples of Namibia and Zimbabwe their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and to refrain from taking any action which might imply recognition of, or support for, the legitimacy of the domination of the Territories by those regimes;

11. Notes with satisfaction the arrangements made by several specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system which enable representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity to participate fully as observers in the proceedings relating to matters concerning their respective countries, and calls upon those agencies and organizations which have not yet done so to follow this example and to make the necessary arrangements without delay;

12. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connexion, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial Territories and to their national liberation movements;

- 13. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the recommendations contained in paragraph 8 above, to formulate with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity and to submit, as a matter of priority, to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant decisions of the United Nations, in particular specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;
- 14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and other organizations, a report on the action taken since the circulation of his previous report in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution;
- 15. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;
- 16. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests

Consideration by the Special Committee

During 1979, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples again examined the activities of foreign economic and other interests in colonial territories.

The Committee had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat, containing information on economic conditions with particular reference to foreign economic interests in Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

During discussions held between 2 and 8 August, most of those who spoke denounced the plundering of the territories' natural resources by foreign powers, despite repeated condemnations by the General Assembly that such activity constituted an impediment to the implementation of the Declaration and violated the obligations assumed by Member States under the Charter of the United Nations.

On 8 August, the Committee adopted a resolution on the subject by a vote of 17 to 0, with 2 abstentions (Australia and Sweden). The resolution had been prepared on the basis of consultations in the Special Committee and in an open-ended informal working group with a nucleus comprising Australia, Ethiopia, Iran and the Ivory Coast; differences of view remained on the text, however. By the resolution, the Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent territories to enjoy and dispose of their natural resources, and reiterated that any administering or occupying power that deprived colonial peoples of the exercise of that right or subordinated their rights and interests to foreign economic and financial interests violated the solemn obligations it had assumed under the Charter.

The Committee also reaffirmed that, by exploiting and depleting the natural resources of Zimbabwe and Namibia in association with the illegal racist minority regimes, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests violated the rights of the peoples of those territories, contributed to the strengthening of the minority regimes and to their continued colonialist domination, and constituted a major obstacle to political independence. It condemned such activities in the colonial territories as impeding the implementation of the Declaration and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination.

It also condemned the policies of Governments that continued to support or collaborate with foreign economic and other interests engaged in exploiting the territories' natural and human resources and invited all Governments and United Nations organizations to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial territories over their natural resources was fully respected and safeguarded. The Committee also strongly condemned the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain Western and other States with South Africa and called on all Governments to refrain from any collaboration that might enable that regime to produce nuclear materials and develop nuclear weapons. In addition, the Committee again requested Governments, in respect of their nationals and companies under their jurisdiction that owned or operated enterprises in colonial territories, particularly in southern Africa, to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that ran counter to the interests of the indigenous inhabitants.

The Committee condemned the policies of States which violated the Security Council's mandatory sanctions, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce them against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, as being contrary to their Charter obligations. It invited the Council to consider measures to widen the scope of the sanctions to include measures envisaged under Article 41 of the Charter. It requested all States to discontinue assistance to regimes which used it to repress the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

It strongly condemned South Africa for its continued exploitation and plunder of the natural resources of Namibia in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibians. Further, the Committee called on all States to discontinue and refrain from entering into relations with the Government of South Africa concerning Namibia which might lend support to its illegal occupation of the territory. The Committee also strongly condemned South Africa's policy of continued collaboration with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, in violation of United Nations resolutions and Charter obligations, and called upon it to cease such collaboration.

The Committee called on the administering powers to abolish all discrimination in wage systems and working conditions in their territories. The Secretary-General was asked to undertake a sustained and wide publicity campaign concerning pillaging of natural resources and exploitation of indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support they gave to colonialist and racist regimes.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The question of the activities of foreign economic interests in colonial territories was discussed at the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly by the Fourth Committee, on the basis of the Special Committee's report. Most Members who participated in the debate supported the report. The majority of them deplored the fact that, in total disregard of all pertinent United Nations resolutions, foreign economic interests, particularly in southern Africa, continued to impede the progress of colonial territories towards independence. It was further stated that foreign companies continued to reap and repatriate huge profits, thus depriving the indigenous populations of their rightful ownership over their countries' natural resources. Far from diminishing, foreign loans and investments, which originated mainly in Western countries, continued to grow, thereby strengthening the racist and colonialist regimes of southern Africa which could not survive without their help. It was imperative that world public opinion be made aware of the situation and that the United Nations take strong measures to put an end to it. This point of view was shared by, among others, Algeria, Angola, Benin, the Comoros, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Madagascar, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia.

Mexico stated that, despite some cosmetic changes recently made, foreign companies were still aiming for maximum profit, without any regard for the welfare of the local population. It stated that it was the responsibility of the United Nations to mount a comprehensive information programme to expose such actions—a view shared by Pakistan.

The Syrian Arab Republic called for condemnation of the co-operation between Israel, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia.

The United Republic of Tanzania said that the Swedish Government's recent measures to discourage investments in South Africa were encouraging and urged other Western countries to follow this example.

India, supported by Czechoslovakia, Mongolia and the Ukrainian SSR, advocated the imposition of mandatory economic sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter, 10 including an oil embargo and measures to prevent that country from acquiring nuclear weapons.

Criticism and allegations were directed at several countries and institutions for supplying oil or selling goods to South Africa, lending it money, increasing investments there or maintaining trade relations with the country.

Mongolia stated that the monopolies of the principal North Atlantic Treaty Organization members continued to play a leading role in the economies of the small Pacific and Caribbean territories, thereby impeding their decolonization. Viet Nam supported that point of view, and Yugoslavia called upon those countries whose transnational corporations operated in Namibia immediately to withdraw their investments from the territory and cease all cooperation with South Africa.

Ethiopia expressed the view that the adoption of codes of conduct and the granting of trade union rights to black workers would not change in a meaningful way the condition of the masses in southern Africa. Strict implementation of the existing sanctions against Southern Rhodesia and imposition of economic sanctions against South Africa were needed. The situation in southern Africa and in the dependent territories in the Pacific and Caribbean areas were different in magnitude but not in kind.

The United States pointed out that foreign economic interests, provided that they were subject to control, could make a positive contribution to the economy of non-self-governing territories. To that end, the preparation of a code of conduct for transnational corporations should be undertaken by the international community.

Israel emphasized its abhorrence of any form of racism and discrimination and denied the existence of any collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field. Such trade as there was with South Africa was limited to 0.3 per cent.

Of those unable to support the Special Committee's report, Australia, Austria and New Zealand, among others, expressed the view that no significant progress could be achieved by sweeping condemnations and the failure to differentiate between the situation in southern Africa and that existing in colonial territories of the Pacific and Caribbean areas. Australia pointed out that the Committee held the administering powers responsible for the economic development of the territories under their administration by providing all possible bilateral and multilateral assistance. It was to be hoped that objectivity would prevail and wide consultations among Members would lead to agreement on a constructive text of a resolution.

On 19 November, the Fourth Committee, by a recorded vote of 86 to 15, with 32 abstentions, approved a resolution sponsored by 28 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) concerning the question, which was subsequently adopted by the Assembly on 21 November, as resolution 34/41, by a recorded vote of 88 to 15, with 33 abstentions.

By that resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment and disposal of their natural resources. Any power which deprived them of those rights or subordinated them to foreign economic and financial interests violated its obligations under the Charter. By their depletive exploitation of natural resources, accumulation and expatriation of huge profits and use of those profits to enrich foreign settlers and entrench colonial domination, the activities of foreign economic interests in southern Africa constituted a major obstacle to political independence and enjoyment of the natural resources of dependent territories by their peoples. Condemning all such activities in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and South Africa, the Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to monitor the situation in other non-self-governing territories to ensure that all economic activities there were aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of their peoples and their speedy accession to independence.

The Assembly condemned all States which continued to maintain political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military, nuclear and other relations with the regimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia in violation of relevant resolutions of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), in particular the United Kingdom, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Belgium, Israel and Italy. It strongly condemned the collusion of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel and the United States with South Africa in the nuclear field.

It called again upon all Governments to put an end to enterprises and investments in colonial territories by their nationals and corporate bodies under their jurisdiction which were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants. It requested them to refrain from investing in, making loans to or promoting trade with the minority regimes of southern Africa. It expressed its conviction that the sanctions against Southern Rhodesia should be expanded and called on the Security Council to consider adopting measures to this end. It condemned all violations of the Council's mandatory sanctions against the regime in Southern Rhodesia and the failure of some Member States to enforce them. It strongly condemned the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to Southern Rhodesia by United Kingdom companies and deplored successive United Kingdom Governments' complicity in this matter.

The Assembly also condemned those countries that provided crude oil and petroleum products to the South African regime. It commended the new Government of Iran for severing links with South Africa and effectively enforcing the oil embargo against that regime. It requested all States to end all forms of assistance to regimes that used this assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial territories and their national liberation movements.

Inviting all Governments and United Nations organizations to ensure that the sovereignty of colonial territories over their natural resources was fully respected and safeguarded, the Assembly reiterated that exploitation and plundering of Namibia's natural resources by South Africa and other foreign economic interests were illegal and contributed to maintenance of the illegal occupation regime, and strongly condemned South Africa for its continued exploitation of those resources as well as for its collaboration with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. The Assembly called on the Security Council to impose economic sanctions against South Africa, including an oil embargo and the withdrawal of investments. It appealed to non-governmental organizations to continue mobilizing international public opinion for the enforcement of sanctions against the Pretoria and Salisbury regimes.

The Secretary-General was asked to undertake through the Department of Public Information a sustained and broad campaign to inform world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillaging of natural resources in colonial territories, the exploitation of their populations by foreign monopolies and their support to colonialist and racist regimes.

The Assembly called upon the administering powers to apply a uniform and non-discriminatory wage system in each territory. It endorsed an OAU proposal of July 1979 to convene jointly with the United Nations an international conference in 1980 to mobilize world opinion in support of economic and other sanctions against South Africa. Finally, the Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report in 1980.

The sponsors accepted an amendment by Argentina, Ecuador, Mexico, Panama and Peru to delete—from the operative paragraph by which all countries which continued to maintain any kind of relations with the regimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia were condemned—a reference to "certain Latin American countries" following the list of countries mentioned.

Statements in explanation of vote were made by several representatives. A number of States that voted in favour of the resolution expressed reservations on the condemnation of specific States: among them were the Bahamas, Brazil, Burma, Colombia, Costa Rica, Fiji, Indonesia, Jamaica, Malaysia and the Philippines. Papua New Guinea stated that it was opposed to naming specific States collaborating with the minority regimes of southern Africa since the list was not complete.

Among those abstaining because they could not approve selective references and unjustified accusations against explicitly named countries were Chile, Denmark, Finland, Gabon, Greece, Thailand and Turkey. Lesotho also abstained, stating that most of the text posed problems for its Government. Norway expressed the view that the resolution, although more balanced than in previous years, concentrated on elements that divided the Fourth Committee. Botswana stated that its geographical location in relation to South Africa prevented it from supporting provisions calling for an oil embargo and sanctions against South Africa.

Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy and the Netherlands opposed the resolution because it assumed that all foreign economic interests were detrimental to the development of non-self-governing territories. The Federal Republic of Germany and Italy denied any military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa. Portugal rejected the resolution because it lacked the necessary balance and could fail to achieve its ultimate objective—the wellbeing of the populations of the colonial territories.

The United Kingdom expressed the view that, far from being necessarily harmful to colonial territories, the activities of foreign economic interests were in fact an essential element in economic diversification. In territories under United Kingdom administration, such activities were controlled to ensure maximum benefits to the local inhabitants. It was regrettable that the resolution made no mention of the efforts pursued in London to find a permanent solution to the problem of Southern Rhodesia, and the United Kingdom rejected the insinuation that it was supplying oil to the territory.

Japan voted against the resolution as not reflecting the efforts it had made to co-operate in the international action to solve the problems of southern Africa. Direct Japanese investments in South Africa were no longer permitted, and the Government had called on Japanese banks to refrain from extending any loans to South Africa.

The United States, in rejecting the resolution, expressed disappointment at not having been able to take part in the consultations designed to produce a more balanced text that might have been approved by consensus. It opposed economic and oil sanctions against South Africa as it considered them ineffective. France emphasized that since 1976 it had not authorized French investments in Namibia, and French firms operating in South Africa had to respect the code of conduct of the European Economic Community. France applied the arms embargo imposed by the Security Council as well as sanctions against the regime in Southern Rhodesia. It reiterated the view that the debate served only as a pretext for useless ideological arguments.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Southern Rhodesia and Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa,"

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to this question,

Taking into consideration the parts of the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia relating to the question,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, as well as all other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the item,

Taking into account the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, held at Maputo from 16 to 21 May 1977, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid,

Recalling the Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action in Support of Self-Determination and National Independence for Namibia, contained in General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Monrovia from 6 to 20 July 1979,

Bearing in mind also the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming that any economic or other activity which impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories violates the political, economic and social rights and interests of the peoples of the Territories and is therefore incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter

Reaffirming that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the exploitation and depletion of those resources by foreign economic interests, in particular of southern Africa, in association with the illegal racist minority regimes constitutes a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles stated in the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting with profound concern that the colonial Powers and certain States, through their activities in the colonial Territories, have continued to disregard United Nations decisions relating to the item and that they have failed to implement in particular the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970 and 33/40 of 13 December 1 978, by which the Assembly called upon the colonial Powers and those Governments which had not yet done so to take legislative, administrative or other measures in order to put an end to enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are owned by their nationals or bodies corporate under their jurisdiction, whenever such enterprises are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, and to prevent new investments which run counter to those interests.

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests which continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, particularly in southern Africa, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the support which the racist minority regime of South Africa and the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia continue to receive from those foreign economic, financial and other interests which are collaborating with them in their exploitation of the natural and human resources of, and in the further entrenchment of their illegal and racialist domination over, the international Territory of Namibia and the Non-Self-Governing Territory of Southern

Rhodesia(Zimbabwe), respectively,

Strongly condemning the investment of foreign capital in the illegal production of uranium and the collaboration by certain Western countries and other States with the racist minority regime of South Africa in the nuclear field which, by providing that regime with nuclear equipment and technology, enables it to develop nuclear and military capabilities, thereby promoting South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia and enabling it to become a nuclear Power,

Deeply concerned at the fact that foreign economic, financial and other interests continue to deprive the indigenous populations of other colonial Territories, including those in the Caribbean and Pacific Ocean regions, of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and at the continued loss of ownership of land by the inhabitants of those Territories as a result of the failure of the administering Powers to take effective steps to safeguard such ownership,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in Africa,

- 1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests:
- 2. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Maputo Declaration in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia and the Programme of Action for the Liberation of Zimbabwe and Namibia, adopted by the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia, as well as the Lagos Declaration for Action against Apartheid, adopted by the World Conference for Action against Apartheid;
- 3. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power which deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;
- 4. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the entrenchment of colonial domination over the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories of southern Africa constitute a major obstacle to political independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;
- 5. Condemns all activities of foreign economic and other interests operating in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and South Africa and declares that their collaboration with the racist minority regimes is detrimental to the interests of the oppressed people and impedes the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;
- 6. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to monitor closely the situation in other Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples and their speedy accession to independence and that those peoples are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

7. Condemns all those countries which continue to maintain political, diplomatic, economic, trade, military, nuclear and other relations with the regimes in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in particular the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, the Federal Republic of

Germany, France, Japan, Belgium, Israel and Italy;

8. Strongly condemns the collusion of France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel and the United States with South Africa in the nuclear field, and calls upon all other Governments to continue to refrain from supplying the racist minority regime of South Africa, directly or indirectly, with installations that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclearmaterials, reactors or military equipment;

9. Calls once again upon all Governments which have not yet done so to take legislative, administrative of other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Africa, which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments which run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

10. Requests all States to refrain from making any investments in, or extending loans to, the minority racist regimes in southern Africa and to refrain from any agreements or measures to promote trade or other economic relations with them;

11. Expresses its conviction that the scope of the sanctions adopted against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia should be expanded to cover all the measures contemplated in Article 41 of the Charter and calls upon the Security Council to consider adopting appropriate measures to this end;

12. Condemns all violations of the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council against the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, as well as the continued failure of certain Member States to enforce those sanctions, as being contrary to the obligations assumed by them under Article 25 of the Charter;

13. Strongly condemns the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to Southern Rhodesia by United Kingdom oil companies which, by that deliberate act, are circumventing United Nations sanctions and strengthening the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

14. Deplores the complicity of successive Governments of the United Kingdom in the violation of United Nations sanctions by United Kingdom oil companies, as exposed in the Bingham report on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

15. Condemns those oil-producing or oil-exporting countries which supply crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regime of South Africa and demands that they cease forthwith all exports of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regimes in southern Africa and take the necessary measures against oil companies which, in violation of United Nations resolutions on sanctions, continue to deliver oil to those regimes;

16. Commends the new Government of Iran for severing diplomatic, military, economic, trade and other links with the racist regime of South Africa and, particularly, for enforcing effectively the oil embargo against that regime;

17. Requests all States to take effective measures to end the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military supplies and equipment, to the regimes which use such assistance to repress the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements:

18. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia by South African and other foreign economic interests, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, is illegal and contributes to the maintenance of the illegal occupation regime;

19. Strongly condemns South Africa for its continued exploitation and plundering of the natural resources of Namibia in complete disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namib-ian people;

20. Calls once again upon all States to discontinue all economic, financial or trade relations with South Africa concerning Namibia and to refrain from entering into economic, financial or other relations with South Africa, acting on behalf of or concerning Namibia, which may lend support to its continued illegal occupation of that Territory;

21. Strongly condemns the racist minority regime of South Africa which, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and in open contravention of its specific obligations under Article 25 of the Charter, continues to collaborate with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, and calls upon the Security Council to implement the provisions of the present resolution by imposing economic sanctions against South Africa, including an oil embargo and the withdrawal of investments from that country;

22. Invites all Governments and organizations within the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure in particular that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

23. Calls upon the administering Powers to abolish every discriminatory and unjust wage system prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pilaging of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign monopolies and the support they render to the colonialist and racist regimes;

25. Endorses the proposal of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Monrovia from 6 to 20 July 1979, to convene jointly with the United Nations an international conference in 1980 to mobilize world public opinion in support of the effective application of economic and other sanctions against South Africa;

26. Appeals to all international non-governmental organizations to continue their campaign to mobilize international public opinion for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against the Pretoria and Salisbury regimes;

27. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued during 1979 to grant scholarships for education and training to persons from Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) and territories formerly under Portuguese administration. Awards of scholarships to inhabitants of former Portuguese territories were discontinued in 1976 following independence, but scholarships granted earlier were continued until the completion of courses for which they had been granted.

The Secretary-General's 1979 report to the General Assembly on the progress of the Programme covered the period from 1 November 1978 to 30 September 1979. Contributions and pledges from 45 States totalled $3,690,346.

In addition, the following 21 States had offered scholarships for study in their countries: Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Israel, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the USSR.

As at 30 September 1979, the total number of scholarship holders was 1,560. There were 37 from Angola, 10 from Cape Verde, 33 from Guinea-Bissau, 2 from Mozambique, 232 from Namibia, 9 from Sao Tome and Principe, 583 from South Africa and 654 from Southern Rhodesia.

On 21 November, the Assembly adopted without objection resolution 34/31 by which it requested the Secretary-General to complete arrangements, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, for an early evaluation of the Programme. It encouraged the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee to continue close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and other scholarship donors to maximize benefits. Recognizing the need for a substantial increase in contributions in order to meet the level of demand, the Assembly appealed to all States, organizations and individuals for financial support. (For further details, see p. 266; for page reference to text of resolution 34/31, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Questions concerning individual territories

The following pages give accounts of the decisions taken on individual territories in 1979 by the General Assembly and its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. (See other chapters of this section for information on questions concerning Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.)

For each of the territories considered, the Special Committee and the Assembly had before them a working paper prepared by the Secretariat which contained information on previous actions and on the latest developments concerning the territory. The working paper and the Committee's report were submitted to the Assembly at its thirty-fourth session, which opened on 18 September 1979, where they were discussed mainly in the Fourth Committee.

In November, the Assembly adopted a series of decisions, described below, regarding the various territories.

American Samoa

The Special Committee, on 9 August 1979, approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning American Samoa—administered by the United States—and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

The Committee expressed its appreciation for the co-operation of the administering power in participating in its work, enabling it to conduct a more informed and meaningful examination of the territory. The Committee noted with interest the establishment of a 12-member second temporary commission to study the future political status of the territory, and noted that a preliminary report was expected to be completed by August 1979.

The Committee was of the opinion that the administering power was obligated to carry out a thorough political education programme to ensure that the people of American Samoa were made fully aware of their right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration. It called upon the administering power, taking into account the expressed wishes of those people, to expedite decolonization in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration.

The Committee noted with interest that the territory's first five-year economic development plan had been drafted, focusing on an over-all economic development strategy designed to diversify the economy; the planning documents concerned economic development, land use and housing. It urged the administering power, with the co-operation of the territory's Government, to safeguard the people's right to enjoy their natural resources by taking measures to guarantee their right to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development.

Recalling the positive attitude of the United States on the question of receiving United Nations visiting missions, the Committee reiterated the hope that the administering power would accept a mission to the territory in the near future.

Following its consideration of the chapter on American Samoa of the Special Committee's report, the General Assembly approved the chapter and reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of American Samoa to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration. It also reaffirmed its conviction that questions of territorial size, geographical location and limited resources should not delay implementation of the Declaration, and it called upon the administering power, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration.

The Assembly urged the administering power to continue its efforts to ensure that the culture and identity of the people continued to be reflected in the Government and administration of the territory and preserved to the fullest extent.

The Assembly also called upon the administering power to strengthen and diversify the economy and work out assistance and economic development programmes. It requested the administering power to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations in accelerating progress in the national life of the territory. The Assembly urged that power, with the cooperation of the freely elected authorities and representatives, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people to enjoy their natural resources by taking measures to guarantee their right to own and dispose of those resources and to control their future development.

The Assembly also urged the administering power to continue fostering close co-operation with neighbouring island communities and requested the Committee to continue to seek the best ways to implement the Declaration with respect to American Samoa, including the dispatch of a mission in consultation with the administering power, and to report in 1980.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 34/35, adopted on 21 November without objection. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 1 November. The sponsors were Australia, Denmark, Grenada, Haiti, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania.

During the discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United States said that it regularly transmitted information on the territory to the Special Committee. The future political status commission, it added, had concluded that, for the time being, American Samoa should retain its existing status and continue to be administered by the United States, with some modifications.

Belize

The Special Committee took up the question of Belize on 16 August 1979 and, at the suggestion of the Chairman, decided without objection to consider the item in 1980, subject to any directives from the General Assembly at its 1979 session.

On 21 November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted resolution 34/38, by a recorded vote of 134 to 0, with 8 abstentions. In so doing, the Assembly took note of the part concerning Belize of the Political Declaration adopted by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana, Cuba, in September 1979, in particular a statement by which the Conference reiterated its unconditional support for the Belizean people's right to selfdetermination, independence and territorial integrity and condemned all pressure or threats to prevent full exercise of that right. Cuba had transmitted the Declaration to the Assembly by a letter of 1 October.

The Assembly reaffirmed, by the resolution, the principles of the Declaration on granting independence and recognized the special responsibility of the United Kingdom, the administering power, in this regard. Noting with regret the failure of the parties to settle their differences in accordance with previous Assembly resolutions, it urged the United Kingdom, acting in close consultation with the Government of Belize, and Guatemala to continue efforts to conclude their negotiations without prejudice to the rights of the Belizean people, and to consult as appropriate with other specially interested States in the region.

It requested the Governments concerned to report in 1980 on steps taken to enable the people of Belize to exercise freely and without fear their right to self-determination and an early and secure independence. It called on the parties to refrain from use of pressure, threats or force to prevent the full exercise of those rights by the Government and people of Belize. Further, the Assembly urged all States to respect those rights and to render all assistance necessary for their exercise. Finally, it requested the Special Committee to remain seized of the question.

The text had been approved by the Fourth Committee on 5 November by a recorded vote taken at the request of Guatemala—of 123 to 1, with 7 abstentions, as sponsored by 50 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). Guatemala had first proposed amendments to replace a number of provisions of the 50-power text; all were rejected by recorded votes. It would have replaced the preambular paragraph by which the Assembly recognized the United Kingdom's special responsibility for Belizean self-determination by one indicating that the United Kingdom and Guatemala, which had for years been engaged in a territorial dispute, reiterated their decision to arrive at an early arrangement through direct negotiation as agreed by them and through recognition of the rights and vital interests of the parties involved (rejected by 12 votes in favour to 98 against, with 15 abstentions), and would have replaced the preambular paragraph by which the Assembly noted with regret the continuing failure of the parties to settle their differences by one deploring the failure to reach a definitive arrangement settling the dispute, which impeded good relations and international co-operation to develop the region (12 votes in favour to 102, with 14 abstentions).

Guatemala proposed to replace all the operative paragraphs with provisions by which the Assembly would have:

- reaffirmed the need for an early settlement of the dispute, through recognition of the parties' rights and taking into account the vital interests of the Belizean people, in conformity with the Declaration (rejected by 10 votes in favour to 104 against, with 15 abstentions);
- urged the United Kingdom, in close consultation with Belize, and Guatemala to pursue negotiations vigorously to resolve their differences as early as possible, without prejudice to the vital interests of the people of Belize, and promote the peace and security of the region (11 votes in favour to 105, with 14 abstentions);
- asked the United Kingdom and Guatemala to inform it in 1980 concerning the arrangements arrived at, with a view to the early and definitive settlement of the dispute (12 votes in favour to 104, with 14 abstentions);

— called on the parties concerned and all Member States to avoid the use of force or threat against the people of Belize and collaborate in the early settlement of the question (11 votes in favour to 104, with 13 abstentions); and — asked the Special Committee to remain seized of the question and assist in the negotiations however it could until a settlement was arrived at, with full recognition and protection of the vital interests of the Belizean people (12 votes in favour to 103, with 12 abstentions).

Argentina, speaking in explanation of vote in the Fourth Committee, said that in its view the Guatemalan amendments had not contradicted the original draft text but rather emphasized one aspect of the question: bilateral negotiations between Guatemala and the United Kingdom.

Following the vote in the Assembly, Guatemala explained that it had not participated in that vote and had rejected the text in the Fourth Committee because the resolution reiterated similar texts of the past which had not achieved results and would only make the settlement of the problem more difficult. Ecuador stated that it had cast a vote in favour because it recognized the principle of self-determination without prejudice to the principle of possession.

During discussions in the Fourth Committee, the United Kingdom stated that its commitment to bring Belize to independence remained as strong as ever, but no progress had been made since rejection of its 1978 proposals. ¹² Elections in May 1979 in the United Kingdom and in November in Belize had delayed the resumption of negotiations between Guatemala and the United Kingdom, although contact had been maintained between the two Governments. It was hoped that negotiations could resume in 1980, and the United Kingdom would consider any constructive proposals by Guatemala, provided that they were acceptable to the Government and people of Belize.

Guatemala reiterated its view that Belize was legally a part of Guatemala and its population largely Guatemalan in origin. No decision on self-determination and independence for Belize could be taken until the legal dispute between the United Kingdom and Guatemala was settled. According to a Memorandum of Understanding signed by the United Kingdom and Belizean Government officials in 1978, Guatemala said, the Anglo-Guatemalan dispute was to be put above party politics and its solution treated as a national objective. Guatemala was ready to consider constructive proposals to achieve solutions that were just and equitable for all parties.

On 30 October, the Committee heard a statement by C. L. B. Rogers, Deputy Premier of Belize, who expressed regret that, despite Assembly resolutions, no solution had been reached to the problem of Belize. During the past year, the territorial Government had not been invited to participate in negotiations between Guatemala and the United Kingdom; Guatemala continued to attempt to annex part of the territory of Belize, despite international recognition of Belize's right to self-determination, independence and territorial integrity. Belize was ready to move to independence either as a result of the settlement of the Anglo-Guatemalan disputeprovided that its territorial integrity was recognized—or under a security arrangement with all its territory preserved. The United Kingdom had given assurances that any proposed settlement would be put to the Government and people of Belize in a referendum.

Jamaica said that negotiations had reached an impasse. Territorial claims by Guatemala against Belize were incompatible with a constructive and just resolution of the problem; the United Kingdom should therefore proceed with the decolonization of Belize and the granting of independence to its people. Guyana said that the impasse was a source of insecurity and anxiety to the Belizean people, particularly taken in conjunction with a recent statement by Guatemala in the Assembly urging a return of the territory of Belize to it by the United Kingdom. Guyana welcomed the willingness of the United Kingdom and Guatemala to negotiate and considered that a basis for settlement existed; cession of land had already been excluded from the negotiations.

Brunei

With regard to Brunei, the Special Committee, on 16 August 1979, at the suggestion of its Chairman, decided without objection to consider the item at its next session, subject to any directives from the General Assembly, and to transmit the documentation directly to the Assembly to facilitate consideration of the item.

On 23 February, the United Kingdom, in a letter to the Secretary-General, transmitted a note verbale of the same date which reported the signature on 7 January of a Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation between the United Kingdom and Brunei. Under that Treaty, which was to come into effect on 31 December 1983, the arrangements by which the United Kingdom had responsibility for Brunei's external affairs and had a consultative commitment with Brunei in the event of external attack or threat of attack would come to an end.

On 21 November, by decision 34/413, the Assembly decided without vote to defer consideration of the question of Brunei to its 1980 session and requested the Special Committee to continue keeping the situation in the territory under review and to report on it. The Fourth Committee had approved the decision, without vote, on 6 November, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

Cocos (Keeling) Islands

On 1 August 1979, the Special Committee adopted without objection the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, together with a consensus statement contained in the report. Australia, as administering power, took part in the work of the Committee.

Based on the Special Committee's statement and prepared in consultation with that Committee's Chairman, a similar consensus statement on the question of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands was approved without vote by the Fourth Committee on 1 November. This was adopted by the General Assembly, without objection, as decision 34/409 on 21 November.

By these consensus statements, the continuing co-operation of Australia in reporting on the implementation of the Declaration was noted with appreciation. Particularly welcomed was its invitation to the Special Committee to send a visiting mission to the islands in 1980 to obtain first-hand information on the situation there. The commitment of the administering power to the advancement of the people of the territory as well as its overriding objective to bring about, as speedily as possible, conditions to enable the people to exercise freely their right to selfdetermination was also noted with appreciation. In this regard, the approach that it must be for the people of the territory to determine freely their own future political status in conformity with the Declaration was endorsed. Noting that, during the period under review, significant developments had occurred in the territory, in particular the measures taken to establish the Cocos (Keeling) Islands Council and the Cocos Islands Co-operative Society, the hope was expressed that those developments would lead to the implementation of the Declaration.

The Assembly, by its decision, also asked the Special Committee, in continued co-operation with the administering power, to seek the best ways to implement the Declaration, in the light of the information to be provided by Australia in 1980, and to report thereon.

East Timor

The Special Committee considered the question of East Timor on 16 August 1979. Portugal, the administering power, participated in the consideration of the item. The Committee granted a request for a hearing to Roque F. Rodrigues, member of the Central Committee of the Frente Revolucionária de Timor Leste Independente (FRETILIN), who made a statement. Indonesia expressed strong reservations with regard to the granting of a hearing to the FRETILIN representative.

At the same meeting, the Committee decided, without objection, to continue its consideration of the item at its next session, subject to any directives from the General Assembly, and to transmit to the Assembly all relevant documentation to facilitate consideration of the question.

On 21 November, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, the Assembly adopted a resolution by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of East Timor to self-determination and independence and declared that those people must be enabled freely to determine their own future, under United Nations auspices.

The Assembly expressed deepest concern at the suffering of the people of East Timor as a result of the situation there. It requested the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to render all possible assistance to the people of East Timor, particularly to children and those seeking to leave for another country for family reunion, and called upon all concerned to facilitate the entry into the territory of international relief aid.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to follow and report on the implementation of this resolution.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 34/40, adopted by a recorded vote of 62 to 31, with 45 abstentions. The Fourth Committee had approved the text on 2 November by a recorded vote of 55 to 26, with 42 abstentions. The resolution was presented by Uganda on behalf of its sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Barbados, Benin, Cape Verde, the Congo, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, and Uganda.

Explaining its vote, Indonesia stated its categorical and total rejection of the resolution, which in its view constituted unwarranted interference in its internal affairs. Indonesia reaffirmed that the people of East Timor had exercised their right to self-determination and their decision for integration with Indonesia was final and irrevocable. References to the need for humanitarian aid were in its view incorrect and biased. Indonesia said it welcomed any international humanitarian assistance with the coordination of its Government.

Explaining its negative vote, India said that the withdrawal of the colonial power was followed by a decision of the people of East Timor on their future existence and that exercise of self-determination had been completed in July 1976. Papua New Guinea stated that nothing further was required in the decolonization process in East Timor, which, in its view, was an integral part of Indonesia. Explaining its negative vote, Australia reiterated its position that East Timor's incorporation into Indonesia was the reality on which any consideration of the matter had to be based and felt that the resolution served no practical purpose.

Belgium, which abstained, noted that a direct political dialogue between Portugal and Indonesia was required. France said that the resolution appeared to ignore the reality of the situation but, because it also referred to the humanitarian aspects of the problem, France had abstained rather than oppose the text. Sweden explained that it had voted for the resolution only to express its support for the humanitarian aspects. Canada, explaining its abstention, said that the resolution focused on a general principle at the expense of practical relevance and realities, and prospects for effective action were nil.

During the debate in the Fourth Committee, the following petitioners made statements: Elías de Jesus Aniceto of the Movimento Nacional para a Libertação e Independência de Timor Dili; Bruce P. Cameron of Americans for Democratic Action; Noam Chomsky, a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, United States; Roger Clark of the International League for Human Rights; John Dowd of the International Commission of Jurists, Australian Section; Father Francisco M. Fernandes of the Comissão dos Refugiados de Timor Oriental; Paulo Pires of the União Democrática Timorense; José Ramos-Horta of FRETILIN; and Elizabeth Traube, an assistant professor at Wesleyan University, United States.

The Chairman of the Fourth Committee received four letters in October from Indonesia, expressing its strong opposition to the participation of the petitioners in the Committee's deliberations. Also before the Committee was a letter dated 15 October from Mozambique, transmitting to the Chairman a note of 9 October from Mr. Rodrigues of FRETILIN, giving information about the organization and its position on East Timor.

Portugal stated in the debate that its sole purpose had been, and still was, to safeguard the legitimate rights and interests of the Timorese people. Portugal believed that the people of Timor were facing serious humanitarian problems. Specialized agencies and humanitarian bodies could provide invaluable assistance; an international movement of solidarity could also be organized to relieve the material hardships of the people. In Portugal's view, a real solution to this problem could be found only by applying a legal and political formula that would take genuine account of the legitimate rights, interests and true aspirations, freely expressed, of the people of East Timor and that would be acceptable to the international community.

Indonesia reaffirmed its position that the situation in East Timor was no longer a question of decolonization, since that had been completed on 17 July 1976 when the people of the territory decided, through the People's Representative Assembly, to become independent through integration with Indonesia. The province of East Timor had made substantial progress in its development. Indonesia stated that any further discussion of the question of East Timor in the Committee would constitute interference in its internal affairs.

Member States expressing support for the Indonesian position included Bangladesh, India, Japan, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, Suriname and Thailand. India stated that East Timor had exercised its right of self-determination and had chosen the form of independence it considered the most appropriate. Malaysia expressed the view that there was no justification for any discussion of the matter, and that such a discussion was interference in the internal affairs of Indonesia. It said that conditions in most of East Timor had returned to normal and that the decision of the people to integrate with Indonesia had been taken freely through consultations in conformity with traditional institutions of the territory. The Philippines hoped that, at the request of or with the agreement of Indonesia, UNICEF and UNHCR as well as specialized agencies would provide the necessary assistance to the people of East Timor.

The right of the people of East Timor to self-determination in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Charter, the Declaration and other resolutions was supported by a large number of Member States, including Angola, Barbados, Benin, Brazil, Cape Verde, the Congo, Costa Rica, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mexico, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Portugal, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Uganda. Haiti said that the question of East Timor was one of the most important decolonization problems before the Committee since it was a case where Charter principles had not been respected. Mozambique said that the people of East Timor were slowly dying of starvation and malaria, and the United Nations should take appropriate measures to force Indonesia to withdraw so that the decolonization process could be concluded. Mexico stated that East Timor should be allowed to determine its own future and suggested a plebiscite under United Nations auspices. Senegal felt that the United Nations should provide for the possibility of a referendum to determine the needs of the population.

According to Barbados, Indonesia was attempting to legitimize an act of annexation by crushing every semblance of resistance. Uganda stated that it rejected the annexation of East Timor by Indonesia, which it considered to be totally unrelated to the decolonization process. Ghana said that the international community could in no circumstances accept the occupation as a fait accompli. Ghana could not recognize a situation brought about by the use of force. Benin supported the struggle of the people of East Timor and condemned the Indonesian policy of expansion and annexation.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee took up the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on 16 August 1979. The Committee decided, without objection, to transmit the working paper prepared by the Secretariat to the General Assembly in order to facilitate consideration of the item and, subject to any directives from the Assembly, to consider the territory again in 1980.

In addition to the Committee's report, the Assembly, at its regular 1979 session, had before it identic letters dated 19 January 1979 from Argentina and the United Kingdom to the Secretary-General, forwarding the text of a joint communique of 20 December 1978 which stated that representatives of the two Governments had participated in a third round of negotiations at Geneva from 18 to 20 December 1978 on the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, in accordance with the terms of reference announced on 26 April 1977.13 They had also reached agreement in principle on the framework for a system of cooperation for scientific research activities in South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands.

By letters dated 28 June 1979 from the two Governments, the Secretary-General was informed that representatives of the two States had held a fourth round of negotiations in New York from 21 to 23 March and would meet again at a time and place to be decided upon.

On 21 November, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of the question until 1980 and requested the Special Committee to continue keeping the situation under review. Decision 34/414 embodying this action was adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text, also without vote, on 6 November, on an oral proposal of its Chairman.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee considered the question of Gibraltar on 16 August 1979. The Committee decided, without objection, to transmit the working paper prepared by the Secretariat to the General Assembly and, subject to any directives from the Assembly, to take up the question in 1980.

On 6 November, the Chairman of the Fourth Committee introduced a consensus statement on Gibraltar. The text was based on previous Assembly decisions¹⁴ in regard to Gibraltar and had been prepared in the light of consultations with the Special Committee. The Fourth Committee approved the text without objection on that date.

On 21 November, the Assembly, also without objection, adopted the text, as representing the consensus of its Members, as decision 34/412. The Assembly thereby noted that, since 1974, talks—which were continuing—had been held between Spain and the United Kingdom on the question of Gibraltar. It urged both Governments to make possible without delay, taking due account of current circumstances, the initiation of the negotiations envisaged in the consensus statement adopted on 14 December 1973, is in order to reach a lasting solution to the problem, in the light of Assembly resolutions and in the spirit of the Charter.

Gilbert Islands

On 22 June 1979, the Special Committee endorsed without objection the conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the Gilbert Islands. The United Kingdom, the administering power, took part in the work of the Committee.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that the Gilbert Islands would achieve independence on 12 July 1979, as the State of Kiribati, in accordance with the Declaration on granting independence. The Committee commended the administering power for facilitating independence, noting that, at a Constitutional Conference held at London in 1978, it was decided that the territory should proceed to independence as currently constituted. Aware that not all outstanding issues relating to the island of Banaba had been resolved, the Committee welcomed the decision of the Conference to make provision for safe-guarding the rights and interests of the Banaban community, and noted with interest the continuing efforts of the Government of the Gilbert Islands and the Banaban community to resolve their remaining differences prior to independence. It noted with appreciation the continuing contribution in this matter of the Prime Minister of Fiji. In the light of the imminent exhaustion of the phosphate deposits on Banaba, the Committee reiterated the need for priority diversification of the economy of the Gilbert Islands.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the decision of the United Kingdom to provide until the end of 1982 up to £15.5 million in development aid, £5.3 million in special financial assistance to support the budget and continuing aid to the Government of Kiribati in the form of a technical co-operation programme. The Committee also welcomed the various other assistance programmes being rendered by Australia and New Zealand, and noted with satisfaction that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had increased its 1977-1981 assistance programme.

The Committee warmly congratulated the people and Government of the Gilbert Islands upon their decision to move to independence and wished them peace and prosperity.

Guam

On 31 May 1979, the United States, the administering power of Guam, informed the Chairman of the Special Committee that on 9 May the Guam Legislature had set a new date of 4 August for a referendum on the territory's draft constitution, and renewed its invitation to send a United Nations visiting mission to observe the referendum. On 25 July, the Committee decided on the composition of a three-member mission (Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, and Trinidad and Tobago). The Committee agreed, on 16 August, to take up the mission's report directly in plenary meetings. The United States took part in the Committee's consideration of that report.

The mission reported that it had visited the territory between 30 July and 7 August. It had held discussions with elected and non-elected leaders, groups of citizens and individuals across the island. It had also attended a political education meeting and, on referendum day, had ascertained that arrangements were satisfactory and in accordance with electoral law.

Throughout its stay, the mission had heard very strong evidence that the current 1950 Organic Act was considered unsatisfactory by the people of Guam, who felt the Act did not give them enough say in vital areas of economic development and possession of land by the United States Government and military.

Among its recommendations, the mission suggested expansion of agriculture and tourism, negotiations on air landing rights, currently controlled by the United States Civil Aeronautics Board, and encouragement of a revival of the Chamorro language and culture.

The mission also recommended in its report that, in view of the landslide rejection of the draft constitution (80 per cent against) and its finding that the political options had been insufficiently explained to the Guamanians, they should be given an opportunity by the administering power to choose their future political

It also recommended repeal or amendment of the Jones Act, which limited waterborne transportation to and from Guam, in the best interests of the people, and action by the administering power to enable Guamanians to regain possession of land currently held by United States federal and military authorities and not used by them. Finally, it recommended that Guamanians be actively encouraged to strengthen and diversify their economy and that the United States take steps to ensure that the economy did not remain heavily dependent on military bases.

By a decision of 5 November, the Committee adopted a set of conclusions and recommendations concerning Guam, prepared on the basis of consultations with members of the mission.

Australia believed that the administering power had discharged its responsibilities in Guam creditably, including an effective process of political education that had made the Guamanians aware of their future options. The USSR felt that the essential conclusion to be drawn from the mission's report was that the administering power had not discharged its obligations regarding the implementation of the Declaration.

In its decision, the Committee expressed its appreciation for the co-operation given by the administering power, in particular the invitation to send a mission to observe the constitutional referendum. The Committee took note of the mission's report and of its conclusions and recommendations, noting that the draft constitution had been rejected by the people of Guam. It also noted the mission's findings that the options open had not been sufficiently explained to the people. Mindful of Charter and Declaration principles, the Committee recalled that the administering power had the obligation to ensure that the people of Guam were kept fully informed of their inalienable right to selfdetermination and independence.

The Committee recognized that the presence of military bases could constitute a factor impeding implementation of the Declaration and reaffirmed its strong conviction that they should not prevent the people from exercising their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration and with Charter purposes and principles.

The Committee reaffirmed the administering power's responsibility for the territory's economic and social development, called on it to strengthen and diversify the economy, urged it to continue to safeguard and guarantee the people's rights to their natural resources and control their future development, and asked it to protect their property rights.

On 21 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, adopted a resolution, by which it approved the Special Committee's report on Guam and reaffirmed the inalienable right of its people to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration. It called upon the United States, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people, to continue to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration with respect to Guam and to ensure preservation of the identity and cultural heritage of those people.

Taking note of the mission's report, observations, conclusions and recommendations, it expressed its appreciation to the members of the mission for their constructive work and to the administering power and the Government and people of Guam for their co-operation and assistance to the mission.

The Assembly called on the administering power to strengthen and diversify the economy of Guam, to work out assistance and economic development programmes and to take the necessary actions to enable the inhabitants to regain possession of unutilized land held by the federal authorities and the military.

The Assembly recalled previous resolutions concerning military bases in colonial and nonself-governing territories, recognized that the presence of such bases could constitute a factor impeding implementation of the Declaration and reaffirmed its strong conviction that such presence in Guam should not prevent the exercise of the people's inalienable right to selfdetermination and independence in accordance with the Declaration and the Charter. It urged the administering power, in co-operation with the freely elected authorities and representatives of the people of Guam, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the territory to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures to guarantee the people's right to own and dispose of those resources and to control their future development.

The Assembly also requested the administering power to continue to enlist the assistance of United Nations organizations in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of Guam. Finally, it requested the Special Committee to continue to examine this question, including the possible dispatch of a further mission to Guam, and to report in 1980.

The decisions of the Assembly were embodied in resolution 34/39, adopted without vote. The Assembly's Fourth Committee had approved the text unanimously on 19 November. The sponsors were Australia, the Dominican Republic, Japan, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines and Samoa.

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, China said that it opposed the establishment of military bases and installations on foreign soil by any super-power. China, as well as Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Iran, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mozambique, the USSR and Viet Nam, expressed reservations on the paragraphs which referred to military bases.

New Hebrides

The Special Committee, on 1 August 1979, in adopting without objection the conclusions and recommendations of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning the New Hebrides -a condominium administered by France and the United Kingdom—commended the continued co-operation extended to it by the administering powers. It welcomed their commitment, repeated in statements and in a joint letter of 26 February 1979, to bring the territory to independence by 1980. The letter informed the Secretary-General that the various parties in the condominium had decided to form a Government of National Unity, in place since 21 December 1978, and listed the Government officials. The Committee noted with interest this important political development in particular. It hoped that the new Government would be able to work closely and loyally, regardless of past differences, views or interests of its components.

Noting measures taken to implement needed administrative reforms, the Committee considered that special attention needed to be focused on the unification and nationalization of three former services—the British and French National Services and the Joint (Condominium) Services—and on the transfer of responsibilities to the New Hebrideans. The Committee emphasized the importance of a truly national and representative public service. It considered that in the past the rate of localization of posts had been less than satisfactory, particularly with regard to the more senior positions.

The Committee, while welcoming the substantial growth in most sectors of the economy in the period under review, noted that the economy nevertheless continued to be based mainly on subsistence gardening and copra production. It therefore urged the administering powers to strengthen the economy and work out assistance and economic development programmes, thereby better preparing the territory for independence. It called on them to safeguard and ensure the people's right to own and dispose of their land and natural resources, including fisheries, and to establish and maintain control over future development.

The Committee urged the administering powers to exert every effort to co-operate with the people of the New Hebrides to promote a unitary system of education and to provide greater opportunities for higher education.

The Committee noted with interest that the administering powers were giving very careful and positive consideration to inviting a United Nations mission to visit the New Hebrides. It urged them to ensure that such a mission would visit the territory before the final phase of the self-determination process to evaluate the situation and, from discussions with all sections of political opinion there, to ascertain that the wishes and aspirations of the New Hebrideans were being fully respected in the ultimate stages of decolonization.

By a joint letter of 24 October, the administering powers informed the Secretary-General that the territorial Government had agreed on the terms of a constitution on 19 September and set 14 November 1979 for elections to a new representative assembly. They invited a United Nations mission to observe that election process.

On 2 November 1979, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 34/10 concerning the territory, on a recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved it unanimously on 31 October. The sponsors were Australia, Denmark, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Mali, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania.

By this resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the territorial integrity and national unity of the New Hebrides. It requested the administering powers to continue to strengthen the territory's economy and carry out assistance and economic development programmes in the critical period leading to independence, expressing the hope that such assistance would be continued after independence. The Assembly requested the administering powers to continue to enlist the assistance of United Nations organizations in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of the territory. It urged them, in co-operation with the Government of the New Hebrides, to safeguard the inalienable right of the territory's people to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures to guarantee the rights of those people to own and dispose of those resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development.

The Assembly welcomed the joint commitment of the administering powers to the independence of the New Hebrides and noted their invitation to dispatch a mission to observe the elections there. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, after consultation with the Chairman of the Fourth Committee, to appoint such a mission.

The Assembly expressed the hope that the New Hebrides would move towards independence in a smooth and speedy fashion.

The mission, composed of representatives of Australia, Fiji, the Ivory Coast and the United Republic of Cameroon, visited the territory from 11 to 19 November. While there, it split into two groups to travel from the capital to other main islands in the archipelago (Espíritu Santo, Malekula and Tanna).

On 13 December, the Chairman of the mission orally reported to the plenary Assembly on the mission, setting forth its general observations and conclusions. He reported that the mission had been impressed by the absence of tension in the areas visited, as well as by the orderly nature of the proceedings at the polling stations and the political awareness of the people. It had concluded that the people of the New Hebrides clearly understood the issues involved.

The mission considered that the elections had been fairly and freely conducted and was satisfied that the results reflected the will of the people. The mission had been informed that a decision on the timing of independence would be taken by the newly elected Government; the preferred time seemed to be the middle of 1980.

The mission adopted its report to the Assembly on 18 December.

St. Helena

The Special Committee, on 22 June 1979, approved without objection the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning St. Helena, together with a consensus statement contained in that report. The United Kingdom, the administering power, took part in the work of the Committee.

On 1 November, the Fourth Committee approved without vote a similar consensus statement, prepared in consultation with the Chairman of the Special Committee and based on that Committee's statement. On 21 November, this text was adopted, without objection, by the General Assembly as decision 34/411, representing the consensus of its Members.

By these consensus statements, the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration was reaffirmed.

The United Kingdom's commitment to respect the wishes of the territory's people in their advance towards self-determination was noted, and it was reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering power and the international community constituted an important means of developing the economic potential of the territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize goals set forth in the Charter. In this connexion, the administering power's commitment to continue to foster the social, economic and educational development of St. Helena, in close co-operation with the people's elected representatives, was noted, as was the positive attitude of that power towards visiting missions.

The Assembly, by its decision, also asked the Special Committee Chairman to continue consultations on the possibility of sending a mission to St. Helena, as appropriate, and asked the Committee, in continued co-operation with the administering power, to seek and report on the best ways of implementing the Declaration with respect to the territory.

Tokelau

The Special Committee, on 22 June 1979, approved the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories "concerning Tokelau, administered by New Zealand, and endorsed an amended version of its conclusions and recommendations. New Zealand took part in the Committee's work at the two meetings concerned.

The Committee, by the conclusions and recommendations, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Tokelau to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on granting independence. It noted with appreciation the willingness of the administering power to maintain close co-operation with the Committee and the United Nations in the exercise of its responsibilities towards Tokelau and its sensitive approach in fostering an awareness among the Tokelauan people of the possibilities open to them. The Committee noted with satisfaction that the administering power had instituted, in consultation with the people of the territory, a multifaceted political education programme designed to alert them to the avenues of constitutional development open to them. It welcomed the fact that, in accordance with the programme, the Tokelauans were moving to take responsibility for their own affairs, in accordance with their own wishes. The Committee considered that the promotion of an increased interrelationship with newly independent nations in the region was of particular value as the people of Tokelau considered their future. It noted with satisfaction that the administering power had assured those people of continuing administrative, financial and technical assistance, should they desire to change their current status.

The Committee noted continuing work in agricultural improvement, fisheries exploitation and revenue development to ascertain whether the territory's economy could be more viable. It reaffirmed the administering power's primary responsibility for the economic and social development of the territory and reiterated its call on that power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to continue to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the rights of the people of Tokelau to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development. The Committee took note of recent legislative steps taken by the administering power to protect the marine resources of the territory and noted its affirmation that the benefits therefrom would accrue to the people of the territory.

The Committee noted continuing efforts to improve social and educational facilities. Mindful of the number of students who continued their education overseas, the Committee reiterated its hope that suitable arrangements would be made to provide secondary educational facilities for Tokelauans. The Committee reiterated its appreciation to the specialized agencies and other organizations for their assistance to Tokelau and hoped it would continue. It was of the opinion that the possibility of sending a second mission to the territory at an appropriate time should be kept under review, taking into account the wishes of the people.

On 21 November, the General Assembly adopted a consensus statement concerning To-kelau, by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration. It noted that, accordingly, the policy of the administering power would be guided by the wishes of the people concerning their future relationship with New Zealand and commended that power for its continued co-operation and efforts to foster an increased awareness of the avenues of constitutional development open to the Tokelauans.

The Assembly noted the various steps taken in the economic and administrative fields to develop the territory and provide an administrative instrument responsible to the wishes and needs of the people. It noted that the administering power had assured the people of continuing assistance in the event they desired to change their status. It further noted the continuing efforts of that power to safeguard and guarantee the rights of the people of Tokelau to all their natural resources and, in this regard, noted the recent legislative steps taken to protect marine resources as well as the affirmation of the administering power that the benefits would accrue to the people of the territory.

The Assembly again expressed its appreciation to the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, in particular UNDP, as well as to regional organizations, for their assistance to Tokelau and expressed the hope that it would continue. It drew the attention of United Nations organizations to its request of 1 December 1976¹⁶ to consider the methods and scale of their operations and ensure that they could respond appropriately to requirements of small and isolated territories.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to seek the best ways, in cooperation with the administering power, of implementing the Declaration with respect to Tokelau, including the possible dispatch of a further mission to the territory at an appropriate stage, and to report to the Assembly in 1980 on implementation of this consensus decision.

Decision 34/410, incorporating this consensus statement, was adopted, without objection, on a recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 1 November. The text had been prepared in consultation with the Special Committee Chairman and was based on that Committee's recommendations.

During the debate in the Fourth Committee, Tunisia emphasized the importance of missions in finding out the wishes of the population in regard to their future status. The inhabitants of Tokelau had communicated their apprehensions about a change in their political status to missions in which Tunisia had taken part.

United States Virgin Islands

On 7 and 8 August 1979, the Special Committee considered the question of the United States Virgin Islands, which had been referred to the Sub-Committee on Small Territories. On 8 August, the Committee adopted without objection the report of the Sub-Committee and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

The Committee noted with appreciation the continued participation of the United States, the administering power, in the Committee's discussion and expressed satisfaction at its willingness to receive visiting missions, considering that the possibility of sending one to the territory at an appropriate time should be kept under review. It noted also that it was United States policy to respect the wishes of the people of the United States Virgin Islands, that any status, including independence, was open to them, and that they continued to have the basic right to elect constitutional conventions to develop their own governmental framework. The Committee expressed the view that it was the administering power's obligation to carry out a thorough political education programme to ensure that the territory's people were fully aware of their right to self-determination and independence. In the Committee's view, the presence of United States naval facilities should not impede progress towards self-determination.

The Committee noted that despite fiscal difficulties there had been improvement in the territory's economy, with tourism leading the recovery and the manufacturing industry contributing to the expansion; however, it was concerned to note that this upturn had not resulted in a significant increase in public revenues. The Committee noted with interest the policy guidelines for economic development published early in 1979 by the territorial Government to promote growth commensurate with labour supply and infrastructure and to diversify the economy. It urged the administering power, in consultation with that Government, to achieve a stable and viable economy in the territory to guarantee the people's right to own and dispose of their natural resources and to control their future development.

On 21 November, the General Assembly adopted without objection resolution 34/36 on the United States Virgin Islands, by which it approved the Special Committee's report, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence, requested the United States to continue taking all necessary measures, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the territory, to enable the people to exercise fully their right to self-determination, and expressed the view that the presence of a United States naval facility should not impede progress towards self-determination. The Assembly also requested the United States to encourage discussion on the territory's political and constitutional status and to preserve the people's identity and cultural heritage.

The Assembly urged the administering power to safeguard the people's right to enjoy, own and dispose of their natural resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development. It stated that measures to promote economic development were important to the self-determination process and called upon the administering power, together with the freely elected territorial authorities, to take measures to achieve a viable and stable economy. The Assembly asked the United States to continue to enlist United Nations aid in developing the territory's economy.

The Special Committee was asked to continue examining the question and to report to the Assembly in 1980.

Resolution 34/36 was adopted on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 1 November. The sponsors were Australia, the Bahamas, Grenada, Haiti, Japan, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania.

During the discussion in the Fourth Committee, the United States mentioned that the people of the territory had rejected on 6 March 1979 a draft territorial constitution, drawn up by a constitutional convention and approved by the United States Congress late in 1978. However, the United States believed that the people would develop a document to meet their true aspirations. While aware of the need to solve the immediate problems of the United States Virgin Islands, the United States was also concerned with long-range objectives and would report to the Assembly in 1980 on its reassessment of its relationship with the territory.

Western Sahara

Communications (January–16 June)

During the first half of 1979, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of communications from Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco that dealt directly or indirectly with the question of Western Sahara.

By a letter dated 10 January, the representative of Morocco transmitted a letter of the previous day to the Council President from the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation who rejected accusations against his country, made in December 1978 by Algeria,17 that Morocco had violated its territorial waters by sending a military aircraft which dropped weapons and ammunition close to the Algerian coast.

He added that Algeria was trying to aggravate the tension in the region with the aim of extending its hegemony beyond its borders.

By a note verbale dated 29 January, the Algerian Mission to the United Nations transmitted a letter of the previous day from the Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Council President, reiterating the charges against Morocco, adding that on 26 January explosives placed by a Moroccan national had injured 17 persons in the town of Maghnia and that, subsequently, security services had discovered more explosives, grenades and a bomb placed or carried by individuals acting at the instigation of the Moroccan authorities.

On 8 February, the representative of Morocco transmitted the text of a letter of the same date from the Foreign Minister, in which he again denied the Algerian accusations and charged that Algerian authorities had armed and financed groups that had committed acts of aggression in Morocco between 9 and 13 January, when explosive devices were detonated or discovered, and on 28 January, when a group of mercenaries armed and trained by Algeria had infiltrated Morocco as far as the town of Tantan, causing a number of casualties and material damage. Annexed to the letter was the text of a letter which had previously been sent by the Moroccan Foreign Minister to the Algerian Foreign Minister concerning the latter incident.

On 16 February, Algeria transmitted the text of a message dated 15 February from its Foreign Minister addressed to the Moroccan Foreign Minister, stating that the war in Western Sahara between Moroccan forces and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Rio de Oro (Frente POLISARIO) was neither desired nor provoked by Algeria, which believed that the problem of Western Sahara was a genuine decolonization issue for which there could be no final settlement without the active participation and full support of the Saharan people and their legitimate representatives.

By a letter of 23 May, Mauritania informed the Secretary-General that it was prepared to implement two Assembly resolutions of 10 December 1975 on the question of the territory,¹⁸ study ways of achieving self-determination there and normalize relations with Algeria; it also said it favoured dialogue with POLISARIO.

On 11 June, Algeria transmitted to the Secretary-General a message addressed on 9 June by the President of Algeria to the President of the Sudan, then Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU). The Algerian President drew attention to dangers threatening the Maghreb following Morocco's decision to exercise an alleged right of hot pursuit. He reaffirmed that Algeria would oppose any infringements of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

A letter dated 13 June to the Secretary-General by Algeria's Minister for Foreign Affairs reiterated this position.

Also on 13 June, the representative of Morocco requested, in a letter to the President of the Security Council, a meeting to consider acts of aggression which he charged had been committed by Algeria against Morocco, stating that on the night of 31 May/1 June and on 4 June, Morocco had been subjected to two attacks by armed forces which came from and returned to Algeria. The first had been directed against a column of the Moroccan Royal Armed Forces which was advancing peacefully between the towns of Tantan and Tarfaya, and the second against the town of Assa. More than 25 people had been killed, several dozen wounded and extensive material damage had been caused.

By a letter of 14 June, the representative of Morocco transmitted to the Secretary-General two messages dated 2 and 4 June addressed to the President of the Sudan, the current OAU Chairman, by the King of Morocco, drawing attention to attacks on Moroccan territory. Morocco, he said, had decided to send the Secretary-General of OAU, who had been visiting Morocco for discussions at the time of the 4 June attack, to Algeria to inform the authorities of the gravity of the situation.

Morocco complained in a letter of 15 June to the President of the Security Council about further aggression in the Tantan region and reiterated its request for an urgent Council meeting.

In a reply dated 16 June to the Council President, Algeria denied charges made by Morocco and called the accusations groundless, adding that they were designed solely to direct the attention of the international community from the basic facts of the question of Western Sahara, which in reality was entirely a matter of decolonization.

Consideration by the Security Council (20-25 June)

In response to Morocco's requests of 13 and 15 June, the Security Council convened on 20 June and held four meetings.

The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Algeria, Angola, Benin, Burundi, the Congo, Democratic Yemen, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Morocco, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal and Zaire, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

At the request of Afghanistan, Algeria, Benin, Burundi, the Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Guyana, Madagascar, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe and the United Republic of Tanzania, the President, with the consent of the Council, extended an invitation to speak to Madjid Abdallah of the Frente POLISARIO. Gabon, although not opposed to hearing the speaker, entered a reservation with respect to the capacity in which he would speak, i.e. in accordance with rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.¹⁹

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Morocco said his country's national territory had for some time been the victim of deliberate acts of aggression committed by armed bands from Algeria that afterwards returned to Algeria. Morocco had finally felt compelled to come before the Council. Recalling the most recent acts of aggression, in particular those committed on the night of 31 May/1 June and on 4 June, the Minister added that there was no doubt Algeria's responsibility for them was total. The attacks were committed by bands that had been recruited, equipped, armed, trained and financed by the Algerian authorities and protected in Algerian sanctuaries after having left Moroccan territory.

Morocco had spared no efforts to see that attempts were made to clear the atmosphere among the States of the region and to restore a climate of friendship and co-operation. In having recourse to the Council, Morocco hoped that the irreparable might be averted, for the situation was extremely serious and speedy Council action was needed. The Council must take note of those acts of aggression, condemn them and use its prerogative to end them once and for all.

The representative of Algeria said that Morocco remained an illegitimate military occupier in Western Sahara and was stifling the voice of a people fighting for national independence. Algeria had been accused of militarily intervening in an affair in which occupiers and occupied were pitted against each other. The Council could not allow itself to be diverted by such a tactic, intended to make it lose sight of the substance of the problem, which had been and remained that of decolonization and selfdetermination. If there had been aggression in Western Sahara, it had occurred when Morocco invaded the territory, occupied it militarily and partitioned it. Algeria had never committed any of the acts as charged by Morocco, which was seeking to have the Council legitimize the socalled right of hot pursuit.

[&]quot;Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

The problem of Western Sahara was political and called for a political solution. Debate had clearly established that the only basis for a solution was a serious guarantee of the right to self-determination by means of a free referendum. Algeria urgently appealed to the Council to exercise all its authority to help bring back peace to north-west Africa—a peace based on the right of the Western Saharan people to self-determination and independence.

The representative of POLISARIO said that the question of Western Sahara was exclusively one of decolonization. After more than three years of murderous warfare imposed on the Sahraoui people by Moroccan and Mauritanian troops, Morocco was currently recalling deeds of war and mentioning forces which it refused to name but which it knew were the fighters of POLISARIO. Its request for a Security Council meeting was in part to distract Moroccan public opinion from the tragic war. The Frente POLISARIO was ready to meet with Morocco and Mauritania in an attempt to find a political solution. Its readiness was matched only by the determination of its people to continue the struggle of legitimate selfdefence as long as Morocco persisted in its aggression and occupation.

Benin, Democratic Yemen and Madagascar also emphasized that the question before the Council was essentially one of decolonization; to present the issue as a conflict between Algeria and Morocco was to ignore the most essential element in this regional polarization. Madagascar added that peace and security in that region could not be maintained without a comprehensive solution to the question of Western Sahara. Any partial debate, taking into account only selective aspects of the problem, it said, could lead only to partial, unbalanced solutions.

The representative of Mauritania said that his Government's position regarding the Saharan issue had been expressed in a communique addressed to the Secretary-General on 23 May (see subsection above). Mauritania remained convinced that dialogue and joint efforts were the best ways of finding a peaceful, just and lasting solution to all the problems facing the region.

Meeting on 25 June, the Council decided without objection to adjourn further consideration of the item. That decision came in response to a request made by Morocco in a letter of the same day to the Council President to suspend action on its complaints. Morocco said that the President of the Sudan (currently OAU Chairman) had interceded with the King of Morocco, who had responded favourably to the appeal.

Subsequent communications

In a letter of 5 July to the Secretary-General, the representative of Israel referred to Algeria's letters of 11 and 16 June and recent statements in the Security Council and made known Israel's view that the dispute was essentially a local issue between States involved in the question of Western Sahara; references to Israel which had been made in those letters and statements were, therefore, irrelevant and gratuitous.

On 16 August, the representative of Morocco transmitted a message of 8 August from the Foreign Minister informing the Secretary-General of what he considered was the irregular conduct of the debates and breaches of procedure which, in Morocco's view, had occurred during consideration of the question of Western Sahara by the sixteenth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU meeting at Monrovia, Liberia, in July and in adopting the recommendations of the OAU ad hoc committee of heads of State set up in 1978 to consider that question. The decisions and the resolutions of the thirtythird ordinary session of the OAU Council of Ministers, also held in July, were subsequently transmitted to the Assembly on 8 October by a letter from Lesotho.

Also on 16 August, the representative of Algeria transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter of the same date from the Foreign Minister regarding a deterioration of the situation in north-west Africa following Morocco's invasion and occupation of the part of Western Sahara previously occupied by Mauritania; the invasion came shortly after a peace agreement signed between Mauritania and POLISARIO. He called on the United Nations to demand the withdrawal of all Moroccan troops from the territory.

By a letter of 18 August, Mauritania transmitted a message to the Secretary-General stating that Mauritania had concluded an agreement with the representatives of the Sahraoui people, the Frente POLISARIO, signed at Algiers on 5 August 1979, by which it renounced all territorial claims to Western Sahara and decided to withdraw from the war there. The Mauritano-Sahraoui agreement was annexed to Mauritania's letter. Also annexed was a Declaration of Nouakchott of 14 August, by which the Mauritanian Prime Minister announced Mauritania's decision to withdraw its troops as from 15 August from that part of the territory which Mauritania had been controlling. It requested Morocco to withdraw its contingent stationed in Mauritania asked the United Mauritania. Nations to consider the two documents as establishing the neutrality of Mauritania in the Western Sahara conflict.

Zambia informed the Secretary-General in a letter of 15 October that his Government recognized the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic with effect from 8 October.

By a letter dated 21 November, Madagascar transmitted the text of a telegram addressed to the Secretary-General by its President on 19 November, expressing concern at the possible consequences of a proposed increase in United States military sales to Morocco, in the context of the problem of Western Sahara.

In a letter dated 31 December to the Security Council President—annexing a Mauritanian letter of 5 December by which it had submitted to the Council a complaint concerning the presence of Moroccan forces within Mauritania's internationally recognized frontiers—the representative of Mauritania informed the Council that the Moroccan contingent had completely withdrawn.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Western Sahara on 16 August 1979 and decided to grant a request for a hearing to Madjid Abdallah of the Frente POLISARIO.

Having noted the agreement concluded in August between Mauritania and POLISARIO, and the decision of OAU adopted in July (see subsection immediately below), the Committee, at its Chairman's suggestion, decided without objection, subject to General Assembly directives, to transmit the relevant documentation to the Assembly for its consideration and to consider the question of Western Sahara again in 1980.

In a letter of 17 October to the Secretary-General, Morocco presented a number of points of information which it said would correct certain omissions in the Secretariat working paper annexed to the Special Committee's report on Western Sahara.

Report of the Secretary-General

In a report dated 21 September 1979 to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General stated that the Acting Executive Secretary of OAU had transmitted to him on 8 August the text of the decision on the question of Western Sahara, adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government at its July session, by which OAU decided on: preparation of a proper atmosphere for peace in the area through a general and immediate cease-fire; exercise of the right of self-determination by the people of Western Sahara through a referendum to enable them to choose total independence or maintenance of the status quo; a meeting of all parties concerned, including representatives of Western Sahara, to request their co-operation in implementing the decision; and establishment of a special committee of six OAU member States—Guinea, Liberia (Chairman), Mali, Nigeria, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania—to work out modalities and supervise the organization of the referendum with the co-operation of the United Nations, on the basis of one person, one vote.

The Secretary-General reported that he had maintained close contact with the parties concerned and had assured them of continued readiness to extend his full co-operation in the search for a solution.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At its 1979 regular session, the General Assembly's Fourth Committee considered the question of Western Sahara. In addition to the reports of the Secretary-General and the Special Committee, the Committee had before it a request for hearings of representatives of the Frente POLISARIO and a letter of 5 October from Morocco. Morocco stated that Western Sahara had been an integral part of Moroccan territory since 26 February 1976, that there was no longer any justification for consideration of the question by the Fourth Committee, and that Morocco firmly opposed the request for hearings.

On 23 and 24 October the Committee heard a statement by a representative of POLISARIO, Tinguiri Mansour Omar. Reviewing events in Western Sahara, he said that the signing of a peace agreement with Mauritania represented an effective contribution to peace and the restoration of stability. His organization, however, would intensify its fight against Morocco if that country continued its military escalation. He reaffirmed that POLISARIO favoured co-operation with the United Nations to find a solution that would guarantee and respect the right of the Saharan people to independence.

Algeria emphasized that the decolonization of Western Sahara was a political problem which required a political solution, and called on the United Nations to launch an appeal to Morocco to negotiate with POLISARIO.

Mauritania reaffirmed its desire to participate in all attempts to bring peace and stability to the region. Morocco declared that the agreement signed by Mauritania in August 1979 could not have legal value because the co-signatory had no legal personality. It reiterated that Morocco had repeatedly proposed initiation of a dialogue aimed at achieving peace and economic co-operation.

Guyana, Jamaica, Sao Tome and Principe, Togo and Viet Nam welcomed the August agreement between Mauritania and POLISARIO and urged Morocco to reconsider its position and cooperate with OAU. Angola, Botswana, the Niger and Senegal expressed the view that OAU was the most suitable framework for negotiations.

Afghanistan, the Congo, Iran, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Rwanda and Yugoslavia reiterated their support of the people of Western Sahara and stated that they must be granted the right to self-determination. Botswana and the Niger appealed to all countries not to complicate the decolonization process. Afghanistan, Cape Verde, Lesotho and Viet Nam called for the withdrawal of foreign troops.

Gabon and Senegal called on Algeria and Morocco to negotiate. Gabon maintained its position that the return of Western Sahara to Morocco was legitimate. Senegal called for agreement on the holding of a referendum.

On 2 November, the Committee approved a resolution sponsored by 41 States (see DOC-UMENTARY REFERENCES below) by a recorded vote of 83 to 5, with 43 abstentions. On 21 November, the Assembly adopted the text as resolution 34/37 by a recorded vote of 85 to 6, with 41 abstentions.

The Assembly thereby reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Western Sahara to selfdetermination and independence, in accordance with the Charters of the United Nations and OAU and the objectives of the Declaration on the granting of independence, and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure that right. It welcomed the peace agreement concluded between Mauritania and POLISARIO and deeply deplored the aggravation of the situation resulting from the continued occupation of Western Sahara by Morocco and the extension of the occupation into territory evacuated by Mauritania. It urged Morocco to join the peace process and terminate the occupation. The Assembly recommended that POLISARIO participate fully in any search for a just and definitive political solution of the question.

The Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara as a priority question and to report in 1980. It further requested the Administrative Secretary-General of OAU to inform the United Nations Secretary-General of progress achieved in the implementation of OAU decisions concerning Western Sahara.

A number of States spoke in explanation of vote. Argentina, Australia, Greece, Pakistan and the Syrian Arab Republic said they voted in favour of the resolution but expressed reservations about the language in the paragraphs that referred to Morocco by name. They, as well as the Sudan, felt that such references did not help create a proper atmosphere for negotiation. In Portugal's view also, the resolution did not create an atmosphere essential to the peace process. Bangladesh and Yemen expressed similar reservations. Bangladesh explained that although it had abstained in the Fourth Committee vote, it had decided to vote in favour of the resolution in the Assembly because it felt that the main substance of the text conformed to the spirit of OAU decisions.

Austria and Costa Rica said they voted in favour because the resolution reaffirmed the principles of the Declaration on granting independence. Costa Rica felt, however, that certain paragraphs did not help create the climate for a satisfactory solution. Mali and the USSR voted in favour in support of the right of the Saharan people to self-determination, and Finland said it had done so because the text presented a framework for a peaceful settlement. Liberia felt some of the paragraphs could have been more conclusive.

The United Arab Emirates said it was in favour of a rapprochement between Morocco and Algeria, and abstained. Senegal felt it could not support a text that sanctioned intervention in a controversy which could be solved at the regional level, and therefore abstained. Guinea, which also abstained, said the parties involved had been given another opportunity by OAU to hold consultations for reaching a peaceful solution. Sweden, which voted in favour despite some reservations, found it regrettable that OAU's efforts had not been more clearly reflected in the resolution. Norway said it abstained because the text appeared to prejudge the outcome of the peace process envisaged by OAU, which had decided to hold a referendum in the territory. It also felt that the wording seemed to favour one of the parties to the conflict.

Spain, explaining its abstention, regretted that a separate vote had not been taken on each paragraph, thereby enabling it to record its reservations on some and to vote in favour of others. In Jordan's opinion, the problem was properly the domain of the League of Arab States and OAU, and no useful purpose could be served by Members' taking sides. Zaire said it was convinced that African States could solve the problem without internationalizing it. In its view, some provisions of the text tended to widen existing differences and Zaire would vote against it.

Morocco, in explanation of its negative vote, said it considered that the resolution did not contribute to the attainment of a just peace in the area and that its Government would not consider itself bound by the recommendations of the text.

By resolution 34/44 of 23 November, on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for guaranteeing human rights, the Assembly also noted with satisfaction the OAU decision on the question of Western Sahara and invited all Member States to spare no efforts to implement that decision. (See also p. 833; for page reference to text of resolution 34/44, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Other territorie s

In 1979, the General Assembly and its Special Committee also considered the situation in the following territories: Antigua, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Kitts—Nevis—Anguilla, St. Vincent, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

The Committee referred to its Sub-Committee on Small Territories the questions of Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, Pitcairn, and the Turks and Caicos Islands, for consideration and report.

On 16 August, the Committee decided, without objection, to transmit to the Assembly its documentation on Antigua, St. Kitts—Nevis—Anguilla and St. Vincent in order to facilitate consideration of the item and, subject to Assembly directives, to consider the territories in 1980.

Saint Lucia, previously considered by the Special Committee, became independent on 22 February 1979, following approval by the United Kingdom in December 1978 of the St. Lucia Termination of Association Order, 1978. It became a United Nations Member on 18 September (see p. 435). St. Vincent also became independent during the year, on 27 October, as Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

Consideration by the Special Committee

BERMUDA

On 1 August 1979, the Committee adopted the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories concerning Bermuda and, while noting the reservations expressed by some members, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations in the report.

The Committee thus reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Bermuda to self-determination and independence, while aware of its special circumstances owing to size, location, population and limited resources. It welcomed the co-operation of the administering power, the United Kingdom, and its statement that it would respect the wishes of the people of Bermuda in determining their future constitutional status. The Committee noted that significant political developments had taken place in the territory and welcomed the holding of a Constitutional Conference—in February and July 1979—as recommended by the Royal Commission appointed in 1978 to investigate the underlying causes of disturbances which took place in December 1977. Further, it reiterated the view that the electoral system should accurately reflect the wishes of the majority of the people and hoped that all necessary measures would be taken to foster national unity and identity.

The Committee reaffirmed its strong conviction that the presence of military bases in the territory should not prevent the people of Bermuda from exercising their right to self-determination and independence. It urged the administering power, in co-operation with the local authorities, to continue to guarantee the rights of the people to own and dispose of their natural resources and to maintain control of their future development. It also urged that every effort be made to diversify the economy of Bermuda, including the promotion of agriculture and fisheries.

Noting the results of a manpower survey recently carried out in the territory, the Committee urged that adequate training facilities be provided locally and abroad, in order to expedite "bermudianization." Finally, the Committee called upon the administering power to receive a visiting mission in the territory at an appropriate time.

BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS, CAYMAN ISLANDS, MONTSERRAT, AND TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

On 1 and 7 August 1979, the Special Committee adopted the reports of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories on the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, and the Turks and Caicos Islands, and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

Reaffirming the inalienable right of the peoples of these territories to self-determination and independence and reiterating the view that special factors should not delay speedy implementation of self-determination, the Committee took note of statements of the representative of the administering power—the United Kingdom—that his Government would respect the wishes of the peoples of the territories in determining their own future, and noted with appreciation the continuing participation of the United Kingdom in its work.

The Committee expressed satisfaction at the willingness of the administering power to receive visiting missions in the territories under its administration. It called on that power to strengthen and diversify the islands' economies so as to reduce dependence on any single activity, and urged that, in co-operation with the territorial Governments, it should take effective measures to safeguard the rights of the people to own and control their natural resources.

The Committee urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular UNDP, as well as regional institutions, to pay special attention to the needs of these territories.

Concerning the British Virgin Islands, the Committee took note of recent constitutional developments, in particular the lowering of the voting age from 21 to 18 years. While noting that recent efforts to achieve a viable economy had met with some success, the Committee none the less urged the United Kingdom to continue to co-operate with local authorities to diversify the economy.

Concerning the Cayman Islands, the Committee reaffirmed that constitutional change relating to independence must be decided by the Caymanians themselves. It urged the administering power to take all necessary steps, in consultation with the territory's freely elected representatives, to ensure the attainment of the goals of the Declaration and to intensify its efforts to prepare Caymanians for all fields of activity at all levels, in order to hasten the replacement of foreign personnel. It also urged an increase in efforts to diversify the economy for greater self-sufficiency.

Regarding Montserrat, the Committee took note of recent elections in the territory and of the newly elected Chief Minister's statement that development rather than independence was his priority. In this regard, the Committee, while noting improvements in the infrastructure and the development co-operation programme being carried out, expressed concern at the territory's continued dependence on grants-in-aid and remittances from abroad, and urged the administering power to continue efforts to develop a viable economy in the territory.

The Committee also urged the United Kingdom to take all possible steps to strengthen and diversify the economy of the Turks and Caicos Islands. It reaffirmed its conviction that the presence of military bases in those islands should not prevent the people from exercising their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. It welcomed an invitation by the United Kingdom to send a mission to the territory in 1980.

PITCAIRN

The Special Committee on 22 June 1979 adopted a consensus statement with regard to Pitcairn, administered by the United Kingdom, which was contained in the report of its Sub-Committee on Small Territories. It noted that the gradual decline of the population, as the result of emigration, raised the question of the capacity of the islanders to maintain the essential services of education, medical welfare and the launching of longboats, on which their trade with passing ships depended. The Committee called again on the administering power to continue to safeguard the interests of the people of the territory so as not to abandon them to an uncertain future, and with a view to encouraging them to remain on the island. The Committee noted with satisfaction that, largely as a result of philatelic sales, the general financial state of the territory was healthy.

Consideration by the General Assembly

On 21 November 1979, the Assembly adopted without objection resolution 34/34 concerning Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

The Assembly thereby approved the chapters of the Special Committee's report relating to those territories, reaffirming the right of their people to self-determination as well as its conviction that questions of territorial size, geographical location and limited resources should not delay the implementation of the Declaration. The Assembly called upon the United Kingdom to continue to take all necessary steps, in consultation with the territories' freely elected representatives, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the goals of the Declaration, to expand its programme of budgetary aid, to diversify and strengthen further the economies of those territories, and to work out assistance and economic development programmes for them.

The Assembly urged the administering power to safeguard the right of the peoples to own and dispose of their natural resources and to control their future development. It also requested that power to pay particular attention to the training of qualified local personnel and to continue to enlist the assistance of United Nations organizations in accelerating progress in all sectors of national life.

The Assembly welcomed the positive attitude of the United Kingdom towards visiting missions in the territories under its administration, in particular the invitation to dispatch a mission to the Turks and Caicos Islands in 1980. Finally, it requested the Special Committee to continue and to report on its search for the best ways to implement the Declaration in these territories.

The Assembly adopted resolution 34/34 on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, where the text was approved without vote on 1 November. The sponsors of the resolution were Australia, the Bahamas, Denmark, Haiti, India, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Also on 21 November, the Assembly decided, by decision 34/415, to defer to its regular 1980 session consideration of the question of Pitcairn and requested the Special Committee to keep the situation under review and to report on it.

On the same day, by decision 34/416, the Assembly deferred consideration of the question of Antigua and St. Kitts—Nevis—Anguilla until the following year.

Both decisions were adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved them, also without vote, on 6 November, as orally proposed by the Committee Chairman.

ASSISTANCE TO ANTIGUA, ST. KITTS-NEVIS-ANGUILLA, SAINT LUCIA AND SAINT VINCENT

The Secretary-General reported to the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly on assistance offered to Antigua, St. Kitts—Nevis—Anguilla, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent. The report, dated 5 November 1979, was prepared in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and summarized action taken by Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to implement an Assembly resolution of 20 December 1978.²⁰

Excerpts from replies received from intergovernmental bodies were reproduced, outlining the type and quantity of aid provided, as well as replies regarding bilateral aid programmes of Governments—Canada, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/194, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The text of the resolution, twice revised, was sponsored by the Bahamas, Barbados, Botswana, Cyprus, Fiji, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela and Zambia, which further orally revised the text. It had been approved, also without vote, by the Committee on 1 December.

The Assembly, by this resolution, took note of the Secretary-General's report and noted with satisfaction the recent attainment of independence by Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent. It emphasized the urgency of rendering all necessary assistance to the peoples of Antigua, St. Kitts—Nevis—Anguilla, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent in their efforts to strengthen and develop their economies.

It called upon the United Kingdom, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the peoples of Antigua and St. Kitts—Nevis—Anguilla, to continue steps towards establishing and financing an appropriate development programme. It requested the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations, in particular UNDP and international financial institutions, as well as aid donors, to continue to increase their assistance to the peoples of those territories as well as to Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to mobilize the financial, technical and economic assistance of the international community, in particular that of the developed countries and appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to help meet the short- and long-term development needs of Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent. It asked him to submit in 1980 a report on implementation of this resolution.

"The General Assembly, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and having heard the statement of the representative of Australia with regard to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, notes with appreciation the continuing co-operation of the Government of Australia, as the administering Power, in reporting on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960. The General Assembly particularly welcomes the invitation of the Government of Australia to the Special Committee to send a visiting mission to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands in the second half of 1980 to obtain first-hand information on the situation in the Territory and the progress being made there. The General Assembly notes with appreciation the commitment of the administering Power to the political, social, economic and educational advancement of the people of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands and further notes that its overriding objective is to bring about, as speedily as possible, conditions which will enable those people to exercise freely their right to self-determination. In this regard, the General Assembly endorses the approach that it must be for the people of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands to determine freely their own future political status in conformity with resolution 1514(XV). The General Assembly notes also that during the period under review, significant developments have occurred in the Territory, in particular the measures taken to establish the Cocos (Keeling) Islands Council and the Cocos Islands Co-operative Society. The General Assembly expresses the hope that these developments will lead to the implementation of the Declaration contained in resolution 1514(XV). The General Assembly requests the Special Committee, in continued co-operation with the administering Power, to seek the best ways and means of implementing the Declaration with respect to the Territory, in the light of the information to be provided by the administering Power in 1980, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.'

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Guam,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Guam,

Noting that the administering Power continues to maintain military installations in the Territory,

Considering that the policy of maintaining military bases and installations in Non-Self-Governing Territories which inhibit the right of self-determination of peoples is incompatible with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Having heard the statements of the administering Power,

Welcoming the active participation of the administering Power in the work of the Special Committee and expressing the hope that this co-operation will be strengthened further so as to accelerate progress towards the full implementation of the Declaration with respect to Guam,

Having examined the report of the United Nations Visiting Mission dispatched to the Territory in July 1979, Noting the observations of the Visiting Mission relating to the results of the constitutional referendum held in Guam on 4 August 1979.

Conscious of the need to accelerate progress towards the full implementation of the Declaration with respect to Guam,

Mindful that Guam requires the continued attention and assistance of the United Nations in the achievement by its people of the objectives embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of Guam and stressing the necessity of diversifying the Territory's economy as a matter of priority in order to reduce its dependence on fluctuating economic activities.

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial

Countries and Peoples relating to Guam;

Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Guam to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms its conviction that questions of territorial size, geographical location and limited resources should in no way delay the implementation of the Declaration with respect to the Territory;

- 4. Calls upon the Government of the United States of America, as the administering Power, in consultation with the freely elected representatives of the people of Guam, to continue to take all the necessary steps to ensure the full and speedy attainment of the goals set forth in the Declaration with respect to the Territory and to take such additional measures as will ensure preservation of the identity and cultural heritage of the people of Guam;
- 5. Expresses its appreciation to the members of the United Nations Visiting Mission dispatched to the Territory in July 1979 for the constructive work accomplished and to the administering Power and to the Government and people of Guam for the co-operation and assistance extended to the Mission:
- 6. Takes note of the report of the Visiting Mission and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein;
- 7. Calls upon the administering Power to take all possible steps to strengthen and diversify the economy of Guam and to work out concrete programmes of assistance and economic development for the Territory;
- 8. Recalls that the administering Power has the responsibility to ensure that the people of Guam are kept fully informed of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the Declaration;

9. Further calls upon the administering Power to take the necessary action to enable the inhabitants of Guam to regain possession of unutilized land held at present by the federal authorities and by the military;

- 10. Recalls its relevant resolutions concerning military bases in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, recognizes that the presence of military bases could constitute a factor impeding the implementation of the Declaration and reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases in Guam should not prevent the people of the Territory from exercising their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration and the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;
- 11. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the freely elected authorities and representatives of the people of Guam, to safeguard the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to the enjoyment of their natural resources by taking effective measures which guarantee the right of the people to own and dispose of those natural resources and to establish and maintain control of their future development;

12. Requests the administering Power to continue to enlist the assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in accelerating progress in all sectors of the national life of Guam;

13. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session, including the possible dispatch of a further visiting mission to Guam at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Chapter III

Question of Namibia

In 1979, the question of Namibia was again considered by various United Nations bodies. The General Assembly, its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the United Nations Council for Namibia all took decisions on the matter. Related decisions were taken by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Economic and Social Council.

On 27 April, the Special Committee adopted a Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia by which, among other things, it reaffirmed that Namibia was the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine independence and self-determination were achieved, strongly condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of the territory, and reaffirmed that the only political solution for Namibia must be based on the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation and the holding of free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity.

In its 1979 report to the Assembly, the Council for Namibia said that during the year it had continued to support the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), their sole and authentic representative. Its activities in this connexion included holding consultations with Governments to bring about the implementation of United Nations resolutions concerning the territory, representing Namibia at meetings and conferences, and mobilizing public opinion in support of the Namibian people. The Council also continued to serve as trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia—the main vehicle through which the Council channelled material assistance to Namibia—and to sponsor the Institute for Namibia at Lusaka, Zambia, which provided both training and employment for Namibians. The Council also sponsored the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, launched in 1976² to provide comprehensive United Nations assistance to Namibia both before and during the initial period of independence. During the year the Council approved 46 pre-independence projects as part of the Nationhood Programme. The Council's report also contained a review of the activities of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and included a number of recommendations for action by the Assembly.

In May 1979, the Assembly resumed its thirtythird session, which had been suspended on 29 January 1979, in order to consider fully the question of Namibia and the implications of South Africa's continued defiance of Assembly and Security Council resolutions. On 31 May, the Assembly adopted a resolution on the question, by which it reaffirmed the direct responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia, renewed its determination to ensure the complete discharge of that responsibility, and called on all Member States and United Nations bodies and organs to support the Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence. The Assembly declared the urgent need to ensure attainment of the inalienable rights of the Namibian people to genuine selfdetermination and national independence in Namibia, including Walvis Bay, and supported the legitimacy of their struggle for national liberation by all means at their disposal. It declared that South Africa's illegal occupation of the territory constituted a serious threat to international peace and security and strongly condemned South Africa for, among other things, having imposed a so-called internal settlement on the Namibian people through an illegal national assembly designed to achieve international recognition for its puppets and perpetuate the occupation. The Assembly called on all Member States and the international community to refrain from according any recognition to, or co-operating with, the illegal national assembly or any puppet regime imposed by South Africa, again demanded the immediate and unconditional end to the illegal occupation by South Africa, and called on the Security Council to convene urgently to take enforcement measures against South Africa, as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.³

On 12 December, at its thirty-fourth session, the Assembly adopted seven resolutions—which for the most part embodied the recommendations of the Council for Namibia—on the following aspects of the question: the programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia; intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia; action by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations; the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Fund for Namibia; dissemination of information; and the situation resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa.

Details of these and related decisions are given in the following sections.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of Namibia at meetings held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, between 23 and 27 April 1979.

In conformity with Assembly decisions and in accordance with established practice, the Committee, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), invited the national liberation movement of Namibia, SWAPO, to participate as an observer and heard a statement by Aaron Shihepo, a member of SWAPO's Central Committee. Statements were also made by representatives of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Executive Secretary of OAU to the United Nations, and representatives of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the OAU Co-ordinating Committee for the Liberation of Africa.

On 27 April, the Committee adopted without objection the text of a Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia, the second section of which related specifically to
