Foreword

HE 1970s were a turbulent decade. Political and economic upheavals, wars and disasters, both man-made and natural, marked those years with violence and tragedy. The United Nations played an important role in containing or bringing an end to some of those conflicts and mitigating the anguish and suffering which they caused.

While dealing with the world's acute crises, the Organization also found time for novel and far-reaching initiatives to cement the peoples together and to deal with such basic human concerns as disarmament, environment, population, food, water, human rights, international trade and the law of the sea. Future historians may find that these efforts to strengthen social bonds have had a far more lasting impact on the world society than the headline-catching events of day-to-day calamities.

The Yearbook of the United Nations records the successes and failures of the United Nations in dealing with world crises and in the slow process of constructing a better world. Its pages detail the workings of international diplomacy and institution-building, not in theoretical terms but in concrete events. It is a case-book of humanity's halting effort to realize its potential through the United Nations.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

To assist readers who wish to make a more detailed study of subjects discussed in Part One of this volume, documentary references are provided at the end of each chapter and subchapter. These references give the symbols and short titles of documents of the principal United Nations organs dealing with the subject concerned, records of voting, and texts of adopted resolutions and decisions. Also listed are the numbers of the meetings at which the subject was discussed, and for which summary or verbatim records are available. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/34/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the thirty-fourth session, beginning with A/34/1. Documents of the Assembly's spebeginning with A/34/1. Documents of the Assembly's special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S-and A/ES-, followed by the session number: in 1979, A/S-11/- (eleventh special session), A/ES-6/- (sixth emergency special session) and A/ES-7/- (seventh emergency special session). A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1979/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1979 sessions, beginning with E/1979/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by permanent identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series, one for resolutions and one for decisions, each beginning with 1 (i.e. decision 1979/1, resolution 1979/1).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1 (1946).

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council. Its resolutions are numbered consecutively, with the session at which they were adopted indicated by Roman numerals, e.g. resolution 2168(XLVI) of the forty-sixth session.

ST/- refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

DC/- refers to documents of the Disarmament Commission.

DP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Development Programme.

ID/- refers to documents of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

ITC/- refers to documents of the International Trade Centre.

TD/- refers to documents of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

UNEP/- refers to documents of the United Nations Environment Programme.

"L" in a symbol belonging to one of these series refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF," to documents of a conference; "INF," to those of general information. Summary records are designated as "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

U.N.P. designates United Nations sales publications, each of which carries a sales number.

PART ONE

United Nations

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

I

The past year has been full of uncertainty, tension and conflict. The international scene has never been more complex nor the old concepts of power so diffused. There have been sudden shifts in the political balance and unexpected developments rooted in a variety of forces-economic, political, social and even religious. There is an increasing uneasiness as to the manageability of the affairs, and especially the economic life and social organization, of the planet in the circumstances now prevailing. These uncertainties and unforeseen developments affect in different ways the lives and the future of virtually all nations and peoples and give rise to deep-seated feelings of anxiety and frustration, which in turn create a climate favourable to new and unpredictable events.

If ever there was a time for serious reflection and stocktaking on the state and future of the community of nations, it is now. In our current anxiety we have, to some extent, lost sight of the enormous advances that have been made on so many fronts in the past 30 years. What we now require is the necessary spirit of accommodation to take full advantage of those advances.

In the upheavals of our time we can discern certain general trends- the desire to remedy long-standing injustices or ancient grievances, the compulsion of national aspirations, anxiety over the possibility of a viable future for this or that nation, the fear of the designs and ambitions of others and the suffering, frustration and resentment caused by gross economic and social inequities. A generation of unprecedented change has inevitably left many unresolved problems, old and new, as well as a sense of disillusionment at the failure to realize many of the great aims and objectives proclaimed in the optimistic aftermath of the Second World War.

Most of the symptoms and problems I have mentioned are ones which the United Nations, if effectively utilized as the working structure of the world community of the future, could be of unique assistance in solving. We need, above all, to press on with the development of the elements of such a community on a global basis. This is not a matter of abstract idealism but of practical self-interest. It is also a matter of urgency.

There are a number of obvious reasons why the development of an effective world community will be difficult and slow. At one end of the scale we have the complex relationships of the greatest Powers, which are still to a considerable extent prisoners of their mutual fears and suspicions and of the fearful destructive capacity of their weapons systems.

At the other end of the scale the majority of nations and peoples are afflicted in varying degrees by acute problems of instability, poverty and economic weakness, often exacerbated by political and economic developments elsewhere in the world. While the aspirations of their peoples are high, economic dependence or instability shackles many of them to an economic system which no longer meets the requirements of an interdependent world of free nations. For many of them their first generation of independence has coincided with the challenge of coming to terms with a new world, a world in a state of revolutionary technological change. Thus the general longing for peace and equity is shadowed by a widespread unease and lack of confidence in the future.

Between these two poles, many middle and smaller Powers, within the United Nations and in various groupings outside it, have steadily developed a sense of co-operative responsibility on many global issues. The non-aligned movement is a good example of this positive trend. In the United Nations they have shown by and large a mixture of idealism and pragmatism which constitutes a most constructive middle force in the affairs of the world. This, in my view, is one of our best hopes and assets for the future, particularly at a time when the polarization of the world situation caused by great Power tensions would appear to be becoming a less dominant factor of the international scene as other independent political, economic and social forces emerge.

The great Powers have special responsibilities and obligations in the United Nations system. They also have a special need for the world Organization as an alternative to the kind of confrontation which, in our nuclear age, could well be fatal to us all. The United Nations, and especially the Security Council, has played a vital, if sometimes unappreciated, role for many years in providing alternatives to such a confrontation. In recent years the major Powers have on a number of occasions availed themselves of this moderating mechanism during periods of crisis. The United Nations has also played an invaluable role in insulating regional crises to the necessary extent from the delicate balance of nuclear Power relationships. This is certainly not the comprehensive system for the maintenance of international peace and security envisioned in the Charter of the United. Nations, but in the extraordinary and, it is to be hoped, transitional conditions of our world, it represents an indispensable safeguard of world peace and survival.

Elsewhere, the United Nations, through the process of decolonization, through its pioneering activities in development, in its current search for a new international economic order and in an increasingly broad attempt to tackle global problems, has been, and is, the centre of an effort to find new arrangements fitting and adequate for our interdependent world. The objective of such arrangements should be above all to try to make the fundamental changes necessary to lessen the gap between rich and poor and open the door of opportunity to all. The problems and obstacles are uniquely complex and difficult, and progress is slow, but the focus and the objectives are there. Later in this report I shall revert in more detail to this central and essential part of our task.

It cannot be said that the past year has witnessed any striking progress on our main problems. Indeed, the lack of progress, especially on the economic side, is distinctly disappointing; and in strong contrast to the evident urgency of most of the problems. Political determination and a sense of pragmatism are necessary to reverse this debilitating situation.

П

Adjustment to change is inevitably a difficult and long process, and we should not overlook what has already been achieved during the life of the United Nations. Indeed many of the developments which we now take for granted or complain about as inadequate would have seemed quite out of reach only a few years ago. What we are trying to create in the United Nations is a world order fundamentally different from any that existed before. This is no small task, and we must remind ourselves from time to time of how much has already been achieved, as well as of the formidable obstacles that remain.

In the relationships of the most powerful nations, for example, much has been done to temper the adverse climate which coloured so strongly the post-war years. In spite of ideological, political and other differences, accommodations have been reached which certainly contribute to making the world a safer and more productive place. We need only think, for example, of the positive development in the relations of China and the United States. This year, we should remember the conclusion, after most complex negotiations between the United States and the USSR, of the SALT II agreement, which offers hope of limiting the growth of strategic nuclear weapons, an indispensable prerequisite to progress on the general problem of disarmament.

The process of accommodation is vital to progress on the various acute regional problems which preoccupy the United Nations. International instruments are essential and useful only if their possibilities are utilized for achieving, the accommodations-sometimes quite small in themselves-which could make enormous contributions to world stability.

I have been increasingly aware of the need to encourage by all means the kind of adjustments which could remove, or at least alleviate, the various regional tensions which are still, in my view, the most dangerous threats to world peace. It is mainly for this reason that I have travelled extensively in order to get a first-hand view of such problems and to discuss them directly with the Governments concerned. Very often, of course, little can be achieved in the existing political circumstances but, if a channel of communications or good offices can be of help, I feel strongly that the Secretary-General should be available. In any case there is no substitute for getting to know the problems on the spot and at first hand.

It was with this end in view that I undertook, earlier this year, an extensive tour of East Asian countries. During this trip I had especially the Indo-Chinese and Korean situations in mind, and I very much hope that our talks in the various capitals may provide a basis on which the Governments and parties concerned may feel more ready to reconsider their positions and to use the possibilities the United Nations offers to assist them in solving their problems.

The United Nations has been especially preoccupied this year with developments in Indo-China—developments which not only raise fundamental questions of Charter principles but also have been accompanied by vast and tragic humanitarian problems. Naturally these matters were predominant in the discussions I had during my visit to the region. The concern of the international community has, throughout this year, been focused both on the political and military developments in Indo-China and on their humanitarian consequences. It has seemed to me that, at the level of human tragedy now prevailing in that part of the world, humanitarian concerns must be attended to without delay.

This view is in no sense intended to downgrade the importance of a political settlement in the area. The situation which has followed the long and cruel war in Indo-China not only threatens the peace and stability of South-East Asia; it could very well also become a threat to world peace. It is of the utmost importance that the process of adjustment start at once and be carried on in a constructive and forward-looking spirit by all parties. As I have already informed them, I am ready to provide any assistance which the Governments concerned may think useful or desirable.

In this as in other situations that have recently arisen, it is imperative that all efforts be directed towards finding a settlement in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular respect for the territorial integrity and political independence of all States, non-interference in internal affairs and the non-use of force.

Ш

Of the great political problems for which the Organization has specific responsibilities, the Middle East continues to be the most urgent and complex. There can be no doubt that this question is central to the political, economic and military stability of the world. As long as uncertainty, discord, frustration and violence prevail in the Middle East, the world will continue to live with a profoundly destabilizing element in its affairs and with a grave and continuing risk of future disaster.

The Middle East problem is so sensitive that it is virtually impossible to make any suggestions or proposals about it without upsetting some, or sometimes all, of the parties concerned. This sensitivity has been faced by the succession of mediators, representatives, negotiators and good offices missions that have tried to be of assistance in the last 32 years. The question is how long the world, let alone the peoples of the Middle East, can afford to go on living with this explosive issue in its midst.

The dramatic developments which led to the conclusion of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel have created a new situation in the area. It is a measure of the complexities of the Middle East problem that this event has given rise to controversy and division. Once again, understanding and far-sightedness, while maintaining principles and vital interests, are essential in what would otherwise be a hopeless situation. It is now more than ever necessary that all of the parties concerned review their position with the future rather than the past in mind.

A just and lasting peace in the Middle East can ultimately only be achieved through a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the question, including in particular the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. Evidently, all parties concerned must be involved. I believe that the United Nations, if used with imagination and forbearance, offers in this regard unique possibilities which have not yet been fully utilized, and I hope that these possibilities will be more seriously examined in the coming months. For example, as I have previously suggested, an international conference, properly prepared, might well provide a way out of the present dangerous situation. Evidently a serious process of consultation with all of the parties will have to precede such an international meeting.

In the meantime, the practical involvement of the United Nations has continued to be mainly in the field of peace-keeping- the unceasing effort to keep down the temperature and to avert the confrontations which could so easily lead to widespread conflict and make all movement towards peace impossible. I shall revert later in this report to the subject of peace-keeping operations.

I must, however, mention here the situation in southern Lebanon. The most explosive elements of the Middle East situation exist in close proximity in and around southern Lebanon and their interaction represents both a national tragedy for Lebanon and a constant threat to the wider peace. In recent weeks there has been a serious escalation of violence in this area, resulting in civilian casualties, heavy damage and the flight of many inhabitants. After repeated efforts, an uneasy cease-fire is in effect at the time of writing. This tragic and volatile situation is a reflection of the wider problems of the region and will not be finally resolved until solid progress on those problems is made. In the meantime, we shall continue our efforts through United Nations representatives in the area, and especially the Commander of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), to maintain the present relative calm. The situation in this troubled and tragic area has been for many years a vicious circle of violence and reprisal in which the perennial losers have been the civilian population. I appeal to all concerned to co-operate with

UNIFIL and to show restraint in maintaining a cessation of firing and hostilities pending the time when a more radical improvement in the situation is possible,

Developments have been disappointing in Zimbabwe and Namibia, for which the United Nations has a special concern. The difficulty in resolving the question of Zimbabwe and the now critical situation in that Territory are causes for grave anxiety. An enduring solution of this problem can only be assured if there exists a constitution which has the agreement and support of all parties concerned. The internal settlement as well as the elections held under it do not meet this requirement and cannot, therefore, be recognized as forming a basis for genuine majority rule. Renewed efforts must be made to bring all the parties together to co-operate on an acceptable and lasting settlement. Unless this can be done soon, there is a serious danger that all the progress made on this question will be lost in bloodshed, disorder and ruin with serious implications for the security of the whole region. I hope very much that the ideas and plans which emerged from the recent Commonwealth Conference at Lusaka may provide the means of achieving such a settlement. Meanwhile, it is important that all Member States adhere to the measures called for by the Security Council and work together in resolving this problem.

A year ago there seemed good reason to expect an early solution to the problem of Namibia on the basis of the plan of action approved by the Security Council. Unfortunately, the establishment of a United Nations presence in Namibia to supervise and control elections has been delayed. The full co-operation of all concerned is essential to the implementation of the Security Council's plan of action. Although difficulties have arisen over the interpretation of certain provisions of the plan, I hope that current talks will result in the necessary clarifications so that we can proceed, with the cooperation of all concerned, to practical action. After so much effort has been made, it would indeed be regrettable if we were unable to achieve the final adjustments necessary for

The present state of affairs in Namibia and Zimbabwe has serious implications for the security and economic future of the whole region, involving, as it does, continued loss of life in those countries as well as large-scale raids into Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia, with resulting casualties and wide-spread destruction. It is absolutely vital that means be found to make practical progress on these two problems without sacrificing the principles laid down by the United Nations.

Our aim should be the stable and prosperous future of southern Africa as a whole. This will not be achieved, however, as long as the problem of apartheid persists. One of the great challenges confronting the United Nations and all the peoples of the region is the absolute necessity of transforming the racial situation in southern Africa so that men and women of different races can coexist and exercise their rights as equals.

Another area of conflict with which the United Nations has been intimately involved, both in its peace-keeping and its peace-making roles, is Cyprus. The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), which has been there for more than 15 years, continues to perform an indispensable function in maintaining calm in the island. At the same time, I have pursued the good offices mission entrusted to me by the Security Council to promote a just and lasting settlement. To this end, I convened a high-level meeting at Nicosia last May under my personal auspices. That meeting resulted in a 10-point agreement calling for the resumption of the intercommunal talks and setting forth the basis and priorities for them. While the talks were resumed amid high hopes, they soon encountered difficulties which necessitated an early recess. I have instructed my representatives to continue our efforts to overcome the difficulties in the way of restarting the talks in accordance with last May's high-level accord and the priorities established in that agreement.

The present situation in this regard comprises two sets of difficulties. One concerns the stated negotiating positions of the parties. The other relates to political problems that they face in tackling the compromises and accommodations that are essential if the talks are to have any meaning. Time and again it has proved possible to bridge important differences between the parties and to agree on guidelines and priorities that held out the prospect of progress towards a settlement. Time and again the momentum generated by these agreements has been allowed to dissipate. Moreover, the existing status quo tends to create a dynamic of its own, which does not necessarily facilitate an agreed solution. It seems to me, however, that a far-sighted and determined approach, based on the existing guidelines and accords, could lead to a rapid improvement of the situation in the island that would serve the interests of all concerned and would be vastly preferable to continuing to cling to an unsatisfactory and potentially unstable status quo. This could at the same time clear the way for a comprehensive political settlement, based on the fundamental and legitimate rights of the two communities and on the right of all Cypriots to a better and more peaceful future.

IV

The United Nations now has five peace-keeping operations in the field. A sixth operation, the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF), has recently lapsed, and much thought and effort have been devoted to a prospective operation in Namibia, the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG).

These operations are interrelated both by their basic nature and by the fact that the success and credibility of existing operations have an effect on the acceptability and chances of success of future peace-keeping efforts, since confidence is an essential element of successful peace-keeping. Peace-keeping is one of the original creations of the United Nations and is a valuable instrument in the Security Council's efforts to control conflict and maintain international peace and security. It is a delicate and complex mechanism which can only function properly if certain basic conditions exist and if all concerned are prepared to give it their full support and co-operation. Otherwise, peacekeeping operations can become controversial and even self-defeating, with a consequent decline in the confidence of Member, States in this very useful and innovative technique.

Peace-keeping operations tend to be set up in the heat of the moment to defuse a crisis and contain a conflict which may otherwise spread or seriously upset the fragile balance of world peace. The resolutions which initiate these operations set goals which are sometimes not easily achievable in reality. A prolonged failure to achieve such objectives tends to generate a mood of frustration which, in the long run, may even jeopardize the future of the operation itself, regardless of the service it has rendered or is rendering in controlling a conflict. This in turn is discouraging to the troops in the field, to the Governments which provide them and to the members of the Security Council which set up the operation in the first place.

A fundamental prerequisite of successful peace-keeping operations is the co-operation of the parties concerned. If one or other of these opposes, or has strong reservations about, the objectives of the operation, it is unlikely to be completely successful and will in all probability become an additional source of controversy and friction. The problem then arises whether the actual value of the operation in terms of maintaining peace justifies its continuation in the face of opposition. This is a crucial question which should be considered on its merits and with the utmost seriousness by all concerned.

When a peace-keeping operation is firmly based on a detailed agreement between the parties in conflict and they are prepared to abide by that agreement, it is relatively easy to maintain. This has been the case, for example, with UNEF and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF). When, however, an operation is mounted in an emergency with ambiguous or controversial objectives and terms of reference, and on assumptions which are not wholly realistic, it is likely to present far greater difficulties. This is undoubtedly the case with UNIFIL.

I am firmly convinced that UNIFIL has performed, and is performing, an absolutely essential task of conflict control in one of the most sensitive and explosive parts of the world. This seems to me to be an overriding argument for maintaining it in spite of all difficulties and disagreements. While I shall persist in my efforts to achieve the objectives set for UNIFIL by the Security Council, I think it is important that the current value of the operation, in all its difficulty, should be more fully recognized. The easiest way to prove the value of the task UNIFIL is now performing would be to withdraw the Force. In the present circumstances this would undoubtedly be a highly irresponsible and almost certainly disastrous experiment, and I do not believe that anyone properly informed of the situation would seriously advocate it.

This being the case, I hope we shall have the continuing support and understanding of Member States, the parties concerned and, indeed, the media in the very difficult period which UNIFIL is now experiencing. The Force was put into southern Lebanon precisely because the situation there was dangerous, complex and not susceptible of any obvious or easy solution. While searching for the way to a resolution of the basic problems involved, we should resist the temptation to ascribe them to the operation which is gallantly trying to keep the situation under control.

The United Nations Emergency Force, the mandate of which lapsed on 24 July, had served for nearly six years. It was set up urgently in a time of intense international tension and was deployed in a confused and still violent conflict situation. It was remarkably successful in stabilizing the cease-fire and implementing successive disengagement agreements. It has assisted the transition from conditions of war to a peace treaty in its area of operations. The Force has been an outstanding peace-keeping operation. I take this opportunity to express warm appreciation to the commanders, officers and men and to the civilian component of the Force for their dedicated and effective service to the United Nations.

The future United Nations role in the former UNEF area is still not clear at the time this report is being written. The military observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO) have meanwhile remained in the area under existing decisions of the Security Council.

While in no way detracting from the importance and excellent service of later and larger peace-keeping operations, I wish to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the observers of UNTSO, this oldest of United Nations peacekeeping missions, which has operated continuously in the Middle East for more than 31 years, often in conflict conditions. Established originally in 1948 to supervise the first truce called for by the Security Council in the Middle East, UNTSO has carried out over the years a variety of peace-keeping tasks entrusted to it by the Security Council in the light of the changing circumstances in the region. Its dedicated officers from 17 countries have long since established a universally accepted reputation for objective and accurate reporting even in the most dangerous circumstances. They have assisted in de-escalating innumerable incidents, in arranging cease-fires, in performing countless tasks of a humanitarian nature and in providing a vital and unique link between parties in conflict. They have provided the initial framework and staff upon which all the successive peace-keeping forces in the region have been founded and have assisted these forces in performing their various tasks. They have suffered serious casualties in carrying out their essential but little-publicized work. They continue to be an invaluable resource for peace in the Middle East. The United Nations owes a debt of gratitude to this international group of courageous officers.

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus has been stationed in the island since 1964 and has performed invaluable services in maintaining peace in a deeply troubled area. After the events of 1974 the role of UNFICYP changed fundamentally, but until now its continued presence has been considered essential to maintaining peace and the necessary atmosphere for negotiations on a settlement of the Cyprus problem. While the need to maintain peaceful conditions in the island is undiminished, the intercommunal negotiations have been making very slow progress and, as of the writing of this report, are in recess. The experience of UNFICYP raises in an acute manner the question of the relationship between peacekeeping and peace-making functions of the United Nations. The risks involved in the premature withdrawal of a peace-keeping force are well known and can scarcely be envisaged at this time in regard to UNFICYP. However, the time may soon come for a careful reexamination of United Nations arrangements in the island in the light of present realities.

Peace-keeping is an invaluable addition to the armoury of peace. It is still, however, to some extent in an evolutionary stage and must be used with great care and attention to the fundamental principles and conditions involved. If this is done, I have no doubt that it will develop into an increasingly consistent and dependable support for international peace and security.

During the past year, the world continued to face increasing economic difficulties. In almost every area, economic problems multiplied. Many countries experienced unacceptable levels of inflation and unemployment. Exchange rates have been unstable and volatile. Protectionism has increased. Foreign trade has stagnated. Economic growth has been slow and erratic in industrialized countries. The developing countries have found it impossible to finance reasonable rates of development. Official development assistance has stagnated at about half the target figure agreed in the International Development Strategy. The situation is becoming critical, and a continuation of present trends would seriously jeopardize the pace of development in developing countries for years to come. This in turn would reduce growth and prosperity in the industrialized countries. The forces at work in the world economy call for strong co-ordinated action to remove the structural causes of the present difficulties.

Under these circumstances, it is regrettable that there is a growing disparity between urgent economic problems and the inadequate responses by the international community. The ongoing multilateral negotiations have so far failed to achieve results commensurate with the magnitude of the needs.

There has been some movement during the past year— the recent trade negotiations undertaken by the parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), the agreement on the fundamental elements of a common fund for commodities, and the enlargement of quotas and the increase in special drawing rights in September 1978. These steps, welcome as they are, fall far short of what is needed. The GATT agreements provide a framework for the fight against future protectionism but give little immediate relief for countries most affected by present protectionist measures. Much more needs to be done to establish the common fund and to implement the other components of the Integrated Programme for Commodities. The enlarged quotas and the new special drawing rights are clearly inadequate to deal with the increasing balance-of-payments deficits and accumulated foreign debt of developing countries.

The fifth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was the first occasion on which an international conference specifically focused on the subject of structural change. The results were limited and disappointing. That session showed clearly that many countries were still reluctant to accept the full implications of growing interdependence in the world economy.

The multilateral negotiations now taking place within the framework of the United Nations are clearly facing difficulties. The Committee of the Whole Established under General Assembly Resolution 32/174 adopted two sets of agreed conclusions. One dealt with the transfer of resources and one with agriculture and food issues. Although these constituted limited progress, the Committee has not succeeded in providing impetus to other negotiations within the United Nations system. The Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy made no progress in its first sessions in drafting the Strategy.

In the face of obviously pressing economic needs, such slow progress in negotiations is unacceptable. It is essential that all States should take urgent heed of the dangers of delay and reassess their positions in the light of their long-term interests and needs.

A new impetus in North-South negotiations would do much to dispel the present climate of uncertainty and disenchantment. This new impetus can only be found by a real political will to reach solutions. The United Nations is well equipped with machinery for intergovernmental discussions, consultations and negotiations. It has the capacity to support negotiations if Member States are prepared to use it with determination to find solutions to the problems besetting economic development.

Political support needs to be mobilized if acceptable solutions are to be reached. Brief high-level meetings could play an essential role in this process. Such meetings could also identify possibilities for agreement and priorities for negotiations. Naturally I stand ready to lend all necessary assistance in furthering such an approach. There are, in addition, other important areas for urgent international co-operation. Two of these have recently been highlighted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development and the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development.

The energy problem has emerged as a central and immediate concern for all nations. The progressive exhaustion of known cheap supplies of oil, while energy demands continue to increase, poses a formidable challenge for the international community. It also has profound political implications. Nations will need to change from a pattern of energy consumption dominated by oil to a more energy-saving pattern of growth, relying on more diversified sources of energy. If this transition is to take place in an orderly way, without putting undue strains on the world economy, intensive co-operation among States will be necessary. In addition, considerable efforts will be needed within each State. Planning and co-ordination will be required to harmonize the interests of producers, processors, users, poorer consumers and environmentalists and to achieve an equitable distribution of the burden of necessary adjustments, nationally and internationally.

In recent times, I have been intensifying my contacts with Governments on the question of energy to investigate their perception of the problem and to determine what initiative might be taken within the United Nations in this area. From these contacts I sense a growing recognition that in the future the question of energy should be a priority issue in the North-South dialogue.

Given the interdependence of the problems of the world economy, energy cannot be treated in isolation from other issues. Energy is particularly closely connected to international financial and monetary questions such as reserve creation, payments financing and development assistance. The time has come for the United Nations to work towards a balanced and integrated set of agreements and understandings in these areas. In doing so, we must find ways to ensure sustainable supplies of energy for the world economy while avoiding the excessive depletion of natural resources at the global and national levels, and remaining consistent with the right of countries to exercise permanent sovereignty over their natural resources.

Determined action by the international community is thus required in three areas:

—We need to organize our efforts to bring the negotiations on the implementation of the new international economic order out of their present state of stalemate;

—We need to deal vigorously with the area of energy, which is a major challenge, and to launch a co-ordinated and imaginative effort by the world community in this field;

—We need to address the urgent problems of the oil-importing developing countries in a concerted and effective way.

It is my firm conviction that the United Nations is the place where all these efforts could be combined.

VΙ

The Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, at the end of its eighth session this summer, approved a programme of work providing for the adoption of a convention on the law of the sea next year. Although some issues have yet to be solved, the delegations attending the Conference unanimously agreed that it was possible, as a result of the many sessions of informal negotiations, to adopt formally a draft convention during the spring and act upon it during the summer with the aim of adopting a convention before the end of August 1980.

The long-sought convention can now become a reality if all the States participating in this, the longest and most comprehensive diplomatic conference ever convened under the auspices of the United Nations, make a last effort to achieve mutual accommodation on the few remaining issues. Many questions that appeared intractable when the Conference began its work almost six years ago seem to have found solutions that States can accept in a spirit of compromise.

Vital principles and interests are at stake, and the outcome of this Conference could greatly influence the willingness of Governments to make full use of the machinery of the United Nations to achieve international understanding on global issues. I hope, therefore, that in the final stages of the Conference, Governments, having made remarkable progress on this most difficult and complex of issues, will find it possible to reach the necessary accommodations to produce a treaty which will be of fundamental importance for the future.

The past year has witnessed some advances in the cause of the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, but discouraging and grave new problems have also emerged.

While the world community has focused greater attention on human rights violations and has advanced in its recognition of the need to strengthen mechanisms for the protection of the individual, the number of instances of overt assaults on human dignity, sometimes on a massive scale, remains cause for deep anxiety.

Great hopes have been placed in the United Nations by peoples, persons and groups throughout the world which rightly expect the Organization to react in the face of the disregard or violation of human rights. We must realize, of course, that the United Nations has not always been in a position fully to meet these expectations. As I have pointed out in the past, the effectiveness of the United Nations in matters of human rights is inextricably linked with the attitudes of its Member States, It is the responsibility of each Member of the United Nations under the Charter to ensure respect for human rights within its jurisdiction; indeed the provisions of the International Bill of Human Rights are addressed essentially to Governments.

At the same time, the United Nations as an institution has important human rights responsibilities of its own to discharge under the Charter and under procedures and methods established, by the appropriate deliberative organs These include the setting up of internationally recognized standards for the protection and observance of human rights, marshalling the influence of the international community and of public opinion in support of such standards monitoring the discharge of certain obligations assumed by Member States in this regard, and in certain, cases inquiring into and drawing attention to instances of gross violations. In some instances, the United Nations has been able to act in unison despite the sensitivity of the issues involved. However, much remains to be done. The United Nations can realize its full potential in this field only when Member States face up to their responsibilities, as well as accept and live up to the trust which is placed upon them.

Among the more positive developments during the past year has been the wide-ranging debate on ways and means of improving the effectiveness of the United Nations in the field of human rights which took place in the General Assembly, in the Commission on Human Rights and in the Economic and Social Council, This debate is to continue in the future. For my own part, I am prepared to consider all useful suggestions for strengthening the contribution of the Secretariat in a field which is of fundamental importance to the future development of our society.

Efforts have continued to be made in international organs which deal with human rights to instill a greater awareness of the relevance of human rights to development. The Commission on Human Rights has been considering an important study on the international dimensions of the right to development and has now requested further studies on the regional and national dimensions of this fundamental right. The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities has also been considering the relationship between human rights and the new international economic order. Emerging from these studies is a recognition that there is a human right to development, that respect for human rights can create a climate in which people are inspired to greater efforts for development, and that human rights considerations must feature as essential components in the integrated approach to development.

Significant decisions have been taken during the past year by United Nations organs in dealing with situations of gross violation of human rights. Investigations have been initiated in some cases, individual experts have been designated to look into others, and in some instances I have been requested to undertake contacts with Governments with a view to discussing the human rights situations in their respective countries.

The international community still tends to approach this delicate problem with caution in view of the other aspects of intergovernmental relationships which are often involved. For obvious reasons non-governmental organizations can afford to be, and are, much more forthright in their approach. I understand the reasons for governmental caution, reasons which also apply to some extent to the possibilities of the Secretary-General in many human rights cases. It is absolutely essential, however, that a cautious approach should not be allowed to degenerate into expediency on so vital a matter of principle.

Advances continue to be made towards the universal ratification of the International Covenants on Human Rights. However, the rate of ratification or accession needs to be stepped up if the goal of universality is to be attained without a long delay. In the Human Rights Committee, established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Governments engage in a dialogue with the Committee in which their political, economic and social systems are subjected to international scrutiny from the point of view of their compliance with international human rights laws. The Economic and Social Council has also been working on the procedure for considering reports from States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

The United Nations continues to further and encourage regional, national and local activities for the promotion and protection of human rights, and has sponsored world-wide and regional seminars on these topics in the past year. An important step in the strengthening of regional human rights machinery has been the appointment by the Organization of American States of a newly constituted Inter-American Court of Human Rights. The Seminar now taking place at Monrovia on the advisability of establishing an African regional commission on human rights is another encouraging step towards the strengthening of regional human rights machinery.

In the International Year of the Child, we have been reminded very forcefully of the stark deprivations suffered by children in many parts of the world and we have seen that all too often children are also victims of violations of human rights. It is absolutely intolerable that children should be made to suffer in this manner in our day and age. I earnestly hope that this and other objectives of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child will be furthered by the out, standing efforts which Governments and nongovernmental organizations have made this year to promote the interests and rights of children all over the world.

For my own part, I have continued to exert my best endeavours on behalf of human rights, whenever I consider that my actions may be of assistance to the persons or groups concerned. I am more convinced than ever that respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms must be at the heart of our greatest task here at the United Nations, which is to build a just and equitable world community for the future.

VIII

One of the agonies of the human condition has been the uprooting of millions of people from their homes and families to face unknown dangers, want and despair. To alleviate this appalling tide of human suffering, the United Nations has been deeply and increasingly engaged on behalf of refugees throughout the world.

Two important meetings were convened this year to deal with the problem of refugees. One was held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, in regard to the refugee situation in Africa, the other at Geneva, on the problems of the refugees and displaced persons of South-East Asia. Both had positive results.

The Arusha Conference reaffirmed the principle that the granting of asylum is a peaceful and humanitarian act which should not be regarded as unfriendly by any State. It also stressed the importance of the scrupulous observance of the principle of non-refoulement. These principles are as pertinent in other situations resulting in the exodus of refugees as they are in Africa.

For the Indo-Chinese refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has conducted an operation of growing dimensions. As the exodus of Vietnamese, Lao and Kampuchean refugees continued to increase, however, and the countries of first asylum found the consequences so unbearable that they felt compelled to drive new refugees away, it became apparent that an even larger and more dramatic effort was required. The spectre of men, women and children drifting on crowded boats and often drowning, and of others on land, abandoned amid conflict, anarchy and famine, aroused the conscience of Governments and peoples in every quarter of the globe.

For these reasons, in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and a number of concerned Governments, I decided to convene a meeting at a high level to deal with this humanitarian emergency.

I much appreciated the response of Member States to this initiative and their co-operation during the meeting. I am grateful to the many who made specific commitments of additional assistance to the refugee programme and to the related measures which were agreed on to reduce the dimensions of the problem and the tragic loss of life which had attended the unregulated and massive exodus that had been taking place. Offers of resettlement opportunities doubled from 125,000 to 260,000, and most substantial new pledges in cash and kind, exceeding $160 million, were received. The participants were, I believe, as gratified as I was that so much could be accomplished in a two-day meeting of this kind.

In this undertaking, the essential objective was to meet immediate humanitarian needs. This in no sense detracts from the vital necessity of acceptable political solutions. It is essential that all concerned try to advance from the present stage of recrimination and conflict to a statesmanlike and far-sighted effort to resolve the underlying problems of this tragic and wartorn area. In the meantime, urgent steps must be taken to preserve the lives of the Indo-Chinese refugees and displaced persons and of the ravaged Kampuchean population. This must be done despite the political complexities, of which we are all aware.

IX

Like all political institutions in this age of change, the United Nations must face the problem of the manageability and suitability of its organization and procedures for confronting effectively the immense and pressing problems of our time. While I believe that most representatives shared the apprehensions in this respect expressed in my report on the work of the Organization last year, and more or less agreed with my analysis of the problem, very little seems to have changed in the intervening 12 months. In fact, in some respects things have become worse. To take one practical example, documentation: the situation is now such that the existing United Nations services can no longer carry the steadily increasing load. This threatened breakdown of a service which Member States more or less take for granted is symptomatic of the strain imposed on the international system by the steady inflation of activity and the lack of effective review and restraint.

I have been left in no doubt that many Governments of Member States are increasingly concerned at the drain on financial and personnel resources entailed in the continuing upward spiral of international meetings and related activities. It is apparently widely believed that action by the Secretariat could significantly diminish this trend. I wish therefore to state with all possible emphasis that the current and continuing proliferation of activities is directly attributable to the decisions of Member States in the various organs of the United Nations. These decisions, sometimes taken in an uncoordinated and even casual way, create new institutions, new demands for documentation and services and generally add to the workload of services which have not been commensurately expanded. There is often, I may add, a wide discrepancy between such decisions of Governments and the views expressed by their representatives in the intergovernmental organs dealadministrative and budgetary questions.

We must be realistic in trying to deal with this institutional inflation, which is not a new phenomenon nor one unique to the United Nations. We have to recognize that political considerations play a dominant role in organization and that the United Nations system, for better or for worse, is no exception to this rule. We have to accept that a perfectly logical and functional institutional system is probably not within our reach and that we must make the existing one function better. We also have to accept a certain degree of institutional escapism as the Governments of the world grapple with new and overwhelming problems. By this I mean that it is sometimes easier to call a conference, or even to found a new institution, than to confront a complex problem directly.

Within these limits, we must renew our efforts to rationalize our institutions, to make them more effective for their stated purposes, to direct and co-ordinate their activities for the maximum cumulative effect and to make them as responsive as possible to the real problems of our time. I and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation, together with our colleagues in the Secretariat and in the specialized agencies, will continue our efforts towards these ends. But these efforts cannot be effective without the active co-operation and understanding of the States members of the organizations concerned.

In an effort to improve the working methods of the General Assembly, I presented to the membership in June this year a report on the rationalization of the procedures and organization of the Assembly. Recognizing that a major modification of existing practices and procedures would require careful deliberation and lengthy negotiation among the Members, I have advanced a series of relatively modest proposals for improving the Assembly's work which will, I hope, command substantial support at the very beginning of the thirty-fourth session. The general objective of these proposals is to overcome some of the difficulties of coping, within the original time-frame allocated 34 years ago to the General Assembly session, with a workload involving four times as many items and three times the membership which existed when the United Nations was founded. I would hope that these proposals are only a beginning and that Member States will wish to continue the process of improvement with more radical steps.

The Geneva meeting on Indo-Chinese refugees, which I have already mentioned in its humanitarian context, may provide some ideas for future efforts to cope with pressing problems on a basis different from the more traditional conference approach. With the full co-operation of Member States and in spite of the different political preoccupations of many of them, we were able to hold a short, business-like meeting devoted to a single primary purpose. The practical results of this meeting attest both to the spirit in which the participants came to it and to the usefulness of the method. I shall welcome suggestions from Member States as to other major problems which they feel might best be dealt with through ad hoc meetings of this kind.

X

The capacity of an organization to deal effectively with its business and to be seen to have a useful impact is an essential basis for public confidence. In the United Nations, this simple maxim is complicated by the immense diversity of the public involved, and by the scale and complexity of the problems dealt with.

I feel obliged to say frankly that I continue to be disturbed by prevailing public attitudes to the United Nations and by our apparent inability to generate the kind of broad public support, confidence and understanding without which we shall not achieve the great objectives upon which mankind's future prosperity-even survival-may depend. It is true that there are moments, usually moments of international crisis and apprehension, when the potential of the Organization is realized and its usefulness in maintaining international peace and security is widely understood. It is true that there are many countries, especially in the developing world, where the assistance and the great programmes of the United Nations system in the economic and social field are appreciated and regarded as essential guides to the future. It is true that Governments faced with insoluble or unbearable problems do bring them to the appropriate organ of the United Nations in order to get help and share the burden. All of these reactions are important signs of what the United Nations can and should usefully do.

What has not so far been adequately developed is a general and consistent support of the aims and activities of the United Nations as a whole, as a working model for a genuine world community. This is particularly obvious in the response, or lack of it, to many of the decisions of the Security Council. It is clear also in the reluctance of many Governments to bring to the United Nations problems which obviously fall under the terms of the Charter until there is no other alternative and the problems have become too explosive and dangerous to ignore.

This lack of consistent support for the world Organization, created by Governments in 1945 to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, may not seem to be of too great account in normal times, although it certainly means that the United Nations cannot always adequately perform the functions it was set up to perform. There is, however, a very real danger of losing precious time in acquiring what all agree is needed—the habit and experience necessary to make our world work in the new and highly complex circumstances of the 1980s. More dangerous still is the ever-present possibility that we shall be confronted, for a variety of expected and unexpected reasons, with a dramatic threat to international peace and security which the United Nations, in its present stage of development, may not be able to deal with.

These two considerations seem to me the most cogent reasons for renewing our efforts to gain widespread confidence and support among the peoples of the world. It is necessary to convince people that the struggle for peace, justice, equity and human dignity which is waged here at the United Nations is very much their struggle, and that their support, understanding and, if necessary, criticism, can make a real difference to the outcome. We shall not be able to do this by information programmes alone. We shall need, on important issues above all, to be able to show that the world Organization can, and does, treat them on their merits; that it can, and does, produce results which, however imperfect, constitute the difference between order and chaos, or even, in extreme circumstances, between peace and destruction.

This is a challenge which all of us have to accept if we are seriously to live up to the responsibility and the privilege of working in one way or another for the United Nations. If we can increasingly live up to this challenge, we shall also be in a better position to ask that the media report more comprehensively and positively on our work in all of its aspects.

Public attitudes to the work of the United Nations range from strong support, through a mixture of lack of interest, boredom and even contempt, to active hostility in a few cases. Some of these attitudes can be explained by special circumstances. Others can only be explained by a failure to communicate and to convince. There is very little general understanding of the United Nations as a political institution, or as a system of specialized organizations, evolving in the new complexities and crosscurrents of the contemporary world. There is almost no general knowledge of its capacity or importance as a balancing factor, as a safetyvalve or in conflict control. As the memories of the Second World War fade, there seems to be less and less comprehension of the necessity of building, step by step, the framework of a working world community capable of withstanding the storms and facing the common problems of an uncertain future. Instead, small, and more or less irrelevant, matters tend to figure large in the popular image of the world Organization.

It is this situation which needs to be changed if we are to proceed from more or less abstract discussion to the phase of realization which at every step will require solid popular support. I hope that all Governments of Member States will consider this fundamental requirement of their Organization. I hope they will help us in the Secretariat, as well as all the voluntary organizations which are willing and anxious to be of assistance, to build the public support and confidence required if we are to make the United Nations increasingly effective.

In this connexion, I am pleased to note that at its last session the General Assembly reaffirmed the necessity to foster in world opinion better knowledge of the aims and achievements of the United Nations, including the principles and purposes of the new international economic order. The Assembly requested me to take the necessary measures to ensure the close collaboration of Member States, the specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and other information bodies in framing public information policies and programmes of the United Nations system. The Assembly also established a Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities, consisting of 41 Member States.

In the light of the constructive and helpful debate which has taken place this year in the Committee, as well as in its Ad Hoc Working Group, I look forward to receiving the general guidelines within which new directions for United Nations information activities may be sought and practical measures taken with a view to widening public support for the Organization.

ΧI

In my last annual report I stated that the concept of international civil service is at the heart of efforts to build an effective system of world order. For that reason especially, I believe that Member States should keep this basic issue constantly in mind. I have to say frankly that in my view the international civil service is at present at a critical juncture. Underlying this situation is the fact that an increasing number of Member States seem less willing to observe, in practice, the obligations they assumed under the Charter with respect to the independent nature of the Secretariat. This trend is self-sustaining in the sense that, if one State or group of States does not honour these obligations, other States tend to follow suit for fear of losing their stake in the Secretariat. These developments put at risk the noble and essential experiment outlined in the Charter of building a truly international Secretariat working together with a common purpose for the United Nations.

In previous years I have commented on the attitudes and actions required to ensure the achievement of an effective, stable and independent international civil service. The full cooperation and understanding of Governments in this process is still not forthcoming, and I believe that there is an urgent need to re-evaluate our positions and attitudes towards the international civil service in the full knowledge that there are differing views on the matter. It will not be in the interests of the international community or of the Member States if the realization of the concept of an independent international civil service is so frustrated that it becomes more difficult to recruit, on a broad geographical basis, the highly competent and dedicated men and women we need to serve the cause of peace.

I mentioned the divergent views held by Member States concerning the very concept of an international civil service. It is evident that changes are taking place around us which have altered some of the basic professional requirements of the service. These changes have also affected the attitudes and commitment of staff members with respect to the Secretariat. We are in the process of trying to come to terms with these factors which, if neglected, will only weaken the international civil service. We are in particular making efforts to improve the situation with respect to the position of women and the role of developing countries.

Obviously it will take time to resolve these and other basic problems. During this process it is essential to strengthen our commitment to the principles and the objectives of the Charter on this question. The evolution, of an effective international civil service is essential to the future usefulness of the United Nations in all its diverse fields of activity. Provided we have the commitment of the Member States to this goal and their understanding of the problems involved, we should be in a position to make significant progress on this fundamental problem.

XII

In keeping with the commitment I made during the thirty-third session of the General Assembly, I have pursued a determined policy of budgetary constraint which is reflected in the significant slow-down in the rate of real growth of my regular budget proposals. While the initial budget estimates for the previous and current bienniums provided for rates of real increase of 3.5 and 2.2 per cent respectively, the initial estimates for the 1980-1981 biennium have been limited to a real growth rate of less than 1 per cent.

The increasing financial burden imposed on Member States requires that we persevere and succeed in our efforts to achieve budgetary restraint as well as the most effective utilization of resources through their redeployment, as appropriate, and a rearrangement of priorities. The results of these efforts are reflected in the proposed programme budget for 1980-1981, which has been predicated on extensive redeployment of resources and in which a significant number of new activities are to be financed out of the resources released as a result of the completion or discontinuation of old activities. I believe the results of this first stage in the introduction of the programme monitoring system are encouraging and I intend therefore to extend it at the various levels of programme and resource management.

Difficulties continue to be experienced in the financing of peace-keeping operations, the contributions for which- whether assessed or voluntary—have been insufficient to meet their continuing costs. Troop-contributing countries are not being reimbursed on a current and full basis in accordance with the rates agreed upon. They have conveyed to me their very serious concern over this situation, which places a heavy burden on their Governments. It is becoming clear that the continuation of this trend may make it difficult or impossible for some troop-contributing countries with smaller resources to participate in peace-keeping operations; this in turn may militate against the important principle of equitable geographical distribution in the composition of peacekeeping forces. In any case, as a matter of equity, it is not acceptable that the burden of the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations should fall so heavily on a small group of States which have voluntarily undertaken the responsibility for providing contingents for these operations.

An important question of principle is involved here. The maintenance of international peace and security is a collective responsibility, which should be borne by all States Members of the United Nations.

I therefore appeal to all Governments to give the United Nations peace-keeping operations all possible financial support. In particular, I appeal to those Member States which have not paid their assessments to reconsider their position.

XIII

Until the present time, for a variety of complex political reasons, it has usually proved difficult, if not impossible, for the international community to take positive actions in advance of events. On the political side especially, the time for concerted action has tended to come only when conflict or disaster is imminent or has already occurred. The actions of the international community have often been more in the nature of curative or palliative reactions rather than of bold initiatives to forestall problems or to make better arrangements for the future. This tendency has limited the possibilities of the United Nations as an instrument for concerting the policies of Member States towards constructive goals.

It is not enough to await new—and unthinkable—global disasters in order to bring about a new phase in international relations— a phase of concerted statesmanship positively oriented towards the future rather than dominated by, and reacting to, events and conditions from the past.

Obviously the primary objective of the United Nations must remain the survival of the human race and its environment in the best possible conditions. But this effort is likely in the end to be abortive, unless at the same time we progressively build up the working elements of a global civilization and order unprecedentedly wide in its scope and diversity. This will require, among other things, increasingly effective institutions, the universal acceptance of a minimum basic code of international conduct, and a steady growth of the civility, trust and respect with which nations, as well as individuals, deal with each other. If these aims could be achieved, many doors now closed to progress would be opened, and many precious resources, both human and material, could be used in more constructive and useful ways.

Excessive parochialism can be a dangerous and wasteful force in international as well as national affairs. The United Nations is unique in providing a place where national interests can be articulated, group interests identified and global interests distilled and worked for. If national and group interests can interact in the United Nations within this third dimension of global priorities and with a determination to get real results, it should be possible to move forward steadily on many of the great issues where we now seem to be becalmed.

There are many positive elements which should encourage such a process. Despite the unprecedented level and destructive capacity of armaments, there appears to be a general determination to avoid a third world war. We have the instruments and understandings, in the United Nations and outside it, to carry out these intentions if there is the will to do so. The age of colonial domination, in the classic sense of the term, is over, and instead we have a world of independent nations. We have a technological capacity undreamed of 30 years ago. We have a new understanding and awareness of the nature of our economic and social problems and of the generation of global problems which are in some measure the result of technological revolution. And we have at least some of the instruments which might be used to deal with them. Racism and prejudice have dwindled and are everywhere -under attack. The concept of human rights is becoming an important factor in the life of humanity. New methods of conflict control, such as United Nations peace-keeping, have emerged and have proved their value. There is a determined effort to attack poverty and inequity on a global scale.

In the presence of such undoubted gains, it is worth considering why there is a prevalent mood of anxiety and even bewilderment. Why do Governments continue, often in contravention of the Charter, to take shelter in narrow, nationalistic policies and to use the means provided in the Charter only as a last resort when they find themselves facing impossible risks? It is clear that a lack of mutual confidence and good faith still prevents the 151 Governments which have agreed to abide by the Charter from making it work as intended.

I believe that we are now witnessing some signs of a growing mutual confidence and good faith, often originating in working relationships on difficult issues here at the United Nations. This is an essential element for a move forward from the present age of doubt and anxiety to a new and more generous period of statesmanship. There is nothing basically wrong with the existing international mechanism except the apparent inability of Governments to use it to its full potential. For that to happen, we need to develop a confidence in, and a vision of, the future which is not incessantly clouded or neutralized by narrow aims or temporary setbacks. With confidence and vision the United Nations is capable of becoming a decisive instrument in human development.

The days of national supremacy appear to be over. The community of nations, at the outset of a new era, faces the test of an uncertain future. The United Nations was set up to help all Governments to meet that test together. I hope the Organization will be used increasingly to build the confidence and develop the vision necessary to guarantee the future.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

Disarmament and related matters

Devoted largely to following up the recommendations and decisions adopted in 1978 by the General Assembly at its tenth special session on disarmament or decisions adopted at the regular 1978 session as the direct result of the special session, 1979 was to a large extent a year of consolidation. During the year, discussions, debates and negotiations on disarmament and related matters were held in the United Nations Disarmament Commission, the Committee on Disarmament and the General Assembly. Substantive work was begun in the Commission and Committee by the revitalized machinery for disarmament established at the special session.

The Disarmament Commission, the reconstituted deliberative body of all United Nations Member States, held its first substantive session in New York from 14 May to 8 June 1979. It was almost fully occupied during 1979 with its responsibilities in connexion with the comprehensive programme of disarmament, and adopted by consensus the elements of such a programme. The Committee on Disarmament, the enlarged negotiating body, was to negotiate the programme on the basis of those elements.

The Committee on Disarmament held its first session at Geneva between 24 January and 27 April and from 14 June to 14 August 1979. The Committee developed its rules of procedure, agenda and programme of work and considered matters relating to nuclear disarmament, non-nuclear and collateral measures, and general and complete disarmament.

The year was also the first full year of existence of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies. Five new studies on various disarmament issues were added by the General Assembly in 1979 to the six already being carried out following various mandates of the Assembly from previous years.

An important bilateral event of the year concerning arms limitation was the signing, on 18 June, of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II). The General Assembly expressed the hope that the Treaty would enter into force at an early date and that negotiations intended to achieve as soon as possible agreement on further measures for the limitation and reduction of strategic arms (SALT III) would begin promptly.

The General Assembly in 1979 had on its agenda 18 items on disarmament and adopted a total of 38 resolutions and a decision concerning them.

Many of the resolutions concerned nuclear disarmament, covering both established and new questions. One recorded the Assembly's grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing was continuing unabated and reaffirmed its conviction that a treaty to achieve the cessation of all nuclear tests by all States for all time was a matter of highest priority. By another, dealing with the Latin American nuclear-weapon-free zone, the Assembly welcomed the fact that the five nuclear-weapon powers had undertaken fully to respect the region's status as a denuclearized zone. By a resolution on Israeli nuclear armament, the Assembly appealed to all States to end co-operation with Israel which could assist it in acquiring and developing nuclear weapons and called for a study on the question, and, by another, called for a comprehensive report on South Africa's plans and capabilities in the nuclear field.

By other resolutions, the Assembly: proclaimed the 1980s as the Second United Nations Disarmament Decade; urged, by a Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament, all States to expedite measures and pursue policies to strengthen international peace and security and to build confidence among States; and called for the convening in 1981 of a conference in Colombo, Sri Lanka, to consider ways to implement the Assembly's 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.

These matters, among others, are the subject of this chapter.

Committee on Disarmament

Report of the Committee on Disarmament

The Committee on Disarmament, the negotiating body that succeeded the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, convened at Geneva for its 1979 session from 24 January to 27 April and from 14 June to 14 August. During this period the Committee held 52 plenary meetings and 50 informal meetings, during which it dealt with both organizational and substantive questions.

The 39 United Nations Member States represented on the Committee were Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire. Although the Committee was also open to China, as a nuclear-weapon State, it did not participate in 1979. Denmark, Finland, Spain, Switzerland and Viet Nam, which were not Committee members, were invited, at their request, to participate in the work of the Committee or its subsidiary bodies, or make statements relating to the discussion of specific questions.

In a message conveyed to the Committee at its opening meeting, the Secretary-General stated that the Committee was an indispensable instrument of the international disarmament strategy contemplated in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, adopted in 1978.1 While the improvements that had been made in the machinery for substantive negotiations would justify a measure of confidence in the success of the Committee's work, the final test remained what it had always been: the conclusion of practical disarmament agreements capable of ending the arms race.

The agenda and programme of work of the Committee was elaborated by an ad hoc working group open to all Committee members. The Committee was to deal with cessation of the arms race and disarmament and other matters in the following areas: nuclear weapons in all aspects; chemical and other weapons of mass destruction; conventional weapons; reduction of military budgets and of armed forces; disarmament and development; disarmament and international security; collateral measures, confidence-building measures and verification methods; and a comprehensive programme of disarmament leading to general and complete disarmament under effective international con-

Within that framework, the Committee, for 1979, decided to consider the issues of a nuclear test ban, cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, chemical weapons, new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and radiological weapons. In its report to the General Assembly in 1979, the Committee provided an account of its work during the year.

Nuclear test ban

The discussion of a nuclear test ban centred on the tripartite negotiations under way between the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States on a treaty prohibiting nuclear-weapon tests in all environments.

The United Kingdom in the early part of the session said that it was making strenuous efforts in the tripartite negotiations and that good progress had been made. Agreement in principle had been reached on most of the major issues and the parties hoped quickly to resolve the outstanding ones. The aim, the United Kingdom said, was a multilateral treaty with verification provisions providing maximum confidence of compliance, and a protocol, integral to the treaty, covering peaceful nuclear explosions. The United States also said that the three parties were pushing towards resolution of the issues standing in the way of an agreement and referred to the substantial progress made in comprehensive test-ban negotiations during the past year. The USSR stated that general and complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests was one of the questions of great importance requiring solution without delay.

The discussions in the Committee were marked by expressions of disappointment at the failure of the three members engaged in negotiations to produce a draft treaty or at least a comprehensive situation report.

In particular, Committee members belonging to a group known as the Group of 21—Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire—voiced frustration over the continued absence of results in an important area on which agreement among the three had seemed close at hand for the greater part of two years.

Cuba, as co-ordinator of and on behalf of the Group of 21, stated that the General Assembly had for several years accorded highest priority to a comprehensive test ban. Noting that the Committee had not been able to discharge the mandate entrusted to it to negotiate a treaty on a ban because no draft treaty had been submitted, the Group called for full attention to the question at the second part of the 1979 session, and urged the three negotiating States to present a comprehensive report on the state of their negotiations.

Sweden suggested that the three powers give a full account of their remaining difficulties if further delay was expected, while Mexico, noting that the United Nations had been seeking the total cessation of nuclear-weapon testing for more than a quarter of a century, stressed the urgent need for the Committee to have a preliminary draft treaty at an early date. Japan held that it was lack of political will on the part of the nuclear-weapon States that had hindered the realization of a comprehensive test ban.

In the view of several Eastern European States, including Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Poland, the negotiations appeared encouraging. Czechoslovakia perceived them as being at an advanced stage and the German Democratic Republic said the USSR had made proposals which could yield important progress. Eastern European member States expressed the view that cessation of testing was linked to achievement of progress in nuclear disarmament as a whole. In that context, they referred to a proposal for negotiations on ending the production of nuclear weapons and reducing stockpiles, which they, as well as Mongolia, had submitted to the Committee at the current session (see below).

Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands expressed disappointment about the slow rate of progress and stated their desire to move on to negotiations on the testing of global facilities for verification of a ban by seismological means. The Netherlands presented a working paper on the subject—a study on the use of short-period initial-motion data of direct longitudinal waves to discriminate between earthquakes and explosions.

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events met from 19 February to 2 March for its seventh session, and again from 16 to 27 July, and submitted progress reports to the Committee. After examining and approving the last report, on 7 August, the Committee decided, on a proposal by Sweden, to have the Group continue its work and to invite the World Meteorological Organization to continue to participate in the Group's work. The report elaborated on the Group's 1978 reports2 by showing how seismological science could be applied co-operatively to facilitate the international exchange of seismological data under a test-ban treaty and a protocol on peaceful nuclear explosions. Sweden submitted to the Committee a working paper on its international seismological data-centre demonstration facilities.

The views of Committee members on the work of the Ad Hoc Group were generally positive, notwithstanding that some had reservations about the global testing of the seismic data-exchange system.

Towards the end of the session, the United Kingdom, speaking on behalf also of the USSR and the United States, provided an oral status report to the Committee, observing that the tripartite negotiations had continued intensively over the year. It reiterated that the parties were agreed that the treaty should ban any nuclearweapon test explosion in any environment and cover nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes under an integral protocol. They envisaged that after a certain period the parties to the treaty would hold a conference to review its operation. Negotiations during the year had concentrated on verification and were continuing on detailed arrangements on that complex subject, though it had been agreed that verification would be by national technical means, with the possibility of on-site inspection. There would also be an exchange of seismic data, the modalities of which would be influenced by the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Group and would involve establishment of a committee of experts, drawn from the parties to the treaty, to implement the exchange. The United Kingdom gave the assurance that the three negotiating partners were determined to achieve an agreement meeting international expectations and attracting the widest possible adherence, and would make every effort to conclude the negotiations early and successfully.

A number of States, including Australia, Canada, Egypt, India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka, expressed disappointment in the status report as being general, less than hoped for, or similar to earlier ones. India commented on the seeming unwillingness of the three States to negotiate within the Committee.

Cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament

During discussion of nuclear disarmament and cessation of the nuclear arms race-from 19 to 23 April and from 2 to 6 July— the members of the Committee on Disarmament generally reaffirmed their previous positions regarding the question.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, later joined by Romania, submitted to the Committee a document containing those countries' approach to negotiations on ending the production of all types of nuclear weapons and gradually reducing their stockpiles until they were completely destroyed. The USSR pointed out that the paper recognized that the elimination of nuclear weapons would involve mutually agreed stages and verification measures, although each disarmament measure must be an organic part of the nuclear disarmament programme as a whole. It regarded the Committee as a suitable forum for the negotiations but felt that participation by all the nuclear powers was essential. It also held that the existing balance of nuclear strength should remain undisturbed at all stages; thus, it stated, the principle of not jeopardizing the security of States would be upheld. Finally, the approach should be correlated with existing negotiations and arrangements already agreed upon to limit the nuclear arms race.

Romania supported the idea that the Committee at the first stage should organize a broad exchange of views and consultations on ways and means of starting the negotiations.

Nigeria felt that the Eastern European initiative could provide a timely basis for starting negotiations; it had not ignored the need to maintain credible security of all States during the stage-by-stage process of cessation of production and gradual elimination of nuclear weapons. Nigeria observed that certain basic factors were generally accepted as a prerequisite for any effective nuclear disarmament negotiations, among them the undiminished security of all States, adequate verification measures, negotiations in stages, and special responsibilities devolving on the two nuclear-weapon States with the largest arsenals.

Mexico stated that the proposal should receive serious study in the Committee. and felt that the provisions of the Final Document of the tenth special session might provide a sound basis for constructive consultations and negotiations. Algeria said that, in view of the difficulty of achieving nuclear disarmament, it endorsed the implementation of appropriate measures by stages as suggested in the Eastern European paper.

The United States explained that, while it favoured elimination of nuclear weapons and did not disagree with the objective of the paper, it disagreed with the method by which the proposal sought to eliminate nuclear weapons. Nuclear arsenals could not be separated from the integrated defence posture of the nuclearweapon States and those who depended on them for their security. General disarmament would require elimination of all kinds of weaponsnuclear, other weapons of mass destruction, and conventional. Elimination of one class of weapons without compensating reductions in other classes would give considerable advantage to States that possessed large arsenals of those other classes. Thus, in the United States view, the proposal addressed the problem of nuclear disarmament without considering the effect it would have on the security of States. Reducing reliance on nuclear weapons was a long, difficult and serious task which had begun with the second series of strategic arms limitation talks (which, along with the treaty which culminated the talks, was known as SALT II), to be followed soon, it hoped, by a comprehensive test ban, by SALT III, and by other appropriate and verifiable measures. It saw no reason to turn away from that approach.

The United Kingdom expressed the view that consideration had to be given to the question of whether, at this time, proposals for the reduction of nuclear weapons and the gradual reduction of nuclear stockpiles until they were completely destroyed would risk diminishing the security of any nation or group of nations, and to whether the measures involved would be verifiable. Measures which disturbed the balance in favour of States with the most troops and conventional weapons were not acceptable to the United Kingdom.

France stated that an unrealistic attempt to ensure security through the abolition of the nuclear weapon alone, regardless of the broader political and military context, would compromise the over-all military balance and so jeopardize security. In the current circumstances, France suggested that the appropriate organ to discuss the reduction in nuclear arsenals might be the Disarmament Commission. Several Western States, including Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands, expressed similar views.

Japan believed that, to achieve the abolishment of nuclear weapons, the Committee should take various measures to arrest the nuclear arms race while strengthening the non-proliferation regime, and gradually reduce nuclear armaments.

In the light of the discussions in the Committee, the Group of 21 revised a working paper they had submitted earlier in the year containing the Group's approach to how the Committee should proceed to consider the item on the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament. They noted with satisfaction the initiative of the Eastern European States; while maintaining their full adherence to the action programme outlined in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,3 the Group believed that such an initiative might be a stimulus for exploratory consultations leading to effective negotiations. The Group was of the view that the Committee on Disarmament was the most suitable forum for such negotiations. Although other negotiations could go on in parallel with the multilateral negotiations, the Group believed that negotiations conducted outside the Committee should not hinder negotiations within it. The need for undiminished security of all States in meaningful disarmament negotiations was noted as having been recognized by all States. The Group proposed that the Committee, as a first step, should endeavour in informal meetings and consultations to identify the prerequisites and elements for multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament and delineate a course of action.

The Committee on Disarmament pointed out in its report to the General Assembly that, while the exchanges of views on this item were most useful, they needed to be continued and intensified during the Committee's next session so that an agreed basis for progress might be found.

By a joint letter of 27 June 1979, the USSR and the United States transmitted to the Committee the texts of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II), the Protocol to the Treaty, a Joint Statement of Principles and Basic Guidelines for Subsequent Negotiations on the Limitation of Strategic Arms, and a joint USSR/United States communique. They had been signed by the President of the United States, Jimmy Carter, and the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, Leonid I. Brezhnev, in Vienna on 18 June, at the conclusion of meetings which began on 15 June.

On 2 July, the United States transmitted additional documents relating to the Treaty. These were agreed statements and common understandings, a memorandum of understanding, statements of data on the numbers of strategic offensive arms and a USSR statement on the Tu-22M "Backfire" bomber.

Assurances to non-nuclear States against the threat or use of nuclear weapons

The principal discussion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclearweapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons was held from 25 to 29 June 1979, although views on the question were also expressed at other stages of the Committee's discussions on nuclear disarmament.

Early in the session, Pakistan reiterated its position in favour of uniform assurances by nuclear States to non-nuclear-weapon States, stating that the formulation of assurances on non-use of nuclear weapons — "negative" security assurances—sought by the General Assembly in a resolution of 21 December 1976⁴ provided the most viable basis for evolving such a uniform obligation by the nuclear powers. In March, Pakistan proposed that the Committee consider the conclusion of an international convention on the question and submitted a draft convention; in June it submitted a working paper on the nature, scope and content, as well as the form, of effective international arrangements for such assurances.

By article I of Pakistan's draft, nuclearweapon States parties, as a first step towards a complete nuclear-weapons ban, would pledge not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States not parties to the security arrangements of some nuclearweapon States, without prejudice to obligations arising from nuclear-free-zone treaties. The same parties, by article II, would undertake to avoid even the possibility of such use or threat in any contingency and to achieve nuclear disarmament in the shortest possible time. By article III, breaches could be brought to the Security Council's attention under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.⁵ The convention would be concluded for an indefinite period, to lapse when nuclear disarmament and the elimination of nuclear weapons had been achieved (article IV). Articles V to VII dealt with amendments, signature, depositary, ratification, accession, entry into force (following the deposit of instruments of ratification of the USSR and the United States and a number— not specified— of other States), registration, notification and official languages.

The USSR continued to hold that the most complete and effective solution to the problem of protecting non-nuclear-weapon States from nuclear weapons would be through universal legal guarantees agreed to by the nuclear-weapon powers. Referring to a working paper submitted by six Eastern European members of the Committee and Mongolia, containing a draft international convention on strengthening guarantees, the USSR stated its firm support of the idea of concluding such a convention with the participation, on the one hand, of nuclear-weapon States that were prepared to provide appropriate guarantees, and, on the other, of interested non-nuclear-weapon States that would renounce the production or acquisition of nuclear weapons and did not have them on their territory. It urged the Committee to work on preparation of a convention without delay.

Hungary, in introducing the working paper containing the draft convention on behalf of its sponsors—Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR—emphasized that, such partial measures notwithstanding, only achievement of the permanent prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons and nuclear disarmament, leading to the complete elimination of such weapons, could result in complete security in the nuclear era.

By article I of the seven-power draft, nuclearweapon States parties would pledge not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against nonnuclear States parties which renounced the production and acquisition of such weapons and which had none in their territory or under their jurisdiction or control anywhere, extending, under article II, also to the armed forces and installations under the jurisdiction and control of such States. Consultations could be requested between parties, under article III, to clarify the circumstances of possible contrary actions. The duration of the convention was indefinite (article IV) and secession was permitted with three months' notice to the Security Council if exceptional circumstances placed a party's higher interests in jeopardy. Articles V to VII concerned amendments, signature, depositary, ratification, entry into force (the required number of States was not specified), notification, registration and authentic texts.

Noting the importance of reliable assurances non-nuclear-weapon through a convention, the German Democratic Republic stressed that such States, as parties to such a convention, would be offered a real equivalent for their renunciation of nuclear weapons. That would encourage a decision by those States not to produce or acquire nuclear weapons and not to allow their deployment on their territory. Poland stressed the minimal differences in views on the question and the constructiveness and flexibility of the position of the socialist States of Eastern Europe. That position, it noted, allowed for security guarantees in special agreements concluded with individual nonnuclear-weapon States, or for giving agreed, universal, juridical guarantees contained in an international convention.

The United Kingdom, while it welcomed statements made at the General Assembly's 1978 special session by the nuclear-weapon States giving negative security assurances to nonnuclear-weapon States,6 said that those assurances were so different in character that it would be immensely difficult to fuse them into a common form of negative security assurance in an international convention. It felt that there were two distinct aspects to the question, namely, the nature of the security assurance itself and the form in which it was expressed. The United Kingdom drew attention to a point raised by the Netherlands, that there would have to be assurance that the non-nuclear-weapon States concerned were indeed non-nuclear; adherence to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (Non-Proliferation Treaty)7 would provide the clearest assurance in that regard.

The United States, expressing its preference for solemn declarations on security guarantees, held that the varied approaches, indicated very little hope that the differences could be worked out to enable elaboration of a single convention; it was unlikely that the Committee would be able to devise a common formula that would satisfy each of the nuclear-weapon powers. The United States suggested that one way of enhancing the individual assurances would be for the Committee to recommend that the General Assembly adopt a resolution recognizing the legitimate security concerns of States which had undertaken firm obligations not to acquire nuclear explosive devices, and taking note of and setting forth the individual assurances given by the nuclear-weapon States. The United States submitted a working paper explaining its approach and containing an illustrative Assembly resolution.

France, while understanding the legitimate security concerns of States that had entered into commitments not to acquire nuclear weapons, did not believe that the concept of a convention of universal scope on negative guarantees corresponded to the current conditions of the international community, security conditions being too different, depending on regions and political and strategic situations.

The Federal Republic of Germany stressed that its position was that the assurances given by the nuclear-weapon States in their unilateral declarations were self-executing, legally binding and recognized in international law, and felt that it would be difficult to conceive of a multilateral convention on the very sensitive element of the security of States.

Sweden stated that it supported negative assurances in principle but felt that it was too early to give preference to any specific model for co-ordination of existing pledges.

The position that an international instrument would provide the preferred solution was supported by a number of Committee members, including Algeria, Argentina, Egypt, Ethiopia, Iran, Mexico and Zaire.

India observed that non-aligned States preferred an international convention on the question since such an instrument would provide an important incentive towards nuclear disarmament. It felt that security based on nuclear deterrence could not be lasting or genuine. India could not accept the legitimate use of nuclear weapons which, in its view, was implicit in negative guarantees. Yugoslavia stated that the issue of negative guarantees was linked not only to relations between nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States but to relations between the nuclear-weapon States themselves.

On 5 July, the Committee established an ad hoc working group open to all its members to consider and negotiate effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. The working group held seven meetings as well as informal consultations between 13 July and 2 August. The Committee approved the group's report on 7 August. The group noted in its conclusions the wide recognition of the need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. There was no objection in principle to the idea of an international convention; however, the difficulties involved were pointed out. Also discussed was the possibility of a General Assembly resolution, and reference was made to a possible Security Council resolution and to declarations to be deposited with the Secretary-General as an interim arrangement. The preliminary examination, while clarifying certain issues, had underlined the complexity of elements requiring further consideration.

The Committee approved the group's recommendation that at the beginning of its 1980 session the Committee should continue negotiations on this question.

Chemical weapons

The Committee on Disarmament devoted a major part of its deliberations in 1979 to elaborating an agreement on the prohibition of chemical weapons. The discussions ranged from the consideration of procedural arrangement for negotiations to such substantive issues as the scope of a ban, the agents to be prohibited and verification of compliance, as well as possible provisions of a future convention on the subject. The urgency and importance of negotiating such a convention was stressed by all Committee members which participated in the discussions including Czechoslovakia, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Poland and Sweden. Italy, the Netherlands and Poland submitted working papers containing a proposed plan of action and possible procedures for the Committee in dealing with chemical disarmament negotiations and the development of a chemical-weapons ban.

Most of those who spoke favoured a comprehensive approach, that is, a convention covering prohibition of the development, production stockpiling, acquisition, retention and transfer of chemicals for weapons purposes, and of chemical weapons themselves. Although it was generally agreed that a prohibition of chemical weapons should not detract from the obligations assumed by States under the Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, of 17 June 1925, opinion differed regarding inclusion of the prohibition of the use of chemical weapons in a convention.

France held that prohibition of use should be based on a combination of two criteria: the toxicity threshold (the minimum dosage producing a toxic effect in the organism) and the safety factor, which might be defined as the ratio between the effect threshold (the minimum dose producing transient physiological effects without consequences for the organism) and the lethal dose.

Poland deemed it necessary to differentiate between chemical-weapons agents on the basis of levels of toxicity so that one could easily distinguish between chemical agents with military potential and those commonly used in agriculture (herbicides, defoliants and pest-control agents) which, because of their low toxicity levels, had no practical military significance. It submitted an outline of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and on their destruction.

Denmark, a non-member participating in the discussions, said that a ban on chemical weapons should be as comprehensive and well defined as possible and thus should also include the military use of herbicides and defoliants. Another participating non-member, Finland, submitted a working document on a Finnish project relating to chemical identification of chemical-weapons agents, and a second concerning a Finnish study of identification of potential organophosphorus warfare agents, outlining an approach for standardization of techniques and reference data.

Canada stated that the best hope for early progress would be in the direction of an agreement based on the concept of excluded activities rather than excluded agents. Although comprehensive in all respects, the treaty should provide for its own gradual implementation by successive stages, each subject to appropriate control.

It was generally agreed in the Committee that activities could be permitted for non-hostile purposes (industrial research, medical or other peaceful purposes) as well as for military purposes not related to chemical warfare.

The question of verification of compliance with the provisions of the proposed convention presented one of the most difficult problems. While it was agreed that effective verification of the destruction of chemical weapons was a crucial aspect, views differed on whether or not effective on-site verification measures were technically feasible. A number of speakers, including those of France, Italy, Kenya and Venezuela, felt it was indispensable that the system of verification be of an international character to give assurances that its provisions were being observed.

In the view of Australia, verification procedures should include consultations, an exchange of information about chemical weapons and the manufacture of substances and, above all, on-site inspection to certify not only the destruction of stocks but also that proscribed chemicals were not being manufactured by units producing similar chemical substances. The United Kingdom submitted a report on a visit to that country by chemical-weapons experts from 19 Governments in March 1979 to inspect a former nerve-agent plant being demolished and to tour a civil chemical factory.

Denmark and the Federal Republic of Germany suggested that verification should be as unintrusive as possible and that the possibility of making use of modern technology, including observation satellites, should be explored, so as to rule out the disclosure of commercial and industrial secrets. Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany and Italy shared the view, however, that some form of physical access to the territory of the State being verified was unavoidable. The Federal Republic of Germany submitted a working paper on its experience in some aspects of international verification of non-production of chemical weapons, including the results of a March 1979 international workshop on the subject.

Mongolia, on the other hand, stated that it was possible to secure effective control by national means of verification, in combination with a few international measures. The latter, it stressed, must not be used to the detriment of the national interests of States. Hungary noted a growing trend towards the establishment of international machinery for verification which, it felt, might easily begin to function independently from the actual disarmament agreements. It stated that methods of verification based on national means, supplemented by international arrangements in a mutually acceptable form and attached to concrete disarmament instruments, could become an efficient method of verification.

Brazil, on behalf of the Group of 21, introduced in April a proposal to establish an ad hoc working group, open to all Committee members, to elaborate a draft convention on prohibiting the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction. The Group believed that negotiations within the Committee might proceed in parallel with the bilateral contacts under way between the USSR and the United States.

The proposal received support from Canada, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and others. Both the USSR and the United States had serious doubts concerning the proposal, the United States holding that such a group would hinder rather than assist the bilateral process. Eastern European countries preferred a Polish suggestion for setting up an open-ended contact group to seek to define further the most appropriate methods and forms of the Committee's work and to harmonize them with the bilateral efforts in order to accelerate progress towards early agreement on the prohibition of chemical weapons.

The Committee was not able to reach agreement on the methods and procedures that should be followed in dealing with the question of chemical weapons. In August, France, Italy and the Netherlands submitted an evaluation of the Committee's discussions in 1979 on the prohibition of chemical weapons.

On 7 August, the USSR and the United States submitted a joint report on their bilateral negotiations on the prohibition of chemical weapons. The report, which was orally presented to the Committee on 31 July, stated, among other things, that the two sides believed that the scope of the prohibitions should be determined on the basis of a general-purpose criterion and that parties to the convention should assume the obligation never in any circumstances to develop, produce, stockpile, otherwise acquire, possess or retain supertoxic lethal chemicals, other lethal or highly toxic chemicals or their precursors (with certain exceptions, e.g. chemicals intended for non-hostile purposes), as well as chemical munitions or other means of chemical warfare. The report added that negotiations were continuing on several issues relating to the scope of prohibition.

The USSR and the United States believed that the fulfilment of the obligations to be assumed under the future convention should be subject to adequate verification, based on a combination of national and international measures. International verification measures should include the creation of a consultative committee. National technical means of verification would be used in a manner consistent with generally accepted principles of international law.

The report also noted certain areas concerning which the two powers had been unable to reach agreement, for example the scope of data to be exchanged, certain aspects of international verification measures, and conditions for entry into force of the convention.

The Committee, in its report to the General Assembly, noted the two-power joint statement on their negotiations and their assurance that they would exert their best efforts to complete the negotiations and present a joint initiative as soon as possible. The Committee stated that it would proceed with negotiations at its 1980 session.

New types and systems of weapons of mass destruction; radiological weapons

A two-component agenda item on new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons, and radiological weapons, was considered by the Committee on Disarmament from 10 to 13 July.

The USSR urged the conclusion of a comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction and called on the Committee to continue negotiations to that end. This position was strongly supported by Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland, which stressed their intention to rule out once and for ever any misuse of scientific findings and technological potential for the invention of new means of mass destruction; that goal could be achieved by a comprehensive ban of a preventive nature.

The USSR reiterated a proposal it had put forward in 1978 for the establishment, under the Committee's auspices, of an ad hoc group of governmental experts to consider the question of possible areas of the development of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction. It also pointed out that, to accommodate various comments and wishes, a revised draft agreement it had submitted in 1977,8 expanding on its 1975 initiative for such an agreement,⁹ contained provisions for a comprehensive prohibition, listing examples, and the possibility of supplementing that list and of prohibiting specific types and systems of weapons on the basis of separate agreements.

Also supporting negotiation of an agreement on the prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction, Yugoslavia held that such a prohibition should apply to all weapons of mass destruction, because the essential principle was to end the qualitative proliferation of armaments.

Western States which referred to the question continued to stress that the most effective approach would be by negotiating individual agreements on specific new types of such weapons as they were identified. The United Kingdom felt the best course of action would be to keep the question under review so that the desirability of such agreements could be considered at appropriate times. Similarly, Italy felt the Committee should, in addition, acquire all available data and draw up the legal instruments for banning particular types of mass-destruction weapons as soon as they were identified. The Federal Republic of Germany reiterated its position that the weapons in question had to be dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

Kenya called upon the Committee to support all efforts directed towards narrowing the differences between the two approaches to the question.

In July, the USSR submitted a working document summarizing the principal results of the Committee's discussion. Experts from some countries also provided information. The Committee decided to examine the general question further in 1980.

On 9 July, the USSR and the United States submitted an agreed joint proposal on major elements of a treaty prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons, also known as radioactive material weapons.

Major elements of such a treaty were a definition of "radiological weapons" and undertakings by States parties: not to develop, produce, stockpile, otherwise acquire or possess, or use such weapons; not to employ any radioactive material not defined as a radiological weapon, and not produced by a nuclear explosive device, to cause destruction, damage or injury by means of the radiation produced by the decay of such material; not to assist, encourage or induce any person, group or entity to engage in any of those activities; and to take any measures necessary to prevent loss of and prohibit or prevent diversion of radioactive materials that might be used in radiological weapons and any activities contrary to the treaty anywhere under their jurisdiction.

The use of sources of radiation from radioactive decay for peaceful purposes would not be hindered, and the treaty's provisions would be without prejudice to any generally recognized principles and applicable rules of international law concerning such use; nor would the treaty limit or detract from obligations assumed under the Non-Proliferation Treaty, the 1925 Geneva Protocol, or any existing rules of international law governing armed conflict.

Elements also included provision for consultation and co-operation in solving problems which might arise, including the possible services of international organizations as well as of a consultative committee of experts to be convened at a party's request and whose functions and procedures were to be set out in an annex constituting an integral part of the treaty. Parties could also lodge complaints with the Security Council, with which parties would co-operate in carrying out investigations and in providing assistance deemed rightful.

Other elements referred to amendment procedure, duration of the treaty (unlimited), withdrawal (with three months' notice if extraordinary events jeopardized a party's supreme interests), a review conference (a maximum of 10 years after entry into force) and review conferences thereafter, signature, ratification, accession, depositary (the Secretary-General), registration and authentic texts.

The USSR reiterated that it considered the prohibition of radiological weapons as a part of the solution to the problem of the comprehensive prohibition of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction.

The United States made clear its understanding that obligations undertaken in the projected treaty would not cover uses of radioactive materials or sources of radiation except uses prohibited by the treaty, and commented that nuclear explosive weapons, while they produced radiation along with other destructive effects, constituted a category of weapons of mass destruction separate from radiological weapons and were therefore not covered by the joint initiative.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the USSR/United States submission. A number of members, however, including France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and several of the Group of 21, noted that time would be needed for their Governments to examine it. Draft formulations for the preambular part of the proposed treaty and for provisions relating to review conferences and entry into force were submitted by Hungary and by the German Democratic Republic, respectively. The Committee decided to continue consideration of the agreed joint proposal as soon as possible at its next annual session.

General and complete disarmament and related matters

The Committee on Disarmament affirmed its commitment to promoting general and complete disarmament both in an introductory paragraph to its agenda—stating that the Committee would promote the attainment of general and complete disarmament under effective international control—and in its item on a comprehensive programme of disarmament leading to general and complete disarmament under effective international control. Other areas of the Committee's agenda, such as reduction of military budgets, reduction of armed forces, disarmament and development, disarmament and international security, and collateral measures were also relevant to the goal.

France indicated its frustration with the scantiness of results attained in the field of disarmament and observed that there were two temptations: to freeze existing international balances through the perpetuation of blocs, and to believe that general and complete disarmament was possible in the world as it existed. France considered that either course would be equally disastrous; the essential course lay in the application of the fundamental principles embodied in the United Nations Charter, from which the right of States and peoples to security was derived. In France's opinion, this right comprised three elements: strict observance of the international guarantees of security, starting with those in the Charter; the right of each State to organize its defence in such a manner that it could deter a potential aggressor; and the obligation of each State not to arm itself beyond a level which others regarded as a threat.

The USSR presented a message from Leonid I. Brezhnev, who wished the Committee success in solving the complex problem of ending the arms race and achieving disarmament, stressed the scope and importance of the subject and assured the support of the USSR.

The United Kingdom noted that arms control enhanced security only if it was credible, and in that context stressed the importance of verification and undiminished security for all States while progressing towards the final objective.

The United States stressed that the essential role of the negotiating forum lay in the pursuit of common goals and, noting that no nation could be expected to support any agreement which put its security at risk, said that the objective should be to strengthen the security of all peoples and nations.

Many of the non-nuclear-weapon States members of the Committee referred to general and complete disarmament as the end goal, often stressing such aspects of the over-all question as the continuing arms race and lack of progress in disarmament, the need for verification and undiminished security during a disarmament process, and the importance of confidence-building and political will.

Both the Federal Republic of Germany and Hungary noted that, although the system of cochairmanship had been replaced, there remained in the Committee a common recognition and understanding of the key role of the USSR and the United States in disarmament.

Yugoslavia stated that the military blocs and great powers were the protagonists in the arms race and that both had unfortunately made plans for further armament programmes.

Sweden recalled that in 1962 the Eighteen-Nation Committee on Disarmament had seen general and complete disarmament as the immediate object of negotiation, while other tasks were called collateral measures. Soon, however, difficulties had led that Committee to focus on specific collateral measures, and even those drastically lowered ambitions had proved difficult to fulfil. Sweden felt that the main obstacle was lack of confidence between blocs and States.

The Committee had before it, in connexion with collateral measures, a document submitted by Italy containing a draft additional protocol to the 1967 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, ¹⁰ with a view to preventing an arms race in outer space, and another from Poland containing a working paper on further disarmament measures for preventing an arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor. No action was taken on these papers.

Organizational and procedural questions

Early in the session, a number of member States commented on the organization of the Committee. Virtually all of them welcomed the changes which had been made as a result of decisions taken by the General Assembly at its special session in 1978. Many members, for instance, welcomed France's participation for the first time in the work of the Committee and hoped that China, as the remaining non-participating nuclear-weapon State, would soon accept the invitation to participate. The enlargement, broader representation and further democratization of the body were widely regarded as encouraging developments, most particularly by the Group of 21 members not associated with the major blocs.

Although a number of arrangements were agreed upon prior to the opening of the session, many organizational matters remained to be completed by the Committee itself and various proposals in that connexion were made early in the session.

The Committee established an ad hoc working group open to all members to prepare its draft rules of procedure. The group held 17 meetings and the draft rules of procedure it recommended were adopted by the Committee on 28 February. They included affirmation of a new system of monthly rotation of the Committee's chairmanship and detailed the Chairman's function. They also confirmed that the Committee would conduct its work and adopt its decisions by consensus, a procedure that applied also to its subsidiary organs.

The Committee also established an ad hoc working group to prepare its agenda and programme of work. Its discussions focused on the relation between the Committee's general agenda and its annual agenda—the latter to be the basis for the programme of work. The agenda (see p. 18) and programme of work were adopted on 10 and 11 April.

An evaluative statement by the Group of 21 at the conclusion of the Committee's session, an an evaluation of the results of that session by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the USSR, were tabled for inclusion in the Committee's report.

Decisions of the General Assembly

At its 1979 regular session, which opened on 18 September, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions relating specifically to the work of the Committee on Disarmament.

On 11 December, by resolution 34/83 B on the report of the Committee, the Assembly, noting the Committee's work concerning its organization and procedures but deploring the fact that negotiations on priority disarmament tasks had not yielded concrete results, urged it to proceed without delay to substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda. It invited the Committee members involved in separate negotiations on specific priority questions to make every effort to achieve positive conclusions for submission to the Committee or, failing that, to submit a full report on the status of the negotiations and the results achieved. The Assembly also requested the Committee to initiate negotiations on a comprehensive programme of disarmament, on the basis of recommendations of the Disarmament Commission (see subchapter below), with a view to completing its elaboration before the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, scheduled for 1982.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 130 to 0, with 11 abstentions. The text was submitted in the First Committee by 29 countries which included those belonging to the Group of 21 in the Committee on Disarmament as well as Bangladesh, France, Ghana, Italy, Mauritius, Romania, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Uruguay. It was approved by the First Committee on 21 November—following a request by the United States for a vote—by 114 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions.

In introducing the draft, Yugoslavia noted that the establishment of the Committee on Disarmament as the single multilateral negotiating body was particularly welcomed, but the sponsors specifically wished the Committee to initiate negotiations and to play a central role in the implementation of disarmament measures.

The United States said it did not see how the Committee could negotiate on all the priority questions of disarmament and simultaneously elaborate a comprehensive programme of disarmament before the second special session; it was therefore not prepared to join in criticism of the Committee when it did not achieve the impossible. The USSR pointed out that its abstention was due to the extremely subjective approach on the part of the Committee on Disarmament reflected in the resolution, as well as the language used with regard to the links between the work of the Committee and talks going on outside it. Bulgaria, expressing a similar view, said it abstained because some of the language did not properly reflect the consensus on the constitution and status of the Committee that had been achieved during the 1978 special session.

The Assembly adopted without a vote, also on 11 December, resolution 34/83 L, on assistance to be provided to the Committee on Disarmament by the Secretary-General. By its provisions, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to provide the staff and necessary assistance and services needed by the Committee and any subsidiary bodies which it might establish.

The resolution was sponsored in the First Committee by Burma, current Chairman of the Committee on Disarmament, and Egypt. Following approval of the text in the First Committee on 27 November without a vote, Italy, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, while not objecting to the consensus decision, reserved their positions on the financial implications indicated in connexion therewith.

Other resolutions relating to the work of the Committee on Disarmament

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions which had a bearing on the work of the Committee on Disarmament.

By resolution 34/73, the Assembly expressed its conviction that positive progress in the Committee's negotiations on a comprehensive test-ban treaty was vital to the success of efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons, asked the Committee to initiate negotiations on such a treaty as a matter of the highest priority, and called upon the three negotiating States to conclude their negotiations in time for consideration during the Committee's next session.

By resolution 34/79, the Assembly asked the Committee to continue and report on negotiations, with expert assistance, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on prohibiting the development and manufacture of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction and, where necessary, specific agreements on particular types of such weapons.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/83 G, transmitted to the Committee the views of States concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons, prevention of nuclear war and related matters, asking it to take those views into consideration and to report thereon.

The Committee was asked, by resolution 34/83 J, to continue considering in 1980 the question of nuclear weapons in all aspects, to undertake preparatory consultations on negotiations on cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, and to initiate such negotiations as a matter of high priority, and report on them

By three resolutions, the Assembly took decisions on the question of security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States. By resolution 34/84, it asked the Committee to continue, on a priority basis during 1980, negotiations on effective international arrangements to assure nonnuclear-weapon States against the threat or use of nuclear weapons with a view to elaborating a convention. By resolution 34/85, the Assembly recommended that the Committee conclude effective international arrangements on the subject in 1980, taking into account widespread support for a convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective. By resolution 34/86, it noted the statements on assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States made by the nuclear-weapon States and asked the Committee to continue its efforts to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to strengthen further the security of the non-nuclear-weapon States.

The Assembly requested the Committee, by resolution 34/87 D, to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices and keep the Assembly informed.

The General Assembly,

Expressing its satisfaction at the establishment, in accordance with the agreement reached at the tenth special session, of the Committee on Disarmament and the fact that the Committee held its first session in the course of 1979,

Noting with appreciation the valuable results of the work of the Committee on Disarmament concerning its organization and procedures, Deploring the fact that negotiations on priority tasks in the field of disarmament have not thus far yielded any concrete results, in spite of the repeated appeals of the General Assembly.

Convinced that the Committee on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should become urgently and most directly involved in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament and play the central role in the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Stressing that negotiations on specific disarmament issue: conducted outside the Committee on Disarmament should not in any way constitute an impediment to the negotiations on such questions in the Committee, Having considered the first report of the Committee on Disarmament.

- 1. Urges the Committee on Disarmament to proceed, with out any further delay, to substantive negotiations on the priority questions of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session and the other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly on those questions;
- 2. Invites the members of the Committee on Disarmament involved in separate negotiations on specific priority questions of disarmament to make every effort to achieve a positive conclusion of those negotiations without further delay for submission to the Committee and, failing this, to submit to the Committee a full report on the status of their separate negotiations and results achieved thus far in order to contribute most directly to the negotiations in the Committee in accordance with paragraph 1 above;
- 3. Requests the Committee on Disarmament, at its session in 1980, to initiate negotiations on the comprehensive programme of disarmament, with a view to completing its elaboration before the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, in 1982, and, in doing so, to take as a basis the recommendations adopted by the Disarmament Commission:
- 4. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

Disarmament Commission

Report of the Disarmament Commission

Following an organizational session in 1978,¹¹ the Disarmament Commission held its first substantive session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 14 May to 8 June 1979. The major items on the Commission's agenda were: consideration of the elements of a comprehensive programme of disarmament; consideration of various aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, in order to expedite negotiations aimed at effective elimination of the danger of nuclear war; and harmonization of views on concrete steps to be undertaken by States regarding a gradual agreed reduction of military budgets and reallocation of resources currently being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

The Commission had before it two reports by the Secretary-General submitting views and suggestions of Member States on measures adopted outside the aegis of the United Nations regarding implementation of the 1978 recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament and on a comprehensive programme of disarmament. These reports contained replies to the Secretary-General's requests for such information pursuant to two 1978 Assembly resolutions.¹² Replies contained in the first report were from Argentina, Austria, Egypt, Japan, Romania and the United Kingdom. Views on a comprehensive disarmament programme were received from Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, the Central African Empire, Chile, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Luxembourg, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Senegal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission all the disarmament proposals listed in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly 13 and identified those which had been elaborated in separate resolutions of the Assembly at its 1978 regular session.

The Commission also had before it a letter to the Secretary-General from the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid transmitting the report of the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, held in London on 24 and 25 February 1979 (see p. 173).

Working papers giving views on the elements of a comprehensive programme of disarmament were submitted by China, by Sri Lanka on behalf of members of the non-aligned movement, by Czechoslovakia on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, and by the Federal Republic of Germany.

During the session, the Commission primarily considered the elements of a comprehensive programme, deferring the other items on its agenda until its 1980 session.

In a general exchange of views, there was broad agreement on the nature of the elements which should comprise the comprehensive programme and on its scope and objectives. The Chairman of the Commission, in his opening statement, said it was clear that the comprehensive programme must necessarily cover both short- and long-term objectives. In his view, it should deal not merely with measures of arms control and disarmament but should encompass also related issues of international peace and security and economic and social development.

The USSR stated that, since the main danger to the cause of peace was the nuclear arms race, it was necessary to halt and then reverse it and achieve nuclear disarmament through various practical measures, including guarantees of the security of non-nuclear States and non-emplacement of nuclear weapons where there were none. It also supported, inter alia, a ban on nuclear-weapons testing, strengthening of the non-proliferation regime, creation of nuclear-free zones and zones of peace, the prohibition of chemical weapons and the convening of a world disarmament conference.

France, speaking on behalf of the nine member countries of the European Community, stated that in considering the elements of a comprehensive programme the Commission should bear in mind that the measures making up the programme should be balanced in such a way as to guarantee the security of States at all times. The global programme, to be realistic, had to bear in mind the needs of a regional approach, inasmuch as the criteria for security for States varied according to their geographical position. The nine also believed that there should be a balance between nuclear and conventional disarmament and that adequate verification was essential. The views elaborated by France were reflected in statements of other Western States.

Japan believed that due regard for the security of States, a balance between the responsibilities of nuclear and non-nuclear States, a feasible programme devoid of political propaganda, and effective verification measures were principles on which to base the discussions on the elements of a comprehensive disarmament programme.

China stated that the Commission ought to proceed from an accurate appraisal of the international situation. It noted particularly the arms race between the two super-powers and said the basic principle to be followed should be that they be the first to reduce their armaments. Also, conventional and nuclear disarmament should be given equal importance. China held that relations between States must be based on mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, non-aggression, non-interference in internal affairs of others, equality of countries regardless of size, mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence.

Mexico stated that, given the limited time available, the Commission should not be too ambitious and should confine itself strictly to consideration of the elements of a comprehensive programme—not to the preparation of the programme itself, or even a preliminary draft programme.

Romania emphasized that the programme should be a dynamic and flexible document, constantly updated with new ideas and proposals, advocating a system of steps organically subordinate to the final goal of general and complete disarmament while bringing the international community closer to it. In Canada's view, the Commission should concentrate on achieving consensus on a framework to guide the negotiations proper, which were the responsibility of the Committee on Disarmament. Sri Lanka stated that the proposals of the non-aligned States which it had introduced were meant to maintain and further the momentum generated by the Assembly's tenth special session.

Sweden believed that a comprehensive programme should embrace not only the work of the Committee on Disarmament but also that of other relevant United Nations organs, and all negotiations and other important disarmament activities in whatever forum they might take place.

Following the general exchange of views, the Commission established an informal open-ended working group to deal with recommendations on the elements of a comprehensive programme. The working group held four meetings and in turn set up a drafting group which held 11 meetings. The working group presented its recommendations to the Commission on 4 June. Following discussion, the Commission, on 8 June, adopted by consensus its report to the General Assembly containing its recommendations on the elements of a comprehensive programme for subsequent transmission to the Committee on Disarmament. The elements were the following.

I. Introduction

- 1. Advocated by the General Assembly of the United Nations for nearly two decades, general and complete disarmament under effective international control must continue to be the ultimate goal of all endeavours undertaken in the sphere of disarmament.
- 2. In 1969, the Assembly, after declaring the decade of the 1970s as a "Disarmament Decade," requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament (CCD) to work out "a comprehensive programme, dealing with all aspects of the problem of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under effective international control..." ¹⁴ Although this appeal was reiterated by the Assembly in later years, it was not possible for CCD to discharge this mandate.

- 3. The first special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament laid the basis in its Final Document, adopted by consensus, for an international disarmament strategy, in which the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament was an important element. The Disarmament Commission was entrusted with the task of considering the elements of a comprehensive programme for disarmament to be submitted as recommendations to the Assembly and, through it, to the negotiating body, the Committee on Disarmament, 15 which was requested by the Assembly to undertake the elaboration of such a programme.
- 4. The comprehensive programme of disarmament, which would provide the necessary framework for substantive negotiations in the field of disarmament, should be a carefully worked out package of interrelated measures in the field of disarmament, which would lead the international community towards the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control.
- 5. The comprehensive programme of disarmament should be based principally on the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly. It should lay down an agreed framework for sustained international action in the field of disarmament, including negotiations at different levels, that is, multilateral, bilateral and regional, on specific measures of disarmament. The elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament should not in any way impair the commitment entered into by Member States, in the Final Document, to make every effort faithfully to carry out the Programme of Action set forth therein. 16
- 6. The Committee on Disarmament should commence work on the elaboration of the comprehensive programme at the earliest possible date and all efforts should be exerted so as to submit it for consideration and adoption not later than the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, scheduled to be held in 1982.
- 7. The comprehensive programme of disarmament should:
- (a) define the objectives of the comprehensive programme of disarmament together with the principles that should guide the negotiations and priorities which should be applied in the negotiations;
- (b) encompass all measures thought to be advisable in order to ensure that the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control becomes a reality in a world in which international peace and security prevail and in which the new international economic order is strengthened and consolidated;
- (c) include, as parallel measures accompanying progress in disarmament, measures to strengthen institutions for maintaining peace and the settlement of international disputes by peaceful means as well as measures necessary to bring about the effective application of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;
 - (d) establish appropriate procedures for:
 - i) the implementation of the programme, and

- a continuing review of the implementation of the programme;
- (e) cover measures aimed at encouraging international and national efforts to promote knowledge and information about disarmament, in order to create an international atmosphere conducive to the implementation of measures needed to be taken to bring about the halting and the reversal of the arms race and the achievement of the ultimate objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control.

II. Objectives, principles and priorities

- 8. The immediate objective of a comprehensive programme of disarmament should be to maintain and further the momentum generated by the first special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament, to initiate and expedite urgent negotiations on halting the arms race in all its aspects, to open a process of genuine disarmament on an internationally agreed basis and to increase international confidence and relaxation of international tension.
- 9. The long-term objectives should be, through the co-ordinated implementation of the comprehensive programme of disarmament, to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control, to avert the danger of war and to create conditions for a just and stable international peace and security and the full realization of the new international economic order.
- 10. The elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament should take place as urgently as possible and parallel with the negotiations on concrete disarmament measures, particularly those agreed in the Programme of Action adopted at the tenth special session of the Assembly. The comprehensive programme of disarmament should contain a phased programme covering measures in the different fields in which the implementation of the first stage should effectively contribute to the halting of the arms race and to the opening of the process of genuine disarmament.
- 11. During the first stage of the implementation of the comprehensive programme of disarmament, special attention should be given to the immediate cessation of the nuclear arms race and the removal of the threat of a nuclear war.
- 12. The comprehensive programme of disarmament should be elaborated and implemented on the basis of the strict observance of the principles contained in the Final Document and in accordance with the priorities stated in paragraph 45 thereof, 17 it being understood that nothing should preclude States from conducting negotiations on all priority items concurrently.

III. Measures

13. The process to be outlined in the comprehensive programme of disarmament should be conceived and implemented in accordance with the fundamental principles enshrined in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly. It should take place in such an equitable manner as to ensure the right of each State to security, inter alia, through the adoption of appropriate measures, taking into account the importance of nuclear disarmament and conventional disarmament, the special responsibility of the States with the largest military arsenals and the necessity for adequate measures of verification.

14. The comprehensive programme of disarmament should encompass the following measures as envisaged in the relevant paragraphs of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session

A. Disarmament measures

- 1. Nuclear weapons
- (a) Nuclear-test ban;
- (b) Cessation of the nuclear arms race in all its aspects and nuclear disarmament, which will require urgent negotiation of agreements at appropriate stages and with adequate measures of verification satisfactory to the States concerned for:

ference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (see p. 70);

(d) Consultations among major arms suppliers and recipients on the international transfer of conventional weapons.

armament should include measures aimed at ensuring that disarmament makes an effective contribution to economic and social development and, in particular, to the full realization of the new international economic order through:

- reallocation of resources from military purposes to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of the developing countries;
- (ii) savings from the reduction of military expenditures, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, which should increase the flow of resources to economic and social development, especially for the benefit of the developing countries;
- (iii) strengthening of international cooperation for the promotion of the transfer and utilization of nuclear technology for economic and social development, especially in the developing countries, taking into account the provisions of paragraphs 68 to 70 of the Final Document.

D. Disarmament and international security

Strengthening of international procedures and institutions for:

- maintenance of peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;
- (ii) peaceful settlement of disputes;
- (iii) effectiveness of the security system of the Charter of the United Nations;
- (iv) United Nations peace-keeping in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations.

IV. Machinery and procedures

A. Role of the United Nations

- 15. (a) The United Nations should play a central role in the consideration and adoption of the comprehensive programme of disarmament. It must also play an adequate role in its implementation. It is essential, therefore, that the General Assembly and, through it, the Commission are regularly kept informed of the results of the negotiations on and elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament. It is also essential that the United Nations be kept duly informed through the Assembly, or any other appropriate United Nations channel reaching all Members of the Organization, of all disarmament efforts outside its aegis without prejudice to the progress of negotiations.
- (b) Convening, as necessary, of special sessions of the United Nations General Assembly devoted to disarmament.
- (c) The United Nations should sponsor programmes to promote public awareness of the dangers of the arms race, its effects on international peace and security, its economic and social consequences and its effect on the attainment of the new international economic order.
- (d) The Secretary-General shall periodically submit reports to the General Assembly on the economic and social consequences of the armaments race and its extremely harmful effects on world peace and security.

B. Form of negotiations

16. The negotiations of the measures envisaged in the comprehensive programme of disarmament can be conducted on a bilateral, regional or multilateral level, depending on how, in each case, effective disarmament agreements can most readily be achieved. The international disarmament machinery should ensure that all disarmament issues are being dealt with in an appropriate context.

C. World disarmament conference

17. At the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation.

D. Review and verification of agreed measures

18. Examination of the requirements of an institutional and procedural nature to facilitate the disarmament process and to ensure implementation of disarmament agreements, including the relevant proposals referred to in paragraph 125 of the Final Document, or made elsewhere.

V. General

- 19. During the consideration of the elements of the comprehensive programme of disarmament, the Commission considered the following, on which consensus was not reached:
- (a) prohibition of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;
- (b) dissolution of military alliances and the dismantling of foreign military bases;
- (c) prohibition of the development, production and deployment of conventional weapons of great destructive power.

A number of countries made statements on the Commission's report, particularly on the recommendations on the elements. Many States, including Bangladesh, Finland, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Turkey and Yugoslavia, expressed general satisfaction with the results achieved, despite omissions and aspects which they felt needed strengthening, and welcomed the spirit of conciliation that had prevailed. Several of these members, however, as well as Algeria, Cuba, Ecuador, Ghana, India, Morocco, Romania and Venezuela, particularly regretted the absence of a consensus on one or more of the three elements concerning the prohibition of the use or threat of nuclear weapons, dissolution of military alliances and dismantling of foreign bases, and a ban on conventional weapons of great destructive power. On the other hand, the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan explained their view that, under current political and military realities, inclusion of the first of these elements would risk destabilizing the international military balance with results contrary to strengthening peace and security, the second could only be envisaged after general and complete disarmament under effective international control was obtained, and the third was vague and could give rise to confusion in its implementation.

Other States drew attention to certain elements which had not been dealt with in accordance with their specific views. For instance, the USSR and others, including several Eastern European countries, disagreed with proposals which could lead to the creation of verification organs in isolation from specific disarmament agreements. Bulgaria felt some reference should have been made to the prohibition of nuclear neutron weapons and also noted with concern the tendency to request establishment of new international institutions and bodies on disarma-The German Democratic Republic referred to proposals of the socialist States of Eastern Europe that it regretted were not reflected in the recommendations; these were, for example, no build-up of armed forces or armaments in other States' territories, dismantling of military bases and withdrawal of foreign troops, and the simultaneous disbandment of the two major military alliances. It held the view that all the recommendations must be interpreted according to the letter and spirit of the Final Document of the tenth special session. The Netherlands stated that, as far as it was concerned, wherever discrepancies occurred between the elements and the Final Document, the latter would carry more weight.

Brazil felt that diluted formulations and significant omissions of the document were reasons for misgivings; moreover, the elements did not identify priorities. Egypt would have liked to see the provisions contain assurance that disarmament measures would be extended to space.

The United Kingdom and the United States, together with members such as Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and New Zealand, presented the view that insufficient weight had been accorded to the importance of the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. The United States also held that the treatment of disarmament and development and of the reduction of military budgets was inadequate; in that connexion it noted, as did Belgium, the need for reliable means of comparing military expenditures internationally and for verifying compliance with agreed reductions. The Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy and the United Kingdom were among those which considered that the need for balance between nuclear and conventional disarmament was not made clear; nor did the reference to the right of each State to security adequately reflect the concept.

France also expressed concern that the primary and paramount idea of balance of disarmament measures was not adequately reflected. It stated that it also considered that, because the nuclear disarmament process had not begun, the halting of nuclear tests did not make a significant contribution to the problem of nuclear weapons and their proliferation.

China felt the document failed to give full expression to the principle that the two superpowers must be the first to reduce armaments and had failed to make specific reference to a number of other important principles and urgent questions, such as establishing peace zones and nuclear-free zones, removal therefrom of foreign military presence and undertakings not to use nuclear weapons against such zones and non-nuclear States.

On 13 December 1979, the Disarmament Commission held two further meetings at which it reviewed resolutions on disarmament adopted by the General Assembly at its 1979 session and adopted a provisional agenda for its own 1980 session. It also re-elected, without objection, its Bureau to serve during 1980.

Discussion in the General Assembly

During consideration of the report of the Disarmament Commission by the General Assembly at its 1979 session, which opened on 18 September, most States which spoke on the subject in the debate in the First Committee expressed gratification that the Commission had reached agreement on the elements of a comprehensive programme of disarmament. Among these States were France, Italy, Poland, Sri Lanka and Venezuela.

Denmark, Peru, Qatar and Yugoslavia were among Members which also considered that the Commission had carried out successfully the priority task entrusted to it by the Assembly in the Final Document of the tenth special session. Denmark felt the Commission should henceforth focus on a few specific issues having high priority on the international disarmament agenda.

Democratic Yemen, the Federal Republic of Germany and Morocco said that the elements widened the basis for productive negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament. Argentina was of the view that the balance achieved offered an excellent basis for Committee negotiations on a draft treaty setting forth long-term objectives of the international community. Cyprus believed the comprehensive programme would undoubtedly become the centrepiece of the Assembly's 1982 special session devoted to disarmament. Bulgaria said the Commission's work on the elements had shown that the programme could play a useful role and contribute to the practical solution of disarmament problems.

Some other speakers, among them those of Algeria, Australia, Brazil, Nepal, Romania and Zaire, pointed to what they regarded as inadequacies and omissions in the programme elements, particularly the absence of strong measures on banning the use of nuclear weapons as well as in other areas of nuclear disarmament. Brazil added that the programme failed to identify adequately the responsibilities for disarmament and suggested greater use might be made of the Commission by setting up within it arrangements to deal with review and follow-up functions of treaties, thus allaying fear of proliferation of international bodies. Because the Commission was obliged to engage in a number of compromises, Turkey said, the programme lacked precision. The Philippines said it could serve well as a shopping list of principles and priorities for action, but it was neither comprehensive nor a programme for disarmament.

Mauritius felt the Commission's report should have given more attention to the proposals made by Governments at the tenth special session. It was Ghana's view that what was essential was not so much what was left out as the existence of maximal political support for the basic elements which were agreed upon.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/83 H endorsing the report of the Disarmament Commission. By that resolution, the Assembly also endorsed the recommendations contained therein on the elements of a comprehensive programme of disarmament, asked the Secretary-General to transmit them to the Committee on Disarmament, and asked the Commission to continue its work in 1980. It further requested the Commission to elaborate, within the framework and in accordance with the priorities established at the tenth special session, a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament.

The resolution, introduced by Yugoslavia, was also sponsored by Argentina, Bangladesh, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uruguay and Zaire, and was approved by the First Committee on 23 November without vote.

In explaining its position following approval, Spain observed that the language of the resolution was not in keeping with its thinking: greater stress should have been laid on the question of the conventional arms race.

The General Assembly, on 11 December, adopted two further resolutions which had a direct bearing on the work of the Disarmament Commission. By resolution 34/75, declaring the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, the Assembly directed the Disarmament Commission to prepare in 1980 the elements of a draft resolution on the Decade for submission to the Assembly. By resolution 34/83 F, the Assembly requested the Commission to identify in 1980 effective ways of achieving agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain military expenditures, including adequate and satisfactory verification measures. Consideration of disarmament questions by the General Assembly

When the General Assembly convened for its thirty-fourth session on 18 September 1979, it had 18 disarmament items on its agenda. Sixteen of them were on the agenda by virtue of Assembly decisions taken in past years and had been discussed previously; two of them-an item on the adoption of a declaration on international cooperation for disarmament and another on Israeli nuclear armament-were on the agenda for the first time, the former at the request of Czechoslovakia and the latter at the request of Iraq.

The items concerned various questions relating to both nuclear and non-nuclear disarmament measures, including the status or creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones in Latin America, Africa, the Middle East and South. Asia, the question of a comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty, and follow-up of resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its 1978 special session devoted to disarmament.²²

Other agenda items related to general and complete disarmament, the banning of chemical weapons, the prohibition of the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction, strengthening security of and security guarantees for non-nuclear-weapon States, a proposed world disarmament conference, the report of the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, and consideration of the 1980s as a disarmament decade.

The disarmament items were referred by the Assembly to its First Committee, which devoted 37 meetings to them. The Committee held a general debate on the items, lasting 24 meetings, and then considered separately proposals dealing with individual disarmament questions.

On 11 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted 38 resolutions and a decision dealing with disarmament items. Six of these, dealt with under the item on general and complete disarmament, covered radiological weapons, non-stationing of nuclear weapons where there currently were none, prohibiting production of fissionable material for weapons, confidence-building measures, institutional arrangements relating to the disarmament process, and the bilateral strategic arms limitation talks. Another 13 resolutions were initiated under the item concerning followup of the Assembly's 1978 special session and covered such areas as the work of disarmament bodies, monitoring disarmament agreements, non-use of nuclear weapons, reduction of military budgets, cessation of the arms race, the relationship between disarmament and development, disarmament and international security, and the United Nations role in disarmament studies, information and training. Two resolutions concerned the denuclearization of Africa, two dealt with the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, and two with a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Latin America. At least 16 of the resolutions adopted had a bearing on nuclear weapons, including prohibition or restriction of their testing or possible use, limitation of their production or deployment, and prevention or elimination of their dissemination in specific regions of the world. Other resolutions related to prohibition of chemical weapons and of the development of new weapons of mass destruction. The Assembly also adopted a Declaration on international cooperation for disarmament.

Discussion of these questions and the decisions taken are described below.

Questions relating to nuclear disarmament

At its regular 1979 session, the General Assembly continued consideration of problems associated with nuclear arms limitation and disarmament. A large majority of the State representatives, in their policy statements, reaffirmed long-held positions to the effect that nuclear disarmament was the priority requirement. At the same time, a variety of views as to approaches and priorities was revealed. In the deliberations in the First Committee, much attention was devoted to the urgent need to initiate a process of disarmament, especially nuclear disarmament, and to undertake concrete steps to halt the nuclear arms race, both quantitatively and qualitatively. Most of the proposals considered were carried over from previous years. Some, such as the cessation of nuclear-weapon testing, had been active for more than a decade, while others had evolved more recently from the recommendations and decisions adopted at the Assembly's tenth special session devoted to disarmament, in 1978.

Among the documents submitted to the Assembly during discussion of the question of disarmament was a letter of 31 October to the Secretary-General from Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden transmitting a memorandum of the five Nordic States on non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, expressing in particular their concern over the development and achievement of nuclear explosive capability by any additional State.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

There was considerable discussion at the 1979 session on the trilateral negotiations of the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States for a nuclear-weapon test ban. The USSR said that progress had been achieved but that, contrary to what it would have expected, complicating elements continued to be introduced by the other parties. The United Kingdom said that difficult problems remained to be overcome, but hoped that the treaty, when completed, would not encounter objections similar to those raised by some countries which argued that the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons 23 (Non-Proliferation Treaty) discriminated in favour of the nuclear-weapon States. The United States said that the goal of strategic stability would be served if the three negotiating States were able to agree on a comprehensive test ban.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/73, by which it reiterated its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continued unabated against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States. It requested the Committee on Disarmament to initiate negotiations on a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear test explosions by all States for all time, as a matter of the highest priority. In addition, the Assembly called upon the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States to use their best endeavours to bring their negotiations to a positive conclusion in time for consideration during the next session of the Committee on Disarmament. It also invited Governments to contribute to the development of co-operative measures to detect seismic events aimed at setting up a global verification system of a comprehensive test-ban treaty.

Resolution 34/73 was adopted by a recorded vote of 137 to 0, with 2 abstentions, having been approved by the First Committee on 26 November by a recorded vote of 128 to 0, with 2 abstentions. It was sponsored by 34 countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The paragraph containing the request that the Disarmament Committee initiate negotiations on a test-ban treaty as a matter of the highest priority was first approved by 111 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions, before the Committee approved the text as a whole. The separate vote on the paragraph was requested by the USSR, which abstained, after the sponsors rejected an oral amendment by that country intended to make it clear that current nuclear test-ban talks in the Committee on Disarmament should not impair the tripartite talks.

The Assembly also adopted the paragraph by a separate recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 13 abstentions, before adopting the resolution as a whole.

Other nuclear-weapon States also abstained in the separate vote. The United Kingdom said it had done so because it considered that confidential negotiations were the best way through the complex issues still to be resolved, although its vote for the resolution as a whole was intended to endorse the importance it attached to their successful conclusion. The United States pointed out that a significant number of critical questions remained to be resolved in the trilateral negotiations, especially in the area of verification. Although the resolution contained elements to which the United States took exception, the United States shared its over-all objective; however, it did not wish to imply by its positive vote that it would be prepared to conclude the negotiations with any particular provisions or by any particular deadline.

France explained its abstention on the resolution on two counts: first, there had been over 30 underground tests during the first 10 months of the year, mostly by powers involved in the negotiations, and France found it 'difficult to believe that they could continue tests which were health-endangering, concern about which was expressed in a preambular paragraph; and second, a treaty concluded outside the framework of a genuine process of nuclear disarmament would not, in its view, contribute significantly to solving the problems of nuclear weapons and their proliferation.

²³ See Y.U.N., 1968, p. 16, resolution 2373(XXII) of 12 June 1968, annexing text of Treaty.

China, which also abstained on the resolution, said it had consistently wanted a total ban on and destruction of all nuclear weapons; however, only after major progress in the super-powers' reduction of such weapons had been achieved could other nuclear States join them in the reduction and negotiations be started for destruction of all nuclear weapons.

During the debate, States such as Brazil, Nigeria and Pakistan referred to the continuing absence of an agreed text resulting from the trilateral talks and urged their early conclusion. Australia, which introduced the resolution on behalf of the sponsors, said that conclusion of a comprehensive test-ban treaty would limit, and perhaps even stop, the vertical proliferation of nuclear weapons by the parties to the treaty, thus strengthening the non-proliferation regime.

Most participants in the debate spoke on the comprehensive test-ban question and virtually all of them expressed concern that it had not been resolved. Among the themes frequently emphasized were the continuation and pace of testing, despite persistent efforts for its cessation, and the question of verification, which was widely viewed as the major outstanding problem and as a matter of political will rather than of technology.

Austria, for instance, noting that 16 years had passed since the conclusion of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (partial test-ban Treaty) of 5 August 1963, stated that, despite the commitments in various international instruments and the number of Assembly resolutions on the subject, reliable sources indicated that the nuclear powers were increasing their testing.

On the basis of analyses by its Hagfors seismic observatory, Sweden said there had been in 1978 at least 48 nuclear explosions and, in 1979, 45 explosions recorded up to 29 October. The rate of testing in the USSR had been higher in 1978 than in any year since 1963, it remained high in the United States, and France had doubled its testing rate in the Pacific in 1979. One test by the United Kingdom had been reported. China, which had conducted two tests in 1978, had not thus far carried out any in 1979. All this reflected about one test per week while multilateral talks dragged on year after year.

The Netherlands was among States which held that, even if the strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT II) was not ratified, that must not be accepted as an excuse to abandon the negotiations on a comprehensive test ban. Benin referred to a quarter of a century of discussions and expressed doubt about their coming to an early conclusion when there had been 48 nuclear explosions in 1978. Portugal hoped that ways would be found to surmount the problem of verification and that after the conclusion of a tripartite agreement, which would place an important moral constraint on the nuclear arms competition, the other nuclear powers would adhere to it.

Bulgaria and Mongolia emphasized the need to manifest political will so that an agreement could be reached, and Hungary found it deplorable that the tripartite negotiations had failed to make useful progress.

By a decision of 11 December, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to prepare, for transmission to the Committee on Disarmament in 1980, a study on the question of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban. For details of decision 34/422, see p. 93.

Security of non-nuclear-weapon States

Strengthening guarantees of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States and strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons were two items discussed in the First Committee at the 1979 session.

The USSR again emphasized the necessity of embodying in a binding international agreement the principles agreed to by the General Assembly on strengthening security guarantees for non-nuclear States. Its representative recalled that his country's President had again confirmed on 6 October that the USSR would never use nuclear weapons against States that refrained from producing and acquiring such weapons and did not have them on their territories. Poland believed that a unique situation existed in that the desires of non-nuclear-weapon States were matched by a corresponding readiness by the nuclear-weapon powers to work out a solution acceptable to both.

Pakistan felt that the draft convention it had proposed in the Committee on Disarmament (see p. 21), by calling for assurances from the nuclear powers to the non-nuclear-weapon States which were not parties to nuclear security arrangements with them, would meet the difficulty faced by the major nuclear powers that they could. not give unqualified assurances because of their strategic doctrines and alliance commitments.

Several Eastern European States supported proposals for an international agreement on security guarantees to non-nuclear-weapon States. Bulgaria, for example, considered that conditions were favourable for the adoption of concrete measures for strengthening such guarantees.

A number of other States, including Argentina, Cuba, Egypt, Madagascar, Morocco, Mozambique, Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela and Viet Nam, also supported proposals for such an instrument.

The United States reiterated the proposal it had made in the Committee on Disarmament for an Assembly resolution setting forth the various undertakings made by the five nuclear powers to give assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States against the use of nuclear weapons (see p. 22). It emphasized that the issue involved vital security interests of both nuclear-weapon and non-nuclear-weapon States and that those interests could not be changed by exhortations.

Sweden expressed reservations with regard to the various forms of assurances which had been discussed, including an international convention. Such assurances, it said, must entail the withdrawal or dismantling of nuclear-weapon systems that were aimed at or could be used mainly against the non-nuclear-weapon States, whose security such assurances were intended to promote.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted three resolutions pertaining to the strengthening of security and security guarantees of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of nuclear weapons.

By resolution 34/84, the Assembly welcomed the conclusion of the Committee on Disarmament that it was urgent to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Noting that in that Committee there was no objection in principle to the idea of such an international convention, the Assembly asked the Committee to continue negotiations on a priority basis during 1980 towards the elaboration of a convention on the subject.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 114 to 1, with 25 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 27 November by a recorded vote—requested by the United States—of 91 to 1, with 25 abstentions. The proposal was sponsored in the First Committee by Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Mali, Mongolia, Nicaragua, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam.

Canada, Ireland, Japan, Spain, Sweden and the United States explained their abstentions in the voting on the ground that the resolution envisaged only the concept of an international convention to strengthen the guarantees of security of non-nuclear-weapon States, prejudging the course of action and providing for no other arrangements for dealing with the problem. Albania explained its opposition on the ground that neither a convention nor other guarantees could replace disarmament nor would they resolve the danger posed by nuclear weapons, especially the weapons of the super-powers.

The conclusion of an international convention to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons was also the subject of resolution 34/85. The Assembly thereby affirmed the conclusion of the Committee on Disarmament that there was wide recognition of the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. Endorsing the Committee's decision to continue negotiations on this subject, the Assembly recommended that the Committee should conclude effective international arrangements for such assurances during its 1980 session, taking into account the widespread support for an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 0, with 22 abstentions. The text was proposed by Mali and Pakistan, and was approved by the First Committee on 27 November by a recorded vote—requested by the United States—of 99 to 0, with 21 abstentions.

Before the vote in the First Committee, Ireland, on behalf of the European Community, explained the nine countries' abstentions on the ground that the resolution, by focusing on an international convention, risked prejudging the outcome of future consideration of the subject. Austria, Japan and the United States explained their abstentions on similar grounds.

On the initiative of the United States, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/86 on strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. By this text, the Assembly noted the statements that the nuclear-weapon States had made on assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States with respect to the use of nuclear weapons, welcomed the report of the Committee on Disarmament which reported on the initial consideration of and negotiations on effective international arrangements to strengthen further the security of the non-nuclear-weapon States, and asked the Committee to continue its efforts at its next session with a view to reaching agreement on such arrangements.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 110 to 1, with 29 abstentions, following its approval by the First Committee on 27 November by a recorded vote of 81 to 1, with 27 abstentions.

For the same reasons it had opposed resolution 34/84, Albania said it opposed this resolution. Pakistan felt the text did not take account of progress made in the past decade or current realities, nor did it provide the political impetus necessary for negotiations on an international instrument to provide credible assurances; accordingly, it abstained. Explaining its abstention, India said it had not supported any proposal or idea for limited, partial prohibition or non-use of nuclear weapons, but had resolutely stood for the total prohibition of the use of such weapons.

Negotiations on nuclear disarmament

The USSR introduced a proposal in the First Committee calling for consultations regarding the commencement of negotiations on the halting of the nuclear arms race and on a progressive and balanced reduction of stockpiles of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, leading to their ultimate and complete elimination. It later introduced a revised version of the draft resolution, explaining that the initial draft had been altered after consultations between the sponsors and other delegations, in particular the Group of 21 members of the Committee on Disarmament, to add a paragraph specifying that the Committee on Disarmament should initiate negotiations on the subject, with the participation of all nuclear-weapon States.

Cyprus, which supported the proposal, felt that, in view of the difficulties involved in attempting to agree quickly to cessation of the arms race, there could be agreement on a temporary halt to or a moratorium on nuclear-weapons competition until a way was found to completely stop the nuclear arms race.

On 11 December, on the basis of this proposal, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/83 J, by which it requested the Committee on Disarmament to initiate negotiations, as a matter of high priority and with the participation of all nuclear-weapon States, on the question of the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament, in accordance with a provision of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly citing the need for urgent negotiation of agreements on nuclear disarmament.²⁴ In addition, the Assembly requested the Committee to continue, at the beginning of its 1980 session, consideration of the item on nuclear weapons in all aspects, and to undertake preparatory consultations on the negotiations referred to.

The USSR, on behalf of the sponsors, had orally revised this last provision to take account of a suggestion by Mexico, proposing that the Disarmament Committee in 1980 be asked to continue the preparatory consultations initiated in 1979—rather than, as originally worded, to undertake preparatory consultations on the negotiations. The formulation adopted was a compromise text accepted by Mexico.

This resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to 2, with 19 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text, as orally revised, on 27 November by 102 votes to 3, with 18 abstentions. It was sponsored by Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's 'Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam.

Explaining its vote against the resolution, France restated its position that nuclear disarmament could not be isolated from the general undertaking of disarmament, which must take account of a complex of elements. Nuclear disarmament remained the main responsibility of the two leading powers, which had defined a specified approach, namely, the strategic arms limitation talks. France, therefore, objected to the concept of preparations for negotiations with the participation of the five nuclear-weapon powers when the conditions for such negotiations had not been met.

Among the others which voted against, the United Kingdom felt that the current approach, which involved a search for specific measures of nuclear disarmament, had greater validity than one which envisaged generalized measures; moreover, the aim of undiminished security for all States at a lower level of risk and armament could not be realized by concentrating on nuclear disarmament in isolation. The Federal Republic of Germany and Japan also held that the only realistic way to promote nuclear disarmament was to seek agreement in stages on specific measures, and Australia felt that too many questions were being assigned to the Committee on Disarmament as high-priority items.

China, which did not participate in the vote, reiterated its position that it was first necessary for the super-powers to reduce their nuclear arsenals on a large scale. After they had made substantial progress in the destruction of their weapons, the other nuclear-weapon powers should join them in carrying out nuclear disarmament in reasonable ratios, until all nuclear weapons had been destroyed.

Brazil, explaining its abstention, felt that the stipulation concerning the participation of all nuclear-weapon States in the Committee's negotiations would in effect confer a veto power on them individually.

²⁴ See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 39, resolution S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, esp. nara. 50.

Several countries which voted for the resolution voiced reservations or comments on particular points. Sweden stressed that the States with the most important nuclear arsenals had a special responsibility for the achievement of nuclear disarmament; the phrase "with the participation of all nuclear-weapon States" should not be construed as diminishing that responsibility. Austria, Morocco and Nigeria said the phrase should not be interpreted to mean that no negotiations could take place in the Committee without their participation. India believed that the Committee on Disarmament should urgently negotiate, first, an immediate cessation of the production of nuclear weapons and fissionable material for weapons purposes and, second, the attainment of nuclear disarmament through a time-related programme.

Austria was of the view that negotiations should not jeopardize the existing balance of power and that adequate verification was indispensable. It also reserved its position on a reference to a paragraph of the Final Document of the tenth special session,²⁵ which spoke of political and international legal measures to strengthen the security of States, a formulation which Austria felt left doubt as to what measures were to be considered.

Non-use of nuclear weapons

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in 1979 the replies received from 13 Governments in response to a 1978 Assembly request 26 for proposals concerning the non-use of nuclear weapons, avoidance of nuclear war and related matters. The views were requested as material for discussion of an international convention or other agreement on the subject. Barbados, the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Cuba, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, India, Kenya, Peru, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and the United Kingdom responded.

By resolution 34/83 G, the Assembly decided to transmit the proposals to the Committee on Disarmament and requested it to take them into appropriate consideration and report to the Assembly in 1980.

The resolution was adopted on 11 December 1979 by a recorded vote of 112 to 16, with 14 abstentions. The text was approved in the First Committee on 26 November by a recorded vote—requested by the United States-of 100 to 16, with 14 abstentions. It was sponsored by Argentina, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Nigeria, Qatar, Sri Lanka, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

In explaining its abstention in the voting, the USSR noted that the text referred to resolution 33/71 B,²⁷ which, in its view, artificially separated the non-use of nuclear weapons from the other measures that should be taken, namely the provision of legal guarantees and the renunciation by all States of the use of force in international relations.

Two other States, while supporting the resolution, made observations. Ireland said it regarded the proposal as procedural and thought it important that the Committee on Disarmament take account of all views formally put forward. Sweden was convinced that, despite the role of nuclear weapons in the military doctrines of some States and alliances, the use of nuclear weapons should be prohibited in all circumstances. That objective should be assured through gradual and balanced reductions in nuclear-weapon stockpiles with the aim of their total abolition.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons

By resolution 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, the General Assembly requested the Committee on Disarmament, at, an appropriate stage, to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices, keeping the Assembly informed of progress.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 118 to 9, with 12 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 23 November by 107 votes to 10, with 11 abstentions. The proposal was sponsored by Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Indonesia, Ireland, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Romania, Sweden and Uruguay.

Canada, which introduced the proposal, said the transfer of stocks of fissionable materials to peaceful uses could eventually lead to a reduction of nuclear weapons. A multilateral treaty on the question, under which both nuclear and non-nuclear States would accept the same obligations, including safeguards, would ensure equal treatment of both categories of States, in addition to advancing non-proliferation.

In explanation of its opposition, the USSR reiterated its view that cessation of the production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes could not be considered in isolation from cessation of the production of all types of nuclear weapons. The problem of nuclear disarmament should be resolved in an integrated and comprehensive manner.

²⁵ Ibid., para. 54.

²⁶ Ibid., p. 89, resolution 33/71 B of 14 December 1978.

The United Kingdom, which voted for the resolution, believed that any consideration of the subject should give priority to the verification aspect.

Israeli nuclear armament

A new item dealing with Israeli nuclear armament was included in the General Assembly's 1979 agenda at the request of' Iraq, and the Assembly on 11 December adopted a resolution on the subject. In an explanatory memorandum accompanying its request, Iraq said there was increasing evidence that Israel possessed nuclear weapons. It charged that Israel was striving to obtain the primary materials for their manufacture and transform the nuclear option into a declared factor in its foreign affairs and security policy.

By resolution 34/89, the Assembly, expressing alarm at the increasing information and evidence regarding Israel's activities aiming at the acquisition of nuclear weapons, appealed to all States to end any co-operation with Israel which might assist it in acquiring and developing such weapons, and to dissuade corporations, institutions and individuals within their jurisdiction from any co-operation which might have that result. It called on Israel to submit its nuclear facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and strongly condemned any attempt by Israel to manufacture, acquire, store or test nuclear weapons or introduce them into the Middle East. In addition to asking the Security Council to adopt measures to ensure implementation of resolutions concerning Israeli nuclear armament, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified experts, to prepare a study on Israeli nuclear armament and to report to it in 1981; a progress report was requested for 1980.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 97 to 10, with 38 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote, requested by Iraq, of 90 to 11, with 33 abstentions. It was sponsored by 39 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Speaking in support of the resolution, Jordan stated that Israel as well as South Africa had shortsightedly chosen, the path of nuclearization, and suggested that the United States, by failing to exercise leverage on a country for whose survival it was guarantor, was encouraging nuclear proliferation in the Middle East by default.

Some States, among them Guatemala, the Netherlands and the United States, while holding the view that no State should introduce nuclear weapons into the Middle East, disagreed with the selective approach by which a particular country was singled out in the resolution. In addition, they regarded it as important that all the countries in the region agree to make the Middle East a nuclear-weapon-free zone. The Netherlands and the United States also urged them to submit their nuclear facilities to IAEA safeguards and to become parties to the Non-Proliferation Treaty. Australia, Austria, Canada, Costa Rica, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy and Sweden expressed similar concerns. While accepting that States could have a legitimate preoccupation with the possibility of proliferation in their respective regions, they found the resolution unnecessarily restrictive in its emphasis and conclusions. They considered it counter-productive to single out a particular country in respect of unproved actions while not treating other, related regional aspects of the non-proliferation problem and safeguards regime.

Among these States, Australia, Canada, France, Ireland and Italy had specific reservations on the reference to the request to the Security Council, as infringing the Council's prerogatives. Finland and Ireland felt that the request for a study seemed to predetermine the result. Ireland and the United States said the exclusive focus of the text seemed to point to the intrusion of larger political considerations. Australia had difficulty in accepting the assumption in the text that there was evidence of Israel's acquisition of nuclear weapons. Austria, Canada, Finland, France, Italy and Sweden could not subscribe to a preambular reference recalling the Assembly's 1978 resolution on military and nuclear collaboration with Israel.28 Italy also had misgivings about the wording of the condemnatory provision and about what it considered to be a polemic approach to the question. Bolivia said the resolution was biased because it prejudged the case, making an equitable solution more difficult.

A number of other States, among them the Bahamas, Cyprus, Egypt, El Salvador, Pakistan, Turkey and Zaire, explained their support of the resolution in terms of their awareness of the dangers involved in nuclear proliferation; the Bahamas, Pakistan and others also cited Israel's unwillingness to accept IAEA safeguards. Zaire said possession of nuclear weapons by Israel could not fail to complicate the Middle East problem.

Before the vote in the Assembly, Israel stated that no "increasing information and evidence" whatsoever had been produced to substantiate the sponsors' allegation that Israel was aiming at the acquisition and development of nuclear weapons. Israel was conscious of the danger of proliferation and remained faithful to its commitment to prohibit and prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. It regarded the resolution as a vehicle for continuing anti-Israeli political warfare and, as such, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations.

Non-stationing of nuclear weapons

On 11 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/87 C, dealing with the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there were no such weapons. Expressing belief in the need to examine possibilities for an international agreement on the subject, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to call on all States to transmit to him their opinions and observations; he was asked to report on the question in 1980.

The Assembly adopted the resolution by a recorded vote of 99 to 18, with 19 abstentions.

By a preambular paragraph, the Assembly considered that the non-stationing of nuclear weapons where there currently were none would constitute a step towards the complete withdrawal of such weapons from other States, thus contributing to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons, leading eventually to their total elimination. The final phrase was an addition orally proposed by Egypt to link the ideas to the final objective of nuclear disarmament; it was accepted by the sponsors. The sponsors did not accept a Yugoslav suggestion to broaden the scope of the resolution to cover the territories of non-nuclear-weapon States. Yugoslavia based its abstention on its contention that non-stationing encompass all non-nuclear-weapon States, including those where there were nuclear weapons as well as other areas such as international airspace and maritime space; otherwise acceptance of the status quo would be implied.

The text, incorporating the Egyptian suggestion, was approved in the First Committee on 26 November by 85 votes to 18, with 22 abstentions. It was sponsored by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam.

In introducing the draft, the USSR stated that the sponsors' intention was to suggest further concrete action to realize the purpose of the Assembly's 1978 resolution on the same subject.²⁹

Explaining its opposition, Japan stated that any measure restricting the deployment of nuclear weapons might destabilize the international military balance and thereby prove detrimental to the maintenance of peace and security. Moreover, the means of verifying compliance were far from clear in the proposal.

Other States abstained because, while sharing the objectives of the resolution, they did not find in it an adequate reflection of their own approach to the non-stationing of nuclear weapons. Sweden, taking into account the world military situation, existing security arrangements and the doctrines and force postures of the leading military powers, expressed doubt about the idea of seeking the solution of a complex problem by dealing with only one of its aspects in an international agreement; it felt that the problem could best be dealt with in the context of regional disarmament arrangements. Brazil also abstained, observing that the absence of a reference to the stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of countries which already possessed them might imply recognition or legitimacy of the possession or stationing of such weapons in those countries. Austria felt that the relationship between an agreement on non-stationing of weapons and the concept of nuclear-weapon-free zones was not clear. Ghana found the idea of proposing an international agreement to be premature.

Nigeria, which supported the proposal, said it would have preferred its scope to be broadened to embrace the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of all non-nuclear-weapon States. Finland stressed that, in considering the possibility of an international agreement, it should be borne in mind that only the Governments concerned were qualified to interpret their own security needs.

Strategic arms limitation talks

On 13 August 1979, the USSR and the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General a joint communique announcing the signing in Vienna on 18 June of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, known as SALT II. The Treaty was signed at meetings held from 15 to 18 June by the President of the United States and the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and President of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR. A joint statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms was signed on the same day.

By resolution 34/87 F adopted on 11 December, the General Assembly said it shared the conviction of the USSR and the United States that early agreement on the further limitation and reduction of strategic arms would serve to strengthen international peace and security and reduce the risk of nuclear war. Noting that SALT II had not gone beyond certain limitations which permitted considerable increments, quantitatively and qualitatively, in relation to existing levels of nuclear arsenals, the Assembly trusted that the Treaty would enter into force at an early date and that the two contracting States would do their utmost in order that the SALT III agreement, which would replace SALT II, might constitute an important step towards the complete destruction of existing stockpiles of nuclear weapons. It welcomed the parties' agreement to continue to pursue negotiations on further limitation and reduction in the number of strategic arms, as well as for their further qualitative limitation.

The resolution was adopted without a vote; the text was likewise approved by the First Committee on 26 November, where it was sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sweden and Uruguay.

Before the First Committee approved the resolution, Mexico, with the agreement of the other sponsors, deleted from the provision by which the Assembly expressed its trust that SALT II would enter into force at an early date a clause referring to the Treaty as an arms control rather than a disarmament measure.

In introducing the resolution, Mexico pointed to the three basic ideas which the text reflected: the Treaty did not go beyond certain limitations which, taken together, permitted considerable increments in relation to existing arsenal levels; SALT II was a necessary stage and point of departure for SALT III negotiations and not an end in itself; and there was an obligation to keep the United Nations informed of all disarmament measures — unilateral, bilateral, regional or multilateral— that originated beyond its aegis.

Both the USSR and the United States expressed satisfaction with the achievement of SALT II, which they viewed as a major contribution to controlling the arms race and averting a nuclear war.

With regard to the resolution, the USSR said it could not agree with some of the provisions. The assertion that SALT II permitted considerable increments in nuclear arsenals undermined the significance of the agreement and was inaccurate. On the contrary, the Treaty provided for a significant reduction in armaments, both at the time of its entry into force and in the future. Accordingly, the USSR requested a separate vote on the paragraph containing that provision, on which it abstained. The paragraph was approved by the Committee by 106 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions, and by a separate recorded vote in the General Assembly of 128 to 0, with 12 abstentions. After adoption of the resolution, Albania said it should not be considered as having taken part in the consensus on this issue since, in its view, SALT II could by no means be considered a forward step in disarmament.

The United States pointed out that its acquiescence in the consensus was without prejudice to its domestic processes, which required Senate ratification before a treaty could enter into force.

The prevailing views expressed by other Member States indicated satisfaction and hope. Statements to that effect were made in particular by Austria, Bahrain, Belgium, Benin, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, the Congo, Denmark, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Mali, Mongolia, Nepal, the Netherlands, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Romania, Senegal, Spain, Togo, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, and Yugoslavia.

Many Members, while welcoming the agreement, joined India and New Zealand in the view that its greater importance should be seen as creating the necessary conditions for the future pursuit of effective measures of disarmament, rather than of immediately and substantially affecting the existing nuclear arsenals of the two powers. China and Iran, however, felt that the Treaty would not serve to restrain the intensifying nuclear arms race between the two powers. Qatar said it would lose its significance if it was not followed by other talks leading to SALT III. Somalia added that until the SALT treaties began to represent a balanced, mutual reduction of nuclear armaments rather than a controlled increase in the quality and quantity of nuclear weapons and systems, the world could take slight comfort from the negotiations.

Concerning further negotiations, several States commented on their desirable scope. The Federal Republic of Germany attached importance to reducing what it considered the existing disparities in the field of land-based mediumrange nuclear missiles and welcomed the readiness expressed by the USSR to consider those weapons in the SALT III negotiations. The Netherlands stated that the growing regional imbalance, giving the USSR a marked superiority over Western Europe, was all the less acceptable at a time when the over-all strategic parity between the United States and the USSR was being stabilized. India urged the two parties to take into account in their further negotiations not only strategic nuclear weapons but also the thousands of nuclear warheads deployed in Europe.

Many States, including Afghanistan, Austria, the Bahamas, Bangladesh, Burma, Finland, Hungary, Indonesia, Japan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Netherlands, Norway, the Sudan and the United Kingdom, attached particular importance to the early ratification of the Treaty, which, as Bulgaria and Poland stated, would not only pave the way to SALT III negotiations but would also provide an impetus for more substantial and rapid progress in other disarmament negotiations.

Nuclear-free zones and zones of peace

Protocols to the Treaty of Tlatelolco

On 11 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions concerning adherence to Additional Protocols I and II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco). Additional Protocol I, on the application of the Treaty to territories in the Latin American region, committed outside signatory States having de jure or de facto responsibility for territories there (France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States) to apply in them the Treaty's statutes of denuclearization. Additional Protocol II committed nuclear-weapon States parties to respect the denuclearized status of the zone and not to use or threaten to use nuclearweapons against parties to the Treaty.

By the first of its 1979 decisions on the Protocols-resolution 34/71 — the Assembly invited France and the United States to ratify Additional Protocol I at the earliest possible date, the two countries having signed it on 2 March 1979 and 26 May 1977 respectively. The Assembly also decided to take up the matter again at its 1980 session.

By the second text—resolution 34/74—the Assembly welcomed the fact that Additional Protocol II had been signed and ratified by China, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, thus fulfilling an Assembly aspiration.

Both resolutions were adopted without vote by the Assembly, having been approved in the same manner by the First Committee on 16 November, and both were sponsored by 23 parties to the Treaty: the Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The USSR recalled that it had become a party to Additional Protocol II in 1978, thereby consolidating the establishment of the first nuclear-weapon-free zone in the world, encompassing most of Latin American. Many countries welcomed the adherence of the five major nuclear-weapon powers to the Protocols, and hoped that it would encourage the establishment of additional nuclear-weapon-free zones. Mexico, the depository State of the Treaty of Tlatelolco, stated that, after 12 years of appeals, the Assembly's wish for ratification of Additional Protocol II had been fulfilled, which should reduce the scepticism of those who held that its resolutions were sterile. Brazil pointed out, however, that the signature or ratification of the Protocols had been accompanied by several declarations containing unilateral interpretations of the Treaty which might have detrimental implications for its effectiveness.

Denuclearization of Africa

The Assembly adopted two resolutions on 11 December 1979 concerning the denuclearization of Africa, with specific reference to the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1964.

By the first of these, resolution 34/76 A, the Assembly strongly reiterated its call upon all States to consider and respect Africa and surrounding islands as a nuclear-weapon-free zone, and asked the Secretary-General to assist OAU towards realizing its Declaration. Expressing its indignation that some Western countries and Israel had continued to collaborate with South Africa in the nuclear field, the Assembly reaffirmed that South Africa's nuclear programme constituted a danger to international peace and security and a particularly dangerous threat to African States, and increased the danger of proliferation. It condemned, and called for the termination of, any nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime of South Africa. It asked the Security Council to prohibit all nuclear cooperation and collaboration with South Africa's regime, and to institute enforcement action to prevent South Africa from further endangering peace and security by acquiring nuclear weapons. In this connexion, the Council was to bear in mind the recommendations of the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, held in London in February 1979 (see p. 173). The Assembly also demanded that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to IAEA inspection.

Resolution 34/76 A was adopted by a recorded vote of 128 to 0, with 11 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 21 November by a recorded vote of 85 to 0, with 11 abstentions. It was sponsored by 33 African countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Several States, some of which voted in favour of the resolution, expressed reservations on various paragraphs when explaining their votes. Australia, Belgium, Canada, Greece, Ireland, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden and the United States felt the actions called for to terminate all nuclear collaboration, including co-operation for peaceful purposes, did not offer the best prospects for encouraging South Africa to accept appropriate non-proliferation controls. France and the United Kingdom particularly opposed the paragraphs which sought to condemn nuclear collaboration in civilian fields.

Commenting on a paragraph by which the Assembly vigorously condemned the reported detonation of a nuclear device by South Africa, Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Greece, Japan, Portugal and Sweden had reservations about referring to unverified information. The United States, making the same point, observed that it had had an indication by satellite signal of the possibility of a low-yield explosion in the region on 22 September, but stressed that it had obtained no corroborative evidence that any such explosion had actually taken place. Ireland and New Zealand felt that condemnation of the reported explosion pre-empted the conclusions of a study currently being undertaken (see below). Some of these States also considered the request for Security Council action to be inappropriate, among them Canada, Greece, Ireland, New Zealand, Portugal and the United States. France considered that it was for the Council itself to consider any such enforcement action, while Finland felt that the provisions did not reflect the respective areas of competence of the Assembly and the Council.

Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Ireland, Israel and Norway were among those which objected to the singling out of certain countries. The Federal Republic of Germany and Italy said the resolution contained elements not designed to serve the established end, which they supported.

Albania noted that it had not participated in the vote, in line with its stand that the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones did not remove the danger posed by nuclear weapons.

By the second resolution, 34/76 B, the Assembly, deeply alarmed at a report that South Africa might have detonated a nuclear explosive device in September 1979 and taking note of a report of the Secretary-General of 12 November inquiring into that matter (see p. 181), appealed to all Member States in a position to do so to provide all relevant information to the Secretary-General. With the assistance of a group of experts, he was requested to prepare a comprehensive report on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field for submission to the Assembly at its regular 1980 session.

This resolution was adopted without a vote. The text, sponsored by 28 African States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was likewise approved by the First Committee on 26 November.

In view of the uncertainty that a nuclear explosion had occurred, the United States said, its support for the resolution was based on its concern at the possibility of nuclear proliferation and the fact that South Africa had not accepted IAEA safeguards. France and the United Kingdom recorded their understanding that the scope of the requested report related to the specific question of South Africa's plans and means for nuclear explosive technology for military purposes.

Nigeria, which introduced both resolutions in the First Committee, observed that, paradoxically, South Africa was stepping up preparations for nuclear blackmail at a time when OAU was considering further steps towards making Africa a nuclear-weapon-free zone. All efforts to prevent South Africa from acquiring nuclear weapons must be a priority item for the United Nations.

Nigeria recalled that, on 26 October, on a Nigerian proposal, the Assembly had adopted decision 34/404 (see p. 181) by which it had asked the Secretary-General to investigate reports of a nuclear explosion by South Africa and report back to the Assembly. He had done so on 12 November, basing his report on replies to inquiries to Member States. Since other replies and information might be received, the sponsors considered that there was a need to follow up the matter.

Representatives who spoke on this question in the First Committee expressed a sense of urgency concerning the denuclearization of Africa in the light of developments in South Africa, and particularly of reports of a nuclear explosion in September around the southern part of the continent. A number of African countries, as well as others including the Bahamas, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Haiti, Iraq, Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Oman, Pakistan, Oatar, the Syrian Arab Republic, and Trinidad and Tobago, expressed serious concern about the security of the region and denounced technological and military assistance which, they held, had been rendered to South Africa by certain States, aiding development of its nuclear capabilities.

In decisions relating to the apartheid policies of South Africa, the Assembly adopted additional resolutions bearing on disarmament in southern Africa. By resolution 34/93 D, it sought full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa declared by the Security Council on 4 November 1977.³⁰ By resolution 34/93 E, it requested the Council to consider mandatory measures to prevent South Africa from developing or acquiring nuclear weapons and called for the cessation of all collaboration with South Africa in the nuclear field.

(Refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS for page references to texts of resolutions 34/93 D and E.)

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East

The General Assembly at its 1979 session again considered the question of establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

By resolution 34/77, the Assembly urged all directly concerned parties seriously to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for implementation of a proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. To promote that objective, it invited the countries concerned to adhere to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and, pending the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they would refrain on a reciprocal basis from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices, and to deposit with the Security Council declarations of their support for establishing such a zone. In addition, the Assembly called on those countries to refrain from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party and to agree to place all their nuclear activities under IAEA safeguards. The Assembly reaffirmed its recommendation to the nuclear-weapon States to refrain from action contrary to the spirit and purpose of this resolution and to co-operate with the region's States to promote its objectives. It also renewed its invitation to the Secretary-General to explore possibilities for progress towards establishing such a zone.

The resolution was adopted on 11 December by a recorded vote of 136 to 0, with 1 abstention, following approval by the First Committee of an Egyptian draft, on 23 November, by a recorded vote of 130 to 0, with 1 abstention.

During the debate in the First Committee, Arab States such as Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Somalia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Yemen, and others such as Afghanistan and Iran, reiterated their support for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. They expressed concern about the danger of development of nuclear arms by Israel, which they held would create a serious threat to the security of States and further stimulate the arms race in the area, and they urged the international community, especially the United Nations, to take measures to prevent Israel from acquiring nuclear weapons. A number of these States and others, including Cuba, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Nigeria, drew a comparison between reports of nuclear programmes in South Africa and Israel, and particularly condemned any nuclear co-operation between those countries.

In introducing the resolution, Egypt drew particular attention to the strategic and economic sensitivity of the region and the three decades of conflict there.

Israel, which abstained in the vote, reiterated its support for the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East through a formal, contractual and multilateral convention freely negotiated among all the States of the region. Israel stressed, however, that the establishment of such a zone must be on the basis of voluntary and mutual agreement, the reciprocal commitment of all States concerned, and direct negotiations.

Bhutan and India reiterated their reservations on references to the Non-Proliferation Treaty. India also noted that its position on the need for non-discriminatory and universal safeguards on the nuclear activities of all States was not adequately reflected.

Nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly in 1978 had requested the Secretary-General to render any required assistance to promote efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.³¹ On 4 October 1979, he reported that he had been in contact with States of the region and that there had been no request by them for his assistance in connexion with the subject. He noted, however, that, in the course of those contacts, a view was expressed that he should continue to be available for that purpose.

By resolution 34/78, the Assembly reaffirmed its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia. It again urged the States of the area to continue to make all possible efforts to establish such a zone and, in the mean time, to refrain from any action contrary to that objective. It called on nuclear-weapon States which had not done so to respond positively to the proposal and to co-operate in efforts to establish the zone. It also reiterated its request to the Secretary-General to supply any needed assistance.

The resolution was adopted on 11 December by 96 votes to 2, with 40 abstentions; the text, sponsored by Pakistan, had been approved by the First Committee on 21 November by 86 votes to 3, with 38 abstentions. Both votes were recorded.

³⁰ See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 161, resolution 418(1977). 31 See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 93, resolution 33/65 of 14 December 1978.

Pakistan reaffirmed its belief that the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones was the most feasible way of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons in various parts of the world. It emphasized that a particular effort had been made to accommodate objections raised in previous years to resolutions with the same objective. Pakistan was prepared to accept full-scope IAEA safeguards on a reciprocal basis, and was ready to explore other ways of mutually reassuring South Asian States against the danger of nuclear proliferation.

As in previous years, a number of States, including Bahrain, Bangladesh, Burundi, Chile, Democratic Yemen, Guatemala, Kenya, Mali, Nepal, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and Zaire, restated their support for the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.

Explaining its negative vote, India said that, while it did not object to the concept of nuclear-weapon-free zones, the initiative for such zones should come voluntarily from all the States of the region concerned, avoiding prejudgement as to concept, features and delineation. South Asia, it held, could not be treated in isolation; the existence of nuclear weapons there and foreign military presence in the Indian Ocean complicated the region's security environment and made the situation in South Asia inappropriate for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone. Bhutan and Mauritius explained their negative votes on grounds of lack of consultation and agreement among the States concerned. Sweden said it abstained for similar reasons.

The United States said that, while its affirmative vote reflected its continuing policy towards nuclear-weapon-free zones, it did not wish to imply that it regarded their creation as the only means of averting nuclear arms competition in the region; a variety of agreed arrangements voluntarily concluded by the States most directly concerned might well serve the same objective. Also, for any nuclear-weapon-free zone arrangement to accomplish its objective, it would have to preclude nuclear explosions, whatever their declared purpose.

France, Italy, Mozambique, the United Kingdom and Viet Nam, which abstained, considered that the establishment of such zones could not be carried out against the will of States in the region concerned; in the case of South Asia, such a zone was still opposed by one of the area's major powers. The Federal Republic of Germany, Jordan and the Netherlands expressed a similar view, although they voted in favour since they supported the principle of the creation of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

Conditions for such a zone, according to Japan, which voted in favour, included: agreement by all concerned, including the nuclear States; the existence of safeguards, embracing inspection and verification; and consistency with international law, including freedom of navigation on the high seas.

Other States also explained their abstentions. Australia felt that the approach envisaged in the resolution could not meet the requirements of the situation in South Asia. Ethiopia believed the differences could be resolved through consultations among the States concerned. Brazil stressed the need for consensus among the States concerned and a clear geographical delimitation -a view also held by Sri Lanka, which supported the text. Brazil also stressed the need for nuclear-weapon powers unequivocally to respect the status of such zones.

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly decided in December 1979 to convene in 1981 a Conference on the Indian Ocean to implement the Assembly's 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.³² This action was taken on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, whose mandate the Assembly decided to extend with an enlarged membership. Prior to the Assembly's action, a Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean had met in July and adopted a Final Document in which it set out seven principles for the implementation of the Declaration.

REPORT OF THE MEETING OF THE LITTORAL AND HINTERLAND STATES

The Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean was convened at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 2 to 13 July 1979 as a step towards convening a conference on the Indian Ocean. Of the 62 States which participated, 44 were littoral or hinterland States: Afghanistan, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Botswana, Burma, Burundi, the Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritius, Mozambique, Nepal, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Singapore, Somalia, Sri the Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand, Uganda, the United Arab Emirates, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Zambia. China, Greece, Japan and Panama, which are not littoral or hinterland States, also participated, as did other powers and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean: Canada, France, the 32 See Y.U.N., 1971, p. 34, resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, containing text of Declaration.

Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Liberia, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States. These last 11 States participated as observers, as did Finland, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

In its Final Document— drawn up by a working group meeting between 5 and 11 July and adopted without vote by the Meeting on 13 July- the Meeting recommended that the Assembly at its 1979 session fix the date and venue for the conference on the Indian Ocean and entrust an enlarged Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to undertake the preparatory work, including arrangements for any international agreement that might be reached for the maintenance of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace. The Meeting asked the Assembly to invite the permanent members of the Security Council and other major maritime users of the Ocean which had not done so to serve on the expanded Ad Hoc Committee to facilitate preparations.

The Final Document contained a review and assessment of developments since the adoption of the Assembly's 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace. The Meeting considered that great-power military presence in the Indian Ocean conceived in the context of great-power rivalry had intensified and that peace and security in the area had deteriorated, making it more urgent to move towards the early implementation of the Declaration.

The Final Document contained seven principles for the implementation of the Declaration which were agreed upon at the Meeting under the following headings: (1) limits of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace (the final limits were not agreed upon); (2) halting the further escalation and expansion and eliminating the military presence of the great powers in the Ocean, conceived in the context of great-power rivalry; (3) elimination of great-power military bases and installations from the Ocean conceived in the context of that rivalry; (4) denuclearization of the Ocean in the context of implementation of the Declaration (in view of some objections to a provision that littoral and hinterland States should agree not to acquire, introduce or allow introduction of nuclear weapons in the Ocean, the Meeting recommended that further negotiations on this point should take place in the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean); (5) non-use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes; (6) strengthening of international security through regional and other co-operation in the context of the implementation of the Declaration; and (7) free and unimpeded use of the Indian Ocean zone of peace by vessels of all nations in accordance with the norms and principles of international law and custom.

Comments and reservations of certain States concerning the Final Document were reflected in the Meeting's report to the General Assembly. Australia stated that it was unable to accept the Document because, inter alia, as an island continent it could not accept, in the context of the Indian Ocean, undertakings which would bind it in other regions or which would preclude it from entering into arrangements with powers of other regions. Australia also felt that any implication that great-power rivalry was the only threat to peace and security in the region was not realistic.

Japan had reservations concerning paragraphs dealing with delimitation of the zone, eliminating great-power military activities in the Indian Ocean conceived in the context of great-power rivalry, and the role of the regional countries in strengthening peace and security in the region; it offered alternative formulations for these paragraphs. On the same paragraphs, Greece considered that decisions on such crucial points should not be finalized without the concurrence of the great powers and major maritime users of the Ocean. China maintained that the great-power rivalry referred to in the Document meant precisely super-power rivalry.

REPORT OF THE AD HOC COMMITTEE ON THE INDIAN OCEAN

in New York.

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, which functioned as the preparatory committee for the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, held three sessions in that capacity during 1979 at United Nations Headquarters: from 12 to 16 February, from 12 to 16 March and from 14 to 23 May. In addition to 15 formal and 18 informal meetings of the Committee, several working groups met during and between Committee sessions. The Committee recommended an agenda and provisional rules of procedure for the Meeting as well as a draft of the Final Document. The Committee also held a regular session from 3 to 19 October

The report of the Ad Hoc Committee to the General Assembly contained two draft resolutions on the Committee's continuing work and mandate which the Assembly later adopted (see below). The Committee also reported on consultations by its Chairman with the USSR and the United States to ascertain the status of their bilateral talks regarding their military presence in the Indian Ocean and to discuss their cooperation with the Committee. The talks had been suspended in February 1978³³ and, on 3 October 1979, the Chairman reported that, despite repeated urgings on his part, they had not been resumed. The Chairman also conveyed to the Committee the communications he had received from the USSR and the United States.

The USSR stated in its letter that it supported the idea of turning the Indian Ocean into a zone of peace, but the thesis advanced by the Indian Ocean countries that so-called great-power rivalry was a source of military tension in the area placed difficulties in the way of practical cooperation with those countries, as the concept was untrue and unobjective with regard to the USSR. The USSR was actively working for an early resumption of the Soviet-American talks on the limitation and reduction of military activities in the Indian Ocean.

The United States said in its letter that the Meeting's Final Document contained language, particularly with respect to great-power presence in the Indian Ocean, that it could not accept. Moreover, the fact that the Document had been adopted without consensus cast doubt on the usefulness of the Committee's approach. The United States remained committed to the preservation of the independence, sovereignty and integrity of the States in the area.

CONSIDERATION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted the two resolutions recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, as resolutions 34/80 A and B.

By the first, the Assembly expressed hope for the early implementation of its 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace. It urged that the talks between the USSR and the United States regarding their military presence in the Ocean be resumed without delay, and that the parties refrain from any activity prejudicial to the implementation of the Declaration. Finally, the Assembly renewed the general mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee, requesting it to report in 1980.

Resolution 34/80 A was adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 0, with 23 abstentions, following approval by the First Committee on 30 November by a recorded vote of 102 to 0, with 23 abstentions.

By the second resolution, the Assembly decided to enlarge the Ad Hoc Committee by the addition of members to be appointed by the Assembly President on the Committee's recommendation. It invited the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean that had not done so to serve on the expanded Committee, and decided to convene a Conference on the Indian Ocean during 1981 at Colombo, Sri Lanka, for the implementation of the Declaration. The Committee was requested to undertake the preparatory work for the Conference.

Resolution 34/80 B was adopted by a recorded vote of 126 to 0, with 14 abstentions; it had been approved by the First Committee on 30 November by a recorded vote of 111 to 0, with 14 abstentions.

During the debate in the First Committee, India stated that the transformation of the Indian Ocean into a zone of peace would not only strengthen international peace and security but, in the long run, would also be in the interests of the great powers themselves, with whom lay the major responsibility for implementing the Declaration.

The United Arab Emirates was among several States which expressed dissatisfaction with the lack of more substantial progress in measures to implement the Declaration, especially because of what they saw as the growing great-power rivalry in the area. Iraq, in addition, stated that certain major powers had not held serious negotiations among themselves or with the littoral and hinterland States.

For Japan, establishment of such a zone would have to be approved by a consensus of the States concerned, be accompanied by an effective safeguard system, be consistent with international law, including freedom of navigation on the high seas, and avoid undermining the peace and security of the region and the world.

Many States, Bangladesh, Finland and Sri Lanka among them, referring to the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, expressed gratification at the progress achieved. Others, such as Australia, felt that the results were only partially satisfactory, as the Final Document contained important elements which had proven unacceptable to its Government and could not therefore be adopted by consensus. The over-all results, Australia held, had demonstrated that there were still fundamental differences to be resolved among the States concerned before a conference on the Indian Ocean could be held.

A number of representatives, among them those of Ethiopia, Greece, India, Indonesia, Nepal, Pakistan and the United Republic of Tanzania, appealed to the great powers and major maritime users to participate in the work of the expanded Ad Hoc Committee in order to facilitate the convening of the Conference.

Several countries, including Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Madagascar, Mozambique, the United Arab Emirates and the United Republic of Tanzania, denounced recent United States decisions leading to an escalation of its military presence in the area, its statements threatening the possible use of military force in the Indian Ocean region and other pressures to which they said the region had been subjected. Iran, for example, regarded those measures as a glaring example of imperialistic pursuits.

A number of States also expressed disappointment at the suspension in 1978 of the bilateral talks between the USSR and the United States on the question of their military presence in the Indian Ocean. India expressed regret that the discussions had not been resumed, despite an indication by the leaders of the two countries, who had met in Vienna in June 1979, that their countries would discuss resumption of the negotiations.

Explaining its position on the resolutions, the USSR stated that it had had to abstain on the first of the two texts because of certain elements it contained, particularly the reference to "greatpower rivalry" as a source of tension in the region. Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Poland, which also abstained, and Viet Nam, which voted in favour, also found the term inaccurate and misleading. Poland and the USSR were also unable to subscribe to the presupposition that the USSR, among other States, bore responsibility for the tension in the Indian Ocean, to the interpretation that the main cause of that tension was military competition between the two major powers, or to wording making it unclear as to which side was not agreeing to resumption of the bilateral talks. The USSR said it was ready to join the Ad Hoc Committee in preparatory work for the Conference.

The United States, abstaining on both resolutions, stated that it had never agreed with certain basic aspects of the Committee's mandate and could not associate itself with a decision to call for a conference until a promising basis existed for a consensus at such a conference. If it were to join in preliminary work in a manner that reflected, the fact that it was neither a littoral nor a hinterland State, it would insist on modest and realistic goals, such as regional military restraint and improved regional pacific-settlement measures. It was not prepared to agree with abridgement of the right of self-defence or with the idea of eliminating great-power military presence in the Indian Ocean or logistical support facilities for those forces.

France, which also abstained, stated that, as a long-time coastal country of the Indian Ocean, it was aware of its responsibility and the need to contribute to the search for greater security in that region, However, the 1971 Declaration and some of the Meeting's conclusions were not in keeping with international maritime law or with the equilibrium of rights and duties of the States concerned. The concept of zones of peace was not internationally accepted, nor had any precision been given to the limits of such a zone or the nature of the activities to be excluded therefrom.

The lack of a common understanding on the main issues by the States involved, the lack of consensus, the interruption of the bilateral talks and the absence of reasonable guarantees for the success of the Conference were circumstances explaining Portugal's abstention.

Ireland, explaining the abstention of the nine members of the European Community, noted their reservations concerning the lack of a clear and agreed definition of the area of the Indian Ocean peace zone and the activities to be excluded from it. They emphasized the need for firm assurances that freedom of navigation by sea and air would be guaranteed to all nations and that the provisions of the law of the sea would not be contravened. They believed it would be premature to move on to a conference until those questions had been resolved.

Israel, explaining its abstention, noted that it had not been invited to the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, in complete disregard of its geographical qualification as one of the hinterland States.

In a separate action, the General Assembly reaffirmed, by resolution 34/100 on the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (see p. 138), the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and invited the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to serve on the expanded Ad Hoc Committee to prepare for the 1981 Conference on the Indian Ocean. The General Assembly, Reaffirming its conviction that the cessation of nuclearweapon testing by all States in all environments would be in the interest of all mankind as a major step towards ending the qualitative improvement, development and proliferation of nuclear weapons, as a means of relieving the deep apprehension concerning the harmful consequences of radioactive contamination for the health of present and future generations and as a contribution towards the cessation of the nuclear arms race.

Recalling the determination of the parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons expressed in those Treaties to continue negotiations to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time.

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolution 32/78 of 12 December 1977, paragraph 51 of resolution S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, resolution 33/60 of 14 December 1978 and section IV of resolution 33/71 H of 14 December 1978,

Emphasizing the urgent need for all nuclear-weapon States to cease the testing of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing the importance to a treaty prohibiting nuclear testing of the study being carried out by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on a global network of stations for the exchange of seismological data,

Recognizing the indispensable role of the Committee on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

Noting with dissatisfaction that that part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament relating to the question of a comprehensive test-ban treaty shows no progress in the consideration of this subject and that a full report on the status of the negotiations between the three nuclear-weapon States was not submitted,

- 1. Reiterates its grave concern at the fact that nuclearweapon testing continues unabated against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;
- 2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;
- 3. Expresses its conviction that positive progress in the negotiations by the Committee on Disarmament on such a treaty is a vital element for the success of efforts to prevent both vertical and horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons and will contribute towards an end to the arms race and the achievement of nuclear disarmament;
- 4. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to initiate negotiations on such a treaty as a matter of the highest priority;
- Calls upon the three negotiating nuclear-weapon States to use their best endeavours to bring their negotiations to a positive conclusion in time for consideration during the next session of the Committee on Disarmament;
- 6. Invites Governments of Member States to contribute to the further development of national and international cooperative measures to detect seismic events aimed at setting up a global verification system of a comprehensive test-ban treaty and to co-operate with the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events for the fulfilment of its mandate:
- 7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item relating to the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to take effective measures for the strengthening of the security of States and prompted by the desire shared by all nations to eliminate war and prevent a nuclear holocaust,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and reaffirmed in a number of United Nations declarations and resolutions,

Noting with satisfaction the desire of States in various regions to prevent nuclear weapons from being introduced into their territories, including through the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and being anxious to contribute to this objective,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop, as appropriate, effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures to assure the nonnuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Mindful of the statements and observations made by various States on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons.

Recalling its resolution 33/72 of 14 December 1978,

Welcoming the in-depth consideration of the item entitled "Effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons" by the Committee on Disarmament and the establishment of an ad hoc working group open to all States members of the Committee to conduct negotiations on the subject.

Noting with satisfaction that, under that item, drafts of an international convention were submitted to the Committee on Disarmament

Taking note of the report of the Committee on Disarmament, including the report of the ad hoc Working Group,

Noting with satisfaction that the idea of a convention has gained broad international support,

Desirous of promoting an early and successful completion of the negotiations on the elaboration of the convention,

- 1. Welcomes the conclusion of the Committee on Disarmament that it is urgent to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;
- 2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Committee on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of such an international convention;
- 3. Commends the decision of the Committee on Disarmament to continue the negotiations on this subject at the beginning of its session in 1980;
- 4. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to continue the negotiations on this subject on a priority basis during its session in 1980 with a view to their early conclusion with the elaboration of a convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;
- 5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Conclusion of an international convention on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons."

Requests the Committee on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects," to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the increasing information and evidence regarding Israel's activities aiming at the acquisition and development of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that the development of nuclear capability by Israel would further aggravate the already dangerous situation in the region and further threaten international peace and security,

The General Assembly,

Conscious that a nuclear war would have devastating consequences for the whole of mankind,

Recalling its resolution 33/91 F of 16 December 1978, in which it called upon all nuclear-weapon States to refrain from stationing nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present, and on all non-nuclear-weapon States which do not have nuclear weapons on their territories to refrain from any steps which would directly or indirectly result in the stationing of such weapons on their territories,

Bearing in mind the clearly expressed intention of many States to prevent the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territories,

Considering that the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present would constitute a step towards the larger objective of the subsequent complete withdrawal of nuclear weapons from the territories of other States, thus contributing to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons, leading eventually to the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

- Believes it necessary to examine possibilities for an international agreement on the non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General to this end to call upon all States to transmit to him their opinions and observations regarding the possibility of concluding the agreement mentioned in paragraph 1 above and to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;
- 3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there are no such weapons at present."

Resolution 34/87 F, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/755, adopted without vote by Assembly on 11 December 1979, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2602 A (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, 2932 B (XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3184 A and C (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3261 C (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3484 C (XXX) of 12 December 1975, 31/189 A of 21 December 1976 and 32/87 G of 12 December 1977,

Reaffirming its resolution 33/91 C of 16 December 1978, in which it, inter alia:

- (a) Reiterated its satisfaction with the solemn declarations made in 1977 by the heads of State of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in which they stated that they were ready to endeavour to reach agreements which would permit starting the gradual reduction of existing stockpiles of nuclear weapons and moving towards their complete and total destruction, with a view to a world truly free of nuclear weapons,
- (b) Recalled that one of the disarmament measures deserving the highest priority, included in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, was the conclusion of the bilateral agreement known as SALT II, which should be followed promptly by further strategic arms limitation negotiations between the two parties, leading to agreed significant reductions of and qualitative limitations on strategic arms,
- (c) Stressed that in the Programme of Action it was established that, in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility,

Noting that the SALT II agreement—which bears the official title "Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms" —was finally signed on 18 June 1979 and that its text, together with the texts of the Protocol to the Treaty and of the joint statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms, both signed on the same day as the Treaty, and that of the joint communique, also issued on 18 June 1979, is reproduced in a document of the Committee on Disarmament.

- 1. Shares the conviction expressed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in the joint statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms that early agreement on the further limitation and further reduction of strategic arms would serve to strengthen international peace and security and to reduce the risk of outbreak of nuclear war;
- 2. Notes that it has not been possible for the Treaty on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II) to go beyond certain limitations which, taken together, permit considerable increments, both quantitatively and qualitatively, in relation. to the levels of the nuclear arsenals existing at present;
 - 3. Welcomes the agreement reached by both parties with a view to:
- (a) Continuing to pursue negotiations, in accordance with the principle of equality and equal security, on measures for the further limitation and reduction in the number of strategic arms, as well as for their further qualitative limitation;
- (b) Endeavouring in such negotiations to achieve, inter alia, the following objectives:
 - Significant and substantial reductions in the numbers of strategic offensive arms;
 - (ii) Qualitative limitations on strategic offensive arms, including restrictions on the development, testing and deployment of new types of strategic offensive arms and on the modernization of existing strategic offensive arms:
 - 4. Trusts that:
- (a) The Treaty on the Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (SALT II) will enter into force at an early date in accordance with the provisions of article XIX thereof, inasmuch as it constitutes a vital element for the continuation and progress of the negotiations between the two States possessing the most important arsenals of nuclear weapons;
- (b) Such negotiations, intended to achieve, as soon as possible, agreement on further measures for the limitation and reduction of strategic arms, will begin promptly after the entry into force of the Treaty, as provided for in article XIV thereof, with the objective of concluding well in advance of 1985 the new agreement which will replace the Treaty and which is usually referred to as SALT III;
- 5. Trusts also that the two contracting States will implement all the above-mentioned agreements and provisions and do their utmost in order that the SALT III agreement may constitute an important step towards the final goal described by their respective heads of State as that of achieving the complete and total destruction of existing stockpiles of nuclear weapons and ensuring the establishment of a world free of such weapons;
- 6. Invites the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep the General Assembly appropriately informed of the results of their negotiations, in conformity with the provisions of paragraphs 27 and 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;
- 7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Strategic arms limitation talks."

A/C.1/34/L.10. Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela: draft resolution, approved without vote by First Committee on 16 November 1979, meeting 36.

A/34/740. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 341/71, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/740, adopted without vote by Assembly on 11 December 1979, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 32/76 of 12 December 1977 and 33/58 of 14 December 1978 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that certain territories lying within the zone of application of that Treaty which are not sovereign political entities are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties

Recalling with satisfaction that the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Kingdom of the Netherlands became parties to Additional Protocol I in 1969 and 1971, respectively, and that the United States of America signed it in 1977,

Noting also with satisfaction that Additional Protocol I was signed by France on 2 March 1979,

- 1. Invites France and the United States of America to take all necessary steps to secure the ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) at the earliest possible date:
- 2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 34/71 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 2456 B (XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2666(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2830(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2935(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3079(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3258(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3467(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/67 of 10 December 1976, 32/79 of 12 December 1977 and 33/61 of 14 December 1978, all of which contain appeals to the nuclear-weapon States regarding the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Reaffirming its conviction, now corroborated by international practice, that, for the maximum effectiveness of any treaty establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone, the cooperation of the nuclear-weapon States is necessary and that such co-operation should take the form of commitments likewise undertaken in a formal international instrument which is legally binding, such as a treaty, convention or protocol,

Welcomes the fact that Additional Protocol II of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) has already been signed and ratified by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, France, the People's Republic of China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, thus fulfilling an aspiration of the General Assembly.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolutions 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 32/81 of 12 December 1977 and 33/63 of 14 December 1978, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, comprising the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling also that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any attempt by South Africa to introduce in any way whatsoever nuclear weapons into the continent and demanded that South Africa should forthwith refrain from conducting any nuclear explosion on the continent of Africa or elsewhere,

Noting with concern that South Africa has persistently refused to conclude adequate and comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency with a view to preventing the diversion of nuclear materials from peaceful uses to the manufacture of nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices,

Alarmed by the report that, having bluntly and persistently refused to renounce the acquisition of nuclear weapons, South Africa may have detonated a nuclear explosive device,

Convinced that such a situation constitutes a grave danger to international peace and security and a particularly dangerous threat to the security of African States,

Recalling its decision, taken at the tenth special session, that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa

Noting with appreciation the report of the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, held in London on 24 and 25 February 1979,

Expressing its indignation that some Western countries and Israel have continued to collaborate with South Africa in the form, inter alia, of uranium extraction and processing, supply of nuclear equipment, transfer of technology, provision of training and exchange of scientists and external financial support for its nuclear programme,

Noting with satisfaction the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Monrovia from 6 to 20 July 1979, by which the Council took further steps towards the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa.

- 1. Strongly reiterates its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa, comprising the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa, as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;
- 2. Vigorously condemns the reported detonation of a nuclear device by South Africa;
- 3. Reaffirms that the nuclear programme of the racist regime of South Africa constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and a particularly dangerous threat to the security of African States, and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;
- 4. Condemns any nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime of South Africa since such collaboration frustrates, inter alia, the objective of the Organization of African Unity to keep Africa a nuclear-weapon-free zone;
- Calls upon such States, corporations, institutions or individuals, therefore, to terminate forthwith such nuclear collaboration between them and the racist regime of South Africa;
- 6. Requests the Security Council to prohibit all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field;
- 7. Requests the Security Council to institute effective enforcement action, bearing in mind the recommendations of the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, against the racist regime of South Africa, so as to prevent it from further endangering international peace and security through its acquisition of nuclear weapons;
- Demands that South Africa submit all its nuclear installations to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;
- 9. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Organization of African Unity towards the realization of its solemn Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;
- 10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa."

The General Assembly,

Deeply alarmed at the report that South Africa may have detonated a nuclear explosive device in September 1979,

Recalling its decision 34/404 of 26 October 1979, Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling also its resolution 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it recognized that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East enjoyed wide support in the region,

Bearing in mind its resolution 31/71 of 10 December 1976, in which it expressed the conviction that progress towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance the cause of peace in the region and in the world,

Considering its resolution 32/82 of 12 December 1977, in which it expressed the conviction that the development of nuclear capability would further complicate the situation and immensely damage the efforts to create an atmosphere of confidence in the Middle East,

Guided by the relevant recommendations in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, dealing with the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also its resolution 33/64 of 14 December 1978, Recognizing that the establishment of a nuclearweapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures which can contribute most effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will strengthen the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Recalling that in the above-mentioned resolutions it called upon the States of the South Asian region and such other neighbouring non-nuclear-weapon States as might be interested to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to this objective,

Further recalling that, in its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX), 31/73 and 32/83, it requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting for the purpose of the consultations mentioned therein and to render such assistance as might be required to promote the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978 and 33/68 of 14 December 1978,

Encouraged by the continued support extended to the Declaration by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action in furtherance of the objectives of the Declaration would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security

Deeply concerned at the intensification of great-Power military presence, conceived in the context of great-Power rivalry, leading to an increase of tension in the area.

Considering that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean, conceived in the context of great-Power rivalry, with the danger of a competitive escalation of such a military presence, gives greater urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace,

Considering also that the creation of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean requires co-operation among the regional States to ensure conditions of peace and security within the region, as envisaged in the Declaration, and the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the littoral and hinterland States,

Further considering that, at its tenth special session, it noted the proposal for establishing the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, taking into account its deliberations and its relevant resolutions and the need to ensure the maintenance of peace and security in the region,

Noting that talks were initiated between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America regarding their military presence in the Indian Ocean, and that the two countries have kept the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean informed of the current situation concerning those talks.

Regretting, however, that the talks remain suspended, Encouraged by the holding of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, which provided an opportunity for the further harmonization of the positions of the littoral and hinterland States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean and the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean;

- Takes note with satisfaction of the issues on which the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean succeeded in harmonizing a common position;
- 3. Expresses the hope for the early implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace;
- 4. Urges that the talks between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America regarding their military presence in the Indian Ocean should be resumed without delay and that the parties should refrain from any activity prejudicial to the implementation of resolution 2832(XXVI):
- 5. Renews the general mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions;
- 6. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session a full report on its work:
- 7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee.

Questions relating to non-nuclear disarmament measures

Chemical and bacteriological weapons

For its consideration of the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, the General Assembly at its 1979 session had before it the report of the Committee on Disarmament (see p. 18). In addition, by a letter of 13 December 1978 to the Secretary-General, the Federal Republic of Germany transmitted a note verbale of the day before from its Permanent Mission to the United Nations inviting United Nations Member States to attend a verification workshop in March 1979 in the Cologne-Frankfurt area. The expert meeting, the results of which were transmitted to the Committee on Disarmament in a working paper in July, aimed at demonstrating the practicability of on-site means of verification, under international control, of a ban on the manufacture of chemical weapons. A letter of 22 November 1979, from Democratic Kampuchea, also before the Assembly, transmitted a statement charging the genocidal use of toxic chemical products in that country, air-dropped by what were described as Vietnamese aggressors.

Most of the discussion of chemical weapons, as in previous years, took place in the Assembly's First Committee. Member States from all regions viewed the elimination of chemical weapons from the arsenals of States as a question of primary importance, deserving priority consideration.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 34/72, by which it expressed regret that an agreement on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction had not been elaborated, and urged the Committee on Disarmament to undertake negotiations on such an agreement at the beginning of its 1980 session, as a matter of high priority, taking into account all proposals and initiatives.

The text was approved by the First Committee, also without vote, on 26 November; 46 Members sponsored the draft (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

During the general debate on disarmament in the First Committee, discussion of chemical weapons and their prohibition centred on the scope of a treaty to prohibit their use and verification of compliance by parties to such a treaty. Many speakers regretted the slow pace of negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament. The Netherlands, for example, said that the Assembly should request the Committee to conduct substantive negotiations on chemical weapons as a matter of high priority throughout 1980. Ireland believed that an early prohibition was within reach if pursued with vigour, courage and imagination.

The United States, alluding to the ongoing bilateral negotiations on this subject between it and the USSR, noted that, while a large measure of agreement existed on the objective of a complete, effective and verifiable prohibition of chemical weapons, significant and substantive differences remained. Those differences were so great, it stated, that attempts to elaborate a multilateral treaty before the issues had been identified and clarified would not be helpful and could well bring about a delay.

The USSR stated that it attached great importance to a chemical weapons ban as a realistic means of achieving tangible results in one of the most important areas of disarmament. It was actively participating in talks on the matter in the Committee on Disarmament and bilaterally with the United States.

Both the USSR and the United States observed that they were preparing to resume their bilateral negotiations in Geneva in mid-January 1980.

The United Kingdom expressed the opinion that a multilateral convention could not be prepared until the two States most closely involved had established a basis of agreement. France, on the other hand, stated that the Committee on Disarmament should exercise its responsibility fully, as the sole multilateral negotiating body on disarmament; negotiations in that body could not be made subordinate or complementary to other negotiations.

China called for an acceleration of negotiations so that a treaty could be concluded at an early date. It firmly opposed the use of chemical weapons, directly or through agents and mercenaries, to massacre people fighting for national liberation in defence of their independence and sovereignty.

India, Spain and Sweden, among others, also held that it was imperative to start multilateral negotiations on a chemical weapons convention at the next session of the Committee on Disarmament. Afghanistan, Australia, Indonesia, Mexico and Poland were among those that welcomed the joint USSR/United States progress report submitted to the Committee on Disarmament in July on their ongoing bilateral negotiations; Nigeria, however, expressed regret that the rather late timing of the report detracted from the seriousness with which it might have been considered in that Committee.

On the question of scope, Ghana called for a ban on all means of chemical warfare, including lethal chemical-weapon agents, incapacitating agents and others which might cause temporary disability. However, it felt that toxic agents that might be necessary for legitimate technological, prophylactic or other non-military purposes such as research should be excluded from the ban. Denmark stated that chemical warfare agents not covered in a convention might prove attractive for inclusion in what could be called a "permissible chemical inventory." It was therefore essential that a ban on chemical weapons should be as comprehensive and as well defined as possible and should include the military use of herbicides and defoliants.

As to verification, the German Democratic Republic said that the solution of the problem ought not to be complicated by artificial barriers, such as unrealistic demands for control. Canada stated that it continued to attach importance to methods of verification giving confidence that agreements were being observed. They were more likely to do so if impartial and competent international agencies were also involved; Canada cited safeguards on peaceful nuclear activities administered by the International Atomic Energy Agency as an example. Canada said it accepted the principle of an international satellite monitoring agency under United Nations authority, even though there were financial and political obstacles.

Among comments made on bacteriological weapons, Bulgaria expressed confidence that the 1980 Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction would again confirm the effectiveness of the 1971 Convention³⁴ and the absence of any violation of its provisions by States parties. Mongolia hoped that the convening of the Conference would encourage non-parties to subscribe as soon as possible to the Convention.

Convention on banning radiological weapons

On 11 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 34/87 A, calling for the conclusion of an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons. Welcoming the report of the Committee on Disarmament with regard to radiological weapons and, particularly, the Committee's intention to continue consideration in 1980 of proposals for a convention banning such weapons, the Assembly by this resolution requested that Committee to reach agreement as soon as possible, through negotiation, on the text of the convention and to report to it in 1980 on the results achieved.

The text, sponsored by the USSR and the United States, was approved by the First Committee, also without vote, on 16 November.

In the debate on the subject, which took place mainly in the First Committee, the USSR expressed its belief that all necessary factors existed for an agreement on the question of the prohibition of radiological weapons to be made ready for signature at an early date, based on the fundamental elements recently submitted to the Committee on Disarmament by the USSR and the United States (see p. 25). The United States also expressed the hope that the Assembly would encourage the Committee on Disarmament to build on the achievement of the joint USSR/United States initiative through the drafting of an international convention.

Hungary regarded the submission of the twopower proposal as an important contribution to the disarmament process, aimed at the elimination of a potential weapon of mass destruction. Algeria regarded it as a demonstration that progress could be made in the field of disarmament, and hoped that that agreement would act as a catalyst in other fields, particularly the prohibition of nuclear-weapon tests and of chemical weapons.

The United Kingdom believed that the prohibition of radiological weapons would be a useful, if modest, step in the arms control and disarmament process. Sweden expressed the view that the emergence of militarily useful radiological weapons did not seem to be an immediate and serious threat and the proposed treaty could not therefore be a substitute for genuine nuclear disarmament; however, Sweden would be prepared to discuss its substance in the Committee on Disarmament. India, supporting Sweden's view, held that the monstrous arsenals of nuclear weapons constituted the greatest radiological danger.

China wondered why, rather than making such an issue of banning weapons that did not exist, the two super-powers did not take practical measures to reduce the large quantities of lethal weapons they already possessed.

Banning new weapons of mass destruction

Following its consideration of the question of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction, the Assembly on 11 December 1979 adopted resolution 34/79, by which it requested the Committee on Disarmament to continue negotiations, with the help of qualified governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on such a prohibition and, where necessary, specific agreements on particular types of weapons of mass destruction. The Committee was asked to report in 1980 on the results. The Assembly again urged all States to refrain from any action which could adversely affect talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements to prevent the emergence of new types and systems of such weapons.

Resolution 34/79 was adopted by a recorded vote of 117 to 0, with 24 abstentions. The text—sponsored by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam—had been approved by the First Committee on 23 November by a recorded vote, requested by the Byelorussian SSR and Ireland, of 88 to 0, with 25 abstentions.

Eastern European States and other countries, Bahrain and Kenya for example, continued to advocate the conclusion of a universal and comprehensive treaty on the prohibition of new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction through continued negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament.

The USSR stated that the elaboration of such a treaty was an important aspect of disarmament negotiations and required a special impulse from the General Assembly. Czechoslovakia believed it necessary for the Committee on Disarmament to intensify work on the question; the rate of progress on this issue after four years was not commensurate with its urgency. Poland expressed the view that there was a real danger of the emergence of new types of weapons of mass annihilation that might be even more destructive than nuclear weapons. Poland noted the view of many Members that it was easier to bar weapons at the research stage than to eliminate those already in arsenals.

Uganda expressed hope that the USSR/United States initiative on radiological weapons would not lead the Committee on Disarmament to overlook the urgency of negotiating a convention banning all new types of weapons of mass destruction. The problem of defining such weapons should not in its opinion hold up negotiations in this important area.

Other Members, including several Western European States and the United States, reiterated their established viewpoint that the conclusion of an all-encompassing treaty on the prohibition of all new types and systems of weapons of mass destruction was not a realistic solution. They advocated instead the conclusion of specific agreements prohibiting particular types of new weapons of mass destruction as they were identified. The United Kingdom observed that, while the Eastern European countries had continued to call for a treaty to prevent the emergence of new weapons of mass destruction not covered by the 1948 definition, 35 they had not convinced many States outside their own group that any such weapon existed or that the scientific principles which they had described could produce a weapon of military value.

Before the vote on the resolution in the First Committee, the United States reiterated its opposition to a general prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction. It maintained that dealing in a loose or vague manner with principles not currently understood, or with relationships among principles not yet conceived, would merely create the illusion of having dealt with the potential problem. It further believed that verification procedures necessary to make a general treaty more than an illusion would threaten to obstruct scientific development in areas where that would be neither necessary nor advisable.

Ireland, explaining the abstentions of the nine States members of the European Communities, said that, while they agreed on the need to prohibit any and all new weapons of mass destruction which were identified, the point at issue was the choice of the most effective means of pursuing that objective. Such weapons and their technologies, to be effectively prohibited, must be the subject of separate, verifiable controls. Moreover, a comprehensive agreement as envisaged could not adequately distinguish between peaceful research and research that could be given military application. Each weapon and weapon system had its own characteristics, requiring separate negotiation.

Japan considered it inappropriate for the Committee on Disarmament to negotiate a draft comprehensive agreement on the weapons in question because the scope of such an agreement and the type of weapons that would be encompassed were far from clear and verification difficulties would arise. Austria, Sweden and Turkey also explained their abstentions: while recognizing the importance of the question, they believed that a more widely acceptable approach was necessary. Austria felt that the kind of comprehensive agreement envisaged would not meet the requirement of adequate verification. In Sweden's view, a generally accepted and clear definition of its scope and content must be reached before starting negotiations.

United Nations Conference on banning or restricting excessively injurious conventional weapons

tional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects met at Geneva from 10 to 28 September 1979, as envisaged in a 1977 resolution of the General Assembly. ³⁶ It was preceded by a Preparatory Conference which began work in August/September 1978³⁷ and which completed preparations for the main Conference at a second session held at Geneva from 19 March to 12 April 1979.

The Conference sought agreement on a general treaty spelling out general aims and legal modalities, as well as optional protocols pertaining to specified types of weapons, to which States could adhere individually. It produced partially agreed texts and adopted a resolution on small-calibre weapons, but it was unable to resolve a number of points. Accordingly, it recommended that a further session be convened in 1980. The Assembly approved this recommendation on 11 December 1979, by resolution 34/82.

Preparations for the Conference

The second session of the Preparatory Conference was attended by 68 States. Fifteen proposals or draft clauses were submitted to it in 1978 and 1979, all of which were annexed to its report to the Conference covering both sessions. These included revised versions of three of the 12 proposals submitted at the 1978 session: one on incendiary weapons, submitted by Indonesia, another on the regulation of the use of small-calibre weapons systems, submitted by Mexico and Sweden, and the third on incendiary weapons, submitted by Australia and the Netherlands.

The Preparatory Conference established a working group to consider the draft proposals on non-detectable fragments—that is, fragments which in the human body escape detection by X-rays—and on the regulation of the use of landmines and other devices, a drafting group on incendiary weapons, and an informal working group on small-calibre weapons systems.

Unanimous agreement was reached on a draft proposal on non-detectable fragments. This one-sentence text would prohibit the use of any weapon whose primary effect was to injure by non-detectable fragments. A proposal on the regulation of land-mine use and other devices was generally agreed upon, intended to prohibit their use against civilians and their indiscriminate placement. A composite text on elements of an agreement on incendiary weapons was also elaborated, including definitions and rules. With respect to both of these issues, a number of elements remained unresolved. The informal working group on small-calibre weapons systems exchanged views and held technical discussions but did not seek to reach agreement on specific texts; the group felt that further discussion and study would be useful.

Matters concerning fuel-air explosives, antipersonnel fragmentation weapons and flechettes were discussed in plenary meetings. It was recommended that countries study those subjects further so that they could be considered at the main Conference.

A number of representatives supported a proposal of Mexico made at the 1978 session to work for a general and universally applicable "umbrella" treaty supplemented by optional protocols or clauses. These last would embody agreed prohibitions or restrictions of use which might be negotiated at the Conference in respect of certain conventional weapons deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects. However, it was noted that the structure and content of such an umbrella treaty would depend on the number and scope of the prohibitions or restrictions that were eventually agreed upon for specific categories of weapons. The Preparatory Conference recommended that the proposal be taken up in a subsidiary organ of the main Conference.

The Preparatory Conference recommended a set of provisional rules of procedure for the main Conference. As no agreement was reached on decision-making procedures, the rules contained no provisions on this matter.

Work of the Conference

Representatives of 82 States and a number of observers participated in the September 1979 session of the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects. (For officers and participants, see APPENDIX III.)

The Conference adopted its agenda and rules of procedure as recommended by the Preparatory Conference. It assigned to a Committee of the Whole the draft proposals submitted by the Preparatory Conference; that Committee, in turn, established two working groups: the Working Group on Land-mines and Booby Traps, which considered draft articles for a protocol on the regulation of the use of land-mines and other devices; and the Working Group on Incendiary Weapons, which considered the report of the Preparatory Conference's Drafting Group on Incendiary Weapons, as well as proposals submitted on the subject. In addition, the Conference established a Working Group on a General $^{^{36}}$ See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 43, resolution 32/152 of 19 December 1977. 37 See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 100.

Treaty to prepare the text of a convention to which optional protocols or clauses would be attached embodying prohibitions or restrictions of use of specific excessively injurious or indiscriminate conventional weapons.

In addition to considering draft articles on the regulation of the use of land-mines and other devices, the Working Group on. this subject also considered proposals by Morocco which included a text on increased protection for children from the effects of such weapons. On 25 September, the Group approved its report, which contained the text of the substantive provisions of a draft protocol, for submission to the Committee of the Whole. General agreement had been reached on such issues as: the scope of application; definitions; general restrictions; protection of United Nations personnel on peace-keeping, observation or fact-finding missions; international co-operation in the removal of mines and booby traps; restrictions on their use near civilian concentrations; and prohibition of the use of certain types of booby traps. However, differences remained over whether the text should require States parties to make available to an adversary party occupying part of their territory details of the location of minefields. After referring the article to further informal consultations, the Committee of the Whole approved the draft protocol on 26 September with one issue remaining unsettled: whether the text should require States to inform their adversaries, after the cessation of active hostilities, of the location of mines on territory under the control of their own or allied forces. Yugoslavia reserved its position on an article concerning restriction of the use of remotely delivered mines; it preferred a total prohibition.

The Working Group on Incendiary Weapons considered proposals submitted by the Preparatory Conference, as well as a new proposal by Argentina. The Group produced elements of a draft protocol on prohibitions or restrictions of the use of incendiary weapons, but, because of the complexity of the issues, a number of disagreements remained, one of them concerning a definition of "flame weapon." No agreement was reached on the complete prohibition of the use of incendiary weapons or on the protection of combatants. Proposals on this last topic by Indonesia, by Jordan, by Nigeria and by the USSR were attached to the Group's report. The Committee of the Whole decided to refer the draft to the Conference. It also annexed to its report to the Conference a draft protocol on incendiary weapons, sponsored by Austria, Egypt, Ghana, Jamaica, Mexico, Romania, Sweden, Switzerland, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zaire, and a draft protocol on prohibitions or restrictions on the use of incendiary weapons, sponsored by Australia and the Netherlands.

The Working Group on a General Treaty produced an outline of a draft convention, consisting of a preamble and 10 articles, with brackets around passages on which it could not reach agreement.

The agreed parts of the text covered signature, ratification, acceptance, approval, accession, denunciation, notifications by the depositary and authentic texts. Disagreement remained in regard to several provisions in the preamble, as well as: the types of situations to which the convention would apply; a proposal to require States outside a region to observe prohibitions agreed upon by the States of the region; the procedure for review and amendment of the convention after it entered into force; a proposal that would enable an authority representing a people engaged in armed conflict against a State party to make a unilateral declaration that would immediately bring the convention into force for that authority and give it the rights and obligations enjoyed. by any State party; the number of ratifications required to bring the convention into force; and a proposal to enable the convention to be applied provisionally before its entry into force.

With regard to the follow-up and review mechanism to be established following the entry of the convention into force, the Working Group reported general agreement that efforts to prohibit or restrict the use of certain conventional weapons should continue, by widening the scope of the agreements to be reached at the Conference, by amending those agreements or by adopting new rules for other categories of weapons. It was also generally agreed that only States parties could initiate amendments, but positions differed as to whether amendments should be ruled out until a certain amount of time had elapsed after the convention took effect. The general view was that a review conference should be convened automatically after a certain period if none had already been held at the request of States parties. Differing views were expressed as to whether any new rules should be drawn up only by a procedure similar to that for convening an amendment conference, or whether the Committee on Disarmament might also be involved.

The Working Group appended to its report to the Committee of the Whole several proposals by delegations for draft articles on the amendment and review procedure.

Discussions on categories of weapons for which specific working groups were not set up concentrated mainly on the question of smallcalibre weapons. On the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole, the Conference on 28 September adopted a resolution on small-calibre weapons systems. It had been sponsored in the Committee by Egypt, Ireland, Jamaica, Mexico, Sweden, Switzerland and Uruguay. By this resolution, the Conference took note with appreciation of the intensive research carried out nationally and internationally in the area of wound ballistics, invited Governments to carry out and communicate the findings of further research on the wounding effects of small-calibre weapons systems, and appealed to all Governments to exercise the utmost care in the development of such systems, so as to avoid an unnecessary escalation of their injurious effects.

With regard to other types of weapons, proposals concerning anti-personnel fragmentation weapons, flechettes and fuel-air explosive weapons were not considered in depth and no conclusions were reached.

The Conference, in light of what had been accomplished and the questions remaining, recommended to the General Assembly that it be convened for another session, to meet at Geneva for up to four. weeks, starting in September 1980, on the understanding that issues on which agreement had been achieved should not be reopened and that all efforts be concentrated on outstanding issues.

The report of the Conference on its 1979 session was discussed at the General Assembly's regular 1979 session, mainly in the First Committee. Many countries stressed the importance and political impact of the Conference and reaffirmed their support of its objectives. A number of States, including Algeria, Argentina, Austria, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Ireland, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Tanzania, expressed regret that the Conference had failed to conclude an agreement.

Some expressed continuing disappointment that it was not possible to bridge the gap in the positions of Governments concerning restrictions of the use of incendiary weapons, although Austria, Finland, Oman and others were encouraged by the fact that the Conference had come close to elaborating a draft agreement on land-mines and booby traps and that a consensus had been reached on the convening of another session. Sweden stated that, in light of the lack of progress on various disarmament issues, it was encouraging to note that some progress was being made on particularly inhumane weapons.

Brazil, noting the view that any review and follow-up machinery should be open to all Member States in view of the military and humanitarian aspects of the issues, suggested that arrangements to deal with such questions might be set up within the Disarmament Commission.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted without a vote resolution 34/82, by which it took note of the report of the Conference and the progress it had made at its 1979 session in various areas, including the agreement reached regarding a draft proposal concerning non-detectable fragments. The Assembly endorsed the recommendation to hold another session starting on 15 September 1980 and invited States to continue to participate actively in it and be represented by the required expertise.

The text was approved by the First Committee, also without vote, on 21 November. Its sponsors were Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, India, Ireland, Madagascar, Mauritius, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Romania, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sweden, Uruguay and Yugoslavia. It incorporated a provision, added by the sponsors to the original version of their text, by which the Assembly noted the progress made by the Conference Working Group on a General Treaty.

Freezing and reducing military budgets

A large number of countries continued during the 1979 debates in the General Assembly to express concern over the world's increasing military expenditures. They stressed the need to curb the increase and to reallocate funds from military to development purposes.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/83 F on the question, by which it considered that a new impetus should be given to endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditures, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned. To that end, the Assembly requested the Disarmament Commission to examine and identify in 1980 ways of achieving such agreements. In addition, it appealed to all States, particularly those most heavily armed, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries.

Before adopting this resolution as a whole without a vote, the Assembly took two separate votes. The first was on a preambular paragraph by which it recognized the need for a satisfactory instrument for standardized reporting on military expenditures, such as that currently being tested (see below); it was adopted by a recorded vote of 127 to 0, with 10 abstentions. The second was on the operative paragraph containing the request for study by the Disarmament Commission; it was adopted by a recorded vote of 127 to 0, with 9 abstentions.

Separate votes were also taken by the First Committee, at the request of the USSR, on the same preambular paragraph and on the operative paragraph which referred to measures of verification for the limitation of military expenditures; they were adopted together by 109 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. The text of the resolution, sponsored by Austria, Indonesia, Ireland, Mauritius, the Niger, Nigeria, Peru, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sweden and Uruguay, was then approved by the Committee on 21 November by a recorded vote of 123 to 0, with 1 abstention.

In the First Committee's debate, many States of the non-aligned movement, including Algeria, Bangladesh, Chad, Chile, Guinea, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Mali, Mauritania, Nepal, Pakistan, Somalia, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, Yemen, Zaire and Zambia, pointed out that world military expenditures were at an all-time high and underlined the adverse effect of this on international security as well as on economic and social development. A number of them noted that world military expenditures had risen in 1978 to $450 billion, a large part of which was accounted for by the nuclear-weapon and other militarily significant States. The disparity between military expenditures and the total of development assistance by those States was also pointed out. Benin, for instance, stated that annual expenditures on armaments had increased from $200 billion to $450 billion in 10 years, while only $23 billion a year had been devoted to international assistance during the same period. India, Papua New Guinea and Oatar were among several States which noted that about 50 per cent of world military expenditure was spent by the USSR and the United States. China also stressed that it was important for the two major nuclear powers to be the first to reduce their military budgets and rechannel resources to development.

A number of States, including Italy, Japan, Norway and the United Kingdom, drew attention to the large share of military expenditures allocated to conventional weapons, and emphasized the importance of reducing budget levels devoted to conventional as well as nuclear weapons. Several States also emphasized that the reduction of military budgets should be carried out under a gradual, balanced and verifiable agreement.

Interest in the progress of the ongoing test of the reporting instrument designed by the Ad Hoc Panel on Military Budgeting (see below) was expressed by Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States. Stress was placed on the importance of solving various technical problems facing the development of that instrument, including questions of the international comparison of military budgets and adequate measures of disclosure or verification. The United Kingdom considered that before negotiations on reducing military budgets could begin there would have to be a standardized method for measuring and reporting such budgets; it hoped that the current practical test of the reporting instrument would lead to the adoption of a standardized instrument by the United Nations for general use.

On the other hand, the USSR and several Eastern European States were among those expressing reservations on the testing of standardized reporting systems, maintaining that such testing diverted attention from the specific and tangible task of reducing military budgets.

The USSR and the Ukrainian SSR, for instance, continued to emphasize their support for the 1973 USSR proposal for a 10 per cent reduction of military budgets of the permanent members of the Security Council and others with large military potential, and for reallocation to development purposes, particularly in developing countries, of some of the money saved.³⁸ The USSR said its proposal had not been implemented because a number of States had refused to translate it into a practical agreement on grounds of incomparability of military budgets. Accordingly, in 1978 it had stated its readiness to agree to reductions either by an equal percentage or in absolute terms by amounts of the same order of magnitude.3

Romania, which introduced the resolution on this subject later adopted by the Assembly, recalled its proposal to the tenth special session on disarmament suggesting a phased reduction of budgets, initially by perhaps 10 to 15 per cent. 40 It held that the adoption of such measures would open the way towards a more thorough approach to disarmament problems and create conditions propitious to general disarmament. By a letter of 13 April, Romania had submitted to the Assembly the text of a decree of 1 March 1979 by its State Council increasing the State allowance for children, funds for which were to be obtained by a corresponding reduction in its military expenditures.

Several delegations explained their affirmative votes on the resolution in the First Committee. Belgium said the references to the need for an instrument for standardized reporting and the request to the Disarmament Commission to examine ways of reaching agreement had enabled it to vote in favour. The Federal Republic of Germany explained its support on similar grounds. Japan noted the indispensable need for fair comparison of military expenditures on the basis of a standardized reporting system and thus considered that a-step-by-step approach should be followed. The United States recalled its support for a systematic approach to the problem of limiting military expenditures and for a practical test of the standardized reporting instrument; any agreed limitation, however, would vitally affect its security, and under current circumstances no limitation was practicable as far as the United States Government was concerned.

Brazil reiterated its view that nuclear-weapon powers bore the main responsibility for effective disarmament measures, including military budget reduction. India, explaining its abstention, stated that the call contained in the resolution should properly be addressed to the five or six States which had the largest military budgets. It doubted whether the Disarmament Commission was the proper organ to identify ways of achieving such diverse agreements as envisaged in the text.

The Ad Hoc Panel on Military Budgeting held two sessions in 1979: from 14 to 18 May and from 27 to 31 August. Appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to a 1978 Assembly request,41 the Panel, composed of seven experienced practitioners in the field, had the assigned task of assisting him in carrying out a practical test of a proposed system for the measurement and reporting of military expenditures. In 1979 it concentrated on determining what countries might assist in the test, preparing guidelines to facilitate the use of the reporting instrument, and providing advice to participating countries. To those ends, the Panel developed a proposed reporting matrix and instructions, which was conveyed through Secretary-General to all Member States. They were invited to participate in the test and to report back in 1980. (See also p. 96.)

The General Assembly.

Recalling the resolution of the Commission for Conventional Armaments of 12 August 1948, which defined weapons of mass destruction to include atomic explosive weapons, radioactive material weapons, lethal chemical and biological weapons and any weapons developed in the future which have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of the atomic bomb or the other weapons mentioned above, Recalling its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969.

Recalling paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that a convention should be concluded prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons.

- 1. Welcomes the report of the Committee on Disarmament with regard to radiological weapons and, particularly, its stated intention to continue at its session in 1980 consideration of proposals for a convention banning those weapons;
- Requests the Committee on Disarmament to proceed as soon as possible to reach agreement, through negotiation, on the text of such a convention and to report to the General Assembly on the results achieved for consideration by the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3479(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/74 of 10 December 1976, 32/84 A of 12 December 1977 and 33/66 B of 14 December 1978 concerning the prohibition of new types of weapons of mass destruction,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraph 39 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General ASsembly, according to which qualitative and quantitative disarmament measures are both important for halting the arms race and efforts to that end must include negotiations on the limitation and cessation of the qualitative improvement of armaments, especially weapons of mass destruction, and the development of new means of warfare,

Recalling the decision contained in paragraph 77 of the Final Document to the effect that, in order to help prevent a qualitative arms race and so that scientific and technological achievements might ultimately be used solely for peaceful purposes, effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction based on new scientific principles and achievements, and that efforts should be appropriately pursued aiming at the prohibition of such new types and new systems of weapons of mass destruction,

Expressing its firm belief, in the light of the decisions adopted at the tenth special session, in the importance of concluding an agreement or agreements to prevent the use of scientific and technological progress for the development of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Noting with satisfaction the submission on 9 July 1979, for consideration by the Committee on Disarmament, of the joint proposal by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on major elements of a treaty prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons, agreed upon during the negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America,

Noting that in the course of its session in 1979 the Committee on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons,"

Taking into consideration the part of the report of the Committee on Disarmament relating to this question,

- 1. Requests the Committee on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, actively to continue negotiations, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, with a view to preparing a draft comprehensive agreement on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons and, where necessary, specific agreements on particular types of such weapons;
- 2. Requests the Committee on Disarmament to submit a report on the results achieved to the General Assembly for consideration at its thirty-fifth session;
- Once again urges all States to refrain from any action which could adversely affect the talks aimed at working out an agreement or agreements to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Committee on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth session;
- 5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Committee on Disarmament."

A/34/751. Report of First Committee.

Resolution 34/82, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/751, adopted without vote by Assembly on 11 December 1979, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/70 of 14 December 1978, in which it expressed its conviction that the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants could be significantly reduced if general agreement could be reached on the prohibition or restriction for humanitarian reasons of the use of specific conventional weapons, including any which might be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects.

Reaffirming its belief that positive results as regards the non-use or restriction of use for humanitarian reasons of specific conventional weapons would serve, in addition, as encouragement in the broader field of disarmament,

Also recalling that, by its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977 and 33/70, it decided to convene in 1979 the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and established the mandate of the Conference,

- 1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects on the work of its session held at Geneva from 10 to 28 September 1979;
- 2. Notes with appreciation that the Conference reached agreement with regard to a draft proposal concerning non-detectable fraements:
- Notes also that the report indicates a wide measure of agreement in respect of land-mines and booby traps, and that there was a further convergence of views in relation to the prohibition or restriction of use of incendiary weapons;
- 4. Takes note of the progress made by the Conference Working Group on a General Treaty entrusted with the preparation of the text of a convention to which optional protocols or clauses embodying prohibitions or restrictions of use of certain conventional weapons, deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects, would be attached;
- 5. Takes note also of the resolution of the Conference concerning the development of small-calibre weapon systems, in which, inter alia, the Conference stressed the need to exercise the utmost care in their development SO as to avoid an unnecessary escalation of the injurious effects of such systems;
- 6. Endorses the recommendation of the Conference to hold another session at Geneva for a period of up to four weeks, starting on 15 September 1980, with a view to completing negotiations in conformity with General Assembly resolutions 32/152 and 33/70;

- Takes note of the understanding of the Conference that issues on which agreement has already been achieved should not be reopened at the forthcoming session, so that all efforts may be concentrated on working out agreement on outstanding issues;
- 8. Invites States to continue to participate actively in the Conference and to be represented, in so far as possible, by the required legal, military and medical expertise;
- 9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide necessary assistance to the Conference;
- 10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session the item entitled "United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects: report of the Conference."

Resolution 34/83 F, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/752, adopted without vote by Assembly on 11 December 1979, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 89 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, according to which gradual reduction of military budgets on a mutually agreed basis, for example, in absolute figures or in terms of percentage points, particularly by nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would be a measure that would contribute to curbing the arms race and would increase the possibilities of reallocation of resources currently being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

Recalling also its decision, taken at the tenth special session, to continue to consider what concrete steps should be taken to facilitate the reduction of military budgets,

Reaffirming that it is possible to achieve reductions in military budgets without affecting the military balance to the detriment of the national security of any State,

Recognizing the need for the availability of a satisfactory instrument for standardized reporting on the military expenditures of Member States, such as the one currently being tested within the framework of the United Nations,

Aware of the proposals submitted to date by States and of the activities carried out thus far within the framework of the United Nations in the field of the reduction of military budgets,

Taking into account the fact that world military expenditures continue to grow at an alarming rate, in stark contrast with the acute development needs of States, in particular those of developing countries,

- 1. Considers that, in the light of the above-mentioned provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, a new impetus should be given to endeavours to achieve agreements to freeze, reduce or otherwise restrain, in a balanced manner, military expenditures, including adequate measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned;
- Requests, to this end, the Disarmament Commission to undertake during 1980 to examine and identify effective ways and means of achieving such agreements;
- 3. Appeals to all States, in particular the most heavily armed States, pending the conclusion of agreements on the reduction of military expenditures, to exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures with a view to reallocating the funds thus saved to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of developing countries;
- 4. Decides to consider at its thirty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets" to be included in its provisional agenda in pursuance of its resolution 33/67 of 14 December 1978, the most effective ways and means of adopting practical measures in this field.

Comprehensive approaches to disarmament

Follow-up of the tenth special session

Under an agenda item on a review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, held in May/June 1978, the Assembly at its 1979 regular session examined a number of specific issues on which it adopted resolutions. These included: the report of and administrative support to the Committee on Disarmament (resolutions 34/83 B and L), the report of the Disarmament Commission (34/83 H), the United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament (34/83 D), studies on a satellite monitoring agency and on the relationship between disarmament and development (34/83 E and K), freezing and reducing military budgets (34/83 F), non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war (34/83 G), Disarmament Week (34/83 I), nuclear weapons (34/83 J) and establishment of a United Nations institute for disarmament research (34/83 M). (For page references to texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

In addition, consideration of this item encompassed the general question of implementing measures to halt the arms race and contribute to disarmament and the question of disarmament and international security, discussed in this subchapter.

For the Assembly's discussion of the item on follow-up activities, the Secretary-General transmitted to it replies received from Argentina, Austria, Egypt, Japan, Poland, Romania, the USSR and the United Kingdom, Governments which had responded to an Assembly invitation of 14 December 1978⁴² to inform the Secretary-General of measures adopted outside the aegis of the United Nations regarding the implementation of recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session.

On 11 December 1979, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/83 C, by which it expressed deep concern over the continued arms race, nuclear as well as conventional, and over constantly growing military budgets which bore negative consequences and posed a growing threat to international peace and security and to the unhampered development of countries, particularly developing countries. The Assembly urgently called upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and all other major military powers, immediately to take steps leading to effective halting and reversing of the arms race and to disarmament. To this end, States were called on to make every effort to conclude successfully ongoing negotiations in the Committee on Disarmament and in a limited or regional framework on effective international agreements according to the priorities of the Programme of Action of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly⁴³ and to resume or undertake as soon as possible bilateral, regional or multilateral negotiations agreed upon by consensus at the special session, taking into consideration all relevant proposals. In addition, the Assembly invited all States engaged in various arms limitation negotiations outside the United Nations framework to keep it informed of the results of such negotiations.

Resolution 34/83 C was adopted without a vote; the First Committee had approved it in like manner on 26 November. It had 36 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

In introducing the resolution in the First Committee, Yugoslavia expressed satisfaction that some initial results had been achieved since the special session, primarily in the active involvement of the United Nations and in the revitalization of its multilateral disarmament machinery. Yugoslavia noted, however, that the arms race, especially the nuclear arms race, continued to cause an alarming increase in expenditures on armament, that negotiations on priority tasks had not yielded concrete results and that negotiations on a number of issues dealt with at the special session had not started.

A draft resolution on negotiations on disarmament was also submitted by the German Democratic Republic. By that text, the Assembly would have called on all States to increase their efforts for curbing the arms race and for disarmament, and, to that end: to expedite current negotiations by conducting them with greater intensity and singleness of purpose in order to reach a decisive breakthrough in the near future and successfully to complete preparation of new, effective disarmament measures; to resume negotiations on several aspects of disarmament which had been suspended without reason; and to enter into negotiations without delay on current issues of arms limitations and disarmament on which concrete proposals had been submitted but which had not become the subject of negotiations.

Following consultations with a view to combining the two texts, the sponsors revised their resolution. The German Democratic Republic did not therefore insist on a vote on its draft and joined them in sponsoring the text which the First Committee approved.

In the debate in both the plenary Assembly and the First Committee, a great many Member States expressed their views on follow-up to the decisions of the tenth special session, many of them in connexion with proposals designed to give effect to, or further elaborate, particular provisions of the Final Document. The statements generally indicated satisfaction with the initial steps that had been taken since the special session, but many States also expressed or implied the notion that disarmament negotiations ought to be expedited.

Australia stated that, although negotiations had not been without difficulties and disagreements, they had reflected a genuine desire on the part of all nations to work together towards the common goal of universal disarmament.

⁴³ Ibid., p. 39, resolution S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, containing Final Document, esp. sect. III.

Cuba stated that compliance with the Final Document and its Programme of Action had to be promoted, while at the same time additional proposals calculated to create a climate conducive to the application of those decisions should be put forward in the light of present-day reality. The need to translate what was agreed at the special session into concrete measures was expressed by a number of other countries, including Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Madagascar, Mauritius, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Kingdom.

Other Member States alluded to the matter in more negative terms. Egypt, for example, questioned whether the provisions of the Final Document and resolutions of the Assembly, as well as other statements on the subject, represented a practical view of the possibilities of making progress in disarmament or whether they erred in the sense of being too ambitious and going beyond what was feasible. Nigeria held that even the most charitable judgement would find cause for disappointment in that, a year after the special session, the arms race was still manifesting itself in many ways.

Disarmament and international security

Pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 16 December 1978⁴⁴ and the Programme of Action of the tenth special session,45 by which the Secretary-General was asked to continue a study begun in 1977⁴⁶ on the interrelationship between disarmament and international security, the 10member Group of Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and International. Security appointed by the Secretary-General held two sessions in 1979: from 5 to 8 June in Geneva and from 3 to 14 December in New York.

Following its first session, the Group submitted a progress report which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly's 1979 regular session. The report noted that the Group, at six formal meetings and a number of informal consultations, had discussed its method of work and the scope of the study and agreed on an initial outline.

The outline consisted of an introduction and seven chapters on: (1) the detrimental consequences for international security of the arms race in all its aspects; (2) a general analysis of the interrelationship of disarmament and international security; (3) the process of disarmament and international security; (4) detente, international security and disarmament; (5) an exploration of the relationship between specific disarmament measures and international security; (6) international co-operation as a means of strengthening international security and promoting disarmament; and (7) disarmament, international security and the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of peace and in the implementation of the system of international legal order and security as provided for in the Charter of the United Nations. Conclusions and recommendations were to follow.

At its second session in 1979, the Group exchanged views on drafts of the reports which had been submitted by individual experts, and tentatively agreed on a detailed structure for the study.

On 11 December, during the Group's second session, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/83 A on disarmament and international security, taking note of the Secretary-General's progress report on the ongoing study and calling upon all States to eliminate tensions and conflicts in their relations and proceed towards effective collective measures under the Charter for a system of international order, security and peace, concurrently with disarmament efforts. It also called on all States to pursue policies to strengthen international peace and security and to build confidence among States, and asked United Nations organs to initiate or accelerate work on developing and strengthening institutions for maintaining peace and security.

The draft resolution was approved by the First Committee on 16 November, also without a vote. It was sponsored by Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Greece, India, Ireland, Madagascar, Mauritius, Nigeria, the Philippines, Peru, Romania, Sri Lanka, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

Cyprus, which introduced the draft in the First Committee, pointed out that the development of a system of international security was the primary responsibility of the United Nations under the Charter. It noted that both the Declaration⁴⁷ and the Programme of Action of the Final Document of the special session on disarmament had clearly spelled out the need for an international security system to accompany disarmament efforts.

Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament

At the request of Czechoslovakia, the General Assembly included in its 1979 agenda an item entitled "Adoption of a declaration on international co-operation for disarmament." In submitting the item for inclusion, Czechoslovakia expressed its belief that the most urgent task facing the international community was that of achieving an effective solution to the vital problems of arms limitation and disarmament. It pointed out that, while some important steps had recently been taken in the field of disarmament, an arms race was in progress which could only be halted if there were effective, constructive, continuing co-operation among all members of the international community, irrespective of their social and economic systems or their participation in political or military groupings;

To that end, Czechoslovakia submitted to the First Committee the text of a draft declaration on international co-operation for disarmament which could, in its opinion, constitute a kind of code of political principles and norms governing the conduct of States in disarmament negotiations and guide them in their approach to solving disarmament problems. Such a declaration, it felt, would play a positive role in translating into reality the goals put forward at the Assembly's tenth special session.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/88 containing the Declaration on International Co-operation for Disarmament.

By the terms of section I of the four-part Declaration, the Assembly solemnly called upon all States actively to promote the development, strengthening and intensification of international co-operation designed to achieve the goals of disarmament. To this end, States were, in particular: to take initiatives aimed at eliminating the threat of nuclear war and halting and reversing the arms race, paving the way towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control; to exercise actively their right to take part in disarmament negotiations; to participate in and promote disarmament measures; to conduct disarmament negotiations in good faith on all priority items concurrently, including confidence-building measures; to make every effort to secure progress in and refrain from impeding negotiations on halting the arms race and achieving disarmament; to strive to ensure that negotiations would outstrip the qualitative development and stockpiling of weapons to which they related and to prevent the emergence of new types and systems of weapons, particularly those of mass destruction; to ensure that negotiations were conducted in accordance with the Final Document; and to develop joint efforts in achieving disarmament measures whose implementation would progressively enable a significant portion of the resources thereby made available to be used for social and economic

By section II, all States were urged: to expedite measures and pursue policies to strengthen international peace and security and build confidence among States; to set in motion and strengthen the security system provided for in the United Nations Charter and, in particular, to refrain from seeking military superiority or otherwise adversely affecting disarmament efforts and from using their military potential, notably the threat or use of force, for aggressive purposes or for interference in other States' internal affairs; to strive consistently for the repudiation of all concepts based on military intimidation and policies of acting from a position of strength and which led to intensifying or perpetuating the arms race; to affirm wherever possible in their constitutional norms or by other means their political will and determination to promote the cause of peace and international security and progress in disarmament; to intensify promotion of a better understanding of the danger of the arms race and the need for disarmament and ensure that world opinion would exert a positive influence on Government efforts to resolve disarmament issues, using educational systems, the mass media and all other appropriate institutions; to take measures, including legislative ones, to prevent and prohibit propaganda for war and the arms race and the dissemination of views asserting their necessity or usefulness; and to disseminate vigorously the ideals of peace, disarmament, co-operation and friendly relations between peoples.

All States were urged, by section III of the Declaration, to strive to achieve disarmament measures and, in that connexion: to be guided in all negotiations by the generally recognized principles of international law and peaceful coexistence; to ensure that disarmament problems would be solved in the spirit of the Final Document in such a way that no State or group of States might obtain advantages over others, that the security of participating States and the international community would be strengthened and that the principle of undiminished security of each party would not be impaired; to consult with one another on disarmament matters at all levels in order to establish political preconditions for the solution of problems, and to make maximum use of opportunities for cooperation created in inter-State relations in other fields; and to consider responsibly and in a spirit of co-operation all proposals aimed at promoting mutually acceptable disarmament measures and accelerating progress in negotiations.

By section IV, the Assembly declared that the provisions of this Declaration were interrelated in their interpretation and implementation, each a component of a joint approach by States to respect and apply all the principles of the Final Document and to develop broad international co-operation for achieving Assembly-defined disarmament objectives. It further declared that the Declaration did not contradict Charter purposes and principles, supersede the Final Document or interfere with the immediate realization of the right of every State to individual or collective self-defence, to defend its territorial integrity or to liberate its territories, or the right of colonial or displaced peoples to struggle by every possible means for national freedom, independence and self-determination.

Resolution 34/88 was adopted by a recorded vote of 116 to 0, with 27 abstentions. The text was approved by the First Committee on 23 November by 98 votes to 0, with 29 abstentions. Czechoslovakia and the following 25 States sponsored the resolution: Afghanistan, Angola, Benin, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Indonesia, Jordan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Mozambique, Poland, Qatar, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam and Yemen.

A number of Eastern European States expressed strong support for the Czechoslovak initiative. The USSR drew attention to the similarity between the basic ideas contained in the Declaration and those outlined in the Declaration and the Programme of Action of the Final Document of the tenth special session. It believed that the Declaration would give substance to and develop the propositions contained in those documents, translating them into practical reality. The Byelorussian SSR and the Ukrainian SSR also believed the Declaration was fully in keeping with the United Nations Charter and with the spirit and letter of the Final Document. Bulgaria felt that the Declaration fully elaborated the concept that the development of international co-operation was an essential prerequisite for solving disarmament questions.

Several Members expressed the view that the Declaration, rather than being just another disarmament document outlining various proposals to end the arms race, could be seen as being a reaffirmation both of the obligation of States to co-operate in bringing about meaningful disarmament measures and of the many Assembly resolutions on partial disarmament questions. Poland, for instance, felt that it would stimulate the political will of States and, at the same time, create an appropriate framework for the realization of genuine disarmament, with its formulation of basic requirements and principles in the conduct of disarmament negotiations. Argentina believed the Declaration warranted support, and Algeria considered it the sort of declaration that might help create a healthy atmosphere in negotiations and maintain the momentum on disarmament achieved during the special session.

Nigeria and Pakistan, while noting that the Declaration repeated much of what was in the Final Document, were nevertheless ready to support any initiative that would promote cooperation and further the attainment of the objectives of disarmament.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, which abstained in the voting, expressed the view that the Final Document had already enunciated the principles for disarmament negotiations and there was no need for a further document on the matter. Also, since the Final Document was a consensus text, they feared that selective reformulation and reinterpretation of its provisions would only serve to cloud its meaning and complicate its implementation.

Mexico and Sweden explained their abstentions on similar grounds; to reiterate norms and principles adequately covered by international instruments was, in their view, inadvisable. Zaire, while praising the efforts made and the ideas contained in the Declaration, was of the view that the proliferation of such declarations threatened to water down the content of the Final Document.

Other Members expressed more specific disagreements with the Declaration. The United States said it considered the resolution an empty exercise, but more precisely had abstained because of the stated intention in the text to impose an obligation on States to control their mass media and educational systems to comply with the resolution's purposes, something the United States Government could not do. Turkey, expressing similar views, pointed out that its Government had no legal or administrative authority to utilize the mass media for any purpose whatsoever. Finland also had constitutional difficulties with those provisions and, along with Guatemala, could not endorse the wording on the right to struggle by every possible means for independence determination, which seemed to bestow a blessing on violence, contrary to international law, peace and security. Maintaining its reservation on that provision, Guatemala voted in favour of the resolution in the Assembly because it accepted its principles and purposes. Morocco abstained, considering that the drafting of such a wide-ranging document required careful preparation and that it was necessary for such a declaration to be adopted by consensus.

Second Disarmament Decade

By resolution 34/75 of 11 December 1979, the General Assembly declared the decade of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade and directed the Disarmament Commission to prepare elements of a draft resolution on this topic for submission to the Assembly at its 1980 session. In addition, the Assembly determined that the draft resolution should embody, among other things, an indication of targets during the Decade for accomplishing the major objectives and goals of disarmament, as well as ways and means of mobilizing world public opinion in that regard. The Secretary-General was asked to seek the views and suggestions of Member States and specialized agencies, as well as the International Atomic Energy Agency, on possible elements in the declaration.

Resolution 34/75 was sponsored by Bangladesh, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Ireland, Jamaica, Kenya, Mauritius, Morocco, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, the United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. Nigeria, which introduced the resolution in the First Committee, stated that there was universal disappointment that the purposes and objectives of the first Disarmament Decade (the 1970s) had not been realized. Not only had there been no significant measure of disarmament, but not even a comprehensive programme of disarmament had been drawn up. Meanwhile, military expenditures continued to escalate.

In the First Committee a separate vote, requested by the United States, was taken on the operative paragraph referring to the targets; it was approved by 120 to 0, with 3 abstentions. Thereafter the draft resolution as a whole was approved without vote on 19 November, and similarly adopted by the Assembly.

Explaining its position with reference to the call for an indication of targets during the Second Disarmament Decade, the United States stated that experience had shown that target dates were misleading; it was one thing to vote for them, but it was a little harder to meet them. Moreover, the targets referred to in this context clearly meant target dates, in the United States view.

The USSR shared the view that the establishment of target dates was not realistic, and would merely give rise to unjustified illusions; however, it would vote in favour of the resolution since, following consultations, the sponsors had removed from their original draft the word "dates" and the text thus referred only to targets.

Similarly, France felt that with the amendment the text was acceptable. Similar views were expressed by Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands. Argentina regretted the dropping of the word "dates" because, in its view, it was precisely that word which gave content to the resolution. The United Kingdom stated its misgivings that, even without reference to dates, the resolution still embodied a request to the Disarmament Commission that it in effect establish a further negotiating framework which would be superimposed on other arrangements which were already requested for formulation in the Committee on Disarmament within the next three years.

In the general debates in both the plenary Assembly and the First Committee, the majority of speakers who referred to the question of a disarmament decade expressed disappointment or concern that the objectives of the first Decade had not been achieved. Developing Member States were particularly disturbed by the lack of progress. Democratic Yemen, Iran and Papua New Guinea were among States expressing general disappointment that there had not been any real progress towards the reduction of arms in accordance with the objectives of the Decade. Kenya regarded the arms race as a waste of scarce economic resources, in many cases having reached absurd levels. The United Republic of Tanzania recalled that the resolution by which the Assembly had declared the decade of the 1970s as a Disarmament Decade⁴⁸ had envisaged a relationship between disarmament and development, anticipating that the resources saved would be diverted to social and economic development for the benefit of the populations of the developing world. It regretted that that objective had not been achieved. Jamaica considered it ironic that the 1970s had seen unprecedented growth in the sophistication, volume and sale of weapons, while the social and economic needs of the vast majority of mankind had been growing increasingly urgent.

China held that the failure to obtain the first Disarmament Decade's objectives was the result of the absence of a sincere desire for it on the part of the super-powers, the conclusion of conventions which did not in the least affect existing super-power arsenals or which dealt with weapons that did not exist, and super-power rivalry for world hegemony.

Chad and Japan reviewed some positive achievements of the past Disarmament Decade, including the entry into force of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, progress in the strategic arms limitation talks, and the conclusion of the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof⁵⁰ and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction.⁵¹ They concluded, however, that, in the light of increasing military expenditures and meagre progress in such areas as a comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty and a chemical weapons ban treaty, the Decade had not met expectations. Norway referred to the spread of the arms race to the third world where military spending had doubled during the Decade, increasing faster than its gross national product.

Cyprus and Ethiopia felt that the convening of the tenth special session of the General Assembly in 1978 had been a meaningful achievement of the first Disarmament Decade. Cyprus noted that the Final Document had brought into worldwide focus the calamities of the arms race and the urgent need for its cessation, while Ethiopia regarded the Introduction to that Document⁵² as characterizing the manner in which the international community was closing the first Disarmament Decade, and as constituting a bridge towards a second such decade.

Numerous additional States, including Algeria, the Bahamas, Turkey, Uruguay, Zaire and Zambia, indicated their general support for the idea of declaring the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade. The majority of them referred to increasing or excessive military expenditures or lack of reallocation of resources from armaments to social and economic development, or to both, during the 1970s, and expressed hope for greater progress during the 1980s.

World disarmament conference

The Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference held meetings on 10 and 11 April and between 10 and 14 September 1979. Its Working Group also held three meetings on 12 and 13 September, elaborating the Committee's draft report to the General Assembly.

The Committee noted in its report that, in compliance with its mandate, it had maintained contact, through its Chairman, with the representatives of the nuclear-weapon States in order to keep informed of their respective attitudes towards a world disarmament conference. It reported thereon, as follows: China's position remained unchanged and was reflected in previous Ad Hoc Committee reports, to the effect that convening or preparing for such a conference could only be acceptable if all the nuclear-weapon powers, in particular the two major ones, would undertake not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, particularly against non-nuclear-weapon

States, and to end all forms of military presence in other countries; France had stated its readiness to act in favour of real and effective disarmament and, accordingly, had upheld the world disarmament conference, which could, it felt, effectively contribute to disarmament once it had the support of all five nuclear-weapon powers; the USSR believed that the time had come to take concrete steps leading towards a thorough preparation for such a conference, which was of great international importance and could be a further step forward in combining the disarmament efforts of States, supplementing what had been expressed and agreed on at the tenth special session of the General Assembly; the United Kingdom felt that the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference should not undertake substantive work until all the militarily significant States had indicated that, in principle, they supported the convening of and would be prepared to participate in such a conference; the United States, whose position remained unchanged, considered that it was premature to set a date and begin preparations because it believed that there was insufficient political agreement on the issues which would be addressed at such a conference, and that lack of agreement would probably hinder rather than assist arms control efforts.

In the report's conclusions and recommendations, the Ad Hoc Committee reiterated that the idea of a world disarmament conference had received wide support among United Nations Members with varying degrees of emphasis and differences on conditions and certain aspects related to the question of its convening. No consensus on the convening of such a conference had been reached among the nuclear-weapon States, whose participation had been deemed essential by most Member States. The Committee added that the Assembly might wish to renew its general mandate and to decide that, after the second special session devoted to disarmament scheduled for 1982, a world disarmament conference should take place as soon as the necessary consensus on its convening was reached.

On 11 December 1979, the Assembly, by resolution 34/81, renewed the Ad Hoc Committee's mandate and asked it to maintain close contact with the nuclear-weapon and all other States in order to remain currently informed of their attitudes, and to consider proposals and observations which might be made to it, especially having in mind the provision of the Final DOCUment of the tenth special session recommending convening such a conference at the earliest appropriate time with universal participation and adequate preparation.

The resolution, which was adopted by the Assembly without a vote, had been approved by the First Committee without objection on 23 November. Its sponsors were Burundi, Mongolia, Peru, Poland, Spain, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam.

In the First Committee, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, as they had done in previous years, emphasized the need to convene a world disarmament conference. Eastern European States also stressed that adequate and thorough preparatory measures should be taken at an early stage, including setting a date and establishing a preparatory body.

A number of developing countries also expressed their support for a world disarmament conference. Mozambique stated that such a conference was needed to complement the ongoing negotiations on disarmament issues. Nepal emphasized its support for holding the conference under United Nations auspices with a view to creating world interest in disarmament. Yemen urged the convening of a conference which would go beyond declarations and adopt practical measures. Bangladesh believed that the Assembly's 1982 special session would create an atmosphere conducive to the effective participation of all concerned parties and lend meaning to the holding of a world disarmament conference.

The General Assembly,

Having reviewed the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted at the tenth special session,

Recalling that disarmament has become an imperative and most urgent task facing the international community and that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations,

Calling attention to the measures qualified in the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly as being most urgent and feasible within a short period of time and to the task of bringing about effective agreements,

Expressing its satisfaction at the fact that the tenth special session greatly stimulated the involvement of all countries and set in motion a number of new initiatives in the field of disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction that some initial results in the implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session have been achieved, primarily in the field of active involvement of the United Nations and in a considerable revitalization of the multilateral disarmament machinery.

Deeply concerned about the continued arms race and the alarming increase in expenditures on armaments,

Considering that it is necessary to make sustained progress in all negotiations dealing with disarmament and arms limitation issues,

Noting with concern that most negotiations on priority tasks in the field of disarmament have not thus far yielded concrete results, in spite of the repeated appeals of the General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that negotiations have not as yet started on a number of issues which are contained in the Programme of Action,

Determined to encourage the adoption of urgent measures in order to secure the implementation of the recommendations and decisions endorsed by Member States in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session and aimed at halting and reversing the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and to proceed to disarmament,

- 1. Expresses its deep concern about the continued arms race, nuclear as well as conventional, and about constantly growing military budgets which bear negative consequences and pose a growing threat to international peace and security and also to the unhampered development of countries, particularly developing countries;
- 2. Urgently calls upon all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other major military Powers, immediately to take steps leading to effective halting and reversing of the arms race and to disarmament and, to this end:
- (a) To make every effort to bring to a successful end the negotiations which are currently going on in the Committee on Disarmament and in a limited or regional framework on effective international agreements according to the priorities of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;
- (b) To resume or undertake as soon as possible negotiations on a bilateral, regional or multilateral basis on measures which were agreed upon by consensus at the tenth special session, taking into consideration all relevant proposals;
- 3. Invites all States which are engaged in bilateral, regional or multilateral disarmament or arms limitation negotiations outside the United Nations framework to keep the General Assembly informed of the results of such negotiations in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;
 - 4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the tenth special session."

^aSubsequently advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The General Assembly,

Recalling once again the affirmation in the Charter of the United Nations of the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war and to this end to unite their strength to maintain international peace and security,

Stressing again the importance of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, devoted to disarmament, and recalling the principles proclaimed in the Final Document of that session.

Convinced that there is an urgent need for active and combined efforts further to intensify the comprehensive implementation of the recommendations and decisions unanimously adopted at the tenth special session and that, to this end, a continuing and sustained effort by all States, in a more co-ordinated manner and on the basis of world-wide co-operation in the interests of security and peace, is essential,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, in which the General Assembly proclaimed the duty of all States to pursue in good faith negotiations for the early conclusion of a universal treaty on general and complete disarmament and to strive to adopt appropriate measures to reduce international tensions and strengthen confidence among States,

Stressing the inalienable right of every nation and every human being to live in peace, free from the threat of war, in freedom and independence, as was solemnly reaffirmed by the General Assembly in the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, the strict observance of which is in the highest interests of mankind and is an essential prerequisite for its full development,

Conscious that a dynamic development of detente in all spheres of international relations throughout the world would contribute to the achievement of the aims of disarmament,

Deeply disturbed by the fact that international peace and security of peoples continue to be threatened by the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, and the accumulation of stockpiles of highly destructive weapons and that, at the same time, the continuation of the arms race conflicts with the interest of the economic development and the social and spiritual progress of mankind,

Noting, in particular, that the arms race is incompatible with and contrary to the efforts directed towards the establishment of the new international economic order,

Stressing the fact that the Governments of all countries, particularly of nuclear-weapon States, bear a historic responsibility for eliminating war from human life, primarily through the adoption of effective and decisive disarmament measures aimed at the achievement of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Noting that special responsibility for achieving general and complete disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, and for averting nuclear war rests with all States possessing nuclear weapons and other militarily significant States,

Proceeding from the principle that effective, constructive and continuing co-operation among all States based on mutual confidence and political will, irrespective of their social system and level of economic development, is essential for the achievement of disarmament and the attainment of its goals.

Convinced that such co-operation must be demonstrated, developed and intensified in mutual contacts and in any forum where States conduct negotiations on disarmament, particularly in the Committee on Disarmament, in order that the aims of the negotiations may be achieved as speedily as possible,

Convinced also that such co-operation must express a common determination by States to bring about a decisive shift in disarmament negotiations and, at the same time, must be sustained by the creation of a favourable atmosphere of trust in relations among States,

Bearing in mind the central role and primary responsibility of the United Nations in promoting the uniting of efforts and the establishment of co-operation among States aimed at the solution of disarmament problems,

I

Solemnly calls upon all States actively to promote the development, strengthening and intensification of international co-operation designed to achieve the goals of disarmament, as defined by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, and to this end, in particular:

- (a) To take initiatives aimed at eliminating the threat of nuclear war and adopting effective new measures to halt and reverse the arms race and pave the way for the ultimate objective of the efforts in the disarmament process, namely, general and complete disarmament under effective international control:
- (b) To exercise actively their inalienable right to take part in disarmament negotiations, as confirmed in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;
- (c) To participate actively, as appropriate, in measures taken in the field of disarmament, bearing in mind the interests of maintaining both international and national security in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, and actively to promote such measures;
- (d) To conduct disarmament negotiations in good faith on all priority items concurrently, including appropriate confidence-building measures, with a view to ensuring that such negotiations will complement one another and will be conducive to the early achievement of a decisive breakthrough in the sphere of disarmament;
- (e) To make every effort to secure continuous and accelerated progress in the negotiations on halting the arms race and achieving disarmament and, to these ends, to refrain from impeding such negotiations, in particular with issues unrelated to disarmament;
- (f) To strive in the course of disarmament negotiations to ensure that they will outstrip the qualitative development and stockpiling of weapons to which the negotiations relate and, wherever possible, to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons and weapon systems, particularly weapons of mass destruction;
- (g) To ensure that multilateral, regional and bilateral negotiations on disarmament questions will be consistently conducted in accordance with the respective provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session, bearing in mind that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament;
- (h) To develop joint efforts in achieving concrete disarmament measures whose implementation would progressively enable a significant portion of the resources made available through such measures to be used for social and economic needs, thus contributing to the bridging of the economic gap between developed and developing countries, taking into account the close relationship between disarmament and development;

II

Urges all States, with a view to improving further the international climate required for the full implementation of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and accelerating the progress of the appropriate disarmament negotiations, in particular:

- (a) To exert determined efforts to expedite measures and pursue policies to strengthen international peace and security and to build confidence among States with a view to reducing the danger of the outbreak of military conflicts and facilitating decisive advance of the process of disarmament, including the creation of a favourable international atmosphere which would be conducive to the strengthening of international peace and security;
- (b) To take effective measures for setting in motion the security system provided for in the Charter of the United Nations and to strengthen it by eliminating tensions and setting disputes by peaceful means and to these ends, in particular, to refrain from seeking military superiority and from any other steps which might adversely affect efforts in the field of disarmament, and accordingly to refrain from using their military potential for aggressive purposes, notably the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity or political independence of any State or against peoples under colonial or foreign domination which are striving to exercise their right to self-determination and the achievement of independence, or for interference in the internal affairs of other States:
- (c) To strive consistently for the repudiation of all concepts which are based on military intimidation and policies of acting from a position of strength and which lead to the intensification or perpetuation of the arms race and the further accumulation of armaments;
- (d) To affirm, wherever possible, in their constitutional norms or by any other appropriate means, their political will and determination to promote with all their strength the cause of peace and international security and the achievement of progress in the field of disarmament;
- (e) To intensify steps, both through the United Nations system and individually, to promote a better understanding by world opinion of the danger of the arms race and the need for disarmament, and to ensure that world opinion will exert a positive influence on the efforts of Governments to resolve disarmament issues, utilizing to this end educational systems, the mass media and all other appropriate institutions;
- (f) On the basis of the principles of the Charter, to take all appropriate measures, including legislative ones, to prevent and prohibit propaganda for war and the arms race and the dissemination of views asserting their necessity or usefulness on political, economic or other grounds;
- (g) To take vigorous measures, individually or collectively, to disseminate the ideals of peace, disarmament, cooperation and friendly relations between peoples;

Ш

Urges all States, in implementing the common political will expressed in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, to strive to achieve concrete measures of disarmament and, in that connexion:

- (a) To be guided, in all disarmament negotiations, by the generally recognized principles of international law, as well as by their adherence to the principles of peaceful coexistence;
- (b) To ensure that the problems of disarmament will be solved in the spirit of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session in such a manner that, as a result of the measures adopted, no individual State or group of States may obtain advantages over others at any stage, that both the security of the States participating in the negotiations and the security of the entire international community will be strengthened and that the principle of undiminished security of each party will not be impaired;
- (c) To consult with one another on disarmament matters at all levels, including the highest level, in order that, in a spirit of goodwill and in an endeavour to harmonize their positions, they may establish the political pre-conditions for the solution of those problems, and also, in the interests of disarmament, to make maximum use of all opportunities for cooperation created by States in other fields of their relations with one another;

(d) To consider in a fully responsible manner and in a spirit of co-operation all proposals and initiatives aimed at promoting the achievement of mutually acceptable concrete measures of disarmament and helping to accelerate progress in disarmament negotiations;

IV

- 1. Declares that the provisions of the present Declaration are interrelated in their interpretation and implementation and that each of them is a component of a joint approach by States in their determination fully to respect and apply all the principles of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and to develop broad international co-operation for achieving the objectives of real disarmament as defined by the Assembly at its tenth special session;
- 2. Declares further that no provision of this Declaration may be interpreted as contradicting the purposes and principles of the Charter or superseding the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session and that no provision of the Declaration may interfere with the immediate realization of the right of every State to individual or collective self-defence or its legitimate right to defend its territorial integrity, to liberate its occupied territories in accordance with the Charter, or with the right of colonial or displaced peoples to struggle by every possible means for their national freedom, independence and self-determination.

Resolution 34/75, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/744, adopted without vote by Assembly on 11 December 1979, meeting 97.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/62 of 14 December 1978,

Bearing in mind that the Disarmament Decade, declared by its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, is coming to an end,

Expressing its disappointment that the purposes and objectives of the Decade have not been realized,

Deeply concerned at the fact that a substantial part of world resources, material as well as human, continues to be wasted on armaments with detrimental effect on international security and on efforts to achieve the new international economic order.

Bearing in mind the preparations for the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade,

Stressing again the close relationship between disarmament and development,

Convinced that effective disarmament measures should release resources from the unproductive arms race for economic and social programmes, in particular for international economic co-operation,

- 1. Decides to declare the decade of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade;
- 2. Directs the Disarmament Commission, at its substantive session of 1980, to prepare elements of a draft resolution entitled "Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade" and submit them to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session for consideration and adoption;
- 3. Determines that the draft resolution should embody, inter alia, an indication of targets during the Second Disarmament Decade for accomplishing the major objectives and goals of disarmament, as well as ways and means of mobilizing world public opinion in this regard;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views and suggestions of Member States and of relevant specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency on possible elements in the declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade:
- Calls upon the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance, including the preparation of a working paper, to the Disarmament Commission in implementing the present resolution:
- 6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade."

Resolution 34/81, as recommended by First Committee,

A/34/750, adopted without vote by Assembly on 11 December 1979, meeting 97.

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolutions 2833(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, 2930(XXVII) of 29 November 1972, 3183(XXVIII) of 18 December 1.973, 3260(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3469(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/190 of 21 December 1976, 32/89 of 12 December 1977 and 33/69 of 14 December 1978

Reiterating its conviction that all peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that all States should be in a position to contribute to the adoption of measures for the achievement of this goal,

Stressing anew its belief that a world disarmament conference, adequately prepared and convened at an appropriate time, could promote the realization of such an aim and that the co-operation of all nuclear-weapon Powers would considerably facilitate its attainment,

Taking note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference,

Recalling its decision, taken at the tenth special session, that, at the earliest appropriate time, a world disarmament conference should be convened with universal participation and with adequate preparation,

1. Notes with satisfaction that in its report to the General Assembly the Ad Hoc Committee on the World Disarmament Conference stated the following:

"Having regard for the important requirements of a world disarmament conference to be convened at the earliest appropriate time, with universal participation and with adequate preparation, the General Assembly may wish to decide that, after its second special session devoted to disarmament, a world disarmament conference would take place as soon as the necessary consensus on its convening has been reached":

- 2. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee;
- 3. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to maintain close contact with the representatives of the States possessing nuclear weapons in order to remain currently informed of their attitudes, as well as with all other States, and to consider any possible relevant proposals and observations which might be made to the Committee, especially having in mind paragraph 122 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;
- 4. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit a report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;
- 5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Conference."

General and complete disarmament

As in other years, a number of topics were considered in 1979 in the context of the General Assembly's agenda item on general and complete disarmament, and the Assembly adopted six resolutions under the item. Besides the question of confidence-building measures, which is discussed in this subchapter, the resolutions concerned the conclusion of an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons (resolution 34/87 A), non-stationing of nuclear weapons on the territories of States where there were currently no such weapons (34/87 C), prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes (34/87 D), a study of the institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament (34/87 E), and the strategic arms limitation talks (34/87 F). (For page references to texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On confidence-building measures—measures to diminish the danger of armed conflicts resulting from misunderstandings or misinterpretations of military activities—the General Assembly recommended, by resolution 34/87 B of 11 December 1979, that all States should continue to consider arrangements for specific confidence-building measures, taking into account the conditions and requirements of each region, and asked the Secretary-General to carry out and submit to it in 1981 a comprehensive study on such measures with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts appointed by him on an equitable geographical basis. The study was to take account of replies of Governments and statements made at the current session. A progress report was requested for 1980. In addition, the Assembly invited States which had not done so to respond to a previous request for their views and experiences of confidence-building measures, for the information of the group of experts.

This resolution was adopted without a vote. The text had been approved in the same manner by the First Committee on 23 November. It had 26 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The Secretary-General transmitted to the 1979 session the responses received from the following 30 Governments which had answered the Assembly's invitation of 16 December 1978⁵³ to submit views on this subject: Australia, Austria, Belgium, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Israel, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Spain, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia.

In introducing the resolution, the Federal Republic of Germany said it felt that the responses already received indicated that the momentum generated concerning the concept of confidence-building should be continued; confidence-building could be applied flexibly, in keeping with specific regional needs.

Before approval of the text, Nigeria proposed that the study called for should specifically examine necessary conditions facilitating consideration of confidence-building measures on a regional basis and the role the United Nations could play in creating such conditions; while the suggestion was not incorporated, Nigeria accepted the sponsors' explanation that its intent was implicit in the resolution. Kuwait noted its understanding that confidence-building measures did not apply to regions where colonialism, foreign occupation, racism and apartheid prevailed.

The German Democratic Republic, Poland and the USSR explained their positions with regard to the four operative paragraphs pertaining to the decisions to undertake a comprehensive study and carry it out with the help of experts. They said they could not support these provisions on the grounds that, in the light of the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe⁵⁴ and a number of more recent confidence-building proposals put forward by socialist countries of Eastern Europe, the study was not needed. Poland regarded a study in progress on all aspects of regional disarmament (see p. 95) as covering the question. The USSR reiterated its concern at the growing number of costly studies that did not yield tangible results for genuine disarmament.

By a separate vote requested by the USSR, the Committee approved these operative paragraphs by a single vote of 109 to 0, with 15 abstentions. By a separate recorded vote in the Assembly also, they were adopted by 126 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions, before the Assembly adopted the resolution as a whole.

As to questions of disarmament in general, discussed during the debates in both the plenary Assembly and the First Committee, the recognition of general and complete disarmament as the essential end goal was frequently reaffirmed by States from all political and geographical groupings. Some 100 Member States addressed in the First Committee the question of the arms race and disarmament in general terms and offered ideas concerning causes and solutions.

The USSR stated to the Assembly that it would continue to work consistently, together with other States, towards cessation of the arms race and the reduction of arsenals down to general and complete disarmament. It referred to various initiatives directed towards improvement of the political climate and expressed concern that such initiatives frequently got bogged down in the quagmire of debate. Thus they required tremendous efforts to be brought to the decisionmaking stage. Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR drew attention to the initiatives of the Eastern European group of States aimed at deepening detente and extending it to the military sphere for achieving disarmament.

Mongolia transmitted, on 31 October, a statement of its Government of 22 October concerning a USSR announcement on 6 October by its President that the USSR had decided to withdraw 20,000 troops, 1,000 tanks and other military matériel from the German Democratic Republic during the following year. While welcoming the USSR's announcement, the United Kingdom pointed out that, even with those reductions, the Warsaw Treaty troops in Eastern Europe would outnumber those of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization by 140,000, with a tank superiority of nearly 3 to 1 in central Europe.

France expressed the belief that, despite the difficulty of achieving disarmament, progress could be made, provided that three conditions were fulfilled: clarity and realism in objectives, continuity in action, and imagination in initiatives.

In Japan's view, mutual distrust and suspicion among nations were the greatest deterrents to progress in disarmament.

A great many non-nuclear-weapon States, including Bangladesh, Brazil, Ethiopia, Kenya, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal, the Niger, the Sudan and Zaire, referred to the hope for disarmament engendered by the tenth special session of the General Assembly, and most of them expressed disappointment concerning developments since then. On behalf of the group of States belonging to the non-aligned movement, Cuba observed that, while negotiations between the great powers were an important and decisive element in the process leading to disarmament, the consolidation of detente and averting war was a task for all peoples.

China laid blame for the arms race on the super-powers, holding that the main reason for lack of progress in disarmament was the absence of a real desire for it on their part and their refusal to reduce their super-arsenals. Once they had made substantial progress in disarmament, the other nuclear countries and major military powers would join them in reducing armaments, China said.

Studies, information and training

The General Assembly called in 1979 for five additional studies on disarmament-related issues: a comprehensive nuclear-test ban, institutional arrangements for dealing with disarmament within the United Nations, confidence-building measures, Israeli nuclear armament and the nuclear capability of South Africa. Progress reports were submitted on five previously authorized studies concerning the relationship between disarmament and development, the implications of establishing an international satellite monitoring agency, the relationship between disarmament and international security, regional disarmament and the international reporting of military expenditures. In addition to these studies, details of which are given below, work continued on a comprehensive study on nuclear weapons. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to consult with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research regarding the establishment of a United Nations institute for disarmament research.

The United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament held its first course in 1979. The Assembly received three reports on various aspects of the dissemination of information relating to disarmament, and took further action to promote the observance of Disarmament Week, an annual observance beginning on 24 October.

United Nations studies on disarmament

Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, established in 1978 under a General Assembly mandate⁵⁵ to advise the Secretary-General on various aspects of United Nations studies on disarmament and arms. limitation, held its second and third sessions in 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, New York, under the chairmanship of Agha Shahi (Pakistan). According to a report of the Secretary-General to the Assembly on United Nations studies on disarmament, dated 7 November, the Board, in discussing its own role, agreed that it could clarify the direction which various disarmament studies might take, advise on the way they should be carried out and generate proposals for studies, although it noted constraints on the number of studies that could usefully be undertaken. Among the criteria it identified for the selection of studies were the importance of a given study for the United Nations, its urgency, its timeliness, the need to avoid unnecessary duplication, the financing available and whether the subject could be effectively dealt with under United Nations auspices.

With respect to the scope of disarmament studies, the Board was of the view that they would have to cover related armaments aspects, including the dynamics of the arms race, as well as national security, political, economic and social factors. There was also a need to consider the dynamics of technological innovations, with a view to identifying the points at which disarmament or arms-control measures could be introduced. In addition, it would be necessary to look ahead to and avoid potential directions the arms race might take, and to attempt to identify circumstances which made arms-control agreements feasible.

 $55~{\rm See}~{\rm Y.U.N.},~1978,~{\rm p.}~39,~{\rm resolution}~{\rm S-}10/2~{\rm of}~30~{\rm June}~1978,~{\rm esp.}$ para. 124.

The Board, the report stated, had an extensive exchange of views on a number of proposals for further studies under United Nations auspices. It recommended a study on the basic facts of a nuclear test ban, with the results to be submitted to the Committee on Disarmament in the first half of 1980. While noting that the subject had been extensively studied in the past, the Secretary-General considered that any measures which might contribute to conclusion of an agreement on a comprehensive test ban were welcome.

Comprehensive nuclear test ban

By decision 34/422 of 11 December 1979, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare the study he and the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies had recommended in the above-mentioned report, on the question of a comprehensive nuclear test ban. The Assembly asked that the study be completed before mid-1980 for transmission to the Committee on Disarmament. The study would contain, according to an outline agreed to by the Board, an introduction, a background summary and an analytical summary of negotiations which had led to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, proceedings of the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament and the Committee on Disarmament, three-power negotiations, unresolved issues and conclusions, with appendices on nuclear arsenals and nuclear-weapon

Mexico introduced the decision, sponsored also by Argentina, Mauritius and the Philippines, in the First Committee, which approved the text on 21 November by a vote, requested by the USSR, of 84 to 9, with 6 abstentions. The decision was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 126 to 9, with 4 abstentions.

The United States, explaining its abstention, said there were already quite a few studies on unclassified aspects of the test-ban negotiations; if the study was to deal with classified matters, it was not clear how it could be carried out. France, which also abstained, considered that it was somewhat belated to start studies on a subject that had been an item of negotiation for some time and had been thoroughly studied in the past; moreover, the elements envisaged for the study were already common knowledge.

The USSR, explaining its negative vote, stated that the study would be superfluous as far as the negotiations to achieve a nuclear test ban were concerned; what was necessary was to complete the tripartite talks as soon as possible and open the way to a world-wide comprehensive nuclear test-ban treaty.

(For the Assembly's substantive discussion and decision on a nuclear-weapon test ban, see p. 38.)

Relationship between disarmament and development

The 27-member Group of Governmental Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, appointed in 1978 to initiate a study on that relationship, 56 held three sessions in 1979: from 15 to 26 January and 2 to 9 May at Geneva, and from 17 to 21 September at New York. At the end of its September session, the Group submitted to the Secretary-General an interim report which he forwarded to the Assembly at its 1979 session.

The report surveyed the Group's activities since its first session in September 1978,⁵⁷ prominent among which were evaluation and selection of research proposals. The Group had commissioned 45 research projects, 24 of which were to be financed from the Disarmament Project Fund established by the Assembly in 1978⁵⁸ and 21 were to be financed nationally. Four of the projects were to study aspects of a proposal to establish an international disarmament fund for development.

Voluntary contributions totalling $593,180 were made to the Project Fund by 10 countries: Cyprus, Ethiopia, France, India, the Netherlands, Norway, the Philippines, Sweden, the United States and Venezuela. Ten countries—Canada, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Mexico, Norway, Poland, Romania, the USSR and the United States—undertook to finance projects nationally.

The Group, in its report, reaffirmed its conviction that information from Governments would be of great value and that strong support from research consultants in the United Nations Centre for Disarmament would be indispensable for the successful execution of its mandate. It said it would submit its final report prior to the 1981 session of the Assembly.

On 11 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/83 K, by which it took note of the interim report and appealed to Governments to make data and information available for the study. In addition it requested the Secretary-General to provide the resources and expertise necessary to complete the study successfully.

⁵⁸ Ibid., p. 117, resolution 33/71 M of 14 December 1978.

The resolution was approved by the First Committee on 26 November, also without vote. It was introduced by Sweden on behalf also of the other 23 sponsors: Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

On the understanding that its opposition to a United Nations mechanism for financing development without a corresponding decrease in military budgets would be taken into account in the preparation of the Group's final report, the USSR said it did not object to adoption of the resolution. Careful examination of the costs of consultants and supporting staff for the study was urged by the United Kingdom.

Relationship between

disarmament and international security

The Group of Experts on the Relationship between Disarmament and International Security, appointed by the Secretary-General to continue a study begun in 1977 on that interrelationship, held two sessions during 1979. It agreed on an initial outline for the study and tentatively agreed on its detailed structure.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/83 A of 11 December 1979, took note of a progress report by the Secretary-General on the work of the Group. (For details, see page 80; for page reference to text of resolution 34/83 A, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Establishment of a satellite monitoring agency

The 11-member Group of Governmental Experts on the Question of the Establishment of an International Satellite Monitoring Agency held its first two sessions in 1979, both at Geneva, from 11, to 15 June and from 10 to 14 September. The Group had been appointed by the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1978 General Assembly request, ⁵⁹ to assist him in a study on the technical, legal and financial implications of establishing such an agency.

On 14 September, the Group approved a progress report to the Secretary-General, who conveyed it to the Assembly at its 1979 session. The report contained the preliminary conclusions reached unanimously by the Group. In its summary and recommendations, the Group said it fully recognized the valuable contribution which satellite monitoring could make to the verification of certain parts or types of armscontrol and disarmament agreements. and to preventing or settling crises, thus contributing to confidence-building among nations. It considered a gradual approach to establishment of such an agency to be technically feasible and a way to limit financial commitments. As to the agency's legal nature, action would be needed to ensure its independence in order to guarantee the objectivity of its analyses.

The Group felt that many of the questions raised in the course of its work required further in-depth study and recommended that a comprehensive report on the subject should be completed in time for consideration at the second special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, scheduled for 1982.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Assembly a report containing views on the proposal to establish a satellite monitoring agency expressed by 38 Member States, pursuant to a 1978 Assembly request: 60 Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Canada, the Central African Empire, Cuba, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, India, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Mauritius, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

On 11 December 1979, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/83 E on monitoring of disarmament agreements and strengthening international security. By its provisions, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, assisted by the Group of Experts, to carry out the in-depth study recommended by the Group. So that a comprehensive report could be submitted for decision at the 1982 special session, the study was to be submitted no later than June 1981 to the preparatory committee for the special session.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 124 to 0, with 11 abstentions. The First Committee had approved the text on 23 November by 113 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions. It was sponsored by 42 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) in the First Committee, where it was introduced by France, the proponent at the Assembly's 1978 special session on disarmament of the idea of establishing an international satellite monitoring agency.

Explaining its abstention in the vote, the United States reiterated its position that the project was not feasible, necessary or desirable in the foreseeable future and that such an agency would be affected by political considerations and perhaps ill-suited to its tasks.

Institutional arrangements relating to disarmament

A proposal initiated at its 1979 session for a comprehensive United Nations study on institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament was approved by the General Assembly on 11 December with the adoption of resolution 34/87 E. By the resolution, the Assembly noted among other things the growing disarmament agenda and the complexity of the issues involved, the active participation of more States, and the consequent increasing demands for United Nations management of disarmament affairs. It also recalled the recommendation of the Disarmament Commission in its elements of a comprehensive programme of disarmament (see p. 31) that institutional and procedural requirements should be examined so as to facilitate the disarmament process and ensure the implementation of disarmament agreements. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to carry out a comprehensive study with recommendations, assessing current and future institutional needs in United Nations management of disarmament affairs, and outlining possible functions, structure and an institutional framework that could meet those needs, including legal and financial implications. The Secretary-General was to seek the views of Member States on some key issues and submit a final report in 1981.

The resolution was adopted by a recorded vote of 121 to 9, with 9 abstentions, after its approval by the First Committee on 27 November by a recorded vote of 102 to 9, with 8 abstentions. Its sponsors were Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Ireland, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Tunisia, Uruguay and Yugoslavia.

The USSR, explaining its negative vote, said that no new elements had appeared to necessitate further reorganization of United Nations disarmament machinery. The Department of Political and Security Council affairs, of which the Centre for Disarmament was a part, was providing the necessary correlation of disarmament questions and questions of strengthening international peace and security. Similar views were expressed by the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Poland in explaining their negative votes.

India and Sierra Leone also considered that existing machinery was fully competent to carry out the work without introducing a new disarmament organization. The United States, which voted for the resolution, expressed hope that the Secretariat's Administrative Management Service would be used to help prepare the study, in order to cut down on the time and expense required.

The group of experts was subsequently referred to as the Group of Governmental Experts to Study the Institutional Arrangements relating to the Process of Disarmament.

Confidence-building measures

By resolution 34/87 B of 11 December 1979, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to carry out a comprehensive study on confidence-building measures, taking into account the answers received by him from States in response to an invitation of 16 December 1978. The Secretary-General was to appoint a group of governmental experts to help him carry out the study, to be submitted to the Assembly at its 1981 session. (For details, see p. 89; for page reference to text of resolution 34/87 B, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Israeli nuclear armament

On 11 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/89, by which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified experts, to prepare a study on Israeli nuclear armament and to report to it at its 1981 session; a progress report was requested for 1980. (For details, see p. 43; for page reference to text of resolution 34/89, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Nuclear capability of South Africa

By resolution 34/76 B, also of 11 December 1979, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare, with the assistance of experts, a comprehensive report on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field and to submit the report to the 1980 regular Assembly session. (For details, see p. 47; for page reference to text of resolution 34/76 B, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

Regional disarmament

Pursuant to an Assembly resolution of 16 December 1978,62 the Secretary-General appointed 10 experts to assist him in a study of all aspects of regional disarmament.

During 1979, the Group of Governmental Experts on Regional Disarmament held two sessions: from 18 to 22 June and from 8 to 12 October, both at Geneva. At its first session, the Group discussed the scope of the study and the programme and methodology of its work. It adopted a provisional outline for the study which envisaged an introduction and chapters on historical background, regional approaches to disarmament, a non-exhaustive list of conceivable measures open to selection by States in any region, and conclusions and recommendations. At its second session, the Group considered a draft composite text of the substantive parts of the study prepared on the basis of contributions by the experts.

The Secretary-General transmitted the Group's progress report to the Assembly at its regular 1979 session. The final report was to be submitted at the 1980 session.

International reporting of military expenditures

In 1978, the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of an ad hoc panel of experienced practitioners in the field of military budgeting, to carry out a practical test of a proposed reporting instrument on military expenditure with the voluntary cooperation of States from different regions and representing different budgeting and accounting systems, to assess the results of the test, and to develop recommendations for further refinement and use of the instrument.⁶³

Pursuant to that request, the Secretary-General established the seven-member Ad Hoc Panel on Military Budgeting, which held two sessions in 1979, the first from 14 to 18 May and the second from 27 to 31 August. The Panel elaborated the steps necessary to initiate its practical test for standardized reporting on the military expenditure of Member States. It agreed to a set of guidelines to assist States in filling in the proposed reporting instrument and adopted a timetable for carrying out and evaluating the test, as well as for the preparation of its report to be submitted to the Assembly in 1980.

At the end of its second session, the Panel submitted to the Secretary-General a document containing a proposed reporting matrix and instructions. In a note verbale dated 28 September 1979, by which the Secretary-General circulated the document to all Member States, he invited them to return the completed reporting instrument not later than 31 March 1980. (See also p. 73)

United Nations institute for disarmament research

Having consulted with the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies pursuant to a 1978 Assembly request, 64 the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in 1979 on possible ways of establishing, operating and financing an international institute for disarmament research, under United Nations auspices. The Board had agreed that such an institute should have a simple, pragmatic mandate to carry out research for the purposes of assisting negotiations on disarmament and arms limitation, stimulating initiatives for new negotiations and providing a general insight into the problems involved. The institute should have a high degree of scientific independence and autonomy, but would have to be established and operated to ensure in its output a balance of political views.

The Board made a number of recommendations on the functioning, programming and financing of the institute, as well as on the role of the Board as its advisory council on disarmament research and the composition and the tasks of the advisory council. The Board recommended that, as an interim arrangement subject to review at the second special session of the Assembly devoted to disarmament, scheduled for 1982, the United Nations institute for disarmament research should be established within the framework of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR).

Taking note of the information contained in the Secretary-General's report, the Assembly, by resolution 34/83 M of 11 December 1979, welcomed the Board's recommendations and requested the Secretary-General to consult with UNITAR regarding the establishment of the institute. The text had been approved by the First Committee on 26 November by 106 votes to, 0, with 10 abstentions; the Assembly adopted it without a vote. The resolution, introduced by France, had 31 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Explaining its abstention in the Committee, the USSR stated that the proposal reflected a trend towards an unjustified increase in studies and research on disarmament, while the main task in the field was to achieve practical agreements. While necessary studies could play a useful, though auxiliary role, the USSR considered it superfluous to establish an independent institute whose studies would be divorced from practical results.

New philosophy on disarmament

In December 1978; the General Assembly had adopted a resolution concerning a "new philosophy on disarmament," by which it considered it necessary that the new ideas, proposals, thinking and strategies set forth in the debates leading to and following the adoption earlier that year of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly be formulated into a single comprehensive and co-ordinated system, that is, a new philosophy on disarmament. The Assembly had requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies, to study the question.

The report of the Secretary-General on the new philosophy, which he submitted in November 1979, stated that the Board had paid tribute to the initiative and sympathized with the motives behind it but considered that, with so many contradictory approaches and perceptions, it would be very difficult to draw up a generally acceptable philosophy. Further attempts at a new approach might be explored after the second special session on disarmament, scheduled for 1982. Meanwhile, the Final Document of the first special session contained the essence of a new philosophy and strategy on disarmament, and should be given the widest possible publicity.

Information and training

Dissemination of information on the arms race and disarmament

In connexion with its 1979 review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session on disarmament, held in 1978, the Assembly had before it three reports, submitted in accordance with an Assembly resolution of 14 December 1978⁶⁷ relating to the dissemination of information.

By one of them, the Secretary-General transmitted the replies of 20 States to an Assembly request that Member States report on their activities in disseminating information on the arms race and disarmament. The responding States were Belgium, the Byelorussian SSR, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, India, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.

By the same 1978 resolution, the Assembly had requested the United Nations Centre for Disarmament to increase contacts with non-governmental organizations and research institutions, with a view to encouraging their role in the field of disarmament. The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in October 1979 that the Centre, recognizing the valuable contribution such organizations could make in this area, had increased contacts with them and planned to intensify co-operative activities such as information exchange and participation in meetings.

The Secretary-General transmitted in a third document the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on preparations for the World Congress on Disarmament Education, scheduled for June 1980. The report stated that the arrangements for the Congress constituted UNESCO's most important contribution to the implementation of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly. A preparatory meeting of experts from 15 countries was held in Prague, Czechoslovakia, from 4 to 8 June 1979. The Director-General's report contained excerpts from the report of the Prague meeting.

Disarmament Week

The Secretary-General submitted two reports to the General Assembly in 1979 on the observance of Disarmament Week, which begins each year on United Nations Day, 24 October. The first report set out elements of a model programme for Disarmament Week, drawn up to assist States in developing their local programmes for the observance; it was compiled in accordance with an Assembly request of 14 December 1978.⁶⁹ The model programme described activities planned by the Secretariat and suggested types of activities which might be undertaken by Governments and organizations, as well as topics and themes reflecting the main concerns expressed in the Final Document of the 1978 special session on disarmament and in other resolutions.

The elements of the model programme were set out in five parts: an introduction; suggested governmental activities; suggested activities for academic institutions, research institutes and non-governmental organizations; the role of the media; and the relationship between Disarmament Week and other international observances.

The second report of the Secretary-General transmitted information provided by Governments on their activities to promote the objectives of Disarmament Week, submitted in response to an invitation issued by the Assembly in 1978.⁷⁰ Radio and television broadcasts, seminars, conferences, symposia, press articles and various actions by non-governmental organizations were among the special Disarmament Week activities reported by the 22 responding Governments: Belgium, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, India, Italy, Japan, Mauritius, Mongolia, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Venezuela.

In addition, Ethiopia, in a letter of 1 November, transmitted the text of a message to the Secretary-General by the Organizing Committee for the Observance of the United Nations Disarmament Week in Ethiopia.

The inauguration of Disarmament Week in 1979 was observed at a special meeting of the First Committee on 24 October. Messages from the President of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General were read, and representatives of the regional groups at the United Nations made statements.

On 11 December 1979, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/83 I, by which it invited all States that so desired, in their local measures for Disarmament Week, to take into account the elements of the model programme prepared by the Secretary-General. Specialized agencies were invited to intensify the dissemination of information on the consequences of the arms race. These agencies, Governments and nongovernmental organizations were invited to inform the Secretary-General of the activities undertaken.

The resolution was adopted without a vote; it had been approved without objection by the First Committee on 23 November, where it was sponsored by 26 countries (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The sponsors accepted an oral amendment proposed by the Federal Republic of Germany to insert, in a preambular paragraph by which the Assembly recognized the need for active involvement of United Nations—related agencies in promoting the cause of development and Disarmament Week, the phrase "within their areas of competence" with reference to those agencies. The Federal Republic felt that it was important for the agencies to concentrate on their major tasks.

Programme of fellowships on disarmament

Foreign service officials from 19 countries took part during 1979 in the first United Nations programme of fellowships on disarmament, established by the General Assembly in accordance with a decision taken in 1978. The 19 participants, who worked in foreign ministries or at permanent missions to the United Nations in New York, were selected from among 30 candidates nominated by Governments.

The 1979 course started in Geneva on 26 June, during the meetings of the Committee on Disarmament there, and ended in New York on 29 November, following the consideration by the Assembly's First Committee of the disarmament items on its agenda. The fellows attended a one-week course at the headquarterss of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, lectures by disarmament experts, and meetings of disarmament bodies and of the First Committee and the Assembly. They participated in seminars, did research and submitted papers.

In a report to the Assembly, the Secretary-General said the high quality of the candidates evidenced the importance attached to the programme. He concluded that it was fulfilling its aim.

By resolution 34/83 D, adopted without vote on 11 December, the Assembly took note with satisfaction of the Secretary-General's report and decided to continue the programme.

The resolution was sponsored by Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, Greece, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Mali, Mauritius, Nigeria, the Philippines, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Cameroon, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, and was approved by the First Committee, also without vote, on 21 November.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/71 J of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Secretary-General to undertake, with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts, a study on the technical, legal and financial implications of establishing an international satellite monitoring agency.

Reaffirming the essential role to be played by appropriate monitoring measures, satisfactory to all interested parties, in establishing and implementing disarmament agreements and in strengthening international security and confidence,

Considering the important contribution which earth observation satellite technology can make in this field,

Noting the views expressed by Member States, as compiled by the Secretary-General, on the proposal to establish an international satellite monitoring agency, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 33/71 J,

Taking into consideration the report of the Secretary-General, to which are annexed the preliminary conclusions of the study that he has undertaken, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, of the technical, legal and financial implications of establishing such an agency,

Considering it necessary, in the light of the recommendations made by the Group of Governmental Experts on the Question of the Establishment of an International Satellite Monitoring Agency in its preliminary conclusions, that the study should be continued in depth,

- 1. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out such an in-depth study with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on the Question of the Establishment of an International Satellite Monitoring Agency previously constituted;
- Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the subject in time for the General Assembly to take a decision at its second special session devoted to disarmament, in 1982;
- 3. Draws the attention of the Secretary-General to the fact that, in pursuance of paragraph 2 above, the study should be submitted no later than June 1981 to the preparatory committee for the second special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the field of disarmament,

Recalling with satisfaction the measures taken as a result of its tenth special session to revitalize existing disarmament machinery and appropriately to constitute forums for disarmament deliberations and negotiations with a better representative character.

Noting that the growing disarmament agenda and the complexity of the issues involved, as well as the more active participation of a large number of Member States, create increasing demands on United Nations management of disarmament affairs for purposes such as the promotion, substantive preparation, implementation and control of the process of disarmament,

Recalling the recommendation of the Disarmament Commission, adopted on 8 June 1979, that the requirements of an institutional and procedural nature should be examined in order to facilitate the disarmament process and to ensure implementation of disarmament agreements, including the relevant proposals referred to in paragraph 125 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly or made elsewhere,

Convinced that a comprehensive study of the institutional arrangements relating to the process of disarmament would be desirable in providing for carefully considered decisions regarding the organization, functions and structure required to meet current and future needs in the disarmament process,

- 1. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, a to carry out a comprehensive study assessing current institutional requirements and future estimated needs in the United Nations management of disarmament affairs and outlining possible functions, structure and institutional framework that could meet those requirements and needs, including legal and financial implications, and formulating recommendations for possible later decisions on the matter:
- 2. Recommends that the Secretary-General, in carrying out this study, should seek the views of Member States, for the benefit of the experts, on some key issues, such as desirable functions, structure and institutional framework of United Nations management of disarmament affairs;
- 3. Invites all Governments to co-operate with the Secretary-General so that the objectives of the study may be achieved;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a final report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

Chapter II

Peaceful uses of outer space

An Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies was opened for signature in December 1979 following its endorsement by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Outer Space Committee) and the General Assembly. The 21article Agreement, which provided for the future establishment of an international regime for the exploitation of the moon's resources, was largely drawn up in the Legal Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee.

During the year, the Legal Sub-Committee also continued its efforts to reach agreement on principles to govern the legal implications of remote sensing from space of the earth's environment and resources, as well as the use of artificial satellites for direct television broadcasts receivable in homes and institutions. The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee gave priority to remote sensing, the United Nations programme on space applications, co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system, and space transportation systems.

Plans were drawn up by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and the Outer Space Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. The Assembly decided that this Conference should be held in the latter half of 1982.

The Outer Space Committee held its twenty-second session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 18 June to 3 July, preceded by sessions of its two sub-committees. Its report was examined by the General Assembly, mainly in the Special Political Committee. On 5 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of that Committee, adopted three resolutions on outer space,

By resolution 34/66, on international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space, the Assembly endorsed recommendations by the Outer Space Committee concerning future work by the United Nations in this sphere. In addition to approving plans for United Nations activities relating to outer space as summarized elsewhere in this chapter, the Assembly approved continued United Nations sponsorship of the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station in India and the CELPA (Centro Experimental para el Lanzamiento de Proyectiles Autopropulsados) Mar del Plata Station in Argentina, requested the World Meteorological Organization to continue submitting annual status reports on its tropical cyclone project, and requested the Outer Space Committee to consider, as appropriate, new space-activities projects and report to the Assembly in 1980 with its views on which projects should be studied in the future. Resolution 34/66 was sponsored by 40 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) and adopted without a vote.

By resolution 34/67, the Assembly approved preparatory arrangements for the 1982 Outer Space Conference. By resolution 34/68, it commended to States the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.

United Nations Member States launching objects into earth orbit or farther into space continued to supply information to the United Nations on such launchings.

Details of these and other topics are given below.

Legal aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

Work on the draft Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies was concluded in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee during the year, before the text was submitted to the General Assembly for endorsement. The Committee and the Sub-Committee also continued work on two other priority items: legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles; and the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting. In addition, the two bodies considered two other matters: the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind, inter alia, questions relating to the geostationary orbit; and the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

The Legal Sub-Committee held its eighteenth session from 12 March to 6 April 1979 at United Nations Headquarters, New York. Its report was considered by its parent Committee at its June/July session.

After reviewing the work of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/66 of 5 December, endorsed the Committee's recommendation that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue work on these topics in 1980 and include in its agenda a separate item on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies

The 21-article Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies was drawn up in eight years of work by the Outer Space Committee and its Legal Sub-Committee, commencing in 1972. It was the fifth international instrument on outer space drawn up under the auspices of the Committee and commended to States by the General Assembly (for list, see p. 110).

Presenting the draft Agreement to the Assembly's Special Political Committee on 29 October, the Chairman of the Outer Space Committee stated that it had not been finalized sooner because of differences over the legal regime to govern the moon's resources. The Agreement, he said, provided for the establishment of an international régime for the exploitation of those resources — which were regarded as the common heritage of mankind-as such exploitation was about to become feasible (article 11). It established the principle that the exploration and use of the moon was the province of all mankind and was to be carried out for the benefit of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development (article 4). In addition, it established the principle that the moon was to be used by all States for peaceful purposes only, prohibiting the establishment of military bases, installations and fortifications, the testing of any type of weapon and the conduct of military manoeuvres on the moon, as well as any threat or use of force or any other hostile act or threat of hostile act there (article 3). Its provisions would also apply to celestial bodies in the solar system other than the earth (article 1).

The Agreement contained a number of detailed provisions relating to exploration and exploitation of the moon. Freedom of scientific investigation was recognized, together with the right to remove samples (article 6). Personnel, space vehicles and installations could be moved freely over or below the moon's surface (article 8); they would remain under the jurisdiction and control of the State sending them (article 12). Manned and unmanned stations could be established there, as long as access by others was not impeded (article 9). States parties were enjoined to adopt all practicable measures to safeguard the life and health of persons on the moon (article 10), and those learning of a lunar accident involving an object launched by another State would have to inform the Secretary-General and the launching State promptly (article 13). States would bear international responsibility for national activities on the moon (article 14).

Each State would be entitled to assure itself, through visits to installations, that the lunar activities of other States were compatible with the Agreement (article 15).

Provision was made in articles 17 and 18 for amendment and future review of the Agreement, including the possibility of convening a review conference with the concurrence of a majority of States parties.

The Agreement was annexed to Assembly resolution 34/68 of 5 December 1979. By that resolution, adopted without vote, the Assembly commended the Agreement, requested the Secretary-General to open it for signature and ratification at the earliest possible date, and expressed hope for the widest possible adherence to it. The Agreement was opened for signature on 18 December 1979. It was to enter into force 30 days after ratification by five States (article 19).

The resolution was recommended to the Assembly by the Special Political Committee, which had approved it by consensus on 2 November. It was sponsored in Committee by 38 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The initial consensus on the draft Agreement was reached in July, in an informal working group set up by the Outer Space Committee, on the basis of a text submitted in April by the Legal Sub-Committee. That earlier text, prepared in Working Group I of the Sub-Committee, contained a number of passages on which full agreement had not been reached. The Working Group based its discussions on a tentative draft agreement submitted to the Group by Austria in 1978,² which it reviewed article by article. The Chairman of the Working Group reported the results of this review to the Sub-Committee in the form of a working paper containing the text.

During the general exchange of views in the Legal Sub-Committee preceding the Working Group's meetings, some States, including Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Italy, Kenya, Romania and Venezuela, expressed the view that the moon and its natural resources were the common heritage of mankind. Others, such as Bulgaria and the German Democratic Republic, were of the opinion that there were objective difficulties in defining the legal status of the moon and its resources. Belgium stated that, in its view, the notion of common heritage as applied to the moon's resources had no precise juridical significance but was a moral and political concept without the juridical connotation that was being ascribed to it. Austria expressed the view that the differences of opinion could be resolved through a compromise. Some representatives, including those of Australia, Indonesia, Japan, Mongolia, Poland, the United Kingdom and the United States, were prepared to accept the tentative draft agreement as elaborated by Austria or with minor changes.

After the Chairman of Working Group I, Gyorgy Haraszti (Hungary), reported on the work done in attempting to complete the elaboration of the text, the Sub-Committee recommended that the Outer Space Committee, when considering at its 1979 session the question of the draft treaty relating to the moon, should also consider whether the elaboration of a draft treaty could be concluded or progress achieved during that session.

At its June/July session, the Committee established an informal working group of the whole under the chairmanship of Gyula Szelei Kiss (Hungary) to consider the question. The working group held four meetings between 26 June and 3 July, at which it reached a consensus on the text.

The main outstanding issue was resolved in informal consultations among Committee members on article 11, which referred to the "common heritage" principle. The first paragraph of that article as ultimately worded read: "The moon and its natural resources are the common heritage of mankind, which finds its expression in the provisions of this Agreement, in particular in paragraph 5 of this article." Paragraph 5 said that the States parties to the Agreement undertook to establish an international regime, including appropriate procedures, to govern the exploitation of the moon's resources as such exploitation was about to become feasible.

The Committee agreed to include in its report a statement reflecting its understanding that the common heritage principle would also apply to celestial bodies in the solar system other than the earth.

It also reached agreement on an understanding relating to the provision in article 7 calling for measures to prevent disruption of the existing balance of the moon's environment. According to that understanding, the article was not intended to result in prohibiting exploitation of the natural resources on the moon and other celestial bodies; it meant, rather, that exploitation would be carried out in such a manner as to minimize any disruption or adverse effects on the existing environmental balance.

When the Special Political Committee discussed the report of the Outer Space Committee, most speakers welcomed the draft Agreement as an important contribution to international law. They stressed its recognition of the common heritage principle and its reservation of celestial bodies for peaceful purposes. The United States said the Agreement placed no moratorium on exploitation of the resources of such bodies and recognized that, in the sharing of benefits from such activities, special consideration must be given to those who had contributed directly to lunar exploration. The United Kingdom said it had agreed to the prohibition of "any other hostile act or threat of hostile act" on the understanding that it related only to the moon and other celestial bodies, and not to the earth.

In the view of the German Democratic Republic, it was vital for peace and detente that the Agreement confirmed the demilitarized status of the moon and other celestial bodies and forbad the placing of nuclear weapons in orbit around such bodies. The USSR described the draft as a balanced document which met the needs of all countries, irrespective of their level of economic development and degree of participation in space activities.

Direct television broadcasting by satellite

The Chairman of the Outer Space Committee informed the Special Political Committee on 29 October 1979 that a draft set of principles had been worked out to govern the use by States of artificial satellites for television broadcasting direct to the public, but no final agreement had been possible. The main point of contention, he said, lay in differences with regard to freedom of information and the sovereignty of States.

Work on this topic continued in Working Group II of the Legal Sub-Committee, reestablished on 12 March for this purpose. The Group held 12 meetings between 19 March and 5 April.

At previous sessions, the Group had prepared a set of draft principles with tentative wording for provisions on which there had been no agreement. During the 1979 session, Canada and Sweden presented a new draft which, they said, had been prepared with a view to facilitating consensus and which they regarded as an acceptable basis for a final compromise. The Chairman of Working Group II, Nabil A. Elaraby (Egypt), reported to the Sub-Committee at the close of the Group's meetings that, while some States regarded the Canadian-Swedish text as representing a fair balance of the different points of view, others considered that some aspects were unacceptable.

A key question was the extent to which a State setting up a direct television broadcasting service aimed at another State should first be required to consult and reach agreement with the receiving State. In addition to the provision on this subject in the Canadian-Swedish draft, Belgium and the United States submitted separate working papers containing proposals for a text to replace earlier formulations on this subject. The Belgian draft provided that States could agree to lend each other, or to pool, direct television broadcasting facilities for the purpose of exchanging programmes for broadcast to the public in their respective countries. The United States draft called for notification by a State whenever it proposed to establish or authorize satellite broadcasts specifically aimed at a foreign State, and for consultations at the receiving State's request, premised on facilitating a free flow and a wider dissemination of information. The corresponding provision in the Canadian-Swedish text stated that a direct television broadcasting service specifically directed at a foreign State must be based on agreements and/or arrangements between the broadcasting and receiving States or their broadcasting entities, in order to facilitate the freer and wider dissemination of information.

The Netherlands submitted a working paper on the principle of State responsibility for direct television broadcasts. It said that States should bear international responsibility, in accordance with the applicable rules of international law, for the activities in the field of international direct television broadcasting by means of artificial earth satellites carried out by them or under their jurisdiction, and for the conformity of any such activities with the principles set forth in the working paper. Differing views were expressed on the matter, and the Working Group did not reach agreement on the text of the principle.

In the general exchange of views in the Sub-Committee, some States contended, as they had in the Working Group, that satellite broadcasts should not be permitted except with the consent of the receiving country, on the basis of respect for sovereignty and non-intervention in internal affairs. This view was stated by Argentina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Ecuador, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, Turkey and the USSR, which considered that the principle of consultation and agreements between States, as stated by Canada and Sweden in their compromise proposals, was indispensable. Other countries — the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United States—considered that free flow of information and exchange of ideas should be at the basis of direct broadcasting by satellite and that holding consultations between interested States would be sufficient. Belgium expressed the view that the problems caused by direct broadcasting should be solved not by restrictions but by a positive and responsible exercise of the freedom of information. France called for a compromise between the different positions.

Following its general exchange of views, the Sub-Committee discussed direct satellite-broadcasting while the topic was still under examination in Working Group II. Support for the Canadian-Swedish text, at least as a basis for further work, was voiced by France, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Indonesia, Mongolia and Poland.

The Sub-Committee recommended that its parent Committee, when considering this topic at its 1979 session, should also consider whether the elaboration of draft principles on the subject could be concluded, or whether further progress could be achieved, during that session. The Outer Space Committee, at its June/July session, recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue, as a matter of priority, the elaboration of principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting, in accordance with previous General Assembly resolutions.

The question of the preparation of an international convention on principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting was discussed at the 1979 regular session of the Assembly in the Special Political Committee, simultaneously with the item on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space.

Some Members stated that legal protection of the sovereign rights and cultural heritage of States should be secured through prior consultations or consent or on the basis of mutual agreement. This point was made by Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Mongolia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Uruguay. Colombia warned against the dangers of a universal society enslaved by trivial television programmes, paid for by companies which had to create demand in order to sell their products. The need to protect a State's sovereignty, political independence and cultural heritage was also stressed by Argentina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Egypt, Iraq, Tunisia and Turkey.

Japan said that problems relating to direct satellite-broadcasting should be resolved on the basis of consultation, not prior consent. The Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States stressed the importance of maintaining a free flow of information. France and Venezuela called for a compromise solution whereby free and balanced exchange of information was promoted while preserving the sovereignty and cultural identity of States.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/66 of 5 December, endorsed the recommendation of the Outer Space Committee that the Legal Sub-Committee, at its 1980 session, should continue as a matter of priority its efforts to complete the elaboration of draft principles governing the use by States of artificial earth satellites for direct television broadcasting.

Remote sensing

Working Group III of the Legal Sub-Committee reviewed during 1979 most of the 17 draft principles formulated in previous years on the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space. It agreed on changes in the text of some principles but was unable to achieve consensus on a number of issues. The Chairman of the Outer Space Committee told the Special Political Committee on 29 October that all the easily reconcilable issues had been resolved. The complex issues which still awaited solution had to do with the concepts of freedom of State activity in outer space, freedom of dissemination of remote-sensing information, and the sovereignty of States over their natural resources and information.

Working Group III, re-established by the Legal Sub-Committee on 12 March to resume work on the principles relating to remote sensing, held eight meetings between 13 March and 3 April. It discussed each principle in turn, except for those in which the only words in square brackets (signifying lack of consensus) were "shall" and "should." Where the Group was able to reach agreement on a change, the draft principle was modified; where agreement was not reached, the text was retained and proposals relating to it were attached to the Group's report.

On principle I, defining terms, the Group removed the square brackets around "primary" and "analysed" in the definitions of the terms "primary data" and "analysed information," although the latter term remained to be clarified. The USSR submitted a working paper proposing a more detailed definition of remote sensing, to replace the phrase "remote sensing of the natural resources of the earth and its environment."

The Group was unable to agree on specific amendments to principle VIII, which sought to promote the prompt dissemination of information before and after a natural disaster. However, it decided that retention of a principle on natural disasters was warranted because of its humanitarian nature.

Some representatives proposed the deletion of principle XI, which would make States internationally responsible for remote-sensing activities. They stated that under their legal systems they could not exercise State responsibility for ground segment activities. Others wished the principle to be retained, possibly with changes. Attempts at compromise were unsuccessful and the principle was therefore put in square brackets.

As regards principle XII, which provided for non-discriminatory access to data, Romania proposed that this be couched in terms of a right on the part of the State whose territory was sensed, "by virtue of the principle of permanent sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources." Differing opinions were expressed as to whether the principle of permanent sovereignty was relevant to remote sensing and whether it belonged in the text.

Romania also proposed a substitute text for principle XIII, which concerned advance notice to States whose territory was to be sensed. The proposal provided that remote sensing be carried out with full respect for the principle of permanent sovereignty of all States and peoples over their wealth and natural resources, including the right of access to information relating to them. No consensus was reached on this proposal.

In the discussion of principle XIV, concerning international co-operation, the USSR proposed a formula providing for notification to sensed States only after data had been received by the sensing State, while the United States proposed that prior notification be given of remote-sensing programmes. In favour of notification after receipt of data, it was said that it would be impractical to give advance notification since the results could not be predicted. On the opposite side, it was argued that sensed States should have prior knowledge in order to maximize cooperation and access to data. Efforts to reach a compromise were unsuccessful.

The USSR proposed a text for principle XVI that would restrict the transfer to third States of certain types of sensitive data acquired through remote-sensing. Some representatives felt that it was necessary for economic, political and security reasons to treat sensitive data differently by disseminating them to third States only with the consent of the sensed State. Others held the view that remote-sensing programmes would be excessively burdened by mandatory international constraints on dissemination.

Finally, in connexion with principle XVII on dispute settlement, different views were expressed as to whether consultations should have priority over other forms of established procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes. It was decided to place a footnote stating that this principle should be reviewed in the light of the full set of principles.

The question of the transfer of data obtained by remote sensing was considered during the general exchange of views in the Legal Sub-Committee. Some members, notably Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, expressed the view that data obtained by remote sensing and information derived therefrom should be disseminated freely and ought not to be classified in such a manner as to restrict dissemination. France spoke of the need to reconcile technological development with State sovereignty. Brazil, Chile, Colombia and India insisted that sensed States must give their consent before remote sensing of their territory could be undertaken. These countries, together with Bulgaria, Egypt, Kenya and the USSR, remained of the view that States had permanent sovereignty over their natural resources and over information on those resources. Australia favoured a policy of the most open dissemination of primary data consistent with the need to safeguard the legitimate economic and security interests of the sensed State against the risk of misuse by other States and foreign non-governmental entities of the information processed from primary data.

At its June/July session, the Outer Space Committee noted that several key issues remained to be agreed upon before the draft principles could be finalized. It recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue, on a priority basis, to give detailed consideration to the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles.

During the debate on outer space in the Special Political Committee, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Mongolia, the Philippines, the USSR, the Upper Volta and Venezuela stated that all countries should exercise sovereignty over their natural resources and information on those resources; the consent of those States was necessary for at least some categories of such data to be disseminated to third parties. The need to respect the sovereignty of States over their natural resources was also stressed by Argentina, Cyprus and Tunisia. Other States, including the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands, stated that data and analysed information should be freely accessible to all States, without requiring the consent of the sensed State. Australia favoured the freest dissemination of primary data consistent with the need to safeguard the legitimate economic and security interests of the sensed State.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/66 of 5 December on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, endorsed the recommendation of the Outer Space Committee that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue in 1980, on a priority basis, its detailed consideration of the legal implications of remote sensing of the earth from space, with the aim of formulating draft principles.

Other matters

Definition and/or delimitation of outer space and questions relating to the geostationary orbit

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Outer Space Committee considered the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and questions relating to the geostationary orbit from 2 to 5 April 1979.

Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Ecuador, France, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Poland, Romania, Turkey and the USSR were of the view that there was a need for a definition and/or delimitation of outer space. However, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States considered that such a definition and/or delimitation was not currently necessary. Some of those favouring a definition and/or delimitation, including Belgium, Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the USSR, were of the view that a boundary between air space and outer space should be established at an altitude not higher than at 100-110 kilometres above sea-level. A proposal to that effect was made by the USSR. Egypt and Italy were of the view that further studies were necessary before such a delimitation could be established. Japan spoke in favour of a functional approach to a definition, based on the nature of the activities undertaken by States rather than on the altitude at which they took place.

Colombia, Ecuador, Indonesia and Kenya considered that the geostationary orbit, both because of its physical character and technical attributes and because of existing legal regulations, constituted a limited natural resource over which the equatorial countries exercised sovereign rights in accordance with international law. They felt that its unique character should be taken into account in any definition of outer space whose limits had not been established. These States added that the geostationary orbit must be used as a matter of priority for the benefit of the developing countries.

Voicing a different view, Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Egypt, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States said that geostationary orbits, at an altitude of 36,000 kilometres, were inseparable from outer space and that all relevant provisions of the 1967 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,³ were applicable to such orbits. According to this view, under the 1967 Treaty geostationary orbits, being inseparable from outer space as a whole, were not subject to national appropriation by claim of sovereignty, by means of use or occupation, or by any other means. They further considered that geostationary orbits were free for use by all States without discrimination of any kind, on a basis of equality and in accordance with international law. They also considered that the placing of satellites in geostationary orbits created no right of ownership over the orbital positions of satellites or over segments of the orbits.

While some States, such as Belgium, Brazil, France, Italy, Japan, Turkey and the United ³ See Y.U.N., 1966, p. 41, resolution 2222(XXI) of 19 December 1966, annexing text of Treaty.

Kingdom, could not agree that any basis existed for unilateral claims of national sovereignty over the geostationary orbit, they considered it important to discuss procedures which would render the orbit available to all States, on an equal basis, for peaceful exploration and use. They further considered that, in order to permit more rational use, orbital positions in the geostationary orbit should be made the subject of international agreement, as provided for in the procedures of the International Telecommunication Union.

At the June/July session of the Outer Space Committee, some members again expressed support for the idea of establishing a boundary between outer space and air space not higher than 100-110 kilometres above sea-level, while others expressed reservations as to the need to establish a specific boundary. The differing views regarding the legal status of the geostationary orbit were also reiterated in the Committee. The USSR submitted a working paper proposing provisions for a General Assembly resolution on the delimitation of air space and outer space and on the legal status of the geostationary orbital space of satellites.

During the Special Political Committee's debate on outer space in 1979, Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cyprus, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and the USSR made statements in favour of defining and/or delimiting outer space. Some of these States were of the view that a boundary between air space and outer space should be established even if it had to be adjusted later. Australia said the most important question was whether it was necessary to delimit outer space; if it was not, the imposition of an unnecessary legal regime could be avoided. The United States was not aware of any practical problems which would be solved by a definition, and said care must be taken to ensure that an arbitrary definition did not stifle efforts to explore and use outer space. Colombia was of the view that the Outer Space Committee should deal with the subject in depth, but it could not accept the USSR proposal to establish a boundary between air space and outer space not higher than 100-110 kilometres above sea-level because such a boundary would be purely arbitrary. Support for that proposal was voiced by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Mongolia.

Colombia and Ecuador stated that equatorial countries continued to regard the geostationary orbit as a limited natural resource and that segments of the orbit situated above their territories belonged to the States below. However, Australia, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Italy, Mongolia, the United States and Uruguay considered that claims of sovereignty by equatorial or other countries to the geostationary orbit were not legally justified. Australia, Austria, Brazil, Cyprus, India, Indonesia, Italy, Sweden, Uruguay and Venezuela stressed the importance of ensuring equitable access to the geostationary orbit in the interest of all countries.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/66 of 5 December, endorsed the Outer Space Committee's recommendation that the Legal Sub-Committee should continue in 1980 to discuss matters relating to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and outer space activities, bearing in mind, inter alia, questions relating to the geostationary orbit.

Nuclear power sources in outer space

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/66 of 5 December 1979, endorsed the recommendation of the Outer Space Committee that the Legal Sub-Committee should include in its agenda for 1980 a new item entitled "Review of existing international law relevant to outer space activities with a view to determining the appropriateness of supplementing such law with provisions relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space."

The suggestion that the legal aspects of the use of nuclear power sources in space be taken up by the Legal Sub-Committee was raised in that body towards the end of its 1979 session. Those favouring this course were Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, India, Indonesia, Japan, Kenya, Mexico, the Netherlands, the United States and Venezuela. In their view, the fact that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee was considering technical aspects and safety measures relating to the use of nuclear power sources in space should not prevent the Legal Sub-Committee from commencing the consideration of legal aspects.

On the other hand, Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR were of the opinion that inclusion of this topic as a separate item of the Sub-Committee's agenda was not warranted. They considered that most of the problems involved had complicated technical aspects that were being discussed by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, and that it would not be desirable to complicate that body's task further by taking legal positions on the questions before it was timely.

The Legal Sub-Committee, in view of the divergence of opinions, considered that the Outer Space Committee should discuss at its next session, unless it decided otherwise, whether to include a separate item on this subject on the Sub-Committee's agenda.

The Outer Space Committee responded by recommending that the Legal Sub-Committee should include in its 1980 agenda an item on the question. It also recommended that United Nations Member States be invited to submit their views concerning existing international law relevant to outer space activities, for circulation no later than 15 February 1980.

During the discussion of outer space in the Special Political Committee in October and November 1979, Austria, Canada, Chile, Cyprus, Egypt, India, Japan, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Philippines, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States welcomed the plan to have this matter considered by the Legal Sub-Committee. Several of them cited in particular the need to achieve higher safety standards in this area. The USSR said it was prepared to participate in the consideration of the question.

The Assembly, in endorsing inclusion of the new item in the Legal Sub-Committee's 1980 agenda, also endorsed the Outer Space Committee's recommendation that the item entitled "Other matters," under which the Sub-Committee had discussed this subject in 1979, continue to be placed on the Sub-Committee's agenda.

(For information on the scientific and technical aspects of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, see p. 116.)

International space treaties

By resolution 34/66 of 5 December 1979, the General Assembly invited States that were not parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to consider ratifying or acceding to them.

As at 31 December 1979, the Assembly had commended to States five such treaties: the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;4 the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space;5 the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects;6 the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space; and the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (annexed to Assembly resolution 34/68 of 5 December 1979, discussed above).

- 1. States Parties shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations as well as the public and the international scientific community, to the greatest extent feasible and practicable, of their activities concerned with the exploration and use of the moon. Information on the time, purposes, locations, orbital parameters and duration shall be given in respect of each mission to the moon as soon as possible after launching, while information on the results of each mission, including scientific results, shall be furnished upon completion of the mission. In the case of a mission lasting more than sixty days, information on conduct of the mission, including any scientific results, shall be given periodically, at thirty-day intervals. For missions lasting more than six months, only significant additions to such information need be reported thereafter.
- 2. If a State Party becomes aware that another State Party plans to operate simultaneously in the same area of or in the same orbit around or trajectory to or around the moon, it shall promptly inform the other State of the timing of and plans for its own operations.
- 3. In carrying out activities under this Agreement, States Parties shall promptly inform the Secretary-General, as well as the public and the international scientific community, of any phenomena they discover in outer space, including the moon, which could endanger human life or health, as well as of any indication of organic life.

Article 7

- 1. In exploring and using the moon, States Parties shall take measures to prevent the disruption of the existing balance of its environment, whether by introducing adverse changes in that environment, by its harmful contamination through the introduction of extra-environmental matter or otherwise. States Parties shall also take measures to avoid harmfully affecting the environment of the earth through the introduction of extraterrestrial matter or otherwise.
- 2. States Parties shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the measures being adopted by them in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article and shall also, to the maximum extent feasible, notify him in advance of all placements by them of radioactive materials on the moon and of the purposes of such placements.
- 3. States Parties shall report to other States Parties and to the Secretary-General concerning areas of the moon having special scientific interest in order that, without prejudice to the rights of other States Parties, consideration may be given to the designation of such areas as international scientific preserves for which special protective arrangements are to be agreed upon in consultation with the competent bodies of the United Nations.

Article 8

- 1. States Parties may pursue their activities in the exploration and use of the moon anywhere on or below its surface, subject to the provisions of this Agreement.
 - 2. For these purposes States Parties may, in particular:
 - (a) Land their space objects on the moon and launch them from the moon;
 - (b) Place their personnel, space vehicles, equipment, facilities, stations and installations anywhere on or below the surface of the moon.

3. Activities of States Parties in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article shall not interfere with the activities of other States Parties on the moon. Where such interference may occur, the States Parties concerned shall undertake consultations in accordance with article 15, paragraphs 2 and 3, of this Agreement.

- 1. States Parties may establish manned and unmanned stations on the moon. A State Party establishing a station shall use only that area which is required for the needs of the station and shall immediately inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the location and purposes of that station. Subsequently, at annual intervals that State shall likewise inform the Secretary-General whether the station continues in use and whether its purposes have changed.
- 2. Stations shall be installed in such a manner that they do not impede the free access to all areas of the moon of personnel, vehicles and equipment of other States Parties conducting activities on the moon in accordance with the provisions of this Agreement or of article I of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.

- 2. The moon is not subject to national appropriation by any claim of sovereignty, by means of use or occupation, or by any other means.
- 3. Neither the surface nor the subsurface of the moon, nor any part thereof or natural resources in place, shall become property of any State, international intergovernmental or non-governmental organization, national organization or non-governmental entity or of any natural person. The placement of personnel, space vehicles, equipment, facilities, stations and installations on or below the surface of the moon, including structures connected with its surface or subsurface, shall not create a right of ownership over the surface or the subsurface of the moon or any areas thereof. The foregoing provisions are without prejudice to the international regime referred to in paragraph 5 of this article.
- 4. States Parties have the right to exploration and use of the moon without discrimination of any kind, on the basis of equality and in accordance with international law and the provisions of this Agreement.
- 5. States Parties to this Agreement hereby undertake to establish an international regime, including appropriate procedures, to govern the exploitation of the natural resources of the moon as such exploitation is about to become feasible. This provision shall be implemented in accordance with article 18 of this Agreement.
- 6. In order to facilitate the establishment of the international regime referred to in paragraph 5 of this article, States Parties shall inform the Secretary-General 'of the United Nations as well as the public and the international scientific community, to the greatest extent feasible and practicable, of any natural resources they may discover on the moon.
- 7. The main purposes of the international regime to be established shall include:
 - (a) The orderly and safe development of the natural resources of the moon;
 - (b) The rational management of those resources;
 - (c) The expansion of opportunities in the use of those resources;
 - (d) An equitable sharing by all States Parties in the benefits derived from those resources, whereby the interests and needs of the developing countries, as well as the efforts of those countries which have contributed either directly or indirectly to the exploration of the moon, shall be given special consideration.
- 8. All the activities with respect to the natural resources of the moon shall be carried out in a manner compatible with the purposes specified in paragraph 7 of this article and the provisions of article 6, paragraph 2, of this Agreement.

Article 12

- States Parties shall retain jurisdiction and control over their personnel, space vehicles, equipment, facilities, stations and installations on the moon. The ownership of space vehicles, equipment, facilities, stations and installations shall not be affected by their presence on the moon.
- 2. Vehicles, installations and equipment or their component parts found in places other than their intended location shall be dealt with in accordance with article 5 of the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space.
- 3. In the event of an emergency involving a threat to human life, States Parties may use the equipment, vehicles, installations, facilities or supplies of other States Parties on the moon. Prompt notification of such use shall be made to the Secretary-General of the United Nations or the State Party concerned.

A State Party which learns of the crash landing, forced landing or other unintended landing on the moon of a space object, or its component parts, that were not launched by it, shall promptly inform the launching State Party and the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

- 1. States Parties to this Agreement shall bear international responsibility for national activities on the moon, whether such activities are carried out by governmental agencies or by non-governmental entities, and for assuring that national activities are carried out in conformity with the provisions of this Agreement. States Parties shall ensure that non-governmental entities under their jurisdiction shall engage in activities on the moon only under the authority and continuing supervision of the appropriate State Party.
- 2. States Parties recognize that detailed arrangements concerning liability for damage caused on the moon, in addition to the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies and the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects, may become necessary as a result of more extensive activities on the moon. Any such arrangements shall be elaborated in accordance with the procedure provided for in article 18 of this Agreement.

- 1. Each State Party may assure itself that the activities of other States Parties in the exploration and use of the moon are compatible with the provisions of this Agreement. To this end, all space vehicles, equipment, facilities, stations and installations on the moon shall be open to other States Parties. Such States Parties shall give reasonable advance notice of a projected visit, in order that appropriate consultations may be held and that maximum precautions may be taken to assure safety and to avoid interference with normal operations in the facility to be visited. In pursuance of this article, any State Party may act on its own behalf or with the full or partial assistance of any other State Party or through appropriate international procedures within the framework of the United Nations and in accordance with the Charter.
- 2. A State Party which has reason to believe that another State Party is not fulfilling the obligations incumbent upon it pursuant to this Agreement or that another State Party is interfering with the rights which the former State has under this Agreement may request consultations with that State Party. A State Party receiving such a request shall enter into such consultations without delay. Any other State Party which requests to do so shall be entitled to take part in the consultations. Each State Party participating in such consultations shall seek a mutually acceptable resolution of any controversy and shall bear in mind the rights and interests of all States Parties. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be informed of the results of the consultations and shall transmit the information received to all States Parties concerned.

Scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space

As in previous years, consideration of various scientific and technical aspects of the peaceful uses of outer space continued during 1979 in the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, and in the General Assembly itself.

As the Assembly noted in its resolution 34/66 of 5 December on these and other aspects of international co-operation with regard to outer space, the Sub-Committee continued to consider experimental and operational phases of remote sensing of the earth from space, implementation of the United Nations space applications programme, co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system, the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit, and questions relating to space transportation systems. Also considered were technical aspects of and safety measures relating to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. In this connexion, the Sub-Committee adopted the report of its Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, the establishment of which had been endorsed by the Assembly in 1978.8

The Assembly endorsed the United Nations programme on space applications for 1980 and the recommendation that the five regional remotesensing centres in Africa should receive United Nations technical assistance and co-operation. It requested the Outer Space Committee to consider new space projects, as appropriate.

The Assembly endorsed the recommendation of the Committee that the Sub-Committee should give priority in 1980 to the space applications programme, co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system, remote sensing, nuclear power sources in space, and the co-ordinating role of the United Nations in the use of space science and technology. The Sub-Committee would also continue to consider space transportation systems and the geostationary orbit.

Also in December 1979, the Assembly approved initial arrangements for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, and decided to convene it in the second half of 1982.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee held its sixteenth session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 5 to 22 February 1979. Its report was examined by the Outer Space Committee at its session held in New York from 18 June to 3 July.

Details of activities on these and other topics are given below.

Remote sensing

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued to consider, as a priority topic, the current pre-operational/experimental phase of remote sensing of the earth by satellite, as well as possible future operational satellite remotesensing systems. A working group drafted a statement of the Sub-Committee's views and conclusions on the matter, which was annexed to the Sub-Committee's report.

This statement indicated that differing views continued to be expressed as to the practicability and utility of classifying primary (unanalysed) remote-sensing data on the basis of spatial resolution- a measure of the amount of detail visible in a photograph taken from space. Some representatives expressed the view that such classification of data would be essential for purposes of data dissemination and that spatial resolution should be the key parameter for classification. Others, however, considered that there was no simple or practical scientific basis for classifying remote-sensing data into global, regional and local data, as had been proposed.

In light of these differing opinions, the Sub-Committee was unable to agree on the need for such a classification or the manner in which it might be made. It called for a Secretariat report on one possible approach to a definition of resolution — a new concept called effective resolution element. It also recommended that the Secretariat solicit the views of Committee members and international organizations to help define the terms "coarse," "medium" and "fine" as used to characterize spatial resolution for remote-sensing imaging systems.

Differing opinions were also expressed regarding the dissemination of primary data. The Sub-Committee reiterated the view that there was no scientific or technical basis for a sensed State not having timely and non-discriminatory access to data on its own territory.

After discussing the future co-ordinating role of the United Nations in remote sensing, particularly through the establishment of a panel of experts, the Sub-Committee concluded that it was not currently in a position to recommend the establishment of such a panel. It recommended that the Secretariat request Member States to include their views on that question in the annual reports to the United Nations on their national and co-operative international space activities.

Recognizing the need to help developing countries learn how to analyse and use remote-sensing data, and aware of the need for regional co-operation and the creation of indigenous capacity, the Sub-Committee was of the opinion that remote sensing from outer space should be conducted with the greatest possible international co-operation and participation.

In this connexion, the Sub-Committee felt that the United Nations, through its space applications programme, the remote-sensing centres operated by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Centre for Natural Resources, Energy and Transport and other agencies, could play an important role in providing assistance. The Sub-Committee requested the Secretariat to take initial steps towards the development of a comprehensive catalogue of remote-sensing applications, which could be regularly updated.

The Outer Space Committee endorsed most of the Sub-Committee's conclusions. In particular, it recommended that the remote-sensing centre in Cairo, Egypt, along with the four other African international remote-sensing centres, should receive any technical assistance and cooperation which could be made available through the United Nations.

This recommendation was also endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 34/66 of 5 December. In addition, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation that questions relating to remote sensing be considered as a priority item at the Sub-Committee's 1980 session.

In the Special Political Committee's debate on international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space, held in October and November, Japan expressed doubts about the need and the technical basis for classifying primary remote-sensing data. Conversely, Bulgaria said that the Convention on the Transfer and Use of Data of the Remote Sensing of the Earth from Outer Space, signed in Moscow in May 1978, could serve as the basis for drafting rules on such matters as data classification and dissemination. The idea of setting up an international agency or centre to promote remote sensing was mentioned by Ecuador, Egypt and Sweden.

(For information on the legal aspects of remote sensing, see p. 106.)

United Nations programme and activities relating to outer space

Four training courses or seminars on remotesensing applications were held during 1979 as part of the United Nations programme on space applications. They were: the fourth United Nations international training course on the applications of remote-sensing techniques to fisheries (Rome, Italy, 14 May-1 June, in cooperation with FAO); a United Nations training course on remote-sensing applications for Latin America with emphasis on non-renewable resources (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 5-23 November); a United Nation/FA0 regional training seminar on remote-sensing applications in agriculture for Africa (Ibadan, Nigeria, 5-23 November); and a United Nations training seminar on remote sensing of earth resources for the Economic Commission for Western Asia region (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, 1-11 December).

The 1980 space applications programme was endorsed by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, the Outer Space Committee and the General Assembly. It called for the holding of from three to five courses and seminars in various regions, on various aspects of remote sensing.

The Sub-Committee and the Committee expressed gratitude to H. G. S. Murthy (India), retiring United Nations Expert on Space Applications, for having directed the space applications programme for several years. The two bodies welcomed the designation of Achmad D. Padang (Indonesia) as the new Expert.

The Sub-Committee and the Committee also questions relating to the coordination of activities of the organizations in the United Nations system, particularly in the area of practical applications of space technology. The Sub-Committee noted that the subcommittee on outer space activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) had been discontinued as part of a restructuring of ACC machinery.9 It expressed the view that regular annual meetings among the organizations concerned were still needed and would become even more important in light of the preparatory work required for the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. The Outer Space Committee endorsed this view.

Nuclear power sources in outer space

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee adopted a report on 21 February 1979 stating that nuclear power sources could be used safely in outer space provided that certain safety considerations were met in full. The decision to use such sources in space, the report concluded, should be based on technical considerations, provided that safety requirements could be met while satisfying mission requirements.

The report listed three safety considerations: (1) radiation protection measures during all phases of an orbital mission of a spacecraft bearing a nuclear power source should be derived principally from the internationally accepted basic standards recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP); (2) the design of radioisotope systems should ensure minimal leakage of the radioactive contents and must at least meet the limits recommended by ICRP in all circumstances, including accidents, re-entry into the atmosphere, impact and prolonged water immersion; and (3) if reactors were intended for low orbits where the radioactive materials did not have time to decay to an acceptable level, safety depended on the start of the operation in orbit and the success of boosting the nuclear power source to a higher orbit after the operation was completed; in the event of an unsuccessful boost into higher orbit, the system must be capable of dispersing the radioactive material so as to limit the radiological hazard in conformity with ICRP recommendations.

The report was drafted by the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, established by the Sub-Committee on 5 February 1979 in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 10 November 1978. The Group, composed of experts and open to all Sub-Committee members, met from 12 to 16 February, during the Sub-Committee's 1979 session, under the chairmanship of John H. Carver (Australia)

The Outer Space Committee, at its June/July session, endorsed the Working Group's request that Member States and international agencies should contribute studies on technical aspects and safety measures, including areas identified by the Group as requiring further examination: an inventory of safety problems, implementation of ICRP recommendations for populations and environment, improvements in predicting re-entry phenomena, and technical considerations concerning a notification format. The Committee also endorsed the Group's request that the Secretariat collate and summarize those studies in time for a further meeting of the Group during the Sub-Committee's 1980 session.

The Assembly, by resolution 34/66 of 5 December, endorsed the Committee's recommendation that an item on nuclear power sources in outer space be included in the Sub-Committee's 1980 agenda.

(For information on the legal aspects of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, see p. 109.)

Space transportation systems

In accordance with the Assembly's 1978 resolution on outer space activities, 11 the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in 1979 considered, for the first time as a priority item, questions relating to space transportation systems. After noting the progress being made in various programmes in this area, the Sub-Committee decided to continue consideration of this item at its 1980 session. It requested the Secretariat to prepare a study on the progress being made in space transportation systems, including their scientific, technical, economic and social implications, and to seek the views of Member States and international organizations.

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/66 of 5 December, endorsed a recommendation by the Outer Space Committee that the title of the item on the Sub-Committee's 1980 agenda should read "Space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space."

Geostationary orbit

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee continued in February 1979 its examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit, on the basis of a study prepared by the Secretariat.

The Outer Space Committee endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that this study should be updated when necessary and that a separate study should be undertaken concerning the most efficient and economical means of using the geostationary orbit with a view to assessing its wider use, particularly by developing countries. The Committee further asked for a paper on the dynamics of space objects.

During the discussion in both the Sub-Committee and the Outer Space Committee, divergent views were expressed on the question of whether equatorial countries possessed valid claims to sovereignty over segments of the orbit. (For a summary of views, see p. 108.)

Preparations for the Second

United Nations Outer Space Conference

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/67 adopted without vote on 5 December 1979, set the second half of 1982 as the time for convening the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. It also endorsed detailed recommendations on the preparation and organization of the Conference, made by the Outer Space Committee in its capacity as Preparatory Committee for the Conference. The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee served as an advisory committee in this regard. Both bodies were given these roles by the Assembly in 1978 when, on the Outer Space Committee's recommendation, the Assembly decided that the Conference should be held. 12

The Assembly also adopted the provisional agenda for the Conference, as recommended by the Committee. This included three main groups of items on: the state of space science and technology; applications of space science and technology; and international co-operation and the role of the United Nations.

Preparations for the Conference were to include the submission of papers by Member States, the organization of regional and interregional seminars on selected scientific and other aspects, and the preparation of a draft of a final report in which the Conference could include its recommendations on conclusions and guidance for future United Nations work in this field. The Conference secretariat would be headed by a Secretary-General and three Deputy Secretaries-General to be appointed by the United Nations Secretary-General. The Conference would have three main committees, each dealing with one of the three major groups of agenda items.

The recommendations on plans for the Conference were drawn up in the Sub-Committee with the assistance of a Working Group appointed on 5 February 1979, under the chairmanship of Yash Pal India). The Group drew up a provisional agenda and made other recommendations on preparations for and organization of the Conference, but was unable to agree on the number of Vice-Presidents, whether the Conference should have committees and when it should meet. The Preparatory Committee agreed at its June/July session on the committee structure and time-frame for the Conference, leaving open the matter of the number of Vice-Presidents. It was assisted by a Working Group, also under the chairmanship of Mr. Pal, which was established

India and the USSR offered in February, during the session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, to serve as host for the Conference. India withdrew its tentative offer in June, during the Cuter Space Committee's session. The Committee agreed that the question of the venue of the Conference should be held over until 1980, and the Assembly requested the Committee to submit a recommendation on the matter to its 1980 regular session.

The Assembly also requested the Committee to continue with its preparatory work for the Conference. The Assembly's resolution on the Conference was recommended by the Special Political Committee, which approved it by consensus on 2 November. It was sponsored in the Committee by 40 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Resolution 34/67, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/34/664, adopted without vote by Assembly on 5 December 1979, meeting 89.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that it has been more than a decade since the first United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space was held at Vienna, in 1968, and that this period has seen rapid progress and growth in space exploration and the development of space technology and its applications,

Considering that there is a need to assess these developments, to exchange information and experience on their present and potential impact and to assess the adequacy and effectiveness of institutional and co-operative means of realizing the benefits of space technology,

Recognizing the importance of wider participation of Member States in the activities of the United Nations in outer space matters

Aware of the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to orderly growth of space activities favourable to the socio-economic advancement of mankind, in particular of the peoples of the developing countries,

Taking into account new developments in space science and technology which are being projected and envisaged in the coming decade as well as the new applications emerging therefrom and their potential benefits and possible implications for national development and international co-operation,

Conscious of the need further to increase the awareness of the general public with regard to space technology and its applications,

Desiring to stimulate an enhanced co-ordinating role of the United Nations, which is eminently suited to bring about increased international co-operation and assistance to the developing countries in the field of exploration and peaceful uses of outer space.

Recalling its resolution 33/16 of 10 November 1978, in which it decided to convene a second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and to designate the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference,

Registration of space launchings

In 1979, States launching objects into orbit around the earth or farther into space continued to supply data to the United Nations on space launchings. Such registration was called for by the General Assembly in 1961¹³ and was also provided for in the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, which came into force in 1976.¹⁴ The Convention had 26 States parties as at 31 December 1979.

Fourteen notifications were received and distributed as documents of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. (They covered objects launched at the end of 1978, as well as during 1979.)

Canada, India, Japan and the United Kingdom submitted information on one launching each; Czechoslovakia submitted information on one launching performed by the USSR which that country had reported in 1978. The USSR reported information on the launching of 83 objects and the United States on the launching of 51 objects.

By a note dated 13 June, Czechoslovakia informed the Secretary-General that it had established, in accordance with the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, a national registry of the space objects it had launched.

Chapter III

Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea

A revised negotiating text for a convention on the law of the sea was produced in 1979 during the eighth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. Based on the results of negotiations held at the first part of the session, this text became in turn the basis for negotiations at the resumed session later in the year. The General Assembly, at the request of the Conference, approved the convening of a ninth session in 1980.

The aim of the Third Conference, which had been in session since 1973, was to draw up a comprehensive convention on all ocean issues, including those outstanding from the first two Conferences, held in 1958 and 1960. In particular, the Conference was to try to define an international regime for the sea-bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction and to ensure that the resources of this area would be exploited for the benefit of mankind as a whole.

Eighth session of the Conference

The eighth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea was held during 1979 in two parts: from 19 March to 27 April at Geneva, and from 19 July to 24 August at United Nations Headquarters, New York.

Previous sessions of the Third Conference had been held every year since 1973, as follows: first session, New York, December 1973; second session, Caracas, Venezuela, June-August 1974; third session, Geneva, March-May 1975; fourth session, New York, March-May 1976; fifth session, New York, August-September 1976; sixth session, New York, May-July 1977; seventh session, Geneva, March-May, and New York, August-September 1978. After its first session, devoted to organizational and procedural matters, the Conference worked on the mandate assigned to it by the General Assembly in 1973 of drawing up a convention dealing with all matters relating to the law of the sea.² The decision to convene the Conference was taken by the Assembly on 17 December 1970.3

The First United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, in 1958, drew up four conventions, dealing respectively with the territorial sea and contiguous zone, the high seas, fishing and conservation of the living resources of the high seas, and the continental shelf.⁴ The Second Conference, in 1960, was unable to adopt any substantive proposal on the breadth of the territorial sea and on fishery limits.⁵

A total of 147 States and the United Nations Council for Namibia participated in the eighth session: 139 attended the first part and 143 attended the resumed session. Two territories, nine specialized agencies or United Nations-related bodies and 14 intergovernmental organizations participated as observers. (For list of participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

In addition, 27 non-governmental organizations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council participated as observers, as did three national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity or the League of Arab States: the Palestine Liberation Organization, the African National Congress (South Africa) (each attended the first part only), and the South West Africa People's Organization.

The only changes during 1979 in the officers of the Conference and membership of its committees were that Belgium replaced Ireland as a Vice-President and Bangladesh replaced Thailand as a member of the Drafting Committee.

The rules of procedure of the Conference remained as adopted at the second session and as amended at the third, as did the "gentleman's agreement" annexed to the rules, by which the Conference was to make every effort to reach agreement on substantive matters by consensus, and by which there was to be no voting on such matters until all efforts at consensus had been exhausted.

Organization of work

At the eighth session, six of the seven negotiating groups established by the Conference in 1978 held informal meetings. They continued to deal with certain matters falling within the mandates of the First Committee (international seabed area) and the Second Committee (other ocean areas and related questions). In addition, work continued in the Third Committee (marine environment, research and technology) and in informal plenary meetings on the settlement of disputes and on final clauses.

The negotiating groups were open to all States participating in the Conference. The groups which met in 1979 were:

- Negotiating Group 1, on the system of exploration and exploitation of the international sea-bed area and on resource policy for the area (Chairman: Frank X. J. C. Njenga (Kenya));
- Negotiating Group 2, on financial arrangements for the deep sea-bed mining system (Chairman: Tommy T. B. Koh (Singapore));
- Negotiating Group 3, on the organs of the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority (Chairman: Paul Bamela Engo (United Republic of Cameroon));
- Negotiating Group 4, on access to living resources of the exclusive economic zone (Chairman: Satya N. Nandan (Fiji));
- Negotiating Group 6, on the definition of the outer limits of the continental shelf (Chairman: Andrés & Aguilar (Venezuela)); and
- Negotiating Group 7, on the delimitation of maritime boundaries between adjacent and opposite States and settlement of disputes thereon (Chairman: Eero J. Manner (Finland)).

The Chairman of Negotiating Group 5, on the settlement of disputes in the exclusive economic zone, reported to the Conference on 25 April 1979, as had been indicated the previous year, that the Group had successfully concluded work on its mandate.⁶ The Chairman was Constantine Stavropoulos (Greece).

On 9 April 1979, the General Committee established a Working Group of 21 on First Committee matters, chaired by Mr. Engo, to seek solutions for issues that remained unresolved in Negotiating Groups 1, 2 and 3. A new Group of Legal Experts on the Settlement of Disputes relating to First Committee matters, chaired by Harry Wuensche (German Democratic Republic), began meeting in March.

On 24 August, the Conference recommended to the General Assembly that provision be made for it to hold two sets of meetings in 1980: from 3 March to 4 April in New York and from 28 July to 29 August at Geneva. The March segment would be preceded by informal meetings of groups, beginning on 27 February. The aim of the 1980 session, as agreed by the Conference, was to complete the work of the Conference and approve the text of a convention.

Work of the First Committee and its negotiating groups

Negotiating Groups 1, 2 and 3, dealing with First Committee matters, met during the first three weeks of the first part of the eighth session. They were succeeded by the Working Group of 21 on First Committee matters, which was composed of 21 members named by the groups of States at the Conference: 10 from the "Group of 77" developing States, two from Eastern European States and nine from Western European and other developed States. In some cases, the States chosen by individual groups varied according to the subject discussed. The principal co-ordinator was Mr. Engo, Chairman of the First Committee and of Negotiating Group 3. The other co-ordinators were the Chairmen of Negotiating Groups 1 and 2 and of the Group of Legal Experts on the Settlement of Disputes relating to First Committee matters.

Like the negotiating groups, the Working Group of 21 held closed, informal meetings. The purpose of the Group was to place the sea-bed issues in two categories: those on which consensus existed and those on which a final consensus had not been reached but in regard to which the degree of agreement was so widespread and extensive as to justify their incorporation in any revision of the negotiating text.

On 25 April, the First Committee met to hear the reports and compromise formulae of the Chairmen of the negotiating groups and of the Group of Legal Experts. The Chairman of Negotiating Group 1 said that the negotiations had faced the enormous task of equalizing the positions of powerful consortia, some of them already operating on the sea-bed, with that of an international Enterprise still to be born, which was to be the mining arm of the International Sea-Bed Authority. Outlining his proposals for revisions in the negotiating text to accomplish that objective, he said one of the proposed changes would oblige applicants for sea-bed contracts to inform the Authority of where the technology they would use was available on the open market. Another would reinforce the assurance that the owner of the technology would make it available to the Enterprise. There was also a new clause placing obligations on States to ensure that the Enterprise could obtain technology to process sea-bed minerals, not just to gather them from the sea-bed. In addition, provisions were included aimed at preventing monopolization of seabed mining. Further, the new text would permit a moratorium to be imposed on the granting of new contracts if a Review Conference, to be called 20 years after approval of the first sea-bed contract, failed to reach agreement within five years on a sea-bed exploitation system for the succeeding period.

Mr. Nandan reported on negotiations he had conducted with major land-based producers and major consumers at the request of the Chairman of Negotiating Group 1, regarding policies for sea-bed mineral production. He said that the most difficult issue was the level of the ceiling to be imposed on production and the number of mine sites that would be permitted to operate.

The Chairman of Negotiating Group 2 reported on 25 April that his previous proposal on financial aspects of sea-bed mining, made earlier that month, had been criticized by the Group of 77 because it did not provide adequately for funding the first mining project of the Enterprise and relied too heavily-on debt rather than cash income. Thus, he had revised his proposal to raise the Enterprise's cash/debt ratio from 1:2 to 1:1, and to provide that half (rather than one third) of the capital required would be supplied by States in the form of long-term, interest-free loans. Regarding the system for taxing sea-bed operators, he had decided to maintain his proposals with two changes in production charge rates that would slightly reduce the Authority's income. He believed that the revised formula balanced the interests of the Authority and of the owners of capital and technology.

The Chairman of Negotiating Group 3 reported that agreement had been reached on the wording to be used in defining some of the categories of States that would represent special interest groups in the Council the executive organ) of the Authority. However, the voting system in the Council was still to be resolved.

Another outstanding question related to the power of the Council to approve or disapprove plans of work for sea-bed mining by outside contractors.

The Chairman of the Group of Legal Experts reported that his Group had moved forward in efforts to reword the article that defined the kinds of disputes to be handled by the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber of the proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal and who would have access to that Chamber. A new text specified that the Chamber should not infringe the prerogatives of the Authority and that it should deal only with claims concerning lack of competence or misuse of power. The Chairman had also suggested a clause prohibiting staff members of the Authority from disclosing, even after they had left its employ, any industrial secret.

Following the presentation of the reports, the Netherlands reiterated a proposal it had submitted to the Working Group of 21 which would give the Sea-Bed Authority the option to enter into a joint venture with any entity authorized to mine the deep sea-bed. It would have the right to participate in up to 20 per cent of the capital of such an undertaking. If the Authority exercised that option, the outside entity would have a similar option to join in a mining venture undertaken by the Enterprise.

All of the proposals by Negotiating Group Chairmen during the first part of the session were incorporated in a revised composite negotiating text issued in April (see p. 126). Further proposals from the Chairman and co-ordinators of the Working Group of 21 were put forward during the resumed session; they reported to the First Committee at its meeting of 22 August.

Among the issues covered in this written report were voting in the Council of the Authority, financing of the Authority's first sea-bed mining project, the scheme for taxing contractors and several matters relating to the system of exploitation.

The Chairman's report set out a new proposal on voting in the Council, under which substantive matters would be divided into two categories. One category of questions of substance would be decided by a two-thirds majority of members present and voting, provided that a majority of the entire membership of the Council was included. The other category would be decided by a two-thirds majority as long as a certain number of Council members did not vote against. The number was not specified; proposals ranged from 5 to 10.

With regard to financing, a proposal suggested by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 2 would place in the convention an assurance that the Enterprise would have enough money to exploit its initial mine site. Half of this money would be in the form of long-term, interest-free loans to be advanced by all parties to the convention, based upon the scale of assessments for the United Nations regular budget. The rest would come from interest-bearing loans that would be guaranteed by all States parties, in accordance with the same scale.

On the financial terms of contracts between the Authority and sea-bed miners, the Chairman of Negotiating Group 2 said that he had revised his earlier proposals on the amounts of money which public and private mining entities would be obliged to pay to the Authority out of their proceeds from mining.

On the exploitation system, the Chairman of Negotiating Group 1 submitted a number of revised proposals but said that the essential characteristics of the system set out in earlier proposals were unchanged. He added that there were still unresolved issues, such as transfer of technology from sea-bed mining companies to the Enterprise and to developing countries.

On the settlement of disputes, the Chairman of the Group of Legal Experts reported that the Group had arrived at a consensus on the means of selection of members of the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber. It was agreed that the members were to be selected by majority vote of the Law of the Sea Tribunal from among members of the Tribunal. The Assembly—the supreme organ of the Authority— would have the right to adopt general recommendations about representation in the Chamber of the world's legal systems and the geographical distribution of seats.

Other agreed additions would make the Authority liable for unauthorized disclosure of secret data by its staff and would give the Chamber jurisdiction over all questions about the Authority's liability.

Work of the Second Committee and its negotiating groups

On 24 April, the Second Committee met to hear reports of the Chairmen of Negotiating Groups 4, 6 and 7.

Reporting on the one informal meeting held by Negotiating Group 4, its Chairman said that the suggestions he had submitted the previous year⁷ regarding access by land-locked States and States with special geographical characteristics to the exclusive-economic-zone fisheries of nearby coastal States appeared to offer a substantially improved prospect of consensus. In the Second Committee's discussion, most of the approximately 50 States commenting on the work of this Group endorsed the Chairman's assessment, though some voiced reservations on the proposal. Objections to including it in a revised negotiating text were expressed by Ecuador, Nepal, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Romania, Spain, the United Arab Emirates, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The Chairman's formulations were included in the revised negotiating text issued after the first part of the session (see p. 127).

The Chairman of Negotiating Group 6 told the Second Committee on 24 April that his Group had studied a number of new informal proposals on the definition of the outer limits of the continental shelf but that none had achieved consensus. He added that there had been agreement to set up a small group on the subject, but no agreement had been reached on its composition.

On 27 April, the Chairman presented to the Conference new proposals concerning the definition of the continental shelf, the exercise of coastal States' rights over the shelf, and revenue sharing with the international community in regard to the outer shelf. These were subsequently included in the revised negotiating text (see p. 127).

At the resumed eighth session, the continental shelf was again discussed in Negotiating Group 6 as well as in a small group known as the Group of 38. According to a report by the Chairman, the items considered by the latter group were: the outer limit of the continental shelf; payments and contributions to the international community with respect to the continental shelf beyond 200 nautical miles; submarine oceanic ridges; the proposed Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf; and a problem specific to Sri Lanka. The Chairman reported on a number of proposals on these items examined by these groups.

China had proposed an amendment to article 76 of the revised negotiating text to specify that the natural prolongation of the territory of the coastal State would be to a limit not exceeding the outer edge of the continental margin.

Several proposals had been presented to limit the extension of the continental shelf in areas having submarine oceanic ridges.

Singapore had suggested an amendment to require the limits of the shelf established by the coastal State to be in accordance with the recommendations of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, although the coastal State could deviate from those recommendations in consultation with the Commission and in accordance with any mutually agreed decision.

Austria had submitted an informal draft resolution by which the Conference would urge coastal States to facilitate participation by landlocked and geographically disadvantaged States of the same region or subregion in the exploration and exploitation of the natural resources of the shelf.

Regarding payments and contributions with respect to exploitation of the outer continental shelf, Afghanistan, Austria, Bolivia, Lesotho, Nepal, Singapore, Uganda, the Upper Volta and Zambia had submitted an informal suggestion according- to which such payments would be made to a proposed common heritage fund. The creation of such a fund, which 'would receive from the coastal States a portion of the proceeds from the exploitation of the non-living resources in the exclusive economic zone, had been proposed by a number of land-locked States.

Sri Lanka had revised an earlier proposal aimed at enabling it to claim a broader continental shelf than would otherwise be possible under the convention. It called for an additional method of delimitation applicable to Sri Lanka's geological and geomorphological conditions.

On 24 April, the Chairman of Negotiating Group 7 introduced in the Second Committee his report on the work of the Group in regard to the delimitation of maritime boundaries between adjacent and opposite States, and settlement of disputes thereon. He said that, apart from two drafting changes, none of the proposals made in the Group had secured a consensus. On the question of delimitation as it concerned the exclusive economic zone and the continental shelf, there was a division between those who argued that a line should be drawn equidistant between the countries in question and those who insisted that emphasis be placed on equitable principles in delimiting the boundary. He suggested a text according to which delimitation would be effected by agreement between the parties concerned, taking into account all relevant criteria and special circumstances in order to arrive at a solution in accordance with equitable principles, applying the equidistance rule or such other means as were appropriate in each specific case.

On interim arrangements to be made by States with maritime boundary difficulties pending a final settlement, the Chairman reported that no proposal had gained widespread and substantive support. He suggested a text requiring States to make every effort with a view to entering into provisional arrangements and to refrain from aggravating the situation or hampering in any way the reaching of a final agreement.

On procedures for settling boundary disputes, he proposed a text calling for compulsory resort to a conciliation commission. If the parties failed to reach agreement on the basis of the commission's report, they would be obligated to use other peaceful settlement procedures of their choice as provided elsewhere in the convention.

At the resumed eighth session, no new text emerged from the discussions in Negotiating Group 7 on criteria for delimitation. On interim measures to be applied pending final delimitation, the Chairman presented a revised text stipulating that, pending agreement, the States concerned were to make every effort to enter into provisional arrangements of a practical nature and, during this transitional period, not to jeopardize or hamper the reaching of the final agreement. Such arrangements were to be without prejudice to the final delimitation.

Regarding the settlement of delimitation disputes, the Chairman said that no new text had met the approval of the Group. He submitted a revision of his April proposal calling for compulsory resort to a conciliation commission.

Work of the Third Committee

The Third Committee continued its work at both parts of the eighth session, mainly in informal meetings. On 23 April, the Chairman reported to the Committee that agreement had been reached at those meetings on a revised article concerning the responsibility and liability of States in regard to damage caused by pollution and on a new article to encourage the establishment or strengthening of national marine scientific and technological research centres. The Chairman said that further negotiations would be needed on marine scientific research. The agreed articles were incorporated in the revised negotiating text issued on 28 April (see p. 129).

At the resumed eighth session, the Third Committee met formally and informally to consider pending issues relating to marine scientific research on the outer continental shelf and the settlement of disputes. It held three formal meetings to hear and consider the report of its Chairman. Introducing this report at a plenary meeting of the Conference on 24 August, the Chairman said that some of the new proposals had acquired widespread support, while on others most representatives had expressed support in substance but certain representatives had opposed them in principle, in part or as a whole.

One of the proposals which the Chairman described as having acquired widespread support was an addition to article 242 requiring each State to provide other States with an opportunity to obtain information necessary to prevent and control damage to the health and safety of persons and the environment. Another would redraft a paragraph in article 255 on steps to be taken by coastal States to facilitate research by foreign vessels in areas beyond their territorial sea.

One of the proposals on which the Chairman reported opposition by some representatives would give foreign researchers freer access to the outer continental shelf, except in areas designated by the coastal State for resource exploration or exploitation (article 246 bis). A second proposal concerning that article would prevent a coastal State from using the absence of diplomatic relations with another State as a reason for excluding that State's researchers from its exclusive economic zone or continental shelf. A third proposal in this category would give a foreign researcher a reasonable period of time to comply with his duties towards the coastal State, during which period the coastal State could require suspension of the research project (article 253). A fourth proposal would add a new category (in article 264) to the kinds of disputes required to be submitted to conciliation: cases in which a researching State alleged that a coastal State was not acting in a manner compatible with the convention when exercising its rights in regard to foreign research.

Settlement of disputes

On 27 April, the President of the Conference reported on matters relating to the settlement of law-of-the-sea disputes, as dealt with in informal plenary meetings. He said there were still outstanding issues but that one informal proposal by Yugoslavia — to include in a footnote a reference to the three countries (Bermuda, Portugal and Yugoslavia) that had offered to provide the seat of the Law of the Sea Tribunal- had been approved by the Conference in informal plenary meetings.

At the resumed session, the President reported on 24 August that agreement had been reached in the informal plenary meetings on part of the text of a proposal detailing conciliation procedures.

Final clauses

The Conference decided on 19 July that discussion of the final clauses of the draft convention would be undertaken in informal plenary meetings, to be assisted by a Group of Legal Experts. Reporting to the Conference on 24 August on the work of those meetings, the President of the Conference said that the matters had been discussed in two categories, controversial and non-controversial. The first category comprised: amendment or revision of the convention, reservations, relation to other conventions, entry into force (including consideration of a preparatory commission), a transitional provision relating to territories that had not achieved self-governing status, and denunciation of and participation in the convention. The second category comprised:

signature, ratification, status of annexes, authentic texts and a testimonium clause.

Preliminary discussions were held at the informal plenary meetings on the two categories of issues, which were then referred to the Group of Legal Experts for examination of their technical aspects. The Group, which met under the chairmanship of Jens Evensen (Norway), produced texts on signature, ratification, accession, the status of annexes, depositary of the convention and authentic texts, and then began considering some of the controversial items.

Drafting Committee

The Drafting Committee as well as its language groups continued to meet during the eighth session. In his reports to the Conference, the Chairman of the Committee said that the discussions of the language groups had centred mainly on lists of recurring words and expressions prepared by the secretariat.

Other matters

Unilateral sea-bed mining legislation

The issue of unilateral legislation to govern deep sea-bed mining was raised at the start of the eighth session, on 19 March, by Honduras as Chairman of the Group of 77 developing countries at the Conference. In the view of that Group, plans for such national laws violated international law and endangered the Conference. This position was endorsed by China, Romania and the USSR. Opposing the view were France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States, which stated that national legislation was not illegal and would be superseded by an international convention once it entered into force. Several communications on this matter were circulated during 1979.

Training of personnel from developing countries

On 19 March, the Chairman of the First Committee suggested to the Conference that the Secretary-General might analyse the likely staff requirements of the Sea-Bed Authority in its first five years, in order to ascertain what the scientific and technical training needs of developingcountry personnel would be. On 27 April, the United Kingdom suggested that, immediately following signature of the convention, a provisional training fund should be established, financed by voluntary contributions, to provide training awards for students in the disciplines identified as relevant to the needs of the Authority and its Enterprise. France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States said they would be ready to help in such training, and the USSR said it was ready to play an active part in the consideration of the question.

On 22 August, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to the Conference presented a preliminary report to the First Committee on manpower requirements of the Authority and related training needs.

Site of the Authority

Several communications concerning the future site of the Sea-Bed Authority were circulated during the eighth session, including a letter by the Latin American group endorsing the candidacy of Jamaica, and letters by the group of Islamic States endorsing the candidacy of Malta. A request that all three candidates — Fiji, Jamaica and Malta-be placed on an equal footing in the negotiating text came from the Asian group and the group of Western European and other States, as well as from the Arab group.

Revision of the negotiating text

A revised informal composite negotiating text, dated 28 April 1979, was issued shortly after the close of the first part of the eighth session and was subsequently used as the basis for negotiations at the resumed session. It represented a revision of the informal composite negotiating text issued in 1977. As in the case of previous negotiating texts, its contents were agreed by the President of the Conference, the Chairmen of the three main committees and of the Drafting Committee and the Rapporteur-General of the Conference.

The revisions in the text incorporated most of the proposals made by the Chairmen of committees and negotiating groups during the first part of the eighth session. They included the following:

- (a) all the compromise proposals suggested by the Chairmen of the three negotiating groups on First Committee matters;
- (b) the compromise on access by developing land-locked States and States with special geographical characteristics to the living resources of the exclusive economic zone, presented in April 1978 by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 4;9
- (c) the compulsory conciliation formula for settlement of disputes pertaining to the sovereign rights of States in the exclusive economic zone, presented in 1978 by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 5;¹⁰
- (d) the new suggested compromise by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 6 on the breadth of the continental shelf and on the sharing with the international community of revenue earned by coastal States from exploitation of the shelf beyond 200 miles;

- (e) a slightly revised article on delimitation of the territorial sea between adjacent and opposite States presented by the Chairman of Negotiating Group 7;
- (f) proposals informally agreed to by the Third Committee on protection and preservation of the marine environment and on the development and transfer of technology; and
- (g) an informal proposal by Yugoslavia on general provisions for the Law of the Sea Tribunal.

The revised negotiating text consisted of a preamble, 16 parts containing a total of 304 articles, a transitional provision on non-independent territories, and seven annexes. Part I dealt with the use of terms, parts II to IX with various ocean zones, part X with the rights of landlocked States, part XI with the international seabed regime and machinery, part XII with the protection and preservation of the marine environment, part XIII with marine scientific research, part XIV with the development and transfer of marine technology, and part XV with the settlement of disputes; part XVI contained the final clauses.

There were no changes in the preamble or in part I (use of terms), part II (territorial sea and contiguous zone), part III (straits used for international navigation) or part IV (archipelagic States).

In part V, on the exclusive economic zone, there were changes in articles 69 and 70. These articles dealt with the access of land-locked States and States with special geographical characteristics to fisheries in the exclusive economic zones of nearby coastal States. They stated that such States would have the right to participate, on an equitable basis, in the exploitation of an appropriate part of the surplus of the living resources of the exclusive economic zones of coastal States of the same subregion or region, taking into account the relevant economic and geographical circumstances of all the States concerned. The terms and modalities of such participation would be established by the States concerned through bilateral, subregional or regional agreements. These two articles detailed various elements to be considered when States worked out agreements on the issue, including the need to avoid harming the fishing communities or industries of the coastal State, the extent to which States concerned had access to other fisheries, the nutritional needs of the populations of the respective States and the need to avoid placing a particular burden on any single coastal State.

States with special geographical characteristics were defined as coastal States, including States bordering enclosed or semi-enclosed seas, whose geographical situation made them dependent upon the exploitation of the living resources of the exclusive economic zones of other States in the subregion or region for adequate supplies of fish for the nutritional purposes of their populations or parts thereof, and coastal States which could claim no exclusive economic zone of their own.

In part VI, on the continental shelf, there where changes in articles 76, 78 and 82.

Article 76 gave a new definition of the continental shelf. That article combined a geomorphological definition of the shelf with a clause limiting its extent to a specified distance or a combination of distance and depth. Wherever the outer edge of the continental margin lay more than 200 miles from shore, the shelf would extend up to that edge. A State would have two options for establishing the outer edge of its continental margin: one based on the thickness of sedimentary rocks beyond the foot of the continental slope and the other defined by a line drawn 60 miles beyond the foot of the continental slope. Two alternative outer limits would be fixed for States whose shelves extended beyond 200 miles: 350 miles from shore, or 100 miles beyond the line where the ocean depth reached 2,500 metres.

A paragraph provided that information on the limits of the continental shelf when it extended beyond the exclusive economic zone was to be submitted by coastal States to a Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, set up on the basis of equitable geographical representation. The Commission would make recommendations to coastal States on matters related to the establishment of the outer limits of the shelf. The limits established by the coastal State, taking account of these recommendations, would be final and binding.

Article 78 provided that the exercise of the rights of the coastal State over the continental shelf must not infringe or result in any unjustifiable interference with navigation and other rights and freedoms of other States.

Article 82, on payments and contributions to the International Sea-Bed Authority regarding the exploitation of the continental shelf beyond 200 miles, proposed a rate of payment or contribution to the Authority by coastal States that would rise from 1 per cent in the sixth year of production to a maximum of 7 per cent in the twelfth year and thereafter. This compared with a maximum rate of 5 per cent in the tenth year in the 1977 informal composite negotiating text.

There were no changes in part VII on the high seas, part VIII on the regime of islands, part IX on enclosed or semi-enclosed seas, and part X on the right of access of land-locked States to and from the sea and freedom of transit.

Part XI, on the international sea-bed Area, comprised 59 articles (articles 133 to 191) arranged in six sections. Section 1 included some general provisions on terms and scope, and section 2 set forth principles to govern activities in the Area. Section 3, which was concerned with the conduct of activities in the Area, called for co-operation in marine scientific research, conservation of natural resources and promotion of transfer of technology, as well as promotion of the effective participation of developing countries in sea-bed activities.

Section 4 dealt with the development of seabed resources and contained revised articles on policies relating to activities in the Area, production policies, the power of the Authority, the system of exploration and exploitation, and the review mechanism. Annex II to the negotiating text set out the basic conditions of exploration and exploitation, and contained a number of revisions (see below).

Section 5 concerned the proposed International Sea-Bed Authority. A statute of the Enterprise, the operating arm of the Authority, was contained in Annex III to the negotiating text. Section 6 of part XI dealt with the settlement of seabed disputes.

Article 140, in section 2, stated that activities in the sea-bed Area were to be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, with particular consideration to be given to the interests and needs of the developing countries and peoples who had not attained full independence or other self-governing status.

With regard to policies for the development of sea-bed resources, article 150 in section 4 said that they should be aimed at ensuring: the Authority's participation in revenues and the transfer of technology to the Enterprise and developing countries; the increasing availability of the minerals produced from the resources of the Area, in conjunction with minerals produced from other sources, to ensure supplies to consumers of these minerals; just and stable prices remunerative to producers and fair to consumers for minerals produced both from the resources of the Area and from other sources, and promoting equilibrium between supply and demand; the enhancing of opportunities for all States parties to participate in the development of the resources; and the protection of developing countries from adverse effects.

Article 151 dealt with production policies to be followed by the Authority in controlling the rate of extraction from the sea-bed. The basic principle was that sea-bed production of nickel would not exceed 60 per cent of the annual increase in the total world consumption of this metal. In practice, the Authority would calculate annually a sea-bed production ceiling for nickel, on the basis of trends over the previous 15 years. It would then authorize plans of work of sea-bed producers up to that level but not beyond.

Article 152, on the exercise of power by the Authority, provided that the Authority was to avoid discrimination in the exercise of its powers and functions, and that special consideration for developing countries, including the land-locked and geographically disadvantaged, would be permitted.

By article 155, the entire system of exploitation was to be subject to review 20 years after the Authority had approved the first plan of work for sea-bed activities. If the Review Conference failed to agree on another sea-bed system, the Assembly of the Authority might decide that no new sea-bed activities would be approved, whether carried out by the Enterprise or otherwise. This would not affect activities already approved.

Section 5, article 156, regarding the site of the Authority, retained the mention of Jamaica but a footnote was added referring to the offers by Fiji and Malta.

Among the new powers and functions of the Assembly, in article 160, would be: the election of the Governing Board and the Director-General of the Enterprise; adoption of the financial regulations; initiation of studies and recommendations to promote international cooperation in sea-bed activities; and adoption of rules, regulations and procedures for the equitable sharing of financial and economic benefits derived from these activities, taking into consideration the needs of developing States and peoples who had not attained full independence or other self-governing status.

Article 161, on the Council of the Authority, spelled out the five categories of States that would constitute the 36-member executive organ: four of the countries with the largest seabed investments; four major consuming countries; four major land-based producers of the minerals to be obtained from sea-bed nodules; six developing countries with special interests, such as the land-locked and the least developed; and 18 elected in accordance with equitable geographical distribution.

Regarding the Council's environmental powers, a new provision of article 162 would permit it to issue emergency orders for the adjustment of operations so as to prevent serious harm to the marine environment from sea-bed activities. Another provision would authorize the Council to disapprove sea-bed mining in areas where serious harm to a unique environment might occur.

The Council would have two commissions, an Economic Planning Commission and a Le al and Technical Commission (articles 163 to 165).

Article 168, on the international character and responsibilities of the Authority's Secretariat, dealt separately with classical violations of discipline and with those involving disclosure of industrial secrets or information. A provision was added extending the non-disclosure rule beyond the time when staff members left the Authority. The new text provided for action by an administrative tribunal in classical cases of disciplinary measures and by an appropriate tribunal in cases involving disclosure of secrets.

The funds of the Authority would include assessed contributions made by States parties, funds transferred from the Enterprise, receipts of the Authority arising from sea-bed activities, and loans and voluntary contributions States parties or other entities (article 171).

Article 172 stipulated that the Authority's Secretary-General would prepare and submit to the Council the annual budget of the Authority.

By article 173, the contributions of States parties would be paid into a special account; any funds remaining after payment of the Authority's administrative expenses could be distributed through the benefit-sharing scheme, to provide funds to the Enterprise or compensate developing countries which had suffered adverse effects from sea-bed mining.

With regard to section 6 on the settlement of sea-bed disputes, the central element would be the establishment of a Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber as an organ of the proposed Law of the Sea Tribunal.

All provisions relating to the jurisdiction of the Chamber, in article 187, were arranged on the basis of categories of disputes. Two provisions would empower the Chamber to handle disputes relating to the interpretation or application of the sea-bed part of the convention and to the violation of those articles or of rules, regulations and procedures for sea-bed activities. Two other provisions dealt with contractual disputes. Depending on the type of dispute, the parties might be States, the Authority or sea-bed contractors

Revised article 188 provided for the submission of disputes to an ad hoc chamber of the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber as a substitute for arbitration. A new paragraph stated that disputes over sea-bed contracts would be submitted to binding commercial or other arbitration if a contract between the parties to the dispute so provided and if the parties so requested.

Only the Assembly or the Council, not their subsidiary bodies, could request an advisory opinion of the Sea-Bed Disputes Chamber (article 189).

Article 190 set out limits to the jurisdiction of the Chamber with respect to the decisions of the Authority. Its jurisdiction would be confined to three areas: determining whether the application of the regulations and procedures to an individual case would conflict with contractual or conventional obligations; settling claims concerning lack of competence or misuse of power; and considering damage claims resulting from failure to comply with obligations.

A number of revisions were included in annex II to the negotiating text, on basic conditions of prospecting, exploration and exploitation. These concerned such matters as: the reservation of mine sites; adoption by the Authority of rules, regulations and procedures for exploration and exploitation; and the financial terms of contracts, including the tax scheme for sea-bed miners. Other changes were made in provisions on mining by contractors, including qualifications and selection of applicants, approval of plans of work, transfer of data from contractors to the Authority, and penalties for violation of contract terms. In regard to mining by the Enterprise, the annex included revised articles on the transfer of technology from contractors and the financing of the Enterprise.

Part XII of the revised negotiating text, on protection and preservation of the marine environment, comprised eleven sections (articles 192 to 237). By revised article 235, on the responsibility and liability of States for environmental matters, States would co-operate in developing international law in that sphere with the objective of assuring prompt and adequate compensation in respect of damage caused by pollution of the marine environment.

There were no changes in part XIII on marine scientific research.

In part XIV, dealing with development and transfer of marine technology, the only change was in article 275. It aimed at encouraging the establishment and strengthening of national marine scientific and technological centres.

In part XV on settlement of disputes, a revised article 296 provided that there would be no compulsory and binding adjudication for disputes relating to the exercise of the sovereign rights of the coastal State in the exclusive economic zone. However, a coastal State would be obliged to submit to conciliation in three categories of disputes: when the living resources of the zone were endangered by inadequate conservation and management measures; when there was a refusal to determine the surplus of the living resources that might be allocated to other States beyond the capacity of the coastal State to exploit them; or when there was an arbitrary refusal to allocate the surplus to others.

There was no change in part XVI, containing the final clauses. Of the four annexes dealing with the settlement of disputes, only annex V had changes. Article 1, containing the statute of the Law of the Sea Tribunal, left a blank for the seat of the Tribunal, and a footnote mentioned that Bermuda, Portugal and Yugoslavia had offered their countries as the site. This article added that the Tribunal would have the right to sit elsewhere whenever desirable. (The other annexes on dispute settlement concerned conciliation (annex IV), arbitration (annex VI) and special arbitration for disputes relating to fisheries, environmental matters, research and navigation (annex VII).)

Decisions of the General Assembly

On 9 November 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/20, by which it approved the convening of a two-part ninth session of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1980, from 27 February to 4 April in New York and from 28 July to 29 August at Geneva. The Assembly also requested a study by the Secretary-General on the training needs of developing countries in deep-sea mining and related activities.

Resolution 34/20 was adopted without vote. It was sponsored by Bulgaria, Canada, Lesotho, Pakistan, Paraguay and the Philippines.

In a separate action, the Assembly decided to continue for 1980 the existing arrangements with regard to the status of the President of the Conference. These arrangements, first approved by the Assembly in 1978,¹¹ were for the President to receive an honorarium of $50,000 for the year and to be accorded the status of a United Nations official for the purpose of privileges and immunities. This action, contained in decision 34/407, was adopted by the Assembly, without vote, on 9 November 1979, on an oral proposal by the Assembly President.

Chapter IV

Questions concerning the uses of atomic energy

Effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its twenty-eighth session at Vienna from 11 to 15 June 1979 and discussed, on the basis of drafts prepared by the Secretariat, the scientific annexes of a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its 1981 session. The Committee reiterated a plea to agencies and Member States for more information on exposures from various sources of radiation for use in preparing its report.

The Committee reviewed available information on: dose assessment models; population exposures from natural radiation sources, both unmodified by human activity and technologically modified, from radon and its decay products, from medical radiological procedures and from doses of radiation to workers exposed in the course of their work; contamination from nuclear explosions; and doses resulting from nuclear power production. The Committee examined the effects of ionizing radiation, including genetic effects, effects resulting locally from radiation, other than those of neoplastic diseases, and effects of irradiation on the life span. Current knowledge was also reviewed about doseresponse relations for radiation-induced cancer on the basis of available models, with special reference to their influence on estimation of the risk at low doses and dose rates. A comprehensive paper about contamination of the environment by caesium-137 was also considered and the Committee decided to request the Secretariat to prepare a paper on interaction of ionizing radiation with other agents encountered in the environment for inclusion in the Committee's report to the Assembly. Finally, the Committee noted its continuing work on a comprehensive document on selected radio-nuclides for the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The Assembly, at its thirty-fourth (1979) session, referred the report of the Scientific Committee to the Special Political Committee for consideration. On 16 October, the latter Committee approved without vote a resolution on the effects of atomic radiation, sponsored and orally amended by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Chile, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Indonesia, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Samoa, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay.

On 9 November, the Assembly adopted the text, also without vote, as resolution 34/12. The Assembly thereby took note of the Scientific Committee's report, expressed concern about the potentially harmful effects on current and future generations resulting from radiation levels, and expressed awareness for the continued need for compiling information about atomic radiation, as well as ionizing radiation from all other sources, and for analysing its effects on man and his environment.

The Assembly commended the Scientific Committee for its valuable contribution to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and requested it to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of ionizing radiation. The Assembly noted with satisfaction the growing co-operation between the Committee and UNEP, requested

UNEP to continue to support the Committee's work and to disseminate its findings, and commended the Committee for its work on selected radio-nuclides. After expressing appreciation for assistance rendered to the Committee by Member States, specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and nongovernmental organizations and inviting their increased co-operation, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's request for information, in particular data on exposures from various sources of radiation, to assist it in the preparation of its 1981 report.

A/34/626. Report of Special Political Committee.

Resolution 34/12, as recommended by Special Political Committee, A/34/626, adopted without vote by Assembly on 9 November 1979, meeting 61.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 33/5 of 3 November 1978, in which it, inter alia, reaffirmed the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work, Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation.

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need for compiling information about atomic radiation as well as ionizing radiation from all other sources and for analysing its effects on man and his environment,

Noting the intention of the Scientific Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session a report reviewing, inter alia, the dose assessment models, natural sources of radiation, technical modified exposures to natural radiation, radon and its decay products, contamination from nuclear explosions, radioactive contamination due to nuclear power production, medical irradiation, doses from occupational exposure, dose-response relationships for radiation-induced cancer, late non-tumorous consequences of whole-body irradiation, non-stochastic effects resulting from localized irradiation and genetic effects of radiation,

- 1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has made since its inception to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation:
- Requests the Scientific Committee to continue 'its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the doses, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;
- 3. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;
- 4. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the Scientific Committee's work and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public:
- 5. Commends the Scientific Committee for its work on selected radio-nuclides and on its objective of preparing a comprehensive document on that subject for the United Nations Environment Programme;
- Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and nongovernmental organizations, and invites them to increase their co-operation in this field;
- 7. Endorses the Scientific Committee's request that Member States and the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned should continue to supply to the Committee all relevant information, in particular data on exposures from various sources of radiation, which would greatly assist the Committee in the preparation of its report to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session.

Annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The annual report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) for 1978 was formally presented to the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth (1979) session by the Director-General of IAEA on 2 November.

The Director-General informed the Assembly that new orders for nuclear power plants continued to decline, although it was recognized that shrinking world reserves and rising costs would eventually eliminate petroleum as a source of energy, and that the only significant choices, until at least the end of the century, for the production of electric power were coal, nuclear energy and, in some places, hydropower. It was imperative that Governments consider realistic energy policies, which were being badly slowed by widespread opposition which was misleading and frightening the public. A healthy nuclear industry in industrial countries was indispensable for the expansion of nuclear power in developing countries, the Director-General said.

He pointed out that there was scope for close co-operation and collaboration as energy problems in many aspects were currently being dealt with by a number of organizations which were concentrated in Vienna. The Director-General assured the Assembly that IAEA was making every effort to strengthen mutual co-operation.

Turning to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,² he said that, while many of the parties to the Treaty still had to conclude the requisite safeguards agreements, 64 had done so; the remainder did not operate any nuclear facilities. The safeguards operation as a whole was becoming more effective and the Board of Governors of IAEA had concluded that all nuclear material under Agency safeguards in 1978 remained in use for peaceful activities or was otherwise accounted for.

The Director-General expressed concern that there had been reports that a fourth country was building a plant to produce unsafeguarded enriched uranium. This would reverse a trend towards bringing world-wide civilian nuclear activities under IAEA safeguards. He then referred to a significant expansion of the Agency's nuclear safety programme and announced the convening of a major international conference on nuclear safety to be held in Stockholm, Sweden, in 1980.

The Agency's programme of assistance to developing countries, together with safeguards, remained an important pillar of its work. In more than 40 countries, 60 projects were under way to improve crop yields, produce new crop varieties with increased proteins, and combat animal diseases and insect pests.

The Director-General also drew attention to examples of international co-operation which included: a series of workshops to study the possibility of constructing an international fusion reactor of the Tokamak type, initiated by the USSR and being evaluated by the Commission of the European communities, Japan, the USSR and the United States, intended to prepare a project for demonstrating the technical feasibility of generating electricity by nuclear fusion; finalization of the International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation (INFCE) in 1980; and conclusion of the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, negotiations on which were concluded on 26 October 1979 at Vienna, to be opened for signature in March 1980.

On 2 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/11, by which it took note of the report of IAEA and the Director-General's statement. Bearing in mind the special needs of the developing countries for IAEA technical assistance in order to benefit effectively from the application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development, it noted with satisfaction IAEA's efforts to strengthen its technical assistance to developing countries and urged all States to increase their voluntary contributions to IAEA.

The Assembly also noted with satisfaction the conclusion of the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and commended IAEA for efforts to ensure safe and secure use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, noting with satisfaction the improvement of its safeguards system. The Assembly noted with appreciation the expansion and strengthening of IAEA's nuclear safety programmes, and urged all States to support the Agency's endeavours in furthering the peaceful uses of nuclear power and improving the effectiveness of safeguards.

The Assembly noted with satisfaction IAEA'S work in keeping under review global uranium resources, production and demand, in expanding its International Nuclear Information System and in setting up the International Tokamak Reactor workshops, as well as its assistance to Member States in assessing nuclear power's role in energy development, its progress towards 'establishment of an international plutoniumstorage system, and its action on the international management of spent fuel. The Assembly expressed hope for the early conclusion of consideration of its 1978 recommendation³ concerning an increase in the representation of the areas of Africa and of the Middle East and South Asia on IAEA's Board of Governors, a matter to be considered in December 1979 by the IAEA General Resolution 34/11 was adopted, without a vote, on a proposal by Hungary and Saudi Arabia. The sponsors accepted an Indian amendment to add to the preambular paragraph referring to the special needs of developing countries for IAEA technical assistance the notation that they might thereby benefit effectively from the application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes.

During the debate in the Assembly, India expressed dissatisfaction that IAEA was financing limited non-proliferation activities rather than comprehensive ones which, in its opinion, were required to arrest the increase in nuclear weapons. Pakistan also felt that there were glaring inequalities in IAEA's safeguards.

The German Democratic Republic, Nigeria, Poland and the USSR were among those which expressed concern at reports of installations for the production of enriched uranium which were not subject to IAEA's control.

Wide support was expressed for IAEA's efforts to increase its nuclear safety programme; the United States said it was obvious more work needed to be done and urged those Member States able to do so to make contributions for this purpose. Ireland, on behalf of the European Community, said nuclear safety, though essentially the responsibility of national authorities, should be developed and enlarged bilaterally and multilaterally. Yugoslavia stated that IAEA should expand its training programme of protection against the effects of radiation in developing countries. Sweden would have had the Assembly call for a strengthening of international efforts with regard to safety and protection of the environment.

Pursuant to a 1978 Assembly request that all States communicate their views on the holding of an international conference on international co-operation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy⁴ the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly in 1979 on the replies received.

As at 19 December 1979, 26 States had responded, 14 of which had already replied to a 1977 invitation for comments.⁵ Those replying to the second request were Australia, Austria, Barbados, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, Indonesia, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Sweden, Switzerland, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay. Thus, inclusive of earlier replies from 32 States,⁶ a total of 44 had responded.

On 29 November, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and decided to convene an International Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy, in principle by 1983. The Assembly invited all States to communicate their views on the agenda, date and duration of the Conference to the Secretary-General and requested him to submit a report on these views to the Assembly in 1980.

This text, adopted without vote as resolution 34/63, was sponsored by Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Indonesia, Iraq, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Qatar, Romania, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia.

Introducing the text, Yugoslavia said the Conference should meet the international community's need to find, on the basis of equality, solutions promoting unhampered development of nuclear technology, to overcome the current system of monopoly, to eliminate restrictive practices and to establish an acceptable democratic system of control over the use of nuclear Hungary, Poland and the USSR felt the convening of a special conference unnecessary, as questions regarding international co-operation in the field of atomic energy could be discussed effectively at a conference similar to the 1977 IAEA International Conference on Nuclear Power and its Fuel Cycle⁷ and the second such conference planned for 1981 in Salzburg, Austria.

Japan also drew attention to the 1981 IAEA conference, the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons in mid-1980, and the fact that the results of INFCE would be known early in the same year; as these conferences had the same purpose as the one proposed, their results should be awaited. The role of IAEA should also be remembered and reaffirmed. Australia. Canada, New Zealand and the United States shared Japan's position on awaiting the outcome of the other related conferences before making provisions for another conference.

Ireland, on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, supported the convening of a conference and stressed that IAEA should play an appropriate role; the Netherlands, however, doubted the wisdom of fixing the Conference's date when diverging views were still held on its principles and objectives. Sweden said safety and environmental protection should be among the matters considered at the Conference.

Chapter V

Strengthening of international security

The implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security¹ was again considered by the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session. The Secretary-General issued reports containing Governments' views on this subject as well as on non-interference in the internal affairs of States. The Assembly adopted resolutions on 14 December by which it made a number of recommendations to implement the Declaration (resolution 34/100), decided to set up a working group in 1980 to prepare a draft declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States (resolution 34/101), and invited the views of States on ways of enhancing good neighbourliness (resolution 34/99). In addition, the Secretary-General received numerous communications from Member States on various aspects of strengthening international security, many of them addressed to specific political disputes or problems.

The Assembly also adopted resolution 34/103 dealing with a new agenda item, the inadmissibility of the policy of hegemonism in international relations, by which it condemned that policy.

Details of these and other actions are given in the following subchapters.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

Reports and communications

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly in 1979 the replies he had received from 22 Governments to a request he had made in March 1979 for information and suggestions on measures to be taken to implement the Declaration on strengthening international security. His request to them had been made pursuant to a resolution of 15 December 1978 by which the Assembly had asked for a report on the subject.² The following States had responded: Barbados, Brazil, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Kuwait, Malta, Mauritius, Mongolia, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Suriname, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yemen.

The Secretary-General also submitted the views of 22 Governments that had responded to his invitation to express their views on ways to assure greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States, addressed to Member States pursuant to another Assembly request of 15 December 1978.³ Comments had been received from Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, the German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Jamaica, Jordan, Peru, Qatar, Seychelles, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United States and Yugoslavia.

A number of communications were addressed by Member States to the Secretary-General in 1979 to be circulated as official documents of the General Assembly and/or the Security Council under this subject heading. Many of these were from Democratic Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam, referring to the situation in South-East Asia (see p. 271). Letters from Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Mongolia and the USSR questioned the credentials of the representatives of Democratic Kampuchea to the Assembly (see p. 290).

Communications of 2 and 3 January from Poland and Romania transmitted, respectively, a resolution adopted by the Polish Parliament on 21 December 1978 summarizing Poland's activities in support of the Assembly's 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace,4 and an appeal by the Grand National Assembly of Romania to all parliaments, Governments and peoples to develop co-operation, friendship and understanding for deepening detente, strengthening international security, halting the arms race, proceeding to disarmament and ensuring a lasting peace. Poland, on 29 November, transmitted a letter of 23 November from its Minister for Foreign Affairs on measures initiated to implement the 1978 Declaration. On 1 December, Romania transmitted an account of the activities and objectives of the Romanian Communist Party presented by its President to the Party's twelfth Congress, held at Bucharest from 19 to 23 November.

A letter of 13 February from the German Democratic Republic annexed appeals of a special session of the World Peace Council, held at Berlin from 2 to 5 February, for a halt to the arms race and for negotiations by the five nuclear powers on banning all nuclear weapons.

Bolivia, on 13 February, transmitted a Government statement marking the centenary on 14 February of the war with Chile in which Bolivia lost its sea-coast. Mexico and Panama, by a joint letter of 8 October, transmitted the texts of addresses by the Chairman of the Latin American group of States at the United Nations and by the President of Mexico, delivered on 27 September at a meeting in New York of the regional group in honour of the Mexican President.

The communiques of the Committee of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Warsaw Treaty member States, ado ted at its meetings in Budapest (14 and 15 May) and Berlin (5 and 6 December), were transmitted by Hungary and the German Democratic Republic on 22 May and 7 December. On 18 September, Poland brought to the Assembly's attention an appeal of 1 September by the Polish people to the peoples and parliaments of the world, on the fortieth anniversary of the outbreak of the Second World War, to end wars; it also transmitted the text of an address on that anniversary by the First Secretary of the Central Committee of the Polish United Workers' Party.

Messages of 2 and 4 June from the King of Morocco to the current President of the Organization of African Unity (OAU). transmitted to the Secretary-General on 14 June, concerned Morocco's dispute with Algeria, and a letter of 16 August annexed a message of 8 August to the Secretary-General from the Moroccan Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation, with regard to the debates on Western Sahara by OAU in July.

A letter of 26 November from the President of the National Council of the National Front of the German Democratic Republic was transmitted the following day by that country's representative expressing support for the policy of detente. Czechoslovakia annexed to a letter of 23 November appeals for disarmament by the; parliamentary representatives of the Warsaw Treaty member States, addressed to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) countries and to parliaments of all countries, and a communique of the consultative meeting of those representatives held in Prague on 16 and 17 October.

Sri Lanka transmitted a communique of 25 June on current developments in Nicaragua, issued by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, and, by a letter of 6 July, transmitted documents of the Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau held at Colombo from 4 to 9 June. On 1 and 16 October, Cuba transmitted the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September, and the communique issued at the close of an Extraordinary Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries held in New York from 4 to 6 October.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security was considered, as in previous years, in the Assembly's First Committee. On 14 December 1979, on its recommendation, the Assembly adopted three resolutions related to this question.

By the first—resolution 34/99 on developing and strengthening good neighbourliness between States- the Assembly called on all States to promote good neighbourliness in their mutual relations. It invited Governments to communicate their views and suggestions on good neighbourliness and on ways to enhance it, and also invited United Nations organizations to submit information on their activities relevant to the development of good neighbourliness. The Secretary-General was requested to report in 1981 on the replies he received.

Resolution 34/99 was adopted without a vote, having been similarly approved on 7 December by the First Committee. Its sponsors were Bangladesh, Burundi, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Honduras, the Ivory Coast, Lesotho, Mauritania, Morocco, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Turkey, Uruguay, Yugoslavia and Zaire.

Romania, introducing the resolution, said United Nations examination of the principle of good neighbourliness could contribute to the establishment of a political and legal definition of the concept, the generalization of certain rules of conduct between States, and the strengthening of world-wide peace and security.

Explaining its position on the resolution, India expressed doubts about the utility of a text which simply urged Member States to adhere to the Charter of the United Nations, an unobjectionable but unnecessary sentiment. Cyprus said it would have liked to see added to the text a specific appeal to Member States to conform to the principles and purposes of the United Nations. Austria expressed regret at the absence of a reference to the principle of free exchange of ideas and information and facilitation of contacts between individuals of neighbouring countries, and doubted that elaborating new legal norms would enhance good relations. Greece endorsed the resolution out of support for the principle of good neighbourliness and because the text did not seek acceptance of unilateral views.

The second text, resolution 34/100, concerned implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security. By adopting it, the Assembly called on all States to contribute to the implementation and further elaboration of the Declaration's provisions. It urged all Security Council members, especially the permanent ones, urgently to consider and to take all necessary measures for ensuring respect for Charter provisions — particularly those in Chapter VII, — which dealt with threats to and breaches of the peace and with acts of aggression⁵ —in the effective implementation of the Council's decisions on maintaining international peace and security, by strengthening States' confidence in the United Nations and in the Council's effectiveness.

The Assembly called upon all States to adhere fully to the Charter's purposes and principles and to observe the principles of national independence, sovereignty and sovereign equality, territorial integrity, non-intervention and non-interference, the right of all States and peoples to determine their political systems and pursue economic, social and cultural development without intimidation, hindrance or pressure, sover-eighty over natural resources, inviolability of international frontiers, non-use of force or threat of force and non-recognition of situations brought about thereby, and peaceful settlement of disputes. It reaffirmed its opposition to threat or use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation or coercion which attempted to violate State sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security or the right of a State freely to dispose of its natural resources. It invited all States to reject any support for, or encouragement of, any intervention or interference in the internal or external affairs of States and to refuse recognition of situations brought about by the threat or use of force. The Assembly also called upon all States to refrain from any act which might hinder the relaxation of international tension, impede the settlement of conflicts, hamper the implementation of Assembly recommendations for disarmament and postpone the implementation of the new international economic order.

The Assembly reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination or occupation to achieve selfdetermination and independence, and urged Member States to increase support for national liberation movements and to implement United Nations resolutions on the elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid. The Assembly reaffirmed the provisions of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace 6 and invited the permanent members of the Security Council and the Ocean's major maritime users to serve on the committee preparing for a 1981 Conference on the Indian Ocean. It also commended the convening in 1980 of the Madrid meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, expressing hope that the Conference would result in further strengthening security and co-operation in Europe in all spheres, including arms reduction and a halt to the arms race. It welcomed the recommendation of the September 1979 Havana Conference of non-aligned countries for a meeting in 1980 of Mediterranean countries - those participating in the Madrid Conference and the non-aligned- to prepare for the Conference and to launch co-operation projects. It also urged all States to co-operate in applying a decision of the Havana Conference on transforming the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation.

The Assembly requested all States, particularly the developed ones, to participate actively in United Nations efforts and in global negotiations leading to implementation of the new international economic order. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare in 1980 a report, with the help of a Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, on the extent of implementation of the Declaration and on actions which the Assembly should take to secure full compliance with it.

Resolution 34/100 was adopted by a recorded vote of 104 to 2, with 24 abstentions. The First Committee had approved the text on 7 December by 94 votes to 2, with 24 abstentions. The sponsors were Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Burundi, the Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guyana, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Qatar, Romania, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Yugoslavia, Zaire and Zambia. At New Zealand's suggestion, the sponsors changed a preambular reference taking note of the ninth, rather than the tenth, anniversary of the 1970 Declaration.

Cyprus, introducing the resolution on implementation of the Declaration, warned that the impotence forced on the United Nations set the stage for future world tragedy if nothing was done to arrest that course.

Canada, explaining its abstention, said the resolution was selective and partial and omitted matters of importance, such as protecting human rights and strengthening the United Nations for promoting peace-keeping and developing international law. The omission of a reference to human rights and to the free flow of information was also a matter of concern to Austria, Costa Rica, Ireland (on behalf of the members of the European Community) and Sweden.

The references to recommendations concerning the Mediterranean taken at the Havana Conference of non-aligned countries were objected to: by Finland, which said the recommendations were not supported by all parties in the respective regions; by Ireland, on behalf of the member States of the European Community, which could not accept mention of controversial decisions taken outside the United Nations that they did not endorse; by Turkey, which said it had not been consulted on the proposal for a regional meeting; and by the United States, which did not share all conclusions of the Havana Conference. Objections were voiced on behalf of the European Community members and by Costa Rica, Finland, Spain and Turkey in regard to the paragraph by which the Assembly commended the convening of the Madrid Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe; Ireland, for the European Community countries, said the provision interfered with issues falling within the competence of the participating States and sought to prejudge the content of the Conference.

The European Community States, along with Finland, Spain, Turkey and the United States, also had doubts about the advisability and cost of employing governmental experts. The USSR, which supported the resolution, proposed in this connexion that the assistance required be obtained from missions of Member States to the United Nations.

Albania, explaining why it had not taken part in the vote on this resolution, said that, since the international situation had become more tense, it could not share the view that the Declaration on international security had played an important role. Moreover, it did not share the opinion set out in the text about the role of the Security Council's permanent members, since the superpowers could not be trusted to act in defence of the Charter. Nor could the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe be held up as a model for strengthening international peace and security. As to the references to the Mediterranean, Albania did not believe in proposals for zones of peace.

The third resolution of 14 December-resolution 34/10—concerned non-interference in the internal affairs of States. The General Assembly thereby reaffirmed that a declaration on the subject would be an important contribution to the elaboration of principles for strengthening equitable co-operation and friendly relations among States. It expressed hope that negotiations would be intensified with a view to the adoption in 1980 of a declaration on that subject. To that end it decided to set up at the beginning of its 1980 regular session an ad hoc working group of the First Committee, open to all United Nations Member States.

Resolution 34/101 was adopted by a recorded vote of 106 to 11, with 14 abstentions. The First Committee approved the text on 7 December by 94 votes to 11, with 15 abstentions. Introduced by Guyana, it was also sponsored by Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Cuba, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Lesotho, Madagascar, Romania, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

The text incorporated an oral revision by the sponsors adding the words "Review of the" to the title of the agenda item under which the matter was to be taken up in 1980. The new title would thus be "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security."

By this resolution, the Assembly took note of a draft declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in internal affairs of States: This draft was submitted to the First Committee in December by Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Cuba, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Guyana, Madagascar, Sri Lanka, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

Under the terms of the draft declaration, the General Assembly would declare that non-intervention and non-interference in the internal or external affairs of States included the following principles:

No State or other political or economic agency or institution had the right to intervene or interfere directly or indirectly, for any reason, in the affairs of other States. All forms of interference in or threats against any State would be condemned as contrary to the Charter. Member States would reiterate their commitment not to intervene against, and to respect fully, the national independence, sovereignty, unity, territorial integrity and equal security of other States. States and peoples had the inalienable right to determine freely, and without interference, their own political, economic, cultural and social system, foreign policy and foreign relations which promoted peace, friendly relations and national interests. Every State had the right and duty to participate equally in solving international issues and was free to develop relations not involving interference in the affairs of others. No State or group of States could use force or any other pressure, intimidation, subversion, vilification or other acts to disrupt the political, social or economic order of other States, or cause unrest or disorder. The use of force or any other means to deprive peoples of their national identity and cultural heritage violated their rights and the principle of non-intervention.

Every State had the sovereign and inalienable right to determine freely its own economic system and develop its international economic relations in accordance with the will of its people without outside interference, coercion or threat. To that end, no State should be subjected to action which denied it the right to exercise permanent sovereignty over its natural resources or otherwise limited its ability or right to restructure its society. Attempts to influence a State's chosen path of economic development by denying or withholding economic assistance, or by influencing private or multilateral lending agencies to do so, would be contrary to the principles of noninterference. Discriminatory protectionist measures directed against exports of developing countries as a means of pressure would constitute interference. No State or other political or economic agency was to interfere in the sovereign right of States to regulate their foreign economic activity and exercise their authority over foreign investment within their national jurisdiction. Any unilateral economic reprisal or blockade by a State or group of States against another would constitute intervention and interference.

Every State must ensure against conduct in its territory, or in territories for which it was responsible, aimed at subverting the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of another State. Accordingly, every State had an obligation to take measures to prevent any hostile act or activity from taking place in its territory and directed against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of another State. It had the duty to prevent the recruitment of mercenaries in its territory and to deny them any aid, including equipment and transit. Any form of interference, overt or covert, direct or indirect, by a State or group of States directed at another, and any military, political, cultural or economic interference by a State in the internal affairs of another, regardless of the differences in their political, economic and social systems, was contrary to the principles of non-interference and non-intervention.

Every State had the right to develop fully its system of information and mass media as an integral part of its national progress and with the aim of realizing its right to inform and to be informed in an objective and integrated manner. To that end, no State or group of States was to interfere with the right of States to develop their information system and combat the monopolizing of information. States were to respect the right to use information media to make known and to defend State interests, aspirations and political, moral and cultural values and the right to be informed in a rapid, objective and complete manner. States were to promote the exchange of information under conditions of equality, and to endeavour to ensure the spread of authentic and objective information in their territories. They had the right and duty to combat the dissemination of false or distorted news which could be interpreted as interference and harmful to friendly relations. States were to refrain from any defamatory campaign, vilification or hostile propaganda for influencing the political, economic and social development of others.

States would reconfirm their obligation to observe, promote and respect all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to realize the full dignity and worth of the human person. International community efforts to accord priority to causes and cases recognized by the General Assembly of massive and flagrant violations of human rights would not be considered as interference in internal affairs. The exploitation and distortion of human rights issues as a means of exerting pressure, or the creation of distrust and disorder, would constitute interference.

Under the draft declaration, the Assembly would also declare that these principles of non-interference were in accordance, with the Charter and were interrelated, and that each principle should be construed in the context of the others. Nothing in the declaration would prejudice Charter principles, the rights and duties of States, the right to self-determination, freedom and independence, or the right to wage political and armed struggle to that end and to seek and receive support in accordance with the Charter. Action taken by States in accordance with United Nations decisions adopted under Chapters VI, VII or VIII of the Charter⁷—on pacific settlement of disputes, action on threats to and breaches of the peace and acts of aggression, and regional arrangements-or action authorized by the United Nations in support of any of its decisions and recommendations would not be contrary to the principles of non-interference.

Guyana, introducing the draft declaration, said the sponsors proposed to have the Committee work on it at the 1980 session, since it was clear from consultations that it would be extremely difficult to achieve consensus on the text in 1979.

Ireland, explaining the negative votes of the European Community members, said that to remove the principle of non-intervention from the context of the Assembly's 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nation⁸ in which it was fully elaborated and related to other principles, risked a selective and unbalanced presentation. Moreover, those States considered that the Sixth (Legal) Committee had competence in questions of definition and interpretation of Charter provisions. They, as well as Spain and Turkey, had reservations on the establishment of a working group in the First Committee for this purpose.

Because resolution 34/101 made direct reference to the 12-power draft declaration, which contained provisions they considered unacceptable, Australia, Israel and the United States, as well as the European Community countries and Spain, said they could not support it. Uruguay and Venezuela, while voting for the resolution, also voiced reservations on the draft declaration. Australia, Austria, Costa Rica and Sweden, which abstained, were not convinced that a new declaration would be the most appropriate way to enhance observance of the principle of non-intervention.

In the First Committee's general debate on the implementation of the Declaration on strengthening security, most speakers reaffirmed their support for the Declaration and encouraged stronger efforts towards detente and disarmament and an expanded role for the United Nations in solving international problems.

A number of African States expressed concern about lack of respect for the Declaration. Benin, remarking that Africa was the favorite target of the imperialists, said the implementation of the Declaration in that continent would require the elimination of all white minority régimes. Ghana said that recent instances of open aggression, the use of military force and serious violations of human rights stemmed more from lack of respect for norms embodied in the United Nations Charter and the lack of political will to uphold its principles and purposes than to any deficiencies in the Charter itself. Zaire considered that the refusal to accept changes in international life, including the refusal to consider States in the third world as equal partners, was among the causes of misunderstanding and crisis. Zambia appealed to those who dealt on a normal basis with the minority regimes in southern Africa to help implement the Declaration by contributing to the struggle for genuine majority rule in the remaining fortresses of minority rule.

Some countries singled out certain types of problems which they regarded as interfering with the achievement of international security. Bangladesh said the denial of economic assistance with the aim of reorienting the path of economic development chosen by a country militated against the principle of non-interference in the affairs of States, as did protectionist policies directed against developing countries. Also addressing economic issues, Peru said the development of all peoples was not only a basic task of human solidarity but a contribution to the building of a more secure future for all peoples. Others calling attention to the importance of establishing equitable economic relations were Afghanistan, Nigeria and Zaire. Liberia, referring to small territories that had not attained self-government, said it was time to assert the principle of self-determination with greater emphasis.

Albania was encouraged by the growth of antiimperialist struggles resulting in the overthrow of the former regimes in Iran and Nicaragua, which it characterized as United States puppets. Nicaragua stated that peace and security would be constantly threatened while imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and domination persisted.

Many countries cited progress on disarmament as essential to achieve international security. To the Byelorussian SSR, the greatest danger to peace lay in the arms race unleashed by imperialism. The USSR considered that the path to lasting peace and security lay through cessation of the arms race and the adoption of parallel measures to guarantee peace and resolve crises.

Hungary considered that detente continued to be the dominant trend in international relations, although the increasing activity of reactionary forces created difficult circumstances for that policy. The German Democratic Republic said that positive developments in international relations were threatened by counter-measures from those who were trying to revive the cold war. Poland favoured non-governmental efforts to implement the Assembly's 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace.9

Several Eastern European countries addressed themselves to the security problems of Europe. Bulgaria was among those which endorsed an initiative by the USSR in October for the reduction of military forces in Central Europe (see also p. 90). Czechoslovakia said that plans by NATO to deploy hundreds of additional medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe, supplied by the United States, would disturb the balance of forces in Europe and threaten international peace and security. The Ukrainian SSR urged action to lower the level of military confrontation in Europe while ensuring equal security for the States of the region.

Several countries cited particular areas where they thought a contribution could be made to the strengthening of international security. Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Liberia, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and Yugoslavia stressed the importance of strengthening the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States. Egypt said it was working to make the Red Sea a zone of peace and a shipping lane safeguarded according to the rules of international law. In Malta's view, a review of the Charter and the creation of zones of peace were among the most fertile areas for further work. Mongolia and others favoured the early conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations. Yugoslavia said that the initiative to transform the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and co-operation gave all European countries an opportunity to help bridge the gap between developing and developed countries.

Specific international issues were raised in some statements on international security. Thus, with regard to South-East Asia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic said that China was concentrating its military forces on the frontier and threatening the independence of the Lao Republic, which would never be a threat to China. Viet Nam stated that China had made lies and deception a State policy in order to achieve its expansionist and hegemonistic goals, carrying out aggression against Viet Nam while claiming that Viet Nam had attacked China. In response, China said it was regarded as an enemy by the Vietnamese authorities only because China opposed their hegemonistic and expansionist policy in Indo-China and South-East Asia.

Some countries expressed doubts as to the usefulness of the annual debate on international security. These included Canada and Ireland, the latter speaking for the nine members of the European Community. They, as well as Costa Rica, stressed that what was needed was not the elaboration of new texts but respect for existing undertakings. Democratic Kampuchea saw the topic of international security as an illusion, used by the colonialists, neo-colonialists, racists, imperialists, expansionists and hegemonists throughout the world.

Resolution 34/99, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/827, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 103.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the determination of the peoples of the United Nations as expressed in the Charter of the United Nations to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Noting that good neighbourliness is also contained in numerous bilateral and multilateral treaties,

Recalling its resolutions 1236(XII) of 14 December 1957 and 1301 (XIII) of 10 December 1958, in which it stressed the importance of constantly promoting good neighbourly relations for the peace and security of all peoples and for the development of co-operation among States,

Bearing in mind that, owing to geographic proximity, there are particularly favourable opportunities for co-operation and mutual advantage between neighbouring countries in many fields and that these opportunities should be further promoted and encouraged, in view of their positive influence on international relations as a whole,

Considering that the great changes of a political, economic and social nature as well as the scientific and technological progress which have taken place in the world and led to unprecedented interdependence of nations have given new dimensions to good neighbourliness and increase the need to ensure its further development and its more effective implementation in the conduct of States in all fields,

Convinced that the development and strengthening of good neighbourliness are likely to contribute to the solution of problems between States, particularly between neighbouring ones, and to the enhancing of confidence between them,

Deeply concerned at the persistence and emergence of conflicts between States, particularly neighbouring ones, which endanger the peace, security and progress of States,

Considering that the generalization of the long practice and certain norms of good neighbourliness is likely to strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States, in accordance with the Charter,

- 1. Calls upon all States, in the interest of the maintenance of international peace and security, to promote good neighbourliness in their relations with other States;
- 2. Affirms that good neighbourliness conforms with the purposes of the United Nations and is founded upon the strict observance of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

- as well as the rejection of any acts seeking to establish zones of influence and domination:
- 3. Believes it necessary to examine the question of good neighbourliness in order to strengthen and further develop its content, as well as ways and modalities of enhancing its effectiveness:
- 4. Invites Governments to communicate to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions on good neighbourliness, as well as on ways and modalities of enhancing it, with a view to preventing conflicts and to increasing confidence among States, particularly neighbouring ones;
- 5. Invites the United Nations organs, bodies and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, within their fields of competence, to inform the Secretary-General of the aspects of their activities relevant to the development of relations of good neighbourliness between States;
- 6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session a report containing the replies and information received in accordance with paragraphs 4 and 5 above;
- 7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-sixth session an item entitled "Development and strengthening of good neighbourliness between States."

- A/34/827. Report of First Committee, draft resolution II.

Resolution 34/100, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/827, adopted by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 103, by recorded vote of 104 to 2, with 24 abstentions, as follows:

The General Assembly

ered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security,"

Taking note of the ninth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security and the important role it has played in international life in strengthening and consolidating peace and security, as well as promoting co-operation among States on the basis of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with concern that some of the important provisions of the Declaration have not yet been implemented and that agreement concerning measures for their implementation has not been reached,

Profound/y disturbed by the escalation of acts in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, particularly of the principles of respect for national independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, non-intervention and non-interference and the free social development of countries, recourse to threat or use of force, military intervention, interference and occupation of sovereign States or of parts of their territories, resulting in breaches of the peace and threats to international peace and security.

Noting with deep concern the continued existence of focal points of crisis and tension in various regions of the world, the emergence of new conflicts among States endangering international peace and security, the continuation and escalation of the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, the manifestation of tendencies to divide the world into spheres of influence and domination, continued interference in the internal affairs of States, including the use of mercenaries, and the continuing existence of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism in all its manifestations and apartheid, which remain the main obstacles to the strengthening of international peace and security,

Reaffirming again the close link existing between the strengthening of international peace and security, disarmament, decolonization and development, and stressing the urgent need for concerted action to achieve progress in the implementation of, the decisions adopted at the sixth and seventh special sessions of the General Assembly concerning the establishment of a new international economic order, the decisions and recommendations adopted at the tenth special session, devoted to disarmament, and the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, contained in Assembly resolution 33/73 of 15 December 1978,

Convinced that the establishment of a new world information order, which will be conducive to greater reciprocity in the exchange of information and correct the quantitative and qualitative inequality in the flow of information to and from developing countries and between them, would contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security and the realization of the aim of establishing the new international economic order.

Recognizing some encouraging signs and achievements of the peoples' struggle for their emancipation and liberation from colonial and other forms of subjugation and oppression, thus contributing to the strengthening of international peace and security, but conscious of the necessity to exert further efforts towards consolidating and expanding the results achieved,

- 1. Calls upon all States to contribute effectively to the implementation and further elaboration of the provisions of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security:
- 2. Urges with emphasis all the members of the Security Council, especially the permanent members, to consider and to take, as a matter of urgency, all the necessary measures for ensuring respect for the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations in the effective implementation of the decisions of the Council on the maintenance of international peace and security, including, particularly, those envisaged in Chapter VII of the Charter and provided for in the Declaration, by strengthening the confidence of States in the United Nations and in the effectiveness of the Council, as the organ bearing primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security;

- 3. Further calls upon all States to adhere fully to the purposes and principles of the Charter and to observe strictly, in international relations, the principles of national independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, sovereign equality, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal or external affairs of other States, the right of all States and peoples to determine their political systems and pursue economic, social and cultural development without intimidation, hindrance or pressure, sovereignty over natural resources, inviolability of international frontiers, non-use of force or threat of force and non-recognition of situations brought about by the threat or use of force, and the principle of peaceful settlement of disputes;
- 4. Reaffirms again its opposition to any threat or use of force, intervention and interference, aggression, foreign occupation or measures of political and economic coercion which attempt to violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of States or their right freely to dispose of their natural resources;
- 5. Invites all States to reject any support for encouragement of any form of intervention or interference in the internal or external affairs of States for any reason whatsoever and to refuse recognition of situations brought about by the threat or use of force:
- 6. Also calls upon all States to refrain from any act which may hinder the continuation of the process of relaxation of international tension, impede the resolution of the focal points of crisis and tension in various regions of the world, hamper the implementation of the recommendation of the General Assembly at its tenth special session on effective measures for halting the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and for disarmament, and postpone the implementation of the new international economic order:
- 7. Reaffirms again the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination or occupation to achieve self-determination and independence, and urges Member States to increase their support for and solidarity with them and their national liberation movements and to take urgent and effective measures for the speedy completion of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other resolutions of the United Nations on the final elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid;
- 8. Recognizes the advance that has been made in the struggle of oppressed peoples for their emancipation and the elimination of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism in all its manifestations, racial discrimination, apartheid, alien domination and occupation;
- 9. Reaffirms the provisions of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace and invites the permanent members of the Security Council and major maritime users of the Indian Ocean to serve on the expanded Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean to prepare for the Conference on the Indian Ocean in 1981;
- 10. Commends the convening of the Conference 'on Security and Co-operation in Europe, to be held at Madrid in 1980, and expresses the hope that it will result in. further strengthening the security and co-operation of States in Europe in all spheres, including reduction of armaments and armed forces and halting the arms race in both the nuclear and conventional fields;
- 11. Welcomes the recommendation of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979, that, during 1980, a meeting should be called of the Mediterranean non-aligned countries and other Mediterranean countries participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to be held at Madrid, for the purpose of launching joint projects of co-operation and for the preparation of the Conference:
- 12. Commends also the decision of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries on transforming the Mediterranean into a zone of peace and cooperation and urges all States to co-operate in applying that decision on the basis of the principles of respect for each State's sovereignty and territorial integrity, the right of peoples to make their own decisions, non-intervention and noninterference in internal affairs, and equal rights;

- 13. Considers that the implementation of the new international economic order, assuring, through the settlement of urgent international economic problems, a speedy development of the developing countries, particularly the least developed ones, would contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security and to the promotion of economic co-operation for development as an important prerequisite of peaceful and active coexistence among States and requests all States, particularly the developed ones, to participate actively in the efforts of the United Nations and in the global negotiations leading to that end;
- 14. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and, having in mind the important role that the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security has played in international life since its adoption, requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with the help of a group of governmental' experts, a a report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on the extent of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration and on actions which should be undertaken by the Assembly in order to secure full compliance with the provisions of the Declaration;
- 15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security."
 - a Subsequently referred to as the Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security.
- A/34/192 and Add.1,2. Non-interference in internal affairs of States. Report of Secretary-General (replies received from Governments).

- A/34/827. Report of First Committee, draft resolution Ill.

Resolution 34/101, as recommended by First Committee, A/34/827, adopted by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 103, by recorded vote of 106 to 11, with 14 abstentions, as follows:

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 31/91 of 14 December 1976, 32/153 of 19 December 1977 and 33/74 of 15 December 1978 on non-interference in the internal affairs of States, Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General, containing the views of Member States on ways by which greater respect for the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States can be assured.

Reaffirming that a declaration on non-interference in the internal affairs of States would be an important contribution to the further elaboration of the principles for strengthening equitable co-operation and friendly relations among States, based on sovereign equality and mutual respect,

Noting that a number of Member States have expressed support for the preparation of such a declaration,

Taking note of the draft declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in internal affairs of States,

Considering that it was not possible to conclude negotiations on this draft in time for the adoption of such a declaration at the thirty-fourth session,

- Expresses the hope that negotiations will continue and be intensified with a view to the adoption, at the thirty-fifth session, of a declaration on the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States;
- 2. Decides to set up an open-ended ad hoc working group of the First Committee at the commencement of the thirty-fifth session with a view to elaborating and finalizing the declaration;
- Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-fifth session an item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security."

Inadmissibility of the policy of hegemonism in international relations

At the request of the USSR, the General Assembly included in the agenda of its 1979 regular session an item entitled "Inadmissibility of the policy of hegemonism in international relations."

In a letter of 25 September to the Secretary-General, requesting inclusion of this matter in the agenda as an important and urgent question, the USSR noted that a considerable relaxation of international tension had been achieved in recent years, lessening the danger of another world war. It considered, however, that in order to consolidate and deepen detente and strengthen the foundations of universal peace, efforts should be intensified to overcome resistance by forces seeking to reverse those trends. Elimination from international relations of any manifestation of the policy of hegemonism — the desire of some States to dominate other States and peoples-was becoming one of the most important aspects of the struggle for detente and peace. The policy had led to hotbeds of tension, had destabilized the international situation, and was particularly dangerous when means of mass destruction could be placed at its service. The USSR believed that the United Nations should condemn hegemonism in any form.

Annexed to the letter was a draft resolution which the USSR reintroduced in the First Committee, the body to which the Assembly allocated the item. By this text, the Assembly would resolutely condemn the policy of hegemonism, however it was manifested, as incompatible with the fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations and with the task of preserving peace and strengthening international security. It would declare on behalf of the peoples of the United Nations that States or groups of States should never, under any circumstances or for any reasons, claim hegemony in international affairs or seek a position of domination, either in the world as a whole or in any region.

Two other draft resolutions on this subject were introduced during the First Committee's debate

China introduced a text according to which the Assembly would condemn hegemonism, super-power global hegemonism in particular. It would demand that States pursuing global and regional hegemonism immediately withdraw all their invading forces and end their military occupation of other States, so the people of occupied States could determine and administer their own affairs. Such States should cease and undertake not to carry out infiltration, interference, subversion and aggression against other States, including the imposition of "limited sovereignty," the dispatch of mercenaries, the subversion of legal Governments, the setting up of puppet regimes and the waging of wars by proxy. The superpowers would be called on to halt arms build-up and war preparations, reduce substantially their nuclear and conventional armaments, and stop exporting military equipment to countries carrying out aggression and expansion. The Assembly would declare: that all States should abide by Charter purposes and principles and the principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, non-aggression, non-interference, equality, mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence; that all States had the right to participate in international affairs on an equal footing; and that it was impermissible for any big country to bully the small, for the strong to oppress the weak or for any State to impose its will on others, to subject other States to political control, economic plunder and military aggression or to occupy the territories of other States.

The third draft resolution was submitted by Bangladesh, Cuba, Guinea, India, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia. The First Committee approved it on 30 November by a recorded vote of 87 to 4, with 24 abstentions. In view of the presentation and approval of this eight-power draft, which they supported, China and the USSR did not insist on a vote on their draft resolutions. On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted the eight-power text, on the First Committee's recommendation, by a recorded vote of 111 to 4, with 26 abstentions, as resolution 34/103.

By this resolution, the Assembly noted that hegemonism was a manifestation of the policy of a State or a group of States to control, dominate and subjugate-politically, economically, ideologically or militarily- other States, peoples or regions of the world. It considered that imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism including Zionism and apartheid were all forces which sought to perpetuate unequal relations and privileges acquired by force and were, therefore, manifestations of hegemonism.

The Assembly condemned hegemonism in all its manifestations-global, regional and sub-regional- pursued in the context of the policy of division of the world into blocs, and declared that no State or group of States should pursue hegemony in international relations or seek a position of dominance, globally or in any region. It rejected all forms of domination, subjugation, interference or intervention and all forms of international pressure, whether political, ideological, economic, military or cultural, and resolutely condemned policies of pressure and the threat or use of force, direct or indirect aggression, occupation and interference and intervention, overt or covert, in the internal affairs of States. It also resolutely condemned imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, apartheid, racism including zionism, and all other forms of foreign aggression, occupation, domination and interference, as well as the creation of spheres of influence and the division of the world into antagonistic political and military blocs. It called on all States to observe the principles of the Charter and those regarding, respect for sovereignty, sovereign equality, national independence, unity and territorial integrity, non-interference, aggression, peaceful settlement of disputes, cooperation and the right to self-determination. It called for the withdrawal of all occupation forces, and for strict respect for the right of all States to determine their political and socioeconomic systems and to pursue their national economic, social and other policies without intimidation, hindrance or interference. The Assembly resolved to continue the endeavour to establish a new and equitable system of international relations, based on the equal participation of all States in the solution of international problems and the maintenance of international peace and security, and to bring about a new international economic order so as to ensure the economic emancipation and freedom of all nations, in particular the developing countries.

Israel requested a separate vote in the First Committee on the expression "including zionism" appearing in the preambular paragraph defining hegemonism and the operative paragraph by which it was condemned. A recorded vote on these words was also taken in the plenary Assembly. The words were retained in the Committee by a recorded vote of 65 to 22, with 24 abstentions, and in the Assembly by 79 votes to 26, with 33 abstentions. Israel also submitted an amendment in the Assembly seeking the inclusion of a reference to "Arab petro-hegemonism," but it withdrew the amendment after stating that many representatives had not had time to obtain instructions on how to vote.

An oral amendment by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was not pressed to a vote. It would have included "cultural and racial" control, domination and subjugation among the manifestations of hegemonism noted in a preambular paragraph, and added "racial" pressure to those forms of domination rejected in international relations.

Sri Lanka, which introduced the resolution, said the group of non-aligned countries which sponsored it had negotiated the text with other groups and had struck a balance which steered clear of any polemical or loaded use of the term "hegemony." They did not intend it as a narrow condemnation of a particular group.

During the debate in the First Committee, several countries, including Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liberia, Madagascar, Mauritius, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia and Zambia, welcomed the initiative to bring the question of hegemonism to the Assembly's attention. These States and others, including Cyprus, the Ivory Coast, Jordan, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia and Zaire, were in agreement that the United Nations must make more determined efforts to bring about the abolition of the policy of hegemonism.

Most States which spoke rejected the policy of hegemonism in all its manifestations, including colonialism, neo-colonialism and racism, as contrary to the principles and purposes of the United Nations Charter, Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Zambia were among the many speakers which stressed that, since hegemonism was a negation of the fundamental principle of the sovereign equality of States, it represented a major threat to international peace and security. The rivalry of major powers to acquire spheres of influence and domination was, in the view of many nations, particularly dangerous for world peace and detrimental to the cause of international co-operation and understanding.

Bangladesh and Zambia also considered hegemonism as the antithesis of the United Nations Charter and of the policy of non-alignment, and Poland and others saw it as the antithesis of the new international economic order. In the opinion of India, Iraq, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia, non-alignment was the most important barrier to the pursuit of a policy of hegemonism or domination.

In Albania's opinion, the main protagonists of the policy of hegemonism were China, the USSR and the United States.

In China's view, global hegemonism, sought by the super-powers, was characterized by an unrestrained arms race, competition for spheres of influence, wars by proxy and economic exploitation of developing countries. It considered the USSR to be the most dangerous hegemonist and reaffirmed that China would never seek hegemony or strive to be a super-power.

Tunisia noted that, while hegemony was mostly associated with the actions of the great powers, they did not have a monopoly on it; unfortunately, the desire for hegemony at the regional level was frequently seen. Tunisia, as well as Democratic Kampuchea, noted that this often led the threatened States to appeal to the larger States, with the result that regional hegemony promoted and intensified global hegemony. The dangers of regional policies of hegemonism were also referred to by Bulgaria, Indonesia, Kenya, Liberia and Zambia, among others.

Uruguay observed that the inadmissibility of the policy of hegemonism was already laid down in the Charter, an instrument aimed at restricting its practice. Until there was a comprehensive study of new forms of power politics, Uruguay could not vote in favour of texts which implied taking a political position towards specific countries.

Malta cautioned against diminishing what had already been agreed, particularly in the Charter, by attempts to define new concepts, perhaps restrictively. Concepts to which Member States had already subscribed should be given concrete expression and effective implementation.

In explanation of vote, Australia, Israel and the United States indicated that their opposition to the resolution had been prompted by its references equating Zionism with racism. Guatemala, Ireland (speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community), Japan and Uruguay said those references were the reason for their abstention. Several countries which voted in favour of the resolution, including Bhutan, Bolivia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Greece, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Panama and Peru, also stated that they had reservations about the references to Zionism.

Ireland added that, by introducing a concept for which there existed no internationally accepted definition, the Committee risked embarking on polemics and friction instead of strengthening mutual understanding. The United States did not believe that an attempt to define hegemonism was a worthwhile exercise, and was concerned that certain aspects might be considered as redefining or limiting rights of States to pursue, individually or collectively, legitimate measures foreseen in the Charter. France, Greece and Japan also considered that notions and objectives extraneous to the condemnation of hegemonism had been introduced at the expense of the resolution's true purpose. In particular, France questioned the reference to establishing a new system of international relations, remarking that the current system, based on the Charter, if fully applied could meet the world's needs.

Albania said it would not take part in the voting because the resolution failed to identify the hegemonists. Brazil did not participate because it did not consider that this complex subject had been adequately dealt with; the resolution was overly ambitious and covered areas already dealt with in other resolutions.

Recalling the duty of States to refrain in their international relations from military, political, economic or any other form of coercion aimed against the sovereignty, political independence or territorial integrity of any State,

Noting that hegemonism is a manifestation of the policy of a State, or a group of States, to control, dominate and subjugate, politically, economically, ideologically or militarily, other States, peoples or regions of the world,

Concerned also that hegemonism seeks to limit the freedom of States to determine their political systems and pursue economic, social and cultural development without intimidation, hindrance or pressure,

Convinced that hegemonism, global and regional, in all its different forms, leads to a serious threat to international peace and security,

Considering that it is the common desire of all peoples to oppose hegemonism and to preserve the sovereignty and national independence of all States,

Bearing in mind the importance and urgency of creating a new and equitable system of international relations based on the equal participation of all States in the solution of international problems and the maintenance of international peace and security, one which ensures equal security for all States, and progress and prosperity for all peoples, through the establishment of the new international economic order,

Chapter VI

Settlement by peaceful means of disputes between States

On an initiative of Romania, the General Assembly, in December 1979, invited States to comment on the future elaboration of a declaration on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States. The matter was raised under a new agenda item, requested by Romania and which the Assembly placed on its agenda in September, entitled "Settlement by peaceful means of disputes between States."

To its letter of 16 July to the Secretary-General requesting inclusion of this matter in the agenda, Romania attached an explanatory memorandum, recalling the obligation of Member States under the Charter of the United Nations to settle their international, disputes by peaceful means. Despite that undertaking, however, recourse to force or the threat of force continued. Romania suggested that the Assembly adopt a declaration setting forth specific procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes between nations. It considered that strengthening the role of the United Nations in preventing and settling international disputes and in adjusting misunderstandings between States at an early stage highlighted the need to re-examine and improve United Nations instruments for the peaceful settlement of disputes, with a view to encouraging States to use them with greater confidence. In that respect, Romania referred to its 1975 proposal for the establishment of a permanent commission of the Assembly on good offices and conciliation. ¹

On 14 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee to which the General Assembly had allocated the item for consideration, the Assembly adopted, without a vote, resolution 34/102 on this question.

By this resolution, the Assembly called on all States to adhere strictly in their international relations to the principle that States were to settle their international disputes by peaceful means, and urged them to co-operate in the elaboration of an Assembly declaration on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States. It invited Member States to transmit their opinions, suggestions and proposals on the elaboration of such a declaration to the Secretary-General, who was requested to submit a report thereon to the Assembly at its 1980 regular session.

The sponsors of the resolution were Bangladesh, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritius, the Niger, Romania, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Togo, Uruguay and Yugoslavia. The text was approved without vote by the First Committee on 29 November.

Opening four meetings of debate on this item in the First Committee and introducing the resolution subsequently adopted, Romania expressed its conviction that the United Nations should assume larger responsibilities in efforts to prevent conflicts. It presented a working paper containing a draft declaration on the peaceful settlement of disputes.

Under the terms of the proposed declaration, the Assembly would declare that: all States had the duty to settle all their international disputes exclusively by peaceful means, in such a manner that national independence, territorial integrity, international peace and security and justice were not endangered; States parties to a dispute had the duty to seek an early and just settlement through negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, regional agencies or arrangements or other peaceful means of their choice, as appropriate to the circumstances and nature of the dispute, including any settlement procedure agreed upon between them prior to their dispute; all international disputes were to be settled on the basis of sovereign equality of rights of States and of selfdetermination of peoples under colonial and foreign domination; parties to a dispute were to refrain from any action which might aggravate it or obstruct or delay its settlement; all States had the duty to contribute to the peaceful settlement of international disputes; an initiative proposed by a third party with a view to settling a dispute would be considered as having been made in good faith and not as an unfriendly act; the establishment of a means of pacific settlement would be done by the free choice and common agreement of the parties; the parties had the duty, if they failed to reach a solution by any such peaceful means, to continue to seek a settlement by other peaceful means they agreed upon; the parties could submit their dispute to compulsory jurisdiction; and Member States had a duty to fulfil their Charter obligations and implement General Assembly and Security Council resolutions.

According to the declaration, none of its provisions should be interpreted as affecting: the right of every State to settle without foreign interference matters pertaining to its own exclusive competence; the inalienable right of every State to use all legitimate means in self-defence against any violation of its sovereignty and national independence, including military means in case of aggression; or the right to self-determination, freedom and independence of peoples under colonial and alien domination. Neither the existence of a dispute nor the failure of a peaceful settlement procedure could legitimize resort to the use of force, threat of force, political or economic pressure, or other form of coercion.

The Assembly would: invite all States to observe and promote these principles; consider that the elaboration of a general treaty on peaceful settlement could contribute to equitable international relations, enhance the security and independence of States and exert a positive influence on world politics; and decide to continue efforts to elaborate such a treaty under United Nations aegis, codifying principles and norms governing peaceful settlement and establishing concrete ways of dispute settlement.

During the debate, several States, including China, Liberia, the Philippines, Senegal, Spain and Turkey, welcomed the Romanian initiative, believing that such a declaration would help increase the effectiveness of United Nations machinery for the solution of disputes and the prevention of conflicts. China endorsed the view that peaceful settlement should not prejudice the right of States to exercise individual and collective self-defence in accordance with the Charter. Cyprus suggested that attention be given to elaborating procedures or modalities for applying the means of pacific settlement.

Mauritius agreed with Romania that consideration of such a declaration should be the beginning of a process leading to an international treaty on the subject. Sweden, doubting the advisability of general declarations on subjects already covered by carefully balanced international agreements, suggested that the declaration could be useful only if it contained specific recommendations to States regarding third-party settlement of disputes and if it was soon transformed into binding treaty provisions. India, however, considered that resort to settlement procedures should be with the consent of the parties and not at the initiative of a third party. India also considered it premature to attempt a codification and development of the law of the settlement of disputes, either by a declaration or by a convention. Strengthening, multiplication or streamlining of mechanisms for dispute settlement could not be a substitute for political will, India added-a view shared by Senegal, Sweden and Togo, among others.

Senegal believed that the declaration should be intended primarily to induce a new momentum and lead to a firmer commitment by States to seek peaceful ways for solving disputes. Senegal and Yugoslavia appreciated the importance of efforts to develop more effective regional methods and techniques for dispute settlement. Yugoslavia recalled two proposals made to the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries at Havana, Cuba, in September 1979: a working paper by Sri Lanka on the establishment of a commission for the settlement of border disputes within that movement; and a resolution by Bangladesh, Iraq and Yugoslavia on dispute settlement between non-aligned countries.

Egypt, Mauritius, the Philippines and Yugo-slavia were among States which referred to a statement contained in the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization (see p. 160) that the idea of preparing a declaration on peaceful settlement of disputes for adoption by the Assembly had awakened special interest in the Committee and was one on which general agreement might be possible.

Egypt, which regarded the Romanian working paper as a good basis for a declaration, thought it advisable to review the strengthening of the United Nations organs involved in the settlement of disputes, so that States might have recourse to those organs at an early stage. Chile stressed the need to strengthen international arbitration organs and procedures and the role of the International Court of Justice. Yugoslavia held that the Security Council should be more effectively involved in preventive diplomatic activity, consulting informally on threats to the peace, strengthening its negotiating function and holding periodic meetings, preferably at the ministerial level, to discuss outstanding disputes. Canada suggested an examination of the peaceful settlement roles of both the Council and the Court.

Austria and Sierra Leone stressed the need for strengthening the effectiveness of the principle of peaceful settlement, with emphasis on devising methods to detect conflicts early and to provide just solutions for disputes before they led to major political or military confrontations. Spain felt that this was an appropriate moment to reexamine, at both regional and universal levels, the operation of peaceful settlement procedures.

The United States did not regard adoption of the resolution as a commitment to do more than consider the utility of a declaration on peaceful settlement, and hoped that States would feel free to make other proposals to enhance the effectiveness of the obligation to settle disputes peacefully.

Canada, India, Ireland (speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community), Liberia, the Philippines, Togo, the United States and Yugoslavia shared the view that the discussion on the proposed declaration should be pursued in the Sixth (Legal) Committee, without predetermining the form or content of any future instrument. India, Ireland and the Philippines suggested that the declaration be elaborated in the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, while Canada felt that discussion of the question belonged to the Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations.

Chapter VII

Non-use of force in international relations

The question of the conclusion of a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations was again considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fourth (1979) session. Consideration of the item was based on a report of the Assembly's Special Committee on Enhancing the Effectiveness of the Principle of Non-Use of Force in International Relations. The Committee had been established in 1977¹ to consider proposals and suggestions from States for drafting a world treaty on the non-use of force, the peaceful settlement of disputes or any other appropriate recommendations.

On 9 November 1979, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/13 by which it took note of the Special Committee's report and decided it should continue its work, including the drafting of a world treaty. The Assembly invited Governments to submit or bring up to date their reservations and proposals and asked the Committee to report again in 1980.

Consideration by the Special Committee

The Special Committee met at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 17 April to 11 May 1979. It examined a draft world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations introduced by the USSR in 1976,² together with observations, comments and suggestions from Qatar, submitted in accordance with a renewed Assembly invitation of 16 December 1978.³ Qatar's comments, as well as those subsequently received from Cuba, were transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly.

The Committee re-established an open-ended working group whose mandate was the same as that of its parent Committee. The group held eight meetings between 23 April and 4 May, concluding a partial examination of the draft world treaty, following the introduction by the USSR of articles I and III to V of its draft.

By article I, the contracting parties would strictly abide by their undertaking not to use force or the threat of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State. Accordingly, they would refrain from the use or threat of use of armed forces involving any types of weapons, including nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction, and agree not to assist, encourage or induce the use or threat of use of force.

Article III provided that nothing in the treaty would affect the rights and obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations and treaties concluded by them earlier. The parties would, by article IV, make all possible efforts to implement measures for lessening military confrontation and for disarmament, with the ultimate goal of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control. Article V stated that each party was to consider what measures must be taken, in accordance with its constitutional procedure, to comply fully with its obligations under the treaty.

The group also discussed a working paper submitted by Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom, which expressed their doubts about the usefulness of such a treaty and urged that the group focus instead on a proposed study analysing the reasons why States resorted to the use of force. The working paper listed topics under the headings of the peaceful settlement of disputes and the non-use of force which the Committee might wish to examine after discussion of the causes or reasons which led States to use force. Egypt, on behalf also of Mexico, orally proposed that the group take as the basis of its work the firstmentioned principle of the Assembly's 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. 4 By that principle, States were to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. The proposal was not considered for lack of time.

On 11 May, the Committee considered and approved the report of the group summarizing the discussions, adopted its own report and transmitted it to the Assembly.

It was the general view in the Committee that it had not completed its mandate. Its report stated that many members, stressing the importance of the issues, supported continuation of the Committee's work, while others took the position that renewal of the mandate was a matter falling within the competence of the Assembly.

The Committee's debate on the draft treaty reflected a divergence of approach. Many representatives spoke in favour of drafting a treaty; others were opposed to the idea of the treaty itself and therefore declined to comment on its drafting.

The USSR said that the purpose of elaborating and concluding a world treaty was to transform the principle of non-use of force into a clearly defined obligation, which would enhance the responsibility of all States parties to the treaty to observe strictly that basic principle of current international law. The fact that the principle of non-use of force in international relations was embodied in the Charter did not mean, in the USSR's view, that it was unnecessary to develop the principle and formulate it in a special treaty. The treaty was intended to uphold obligations embodied in the Charter and refine them within a more specific framework. Its core would be the obligation of States to refrain from the use of any armed force, including nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction. It must also affirm the obligation to settle international disputes exclusively by peaceful means.

Benin, Bulgaria, Cyprus, Egypt, Greece, Hungary, India, Iraq, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Panama, Poland, Romania and Senegal spoke in favour of the USSR initiative.

Bulgaria, Hungary and Poland expressed the view that the treaty was necessary and that everything should be done to expedite negotiations to complete it. Bulgaria felt that no serious arguments had been heard against the conclusion of a world treaty. The world situation was totally different from that prevailing in 1945 when the Charter had been adopted; the existence of nuclear weapons had given essentially new characteristics to international relations. In Bulgaria's view, the nuclear factor provided adequate grounds for urgent consideration of the question.

Egypt, India and Panama shared the view that a comprehensive treaty concerning the non-use of force and the peaceful settlement of disputes would promote progress towards disarmament and lasting peace. In view of the impossibility of preventing unilateral intervention involving either threat or use of force by means of current legal instruments, the need to draft a world treaty was becoming increasingly urgent. They. questioned the soundness of arguments that a treaty limited to Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter⁵ would be redundant and that further development of the Charter principle would create a double regime, give rise to unnecessary contradictions and hinder the task of the competent organs of the United Nations.

Greece, Iraq, Morocco and Senegal observed that many resolutions concerning international armed conflicts adopted by various United Nations organs had been completely disregarded. New methods for implementing the principle of non-use of force should therefore be considered. The draft treaty provided an opportunity to consider the problem constructively. They disagreed with those who maintained that repetition of the rule of law was redundant and could have no beneficial results. A treaty that developed the Charter principle and set it out in greater detail could provide the solid political basis necessary for the proper functioning of the machinery for collective security.

Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Nicaragua, the United Kingdom and the United States doubted the usefulness and efficacy of the proposed treaty. In their view, the treaty would weaken the provisions of the Charter and undermine its authority by casting doubt on the seriousness of its legal commitments.

The United States said it did not consider it desirable to draft yet another treaty on the matter. Any change introduced by the new treaty in the rules contained in Charter Article 2 (4) would affect the inherent right of self-defence set out in Article 516 and the entire collective-security mechanism. If the Special Committee decided not to elaborate a treaty, it could instead draft a resolution or a declaration focusing on problems related to the peaceful settlement of disputes. The United States suggested that the Special Committee should try to find out why the existing norm had not been more effective; there might be malfunctions in the collective-security system that deprived States of a viable alternative to the use of force to settle disputes. Perhaps an exchange of ideas on the best approach would make it possible to find a common basis for work.

France believed that, instead of supplementing or modifying the Charter, the Committee should consider possible means of persuading States to comply with its provisions, particularly Articles 33 and 37 on the peaceful settlement of disputes. France proposed a system of compulsory settlement of disputes by arbitration in all bilateral and multilateral agreements.

Italy and the United Kingdom questioned the rationale for concluding a treaty on the non-use of force. They felt, like France, that it would prove more useful to study the reasons why States frequently resorted to force in disregard of Charter principles.

Ecuador, Finland and Turkey said their position on the work of the Committee was flexible. They felt that a more peaceful world order excluding every manifestation of force and violence could be achieved by a variety of means. It was, however, essential to strengthen the machinery to ensure full respect for the principles of peaceful settlement and non-use of force.

Consideration by the General Assembly

The report of the Special Committee was considered by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee in 1979. On 9 November, on that Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/13. By the preamble, the Assembly reaffirmed the need for universal and effective application of the principle of the non-use of force in international relations and for assistance by the United Nations in this endeavour, taking into account the fact that the Special Committee had not completed its mandate, and expressing the hope that a world treaty would be drafted as soon as possible.

By the operative provisions of the resolution, the Assembly decided that the Special Committee should continue its work towards drafting, at the earliest possible date, a world treaty on the non-use of force in international relations as well as the peaceful settlement of disputes or such other recommendations as the Committee considered appropriate. The Assembly invited Governments to submit or bring up to date their observations and proposals on the question and requested the Committee to report again in 1980.

Resolution 34/13 was adopted by a recorded vote of 71 to 14, with 13 abstentions. The Sixth Committee had approved the text on 22 October by a recorded vote, requested by Bulgaria, of 91 to 14, with 11 abstentions. The resolution was introduced by the USSR and was sponsored by 28 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The discussion in the Sixth Committee reflected the same differences of approach as in the Special Committee.

A large number of States favoured the USSR proposal aimed at strengthening the principle of non-use of force in international relations through conclusion of a world treaty. Many of these felt, as did Algeria, that the existing machinery for the maintenance of international peace and security had been unable to put an end to the use of force. The USSR explained that the proposed treaty was to be an integral part of a wide range of disarmament measures, especially nuclear disarmament, and would synthesize the entire experience of the development of the principle of non-use of force embodied in numerous United Nations resolutions and declarations and in bilateral and multilateral treaties and agreements. Bulgaria was among States that felt that it would also help to ensure the political independence and territorial integrity of all States and promote detente and disarmament. The Congo, Ecuador, Egypt, Greece, Hungary, India, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda and Venezuela were among States that felt that, in the current international context, the principle of non-use of force should be further defined and developed.

Many of the States which spoke in favour of the elaboration of a world treaty considered the suggested analysis of reasons leading to the use of force in international relations to be merely an attempt to distract the Special Committee from its major task.

Other States were opposed to the idea of a treaty and suggested that the Special Committee should instead examine conflict situations in order to define the causes of the use of force. The United States was among these States. It held that a security system could not be strengthened by more repetition of existing obligations. Moreover, the Special Committee was authorized to make whatever recommendations it thought appropriate, and a treaty was only one of the possible ways of fulfilling its mandate; it was also free to elaborate a resolution or even a declaration.

The United States was joined in that view by several States, including Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Honduras, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. France said that there was still time to stop the process of elaborating a world treaty on the non-use of force, which was damaging to the Charter and weakened it. Canada believed that, instead of drafting a vague document which would give a false sense of security, it was necessary to make a real contribution to respect for the principle of non-use of force in practice.

Several States held a flexible view on the way in which the matter before the Special Committee should be handled. In Mexico's view, the proposal by the USSR for a treaty was designed to force negotiations on a text rather than to make a serious effort to develop the principle of non-use of force. The proposal to analyse the reasons why States resorted to force, submitted by five Western European countries, was no more encouraging. Spain and others stressed the need for seeking a compromise solution to converge the two approaches. Brazil called for avoidance of both extreme positions, for or against the treaty.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Australia, New Zealand, the United States and Uruguay said that inclusion of the final preambular paragraph expressing the hope that the proposed treaty would be completed as soon as possible distorted the mandate of the Special Committee.

The United States said that the mandate was set forth in the operative paragraph by which the Committee was and remained free to work on a treaty or to make such other recommendations as it considered appropriate. No attempt to slant the mandate could alter that fact. The United States felt, however, that the addition of the final preambular paragraph was provocative and unhelpful. The United States had no choice but to vote against the text.

New Zealand said that the formulation of the preambular paragraph not only was unbalanced in terms of the Special Committee's mandate but was an attempt to prejudge the outcome of its work; New Zealand would therefore abstain.

Uruguay said that, although it did not oppose the principle of a treaty per se, it would abstain because it felt the Special Committee should not focus exclusively on the draft treaty submitted by the USSR.

Brazil, expressing the hope that the drafting of a world treaty would be completed as soon as possible, said that although the resolution was far from perfect it did not alter the Committee's mandate. Argentina added that it did not necessarily support the drafting of any specific instrument.

Explaining their negative votes, Canada, France, Israel and Italy also expressed reservations on the wording of the text. Canada found the final preambular paragraph unacceptable. France and Israel, which said they would otherwise have abstained, felt obliged to vote against the resolution because of controversial provisions and the emphasis given to the concept of a world treaty.

In explanation of its negative vote, the United Kingdom said it had grave doubts about the wisdom of elaborating a treaty that would inevitably affect the current state of international law, which was based on the Charter. The United Kingdom felt that the resolution did not emphasize sufficiently the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elaboration of instruments other than a treaty.

Albania said that the debate showed that the super-powers, using the United Nations as a propaganda forum, were merely speculating on the principle of the non-use of force and on the idea of concluding a world treaty. Albania would, therefore, not participate in the vote.

Chapter VIII

Review of the question of peace-keeping operations

During 1979, the question of United Nations peace-keeping operations was again considered by the General Assembly and its 33-member Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations.

The Secretary-General on 13 March 1979 transmitted a 1978 Assembly resolution to Member States, drawing attention to the appeals and invitations it contained.

By 27 August, replies had been received from Chile, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden on behalf also of Denmark, Finland and Norway- and the United States and were submitted to the Special Committee. Replies were subsequently received from the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom.

The Special Committee held three meetings in 1979, on 2 and 17 April and 17 September. It considered, took note of and attached to its own report to the Assembly a report of its Working Group, which had held 11 meetings between 23 April and 2 July. The report said that, despite considerable efforts to complete agreed guidelines for conducting United Nations peacekeeping operations, the Group was unable to arrive at a consensus on any specific substantive proposal. Discussion had focused on such issues as the functions of the Secretary-General, appointment of a force commander, composition of a force, financing, and ways of ensuring United Nations readiness for prompt establishment of peace-keeping operations. The Group decided to request the Secretariat to prepare a revised edition of a working file containing material on observer missions and peace-keeping forces authorized by the Security Council, including information on administration and logistics, an account of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) operation, and developments in and information on other operations since April 1977. The Group attached to its report a United States working paper on the strengthening of United Nations peace-keeping capabilities.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At the General Assembly's regular 1979 session, the question of peace-keeping operations was discussed in the Special Political Committee from 5 to 7 November; 27 Member States took part in the debate.

Before the Committee was a draft resolution submitted by the Chairman following informal consultations with Committee Members. On 7 November, the Committee approved the draft by consensus and, on 23 November, the Assembly similarly adopted it as resolution 34/53.

By this resolution, the Assembly: took note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations; again invited Member States to provide information on experience gained in peace-keeping operations for compilation by the Secretary-General; and again urged the Special Committee to expedite its work on guidelines, devoting attention to specific questions related to the practical implementation of peace-keeping operations, for report in 1980.

During the debate in the Special Political Committee, the Rapporteur of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations reported that fundamental differences of principle and attitude had prevented the Committee from reaching a consensus both on guidelines and on specific measures related to practical implementation of peace-keeping operations. However, the Committee believed that efforts to find agreement should not be abandoned and that it would be in the Organization's best interests to renew the Committee's mandate.

Ireland, speaking on behalf of the nine member States of the European Community, said that they continued to participate in United Nations peace-keeping operations by providing personnel and logistic support and, therefore, they again appealed for full co-operation to ensure the effectiveness of those operations. The refusal of a number of Member States to pay their share for the operations transferred the burden to States contributing troops, which was particularly heavy on developing States. The nine States hoped that replies received in answer to the Assembly's invitation in the resolution, together with those already received, would enable the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to deal more thoroughly with the problems related to such operations.

The USSR emphasized its consistent policy of seeking to strengthen the United Nations and said that only by conforming strictly to the provisions of the Charter could agreement be reached on the question of peace-keeping operations. The Security Council was the only organ authorized to take measures to maintain or restore international peace and security, and it was this organ, to the exclusion of any other, including the General Assembly, which had responsibility for decisions on questions concerning establishment, operation and financing of United Nations peace-keeping forces. Lack of progress in elaborating agreed guidelines was basically due to the fact that certain members of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations continued to treat the question in a manner contrary to the Charter of the United Nations. Afghanistan and the USSR recalled that they had voted against the Assembly's 1978 resolution on this subject² inasmuch as they had considered its provisions incompatible with the basic principles of the Charter.

Yugoslavia believed that profound conceptual differences dividing members of the Working Group were blocking a compromise. Yugoslavia was opposed to dividing the world into spheres of influence; peace-keeping operations should reflect the interests of the international community as a whole and particularly the interests of small and medium-sized States which were most frequently subjected to pressure.

The German Democratic Republic supported the view that peace-keeping operations were exclusively the Security Council's responsibility. The Council should decide on measures to maintain and restore peace, including the financing of peace-keeping operations. Czechoslovakia said that the Council must determine the most suitable method of financing in each individual case and pointed out that it was empowered to establish a committee on the conduct of peace-keeping operations; establishment of such a committee was urgently required if there was to be adequate ongoing supervision of such operations.

While recognizing the Council's primary role in peace-keeping operations, several representatives drew attention to the Assembly's residual responsibility for world peace. Egypt considered that the genuine interests of all Member States, especially those not permanent members of the Council, were better served by reaffirming the Assembly's right to establish peace-keeping operations. Ghana said that the importance of the Assembly's role should be fully recognized, and Nigeria felt that, in view of its residual responsibility, the Assembly should circumvent the dilemma which had blocked progress for more than a decade. To break the deadlock within the Special Committee, Nigeria proposed establishment of an expert group to examine the whole question, bearing in mind legal and practical lessons gained from various peace-keeping operations.

Further to the matter of financing peace-keeping operations, Japan strongly urged the countries which had not fulfilled their financial obligations to reconsider their position. Nepal expressed support for the collective responsibility of all Member States for equitable sharing of the financial burden. Sweden, speaking on behalf also of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway, held the same view, adding that it was unacceptable for some countries to refuse to pay for some of the operations; Member States would be unwilling to take part in such operations unless assured of reimbursement according to established rules. Nigeria considered that, once an operation was authorized, it was inappropriate for some countries to withhold contributions. The German Democratic Republic and the Syrian Arab Republic considered that a victim of aggression should not be expected to contribute to costs of peace-keeping; the aggressor must be held responsible for material damage.

According to the United States, financial assistance alone was not enough, for, in order to facilitate peace-keeping operations, Member States should provide the United Nations with relevant information and experience. The United States also believed that the United Nations Emergency Force and UNIFIL had found a way around doctrinal controversies and had established a firm basis for the formation and management of future operations.

Japan cautioned against moving the problem out of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations and suggested that a more constructive approach would be to recognize that such operations were already a vital aspect of the Organization's efforts to maintain international peace and security; attention should be devoted to their practical aspects.

There was general support for renewing the Special Committee's mandate, although disappointment was expressed at the lack of progress. Austria called for a serious exercise of political will, while Poland urged more readiness by States to comprehend the views of others. Canada urged that the Special Committee devote at least half its time to a serious examination of practical peace-keeping aspects. Indonesia agreed, and recommended that the proposals put forward by Canada among others should be studied closely.

Chapter IX

Questions concerning the United Nations Charter and the strengthening of the role of the Organization

In 1979, the General Assembly considered the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization. The Special Committee had been established by the Assembly to examine in detail suggestions and proposals received from Governments with regard to the maintenance and consolidation of international peace and security, as well as the development of co-operation among all nations and the promotion of the rules of international law in relations between States. The Special Committee continued during the year to consider proposals made with a view to enhancing the ability of the United Nations to achieve its purposes, listing and identifying those which awakened special interest.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/147 by which it asked the Special Committee to continue its work. It did not take a decision on a second text which sought to have the Committee review the Charter rule requiring the unanimity of the Security Council's permanent members for the adoption of decisions on non-procedural matters, and would have asked for a study on the right of veto. Details of these actions follow.

Report of the Special Committee

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization met at Geneva from 19 February to 16 March and submitted a report on its work to the General Assembly at its 1979 regular session which opened in September.

The Committee examined in particular proposals concerning questions which the Assembly, by a resolution of 16 December 1978, had requested it to consider in 1979: to complete a listing and examination of proposals made by Member States on peaceful settlement of disputes; to continue its work on listing and examining proposals regarding the maintenance of international peace and security; and to consider proposals on the rationalization of United Nations procedures for the maintenance of peace and security and any proposals under other topics.

The Committee also continued work on listing its proposals, identifying those of special interest, and according priority to areas where general agreement was possible.

Following past practice, the Committee established an open-ended Working Group to discuss the questions referred to it by the Assembly. The Group held 23 meetings between 21 February and 13 March and took up first the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes, using as its starting point the compilation of 51 proposals on the question set out in the Committee's 1978 report.² It also examined working papers submitted by its members.

On the basis of informal consultations, the Group agreed on a list of 21 proposals on the peaceful settlement of disputes, indicating for each the interest it had elicited and whether general agreement was possible. This was included in the Committee's report to the Assembly.

It was believed that general agreement might be reached on the following proposals: adopting an Assembly declaration on peaceful settlement of disputes as a first step towards a treaty on the subject, with a view to codifying general rules; preparing a list of competent and impartial authorities who, with the agreement among parties to a dispute, would appoint arbitrators; wider use of regional arrangements or agencies; encouraging bilateral agreements and including in conventions provisions for peaceful settlement of disputes; reminding States of the principle contained in Article 2, paragraph 3, of the Charter;³ refraining from actions that might make the peaceful solution of a dispute difficult or aggravate the controversy; enhancing the fact-finding capacity of the Security Council; preparing a handbook on United Nations facilities for peaceful settlement of disputes; preparing a questionnaire and a study on why States did not make greater use of existing mechanisms for settling disputes; encouraging greater use of methods set out in Chapter VI of the Charter, on pacific settlement of disputes;4 and encouraging the Security Council to make wider use of Charter Articles 28 and 29 on Council procedures,⁵ and of informal consultations for the discharge of its functions.

There was interest but no general agreement on proposals for: establishing a permanent Assembly commission to fulfil mediation, good offices and conciliation functions; encouraging the Security Council to consider establishing a standing body on fact-finding, conciliation and mediation; more frequent recourse to the International Court of Justice; expanding the list of parties entitled to request advisory opinions from the Court; extending the range of cases on which such opinions might be requested; recourse to means of settlement, with the participation of third parties, the mandatory acceptance of which would be agreed in advance; reminding States of the need for compliance with binding decisions rendered when parties in dispute had voluntarily resorted to a procedure for peaceful settlement; greater use by the Secretary-General of possibilities available to him under Charter Article 99,6 by which he could bring matters threatening peace and security to the Security Council's attention; enhancing the fact-finding capacity of the Assembly and the Secretary-General; and including an item entitled "Peaceful settlement of disputes" in the Assembly's agenda.

The Group's deliberations on other topicsthe questions of rationalization of existing procedures of the United Nations and of the maintenance of international peace and security-consisted of general statements and exchanges of views on specific proposals. The Group had before it 12 working papers on rationalization of existing United Nations procedures, six of which-by Egypt, France, Mexico, the Philippines, Romania and the United Kingdom- had been submitted at previous Committee sessions and six- by El Salvador and Mexico, Greece, the Philippines and Romania, Romania and Turkey, and two by the United States-at the current session. In addition to a series of proposals on the maintenance of international peace and security submitted to the Special Committee in 1977 and working papers presented by Cyprus, Mexico and Tunisia in 1978, the Working Group considered seven papers submitted at the current session by Greece, Romania, Sierra Leone, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia. An additional working paper by the United Kingdom was not discussed for lack of time. Statements made by the Working Group's Rapporteur on the work carried out by the Group were included in the Committee's report, as well as the summary records of the Committee's meetings. The Committee expressed the view in its report that progress had been made towards fulfilment of its tasks.

The report of the Special Committee was considered by the Sixth (Legal) Committee at the 1979 regular session of the General Assembly. The Assembly also had before it a report of the Secretary-General containing observations relating to the work of the Special Committee from Cuba and the Dominican Republic, submitted pursuant to a 1978 Assembly request for new or updated comments and proposals.⁷

The Chairman of the Special Committee, introducing the report, said it had become clear during consideration of the proposals that the Committee would not have time to fulfil its mandate with regard to questions concerning the maintenance of international peace and security. The Committee members had therefore concentrated on presenting proposals and ideas for debate during the Assembly's current session.

The Sixth Committee's debate on the item concentrated on evaluating the work of the Special Committee, the extension of its mandate and possible changes to it, and two draft resolutions. A number of Members referred to substantive aspects of the three questions dealt with by the Special Committee at its 1979 session.

⁷ See footnote 1.

Many States, including Australia, Chile, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, France, Greece, Indonesia, Japan, Mali, Nepal, the Philippines, Romania, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United States and Yugoslavia, congratulated the Committee on the progress made at its 1979 session. Other countries, however, such as Italy, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania, expressed dissatisfaction with what they viewed as very limited results. The USSR felt progress was more apparent than real, as no agreement had been reached on most proposals.

Belgium, Canada, Mexico, Nigeria and the United States had reservations on the format and presentation of the report. Denmark, Ireland and Israel felt, none the less, that the current report was an improvement on that submitted the previous year.

As to the Special Committee's future work, many States, including Canada, Chile, Egypt, France, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Mali, Mexico, the USSR and Uruguay, favoured further work on the peaceful settlement of disputes. Others, such as Cyprus, Kenya, New Zealand, Nigeria, Peru (on behalf also of Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela), the Philippines, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia, believed that priority should be given to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Congo, Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, and Zambia considered that the Committee's work on the question of rationalizing existing United Nations procedures should be given a low priority. The United Republic of Tanzania believed that that topic should be deleted from the Committee's mandate and felt, as did Brazil, that its work on the peaceful settlement of disputes, under active consideration by other specialized bodies of the United Nations, had been concluded. Argentina and Indonesia stressed that priority should be given to those issues on which there was no strong divergence of opinion.

On the general issue of Charter amendment, Algeria, Colombia, the Congo, Guinea, Lebanon, Mauritania, Nigeria, Romania, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of Cameroon, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zaire advocated giving serious consideration to amending the Charter, to reflect changes in the international community since the Second World War and to make the Organization more democratic.

China said no proposal should be discarded merely because it implied Charter amendment. Canada, the Netherlands, Pakistan, and Trinidad and Tobago said they were not opposed to selective amendments.

Many States, including Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, France, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Ireland, Mongolia, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, believed that the effectiveness of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security should be strengthened but that the solution lay in stricter observance of the Charter: efforts should be geared towards fuller use of its possibilities and not towards its revision.

India said that a number of proposals on the peaceful settlement of disputes merely reaffirmed the principles of the Charter, and Sweden felt that no agreement had been reached on the desirability of revising it.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 116 to 0, with 23 abstentions, resolution 34/147 on the Special Committee's report.

By the resolution, the Assembly, while noting that progress had been made in fulfilling the Special Committee's mandate, considered that it had not yet completed its mandate. Taking note of the Committee's report, the Assembly decided that the Committee should continue listing proposals, identifying those of special interest, and according priority to consideration of areas on which general agreement was possible.

The Committee was requested at its next session: to continue its work on listing and examining proposals regarding the maintenance of international peace and security; and to consider proposals on the rationalization of existing procedures of the United Nations and, subsequently, on other topics. It was further requested to continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes with a view to recommending a means of concluding the work on the basis of the list prepared by the Committee in 1978.

The Assembly requested the Committee to report again in 1980 and to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever it had significance for the outcome of its work, and urged full participation by its members. Governments were invited to submit or update their observations and proposals on the topic. The Secretary-General was requested to bring up to date as quickly as possible the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs.

The Sixth Committee had approved the text, which was sponsored by 38 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), on 28 November by 98 votes to 0, with 23 abstentions. It had been put to the vote at the request of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United Republic of Tanzania. On an oral proposal by the USSR, priority in voting was given to this text over a second resolution submitted by Guinea and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (see below). The vote on this motion was 64 to 29, with 23 abstentions.

In explanation of vote, some States, such as Guinea, Portugal and the United States, indicated that their position on the text might change in the plenary Assembly depending upon the results of the vote on the two-power resolution. The USSR expressed reservations on the text as a whole, while China, India, Jordan and the United Republic of Tanzania expressed reservations with regard to specific paragraphs of the draft which they found unacceptable or inadequate.

Jordan said it had some difficulty with a provision by which the Special Committee was requested to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement. Jordan did not deny its importance, but felt that the practice of working by consensus was responsible for the Committee's lack of progress. The United Republic of Tanzania also objected to that provision and to a paragraph by which the Assembly noted that progress had been made in fulfilling the Committee's mandate, since in its opinion the Committee had in fact been retrogressing. A provision that included in the Committee's agenda the question of rationalization of existing procedures was unacceptable to the United Republic of Tanzania, which found the description of the Committee's mandate vague and meaningless. The United Republic of Tanzania felt that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes should not be included in the mandate. India also had reservations on the paragraphs on peaceful settlement, believing that at the current stage it was not possible to engage in the codification and development of law on the subject by either a declaration or a convention.

China said that, in principle, it could accept the resolution, but endorsed the views expressed by the United Republic of Tanzania. It was China's hope, and Sierra Leone's expectation as well, that the Special Committee would seriously consider those views.

Also on 17 December, the Assembly adopted without vote decision 34/432, by which it accepted an offer by the Philippines to act as host to the Special Committee at its January/February 1980 session. The invitation had been extended in a letter of 21 September from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Philippines to the Secretary-General. The Sixth Committee had, without vote, recommended acceptance on 28 November, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

The second draft resolution, submitted by Guinea and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, was approved by the Sixth Committee on 29 November by a recorded vote, requested by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, of 43 to 34, with 44 abstentions. By its preamble, the Assembly would have: reaffirmed the principle of the sovereign equality of all United Nations Members; recognized the importance of the fundamental role played by the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security; noted that the rule that Council decisions on nonprocedural matters required the concurring votes of all the permanent members had often been abused, thus weakening the status of resolutions on the inalienable rights of peoples suffering as a result of racist regimes, foreign and colonialist domination and occupation; and stressed the urgent need for an alternative rule that would avoid the negative effects of past experience and the current situation.

By the operative provisions, the Assembly would have decided that the Special Committee should review the rule requiring the unanimity of the Council's permanent members for the adoption of decisions on non-procedural matters.⁸ When reviewing this rule, the Committee should take into consideration, inter alia: the principle of equality among States; the fact that the maintenance of international peace and security was a grave responsibility requiring the active participation of all countries and peoples; and the strengthening of the role of the Security Council in the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Secretary-General would have been requested to prepare, before the Assembly's 1980 regular session, a study on the right of veto, setting forth, in particular: views expressed in United Nations bodies on the difficulties raised by use of the right of veto with regard to the attainment of the purposes and principles of the United Nations; past efforts to alleviate the effects of the use of that right and their effectiveness; and- the proposals made in United Nations bodies to alleviate those effects and the replacement formulas for that right. Finally, Member States would have been called on to transmit views and observations on the right of veto, and the Special Committee would have been requested to submit to the Assembly in 1981 a report on possible alternatives to the Council's unanimity rule.

With regard to the proposed study on the right of veto, the Legal Counsel, in a statement on 28 November reproduced as a Sixth Committee document, stressed the extreme complexity and sensitivity of the study's subject-matter. He said that by the proposal the Secretariat would be called on to evaluate actual performance of States and their effectiveness and to formulate conclusions in such a way as to adduce evidence in favour of a foregone conclusion which was not shared by the entire membership.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya commented on certain points raised by the Legal Counsel, noting that the views requested were States' views and the efforts and proposals made to alleviate the effects of the use of the right of veto meant the efforts and proposals of States. The Secretariat was asked only to reflect those views, efforts and proposals in order to provide guidelines for the Special Committee. With respect to the Legal Counsel's concern about the time required to prepare the proposed study, the sponsors would give sympathetic consideration at the 1980 session to such problems as the Secretariat might encounter.

The United States said that the two-power draft resolution sought to alter the mandate of the Special Committee defined by the text the Sixth Committee had just approved and would force States to take a position on the question of the right of veto of the Security Council's permanent members. The United States therefore moved that the two-power draft should not be put to the vote. That motion was rejected by 33 votes in favour to 42 against, with 38 abstentions.

Among States which explained their votes in the Sixth Committee in favour of the two-power draft resolution, Iraq stressed that it was necessary to observe the principle of the sovereign equality of all Member States and to grant no privileges to any States in an international organization. Bahrain, Togo and the 'United Republic of Tanzania believed the draft was not in contradiction to the Special Committee's mandate as approved in the 38-power resolution but rather complemented it. It was not the intention, according to Jordan and Pakistan, to prejudge the issue regarding the rule of unanimity among permanent Security Council members on nonprocedural matters. The draft merely called for a review of that rule and requested a report on possible alternatives.

Bulgaria, Hungary and Mongolia considered any attempt to amend the unanimity rule a threat to the United Nations. Sweden saw no reason to review it.

Greece said it felt that the proposal to replace the unanimity rule by another formula should be examined not as a matter of priority but within the context of the revision of the Charter as a whole. China said it regarded the examination and amendment of the Charter as a matter of utmost concern and therefore supported the draft, although it felt it could be improved. Papua New Guinea believed that the rule was necessary at the current stage of international relations.

Among speakers who explained their votes against the draft were the representatives of Austria, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and Portugal, who believed that its adoption would have an adverse effect on the Special Committee's future work and would prejudice the outcome of its deliberations. Jamaica abstained, convinced that a negotiating atmosphere was essential for success and that adoption of the two-power text might affect the Special Committee to the extent of moving some of its members to withdraw. Mongolia supported that view.

On this point, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Poland and the USSR felt the proposal was contrary to the mandate of the Special Committee, as set out in the 38-power resolution just approved, and undermined the very existence of the Organization which was predicated on the principle of unanimity; their continued participation in the work of the Committee would be placed in doubt by the adoption of the text. According to France, the United Kingdom and the United States, the proposal was ill-advised, unrealistic and unacceptable; its adoption would be contrary to the prevailing spirit within the Special Committee and would necessitate their withdrawal also.

Italy and the Ukrainian SSR pointed to the imbalance the resolution would create in the Special Committee's mandate, while Israel doubted that the Committee's existing mandate was appropriate any longer. To the Ukrainian SSR, moreover, the draft represented a step towards undermining the activities of the Security Council. The Byelorussian SSR and Romania said that any modification of the right of veto on substantive matters could only harm the cause of peace and security.

Egypt said it maintained its position of principle in opposition to the right of veto. The United Arab Emirates said that the circumstances that had led to that right had changed; it felt that the study on the matter called for in the text should deal with its abuse. Uganda said that the right of veto should be explored fully under the mandate of the Special Committee.

Argentina and Zambia abstained in the Sixth Committee voting, stressing that, while they believed the veto to be an irritant and an anachronism, the methods and approach of the proposal were unlikely to prove successful or produce better results than consideration of the matter in the Special Committee. Democratic Yemen and Singapore emphasized the desirability of allowing flexibility so that all Committee members could contribute to its work. While Mexico opposed the principle of unanimity and expressed its concern over the abuse of the veto, it abstained in the voting because the draft had several shortcomings. Yugoslavia explained that it viewed the right of veto in current world conditions as vital to the functioning of the Organization but had abstained because it welcomed any serious political discussion on the use of that right so as to prevent its misuse and avoid impediments to the Organization's functioning.

With regard to the recommendation of the Sixth Committee for the adoption of the two-power draft resolution, the Assembly, on a motion by Finland, decided on 17 December not to take a decision on that recommendation. The motion was adopted by a recorded vote of 55 to 43, with 36 abstentions.

In making the motion, Finland said that if the draft resolution were adopted the work of the Special Committee would be endangered, since the text was not supported by a majority of Members and some key Members, notably most of the permanent members of the Security Council, had announced that they would no longer participate in the work of the Committee if controversial proposals contained in the draft were adopted.

Speaking in opposition to the motion, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya called on the Assembly not to submit to pressures from those powers which possessed the veto and which threatened a boycott of the Special Committee.

Also at its 1979 session, the Assembly's General Committee considered a request that an item entitled "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council" be placed on the Assembly's agenda. On 27 November, the Committee rejected a United States amendment to the effect that the question be included as part of the existing agenda item on the report of the Special Committee. Chapter X

Matters relating to Africa

Matters concerning South Africa's Apartheid Policies

During 1979, the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa were again the subject of action by various United Nations organs.

Members of the Security Council, through a statement by its President, called on South Africa in April to spare the life of Solomon Mahlangu, identified in the Council debate as a South African militant who had been tried for murder and condemned to death. Mr. Mahlangu was executed on 6 April. In September, through another statement by the President, the Council condemned the proclamation that month of the so-called independence of Venda, the third bantustan ("tribal homeland") established by South Africa. A Committee of the Council reported in December on implementation of the Council's 1977 arms embargo against South Africa.

The Special Committee against Apartheid reported on its activities and on major developments in South Africa, and made recommendations on ways of accelerating and intensifying the international campaign against apartheid. It also submitted a special report on relations between Israel and South Africa.

In December 1979, the General Assembly adopted 19 resolutions on apartheid and its consequences. One of these was an omnibus text on the situation in South Africa, by which the Assembly condemned several States by name for their collaboration with the Pretoria regime and called for the severance of economic and military relations (resolution 34/93 A). It also adopted a Declaration on South Africa calling for steps intended to eliminate apartheid practices through international pressure (resolution 34/93 O).

Four resolutions related to the issue of sanctions against South Africa. The Assembly called for a tightening of the arms embargo (resolution 34/93 D), requested the Security Council to consider a mandatory embargo on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa (34/93 F), and urged it to consider putting a halt to new foreign investment there (34193 Q. It also decided to organize in 1980 an International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa (34/93 C).

After receiving a report by the Secretary-General giving no corroboration to a report that South Africa might have exploded a nuclear device in September, the Assembly called on States to cease any nuclear collaboration with South Africa and requested the Security Council to consider mandatory measures to prevent it from becoming a nuclear power resolution 34/93 E).

The Assembly condemned what it termed Israel's continuing and increasing collaboration with South Africa and demanded that it terminate such collaboration (resolution 34/93 P).

The Assembly appealed for increased international assistance to the oppressed people and the liberation movement of South Africa (resolution 34/93 I), denounced the establishment of bantustans and called on States to prohibit their nationals from dealing with such entities (34/93 G).

Social and humanitarian issues were the subject of four resolutions. The Assembly demanded the release of all victims of repressive laws in South Africa and declared that captured South African freedom fighters were entitled to prisoner-of-war status (resolution 34/93 H). It appealed for contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa (34/93 B) and to meet the special needs of women and children oppressed by apartheid (34/93 K). It authorized continued work by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, which reported that it had completed all but one article of the text (34/93 N).

In the area of information, the Assembly urged States and organizations to disseminate information against apartheid and prevent the use of media in South Africa's propaganda interest (resolution 34/93 L). It requested priority for apartheid in United Nations public information output and asked the Secretary-General to provide funds for the information programmes of liberation movements (34/93 J). It called for closer co-operation with non-governmental organizations opposing apartheid (34/93 M), and approved a work programme for the Special Committee against Apartheid (34/93 R).

In addition to these 18 resolutions considered directly in plenary meetings, the Assembly decided to enlarge the assistance programme for South African student refugees living in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia to include student refugees from Namibia and Zimbabwe (resolution 34/174).

Details of these and related matters are given in the following subchapters.

Political and other developments

Security Council consideration of the question of South Africa

Communications (January-April)

On 5 March 1979, Angola transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a communiqué issued by the front-line States on 4 March, at the end of a two-day summit meeting at Luanda. Participating were Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. The meeting strongly condemned the co-ordinated acts of aggression committed by the racist and fascist régimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia against the front-line States and appealed to the international community to assist the front-line States to reinforce their defence capability, so that they could more effectively fulfil their historical duty as the strategic rear base of the liberation struggle in southern Africa.

On 15 March, Sri Lanka, as Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted the text of the final communiqué of an Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting held by the Bureau at Maputo, Mozambique, from 26 January to 2 February. The Bureau condemned what it termed the complicity of those Western powers and Israel which were enhancing the military and repressive capability of the South African régime, particularly by extending sophisticated technological and other assistance for the manufacture of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction. It noted with concern plans to defend imperialist interests in the southern hemisphere and the sea route around the Cape of Good Hope through the establishment of an aggressive military pact that might include South Africa. The Bureau called on all member countries of the non-aligned movement to provide a dynamic lead to the international community to step up concrete support commensurate with the needs of the national liberation struggle in South Africa, called for strict and effective implementation of the Security Council's 1977 resolution imposing an arms embargo against South Africa,1 and called on all States to urge the imposition of an oil embargo.

Consideration by the Security Council (5 April)

On 5 April 1979, the Ivory Coast, on behalf of the African group of Member States at the United Nations, requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation created in South Africa by the renewed outbreak of acts of repression by the racist régime of South Africa against the African nationalist freedom fighters and against the black population of that country, committed in implementation of that Government's policy of apartheid.

Also on 5 April, Sri Lanka, as Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, requested an urgent meeting of the Council in connexion with the declared intention of the South African Government to execute Solomon Mahlangu. Sri Lanka also urged the Council President to contact the South African authorities to secure a stay of the execution.

On the same date, in a letter to the Secretary-General referring to appeals for clemency it had received in the case of Mr. Mahlangu, South Africa furnished background information on him and on the events which had led to his conviction for a 1977 murder of two persons and his subsequent sentence. It added that the trial court had found no extenuating circumstances.

The Security Council considered the question of South Africa on 5 April.

The representative of the Ivory Coast was invited, at his request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote. He stated, on behalf of the African group, that Mr. Mahlangu had been condemned to death because he had participated in the revolt of the black communities in 1976 and 1977. Mr. Mahlangu had been accused of murders, offences against the Terrorism Act and, particularly, of being a militant in the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC). The speaker recalled that the General Assembly, in January 1979, had urged that steps be taken to save the lives of Mr. Mahlangu and other captured freedom fighters.²

l See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 161, resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977.

Nigeria recalled that the Council, in 1977, had expressed support for, and solidarity with, all those struggling to eliminate apartheid and all victims of violence and repression by the South African regime, and had demanded the release of all persons imprisoned under arbitrary security laws or detained for their opposition to apartheid.³

At the conclusion of this discussion, the President, after consulting with the Council members, made the following statement on their behalf:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern lest the Government of South Africa proceed with the execution of Mr. Solomon Mahlangu despite appeals from various countries and a number of world leaders, as well as the Secretary-General.

It also recalls the appeal for clemency made by the family of Mr. Mahlangu to the South African authorities through his lawyer. The Security Council also recalls the efforts of the General Assembly to save the lives of Mr. Mahlangu and other South African leaders of the African people under sentence of death.

Members of the Security Council hereby endorse the appeal already made by their President. They make a solemn call to the Government of South Africa to spare the life of Mr. Mahlangu and others facing the same fate in South Africa.

Communications (June-July)

Three letters were sent in 1979 to the Security Council by the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid. The first, dated 11 June, transmitted the text of a declaration adopted by the Committee on 25 May at its special session at Kingston, Jamaica, which included a call for imposition by the Council of effective and mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.⁴ In the other two letters, dated 11 June and 20 July, the Acting Chairman stated that the Committee wished to emphasize the importance of urgent action to stop all loans to, and to impose an effective oil embargo against, South Africa, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions.

Consideration by Security Council (21 September)

On 14 September 1979, Liberia, Chairman of the African group at the United Nations for September, requested the Security Council President to undertake consultations among Council members so that the Council could take action with regard to the proclamation by the Pretoria regime on 13 September of the so-called independence of the bantustan Venda.

On 20 September, the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid transmitted the text of a statement he had issued on 11 September condemning that proclamation. He recalled that the General Assembly had declared in 1977 that proclamations of "independence" of bantustans were totally invalid and had called on all Governments to deny any form of recognition to them.⁵

The Security Council considered the question of South Africa on 21 September.

The President read out the text of the following statement which, as a result of consultations held among Council members, he had been authorized to make on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes that, on 13 September 1979, the South African regime proclaimed Venda, an integral part of South African territory, a so-called "independent" state, in pursuance of its apartheid and bantustanization policy.

The Security Council recalls its resolution 417(1977),⁶ in which it demanded that the racist regime of South Africa should abolish the policy of bantustanization. It also recalls its resolutions 402(1976)⁷ and 407(1977),⁸ in which it endorsed General Assembly resolution 31/6 A of 26 October 1976⁹ on this matter. The Council further takes note of General Assembly resolution 32/105 N of 14 December 1977¹⁰ on the question of bantustans.

The Security Council condemns the proclamation of the so-called "independence" of Venda and declares it totally invalid. This action by the South African regime, following similar proclamations in the case of the Transkei and Bophuthatswana, denounced by the international community, is designed to divide and dispossess the African people and establish client States under its domination in order to perpetuate apartheid. It further aggravates the situation in the region and, hinders international efforts for just and lasting solutions.

The Security Council calls upon all Governments to deny any form of recognition to the so-called "independent" bantustans, to refrain from any dealings with them and to reject travel documents issued by them, and urges Governments of Member States to take effective measures to prohibit all individuals, corporations and other institutions under their jurisdiction from having any dealings with the so-called "independent" bantustans.

The only member which spoke in the Council, the United States, said that its policy was to withhold recognition of and all forms of official relations with Transkei and Bophuthatswana. It would apply the same strict policy to Venda, which was an integral part of South Africa.

On 24 September, South Africa stated in a letter to the Council President that, in the view of the South African Government, the Council meeting of 21 September had been totally unnecessary. South Africa rejected the President's statement as an attempt to deny self-determination to the people of Venda. The Council had no authority or jurisdiction in the matter. Venda had become an independent State and was free to pursue its own policies.

Implementation of the arms embargo

Eight letters from Member States were received between April and September 1979 in response to a request by the Secretary-General, in a note verbale of 21 March, for information about violations of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in 1977. The note was sent at the request of the Security Council Committee Established by Resolution 421(1977) concerning the Question of South Africa, set up in 1977 to examine progress in implementing the embargo, study ways of making it more effective and seek information on what States had done to implement it. 12

Six of the Governments which responded-Angola, the German Democratic Republic, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Suriname, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR-stated that they did not have any political, economic, military or other links with the South African minority regime.

Benin, responding on 3 April, said it believed that the Committee had received information concerning firms or enterprises of Member States violating the embargo. It wondered whether the Committee's closed-door methods of work on such a sensitive and important question were effective and worthwhile, and suggested that it meet in public.

On 26 December, the Committee submitted to the Council a report on nuclear collaboration with South Africa. The question was considered by the Committee and in a working group at 13 meetings held between 3 April and 20 December.

The report set out the different points of view expressed by Committee members on the type of action to be recommended to the Council to avert the danger that South Africa might acquire nuclear weapons. Bangladesh, Bolivia, China, Czechoslovakia, Gabon, Kuwait, Jamaica, Nigeria, the USSR and Zambia considered that the Council should immediately prohibit all forms of nuclear collaboration with South Africa. The other members of the Committee, which was composed of all members of the Council, could not accept that proposal on the ground that it would not promote South Africa's adherence to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (Non-Proliferation Treaty)¹³ and acceptance of international safeguards. Norway proposed that the Council call on States which continued to collaborate with South Africa in the nuclear field to stop such collaboration, unless South Africa accepted full-scope international safeguards.

On 31 December, the Chairman of the Committee transmitted to the Council a report adopted unanimously by the Committee on 20 December. The report contained an account of the Committee's work from 28 February 1978 to 20 December 1979. During that time, the Committee had: adopted guidelines for its work and procedures for investigating alleged violations of the arms embargo; examined the April 1978 report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the embargo;14 investigated seven specific cases of alleged violations; considered the question of existing contractual arrangements with and licences granted to South Africa relating to the manufacture and maintenance of arms, ammunition, and military equipment and vehicles, as well as the export of arms and related matériel to South Africa prior to the embargo; considered the question of nuclear collaboration with South Africa; and heard speakers on the arms embargo, including the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Vice-Chairman of the Sanctions Committee of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and representatives of non-governmental organizations, particularly anti-apartheid organizations, and considered proposals made by them.

An annex to the report listed 118 States which had reported to the Secretary-General on measures taken to implement the arms embargo. The Committee reported that 36 States had replied to the Secretary-General's request for information relating to the Committee's terms of reference, no State had brought to its attention any information relating to specific violations, and 41 States had not replied.

Further communication

On 23 November 1979, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, current Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations, transmitted a document from ANC condemning the death sentence imposed on James Daniel Mange and the long-term imprisonment of his colleagues (the "Pietermaritzburg 12"). According to the document, the Supreme Court of South Africa, on 15 November, had sentenced Mr. Mange, an ANC freedom fighter, to death, and had imposed 14- to 19-year prison sentences on 11 of his colleagues for charges of high treason and 43 alternate counts. It was stated that this was the first time since 1945 that a death sentence had been passed on someone who had not committed any acts of violence.

Reports of Special Committee against Apartheid

On 25 October 1979, the Special Committee against Apartheid submitted its annual report to the General Assembly and the Security Council. The report contained a review of the Committee's work during 1979, as well as conclusions and recommendations.

Among its activities during the year, the Committee followed and publicized developments concerning military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa by Governments and transnational corporations. On 24 and 25 February, it organized a seminar in London on nuclear collaboration with South Africa, which called for urgent international action to end such collaboration. On 20 March, its Chairman wrote to the Chairman of the Security Council's arms embargo Committee expressing concern about reports of continuing infringement of the Council's arms embargo against South Africa and requesting a meeting of the Council Committee at which his Committee could present information and proposals. A World Campaign against Nuclear and Military Collaboration with South Africa, sponsored by the British Anti-apartheid Movement in co-operation with other movements, was launched in London on 28 March with the Committee's encouragement.

The Committee continued to follow developments on economic and other collaboration with South Africa. On 5 March, its Chairman, speaking on the Committee's behalf, commended Iran for deciding to cut off oil supplies to South Africa, and on 22 August the Committee commended Nigeria for nationalizing the assets of the British Petroleum Company for its oil sales to South Africa. It communicated with a number of Governments and with the Secretary-General regarding bank loans to South Africa, sending to several States copies of a study documenting 158 loans, totalling nearly $5.5 billion, made to South African borrowers between 1972 and 1978 by 382 banks encompassing 22 nationalities.

Responding to action by South African authorities against opponents of apartheid, the Chairman of the Committee condemned on 11 May the trial and sentencing of the "Soweto 11," who had been convicted on sedition charges on 30 April, and he called on 22 May for an end to the trial of Zeph Mothopeng and 17 others charged in Bethal under the Terrorism Act. On 6 April, the Committee condemned the execution of Solomon Mahlangu (see p. 167). On 12 September, it commemorated the second anniversary of the killing of Steven Biko, founder of the Black Consciousness Movement in South Africa. It sent a cable of condolences to the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) following the assassination on 12 June of David Sibeko, Director of Foreign Affairs and member of that organization's Presidential Commission.

The Committee continued to seek adherence by additional States to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid. It appealed repeatedly for increased assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and to their liberation movement. It continued to promote the international campaign to achieve the total boycott of apartheid sports teams, protesting to the United Kingdom Government against reported plans for a South African tour by six British rugby teams, and commending France, the Netherlands and the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States for their stands against inviting South African athletes.

The Committee continued to push for the dissemination of information against apartheid, including contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid established under a 1973 resolution of the General Assembly. It maintained contacts with international and national trade unions with a view to promoting concerted action against apartheid. It also cooperated with student and youth organizations, participating with the United Nations Educational, Scientific. and Cultural Organization in organizing a World Conference of Youth and Students on the Struggle of the Peoples, Youth and Students of Southern Africa, held in Paris from 19 to 22 February.

The International Anti-Apartheid Year, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1977, 17 ended on 21 March 1979, at which time the Committee launched the international mobilization against apartheid. On that day it held a special meeting at United Nations Headquarters, New York, to observe the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Other special meetings at Headquarters were held to mark the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggling Peoples of South Africa (16 June) and the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (11 October). All three days had been proclaimed by the Assembly.

The Committee held two special sessions away from Headquarters at which it paid tribute to eminent personalities for their contribution to the liberation struggle in South Africa. It met at Atlanta, Georgia, United States, on 16 January in tribute to Martin Luther King, slain civil rights leader in the United States. It met at Kingston, Jamaica, from 22 to 25 May, in tribute to Caribbean leaders Marcus Garvey of Jamaica, George Padmore and Sylvester Williams of Trinidad and Tobago, Frantz Fanon of Martinique, Dantes Bellegarde of Haiti and Jose Marti of Cuba. The Committee adopted a declaration in Kingston calling for the imposition of effective and mandatory Security Council sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. It held a special meeting on 6 April to observe the twentieth anniversary of PAC.

It organized an International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, held in Paris from 18 to 20 June in co-operation with the Non-Governmental Organizations Sub-Committee on Racism, Racial Discrimination, Apartheid and Decolonization. It sent representatives to 29 conferences, seminars and meetings, and its Chairman sent messages to 12 conferences and other events.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Committee observed that the situation in South Africa had worsened. More discriminatory and repressive legislation had been enacted; the apartheid régime had persisted with its scheme to dismember the country through the creation of bantustans; and repression against opponents of apartheid had intensified, as had aggression against neighbouring States.

The Committee stated that, in desperation, the apartheid régime had committed more crimes and aggression and that its effort to acquire nuclear capability endangered regional and international peace and security. However, the liberation struggle had advanced, as indicated by armed clashes between the liberation movement and the régime and the mass mobilization of the movement under difficult conditions.

It observed that racist domination, plunder and exploitation were the main causes of the crisis in South Africa. Freedom, peace and security in southern Africa could come only with the elimination of apartheid and with self-determination. To that end it urged effective support for the liberation struggle.

The defiance of the apartheid régime was possible, the Committee found, because of the refusal of its major trading partners—particularly France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States—to respect United Nations resolutions, and also because transnational corporations continued to collaborate with the régime. The Committee reiterated its conviction that only sanctions could force South Africa to accept peaceful change. The United Nations must launch an international campaign to mobilize world opinion for total sanctions. Co-ordinated measures should be considered to dissuade Governments and transnational corporations from further collaboration with South Africa.

The Committee emphasized the importance of unilateral measures by some Governments committed to South African liberation. It commended Grenada, Iran and Nicaragua for breaking relations with South Africa. Norway and Sweden were commended for prohibiting new investments. Nigeria and the United Republic of Tanzania were congratulated for denying the benefits of economic co-operation to countries and corporations that violated United Nations resolutions for disengagement from South Africa.

The Committee stressed what it saw as the grave and imminent danger that South Africa might acquire nuclear capability. It urged the Security Council to require all States to terminate all supply of nuclear equipment and material, transfer of nuclear technology, training and exchange of nuclear scientists, and financial assistance to South Africa's nuclear programme. It also called for the total cessation of all military collaboration with South Africa, and specifically for a recall of military attaches.

The Committee viewed economic sanctions and the termination of airline and shipping connexions with South Africa as crucial. It regretted continued collaboration by South Africa's major trading partners and appealed to the Assembly to call for an end to such collaboration. It urged the Assembly and the Security Council to request States to prohibit the supply of oil and oil products and related capital and technology to South Africa. It asked for Assembly authorization to organize in 1980 an International Conference for Sanctions against South Africa.

It urged the Assembly to call for an end to Government promotion of trade with or investment in South Africa, and it said the United Nations and its agencies should set an example by withholding facilities and investments from firms which continued to invest in or make loans to South Africa, refraining from purchase of South African products and prohibiting official travel on South African airways or shipping lines.

The Committee recommended that States take all appropriate measures to prevent sports exchanges with South Africa and terminate visa-free entry privileges to South Africans. It drew attention to the need for humanitarian and educational assistance, as well as assistance to permit the continued liberation struggle by all means, including armed struggle. It also recommended an Assembly appeal for aid to strengthen the defence capability of the front-line States and assistance to compensate for their economic sacrifice in support of the struggle.

The Committee called for an intensified campaign for the release of South African prisoners and a denunciation of the torture and execution of patriots. It urged support for efforts to secure prisoner-of-war status for captured freedom fighters and full political status for political prisoners. Also, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights should be encouraged to persist in efforts to visit political prisoners and detainees.

On information matters, the Committee recommended increased efforts to counter South African propaganda. It called on the Assembly to ask Governments and organizations to cooperate with the United Nations in the production and dissemination of information against apartheid.

On 2 November, the Special Committee submitted a special report to the Assembly and the Security Council on relations between Israel and South Africa, as requested by the Assembly in January 1979.¹⁸ The Committee found that, in spite of condemnations, there was growing collaboration between the two countries. In April 1979, the South African Government had approved the issue of $20 million worth of Israeli bonds on the South African market, the first time foreigners had been allowed to borrow there. Equally indicative was a report in an Israeli newspaper that South Africa had decided to transfer its Embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

In the military and nuclear field, the Committee cited reports that Israel was one of the few countries that participated in the military aspects of South Africa's nuclear programme, and that Israel had given provisional approval to South African companies to submit construction tenders for a large military complex in the Negev desert. The Institute for Strategic Studies in London was quoted as naming Israel as one of the main suppliers of arms to South Africa. Israel was also reported to have sent advisers to train the South African army in anti-guerrilla warfare and to have exchanged laser enrichment know-how for South African uranium. Other reports were that military electronics shipments were being made to South Africa and that Israel was building advanced missile craft for South tions between Israel and South Africa had expanded considerably. Trade missions were being exchanged to cope with increasing trade, said to have exceeded $100 million a year for the first time in 1978. An agreement in principle had been reported in January for the annual supply of 750,000 to 1 million tons of coal to Israel.

According to press reports, two noticeable features of growing economic relations were joint projects and South African investments in Israel, including partnership in a large steel-fabrication project and investment in the construction of a kitchenware manufacturing plant. Smaller projects were also reported to be in the works.

The report added that relations between the two countries in culture, sports, tourism and other areas were also growing.

Israel criticized this report during the General Assembly's debate on apartheid in November (see p. 178).

The results of three meetings organized in 1979 by or in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid were transmitted to the Secretary-General by the Committee's Chairman.

The first of these was the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, held in London on 24 and 25 February. Its report was sent to the Security Council. In its conclusions, the Seminar expressed grave concern over the threat to Africa and world peace caused by South Africa's nuclear capacity. It called for an immediate end to collaboration with South Africa at various levels by Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, the Netherlands, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Seminar rejected as inadequate any safeguards that the régime might be persuaded to accept, including accession to the Proliferation Treaty. Instead, it recommended that the Security Council consider mandatory measures under- Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter to end all nuclear collaboration with South Africa, require the dismantling of its nuclear plants, and warn that any further pursuit of its nuclear programme would result in further international action, including effective collective sanctions. It also appealed to the United Nations and the international community to have existing contracts and agreements relating to nuclear co-operation with South Africa cancelled.

In a letter of 23 March to the Special Committee Chairman, transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General, Romania denied a participant's statement in the Seminar report that Romanians had attended a 1978 international conference on nuclear technology held in South Africa.

The conclusions and recommendations of the International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, held in Paris from 18 to 20 June, were transmitted to the Assembly. The Seminar said the crimes perpetrated against black children in southern Africa were an affront to humanity and called for urgent international action. It cited unequal educational opportunity, extreme poverty and starvation, the separation of families, brutal repression, and barbaric massacres in bombing raids against the front-line States. The rights of the children in southern Africa could not be secured unless apartheid was destroyed.

The Seminar recommended a number of steps to publicize the plight of these children, in part by giving special attention to the matter during the International Year of the Child (1979) and by publishing information materials and textbooks. It urged the Special Committee against Apartheid to encourage investigations by the United Nations and others of the crimes against children in southern Africa. It asked the United Nations and non-governmental organizations to be generous in assisting liberation movements to produce and distribute books on apartheid and the liberation struggle, and in aiding child refugees. It made a special appeal to Governments and agencies to increase their contributions for refugees from South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe, especially for programmes geared to the education and welfare of school-age children.

Also transmitted to the Assembly was the Declaration of the International Seminar on the Role of Transnational Corporations in South Africa, organized by the British Anti-apartheid Movement in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid and held in London from 2 to 4 November. Participants, the Declaration said, were convinced that transnational corporations bore a major share of responsibility for maintaining apartheid, strengthening the racist régime's repressive and military power, and undermining international action to promote freedom and human dignity in South Africa. The home Governments of those firms deserved condemnation. The participants rejected the contention that transnationals could become instruments for promoting freedom and equality through their economic involvement in South Africa.

The Seminar called for total Security Council sanctions against South Africa, universally applied and effectively monitored. These should include a prohibition of military and nuclear transactions, an oil embargo and an end to the flow of finance. Also, co-ordinated campaigns must be launched against key transnational corporations which helped South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and in the petroleum industry, against banks and financial institutions which made loans to that country, and against other providers of crucial support. Their influence on and control over news media in other countries should be exposed, along with the operations of some media as transnational corporations with interests in South Africa.

Decisions of Economic and Social Council and Commission on Human Rights

Assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1979/54, adopted without vote on 2 August 1979, urged organizations in the United Nations system to intensify their assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement. It requested its President to consult with the Chairmen of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 19 with a view to extending the maximum possible assistance to the people concerned. The President was asked to report on the matter at the Council's second regular session of 1980.

The Council dealt with this matter in response to a January 1979 request by the General Assembly that it review annually, in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, the assistance provided by the United Nations system in this regard.²⁰

The Council's decision was recommended by the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, which on 20 July had approved it without vote. The text was proposed orally by the Chairman.

The Assembly adopted a further resolution on this subject in December (see p. 182).

Assistance to South African student refugees

As requested by the General Assembly in 1978, 21 the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly in 1979 concerning assistance to South African student refugees. Annexed to his report were the findings of a review mission which had visited four southern African countries between 10 and 27 May and had examined the situation of the South African student refugees in the course of assessing other United Nations special economic assistance programmes.

The mission noted that there was a continual influx of South African student refugees into the four host countries: Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia. The situation was not expected to improve because of the unsettled political conditions in the region and because of South Africa's progressive application of its bantustan policies. The Governments of the four countries, with the co-operation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), had provided facilities for the refugees and had made clear their intention of giving asylum to those who sought it.

The report indicated that large groups of people, mainly families, had recently crossed into Swaziland and Lesotho to escape inclusion in the bantustan which the South African Government had decided to create on their traditional territory, and had been accorded refugee status. Among the new arrivals in Swaziland were 1,400 primary-school children.

The mission described a number of projects established as part of an emergency assistance programme set up in response to a 1976 Assembly request. These included the building and improvement of educational facilities and student residences, construction of refugee centres, counselling services and placement in African schools. Contributions for assistance to student refugees in Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland, as reported to UNHCR, amounted to $4,752,265 as of May 1979, in addition to $15,943,587 contributed for refugees throughout southern Africa.

The mission concluded that host Governments would require substantial international assistance for some time to help them provide care, maintenance and education to South African student refugees.

On 27 July, when the Economic and Social Council took up this report, the United Nations Joint Co-ordinator for Special Economic Assistance Programmes said that the four countries could not be expected to carry alone the burden of caring for the South African student refugees. Accordingly, the Secretary-General had appealed to the international community to continue and increase support for those refugees. The UNHCR representative said his Office's activities in southern Africa had intensified as a result of the great increase in the number of refugees entering Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland following the Soweto incidents of June 1976 and other refugee movements.

By decision 1979/45, adopted, without vote, on 27 July on an oral proposal by the President, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

The General Assembly adopted a resolution on this subject in December (see p. 185).

Other matters

The Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights adopted a number of other resolutions in 1979 touching on South Africa's apartheid policies. (For page references to texts of Council resolutions and decision, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

On 9 May, by resolution 1979/3 on implementation of the General Assembly's Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983), the Council recommended the text of a resolution for adoption by the Assembly at its 1979 regular session (for details, see p. 797).

By two resolutions adopted on 5 March, the Commission appealed for wider accession by States to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid. By one of them, it also called on States parties to implement the provision in the Convention calling for the prosecution and punishment of persons guilty of that crime (for details, see p. 810). By another resolution of the same date, it requested an updated version in 1980 of a report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa (for details, see p. 811).

On 6 March, the Commission proposed a series of actions against apartheid in South Africa based on recommendations of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, including an investigation of cases of torture and murder of detainees. The Council, noting this resolution in its decision 1979/33 of 10 May, recommended an investigation into the treatment of prisoners and the lot of black children in South Africa, and requested the Assembly to act on the Commission's proposals for special meetings by United Nations bodies devoted to the struggle against apartheid, a study of the South African Government's legitimacy, and an annual symposium on apartheid and racial discrimination. (For details, see p. 812.)

In another action of 6 March, the Commission expressed appreciation to Iran for having severed all relations with, and having stopped all oil supplies to, the South African régime (for details, see p. 813).

By a resolution of 21 February, on the right of peoples to self-determination, the Commission condemned the policy of States which maintained relations with the racist régimes in southern Africa and the massacres of innocent people committed by those régimes (for details, see p. 833).

The Council, by resolution 1979/39 of 10 May, demanded the immediate and complete abolition of all restrictions on the trade union rights of African workers in southern Africa, and the immediate and unconditional recognition of all African trade unions (for details, see p. 859).

By resolution 1979/75 of 3 August, the Council called on States to terminate all collaboration by their nationals and by transnational and other corporations of their nationality with the racist régimes in southern Africa (for details, see p. 627).

The Council, by resolution 1979/50 of 2 August, requested United Nations organizations to continue withholding assistance to the South African Government (for details, see p. 1021).

General aspects

The adoption by the General Assembly in December 1979 of 18 resolutions under the agenda item on the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa was preceded by a debate on the item held in plenary meetings from 6 to 9 November. Prior to this debate, reports of a possible nuclear explosion by South Africa were brought to the Assembly's attention on 26 October, on which date the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to investigate the matter. In addition to the States whose representatives spoke in the debate on apartheid, the Assembly was addressed by Mfanafuthi Johnstone Makatini of ANC and Henry E. Isaacs of PAC.

The Special Political Committee, on 12 November, heard statements on the item by representatives of four non-governmental organizations, in accordance with a decision by the Assembly that organizations having a special interest in the question could be heard. The speakers were: George Houser, Executive Director of the American Committee on Africa; Nouri Abdulrazzak, Acting Secretary-General of the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization; Romesh Chandra, President, and Sekou Souvano and Amos Ngwenya, members of the delegation, of the World Peace Council; and Vassos Lyssarides, Secretary-General of the International Committee against Apartheid, Racial Discrimination and Colonialism in Southern Africa. On 12 December, the Assembly, by decision 34/423 adopted, without vote, on an oral proposal of its President, took note of the Special Political Committee's report on these hearings.

In addition to the 18 resolutions under the apartheid item, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/174, on assistance to South African refugee students, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

Many participants in the Assembly's debate on apartheid called for strengthened sanctions by the international community to isolate South Africa and thereby impel it to abandon its racist policies. African and Eastern European States considered that the Security Council should impose mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. This position was also taken by China, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Yemen and Yugoslavia. Those favouring sanctions spoke specifically of an extension and strict observance of the Council's existing arms embargo, a halt to nuclear collaboration, and the imposition of economic sanctions, including an oil embargo and a ban on loans and investments. The Sudan observed that South Africa was not prepared to give up voluntarily its policy of racial discrimination; it must be forced to do so. Sanctions were timely, said the United Republic of Tanzania, because with every minute of delay South Africa gained strength and capacity for resistance.

Argentina favoured effective United Nations measures to support the oppressed people of South Africa. In Iraq's view, it was time to impose sanctions against any country that did not apply the United Nations sanctions on South Africa. Spain considered that only strict compliance with the measures adopted and to be adopted by the Security Council was likely to convince the practitioners of apartheid.

Sweden, supported by Finland and Singapore, reiterated a proposal by the Nordic countries for a cessation of foreign investments and loans to complement the arms embargo.

Particular concern was expressed by African States and others about the nuclear capability of South Africa, in view of reports that it might have exploded a nuclear device over the South Atlantic. Kenya saw South Africa's efforts to arm itself with nuclear weapons as a clear indication that, unless there were fundamental changes, the régime was rapidly approaching its end. Uganda said that nuclear armament had been part of a long-term master plan so that South Africa could hold Africa at ransom. Peru's position was that, even if there had not been a nuclear explosion by South Africa, it was acquiring the know-how that would allow it to manufacture nuclear weapons and it should be induced to halt such activity.

In the view of Sweden, to apply maximum pressure against South Africa it might be necessary to consider a total cut-off of nuclear cooperation as part of a Security Council programme of economic sanctions. Turkey saw a need for those who engaged in such co-operation to end it or see to it that proper safeguards were taken to prevent tragedies.

On the other hand, France argued that interrupting all civilian nuclear co-operation with South Africa would risk an autonomous, uncontrolled development of that country's nuclear activities in all fields. Finland viewed the problem as proof of the importance of an effective nuclear non-proliferation régime and of the dangers that followed nuclear co-operation without sufficient safeguards. The United States called on South Africa to adhere to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and promptly place all its peaceful nuclear activities under international safeguards.

African and other countries were critical of assistance in nuclear materials and technology which they said had been rendered to South Africa by the West. Even if those who had helped South Africa in the nuclear sphere had done so in good faith, said Burundi, they must realize that Pretoria had taken advantage of their trust. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya commented that South Africa would never have been able to achieve nuclear capability without the West's technical assistance. Viet Nam said that a heavy responsibility fell on the Western countries and Israel, which had collaborated with South Africa in the nuclear sphere.

A number of countries called for an embargo on the shipment of petroleum products to South Africa. If such an embargo were effective, Panama argued, the position of the racist régime would be intolerable.

Some countries considered that violence should be shunned as a means of rectifying the situation. Canada said that demands for extreme measures, including violence, were understandable but should be resisted in favour of constructive action directed to making South Africa recognize the need for change. Greece declared that it would support any initiative which might establish justice by peaceful means. Ireland, speaking for the member States of the European Community, said those within South Africa who were working to end apartheid should be encouraged to achieve peaceful change; that goal should be furthered through channels of communication with South Africa. In Japan's view, maximum pressure should be placed on South Africa through unified support of peaceful and progressive movements in that country. Change in South Africa should not be brought about by armed struggle, said the Netherlands, since that would lead to a conflagration of unknown proportions; loss of patience could not be allowed to dictate a violent course with unforeseeable consequences. Portugal's view was that peaceful change was still possible; there should be a direct dialogue with both the South African Government and its opponents, so that fundamental political and social changes could be brought about through persuasion and strong pressure. Tunisia also believed that the objective of an Africa free from racism could be attained peacefully.

The United States said the economic involvement of its corporations in South Africa provided political leverage for social and political change; it believed in the validity of efforts to work for social change through such corporations, but if the results were not significant or rapid enough it would consider other ways.

A number of countries called for isolating South Africa as a means of pressuring it to abandon its racist policies. Thus, Indonesia said it had actively pursued such a policy by shunning all relations with South Africa. The Philippines also favoured total isolation, adding that those who thought a dialogue with South Africa was still possible suffered from a grievous illusion.

Austria expressed concern that the annual debate on apartheid was failing to advance the common endeavour of the international community, despite the unanimity on basic issues.

Differing views were expressed about the significance of reported changes in some of South Africa's racial practices. Canada said the steps to alleviate some of the more overt strains of apartheid were positive, though they were only minor steps in the essential journey of change. Ireland, on behalf of the European Community, said those countries hoped the changes were the beginnings of a move to abandon apartheid, but they would not be satisfied with modifications of the system and continued to believe that fundamental change was necessary and inevitable.

Many African States and others were sceptical of the reported changes. In Australia's view, they did not represent a fundamental change, and without such a change increasing violence appeared inevitable. Bahrain said the reforms were only dust thrown into the world's eyes, while Botswana characterized them as an attempt to blunt international pressure. Liberia said the policy seemed to be to open first-class hotels and restaurants to blacks but to deny them the economic possibility of ever enjoying such things. Zambia feared that the talk of so-called change was designed to undermine the people's struggle and weaken international solidarity with them.

African, Eastern European and other States blamed the survival of the apartheid régime and its continued defiance of the international community on the military, nuclear, economic, political and other support received from its major trading partners in the West and their transnational corporations. They called for the abandonment of such support.

Bangladesh said that South Africa's future was contingent on the degree of pressure that the countries which supported it could impose on Pretoria. Haiti observed that, although they were in the minority, the supporters of apartheid had proved to be more powerful than the majority. Pakistan remarked that those circles seemed to be more devoted to profit than to the principles of the United Nations. Making a similar point, Venezuela said countries with economic interests in the area were placing those interests above human rights. Without foreign investment and trade, capital flows and oil, said Trinidad and Tobago, the racist régime would not be able to maintain its oppressive society. The role of Western economic collaboration in strengthening the apartheid system was also criticized by Egypt, Democratic Yemen, Grenada, Jamaica, Qatar, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates.

Barbados spoke of the hypocrisy of those who condemned South Africa's practices and even supported resolutions against it while conniving with it. Guyana asked whether Western countries and Israel would have sold arms and nuclear technology to a black-ruled country whose police shot down white schoolchildren demanding freedom in a place like Soweto. India called on certain affluent countries to join the mainstream of the international endeavour to eliminate apartheid so that their support for human rights elsewhere would not have a hollow ring. The United Republic of Cameroon asked how countries could preach human rights and at the same time co-operate with a régime that systematically violated them.

Afghanistan spoke of evidence of agreements between Pretoria and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) on the provision of military technology and supplies. The Byelorussian SSR urged a boycott of the imperialistic monopolies that were co-operating with the apartheid régime. Cuba said it was inadmissible that the major Western countries, including France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, should maintain close collaboration with the racist régime. Czechoslovakia and Hungary also spoke critically of the extensive relations which imperialist and Western countries maintained. The Ukrainian SSR said that, with the assistance of transnational corporations, South Africa was building a mighty military-industrial complex directed against the liberation struggles of its people and its neighbours. The USSR declared that the economic and military potential of South Africa was growing through the support and co-operation of NATO countries.

Several Arab countries condemned Israel for what they called its close ties with South Africa, and cited the special report on this subject by the Special Committee against Apartheid (see p. 173). Israel, however, said it was preposterous to single out Israel for special treatment when its trade with South Africa amounted to less than two fifths of 1 per cent of that country's foreign trade, while the two-way traffic in oil and gold between South Africa and the oil-producing Arab States went on unabated. Israel also rejected what it called the baseless allegations in the report of nuclear and military collaboration.

Warnings were voiced against super-power collaboration with South Africa. Albania said the super-powers were trying to use the Pretoria and Salisbury régimes as their gendarmes against freedom-loving countries and national liberation movements in Africa. China said the national liberation movements would win so long as they strengthened their unity, persisted in struggle, and guarded against meddling and sabotage by the super-powers.

There was widespread condemnation of South Africa's policy of creating bantustans in parts of its territory to serve as homelands for tribal groups. Brazil stated that South Africa's latest attempts to gain international approval for its segregation policies by granting an illusory independence to bantustans had deceived no one. Somalia said this policy made the majority of South Africans aliens and migrant labourers in their own country.

A number of countries condemned South Africa for acts of aggression against neighbouring States. The Gambia stated that South Africa sought to establish a neo-colonial racist sphere of influence in southern Africa. The Sudan said that South Africa's neighbours should be assisted to preserve their independence and compensated for the damage inflicted on them.

Several countries, including Sierra Leone and Sri Lanka, called for mobilization of public opinion, particularly to counter South African propaganda. Senegal said it was particularly important to sensitize opinion in countries that gave assistance to Pretoria. Zaire said the public should be alerted to the fact that Western collaboration with South Africa was impeding the independence of the peoples of southern Africa.

SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA

On 12 December 1979, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/93 A, on the situation in South Africa, by a recorded vote of 109 to 12, with 21 abstentions. By this resolution, sponsored by 42 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), the Assembly condemned the South African régime for its criminal policies and reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle by the country's oppressed people and their national liberation movement by all available and appropriate means, including armed struggle. It appealed to States to assist the liberation movement.

It condemned the apartheid régime's plan to create a "constellation of States" in southern Africa as a scheme for establishing its hegemony in the region and perpetuating racist domination and exploitation. It reaffirmed the United Nations commitment to the total eradication of apartheid and the destruction of the racist régime, rather than so-called reforms.

The Assembly declared as a hostile act any collaboration with the régime or its institutions. It condemned continuing political, military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration with the régime by certain States—in particular the United Kingdom, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Belgium, Israel and Italy—transnational corporations and other institutions.

The Assembly called on Governments to: sever relations with South Africa; prevent transnational corporations and other institutions under their jurisdiction from collaborating with the régime; terminate credits to South Africa by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and other bodies; prohibit the sale of krugerrands; deny facilities to airlines or ships travelling to or from South Africa; end Government promotion of trade and investment in the country; support international sanctions against the régime; and terminate visa-free entry privileges for South Africans

The Assembly requested the Security Council to consider mandatory sanctions to put an end to military or nuclear collaboration, the supply of petroleum and other strategic materials, loans and investments, inducements for investments, import preferences and all trade with South Africa.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General and United Nations organizations to withhold investments in banks and other institutions which invested in or gave loans to the régime, to refrain from purchasing South African products and to prohibit official travel on South African carriers. It requested States members of organizations such as the European communities, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and IMF to deny assistance to South Africa. It appealed to South African youth not to enlist in the country's armed forces.

The paragraph of this resolution by which the Assembly condemned the collaboration of certain named States with South Africa was adopted by a recorded vote of 67 to 25, with 45 abstentions. The separate vote was taken at the request of Senegal.

In explanation of vote, Finland said the Nordic countries had strong reservations on this paragraph and others, as it was inappropriate to single out individual countries in a situation where only concerted international action could bear fruit. A similar point was made by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Costa Rica, India, Indonesia, Ireland (for the European Community States), Japan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Turkey and Uruguay. France voted against the resolution and Japan abstained because they felt they had been unjustly singled out in the text.

Botswana and Swaziland said they would abstain on this and other resolutions calling for sanctions, in view of their geographical proximity to South Africa and resulting economic vulnerability. Greece said it would have voted against the provisions on sanctions if they had been put to the vote separately. Argentina, Australia and Japan had reservations about the call to support armed struggle. Ireland, speaking for the European Community nations, also found this provision unacceptable, while Japan and the Netherlands could not agree to describing South Africa as a country under the rule of an illegitimate Government that should be liberated by armed struggle. Canada did not believe that the policies and actions of the apartheid régime constituted a threat to the peace, as stated in the preamble, and could not support the reaffirmation of the legitimacy of armed struggle. Argentina stated that Governments could not be required to adopt the contemplated sanctions until the Security Council acted. Turkey, referring to the request in the text that States accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, said its Government had legal problems with the Convention.

Australia regretted that the resolution had been drafted in such a way that it could not attract universal support.

Introducing the draft resolution on which this text was based, Nigeria said the appeal for non-enlistment in South Africa's army was new to United Nations resolutions on apartheid and was motivated by a desire to save the young from the consequences of war.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

On 12 December, by a recorded vote of 125 to 7, with 12 abstentions, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/93 C, by which it decided to organize in 1980, in co-operation with OAU, an International Conference on Sanctions against South Africa. It authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to organize and prepare for the Conference, with the aid of the Secretary-General.

The text was sponsored by 59 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Liberia, which introduced it, said the proposal for a conference on sanctions arose from the feeling that the time had come for concrete action against apartheid.

France said it had voted against the resolution because the powers of the Security Council could not be attributed to an international conference. Canada voted against and the Netherlands abstained on the ground that only the Council could initiate effective measures.

ARMS EMBARGO AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Resolution 34/93 D, adopted by the General Assembly on 12 December by a recorded vote of 132 to 3, with 9 abstentions, contained measures intended to strengthen the Security Council's arms embargo against South Africa. It was a revised text with 61 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly again requested the Council to declare that military or nuclear collaboration with South Africa constituted a threat to international peace, and to take mandatory measures to end such collaboration and supplies of technology and materials which could be used for military or nuclear-weapons purposes. It again requested the Council to take mandatory measures to ensure that States revoked licences granted to South Africa for the manufacture of arms and equipment, prohibited their corporations from manufacturing in South Africa arms and equipment for military and police use, terminated exchanges of military and scientific attaches, prohibited the supply of aircraft and electronic equipment, and prevented recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for the

The Assembly requested States to assist in monitoring the arms embargo. It authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid to consult Governments of arms-exporting countries on means to reinforce the embargo, to continue to publicize developments concerning military and nuclear collaboration with the régime, to hold hearings and encourage conferences and campaigns to promote the cessation of such collaboration, and to co-operate with the Security Council Committee concerning the Question of South Africa.

Introducing the text, Nigeria said it would help highlight breaches of the arms embargo, in view of restrictive legal constructions placed on it by some countries.

Argentina said the clause on terminating the exchange of military and scientific attaches did not necessarily belong in the category of mandatory measures to be taken against South Africa. The Netherlands said it had voted for the resolution with reservations about entrusting the Special Committee against Apartheid with a monitoring task that belonged to the Security Council and about widening the scope of measures against South Africa beyond a mandatory arms embargo. Canada abstained because the contemplated measures came under the Council's mandate. New Zealand voted for the resolution although it felt that only the Council could decide on the nature of mandatory measures. The Federal Republic of Germany abstained because it could not see how the resolution could advance the situation.

NUCLEAR COLLABORATION WITH SOUTH AFRICA

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted, by a recorded vote of 119 to 4, with 18 abstentions, resolution 34/93 E, by which it called on States, particularly France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States, to cease forthwith all nuclear collaboration with South Africa, including that of corporations and other bodies under their jurisdiction, and to send to the Secretary-General any information on attempts by South Africa to acquire nuclear-weapon capability. The resolution was sponsored by 43 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below) in the revised version in which it was adopted.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly requested the Security Council urgently to consider mandatory measures to prevent South Africa from detonating, developing or acquiring nuclear weapons, and to warn that the acquisition or testing of such weapons would be met with enforcement action under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

Nigeria, introducing the draft resolution, stated that it sought to strengthen the Security Council's arms embargo against South Africa in light of recent developments concerning that country's nuclear ambitions.

Ireland said it had abstained in the vote because at least one of the States mentioned in the text had unequivocally denied that it continued to collaborate with South Africa on nuclear matters. Australia and France said the call for cessation of all nuclear collaboration with South Africa blurred the distinction between civilian and military co-operation. France added that the accusation implicit in the text that the States mentioned were helping South Africa produce atomic explosives was contrary to fact. Australia, Austria and New Zealand voiced reservations about singling out States for condemnation. Canada abstained out of concern that the resolution might weaken incentives for South Africa to adhere to the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

INOUIRY INTO REPORTS OF A

NUCLEAR EXPLOSION BY SOUTH AFRICA

On 26 October 1979, by decision 34/404, adopted, without objection, on an oral proposal by the President, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to conduct an immediate investigation into reports that South Africa had conducted a nuclear explosion and to report to the Assembly on the matter. The suggestion for an investigation was made by the representative of Nigeria, Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, who said the explosion reportedly took place on 22 September in an area of the Indian Ocean and South Atlantic that included part of Africa. He added that Africa held the suppliers of materials and technology to South Africa responsible.

In an interim report dated 31 October, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that he had requested information on the matter from South Africa and the United States.

A further report dated 12 November reproduced a note verbale of 5 November from South Africa stating that it had no knowledge of any recent nuclear explosion in or near southern Africa, and appended a corroborating statement of 30 October by the South African Atomic Energy Board. The report also contained a note verbale of 9 November from the United States to which was attached that Government's reply stating that the only indication it had that a nuclear explosion might have occurred in the region was a signal from one of its satellites on 22 September. It had no corroborating evidence that a nuclear explosion had actually occurred. A panel of experts had been established to investigate.

An addendum, dated 26 November, to the Secretary-General's report contained a letter of 23 November from New Zealand stating that scientific evidence and research in that country did not verify that South Africa, or any other country, had detonated a nuclear device in the southern hemisphere on or around 22 September.

In a further addendum dated 13 December, the Secretary-General reported that he had no further information on the subject.

By resolution 34/76 A on the denuclearization of Africa, adopted on 11 December, the Assembly condemned the reported detonation of a nuclear device by South Africa and reaffirmed that South Africa's nuclear programme posed a grave danger for African States and international peace. It called for the cessation of nuclear collaboration with South Africa and requested Security Council enforcement action to prevent it from acquiring nuclear weapons. (See p. 46.)

By resolution 34/76 B of the same date, the Assembly requested a report in 1980 on South Africa's plan and capability in the nuclear field (see p. 47).

OIL EMBARGO AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

By resolution 34/93 F, adopted on 12 December by a recorded vote of 124 to 7, with 13 abstentions, the General Assembly requested the Security Council to consider urgently a mandatory embargo, under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, on the supply of petroleum and petroleum products to South Africa. The resolution had 62 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The Assembly also requested States to enact legislation prohibiting the direct or indirect supply of petroleum and petroleum products and related services by persons and companies to South Africa. States were urged to include in contracts for the sale of petroleum and related products provisions prohibiting direct or indirect resale to South Africa. The Assembly requested States to take effective legislative measures to prevent petroleum and shipping companies, banks and other institutions from assisting the circumvention of the oil embargo by South Africa, under threat of seizure of vessels and their cargo.

The Secretary-General was requested to appoint a group of experts to prepare a report containing proposals on means to enforce an effective oil embargo. The Special Committee against Apartheid was authorized, in co-operation with OAU, to enhance global support for the move.

Algeria, which introduced the resolution, credited the liberation movements of southern Africa with making possible the application of an arms embargo against South Africa and then the preparation of a mandatory oil embargo.

Finland said the Nordic countries could implement an Assembly request for an oil embargo only if the Security Council decided to impose it. A similar point was made by the Netherlands. Brazil said it had voted for the resolution despite the belief that the matter fell essentially within the Council's competence. In France's view, to quarantine South Africa would only increase the difficulties faced by the population and harden the position of those opposed to change.

BANTUSTANS

On 12 December, by resolution 34/93 G, adopted without a vote, the General Assembly again denounced the establishment of bantustans as designed to consolidate apartheid, destroy the territorial integrity of South Africa, perpetuate white domination and deprive Africans of their rights. It rejected the so-called "independence" of Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda, reaffirmed the rights of Africans in South Africa as a whole and declared support for any State that might be threatened by the régime in pursuit of the bantustan policy. It called on States to continue to deny recognition to bantustans and to prohibit their nationals and corporations from dealing with them.

Haiti, which introduced the resolution on behalf of 81 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), described the bantustan policy as despicable and calculated to ensure white domination and secure cheap labour, while subjecting blacks to wretched living conditions and statelessness.

France said the resolution posed difficulties for a country which honoured freedom of movement. The United Kingdom said it would not take measures infringing individual freedom in order to prohibit dealings with bantustans. The United States said its observance of the request to prohibit dealings with bantustans would conform to existing United States law.

POLITICAL PRISONERS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Without a vote, the General Assembly, on 12 December, adopted resolution 34/93 H, by which it again demanded the end of repression and violence by the South African régime, the release of all victims of repressive laws, and the abrogation of bans on organizations and news media opposed to apartheid. It expressed solidarity with the liberation movement and declared that prisoner-of-war status must be given to freedom fighters.

The Assembly urged action by the Secretary-General and Member States to save persons threatened with execution for treason or under the Terrorism Act by the illegitimate racist régime. It encouraged ICRC and other bodies to continue to seek access to political prisoners and detainees, and requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue the campaign for their release.

The draft resolution, sponsored by 76 nations

(see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was introduced by India, which remarked that a reign of terror had been unleashed on opponents of apartheid. Continued trials and death sentences underscored the urgency of international action to ensure the end of repression and the release of political prisoners.

Finland said the Nordic countries' support for the resolution did not mean they were giving up their position on the applicability of prisoner-of-war status. Argentina, Austria and Japan also reserved their position on prisoner-of-war status, as did Ireland, speaking for the European Community members. The United Kingdom said it did not accept the reference to the illegitimacy of the South African Government.

ASSISTANCE TO OPPRESSED SOUTH AFRICANS AND THEIR NATIONAL LIBERATION MOVEMENT

An appeal for increased humanitarian, educational, economic and other assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and for appropriate assistance to its liberation movement was contained in resolution 34/93 I, adopted by the General Assembly on 12 December by a recorded vote of 134 to 3, with 7 abstentions. The Assembly authorized the Special Committee against Apartheid, with help from the Secretariat's Centre against Apartheid, to promote such assistance. It also authorized provision in the United Nations budget to maintain the New York offices of ANC and PAC.

The revised draft resolution on this subject was sponsored by 73 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The original draft was introduced by Peru, which announced that the sponsors were adding the paragraph on budgetary provision for the two liberation movements. This paragraph was adopted by a recorded vote of 111 to 9, with 21 abstentions. The vote was requested by the United States, which said it was unwise and illogical for the United Nations to offer financial support to organizations whose avowed purpose was to overthrow the Government of a Member State.

According to a statement of financial implications prepared by the Secretary-General, the amount set aside for this purpose in the programme budget was $180,000 for the two years 1980-1981.

Costa Rica said it was dangerous for the United Nations to finance offices of outside organizations. The Netherlands said it did not believe that the South African liberation movements could claim to represent the South African people. Objections to this provision were also voiced by Australia, Canada, France and the Federal Republic of Germany.

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON APARTHEID

The General Assembly adopted on 12 December, by a recorded vote of 142 to 0, with 3 abstentions, resolution 34/93 J, by which it requested Governments and organizations to co-operate with the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Centre against Apartheid in the production and dissemination of information on apartheid. It appealed for generous contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid, and urged the Committee and the Centre to use the Fund for such purposes as production of publications and audio-visual material in all languages.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Department of Public Information gave priority to information on apartheid. He was asked to issue postage stamps against apartheid and, in consultation with the Committee, to continue radio broadcasts to South Africa and to supply programmes for broadcast by Member States. He was further requested to assist liberation movements by providing funds for their information programmes. Governments, organizations and media were invited to counteract South African propaganda.

Tunisia, one of the resolution's 64 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), introduced the text. It expressed the view that United Nations radio programmes on apartheid, previously produced on a temporary basis, should be given a regular standing to keep the people of southern Africa from despair.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN UNDER APARTHEID

On 12 December, the General Assembly, without a vote, adopted resolution 34/93 K, by which it appealed for contributions to meet the special needs of women and children oppressed by apartheid, including refugees. It requested United Nations bodies to publicize that group's oppression and its resistance to apartheid. Governments were asked to act in pursuance of the recommendations of the International Seminar on Children under Apartheid, held in Paris in June (see p. 174).

The resolution was sponsored b 80 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.) The Philippines, which introduced it, urged that more attention be focused on women and children victims of apartheid since they were the most vulnerable.

ROLE OF THE MASS MEDIA

IN ACTION AGAINST APARTHEID

On 12 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/93 L adopted by a recorded vote of 125 to 0, with 19 abstentions, made recommendations on the role of the mass media in international action against apartheid. By this resolution, sponsored in its revised form by 68 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below, the Assembly urged States to promote the use of the mass media for disseminating information on United Nations activities against apartheid, terror and repression by the Pretoria régime, South African aggression against neighbouring States, bantustanization, co-operation with the racist régime, and the liberation struggle. It urged States and organizations to prevent the use of the media in the interest of the apartheid régime and to counter its propaganda. It appealed for co-operation from the media and appealed to journalists to show solidarity with their persecuted colleagues in South Africa.

The Assembly requested the United Nations Centre against Apartheid to publicize information on detention and banning of writers and journalists, press restrictions and censorship, apartheid propaganda, and solidarity with journalists in South Africa.

The resolution was introduced by Tunisia, which remarked that public opinion, especially in a certain part of the world, knew little or nothing about apartheid.

Austria said that for constitutional reasons it could not exert influence on editorial policies and news reporting. Finland said the Nordic countries could not vote for the resolution because some of its wording implied an infringement of press freedom. France said it had abstained out of regard for freedom of movement for people, property and ideas. Ireland, on behalf of the European Community members, said they could not endorse texts that implied that mass media or journalists were subordinate to governmental dictates. Japan and Turkey voted for the resolution even though it raised constitutional difficulties for them relating to press freedom. New Zealand said it could not accept the concept of a direct Government role in the affairs of the mass media. The United States said its laws made it impossible to carry out some of the requests in this resolution.

ROLE OF NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS IN INTERNATIONAL ACTION AGAINST APARTHEID

Without a vote, the General Assembly adopted on 12 December resolution 34/93 M, by which it requested the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Centre against Apartheid and other United Nations bodies to continue and further develop co-operation with nongovernmental organizations opposing apartheid. It invited Governments to encourage and assist such organizations.

The draft resolution was sponsored by 64

States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). Introducing it, Ghana said the role of non-governmental organizations in the struggle against apartheid could not be over-emphasized.

APARTHEID IN SPORTS

On 12 December, by a recorded vote of 131 to 0, with 14 abstentions, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/93 N, by which it commended Governments, sports bodies, sportsmen and organizations which had acted to end sports exchanges with South Africa.

The Assembly extended the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports with a view to completing a draft convention in 1980. The resolution, introduced by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, was sponsored by 68 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Canada stated that its constitution prevented it from adhering to a convention on this topic. Ireland, speaking for the European Community nations, said that, while they remained dedicated to the Olympic principle of non-discrimination, sports were organized on a private basis in those countries. Ireland added that it would abstain for that reason. The United States said its position on the participation of private individuals in sports events remained unchanged.

The request for an extension of its mandate was made by the Ad Hoc Committee in a report to the Assembly covering its work in 1979. A Working Group composed of nine members of the Committee reported on 31 October that it had made significant progress on a draft convention aimed at preventing sports contacts with a country practising apartheid, with only one article remaining to be written. The Committee had begun this work in 1978, at the Assembly's request.²⁴

The Working Group said it had redrafted an article on a system under which States parties to the convention would report every two years, to an International Commission against Apartheid in Sports, on action they had taken to give effect to the convention. It had rewritten another article to enable the Commission to examine a complaint from one State party that another had violated the convention, if the State complained against had accepted this procedure in advance.

Two alternative texts for the remaining article were examined by the Working Group. According to one, States would be required to ensure that their nationals refrained from participating in sports events which included individuals or teams from a country practising apartheid. According to the other text, this bar would be broadened to apply to sports events which included individuals or teams that engaged in sports activities with teams and individuals from a country practising apartheid.

DECLARATION ON SOUTH AFRICA

In adopting resolution 34/93 0 without vote on 12 December, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on South Africa. The Assembly thereby declared that all States were to recognize the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of South Africa and their right to choose their means of struggle. States were to refrain from all support of the apartheid régime and to curb mercenary activities in South Africa.

In addition, the Assembly declared that States were to discourage and counteract propaganda for apartheid, respect the desire of African States for the denuclearization of the continent and refrain from assisting South Africa to become a nuclear power.

Introducing this text on behalf of 58 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it was for the Assembly to support the people of South Africa in their struggle to establish a society free from fanaticism and discrimination.

Brazil stated its understanding that the action of liberation movements must be in compliance with international law. France and the Netherlands said that only peaceful means were legitimate in the anti-apartheid struggle. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom dissociated themselves from any endorsement of violence. The United States said that actions sanctioned by the Assembly must not include actions contrary to the United Nations Charter.

RELATIONS BETWEEN ISRAEL AND SOUTH AFRICA

Resolution 34/93 P, by which the General Assembly condemned Israel's continuing and increasing collaboration with South Africa and demanded that it terminate such collaboration, was adopted on 12 December by a recorded vote of 102 to 18, with 22 abstentions. The Assembly requested the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review. The text, sponsored by 53 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was introduced by the Sudan.

Israel said it would not participate in the vote because it was the only country in the world singled out for specific condemnation in a special resolution, based on patent falsehoods. Finland said the Nordic countries would vote against it for the same reason. Singling out one country while excluding others was also given as the reason for Ireland's opposition and for the abstentions of Argentina, Costa Rica, Mexico and Uruguay.

INVESTMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/93 Q of 12 December, adopted by a recorded vote of 130 to 0, with 12 abstentions, urged the Security Council to consider at an early date the matter of investments in South Africa with a view to taking steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments and loans. The resolution had 59 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The text was introduced by Sweden, which said it was urgent to stem the flow of investment funds, since that would make it harder for South Africa to build a military and nuclear capacity.

The United States said the recommendation did not accord with its policy.

PROGRAMME OF WORK OF THE

SPECIAL COMMITTEE AGAINST APARTHEID

On 17 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 34/93 R, adopted by a recorded vote of 134 to 0, with 6 abstentions, approved the programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid. By this resolution, sponsored by 60 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), the Assembly requested the Committee to review all aspects of apartheid and its international repercussions, promote dissemination of information on apartheid and the liberation struggle, encourage implementation of United Nations resolutions, promote action and support for the liberation movement, and promote the international mobilization against apartheid.

It authorized the Committee to send missions to promote action against apartheid, co-operate with other organizations, participate in conferences against apartheid, organize events in home countries of transnational corporations to educate the public on their activities in South Africa, consult with South African liberation movements and anti-apartheid organizations and, where necessary, hold sessions away from United Nations Headquarters in New York.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to strengthen the United Nations Centre against Apartheid. It requested the Assembly President to expand the membership of the Committee, It decided to make a special annual allocation of $150,000 from the United Nations regular budget for 1980-1981 for special projects to be decided on by the Committee to promote the international mobilization against apartheid, and also to seek voluntary contributions for such projects.

The resolution, twice revised by the sponsors, was introduced by Nigeria, which stressed the need to provide the Special Committee with adequate resources and staff. Nigeria expressed regret that the United Nations Members comprising the regional group of Western European and other States did not have members on the Committee.

ASSISTANCE TO STUDENT REFUGEES

FROM NAMIBIA, ZIMBABWE AND SOUTH AFRICA

On 17 December, by resolution 34/174, adopted without a vote, the General Assembly enlarged the assistance programme for South African student refugees living in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia to include the care, health, education and other needs of student refugees from Namibia and Zimbabwe. It requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with UNHCR and other United Nations organizations, to mobilize assistance in order to facilitate the resettlement of refugee families from the border areas of South Africa, and to provide adequately for the well-being of the children concerned.

Expressing appreciation that the host countries continued to grant asylum and provide facilities to the student refugees in spite of the pressure which the influx placed on them, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General and UNHCR to organize and implement a programme of educational and other assistance for the student refugees. It urged States and organizations to contribute generously to this programme financially and by offering education and vocational training. The Secretary-General was asked to report to the Assembly at its 1980 regular session, through the Economic and Social Council.

The resolution was recommended by the Third Committee, which approved it without vote on 30 November. The draft resolution—sponsored by Algeria, Botswana, Ethiopia, Ghana, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Swaziland, Yugoslavia and Zambia—was introduced by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which said it was submitting the text on behalf of all the African Member States of the United Nations.

Before the Assembly was the report by the Secretary-General on assistance to South African student refugees which the Economic and Social Council had examined in July (see p. 174). Presenting this report to the Third Committee on 26 November, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions recalled that the South African student refugee programme had been established in 1976²⁵ following demonstrations in Soweto, South Africa, against that country's educational policies for the black population, and the flight into neighbouring countries of several hundred black students to escape repression and obtain more comprehensive education. In view of unsettled political conditions in the region, the host Governments did not expect the situation to improve and felt that educational and other facilities for the student refugees must be expanded.

Other General Assembly decisions

The General Assembly at its 1979 regular session adopted a number of other resolutions with a bearing on apartheid. Relevant portions are described briefly below. (For page references to texts of these resolutions, refer to INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS.)

By resolution 34/4, on the International Year of the Child (1979), adopted on 18 October, the Assembly asked Governments and organizations for special assistance to children living under apartheid (see p. 909).

By resolution 34/21 of 9 November on cooperation with OAU, the Assembly reaffirmed United Nations determination, together with OAU, to wipe out colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid in southern Africa. It reiterated its appreciation for the Secretary-General's efforts in assisting African States in economic difficulty and helping front-line States cope with the effects of aggression by South Africa and the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. It requested him to continue co-operating with OAU, particularly in assisting victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa, and it drew attention to the need to contribute to the OAU Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid. (See p. 264.)

By resolution 34/24, on the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983), adopted on 15 November, the Assembly condemned apartheid and reaffirmed support for the national liberation struggle against it. The Assembly called on Governments to take measures against the operation of enterprises in southern Africa by their nationals and corporations. It commended liberation and anti-apartheid movements for their contributions towards the objectives of the Decade.

The Assembly adopted a four-year programme of activities for the second half of the Decade. This called for efforts to isolate the racist régimes completely and apply sanctions against them. The Security Council was asked to consider imposing complete mandatory sanctions against South Africa. Information on the evils of apartheid would be intensified and efforts mounted for the release of anti-apartheid political prisoners. States would prohibit organizations that propagated apartheid. The programme also called for a seminar on measures to prevent transnational corporations and others from collaborating with the racist régimes, a colloquium on the elimination of apartheid and racial discrimination, a newspaper editors' round-table on the role of mass communication media in these efforts, and studies on ways of ensuring implementation of United Nations resolutions and international instruments on apartheid, the links between the struggle against racism and the struggle for self-determination in southern Africa, and the situation of women and children there. (See p. 798.)

By resolution 34/27 of 15 November, the Assembly appealed to States to ratify or accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid. It welcomed the efforts of the Commission on Human Rights to draw up a list of individuals and organizations alleged to be responsible for crimes under the Convention. (See p. 810.)

By resolution 34/28, also adopted on 15 November, the Assembly commended the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination for continuing to focus on the struggle against colonialism, oppression and occupation, particularly in southern Africa. It invited States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination²⁶ to provide the Committee with information on their relations with the racist régimes in southern Africa. (See p. 802.)

By resolution 34/41 of 21 November, on activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding implementation of the General Assembly's 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Assembly condemned all such activities in southern Africa and declared that collaboration with the racist régimes was detrimental to the interests of the oppressed. It condemned countries which maintained any relations with South Africa and strongly condemned those colluding in the nuclear field. It requested a halt to investments, loans and trade agreements there, and demanded an end to oil exports to South Africa and punishment for non-compliance. It called for Security Council sanctions, including an oil embargo and the withdrawal of investments, and appealed to non-governmental organizations to continue mobilizing public opinion for sanctions. (See p. 1030.)

By resolution 34/42 of 21 November, on implementation of the 1960 Declaration by the specialized agencies, the Assembly deplored the cooperation of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and IMF with South Africa and called on United Nations organizations to withhold all assistance from its Government (see p. 1023).

By resolution 34/44, on the importance of the right of self-determination, adopted on 23 November, the Assembly condemned bantustanization and supported the legitimate struggle against the racist white minority régime of South Africa. It also condemned the policies of NATO members and other countries whose relations with the racist régimes of southern Africa encouraged their oppressive behaviour, and demanded a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa. The Assembly condemned the régimes' massacre of women and children and called for maximum international assistance to victims of racial discrimination through OAU-recognized liberation movements. (See p. 833.)

By resolution 34/46 of the same date, on ways within the United Nations system to improve the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the Assembly requested a study on how current international conditions, including situations resulting from apartheid, affected the realization of those rights and freedoms (see p. 849).

By resolution 34/94 of 13 December, on implementation of the Declaration on granting independence, the Assembly reaffirmed that colonialism in all its forms, including apartheid and racism, was incompatible with the United Nations Charter and posed a serious threat to international peace and security. It condemned and called for an end to nuclear and military collaboration with South Africa, and requested States to withhold direct or indirect assistance to it. (Seep. 1015.)

By resolution 34/100, on strengthening international security, adopted on 14 December, the Assembly urged increased support for liberation movements and implementation of United Nations resolutions calling for the elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid. It recognized the advance in the struggle to eliminate such practices. (See p. 138.)

By resolution 34/103 of the same date, on the inadmissibility of hegemonism, the Assembly resolutely condemned imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism and apartheid (see p. 147).

By resolution 34/130, on assistance to Lesotho, adopted on 14 December, the Assembly took note of that country's requirements to implement development projects necessitated by the political situation in the region and to lessen dependence on South Africa (see p. 240).

By resolution 34/152, on the world social situation, adopted on 17 December, the Assembly reaffirmed that all forms of oppression such as apartheid and racial discrimination were major obstacles to world social and economic progress and had to be eliminated without delay (see p. 750)

By resolution 34/182, on questions relating to information, adopted on 18 December, the Assembly reaffirmed the need to intensify the struggle against apartheid through the information media (see p. 452).

Communications

On 16 March 1979, China stated in a letter to the Secretary-General that a document of the International Conference for the Liberation of Southern Africa and against Apartheid, published by the United Nations Centre against Apartheid in November 1978, contained a slanderous reference to China, distorting its support for the liberation struggle in southern Africa. The Chinese Government had refrained from contact with the racist colonial authorities in southern Africa in support of that struggle.

On 17 December, South Africa stated in a letter to the Secretary-General that it rejected General Assembly resolutions 34/93 A-R on South Africa in their entirety. The South African Foreign Minister had characterized the Assembly's resolutions as supporting strife rather than seeking genuine and constructive solutions. South Africa was being used to divert attention from countries in real breach of the Charter, perpetrating genocide and other atrocities. The Foreign Minister had added that the apartheid image created by the United Nations was a lie and that South Africa was playing a constructive role in southern Africa.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

During 1979, 583 South African students were studying in 21 countries abroad on scholarships granted under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, which the General Assembly established in 1967. In the 12 months ended 30 September 1979, 827 applications were received from South Africans, 181 new awards were granted and 402 awards were extended.

After reviewing the Programme at its 1979 session, the Assembly on 21 November adopted resolution 34/31, by which it appealed to all States, organizations and individuals to recognize the increasing demand for educational opportunities by the people of South Africa,

Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to acknowledge the rapidly increasing costs of higher education and training by offering generous financial support to ensure the Programme's continuation and expansion. (For further details, see p. 266.)

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, Recalling and reaffirming the Programme of Action against Apartheid adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 31/6 J of 9 November 1976.

Taking note of the conclusions of the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, held in London on 24 and 25 February 1979, and of the International Seminar on the Role of Transnational Corporations in South Africa, held in London from 2 to 4 November 1979,

Gravely concerned about the situation in South Africa, and in southern Africa as a whole, resulting from the policies and actions of the apartheid régime, in particular its efforts to perpetuate and consolidate racist domination in the country, its policy of "bantustanization," its brutal repression of opponents of apartheid and its constant acts of aggression against neighbouring States,

Reaffirming that apartheid is a crime against humanity,

Reaffirming further that the policies and actions of the apartheid régime constitute a threat to international peace and security.

Conscious of the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to secure the elimination of apartheid and the liberation of the South African people,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3411 C (XXX) of 28 November 1975 in which it proclaimed that the United Nations and the international community had a special responsibility towards the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movements,

Reaffirming that any collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and a contemptuous defiance of the United Nations and of the international community,

Considering that such collaboration strengthens the racist régime, encourages it to persist in its repressive and aggressive policies and seriously aggravates the situation in South Africa, thereby constituting a threat to international peace and security,

Reiterating its firm conviction that mandatory economic sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations are essential to facilitate the speedy eradication of amartheid

Concerned that the major Western and other trading partners of South Africa continue to collaborate with the racist régime and that their collaboration constitutes the main obstacle to the liquidation of the racist régime and the elimination of the inhuman and criminal system of apartheid,

Alarmed at the continued collaboration of certain Western States and Israel with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field,

Recognizing that utmost priority must be accorded to international action to secure the full implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations for the eradication of apartheid and the liberation of the South African people,

Convinced that it is incumbent on the international community to provide all necessary assistance to the national liberation movement and its legitimate struggle,

Recalling the launching by the United Nations on 21 March 1979 of the international mobilization against apartheid, with particular emphasis on the cessation of all collaboration with the apartheid régime and full support of the national liberation movement of South Africa,

- 1. Strongly condemns the illegitimate minority racist régime of South Africa for its criminal policies and actions;
- Again proclaims its full support of the national liberation movement of South Africa, as the authentic representative of the South African people, in its just struggle for freedom;
- 3. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and their national liberation movement-by all available and appropriate means, including armed struggle-for the seizure of power by the people, the elimination of the apartheid régime and the exercise of the - right of self-determination by the people of South Africa as a whole:

- 4. Commends all States which have provided assistance to the national liberation movement of South Africa and urges them to increase such assistance;
- 5. Appeals to all States to provide all necessary assistance to the national liberation movement of South Africa in this crucial stage of its struggle;
- 6. Condemns the plan of the apartheid régime for the creation of a "constellation of States" in southern Africa as a scheme for the establishment of its hegemony in the region and the perpetuation of racist domination and exploitation;
- 7. Reaffirms the commitment of the United Nations to the total eradication of apartheid and the destruction of the racist régime, rather than so-called reforms by the apartheid régime;
- Declares that any collaboration with the racist régime and apartheid institutions is a hostile act against the purposes and principles of the United Nations and constitutes a threat to international peace and security;
- 9. Condemns the continuing political, military, nuclear, economic and other collaboration of certain States with the racist régime of South Africa in disregard of United Nations resolutions—in particular the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Belgium, Israel and Italy—and the transnational corporations and other institutions which assist the racist régime;
- 10. Invites all States and organizations to take all appropriate measures to persuade those Governments, transnational corporations and other institutions which continue to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa to abide by the resolutions of the United Nations;
- 11. Appeals to all States which have not yet done so to accede to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;
 - 12. Calls upon all Governments concerned:
- (a) To sever diplomatic, military, nuclear, economic and other relations with the racist régime of South Africa;
- (b) To take measures to prevent transnational corporations, banks and all other institutions under their jurisdiction from collaborating with the apartheid régime;
- (c) To take all necessary action to terminate credits by the International Monetary Fund and other bodies to South Africa;
 - (d) To prohibit the sale of krugerrands;
- (e) To deny any facilities to airlines or ships travelling to and from South Africa;
- (f) To terminate all government promotion of, or assistance to, trade with or investment in South Africa;
- (g) To support effective international sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa;
- 13. Requests all States which have not yet done so to terminate visa-free entry privileges to South African nationals;
- 14. Requests the Security Council urgently to consider mandatory economic sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa and take action, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to bring about the total cessation of:
 - (a) Any military or nuclear collaboration with South Africa;
- (b) Supplies of petroleum, petroleum products or other strategic materials to South Africa;
 - (c) Loans to, and investments in, South Africa;
- (d) Guarantees or other inducements for investments in South Africa:
- (e) Tariff and other preferences for imports from South Africa;
 - (f) All trade with South Africa;
- 15. Requests the Secretary-General, as well as all agencies and organizations within the United Nations system:
- (a) To withhold any facilities from, or investment of any funds in, banks, financial institutions and corporations which continue to invest in or give loans to the South African régime;
- (b) To refrain from any purchase, direct or indirect, of South African products;
- (c) To prohibit any official travel by South African Airways or South African shipping lines;

- 16. Requests States members of international agencies and organizations, particularly the members of the European communities, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the international Monetary Fund, to take the necessary steps to deny all assistance and commercial or other facilities to the racist régime of South Africa;
- 17. Appeals to the youth of South Africa to refrain from enlisting in the South African armed forces, which are designed to defend the inhuman system of apartheid, to repress the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people and to threaten, and commit acts of aggression against, neighbouring States;
- 18. Invites all Governments and organizations to assist, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 33/165 of 20 December 1978, persons compelled to leave South Africa because of a conscientious objection to assisting in the enforcement of apartheid through service in military or police forces:
- 19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that apartheid is a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind,

Convinced that the United Nations must take the lead in concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid,

Noting with concern the continued intransigence of the South African régime, which has defied and disregarded numerous resolutions of organs of the United Nations for a just, peaceful and lasting resolution of the situation, including unanimous resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council,

Noting that the South African régime, by its arbitrary laws and repression, has deprived the oppressed people of avenues of peaceful and legal action to secure their inalienable rights,

Condemning the military build-up of South Africa and the series of acts of aggression committed by the South African régime against neighbouring States,

Gravely concerned about the plans of the South African régime to divide and dispossess the African people through "bantustanization" in order to perpetuate apartheid and deprive the African people of their citizenship,

Denouncing all plans for the dismemberment of South Africa through "bantustanization" as invalid,

Recognizing the significant contribution of the struggle for freedom and equality in South Africa to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling that the great majority of the South African people have been deprived of the right to participate in the determination of the destiny of the country,

Reaffirming that all the people of South Africa, irrespective of race, colour or creed, should be enabled to exercise their right of self-determination,

Convinced that the establishment of a non-racial society in South Africa, based on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, would be a significant contribution to international peace, security and co-operation,

Adopts the following Declaration:

Declaration on South Africa

- 2. All States shall recognize the right of the oppressed people of South Africa to choose their means of struggle.
- 3. All States shall solemnly pledge to refrain from overt or covert military intervention in support or defence of the Pretoria régime in its effort to repress the legitimate aspirations and struggle of the African people of South Africa against it in the exercise of their right of self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, or in its threats or acts of aggression against the African States committed to the establishment of a democratic government of South Africa based on the will of the people as a whole, regardless of race, colour or creed, as the imperative guarantee to lasting peace and security in southern Africa.

The General Assembly,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolution 33/183 D of 24 January 1979,

Having considered the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Gravely concerned at the continuing collaboration of Israel with the racist régime of South Africa in political, military, nuclear, economic and other fields in violation of the resolutions of the United Nations,

Recalling the report of the World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva from 14 to 25 August 1978,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations Seminar on Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa, held in London on 24 and 25 February 1979,

Considering that such collaboration is a serious hindrance to international action for the eradication of apartheid, as well as an encouragement to the South African régime to persist in its criminal policy of apartheid, and a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa and the entire African continent.

- 1. Again strongly condemns Israel's continuing and increasing collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa;
- Demands that Israel desist from and terminate all forms of collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa;
- 3. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and to report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/183 O of 24 January 1979, Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

Convinced that a cessation of all new foreign investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa would constitute an important step in international action for the elimination of apartheid, as such investments and loans abet and encourage the apartheid policies in that country,

Welcoming the actions of those Governments which have taken legislative and other measures towards that end,

Noting with regret that the Security Council has not yet taken steps towards that end, as requested in General Assembly resolutions 31/6 K of 9 November 1976, 32/105 O of 16 December 1977 and 33/183 O of 24 January 1979,

Again urges the Security Council to consider the matter at an early date with a view to taking effective steps to achieve the cessation of further foreign investments in, and financial loans to, South Africa.

Resolution 34/174, as recommended by Third Committee, A/34/829, adopted without vote by Assembly on 17 December 1979, meeting 106.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 31/126 of 16 December 1976, 32/119 of 16 December 1977 and 33/164 of 20 December 1978, in which it, inter alia, reaffirmed that humanitarian assistance by the international community to all those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia is appropriate and essential,

Deeply concerned by the discriminatory education policies and repressive measures being applied by the Government of South Africa against black students in that country,

Noting Security Council resolution 417(1977) of 31 October 1977 in which the Council, inter alia, demanded the abolishment of the "Bantu education" system and all other measures of apartheid and racial discrimination,

Noting with concern the continued influx into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia of student refugees from South Africa as well as from Namibia and Zimbabwe and the urgent need to provide facilities for their care, health and education

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the influx of those student refugees,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing the findings of the review missions sent by him to

Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia in May 1979 to examine the status of the programmes of assistance to South African student refugees,

Recognizing the urgent need to establish an assistance programme for student refugees from Namibia and Zimbabwe,

Disturbed by the adverse effects which the application of apartheid, particularly the bantustan policy, is having on settled communities living in South Africa in areas bordering Lesotho and Swaziland, and by the consequent flight of large numbers of families, including children of school age, into Lesotho and Swaziland,

- 1. Endorses the assessment and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and commends him and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on their efforts to mobilize resources and organize the programme of assistance to South African student refugees in the host countries;
- 2. Decides to enlarge the assistance programme for South African student refugees living in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia to include the care, health, education and other needs of student refugees from Namibia and Zimbabwe:
- 3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other relevant agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, to make every effort to mobilize assistance to facilitate the resettlement of refugee families from the border areas of South Africa and to provide adequately for the well-being of the children concerned;
- 4. Expresses its appreciation that the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia continue to grant asylum and make educational and other facilities available to the student refugees in spite of the pressure which the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries:
- 5. Notes with appreciation the efforts made by Member States, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the host countries;
- 6. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to organize and

- implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from southern Africa who have found asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;
- 7. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the assistance programmes for those students, both through financial support and by offering further opportunities for their education and vocational training, as well as by financial and material contributions for their care and maintenance;
- 8. Calls upon all agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and the World Food Programme, to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees from Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa who have found asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia:
- 9. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the matter under review and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1980, of the current status of the programmes, and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa continued in 1979 to make grants to voluntary organizations, Governments of host countries of refugees from South Africa and other bodies. According to the 1965 General Assembly resolution establishing it²⁷ and subsequent resolutions, the grants were to be used for legal aid, relief, education and other assistance to persons persecuted under discriminatory legislation in southern Africa and to their families, and for relief to South African refugees.

Reports of the Secretary-General and of the Committee of Trustees

In a report to the General Assembly dated 8 November 1979, the Secretary-General indicated that in the year since the last report the Trust Fund had received contributions from 41 Governments totalling $1,602,399. (An additional $372,000 from four States was received before the end of the year, and pledges from 13 Governments totalling $71,230 were outstanding; see table below.)

In accordance with decisions by the Committee of Trustees of the Fund, eight grants totalling $1,695,000 had been made from the Fund during the period under review. Total income to the Trust Fund since its inception in 1965 to 8 November 1979, including interest, amounted to $8,855,442 and the total of grants disbursed since its establishment was $7,806,950.

The Secretary-General transmitted a report by the Committee of Trustees which noted with satisfaction the increase in contributions to the Trust Fund. It said that direct contributions from Governments and the public, supplemented by grants from the Trust Fund, had enabled voluntary agencies to provide legal assistance in almost all cases in which persons were charged under so-called security legislation, as well as modest grants to needy dependants, mostly women and children, of persons detained, imprisoned or restricted under such legislation. The contributions, however, were hardly adequate to cover persons persecuted under other racially discriminating laws and their dependants. Little aid could be provided to workers subjected to discrimination and victimization resulting from apartheid.

Consideration by the General Assembly

At the Assembly's thirty-fourth (1979) session, the reports of the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees were considered in plenary meetings, during debate on the apartheid policies of South Africa. A resolution on the subject was introduced by Denmark on behalf of 80 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). In presenting it, Denmark said that, until apartheid was eradicated, the international community was obliged to assist its victims, that being the main objective of the Trust Fund. While contributions had increased in recent years, still more were needed.

On 12 December, the Assembly adopted the 80-power text without a vote as resolution 34/93 B. Expressing appreciation to contributors to the Trust Fund and the voluntary agencies rendering humanitarian assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination, the Assembly, by this text, again appealed for generous and increased contributions to both the Fund and the voluntary agencies.

Situation in Southern Rhodesia

The situation in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) was characterized in 1979 by a series of rapid developments, including several meetings of the Security Council and the holding of a Constitutional Conference on the territory.

The Security Council met in March and April. On 8 March, it adopted resolution 445(1979), by which it condemned recent armed attacks by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia against front-line African States, declared any election managed by that regime null and void and requested the administering powerthe United Kingdom—to prevent further illegal executions in the territory. It also asked its Committee on sanctions to meet to consider widening sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. On 30 April, the Council adopted resolution 448 (1979), by which it condemned all attempts by the regime to prevent Zimbabwe's achieving independence and genuine majority rule, reaffirmed that the so-called elections held from 17 to 21 April 1979 were null and void, and reiterated its call on all States not to recognize any representative or organ established by that process and to observe the mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

On 27 April, at the conclusion of a series of meetings at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples²⁸ adopted the text of the Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia (see p. 1106). The heads of Government of Commonwealth countries, at a meeting at Lusaka, Zambia, in August, confirmed their total commitment to black majority rule in Southern Rhodesia.

Another important development was a Constitutional Conference at Lancaster House, London, whose objective was to provide for majority rule in the territory and consider arrangements for a transitional period leading to independence, including the holdin of elections supervised by the United Kingdom see p. 1108).

In December, at its thirty-fourth session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/12 on the question of Southern Rhodesia. The Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure that right by all means at their disposal. It also reaffirmed that there should be no independence before majority rule in Zimbabwe, called for the full implementation of the agreements reached at Lancaster House, and commended the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe for its contribution to the negotiations. Condemning South Africa for its intervention in Southern Rhodesia, it called upon the administering power to ensure withdrawal of South African forces and mercenaries from the territory. In addition, the Assembly asked for assistance to the front-line States. (See p. 1111.)

The Assembly also adopted several other resolutions with provisions pertaining to the situation in Southern Rhodesia (see p. 1113).

Meeting on 21 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 460(1979), by which it called on Member States to terminate all existing United Nations sanctions and decided to keep the situation in Southern Rhodesia under review until the territory attained full independence. By the same resolution, the Council dissolved its Committee on sanctions, established in pursuance of resolution 253(1968).²⁹ (For details of Security Council action in 1979, see sections below.)

Decisions on Southern Rhodesia were also taken during the year by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council. (For details of action taken by these bodies and by the General Assembly and its Special Committee, see pp. 1103-16.)

Also during 1979 a number of communications were received by the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, several of which were circulated as documents of both the Council and the General Assembly.

Consideration by the Security Council

Communications (January-February)

In a note verbale of 8 February, Portugal informed the Secretary-General that its Council of Ministers had adopted a special resolution in December 1978 aimed at implementing Security Council resolution 409(1977) of 27 May 1977,³⁰ by which further mandatory sanctions were imposed against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

By a letter of 14 February to the Secretary-General, Equatorial Guinea transmitted the text of a statement made that day by the African group of States at the United Nations concerning a move within the United States Congress to send an observer team to Southern Rhodesia. The African group had learned with dismay that the Senate Sub-Committee on Africa was contemplating sending a team of observers in April 1979 to monitor parliamentary elections there. In its view, the rebel Government of Southern Rhodesia, which the Security Council had determined to be illegal under international law, could not conduct its own elections and have them accepted by the international community. It felt that that new development was intended to give credibility to the "internal settlement" already rejected and condemned as a fraud by the Council in its resolution 423(1978) of 14 March 1978,31 and could only give Ian Smith's régime a false sense of hope, if only it could continue its oppressive war for some time longer. The group urged the United States to take appropriate measures to avoid sanctioning the internal settlement.

By a letter of 28 February to the Council President, Equatorial Guinea, on behalf of the African group, requested an urgent meeting of the Council to discuss recent developments in Southern Rhodesia.

Security Council meetings (2-8 March)

In accordance with Equatorial Guinea's letter of 28 February, the Council considered the question concerning the situation in Southern Rhodesia at four meetings held between 2 and 8 March. In the course of these meetings, the Council invited the representatives of Angola, Benin, Botswana, Cuba, Ethiopia, Ghana, Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia, at their request, to participate without the right to vote in the discussion. At the request of Gabon, Nigeria and Zambia, the Council, pursuant to rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure, ³² extended an invitation to Callistus Ndlovu, a representative of the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe.

The Council opened its discussion with a statement by Ethiopia on behalf of the African group, drawing attention to new levels of escalation of the war by the racist régime of Ian Smith, fully supported by South Africa, against the front-line African States. In its view, the only course open to the Council was to condemn the bogus parliamentary elections planned for mid-April in Southern Rhodesia. Any attempt to send observer missions of any nature to the elections would only serve as an open invitation for further escalation of war, because there could be no settlement of the Southern Rhodesian colonial problem without the participation of the Patriotic Front, Ethiopia said.

Mr. Ndlovu said that, in its war against the patriotic forces, the régime had never pretended to respect even the elementary rules of international law nor shown any concern for human life. He observed also that some countries which expressed support for United Nations sanctions against the Salisbury régime in fact did nothing to stop their citizens from trading with that régime. He called upon the Council's Committee on sanctions to consider measures for tightening and widening economic sanctions against the illegal régime. Rejecting the planned elections in Southern Rhodesia, he appealed to the Council to condemn Rhodesian raids into the front-line States.

The idea that the sanctions against Southern Rhodesia should be strengthened and expanded was expressed by, among others, Botswana, Czechoslovakia, Gabon, Nigeria and the USSR. Kuwait suggested that the Council carry out against the régime all measures provided for in Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations,³ including the cessation of road, air, postal, telegraphic, radio and other communication with Southern Rhodesia. The front-line States that participated in the Council's discussion-Angola, Botswana and Zambia-as well as Ethiopia, France and others, considered it important that no observers be sent to Southern Rhodesia during the régime's April elections. Czechoslovakia maintained that such actions were designed to help legalize the régime in one form or another, while at the same time they represented an attempt to undermine the national liberation struggle of the people of Zimbabwe. The USSR supported that view.

All those that spoke condemned the continuous raids of the illegal régime into the front-line States. Angola deplored the fact that imperialism and racism were still alive in southern Africa. Ghana stated that it was high time Council members considered extending the oil embargo and other sanctions to South Africa.

Bangladesh, Nigeria, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States underlined the importance of the 1977 Anglo-American pro-posals³⁴ relating: to the solution of the Southern Rhodesian question. Other States, however, expressed doubts in that regard. Benin stated that the administering power in particular bore a heavy responsibility for the current escalation in the acts of war and provocations by the, racist minority régime. In its view, the Anglo-American plan, despite its superficially attractive aspects, did not satisfy the deep aspirations of the people of Zimbabwe.

Nigeria called on the United Kingdom to take all the steps necessary to return the territory to legality and to ensure that political power was handed over only on the basis of majority rule in accordance with the principles of the 1960 Declaration on granting independence and the Charter.

Bolivia saw two kinds of aggression in the region: the armed action against the front-line States and the so-called internal settlement, the aim of which was to impose the power of the racist minorities against the liberation of the peoples of Africa.

Botswana stated that it should be clear to the illegal régime that all its deception and cruelty towards the black people of Zimbabwe would never subjugate their will and aspirations to independence and freedom. China held a similar view and commented that even interference from a super-power would not block the advance of the people of Zimbabwe under the leadership of the Patriotic Front. Zambia drew the Council's attention to a recent attack on its country by the illegal régime's armed forces. It felt that the international community had the right to know how the rebel Rhodesians obtained weapons.

The United Kingdom said that it, along with the United States, remained fully committed to efforts to bring about a peaceful transition to independence and majority rule through United Nations—supervised elections—a commitment reconfirmed by the Secretaries of State of the two countries at the beginning of February. In addition, since the Council last discussed the issue, a special representative of the United Kingdom Prime Minister had visited southern Africa to consult with the leaders of the front-line States, Nigeria, South Africa and the Patriotic Front and with Ian Smith and the other three internal African leaders in Salisbury. The sad conclusion, the United Kingdom said, was that the parties were so far apart that there were currently no prospects of convening a successful meeting of all of them to negotiate a settlement. It felt, however, that the Anglo-American proposals remained the best basis for an eventual settlement, and the best prospect for ending the conflict lay in an attempt to find a wider agreement involving both sides and incorporating essential features of the Anglo-American proposals, such as a cease-fire and a neutral administration for the conduct of free and fair elections under United Nations supervision. It disagreed with some States which had called on Governments to prevent their nationals from going to Southern Rhodesia to observe elections. Although it believed that the elections the Salisbury régime proposed to hold in April were not likely to bring about a successful result, the United Kingdom said it could not accept language attempting to circumscribe the functioning of its parliamentary democracy or Parliament's right to exercise its judgement on the acceptability of any settlement to the people of Southern Rhodesia, or language which sought to fetter Parliament as to how it might decide to inform itself on the situation.

The USSR drew attention to resolution 423(1978),³⁵ by which the Council had condemned all attempts by the racist minority to retain power in Southern Rhodesia and declared illegal and unacceptable any internal settlement under the auspices of that régime. In its view, the Council should most strongly demand that the Western countries refrain from sending observers to the elections in Southern Rhodesia. Sri Lanka expressed a similar view.

Norway said that it could not associate itself with an electoral process in a situation where 90 per cent of the territory had been placed under martial law and the Patriotic Front had been excluded from participation.

Cuba called attention to the final communique of an Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Maputo, Mozambique, in January/ February 1979, in which it was stated that the military and technological assistance and the economic, political and diplomatic support provided by "imperialism" to the minority racist régimes of southern Africa were the only factors enabling them to continue their racist, colonialist and apartheid policy. Sri Lanka, as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau, transmitted the final communique to the Council on 15 March (see following subsection) and also invoked the non-aligned movement's basic principles and policies concerning self-determination. Yugoslavia expressed support for those principles.

On 8 March, the Security Council adopted, as resolution 445(1979), a text sponsored by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Gabon, Jamaica, Kuwait, Nigeria and Zambia. The vote was 12 to 0, with 3 abstentions (France, the United Kingdom and the United States).

By the resolution, the Council strongly condemned the recent armed invasions by the minority regime in Southern Rhodesia against Angola, Mozambique and Zambia, commending those and other front-line States for their support of the people of Zimbabwe in their legitimate struggle to gain freedom and independence and for their scrupulous restraint in the face of serious provocations by the Southern Rhodesian rebels. It requested all States to give immediate and substantial material assistance to enable the front-line States to strengthen their defence in order to safeguard their sovereignty and territorial integrity, and requested the administering power to take all necessary measures to prevent further illegal executions in Southern Rhodesia.

The Council condemned all attempts and manœuvres by the illegal régime, including its so-called elections of April 1979, aimed at retaining and extending a racist minority rule and at preventing the accession of Zimbabwe to independence and genuine majority rule, declaring that any elections held by the illegal régime and the results thereof would be null and void and that no recognition would be accorded either by the United Nations or any Member State to any representatives or organ established by that process. It urged all States to refrain from sending observers to those elections and to take appropriate action to discourage organizations and institutions within their respective areas of jurisdiction from doing so. It requested its Committee on sanctions to meet immediately to consider measures for strengthening and widening the sanctions against Southern Rhodesia and to submit its proposals not later than 23 March. The Council decided to meet not later than 27 March to consider the Committee's report.

Speaking after the vote, the United Kingdom said it could not support the resolution since it did not include a call for a settlement incorporating such essential features of the Anglo-American proposals as it had previously put forward. That had left the text wholly unbalanced. In addition, the text sought to circumscribe the functioning of United Kingdom parliamentary democracy by trying to discourage its citizens from visiting Southern Rhodesia to inform themselves on the situation in that country.

The United States stressed that, in its view, the resolution was not mandatory and that references to Member States' responsibilities referred to enforcement measures previously decided on by the Council. Provisions having to do with observers must be considered in the light of the constitution and public and legal practice of each Member State. Norway, referring to the provision seeking assistance for front-line States' defence capability, emphasized that, in accordance with its long-standing policy, it would continue to provide only humanitarian and economic assistance.

France said it could not approve a preambular provision referring to State responsibility for ensuring institutional and individual observance of Council decisions and the operative paragraph by which all States were urged to take action to discourage organizations within their jurisdiction from sending observers. That paragraph was contrary to the freedom expressly guaranteed by the French constitution.

Zambia, speaking on behalf of Bangladesh, Bolivia, Jamaica, Kuwait and Nigeria, all of which were sponsors, expressed disappointment that such a mild resolution had not been adopted unanimously. They also expressed the hope that those which had abstained would, nevertheless, take seriously into account the important elements contained in the resolution, particularly the need for States to refrain from sending observers to the so-called elections in Southern Rhodesia.

Communications and report (March-April)

By a letter of 5 March to the Secretary-General, Angola transmitted the text of a communique issued the day before by the front-line States at the end of a two-day March summit meeting in Luanda. By this communique, they had denounced the elections scheduled for April, reaffirmed their total support for the liberation struggle of the people of Zimbabwe and restated their commitment to act further in order to bring about greater unity within the Patriotic Front.

On 7 March, Sri Lanka transmitted to the Secretary-General, for circulation to the General Assembly and the Security Council, the text of a communique issued that day by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries in which the Bureau, meeting in New York, strongly condemned the repeated acts of aggression by the régimes of southern Africa against Angola, Mozambique and Zambia, appealed to the international community to give all necessary assistance to these States in order to reinforce their defence capabilities and called upon the Council to discharge its mandate in respect of this issue.

On 15 March, Sri Lanka transmitted the final communique of an Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau, held at Maputo from 26 January to 2 February, in which the Bureau urged, inter alia: support for the armed struggle by the Patriotic Front; rejection and condemnation of the so-called internal settlement concluded on 3 March 1978; 36 cessation and condemnation of the recruitment, training, transit and financing of foreign mercenaries for and by the illegal régime and their immediate withdrawal; cessation of the supply to Southern Rhodesia of petroleum and related products; concerted action in support of a resolution on sanctions adopted in July 1978 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) at Khartoum, Sudan, aimed at the adoption of measures provided for in Article 41 of the United Nations Charter; and reaffirmation of United Nations resolutions on Zimbabwe, in particular the Assembly's resolutions of 13 December 1978.37 The Bureau also recommended the admission of the Patriotic Front as a full member of the nonaligned movement.

On 16 April, Sri Lanka transmitted the text of a communique issued that day by the Coordinating Bureau condemning the so-called elections scheduled to be held in Southern Rhodesia on 17 April and appealing to all members of the movement to provide all support for the liberation struggle of the Zimbabwean people.

To another letter of 16 April to the Secretary-General, Sri Lanka annexed the text of a communique issued that day by the Bureau condemning armed attacks made by the Southern Rhodesian régime against Botswana and Zambia between 10 and 14 April (see p. 218).

By a letter of 23 March to the President of the Security Council, the Chairman of the Council Committee on sanctions transmitted an interim report on the implementation of the Council's request in resolution 445 (1979) concerning strengthening and expanding sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The Committee had devoted four meetings to consideration of such measures. Although it felt it needed more time to study all the questions before it, it had considered it urgent to submit to the Council a specific recommendation against unilateral repeal of sanctions: that the Council should remind States of their obligation to comply strictly with its decisions on sanctions in accordance with Article 25 of the Charter.3

The Committee's request for an extension of the submission date of its report was approved by the Council following informal consultations, as noted by the Council President in a note of 26 March. The date of the Council's consideration of the report was to be fixed at a later stage.

In a note verbale of 3 April to the Secretary-General, Benin asked the Security Council to envisage revising the methods of work of its Committee on sanctions to enable Member States to participate objectively in its meetings and in verification of communications addressed to it.

By a letter of 9 April, Zambia requested the Secretary-General to circulate a study prepared by the Commonwealth Secretariat in London entitled "An analysis of the illegal régime's 'Constitution for Zimbabwe Rhodesia," which Zambia said exposed the internal settlement managed by the minority régime of Ian Smith. To another letter, of 11 April, Zambia annexed a message to the Secretary-General from the International Conference of the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization, then meeting in Lusaka, and a Conference resolution condemning aggression by the Smith régime against Zimbabwean refugees in Zambia on 10 April and calling on the Council to take immediate practical measures against that régime.

By a note verbale of 26 April, Benin transmitted the text of a statement on "The elections of Ian Smith," submitted on 25 April to Member States by Mr. Ndlovu of the Patriotic Front, discussing the context, environment, role of observers and conduct of the recent parliamentary elections in Southern Rhodesia.

By a letter of the same date to the Council President, the Ivory Coast, on behalf of the African group of States at the United Nations, requested the convening of an urgent meeting of the Council to consider recent developments in Southern Rhodesia.

In a telegram of 27 April, the Chairman of the Special Committee on granting independence informed the President of the Security Council that the Committee had unanimously adopted at its 27 April meeting at Belgrade the Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia, and enclosed the relevant section of the document (see p. 1106).

Security Council meetings (27 and 30 April)

The Council considered the situation in Southern Rhodesia at two meetings on 27 and 30 April, acting on the letter of 26 April from the Ivory Coast. During these meetings, the Council invited the representatives of Botswana, India, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Yugoslavia, at their request, to participate without the right to vote in the discussion. At the request of Gabon, Nigeria and Zambia, the Council, pursuant to rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure, extended an invitation to Mr. Ndlovu of the Patriotic Front.

Opening the discussion, the Ivory Coast expressed, on behalf of the African group, its profound disapproval of the prevailing situation in Southern Rhodesia and its total condemnation of the so-called internal settlement arrived at through the elections of 17 to 21 April.

³⁷ Ibid., pp. 936 and 938, resolutions 33/38 A and B. 38 For text of Article 25 of the Charter, see APPENDIX II.

The representative of the Patriotic Front said that the constitution of the so-called internal settlement was not approved by the majority of the people of Zimbabwe. He referred to the mobilization of more than 100,000 troops and to martial law extended over 94 per cent of the country, which meant that the defenceless people of Zimbabwe had been forced to vote practically at gunpoint. He stated that certain groups in the United Kingdom and the United States that had always supported Ian Smith had begun to revive their drive for the lifting of sanctions by their respective countries.

Speaking on behalf of the current Chairman of OAU, the Sudan stressed the fact that the major political movements in Zimbabwe had had no hand in framing the fraudulent constitutional arrangements, which were placed for approval only before the white community- some 3 per cent of the population.

Kenya, speaking on behalf of the current Chairman of the Council of Ministers of OAU, said that, when the so-called constitution was drawn up, the people of Southern Rhodesia were not given a chance to express themselves on the constitutional proposals, and that the so-called elections under martial law were not elections at all. In its view, the Security Council had a duty to reject the fraud that had been perpetrated.

China also called on the Council to condemn the Smith régime for its sham elections and to reaffirm that they were illegal, null and void.

Sri Lanka and Yugoslavia expressed the positions further elaborated and confirmed at the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries at Belgrade in July 1978 and at the Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries at Maputo in January/February 1979, with regard to the elections. They also recalled the statement issued by the Co-ordinating Bureau on 16 April, in which the non-aligned movement had expressed the firm resolve to contribute to the defeat of all manœuvres aimed at portraying the illegal régime as representing majority rule.

Zambia said that the African countries wanted only the reaffirmation by the Council of its previous resolutions on the matter, particularly resolutions 423(1978) and 445(1979), by which the illegality of the régime in Southern Rhodesia had been affirmed. Specifically, the African States asked the Council to reiterate the illegality of the recent elections there. Zambia also noted with regret that there was growing evidence of increased collaboration between certain Western countries and South Africa, particularly in the military sphere. It recommended that the matter should be studied adequately by the Council's arms embargo Committee, established in 1977,³⁹ and subsequently exposed to the international community.

Botswana and Jamaica, among others, drew attention to a recent statement by the South African Prime Minister that he was embarking upon the creation of a new alliance in southern Africa, including the régime in Salisbury.

India, among others, held the view that the existing sanctions against Southern Rhodesia should be continued until all the constituent elements of the national liberation movement accepted a negotiated basis for a peaceful transfer of real power to the majority of the Zimbabwe people in accordance with the Declaration on granting independence.

Czechoslovakia observed that, in spite of the unequivocal decisions taken by the Council, certain Western countries were openly taking steps to recognize the results of the illegal elections and the entire internal settlement process.

The USSR stated that the fraudulent elections could not have been carried out without the de facto agreement of powerful forces in certain Western countries, which did everything they could to maintain the domination of their transnational monopolies in that part of Africa and to protect their own interests. It said it would support a decisive resolution calling for more effective measures against the Southern Rhodesian régime.

The United States recalled its efforts and those of the United Kingdom over the past 18 months to bring about a peaceful settlement in Southern Rhodesia. It stated that both sides should take a first and significant step, namely, to accept the principle of United Nations—supervised elections and to agree to negotiate the conditions for holding such elections.

Nigeria, among other States, said the fact that some elements in some Western countries went to Southern Rhodesia to observe the fake elections did not confer any legitimacy on those elections.

Norway stated that its Government held the view that an internationally acceptable solution must be based on the principles of free and fair elections under international supervision and control, and the creation of conditions allowing for the equal and full participation of all forces in Southern Rhodesia. It also expressed its support for the Anglo-American proposals for a negotiated and peaceful settlement of the conflict.

On 30 April, Kuwait introduced a resolution on behalf also of Bangladesh, Bolivia, Gabon, Jamaica, Nigeria and Zambia. The Council adopted it later that day as resolution 448(1979), by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (France, the United Kingdom and the United States).

By the resolution, the Council: strongly condemned all attempts and manœuvres by the illegal régime, including the so-called elections of April, aimed at retaining and extending a racist minority rule and at preventing the accession of Zimbabwe to independence and genuine majority rule; reaffirmed the so-called elections and the results thereof to be null and void; and reiterated its call to all States not to accord recognition to any representatives or organ established by that process and to observe strictly the mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.

The United Kingdom said it had abstained in the vote as this resolution contained, in its view, some expressions of opinion and recommendations which the United Kingdom deemed unacceptable and did not regard as binding. It had to preserve the full freedom of its Parliament, which had the ultimate responsibility for bringing Southern Rhodesia back to legality under an agreement which would guarantee genuine majority rule. In the view of the United States also, the resolution was not mandatory, nor was Council resolution 445(1979), which was referred to in the text.

France underlined the special responsibilities of the United Kingdom, but maintained that the convening of the Council on the subject of Southern Rhodesia did not seem particularly well-timed, since the administering power had not had an opportunity to take a stand as it saw fit. In addition, a preambular paragraph indicating State responsibility for institutional and individual actions, restated from resolution 445 (1979), raised legal complications for France.

Communications and reports (May-December)

By a letter of 2 May to the Secretary-General, Egypt transmitted the text of a statement on the situation in Southern Rhodesia issued by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 27 April. Rejecting the April elections, Egypt reaffirmed its full commitment and adherence to OAU resolutions in support of the Patriotic Front; it urged the international community not to accord recognition to those elections or their results and to join efforts to convene a conference of all parties concerned to reach a just settlement.

On 4 May, the Security Council Committee on sanctions submitted a report which it said represented its efforts to implement relevant provisions of Council resolutions 409(1977), 40 on further measures under Charter Article 41, 411(1977), 41 on tightening the scope of sanctions in accordance with that Article, and 445(1979), on measures for strengthening and widening the sanctions. The current report had been adopted on 3 May after 15 meetings held since the submission of the Committee's interim report on 23 March. The Committee had reviewed the scope of existing sanctions against the illegal régime; since they had not had the desired effect, the Committee felt that a new set of measures and appeals by the Council was needed, aimed at more effective implementation of the current sanctions, closing loopholes and expanding the range of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. 42 To that end, the Committee submitted general and specific recommendations on which consensus had been achieved, and some which expressed the very firm opinion of the majority of the members but on which consensus had not been reached.

The Committee made the following general recommendations: (a) the Council should demand that States that did not comply with the sanctions submit to the Committee information on the legislative, administrative and other measures taken by them to prevent violations of existing sanctions; and (b) the Council should decide that all States that had not done so should take effective enforcement actions to ensure strict compliance with Council sanctions by all associations, corporate bodies and individuals under their jurisdiction.

There was no agreement to include a further general recommendation that the Council decide that all States that had not done so discontinue any action that might confer a semblance of legitimacy on the illegal régime, inter alia, by forbidding the operation and activities of companies of that régime, or any other activities, which contravened the aims and purposes of the sanctions.

The Committee did not agree to make any specific recommendations on application of the full scope of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia provided for in Article 41 of the Charter, as recommended by some members.

Consensus was not reached on the matter of airline companies maintaining air links with Southern Rhodesia, but a majority of the Committee supported a recommendation that the Council should call on all States to: deny landing rights or overflight facilities to aircraft of any company operating to or from Southern Rhodesia, or on behalf of the illegal régime; and recommend to all airline companies in their territories that were members of the International Air Transport Association to expel from that organization any airline company maintaining interline agreements with any airline company constituted in Southern Rhodesia.

The Committee recommended that the Council restate, as a matter of principle, that permission by any Member State for operation in its territory of information or other representational offices of that régime was contrary to the Council's mandatory sanctions. It also recommended that the Council call on all States to prohibit establishment or effect closure of any such offices in their territories, except those established for pension purposes only.

The Committee recommended that the Council call on all States to ensure that no recruitment, arming, training or sending of mercenaries to help the illegal régime took place within their territories. States were also to be asked to take appropriate measures against any persons proved to have served as mercenaries with that régime.

With regard to extension of sanctions to South Africa, the Committee strongly recommended that the Council consider measures against South Africa, in order to strengthen sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. Some Committee members made the reservation that the question was not within the mandate of the Committee.

Consensus was not reached on the subject of sports activities, but a majority of the Committee supported a recommendation that the Council call on all States to prohibit their nationals from travelling to Southern Rhodesia, and not to admit into their territories any resident of Southern Rhodesia, for the purpose of participating in sports activities.

With regard to the supply of military equipment to Southern Rhodesia, the Committee recommended that the Council call on all States to:

- (a) observe strictly the arms embargo against Southern Rhodesia;
- (b) review all existing measures with the aim of stopping the illegal arms trade to Southern Rhodesia through private arms brokers;
- (c) urge suppliers of arms, military equipment and ammunition under their jurisdiction to include in contracts a clause forbidding reexportation to Southern Rhodesia;
- (d) enact and enforce legislation against suppliers under their jurisdiction found exporting or re-exporting such matériel;
- (e) include in intergovernmental contracts a clause prohibiting re-exportation to Southern Rhodesia, with enforcement measures; and
- (f) review laws and regulations on sanctions to ensure strict penalties for violations.

The Committee also recommended that it be authorized to co-operate closely with the Council's arms embargo Committee established in 1977 to examine progress in implementing the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa.

Concerning the supply of oil and oil products to Southern Rhodesia, the Committee recommended that the Council call on all States to observe existing sanctions strictly and to review their legislation and enforcement measures.

The majority of the Committee supported a recommendation that the Council call on France, the United Kingdom, the United States and other Governments to obtain guarantees from South Africa that no oil or oil products would be exported from South Africa to Southern Rhodesia. If such guarantees were not secured, the majority would recommend that the Council impose a mandatory oil embargo on South Africa.

Consensus was not reached on a recommendation that the Council decide that States that had not done so should take measures against international companies and agencies which supplied oil and oil products to the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

With regard to foreign companies operating in Southern Rhodesia, the Committee recommended that the Council call on all States to demand of companies constituted in their territories termination of any existing linkage with subsidiaries in Southern Rhodesia.

By a letter of 9 May to the Secretary-General, Mongolia transmitted the text of a statement issued on 30 April by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs in connexion with the April elections. That Government strongly condemned the machinations by the forces of international reaction and racist régimes against the peoples of southern Africa, and considered that a genuine solution to the problem of Southern Rhodesia could be achieved only through strict implementation of Assembly and Council decisions on sanctions, elimination of the racist, colonial system there and the transfer of full power to the people of Zimbabwe, as represented by the Patriotic Front.

By a letter of 29 June to the Secretary-General, Zambia conveyed a message from its Minister for Foreign Affairs dismissing rumours concerning a possible meeting between its President, Kenneth Kaunda, and Bishop Abel Muzorewa, whom he referred to as the so-called Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia.

On 24 August, Zambia transmitted the final communique issued by the heads of Government of Commonwealth countries at their meeting held at Lusaka from 1 to 7 August. In relation to the situation in Southern Rhodesia, the heads of Government: confirmed their total commitment to genuine black majority rule and accepted that it was the United Kingdom's responsibility to grant independence on that basis, which required a democratic constitution with safeguards for minorities; recognized that the internal settlement constitution was defective; said they were deeply conscious of the urgent need to achieve a lasting settlement, the search for which must involve all parties and a major objective of which must be to bring about a cessation of hostilities and an end to sanctions; acknowledged that an independent constitutional Government must be chosen through free and fair elections properly supervised under United Kingdom authority, with Commonwealth observers; and welcomed the United Kingdom's indication that an appropriate procedure would be for the Commonwealth countries to call a Constitutional Conference to which all parties would be invited.

The Secretary-General was asked to supplement international agencies' activities by assisting in contingency planning, including regional studies, in anticipation of the emergence of an independent and internationally accepted Government in Zimbabwe.

By a letter of 9 November to the Security Council President, the Chairman of the Council's Committee on sanctions transmitted the text of a statement adopted by the Committee that day in connexion with information it had received indicating that the United Kingdom intended to discontinue in the near future the application of the Council sanctions against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

The Committee had learned with distress that the United Kingdom contemplated taking such action as soon as Southern Rhodesia returned to legality with the appointment of a British Governor, and his arrival in Salisbury. The Committee emphasized that only the Council had a right to lift sanctions. It stressed especially the United Kingdom's responsibility as administering power and as a permanent Council member and noted that the Council's sanctions system against Southern Rhodesia had been established in the first instance at the United Kingdom's request. It also appealed to all Member States, and in particular to the United Kingdom, to continue observing scrupulously all the provisions of Council sanctions.

It was noted that France and Portugal had expressed reservations on both the principle and text of the statement. They, as well as Norway, pointed to the lack of time for obtaining instructions from their Governments. The United Kingdom dissociated itself from the statement, regarding the issue as inappropriate and the terms inaccurate and unjustified. The United States said it was unable to participate in its consideration in view of sensitive negotiations currently taking place in London.

By a letter of 12 December, the United Kingdom informed the President of the Security Council that, in accordance with the Southern Rhodesia Constitution (Interim Provisions) Order 1979 of 3 December, a British Governor had assumed legislative and executive authority over Southern Rhodesia on 12 December in Salisbury. Accordingly, the state of rebellion in the territory had been brought to an end. After three months of negotiation at Lancaster House in London, the letter continued, agreement had been reached on an independence Constitution providing for genuine majority rule which was enacted on 6 December. Agreement had also been reached on arrangements for the transitional period, including elections supervised under the United Kingdom's authority, and on the United Kingdom's cease-fire proposals. The situation which the Council had previously determined to be a threat to international peace and security had been remedied and the purpose of measures decided on by the Council on the basis of that determination had been achieved. In these circumstances, the obligations of Member States under Article 25 of the Charter in relation to those measures were, in the United Kingdom's view, to be regarded as discharged. The United Kingdom was terminating the measures it had taken pursuant to Council decisions in regard to the situation of illegality formerly existing.

By a letter of 14 December to the Council President, Madagascar, on behalf of the African group of States at the United Nations of which it was current Chairman, noted with concern the decision of the United Kingdom to cease to discharge its obligations under Article 25 with regard to the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Council against Southern Rhodesia by resolution 253(1968). 43 The African group considered that the resolution could be revoked only by a Council decision and that any unilateral action taken in this respect was a violation of the responsibilities assumed by Member States under the Charter; it requested the Council to take the necessary measures to preserve its authority in this matter.

Similar views were expressed in a letter of 21 December by the USSR: resolution 253(1968) could be rescinded only by the Council, and no unilateral action in this connexion could be recognized as legal or valid.

Security Council meeting (21 December)

By a letter of 18 December 1979 to the Security Council President, the United Kingdom requested that the Council convene to consider the matter.

The Council met on 21 December in response to the United Kingdom's letter of 18 December. At their request, Botswana, Cuba, Liberia, Madagascar, Mozambique and the United Republic of Tanzania were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the request of Kuwait, the Council also extended an invitation under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure to Clovis Maksoud, Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States to the United Nations, to participate in the deliberations.

The Council proceeded directly to a vote on a draft resolution previously prepared in the course of consultations. It adopted the text as resolution 460(1979) by 13 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (Czechoslovakia and the USSR). By this text, after noting with satisfaction that the London Constitutional Conference had produced agreement on a Constitution for a free and independent Zimbabwe and deploring the suffering and loss of life caused by 14 years of rebellion in Southern Rhodesia, the Council reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination, freedom and independence. The Council decided, having regard to the agreement reached at Lancaster House, to call on United Nations Member States to terminate the measures taken against Southern Rhodesia under Chapter VII of the Charter, pursuant to resolutions 232(1966), 44 253(1968) and subsequent resolutions on the situation in Southern Rhodesia, and to dissolve its Committee on sanctions established under resolution 253(1968).

The Council commended Member States, particularly the front-line States, for their implementation of its resolutions on sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. It called on all Member States and the specialized agencies to provide urgent assistance to Southern Rhodesia and the front-line States for reconstruction purposes and to facilitate the repatriation of refugees or displaced persons to Southern Rhodesia. The Council called for strict adherence to the agreements reached and for their faithful implementation by all the parties concerned, calling on the administering power to ensure that no South African or other external forces, regular or mercenary, would remain in or enter Southern Rhodesia, except those forces provided for under the Lancaster House agreement. It requested the Secretary-General to help in assistance and repatriation programmes, particularly in organizing with immediate effect all forms of financial, technical and material assistance to the States concerned to enable them to overcome the economic and social difficulties facing them. Finally, the Council decided to keep the situation in Southern Rhodesia under review until the territory attained full independence.

In the discussion that followed, the Secretary-General welcomed the agreement ending the conflict in Southern Rhodesia, which set in motion the process by which the country would become a free and independent Zimbabwe under genuine majority rule. He said that the resumption of normal relations with Southern Rhodesia provided a challenge for the international community, particularly for neighbouring States whose economies were closely linked to Southern Rhodesia. The burden of sanctions had been especially onerous to Mozambique and Zambia. A co-operative effort by the international community was required. The Secretary-General noted the action taken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for repatriating and resettling refugees.

The United Kingdom paid tribute to the African leaders, especially those of the front-line States, and to the Commonwealth leaders who had conceived the guidelines for the Lancaster House Conference. Bangladesh, France, Kuwait, the United States and Zambia observed that the agreements constituted the basis for the holding of free and fair elections designed to launch the former United Kingdom colony into genuine independence. Kuwait hoped that there would indeed be an impartial mechanism to ensure legitimate elections.

Norway expressed the hope that the recent developments regarding Zimbabwe would positively influence the situation in southern Africa as a whole, particularly in Namibia. Nigeria stressed the United Kingdom's duty to the Commonwealth, the front-line States and the international community to make the agreements a success.

Most members stressed the need for immediate and adequate assistance to Southern Rhodesia and the front-line States. China, Czechoslovakia, Gabon, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and others drew attention to the threat of the racist régime of South Africa. Tribute was paid by Botswana, Liberia and Mozambique to the sacrifices of the people of Zimbabwe and the neighbouring countries, as well as to African solidarity. Like other representatives, including Botswana, Czechoslovakia, the USSR and Zambia, Nigeria stated that the decision by certain States-including the United Kingdom and the United States-to lift the sanctions unilaterally without consulting the Council was in violation of Article 25 of the Charter.

Czechoslovakia felt that the situation in Southern Rhodesia was little changed from that which had led to the adoption of Council sanctions. The erstwhile régime had not really been eliminated, nor had its military police and mercenary forces been disbanded. Moreover, the outcome of the agreements signed in London was still unclear. The USSR also felt that, in current conditions, the lifting of sanctions was premature.

Madagascar, speaking as Chairman of the African group for December, considered that a colonial situation still existed in Southern Rhodesia and that the lifting of sanctions was not the end of the decolonization process. Liberia, on behalf of the current OAU Chairman, while welcoming the agreements signed in London, felt that material and moral support would be needed and that the United Nations and the specialized agencies must step up their efforts to bring economic aid and other forms of assistance to the region. The spokesman for the League of Arab States stressed the importance of the transitional period and the danger that elements in South Africa planned to circumvent the international consensus. Cuba, as current Chairman of the non-aligned movement, also emphasized vigilance.

Question of Namibia

In 1979, the question of Namibia was again considered by various United Nations bodies. The General Assembly, its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 45 and the United Nations Council for Namibia all took decisions on the matter. Related decisions were taken by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Economic and Social Council.

A detailed account of their deliberations and decisions is given on pp. 1065-1103. A brief summary follows.

On 27 April, the Special Committee adopted a Final Document on the Decolonization of Zimbabwe and Namibia by which, among other things, it reaffirmed that Namibia was the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine independence and self-determination were achieved, strongly condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of the territory, and reaffirmed that the only political solution for Namibia must be based on the termination of South Africa's illegal occupation and the holding of free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity.

In its 1979 report to the Assembly, the Council for Namibia said that during the year it had continued to support the Namibian people under the leadership of the South West Africa People's Organization, their sole and authentic representative. Its activities in this connexion included holding consultations with Governments to bring about the implementation of United Nations resolutions concerning the territory, representing Namibia at meetings and conferences and mobilizing public opinion in support of the Namibian people. The Council also continued to serve as trustee of the United Nations Fund for Namibia—the main vehicle through which the Council channelled material assistance to Namibia—and to sponsor the Institute for Namibia at Lusaka, Zambia, which provided both training and employment for Namibians. The Council also sponsored the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, launched in 1976⁴⁶ to provide comprehensive United Nations assistance to Namibia both before and during the initial period of independence. During the year the Council approved 46 pre-independence projects as part of the Nationhood Programme. The Council's report also contained a review of the activities of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and included a number of recommendations for action by the Assembly.

In May 1979, the Assembly resumed its thirtythird session, which had been suspended on 29 January 1979, in order to consider fully the question of Namibia and the implications of South Africa's continued defiance of Assembly and Security Council resolutions. On 31 May, the Assembly adopted resolution 33/206 on the question, by which it reaffirmed the direct responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia, renewed its determination to ensure the complete discharge of that responsibility, and called on all Member States and United Nations bodies and organs to support the Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence. The Assembly declared the urgent need to ensure attainment of the inalienable rights of the Namibian people to genuine self-determination and national independence in Namibia, including Walvis Bay, and supported the legitimacy of their struggle for national liberation by all means at their disposal. It declared that South Africa's illegal occupation of the territory constituted a serious threat to international peace and security and strongly condemned South Africa for, among other things, having imposed a so-called internal settlement on the Namibian people through an illegal national assembly designed to achieve international recognition for its puppets and perpetrate the occupation. The Assembly called on all Member States and the international community to refrain from according any recognition to, or co-operating with, the illegal national assembly or any puppet régime imposed by South Africa, again demanded the immediate and unconditional end to the illegal occupation by South Africa, and called on the Security Council to convene urgently to take enforcement measures against South Africa, as provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.4

On 12 December, at its thirty-fourth session, the Assembly adopted seven resolutions-which for the most part embodied the recommendations of the Council for Namibia-on the following aspects of the question: the programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia (resolution 34/92 A); intensification and co-ordination of United Nations action in support of Namibia (34/92 B); action by intergovernmental and nongovernmental organizations (34/92 C); the Nationhood Programme for Namibia (34/92 D); the United Nations Fund for Namibia (34/92 E); dissemination of information (34/92 F); and the situation resulting from the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa (34/92 G).

Questions concerning Zambia

After considering a complaint by Zambia that the régime in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) had committed aggression against it by blowing up road and railway bridges, the Security Council, by resolution 455(1979) of 23 November 1979, condemned the illegal régime in Salisbury, called for the payment of fullcompensation to Zambia by the responsible authorities, and called on Member States and organizations to help Zambia rebuild its facilities. In a letter to the Council, Zambia charged in September that South Africa had also committed aggression against it—a charge which South Africa denied.

A United Nations mission reported on the grave economic situation facing Zambia, due in large part to its efforts to implement Security Council sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. The General Assembly, in December, urged continued economic assistance to Zambia from the international community.

Complaint by Zambia against Southern Rhodesia

Communications (March-April)

By letters dated 7 March and 16 April 1979, addressed to the Secretary-General, Sri Lanka transmitted the texts of communiques issued on those dates by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-

Aligned Countries. In the first communique, the Bureau strongly condemned the repeated acts of aggression committed by South Africa and Southern Rhodesia against Angola, Mozambique and Zambia, and appealed to the international community to give them all necessary assistance in order to reinforce their defence capability, so that they could serve more effectively as the strategic rear base of the liberation struggle in southern Africa. In the second communique, the Bureau condemned the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia for its repeated armed invasions of Zambia and Botswana between 10 and 14 April, in which hundreds of Zimbabwean refugees and Zambian nationals had been killed or maimed and property destroyed. The Bureau rejected claims by the Salisbury régime that the attacks were directed against guerrilla bases and not against refugee centres.

By a letter dated 11 April, Zambia transmitted a message to the Secretary-General from the International Conference of the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization, meeting at Lusaka, Zambia, from 10 to 13 April. The message included the text of a resolution by which the Conference strongly denounced the repeated violations by the racist régimes of the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Zambia and other front-line States, called on the Security Council to take immediate and practical measures against the Ian Smith régime, and appealed for increased international support for the national liberation movements and the front-line States.

In a note verbale dated 16 April, Egypt sent a statement of 14 April by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs denouncing recent acts of aggression by the racist régime of Southern Rhodesia against Lusaka.

Consideration by the Security Council (23 November)

By a letter dated 22 November 1979, Zambia requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider what it described as the escalating and intensified acts of aggression committed against it by the illegal régime of Southern Rhodesia.

The Council considered the Zambian complaint on 23 November. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya was invited, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. Following its discussion, the Council adopted by consensus resolution 455 (1979), sponsored by Bangladesh, Gabon, Jamaica, Kuwait, Nigeria and Zambia.

By that resolution, the Council strongly condemned the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia for its continued, intensified and unprovoked acts of aggression against Zambia, as well as the continued collusion by South Africa in those acts. It commended Zambia and other front-line States for their continued support of the people of Zimbabwe in their just and legitimate struggle for freedom and independence and for their scrupulous restraint in the face of unwarranted armed provocations. It called on the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to take prompt and effective measures to ensure that the illegal minority régime in Southern Rhodesia desisted from committing repeated acts of aggression and provocation against Zambia.

The Council called for the payment of full and adequate compensation to Zambia by the responsible authorities for the damage to life and property resulting from the acts of aggression. It called on all United Nations Member States and international organizations urgently to extend material and other assistance to Zambia in order to facilitate the immediate reconstruction of its economic infrastructure. The Council decided to establish an ad hoc committee composed of four Council members, to be appointed by the President after consultation with members. The purpose of this committee would be to assist the Council in the implementation of the resolution, in particular its paragraphs on compensation and assistance. The committee was to report to the Council by 15 December.

Opening the Council's discussion prior to the adoption of the resolution, Zambia charged that road and railway bridges linking Zambia to neighbouring countries had been blown up by Rhodesian forces in October and November, cutting Zambia's major transportation links with the outside world. Paradoxically, Southern Rhodesia was escalating its attacks while a peace conference was in progress in London (see p. 1108). The Rhodesian forces would not have been able to inflict such losses on Zambia and the other front-line States without support from South Africa. There was also evidence that Israel had been training and equipping the Rhodesian forces, and a number of countries were arming and abetting the rebels. Zambia called on the United Kingdom to compensate Zambia fully and adequately for the damage caused by the attacks. It appealed also for international assistance to help offset the effects of Rhodesian aggression.

Nigeria said that, since Southern Rhodesia's unilateral declaration of independence in 1965, the minority régime had launched repeated acts of aggression against all the neighbouring States and had attacked refugee camps and civilian targets again and again. The aims of the Southern Rhodesian rebels were to destroy Zambia's infrastructure and weaken its resolve to support the liberation movement, to escalate and internationalize the war of liberation in Zimbabwe, to intimidate the Zambian population and cause the Zambian Government to pressure the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe into acceding to unfair demands in London, and to wreck the London talks on Southern Rhodesia.

Introducing the draft resolution which the Council later adopted, Nigeria drew attention to the principle of compensation, remarking that the United Kingdom and South Africa were the real culprits. Nigeria also hoped the ad hoc committee would appeal to States and organizations to help reconstruct the Zambian facilities destroyed by Southern Rhodesia.

The USSR said it fully agreed with the description of the recent events as a gross violation if the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zambia, amounting to naked aggression. Those events showed that the racist régimes in southern Africa, with the connivance and support of their Western protectors, were making well-planned efforts to preserve their domination. The Council should not only condemn the acts of aggression by Southern Rhodesia but should also ensure that they were not repeated. The USSR would support proposals for effective Council action.

In the view of China, the continuous escalation of acts of aggression against Zambia by the Southern Rhodesian racists had grossly violated the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zambia. Their sinister design was to exert pressure on Zambia and the other front-line States and on the Patriotic Front, in a vain attempt to Force the front-line States to abandon their support for the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe. The Council should strongly condemn the racist Forces of Southern Rhodesia for their aggression against Zambia, and should adopt practical and effective measures to prevent its recurrence. China would support the reasonable and correct propositions put forward by Zambia and other African countries.

Gabon said it would resolutely support all measures by the Council to restrain Southern Rhodesia and South Africa and to prevent them from continuing their attacks against the front-line States.

The United States expressed regret that, at a crucial point in the efforts to bring Zimbabwe to independence, the Council had had to meet on the latest raids against Zambia. The United States had joined with the Council in the past in condemning similar acts. What was particularly distressing about the current complaint was that the attacks had been directed against civilian targets. The United States condemned any activity which might jeopardize the negotiations in London.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, speaking as Chairman for November of the group of African States at the United Nations, stated that the unprovoked aggression of the Southern Rhodesian régime against the people of Zambia was part of a sustained pattern aimed at destabilizing the front-line States in the hope of weakening their support for the liberation movements in Zimbabwe, Namibia and South Africa. The assistance given by some Western powers had enabled the southern African régimes to step up their aggression against the front-line States. In solidarity with Zambia, the African group urged the Council to take effective action against the illegal régime in Salisbury in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.⁴⁸

Following adoption of the resolution, the United Kingdom, after expressing sympathy for the suffering and destruction inflicted on Zambia, deplored any escalation of fighting anywhere and particularly condemned attacks on civilian targets. The United Kingdom associated itself with the consensus on the resolution because it did not want to do anything that might damage prospects for an early and successful conclusion of the London talks on Southern Rhodesia, which the United Kingdom saw as being in their final moments. However, the resolution was not even-handed, taking no account of the fact that for years the fighting had erupted from all sides. Moreover, the British Government accepted no responsibility for the damage inflicted in Zambia by the Rhodesian raids, nor for the payment of compensation. But, as a friend of Zambia and once the cease-fire had been agreed, it wished to play its part in assisting Zambia to restore its damaged infrastructure.

France firmly condemned the recent Rhodesian raid into Zambia and expressed concern at the effects on the London talks. It assured Zambia of France's solidarity in the sore trials that country was undergoing.

Zambia said it intended to pursue its legitimate claim for compensation from the United Kingdom for the damage done to its economy by the rebel Smith colony.

Establishment and reports of the Ad Hoc Committee

In a note dated 30 November 1979, the President of the Security Council informed Council members that it had been agreed that Jamaica, Kuwait, Nigeria and Norway would comprise the Ad Hoc Committee Established under Resolution 455(1979), concerning the Complaint by Zambia, to Assist the Security Council in the Implementation of the Resolution. The Committee elected Norway as its Chairman.

In an interim report dated 6 December, the Committee recorded its decision, taken after consultations with Zambia, to visit Zambia as a first step. The Committee requested an extension of the time for submission of its report, stating that it expected to be able to complete its work by 31 January 1980. On 12 December 1979, the President of the Council issued a note stating that the Council had no objection to the Committee's request.

The Committee visited Zambia from 11 to 14 December and adopted a second interim report on 14 December. It stated that the impact on the Zambian economy caused by the blowing up of 11 bridges was particularly severe because Zambia, a land-locked country, depended almost exclusively on its rail and road bridges to carry its exports and imports. The economic losses and industrial disruption were of crisis proportions. In view of the urgent need to restore those facilities, the Committee presented this information with a view to calling on States and international organizations to extend material and other assistance to Zambia immediately. The cost of restoring the 11 bridges was estimated by Zambia at 14,618,586 kwacha, equivalent to $18,741,778. The Committee added that wider issues would be dealt with in its final report.

Complaint by Zambia against South Africa

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 13 September 1979, Zambia lodged a complaint about what it described as the persistent acts of aggression committed against it by South Africa. It stated that, between January and September, South African war-planes and ground and waterborne troops, with increasing intensity and frequency, had been violating Zambian airspace and land, mainly in the Western Province bordering Namibia, and had been carrying out indiscriminate acts against innocent villagers, causing considerable loss of life and property. Zambia strongly protested those acts of aggression and called on the Secretary-General to prevail on the Pretoria régime to desist forthwith from violating the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Zambia.

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 17 September, South Africa rejected the Zambian allegations, stating that the situation in the South West African/Zambian border area could be attributed directly to the presence of terrorists of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) on the Zambian side of the border, where they received the active support of the Zambian armed forces. South Africa was responsible for the security of the peoples of South West Africa and was, therefore, seriously concerned that SWAPO's acts of terror should not be permitted to continue.

Assistance to Zambia

Report of the mission to Zambia

As the annex to a report dated 30 August 1979, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the report of a review mission which he had dispatched in response to a 1978 Assembly resolution on assistance to Zambia. The mission reviewed the country's economic situation and the progress made in implementing the special economic assistance programme inaugurated in response to a 1973 resolution of the Security Council. The aim of the programme was to assist Zambia in meeting the heavy burden of applying economic sanctions imposed by the Council against Southern Rhodesia and in carrying out its normal development programme.

The mission had visited the country from 19 to 26 May 1979. It reported that Zambia had had to contend not only with sanctions but with continuous attacks and incursions by Rhodesian forces and the burden of caring for large numbers of Zimbabwean refugees.

The country's economic and financial situation continued to be grave, with no growth recorded in gross domestic product since 1973, when the border with Southern Rhodesia had been closed. In view of the successive large balance-of-payments deficits in each of the previous four years, it was unlikely that the deficit could be completely eliminated.

Noting that the assistance provided to Zambia in 1978 had been insufficient, the mission estimated that about $400 million of additional aid would be needed in 1979, mainly through balance-of-payments support, commodity assistance and food aid. Such aid would be especially needed for efforts to ease transport bottle-necks, alleviating an acute shortage of foreign exchange, food to overcome a threatened shortage of maize, and help for the growing number of refugees, most of them from Zimbabwe.

To begin the long-term development programme, projects costing some $280 million were recommended.

Consideration by the Economic and Social Council On 27 July 1979, the Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes made an oral report to the Economic and Social Council on the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Zambia. He said that by the end of 1979 the direct cost to Zambia of applying the Security Council sanctions against Southern Rhodesia would be nearly $1 billion. Zambia would require $800 million in additional assistance through the end of 1980 to reduce payments arrears, rebuild foreign exchange reserves and increase imports for its development programme.

Zambia told the Council that it was still experiencing economic difficulties because of higher transport costs, low copper prices, the inflow of more refugees from Zimbabwe as the result of intensified guerrilla warfare, and losses due to attacks by Rhodesian forces. Accordingly, Zambia appealed to the international community for continued help.

The Council—by decision 1979/46 adopted, without vote, as orally proposed by its President—took note on 27 July of the Co-ordinator's oral report.

By resolution 34/128, adopted without vote on 14 December 1979, the General Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations contained in the report of the mission to Zambia in May. Expressing deep concern that the aid provided to date fell far short of Zambia's needs, the Assembly drew the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance urgently required, particularly in the transport sector. It called on Member States and organizations to provide or increase assistance to Zambia, and drew. attention to a special account for Zambia established by the Secretary-General for the purpose. United Nations organizations were requested to co-operate with the SecretaryGeneral in organizing an effective assistance programme and to report to him periodically on what they had done.

The Assembly requested the Security Council to examine the situation in Zambia with a view to proposing additional assistance measures. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to mobilize resources for Zambia, to inform the Economic and Social Council in 1980 on the special economic assistance programme, and to arrange for a review, in time for the Assembly's 1980 regular session, of the country's economic situation and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme.

The resolution had been approved without vote on 21 November by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where it was sponsored by 62 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

A report by the Secretary-General to the Assembly gave details of assistance by various United Nations organizations to the 10 African countries for which special economic assistance programmes had been established. In the case of Zambia, this included a survey of industrial projects by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, preparation of a report on food security policy by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, family health and health manpower development projects by the World Health Organization, credits by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to improve roads and rehabilitate coffee estates, a reconnaissance mission by the International Fund for Agricultural Development, workers' education and vocational rehabilitation projects by the International Labour Organisation, and fellowships in several scientific fields by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Resolution 34/128, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling previous United Nations resolutions concerning the question of assistance to Zambia, in particular Security Council resolution 329(1973) of 10 March 1973 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 2012(LXI) of 3 August 1976 and 2093(LXII) of 26 July 1977, in which was commended the decision of the Government of Zambia in 1968 to implement progressively United Nations mandatory sanctions against Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1978/46 of 2 August 1978, in which the Council endorsed the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 5 July 1978,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 33/131 of 19 December 1978, in which the Assembly strongly endorsed the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Zambia,

Recognizing that the Government of Zambia has incurred both direct costs and the costs of contingency measures as a result of its decision to apply sanctions against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia as well as losses due to the diversion of limited financial and human resources from the country's normal development,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 30 August 1979, to which was annexed the report of the review mission which he sent to Zambia,

Noting that the present critical economic situation in Zambia has been brought about by the effects of applying sanctions and of continuous attacks and incursions by Southern Rhodesian forces.

Noting also that the disruption and reorientation of transport and trade have also placed severe strains on and created complications for Zambia's development programmes,

Noting further that the influx of Zimbabwean refugees has imposed an additional burden on the Zambian economy, and recognizing the need for additional humanitarian assistance for those refugees,

Regretting that the international community has not thus far provided assistance to Zambia on a scale commensurate with the costs of freeing Zambia from its dependence on the south, as called for in Security Council resolutions 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, 277(1970) of 18 March 1970 and 329(1973) of 10 March 1973,

Taking note of the Zambian Government's broad guidelines for its future development strategy, which includes programmes for agriculture, manufacturing and mining and the long-term development projects and programmes identified by the Government as requiring international assistance,

Taking note of Zambia's need for resources to overcome its present economic problems and to implement successfully a stabilization programme directed towards the country's long-term development objectives,

Recognizing that at least $800 million in additional assistance is required by the end of 1980 in order to finance necessary imports, reduce substantially outstanding arrears, build up foreign exchange reserves to a workable level and begin the long-term restructuring of the economy,

Recognizing further that international assistance is urgently required to allow Zambia to develop an adequate transport capacity on its external routes for imports and exports,

- 1. Endorses the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 30 August 1979;
- 2. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided thus far to Zambia by various States and regional and international organizations;
- 3. Expresses its deep concern that the assistance provided to date falls far short of Zambia's needs;
- 4. Draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance urgently required by Zambia, as identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General, and to the particular need for immediate assistance in the transport sector;
- 5. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Zambia, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Zambia in their programmes of development assistance, if it is not already included:

- Further calls upon Member States and organizations which are already implementing or are negotiating assistance programmes for Zambia to strengthen them, wherever possible;
- 7. Draws the attention of the international community to the account which was established by the Secretary-General under the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes to receive contributions for assistance to Zambia and urges Member States and international financial institutions to contribute generously to that account;
- 8. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund-to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Zambia in order to enable it to carry out its planned development projects without interruption and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;
- 9. Further requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Zambia;
- 10. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Zambia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1980;
- 11. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Zambia, and urges Member States and the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out those programmes;
- 12. Requests the Security Council to examine the situation in Zambia, in the context of Chapter VII, Articles 49 and 50, of the Charter of the United Nations, with a view to proposing additional measures of assistance to Zambia in view of its critical economic and financial position;
 - 13. Requests the Secretary-General:
- (a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Zambia;
- (b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made for continuing the organization of the international programme of assistance to Zambia and the mobilization of assistance;
- (c) To keep the situation in Zambia under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1980, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Zambia;
- (d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Zambia and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Complaints by Angola against South Africa

Twice in 1979 the Security Council adopted resolutions by which it strongly condemned South Africa for armed invasions of Angola and demanded that South Africa respect Angola's independence and territorial integrity. By resolution 447 (1979) of 28 March, the Council also asked for information from Angola on. the losses it had sustained, to enable the Council to determine the most effective sanctions to ensure the cessation of South Africa's attacks. By resolution 454(1979) of 2 November, it called for the withdrawal of South African forces following an armed attack into southern Angola.

Communications (March)

By a letter dated 6 March 1979, Brazil transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a statement sent on 5 March to the Minister for External Relations of Angola by the Minister for External Relations of Brazil, concerning a recent armed attack by South Africa against Angolan territory. The message said that Brazil repudiated and condemned the act of aggression against and disrespect for Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 7 March, Sri Lanka, as Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a communique issued on the same date by the Bureau in which it strongly condemned the repeated and co-ordinated acts of aggression committed against front-line States, including Angola, by South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, and appealed to the international community to assist the front-line States in order to reinforce their defence capability.

On 8 March, Ethiopia, as current Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations, transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a statement made by that group on the same date. The group condemned what it called the latest South African aggression against Angola, resulting in the wanton killings of Namibian refugees and Angolans. It called on the Security Council to take effective measures to put an end to South Africa's repeated acts of aggression against Angola and appealed to all States to assist the front-line States.

Also on 8 March, the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia sent to the Secretary-General a statement in which the Council strongly condemned the attack on 5 March by South African forces based in Namibia against Namibian refugee camps in Angola. It called on the Security Council to consider appropriate measures in conformity with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.⁵¹

On 15 and 16 March, Angola transmitted to the President of the Security Council the texts of communiqués by its Ministry of Defence, denouncing violations of Angolan airspace and bombing of Angolan territory by the South African air force between 8 and 14 March. The communiques also stated that South African armoured and infantry units, supported by helicopters, had penetrated Angolan territory on 13 March to a depth of 17 kilometres. The second communique also denied reports that Angolan forces had attacked South African forces

On 19 March, South Africa transmitted to the Council President the text of a letter of that date from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, who stated that the action by the South African security forces had been directed at terrorist bases of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) and was aimed at protecting the territorial integrity of South West Africa and the safety and security of its inhabitants. He added that the attention of the Governments of Angola and Zambia had repeatedly been directed at acts of violence emanating from their territories.

Consideration by the Security Council (19-28 March)

On 16 March 1979, Angola requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council in connexion with the question of South African aggression against Angola, especially in the light of that régime's recent and continuing acts of aggression and violations of Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity. The letter stated that the intensity and timing of the attacks threatened peace negotiations in southern Africa and therefore affected international peace and security.

The Council held eight meetings from 19 to 28 March to consider the complaint by Angola against South Africa. The following States were invited, at their request, to participate in the Council's discussion without the right to vote: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Bulgaria, the Congo, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, India, Liberia, Madagascar, Mozambique, Romania, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia

The Council also agreed, at the request of Gabon, Nigeria and Zambia, to extend invitations, under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, 52 to Mishake Muyongo and Theo-Ben Gurirab of SWAPO, Mfanafuthi Johnstone Makatini of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC) and David M. Sibeko of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC).

Angola said that, in the latest series of attacks, South Africa had bombed the regions around Melunga, Cahama and Catengue. South African violations had unremittingly taken place in the vicinity of several towns in Cunene province in southern Angola. In some cases, violations by aircraft and Puma helicopters had been coordinated with ground attacks involving South African armoured and infantry units. In the areas of Ndombondola, Oncocua, Holiafia and Maramuma, South African forces had penetrated Angolan territory to a depth of 17 kilometres. They had used napalm bombs against a SWAPO refugee centre.

The Puma helicopters, sophisticated arms and other war matériel had been acquired from the West, Angola stated. The timing of the latest series of attacks was a rude and arrogant gesture aimed at international mediation efforts in Namibia and southern Africa as a whole, and at the Namibian people's move towards genuine independence. Despite the attacks on the Cassinga refugee camps in Angola in May 1978 by the South African air force, Angola had not withdrawn its co-operation or participation in international efforts aimed at a negotiated settlement in Namibia. The racist South African régime used the pretext of SWAPO bases in Angola to attack Angola and its people. South Africa had never accepted the idea of a progressive people's republic in its vicinity. That was why, since independence, Angola had constantly been the victim of armed South African aggression and, more recently, of racist attacks engineered by Salisbury. Without concerted action by the powers that supported it, and without mandatory sanctions, nothing would deter South Africa in its plans to install a puppet régime in Namibia, aid its fellow racists in Salisbury, and carry out ever bolder attacks against independent African States.

Ethiopia, speaking on behalf of the group of African States at the United Nations, said that Pretoria continued to interfere. with the sovereign right of the people of Angola to freedom and independence. South Africa's aggression was another manifestation of its intention to perpetuate its illegal control of Namibia, even at the cost of plunging the region and, indeed, the world into war. Its objective was to eliminate SWAPO as a liberation movement leading the Na-mibian people in their effort to attain genuine self-determination and independence in a united Namibia. Africa called on the Council to consider, in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter, the application of all effective and appropriate measures, including mandatory comprehensive economic sanctions, against South Africa.

Zambia said that Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity were being violated by South Africa almost daily, as a consequence of which many Angolans and Namibian refugees continued to lose their lives and valuable Angolan property was being lost. For its part, Angola continued to exercise restraint. Systematic acts of aggression against Angola by South Africa dated back to the emergence of Angola as a sovereign country. In the midst of negotiations for a peaceful change in southern Africa, acts of aggression against the front-line States were escalating, and the Western countries seemed unable to use their influence to stop them. South Africa's persistent acts of aggression against Angola and Zambia—including intrusions by South African troops into and bombing raids on the Western Province of Zambia in the previous two weeks when 23 Zambians had been seriously injured and nine killed—belied its purported willingness to vacate Namibia. The Council should strongly condemn South Africa for its aggression against Angola and Zambia, and appeal to all States to render generous material and other assistance to the front-line countries, whose defence capabilities needed to be strengthened.

Botswana said the latest attack should be viewed in the broader context of the critical situation in southern Africa, including: the intensification of the liberation struggle in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe; the increased oppression of the peoples of those countries by the racists; the persistent efforts by the front-line States to find a way to resolve the situation peacefully; the desperation of the two racist régimes, which had united to wreak havoc in the area; and the repeated attacks by one or both of those régimes against the front-line States of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique and Zambia. South Africa's aim could only be to frustrate attempts to resolve the Namibian problem in accordance with United Nations resolutions. The international community should rally behind Angola, which should be enabled to increase its defence capacity in order to withstand those dastardly attacks. The Council should unequivocally condemn the attack against Angola and take whatever action it deemed necessary to stop a recurrence of such flagrant aggression.

Similar views were expressed by Algeria, Benin, the Congo, Egypt, Gabon, Ghana, Liberia, Madagascar, Mozambique, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan, Togo and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Sri Lanka said that South Africa's acts of aggression constituted a deliberate and carefully timed and executed strategy to undermine the independence and sovereignty of front-line African States, with the broader goal of setting back the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe, Namibia and South Africa. The commitment of the member countries of the non-aligned movement to support the struggle in southern Africa for its liberation from imperialism, colonialism, racism and apartheid had been emphasized at an Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Maputo, Mozambique, from 26 January to 2 February, which had strongly condemned all acts of armed aggression, expansionism and destabilization against the five front-line States—Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

Several speakers called on the Council to impose measures against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter, as envisaged in the last Council resolution arising from a complaint by Angola. These included Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Kuwait, Romania, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia.

Bolivia said that the Council should condemn the acts of violence committed by South Africa against the population of Angola, make a final appeal to the Pretoria Government to refrain from any act of provocation which might be interpreted as another mockery and defiance of the Council's authority and of the mediating efforts of the Western powers on Namibia, reaffirm the Council's confidence in the co-operative efforts of the Secretary-General and encourage the efforts at persuasion by the Western powers.

China said that the South African racist régime had committed another sanguinary crime against the African peoples, which China condemned with the utmost indignation. China supported the just demand of the African countries that the Council condemn South Africa and adopt effective measures to check its aggression. On the one hand, South Africa was staging the political fraud of an "internal settlement" for Namibia, holding sham elections to implant puppets. On the other hand, it was intensifying its armed suppression and had taken the perilous path of launching armed invasions into neighbouring African States. Meanwhile, the superpowers were interfering in the liberation struggles of southern Africa, fishing in troubled waters and throwing Africa into greater turbulence. But neither the racists' dying kicks nor the super-powers' foul deeds could stem the forward march of the southern African peoples.

Portugal observed that less than two weeks had elapsed since the Council had been called to consider the situation arising from an attack by Southern Rhodesian armed forces deep into Angolan territory (see p. 206). Portugal strongly condemned the most recent armed aggression by South African forces against Angola and the front-line States. If South Africa carried on with its policy of attacking neighbouring countries on the pretext of eliminating SWAPO bases, the prospects of leading the people of Namibia to independence through peaceful means would be more remote.

The USSR said that the South African racist régime was conducting a systematic policy of aggression to destabilize the situation in Angola by infiltrating diversionist gangs and ordering open barbaric attacks by its armed forces. Those aggressive actions against Angola and other African States were a serious threat to their sovereignty and territorial integrity and to peace and security in southern Africa. They were in support of South Africa's insolent demand that the United Nations operation in Namibia be conducted in conditions that would serve the interests of the ruling clique of South Africa and its puppets. Instead of exerting pressure on South Africa, the Western powers were virtually pandering to the Pretoria régime, trying to reassure it. The Council should take decisive and effective measures against the aggressor, including sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Ukrainian SSR said South Africa's attack on Angola was a new step in the escalation of the permanent aggression by South Africa against young African States. Responsibility for South Africa's acts of provocation must be borne not only by Pretoria but also by the countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). With their assistance, the racist army had been created and armed to the teeth. The apartheid régime acted as NATO's striking force against sovereign African countries.

Norway said that the attacks by South African forces against Angola and Zambia constituted serious violations of sovereignty and territorial integrity and must be condemned. Moreover, South Africa's actions complicated the process of achieving genuine independence for Namibia under United Nations supervision and control. Angola and Zambia, in the forefront of the liberation struggle in southern Africa, had long carried an unreasonably heavy burden, politically, materially and financially. The recent attacks had added to that burden through further human suffering and destruction of property. The international community had a responsibility to provide effective economic and humanitarian assistance to the front-line States.

Mr. Muyongo of SWAPO said that, in carrying out its acts of aggression against Angola and Zambia and massacring Namibian civilians there, South Africa tried to hide its ugly face behind the words of its Turnhalle stooges in Namibia. By virtue of their shameless collaboration with the enemy, the puppets who were paraded in United Nations corridors as representatives of the Namibian people were equally guilty of those heinous crimes. Mr. Muyongo pledged SWAPO's renewed commitment to co-operate with the peoples of Angola, Zambia and other frontline States in defence of their territorial integrity and national security, and to ensure the Namibian people's final vie tory over colonialism, imperialism and the forces of death and darkness.

Mr. Makatini of ANC said the root cause of the explosive situation in southern Africa lay in the tenacious determination of the Pretoria régime and its imperialist allies to arrest the unfolding process of decolonization in the region by imposing fictitious and neo-colonialist solutions in Namibia and Zimbabwe to ensure preservation of the status quo in South Africa.

Mr. Sibeko of PAC said that, for its crimes against the people of Azania and Angola and other front-line States, the South African apartheid régime had more than earned punishment under Chapter VII of the Charter. That punishment should be directed to the place where it would be felt most—to the economy that sustained apartheid colonialism.

The United Kingdom said it deplored South African attacks on Angola, as it condemned attacks and violence from any quarter. The best way to end the violence was to give effect to the cease-fire provided for in the proposals on Namibia made in 1978 by the Western members of the Security Counci1⁵⁴ and in the Secretary-General's report on Namibia dated 26 February 1979 (see p. 1071). However, progress towards a cease-fire could be achieved only if all those involved were prepared to take the actions necessary to put into practice the peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem.

France said it could only condemn and censure the attacks launched against Angola. The loss of life had aroused France's indignation and horror. South Africa's raids made it more difficult to achieve a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia. The northern borders of Namibia might well remain an area of tension and serious incidents until Namibia achieved independence as a result of a democratic process recognized by the international community. Efforts must be directed towards implementation of the settlement plan for Namibia approved by the Council in 1978.⁵⁵

On 28 March, Zambia introduced a draft resolution, sponsored also by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Gabon, Jamaica, Kuwait and Nigeria, which the Council adopted that day, as resolution 447(1979), by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (France, the United Kingdom and the United States).

By this resolution, the Council condemned strongly the racist régime of South Africa for its premeditated, persistent and sustained armed invasions of Angola, which constituted a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country as well as a serious threat to international peace and security. It also condemned strongly South Africa's use of the international territory of Namibia as a spring-board for armed invasions and destabilization of Angola. It demanded that South Africa cease immediately its provocative armed invasions against Angola and respect forthwith its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The Council commended Angola and other front-line States for their steadfast support of the people of Namibia in their just and legitimate struggle against South Africa's illegal occupation and for self-determination and independence. It requested United Nations Member States urgently to extend all necessary assistance to Angola and other front-line States, in order to strengthen their defence capacities. It requested the Secretary-General to obtain, and submit to it by 30 April, information from Angola on the human casualties and damage resulting from repeated aggression by South Africa, in order to enable the Council to determine the most effective sanctions in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the United Nations Charter so as to ensure the cessation of South Africa's acts of aggression against Angola and other front-line States.

Zambia, in introducing this resolution, described it as mild, but said that, its unanimous adoption would be a positive step in the international effort to meet the South African challenge.

Commenting on the text before it was adopted, Czechoslovakia viewed it as inadequate and not in keeping with the demands of the moment in connexion with the Council's decision, in resolution 428(1978), 56 to consider more effective measures if South Africa again violated Angola's territory. However, Czechoslovakia would vote for the resolution because it was acceptable to Angola.

The United Kingdom, referring to "proximity talks" on Namibia organized by the Foreign Ministers of the five Western States—Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States-in New York on 19 and 20 March, said that process would not be helped by passing the resolution at a delicate juncture, shortly before the hoped-for agreement on a cease-fire. It would not help bring about a cease-fire to argue about the aggressive or violent activities of either side. Nor was condemnation by the Council a substitute for an end to the fighting. The recent escalation of acts of violence had underlined the urgent need to secure an agreement which would make it possible to introduce an effective United Nations presence in Namibia. A new course must be charted to overcome the cycle of violence that had for so long oppressed the Namibian people and brought death and destruction to neighbouring States. The initiative of the five Western powers on Namibia was at a crucial stage and the United Kingdom would therefore abstain in the vote on the resolution. It did not read the resolution as constituting any commitment to future action by the Council.

France said it shared the general spirit and direction of the resolution, associated 'itself with the concern expressed on various points and could endorse several of the recommendations and warnings it contained. But certain formulations seemed inappropriate. France, which with its Western partners was playing an active part in a Namibian settlement, must continue to maintain a position in keeping with that situation. Consequently, it would abstain.

Speaking after the vote, Norway said that, in accordance with its long-standing policy, it would continue to provide only humanitarian and economic assistance to the front-line States. Moreover, the wording of the paragraph mentioning sanctions should not prejudge the outcome of the Council's future deliberations.

The USSR said that South Africa could not persist in its policy if it did not enjoy the support and protection of a number of Western countries, as shown by the abstentions recorded. Only the previous May, the same powers had voted to consider the question of applying more effective measures against South Africa if there were further acts of aggression by it against Angola; now, they had refused even to consider the matter. It was regrettable that the Council's latest resolution did not provide for the immediate adoption of effective and decisive measures against South Africa. Nevertheless, on the basis of its other provisions, the USSR had voted for the resolution.

The United States strongly condemned South Africa's recent attacks on SWAPO bases and refugee camps in Angola and Zambia, as well as all other acts of violence by any party which had taken place in the Namibian context. The pattern of violence which had taken hold in Namibia and was spreading into neighbouring States must be broken. The proximity talks in New York and subsequent discussions had produced a basis on which it would be possible to move towards a cease-fire, deployment of a United Nations presence in Namibia and the initiation of the transitional period. The United States hoped that no further impediments would emerge.

447(1979), the With regard to resolution United States had reservations regarding the procedure it established for obtaining information on the effects of the South African raids. The Council should, wherever possible, use methods of proven impartiality to obtain information, particularly as the information was to be used to determine the most effective sanctions which might be applied. The United States considered that it was up to the Council to decide on further action. Further, it did not believe that a solution to the problem of Namibia could be found through introduction of more arms and other military assistance in an area which was clearly suffering the effects of too many arms. Consequently, it did not interpret the resolution as condoning the presence of foreign military personnel in Angola or elsewhere in southern Africa, or as implying that violence could resolve the issue.

Portugal said it had difficulties in accepting the paragraph which seemed to prejudge the issue of sanctions and predetermine the conclusions to be drawn by the Council. Portugal believed that an agreement leading to implementation of the Council's 1978 settlement proposal for Namibia⁵⁷ was the best way to put an end to South Africa's acts of aggression. It reserved its position in relation to any future Council action.

Communications and report (April-2 November)

In notes issued on 27 April and 30 May 1979, the President of the Security Council indicated that the representative of Angola had proposed that the time-limit for submission of the information requested by the Council in resolution 447(1979) be extended—first until 31 May and subsequently until 30 June. The President further stated that informal consultations had shown that no Council member objected to the proposed extensions.

On 19 June, Angola transmitted to the Council President the text of a communique issued by its Minister for Defence, stating that on 11 June South African army aircraft had bombed the village of Humbe in Cunene province, causing death and injury of civilians as well as property damage.

On 10 July, Angola forwarded to the Council President the text of another communique issued by the Minister for Defence, stating that South African military aircraft had carried out attacks and bombings in Huíla and Cunene provinces on 6 July, causing the deaths of 11 Angolans, including four soldiers, as well as massive material damage.

On 27 July, the Secretary-General, in accordance with Council resolution 447 (1979), forwarded a report prepared by the Government of Angola on the human casualties and material and other damage resulting from repeated acts of aggression by South Africa. It stated that, between 27 March 1976 and 11 June 1979, the regular South African army had caused at least 570 confirmed deaths and 594 wounded among the Angolan population; among refugees, it had killed 3 and wounded 8 South Africans, killed 198 and wounded 600 Zimbabweans, and killed 612 and wounded 611 Namibians. The deaths had been the result of 193 minelaying operations, 94 airspace violations, 25 attacks by ground forces, 24 aerial bombardments, 21 ground infiltrations, 21 border provocations, 7 artillery bombardments, and a large-scale combined operation involving ground and air forces (at Cassinga in May 1978). Destruction and damage during the period were estimated to total $293,304,000. The report concluded that the Government and people of Angola could not fail to demand, as their legitimate right, just compensation for all the human and material losses they had sustained.

On 7, 26 and 27 September, Angola transmitted to the Secretary-General the texts of communiques issued by the Ministry of Defence on 7, 16, 18 and 27 September, giving details of land and airborne attacks by South African forces against Angola between 16 July and 26 September. According to the communiques, these included: an attack on 25 July against an Angolan reconnaissance mission in the border region south of Chiede, in which five soldiers were killed and three abducted to Namibia; air attacks on three areas in Cunene province on 11 September; and bombing and strafing attacks on 26 September at Lubango, capital of Huíla province, and Xangongo, a village in Cunene province, as a result of which 60 civilians had been killed and 126 wounded. The communique of 18 September said that Angola had re-established control over several villages at the southern border of Cuando-Cubango province.

On 31 October, Angola transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a communique issued the previous day by the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the MPLA (Movimento Popular de Libertagao de Angola)—Workers' Party, stating that on 28 October South Africa had launched a massive airborne and ground-troop assault on the southern cities of Porto Alexandre, Moçâmedes and Lubango, resulting in the deaths of 18 civilians and two Angolan soldiers and heavy destruction of vital economic facilities.

On 2 November, South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, denying that it had committed any acts of aggression against Angola and attributing the acts complained of to a civil war in Angola. Stating that some swapo members had taken sanctuary in countries such as Angola from where they launched attacks on civilians inside South West Africa/Namibia, the Foreign Minister said that South Africa was responsible for the physical security of the territory and, while the terror campaign continued, it would act relentlessly against all who endangered the security of the territory and its people. Enclosed with the letter were a list of 44 of what were termed examples of atrocities by swapo terrorists since January 1978 and a press statement by the Foreign Minister on 1 November urging the Secretary-General to condemn all swapo terrorist activities.

Consideration by the Security Council (1 and 2 November)

On 31 October, Angola requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council in connexion with the question of South African aggression against Angola, especially in the light of the recent and continuing acts of aggression and violations of Angola's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The Council considered the Angolan complaint at two meetings on 1 and 2 November. It invited the representatives of Angola, Brazil, Colombia, Cuba, Liberia, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mozambique, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Following its discussion, the Council adopted resolution 454(1979) on 2 November by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (France, the United Kingdom and the United States). The resolution was sponsored by Bangladesh, Gabon, Jamaica, Kuwait, Nigeria and Zambia.

By this resolution, the Council strongly condemned South Africa's aggression against Angola, and called on it to cease immediately all acts of aggression and provocation against Angola and forthwith to withdraw all its armed forces from Angola. It demanded that South Africa scrupulously respect Angolan independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, and desist forthwith from the use of Namibia to launch acts of aggression against Angola and other neighbouring States. It requested United Nations Member States to assist Angola and other front-line States to strengthen their defence capacities.

In the discussion preceding the adoption of this resolution, Angola said that on 28 October, in the latest of a series of attacks dating back to 1975, 19 Puma helicopters had landed South African troops in Angola. They had destroyed railroad tracks, a rail tunnel, four bridges, five automobiles and buses, and had planted road mines. Whenever a negotiated settlement on Namibia seemed close, South Africa had staged a massive armed attack against Angola to try to sabotage the settlement process. According to a South African white paper of March 1979, Angola said, Pretoria's defence strategy was to prepare for total war against Angola, Namibia, SWAPO and the possibility of majority rule in Zimbabwe.

Without the active participation. and assistance of the Western powers, Angola continued, South Africa's minority régime and apartheid structure could not survive, let alone be powerful enough to attack other States. There was evidence of nuclear collaboration with South Africa involving the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium and Israel. Such collaboration rendered suspect their credibility in the search for a peaceful settlement in southern Africa. The Council must call for total sanctions against South Africa and set up a mechanism to monitor their application.

Liberia, speaking on behalf of the President of the Organization of African Unity, said the timing of South Africa's attacks indicated that they were aimed at intimidating not only Angola but all the front-line States, so as to intensify the pressure on the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe and on SWAPO in the negotiations on Southern Rhodesia and Namibia. But South Africa's savagery would not intimidate the freedom fighters or oblige the front-line States to abandon them. Africa called on the Council to take decisive actions, including those provided for under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, to end the growing threat which the apartheid régime posed to the peace of Africa and the world.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, as Chairman for November of the African group of States at the United Nations, said South Africa wished to destabilize the front-line States in order to weaken their support for the liberation movements in South Africa, Namibia and Zimbabwe. The aggressive racist régime was still supported by some Western countries, which had enabled it to develop its nuclear capability. The African group called on the Council to condemn South Africa for its aggression against Angola, demand that it respect Angola's independence and territorial integrity, and take effective action against the racist régime in accordance with Chapter VII.

Cuba, on behalf of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, said that, whenever a peaceful settlement of the questions of Zimbabwe and Namibia seemed possible, the racist régimes and their allies found a way of torpedoing that possibility. The latest aggression against Angola was part of a plan aimed at preventing the liberation of Namibia, Zimbabwe and the African people of South Africa, and at hindering the independence of the front-line States, in order to guarantee racist domination over southern Africa. The non-aligned countries hoped that the Council would punish the perpetrators of the new crime against Angola and apply strictly the legal instruments provided for in the Charter.

Similar views were expressed by Gabon, Mozambique and Nigeria and by Zambia, which introduced the six-nation draft resolution.

Brazil called for a condemnation of South Africa by the Council for its unjustifiable aggression against Angola and urged compensation for the damage. The attack was also condemned by Bolivia, Colombia, Kuwait, Norway and Portugal.

The USSR said that, because of the support given to South Africa by the United States, the United Kingdom and other NATO countries, the Council had been unable to adopt effective measures against the aggression of the South African racists. The Council should not only condemn South Africa's actions; it should also provide for the adoption of effective and concrete measures under Chapter VII to call a halt to the actions of the aggressor.

The imposition of sanctions was also urged by Czechoslovakia, Jamaica and Viet Nam. Bangladesh and Yugoslavia said the time had come for the Council to consider acting on its own warnings to the racist régimes that continued aggression could lead to the adoption of effective enforcement measures.

China, condemning the fresh act of glaring armed aggression by South Africa, said its aim was to prevent the African States from aiding the Namibian people's struggle for national independence. China had firmly supported them in that struggle and had also supported the front-line States. The Council should severely condemn the South African racist authorities for their armed aggression against Angola and other African States, call on them to withdraw their invading forces immediately, and adopt effective measures, including all those proposed by the African countries, to prevent the recurrence of similar incidents.

The United Kingdom said it deplored attacks and violence from any quarter. The best way to end the violence was to implement the plan for Namibia approved by the Council in 1978 and put a cease-fire into effect with the greatest urgency. Progress towards a settlement could be achieved only if all those involved were prepared to turn aside from violence and return to negotiations. The five Western States were determined to pursue a peaceful solution for Namibia that would win international recognition. The resolution before the Council contained wording which the United Kingdom could not support for reasons of principle, and the United Kingdom would not regard it as constituting a determination under the Charter.

The United States said the South African raids into Angola could not be justified and represented a serious escalation of the conflict at a time when United Nations efforts to find a peaceful solution in Namibia were at a crucial stage. It deplored South Africa's action, as such actions could endanger the settlement and further poison South Africa's relations with its neighbours and the international community. The United States urged South Africa to exercise the utmost restraint. It regretted that the sponsors of the resolution had been unable to accept a few changes which would have allowed it to support the proposal.

France said it could only condemn such acts of force, which must cease. South Africa's inadmissible behaviour would seriously jeopardize the security of the region and complicate the peaceful settlement of the Namibian question. The northern borders of Namibia would continue to be a theatre of tension and serious incidents until Namibia became independent. It was imperative that the parties refrain from any act of violence, both in Namibia and in the neighbouring countries. France shared the spirit and the general ideas behind the resolution but regretted that certain amendments had not been made which would have permitted a unanimous vote

Further communications (November)

On 5 November 1979, South Africa transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, who said that South Africa rejected resolution 454(1979), which had been adopted without attempts first to establish the facts. A civil war was raging in Angola and led to the kind of incident of which South Africa stood accused, and SWAPO was persistently using Angola as a spring-board for hitand-run attacks across the border. South Africa was responsible for the safety of the inhabitants of South West Africa/Namibia and would continue to honour that commitment for as long as the situation persisted.

On 13 November, Angola transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a communiqué issued on 9 November by its Ministry of Defence, stating that South African forces had launched four attacks on southern Angola between 3 and 6 November, resulting in the deaths of three civilians.

The Security Council,

Having considered the request of the Permanent Representative of Angola contained in document S/13176, as well as his letter dated 16 March 1979 transmitting the text of a communiqué issued by the Ministry of Defence of the Peopie's Republic of Angola,

Having heard the statement of the Permanent Representative of the People's Republic of Angola,

Having heard the statement of the Vice-President of the South West Africa People's Organization, Bearing in mind its resolution 428(1978) of 6 May 1978, by which, inter alia, it solemnly warned that, in the event of further acts of violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola, it would meet again in order to consider the adoption of more effective measures in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including Chapter VII thereof,

Gravely concerned at the premeditated, persistent and sustained armed invasions committed by South Africa in violation of the sovereignty, airspace and territorial integrity of the People's Republic of Angola,

Convinced that the intensity and timing of these acts of armed invasion are intended to frustrate efforts at negotiated settlements in southern Africa, particularly in regard to the implementation of Security Council resolutions 385(1976) of 30 January 1976 and 435(1978) of 29 September 1978,

Grieved at the tragic and mounting loss in human life, including that of civilians and Namibian refugees in Angola and other front-line States, and concerned about the damage and wanton destruction of property caused by the South African armed invasions of Angola launched from Namibia, a Territory which South Africa illegally occupies,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolutions 385(1976) and 435(1978) and all other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and the legitimacy of their struggle to secure the exercise of such rights as set forth in these resolutions,

Reaffirming also its condemnation of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia and the militarization of the Territory, through which it persists in its suppression. of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence as well as in its armed invasions against neighbouring African States,

- Condemns strongly the racist régime of South Africa for its premeditated, persistent and sustained armed invasions of the People's Republic of Angola, which constitute a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country as well as a serious threat to international peace and security;
- 2. Condemns strongly also South Africa's utilization of the international Territory of Namibia as a spring-board for armed invasions and destabilization of the People's Republic of Angola;
- 3. Demands that South Africa cease immediately its provocative armed invasions against the People's Republic of Angola and that it respect forthwith the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country;
- 4. Commends the People's Republic of Angola and other front-line States for their steadfast support of the people of Namibia in their just and legitimate struggle against the illegal occupation of their territory by South Africa and for the enjoyment of their inalienable rights to self-determination and national independence;
- Requests Member States urgently to extend all necessary assistance to the People's Republic of Angola and other front-line States, in order to strengthen their defence capacities;
- 6. Requests the Secretary-General to obtain available information from the People's Republic of Angola on the human casualties and material and other damage resulting from repeated acts of aggression committed by the racist régime of South Africa:

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit such information to the Security Council not later than 30 April 1979, in order to enable it to determine the most effective sanctions in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations so as to ensure the cessation by South Africa of its acts of aggression against Angola and other front-line States.

Grieved at the tragic loss in human life and concerned about the damage and destruction of property resulting from the repeated acts of aggression committed by South Africa against the People's Republic of Angola,

Gravely concerned that these wanton acts of aggression by South Africa form a consistent and sustained pattern of violations aimed at weakening the unrelenting support given by the front-line States to the movements for freedom and national liberation of the peoples of Namibia, Zimbabwe and South Africa

Questions concerning Mozambique

Complaint by Mozambique against Southern Rhodesia

To a note verbale of 10 January 1979 to the Secretary-General, Mozambique annexed a letter of 9 January from its Minister for Foreign Affairs, who transmitted a communiqué issued by the Ministry of National Defence on 5 January stating that there had been an escalation of acts of aggression against Mozambique perpetrated by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia. According to the communiqué, those acts included air raids, incursions and attacks by airdropped enemy agents against railroads, convoys, bridges, roads, communication systems and other civilian and economic targets, killing men, women and children. The communiqué gave details of incursions and bombing incidents between 12 November and 29 December 1978, causing 55 deaths and many injuries. According to the Foreign Minister, the acts of aggression had taken the form of an invasion, creating an atmosphere conducive to the escalation of military confrontation. He also appended to his letter a statement of 5 January concerning these attacks, issued by the Permanent Political Committee of the Frente de Libertação de Moçambique.

On 7 March, Sri Lanka, as Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, transmitted the text of a communiqué issued by the Bureau in New York on the same date. The Bureau strongly condemned the repeated and co-ordinated acts of aggression committed by South Africa and Southern Rhodesia against Angola, Mozambique and Zambia.

By a letter dated 2 April, Mozambique transmitted a letter dated 30 March from its Minister for Foreign Affairs stating that agents of the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia had sabotaged oil facilities at Beira on 23 March. According to the Minister, the agents blew up an electricity line and oil pipelines to the pier and set fire to oil storage tanks. The fire had destroyed nine oil tanks and caused losses estimated at $3,125,000. He called on the international community to provide economic and military assistance to Mozambique.

By a note verbale dated 21 December, Mozambique transmitted a memorandum detailing the nature and cost of direct damages which it said had been caused by the aggression of the illegal régime of Southern Rhodesia against Mozambique from 1976 through 1979. The letter put the total value of such losses at well over $45 million worth of equipment, buildings and other infrastructure, without counting losses due to the paralysis of important economic sectors and the cost of substitute measures to overcome the situation.

Assistance to Mozambique

In compliance with a 1978 resolution of the General Assembly,⁵⁸ the Secretary-General dispatched a mission to Mozambique from 27 May to 3 June 1979. Its task was to review the country's economic situation and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme set in motion following a 1976 Security Council resolution appealing for international assistance to help Mozambique carry out its development programme and implement Council-mandated sanctions against Southern Rhodesia.⁵⁹ The mission's report was annexed to a report of the Secretary-General to the Assembly on assistance to Mozambique, dated 16 August.

The mission's report indicated that, in addition to having to cope with the economic consequences of applying sanctions against Southern Rhodesia and the grave social and economic problems inherited on independence, the Government of Mozambique had had to deal during the previous year with attacks and disruption caused by the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia. The economic and financial situation remained grave, due to a large balance-of-payments deficit, food shortages exacerbated by cyclone damage and extensive droughts, and the growing number of Zimbabwean refugees, estimated at 120,000.

Referring to the special economic assistance programme, the report said that the $460 million national investment programme planned for 1978/1979 could not be carried out without substantial additional international assistance. Of 42 projects for which foreign assistance had been sought as a matter of urgency, costing approximately $48 million, only 20 had attracted international funding, in whole or in part. Mozambique relied heavily on socialist countries for aid. Nine countries—Austria, Cyprus, Finland, Ghana, Norway, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic and Tunisia—had pledged a total of $1,510,305 to special account established by Secretary-General to channel contributions to Mozambique.

A further assessment of Mozambique's needs was made in an oral report on the current status of the special assistance programme for Mozambique made to the Economic and Social Council on 27 July by the Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes. He said that attacks from Southern Rhodesia had seriously disrupted economic development projects in the border areas and had caused substantial damage to cities, towns and infrastructure, including partial destruction of a hydroelectric plant and port installations. The Government was seeking international assistance to begin work on 22 development projects costing an estimated $15.4 million, and another $3 million would be needed in 1979 to assist refugees, according to a preliminary estimate. Food aid comprising 32,000 tons of wheat, 183,000 tons of maize and 37,400 tons of rice was also required, in addition to food pledges already

On an oral proposal of its President, the Council, by decision 1979/46 adopted without vote on 27 July, took note of the Co-ordinator's oral report.

On 14 December, without a vote, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/129, recommending continued assistance to Mozambique. The text, sponsored by 58 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was approved by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 21 November, also without a vote.

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Mozambique, as well as the assessment and recommendations of the May/June survey mission. Regretting that the total assistance provided to date fell far short of the country's pressing needs, it called on Member States and organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique, and wherever possible to strengthen programmes already being implemented or negotiated. It urged Member States and international financial institutions to contribute to the special account established by the Secretary-General to channel contributions to Mozambique.

United Nations organizations and programmes were requested to maintain and increase their assistance to Mozambique and to cooperate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective assistance programme. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was asked to continue his refugee assistance programmes. The Secretary-General was requested to continue to mobilize resources, to keep the situation in Mozambique under review, and to report to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in 1980.

In view of Mozambique's economic situation, States were asked to grant it the same treatment as that enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries.

After approval of the resolution, Canada, Denmark (speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries), France and the Federal Republic of Germany stated their position against granting least-developed-country status without the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning, made in conformity with established criteria.

In addition to the report of the survey mission to Mozambique, the Assembly had before it a report by the Secretary-General detailing assistance given to 10 African countries by various United Nations organizations. In the case of Mozambique, this included missions by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to identify projects needing assistance, support by the World Health Organization for immunization, an exploratory vocational training mission by the International Labour Organisation, literacy training projects approved by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and preparatory assistance for a maritime training school given by the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization.

Resolution 34/129, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the decision of the Government of Mozambique to implement mandatory sanctions against the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia in accordance with Security Council resolution 253(1968) of 29 May 1968,

Recognizing the substantial economic sacrifices made by Mozambique in the implementation of its decision to enforce sanctions and to close its borders with Southern Rhodesia, Concerned at the continued acts of aggression committed by the illegal and racist régime in Southern Rhodesia against Mozambique.

Noting with deep concern the loss of life and destruction of essential infrastructure such as roads, railways, bridges, petroleum facilities, electricity supply, schools and hospitals identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 1979, and the extensive damage and destruction suffered subsequent to the preparation of that report, referred to in a statement made by the representative of the Government of Mozambique,

Taking into account the fact that the Committee for Development Planning has recommended that the present list of the least developed countries should stand until the end of the Second United Nations Development Decade and that the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade has not yet been agreed upon,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide, and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize with immediate effect, financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its economic development programme normally and to enhance its capacity to implement fully the United Nations mandatory sanctions,

Recalling further its resolutions 31/43 of 1 December 1976, 32/95 of 13 December 1977 and 33/126 of 19 December 1978, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously with assistance to Mozambique,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 16 August 1979, to which was annexed the report of the review mission which he sent to Mozambique,

Noting with concern that the economic and financial position of Mozambique remains grave and beset by budget and balance-of-payments deficits and that, in the absence of increased international assistance, the Government will have to reduce major imports that are essential for its development programmes and for restoring industrial production to presanctions levels.

Recognizing that the drought in 1979 has seriously affected the Government's agricultural programmes and that, despite the international response to this natural disaster, external assistance is still required in the form of food-stuffs,

Taking into account the fact that Mozambique continues to provide asylum for a growing number of refugees who continue to be vulnerable to attack and harassment by the forces of the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia, and noting the need for additional international assistance for those refugees,

1. Strongly endorses the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Mozambique;

- 2. Endorses fully the assessment and major recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General;
- 3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize an international economic assistance programme for Mozambique;
- 4. Expresses its appreciation also for the assistance provided thus far to Mozambique by various States and regional and international organizations;
- 5. Regrets, however, that the total assistance provided to date falls far short of Mozambique's pressing needs;
- 6. Draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General as urgently required by Mozambique;
- 7. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Mozambique in their programmes of development assistance, if it is not already included;
- 8. Urges Member States and organizations which are already implementing or are negotiating assistance programmes for Mozambique to strengthen them, wherever possible:
- 9. Draws the attention of the international community to the special account established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Mozambique and urges Member States and international financial institutions to contribute generously to that account:
- 10. Requests the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular, the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund-to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance;
 - 11. Requests all States to grant to Mozambique, in view of

- its difficult economic situation, the same treatment as that enjoyed by the least developed among the developing countries;
- 12. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his humanitarian assistance programmes on behalf of refugees in Mozambique, and urges Member States and the international community to provide him speedily with the necessary means to carry out those programmes;
- 13. Further requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Mozambique;
- 14. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Mozambique and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1980;
 - 15. Requests the Secretary-General:
- (a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;
- (b) To continue to ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to mobilize resources and to co-ordinate the international assistance to Mozambique;
- (c) To keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions and other bodies concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1980, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Mozambique;
- (d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Mozambique and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Questions concerning Botswana

Complaint by Botswana against Southern Rhodesia

By a note verbale dated 10 August 1979 addressed to the Secretary-General, Botswana stated that the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia had committed aggression against it on 8 and 9 August, violating its territorial integrity. The note transmitted a press release issued on 9 August by the Office of the President of Botswana, stating that five Rhodesian soldiers had been landed inside Botswana territory by military helicopter and had killed a watchman and blown up a house before they were picked up by helicopter the next day.

Earlier reports of incursions by the illegal régime against Botswana and Zambia between 10 and 14 April were the subject of a communiqué issued by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries on 16 April, transmitted by a letter of the same date to the Secretary-General by Sri Lanka, Chairman of the Bureau.

The Bureau condemned the aggression against Botswana and Zambia, stating that it had resulted in the killing and maiming of many Zimbabwean refugees and the destruction of property.

Assistance to Botswana

In accordance with a 1978 request by the General Assembly, ⁶⁰ the Secretary-General submitted a report on assistance to Botswana to the thirty-fourth (1979) session of the Assembly. Annexed was the report of a review mission which the Secretary-General had dispatched from 16 to 22 May to assess the situation.

The mission's report stated that, according to the Botswana Government, the number of ground and air assaults from Southern Rhodesia had increased over the past year, requiring

Botswana to divert resources from development to security needs and to emergency projects designed to lessen the country's dependence on neighbouring régimes. As of 21 May, $64,968,000 had been contributed under the United Nations special economic assistance programme for Botswana, established following a Security Council appeal in 1977 for aid to the country. This total included $15,122,000 since 2 June 1978.

However, while some projects in that programme had been completed or were nearing completion, an estimated $65 million to $72 million was required for additional emergency projects, covering railway operation, construction of a national airport, building of service roads, completion of the Botswana-Zambia road, establishment of a national oil reserve and further phases of an animal-vaccine production factory. Another $1.4 million was needed for a $3 million refugee aid programme, partially financed by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to cope with the growing number of refugees from Zimbabwe, who numbered 20,000.

In an oral presentation to the Economic and Social Council on 27 July on the current status of special assistance programmes in Africa, the Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes said that, although the amount of international aid provided thus far was encouraging, Botswana would need substantial additional assistance, particularly in view of two natural disasters which had struck it in 1978 and 1979: an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, which had cut meat exports and consequently rural income; and a drought, which had reduced crop production up to 85 per cent and destroyed livestock forage. The Government had declared a drought emergency.

On an oral proposal of its President, the Council, in adopting decision 1979/46 without vote, took note of this oral report on 27 July.

On 14 December, also without vote, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/125 on assistance to Botswana. It acted on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which on 21 November had approved the text without a vote, as sponsored by 62 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

Expressing support for Botswana's efforts to safeguard its sovereignty and territorial integrity and to carry out its planned development programme, the Assembly endorsed the revised assistance programme set out in the report of the May review mission. It drew particular attention to assistance needs in the field of transport and communications as well as to deal with the drought. The Assembly called on Member States and organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Botswana, and urged those which were already implementing or negotiating assistance programmes for Botswana to expand them. It drew attention to the special account established by the Secretary-General for contributions to Botswana, and requested United Nations organizations to cooperate with him to facilitate the channelling of those contributions. The Secretary-General was requested to keep the situation in that country under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council of the status of the special assistance programme, and to arrange for a review in time for the 1980 regular session of the Assembly.

In addition to the Secretary-General's report on assistance to Botswana, the Assembly had before it a report by him on aid rendered to 10 African countries by various organizations in the United Nations system. Among the activities mentioned in respect of Botswana were studies by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization of the feasibility of establishing clothing and footwear industries, the proposed establishment of an emergency grain reserve by the World Food Programme, health services planning and management assistance by the World Health Organization, loans by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for rangeland and urban development projects, a programming mission from the International Fund for Agricultural Development, a programme by the International Labour Organisation to strengthen the cooperative movement, and the provision of experts in statistics and adult education by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Resolution 34/125, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 403(1977) of 14 January 1977 and 406(1977) of 25 May 1977 concerning the complaint by the Government of Botswana of acts of aggression committed against its territory by the illegal régime in Southern Rhodesia.

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 232(1966) of 16 December 1966 and 253(1968) of 29 May 1968, in which the Council determined and reaffirmed, respectively, that the situation in Southern Rhodesia constituted a threat to international peace and security,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 32/97 of 13 December 1977 and 33/130 of 19 December 1978, in which, inter alia, the Assembly expressed full support for the Government of Botswana in its efforts to safeguard its sovereignty and territorial integrity, recognized the special economic hardship confronting Botswana as a result of diverting funds from current and planned development projects to effective arrangements for security against attacks and threats by Southern Rhodesia, and endorsed the assessments and recommendations contained in the notes by the Secretary-General dated 28 March 1977 and 26 October 1977 and in his report of 7 July 1978,

Recalling also its resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 28 August 1979, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Botswana in response to General Assembly resolution 33/130,

Deeply concerned that the security situation continues to deteriorate, with incidents and incursions by Southern Rhodesian forces occurring frequently at various places along the Botswana border with Southern Rhodesia,

Noting that there has been a substantial increase in the flow of refugees into Botswana, particularly since the announcement of an "internal settlement" in Southern Rhodesia, resulting in the need to expand and improve refugee facilities,

Noting also the need of the Government of Botswana to develop effective road, rail and air communications both internally and with the rest of the world, in view of the uncertain political situation in the region, Botswana's vulnerability as a land-locked country and its dependence on the externally-controlled railway systems for the transport of its principal exports and imports,

Noting further the serious adverse economic implications of the drought situation and the second outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in the country,

- Expresses its full support for the Government of Botswana in its efforts to safeguard its sovereignty and territorial integrity and to carry out its planned development programme;
- Endorses fully the revised programme of assistance contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General and draws the attention of the international community to the outstanding needs for assistance identified in it;
- 3. Notes that, while the response from some Member States and international organizations to the appeals of the Secretary-General has been encouraging, there is urgent need to maintain the flow of contributions to carry out the remainder of the emergency programme, the implementation of parts of which continues to be of critical necessity;
- 4. Draws the attention of States and international and intergovernmental organizations particularly to the projects in the field of transport and communications as well as to the priority requirements to deal with the drought situation in accordance with the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;
- 5. Reiterates its appeal to all States and intergovernmental organizations to provide generous assistance to enable Botswana to carry out the remainder of its planned development projects as well as those made necessary by the current political and economic situation;
- 6. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Botswana to enable it to carry out its planned development programme without interruption;
- 7. Urges Member States and organizations which are already implementing or are negotiating assistance programmes for Botswana to expand them, wherever possible;
- 8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the assistance they are rendering to Botswana, for which the General Assembly has requested the Secretary-General to implement a special economic assistance programme, and to report the results of that assistance and their decisions to the Secretary-General in time for consideration by the Assembly at its thirty-fifth session;
- Draws the attention of the international community to the special account established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Botswana;
- 10. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to coperate closely with the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Botswana;
 - 11. Requests the Secretary-General:
- (a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Botswana;

(b) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Botswana and the mobilization of assistance;

(c) To keep the situation in Botswana under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1980, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Botswana; (d) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Botswana and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Matters concerning Lesotho

Assistance to Lesotho

In response to a 1978 request by the General Assembly, ⁶² the Secretary-General dispatched a mission to Lesotho to review the economic situation and the progress made in implementing the United Nations special economic assistance programme, established in accordance with a Security Council decision of 1977. ⁶³

The mission found, during its visit to Lesotho from 10 to 16 May 1979, that the international community had provided or pledged close to $123 million in assistance, an increase of $23.5 million since June 1978. There had been important contributions for Lesotho's road programme, construction of the national airport, establishment of a road haulage fleet and extension of Lesotho's labour-intensive development programme.

However, assistance was still urgently sought for the completion of many ongoing projects, including road construction, building of food reserves, attainment of self-sufficiency in grain processing, and hospital construction. Lesotho was about to launch its third five-year development plan aimed at reducing its dependency on South Africa.

The Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes assessed, in a statement to the Economic and Social Council on 27 July, the current status of the special assistance programme for Lesotho. Speaking of Lesotho's additional needs, he noted that the Government was proposing new projects designed to make it self-sufficient in food and energy, and to, improve telecommunications. He noted also that the country had been seriously affected by drought and required more food assistance.

The representative of Lesotho told the Council that his country had been particularly hit by the oil embargo against South Africa and by that Government's decision to curtail Lesotho's oil supply by 30 per cent compared with the previous year. Moreover, South Africa was calling into question the future of the customs agreement from which Lesotho derived substantial revenue. In addition, the creation in 1976 of the bantustan known as Transkei, located on Lesotho's border, had cut off more than a quarter million of its people from access to shopping areas and medical services. Lesotho continued to receive refugees from South Africa, Zimbabwe and Namibia, and was being aided by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). International assistance for transport development had also been generous, with the result that several remote areas were now accessible by road.

On an oral proposal by its President, the Council took note of the oral report by the Coordinator on 27 July by adopting, without vote, decision 1979/46.

On 14 December, without a vote, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/130, by which recommended continued assistance to Lesotho. It acted on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved without vote on 21 November the text of the resolution, as sponsored by 53 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The Assembly thereby endorsed the assessment and recommendations contained in the report of the May survey mission. It reiterated its appeal to Member States and organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Lesotho to enable it to become more selfsufficient in food production and to implement its development programmes. It also called on Member States to help Lesotho ensure an adequate and regular supply of oil, and to assist in developing its internal road and air systems as well as its air communication with the rest of the world. The Assembly took note of a meeting of donors held in Lesotho from 5 to 9 November. It drew attention to the special account established by the Secretary-General to facilitate the channelling of contributions.

United Nations organizations were requested to co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective assistance programme. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize resources for Lesotho, to consult with its Government on the question of migrant workers returning from South Africa and to report on the type of assistance required to establish labour-intensive projects to absorb them into the economy. He was also asked to keep the situation in Lesotho under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council of the status of the assistance programme and to arrange for a review of the situation in time for the 1980 regular session of the Assembly.

In addition to the over-all report on assistance to Lesotho, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report on assistance to 10 African countries by various United Nations organizations. For Lesotho, this mentioned such projects as aid by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in the establishment of a mechanized brick factory and in laying the groundwork for a pilot plant for agricultural tools and machinery, rural development assistance from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, assistance by the World Health Organization for health services development and the teaching of health sciences, credits by the International Development Association for agricultural services and highway maintenance, technical assistance from the International Labour Organisation for the establishment of a national employment service, and aid by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for libraries and teacher training.

Communications

In a letter dated 7 December 1979, South Africa informed the Secretary-General that nearly 250 refugees had entered South Africa from Lesotho in the preceding 10 days. South Africa requested assistance from UNHCR.

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 11 January 1980, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Lesotho said his Government had never been informed by South Africa about the presence of the alleged refugees. All those who had left Lesotho under the guise of refugees and were in the camp at Bethlehem, South Africa, were invited to return peacefully to Lesotho. The Government guaranteed that nothing would happen to them and no official action would be taken against them if and when they arrived in Lesotho.

Complaint by Benin

Communications (March-June)

By a letter dated 13 March 1979, Benin transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a Beninese ordinance of 19 October 1978 prescribing the death penalty for the crime of involvement in the activities of mercenaries.

By a letter dated 7 May, Benin transmitted the text of a press release issued on 4 April by its Permanent Mission to the United Nations and an article from the 27 March issue of Esquire magazine concerning the French mercenary Robert Denard, alias Colonel Maurin, accused by Benin of having led the armed attack on the airport and city of Cotonou, Benin, on 16 January 1977. ⁶⁴ In its press release, the Mission stated that the article, written by Jon Bradshaw, threw new light on a hired killer who, with the flagrant collusion of Western imperialist and colonialist circles, was being used to perpetrate crimes against the oppressed peoples of Africa on behalf of Western secret services.

By two letters dated 22 and 30 May to the Secretary-General, Gabon transmitted the texts of press releases issued on those dates by its Permanent Mission, protesting what the releases called mendacious and defamatory charges against Gabon and distortion of important facts in the Bradshaw article to the effect that Mr. Denard's activities had centred in Gabon, that he had helped its President to foment a military coup in February 1964, and that the aircraft bearing mercenaries involved in the 1977 attack had taken off from Libreville, Gabon.

By a letter dated 31 May, Zaire transmitted the text of a press release issued that day questioning the credibility of the article, as evidenced by its unfounded assertion that Mr. Denard had recruited 30 mercenaries to support Zaire's invasion of oil-rich Cabinda in Angola. Zaire had no need to covet the resources of a neighbouring country.

By a letter dated 21 May, Benin transmitted the text of a statement made by its President on 8 May during an official visit to Benin of the French Minister of Co-operation, in which the President reiterated his Government's request for the extradition of the French mercenaries involved in the 1977 attack.

By a letter dated 13 June, Benin transmitted the text of a special communique issued by its Government on 24 May announcing the imposition of death sentences on 100 mercenaries and traitors involved in the 1977 attack.

By a letter dated 29 June, Benin transmitted the text of a press communique issued that day by its Permanent Mission to the United Nations reproducing a communique of 28 June by the Benin Embassy in Paris. The Paris communique announced that the families of victims of the 1977 attack on Cotonou had lodged formal civil and criminal charges on 28 June in Paris against Mr. Denard and other French nationals in connexion with their participation in the attack.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

After receiving information that the Comoros and France were planning talks to resolve their differences over the status of the island of Mayotte in the Comorian archipelago, the General Assembly, in December 1979, reiterated earlier resolutions reaffirming the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte. France continued to contend that the island was part of the French Republic as a result of its population's decision in two referenda, while the Comoros claimed the island on historical and ethnic grounds.

On 16 November, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Assembly under its agenda item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte." The report recalled that in 1978 the Assembly had deferred consideration of this item. 65 On 1 May 1979, the Secretary-General had invited the two interested parties, the Comoros and France, to provide him with any additional information pertaining to negotiations for a settlement.

By an aide-mémoire of 10 July, France had apprised the Secretary-General of developments in Franco-Comorian relations during the past year, including: the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries on 1 July 1978; their signing on 10 November 1978 of a Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation and a series of economic, financial, cultural and military agreements; and contacts between their two Presidents in Paris. In view of those developments and its position of principle, the French Government reaffirmed its opposition to including the question of Mayotte in the Assembly's agenda.

On 7 November 1979, the French Government further informed the Secretary-General that it had proposed to the Comorian Government on 24 October the holding of ministerial-level talks on aspects of the unresolved Franco-Comorian difficulties and on ways of strengthening economic and human relations between Mayotte and the other islands of the archipelago. The Comorian Government had replied favourably and the French Government therefore expected that talks could be arranged shortly.

The Comorian Government for its part informed the Secretary-General by a note verbale of 2 October that it had taken various internal and external initiatives aimed at achieving a favourable climate for negotiations towards a just and equitable solution. The Comorian State had decided to adopt a new federal Constitution which, while respecting the unity of the Republic, granted considerable autonomy to each island. This was aimed at meeting the wishes of the inhabitants of Mayotte for greater autonomy in the management of their administrative affairs within the archipelago, and also at decentralizing administration. A suitable framework had thus been created to facilitate the reintegration of Mayotte, assuring it the same rights as the other Comorian islands, including the right to have its own administrative autonomy, while respecting the unity of the Republic. The note mentioned the talks held by the heads of State of France and the Comoros, during which they had agreed to reconsider the question of Mayotte with a view to finding a satisfactory solution. It also mentioned the support for its position that had been expressed in decisions taken by the Assembly of Heads of State or Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) at its sixteenth session (Monrovia, Liberia, July 1979) and by the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Havana, Cuba, September 1979).

Those measures and the action taken by the Comorian Government were such as to create a favourable climate for negotiations, and the Comoros declared itself ready to enter into negotiations at the earliest possible date.

In concluding remarks, the Secretary-General said he had taken note of the information provided by the two Governments, their positions on the question of Mayotte and the improved state of relations between them. He had informed the parties of his readiness to continue his efforts in favour of a settlement.

The Assembly placed the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte" on the agenda of its thirty-fourth (1979) session after the General Committee, on 19 September, recommended its inclusion by 22 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions. In the Committee, France said that inclusion of the item violated Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations, 66 as Mayotte was an integral part of France.

On 6 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/69 by a recorded vote of 112 to 1, with 23 abstentions. The Assembly thereby reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte and appealed to France to begin negotiations with the Comoros as soon as possible with a view to implementing United Nations resolutions. It requested the United Nations Secretary-General, in liaison with the Administrative Secretary-General of OAU, to assist the parties and to report on developments to the Assembly at its 1980 regular session when the item would again be on the agenda.

The resolution was sponsored by Botswana, Cape Verde, the Comoros, Equatorial Guinea, the Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

In the Assembly debate on the subject, the Foreign Minister of the Comoros reiterated his country's position that, as Mayotte had been a part of the Comoros in colonial times, it should remain so now that the archipelago had achieved independence. With the aim of relaxing rigid positions and opening the way to a solution, the Comoros had agreed to resume relations with France, and had begun preliminary contacts with it that had created an atmosphere more favourable to dialogue. A series of meetings planned to begin in December should make it possible to settle the question at an early date.

France recalled that the people of Mayotte, in referenda held in 1974 and 1976, had expressed their will to remain a part of France. Their choice was not irrevocable; the final choice would depend on the democratically expressed opinion of the Mahorais. France did not oppose a freely agreed alliance between Mayotte and the other parts of the archipelago. It had no doubt that the parties would display mutual cooperation in the forthcoming talks.

The six other speakers who took part in the debate called for a return of Mayotte to the Comoros. Liberia, representing the current Chairman of OAU, and Zaire urged both France and the Comoros to speed their efforts for an early solution. Senegal, stating that the Comoros must recover the geographical limits it had had under French colonial rule, hoped the Assembly would encourage negotiations between the two countries on the basis of United Nations resolutions. Papua New Guinea said the decolonization of the Comoros remained incomplete while France held on to Mayotte. Cuba, speaking of the military occupation of Mayotte by a permanent member of the Security Council, said there were overwhelming reasons for returning the island to the Comoros. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it was up to France, if it wished to prove its good intentions, to hold direct consultations with the Comoros aimed at a transfer of power over Mayotte; observers from OAU and the United Nations might attend the consultations.

Prior to this debate, on 23 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/44 on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and independence. By that resolution, it took note of the contacts between France and the Comoros in the search for a just solution to the integration of Mayotte into the Comoros in accordance with United Nations and OAU resolutions. Other special economic assistance programmes in Africa

The United Nations was engaged during 1979 in special economic assistance programmes covering 10 African countries. Four of these, dealt with in previous subchapters of this chapter, were initiated by the Security Council for southern African nations whose economies were adversely affected by the effects of sanctions applied against Southern Rhodesia or by their proximity to South Africa; these were Botswana (see p. 237), Lesotho (see p. 240), Mozambique (see p. 234) and Zambia (see p. 221).

The special economic assistance programmes for the six other countries had been initiated by the General Assembly in the light of particular economic problems faced by these nations: Cape Verde, the Comoros, Djibouti, Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome and Principe, and Seychelles. Developments relating to these programmes are described in this subchapter.

The Secretary-General, in accordance with Assembly requests of December 1978, sent a special survey mission to each of these countries during the first half of 1979 to review the economic situation and the progress of the assistance programmes. The reports of the missions were annexed to reports by the Secretary-General to the Assembly. He also reported to the Assembly on assistance rendered to the 10 countries by various United Nations organizations.

On 27 July, the Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes in the Office for Special Political Questions made an oral report to the Economic and Social Council on the status of the programmes. The Council took note of this oral report by decision 1979/47, adopted, without vote on the same day, on a proposal of the Council President. Following consideration of these programmes by the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee in October and November, the Assembly adopted in December, on the Committee's recommendation, a resolution on each programme, requesting the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize resources from Governments and international organizations for a programme of financial, technical and material assistance.

By resolution 34/21 of 9 November 1979, on co-operation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Assembly called on Member States and organizations to participate in implementing the special economic assistance programmes for African States experiencing grave economic difficulties. It requested the Secretary-General to co-ordinate efforts with all similar programmes initiated by OAU. (See p. 264.)

Several of the countries also had refugee problems, for which the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) provided assistance (see p. 916).

Details follow on the programmes for the six countries not previously covered in this chapter.

Assistance to Cape Verde

In pursuance of a 1978 request by the General Assembly, ⁶⁷ the Secretary-General sent a review mission to Cape Verde from 22 to 27 March 1979 to assess the economic situation and the implementation of the special economic assistance programme set in motion in response to a 1976 Assembly resolution. ⁶⁸ The mission's report was annexed to a report by the Secretary-General to the Assembly, dated 9 August 1979, on assistance to Cape Verde.

In its report, the mission indicated that the country's most serious economic problems continued to be a substantial and continuously increasing trade deficit and a recurrent budget deficit, in spite of the Government's efforts to control expenditure. Moreover, prolonged drought and a catastrophic fall in the production of food and fodder continued to make food aid essential.

The Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Economic and Social Council on 27 July that only 10 of the 70 projects recommended in the $95 million assistance programme formulated in 1978 had been financed in whole or in part by foreign assistance. The Government's investment budget for 1979 was $53 million, with major efforts in agriculture, soil conservation, fishing and transport. However, in view of the expected deficit in the regular budget, the Government would have to rely on international assistance and the proceeds of food aid to finance the investment programme. The food situation was in some respects more serious than in 1978, with the deficit estimated at nearly 65,000 tons, the major needs being maize, wheat, beans and sugar. Pledges of food aid were still insufficient.

The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the General Assembly's Second Committee on 15 October that the absence of rain in August and September had resulted in total crop failure. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) had been requested to send a mission to assess the magnitude of the disaster, to define the extent of food needs and to co-ordinate assistance. As to the rest of the development programme, the major assistance required was for agriculture, water and soil development, road and marine transport, fisheries and mineral exploitation, education, health and urban development.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/119. Its Second Committee had approved the text on 21 November also without vote, as sponsored by 70 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations contained in the report of the March survey mission. It reiterated its appeal to all States and organizations to assist Cape Verde in its accelerated development programme, and called for generous responses to all appeals for food and fodder in view of the critical situation facing the country. It drew attention to the special account established by the Secretary-General to facilitate the channelling of contributions to Cape Verde.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize resources for Cape Verde, to pursue with its Government the question of organizing a meeting of donors, to keep the situation there under review, and to keep the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council informed in 1980.

The Assembly also had before it a report of the Secretary-General on the activities of various United Nations organizations in the countries benefiting from special economic assistance programmes. With respect to Cape Verde, this report cited such activities as help from the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in industrial development planning, aid by the World Health Organization (WHO) in establishing a decentralized health services system, an economic mission from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), a $3.8 million loan in 1978 from the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), technical assistance by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) on public works and other employment, missions in 1978 by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the development of a cultural institute and on education planning, and assistance by the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) in shipyard reorganization and navigational aids.

Assistance to the Comoros

In response to a 1978 resolution of the General Assembly, ⁶⁹ the Secretary-General sent a review mission to the Comoros from 7 to 14 April 1979 to assess the economic situation and the assistance required. The mission's report was annexed to a report dated 12 July which the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly on assistance to the Comoros.

The review mission found that the budget deficit remained the country's biggest economic problem, with a $10 million deficit anticipated in a 1979 budget of $18 million. Also, exports had covered only 46 per cent of the value of imports in 1978, and both internal and external debt remained high. Only generous external aid had kept services and development projects running; this included about $9.5 million in non-project aid and several million in project assistance since 1977.

The Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Economic and Social Council on 27 July that funds had been found for about one third of the 30 projects in the $26 million assistance programme for the Comoros endorsed by the Assembly in 1977. Substantial assistance was urgently required for other projects, notably budget support, agricultural development, inter-island air and sea transport, strategic reserves of food and fuel, malaria eradication, and hospital equipment and supplies. About $23 million would be needed for 1979.

The Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Assembly's Second Committee on 15 October that the need to repair fuel storage installations in the Comoros had become extremely critical and that the Government was seeking $700,000 for the project.

⁷⁰ See Y.U.N., 1977, p. 2.52, resolution 32/92 of 13 December 1977.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/127. The Second Committee had likewise approved the text on 21 November, as sponsored by 60 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly noted with concern that the aid provided fell short of the country's urgent requirements, and renewed its appeal to Member States and organizations to provide effective and continuous assistance to help the Comoros overcome its financial and economic difficulties. Member States were urged to consider including the Comoros in their bilateral development assistance programmes and to expand such programmes where they already existed.

The Assembly drew attention to the special account for the Comoros established by the Secretary-General. It requested him to continue to mobilize resources, to pursue with the Government the question of organizing a meeting of donors, to keep the situation under review, and to keep the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council informed in 1980.

In a report on activities by various United Nations organizations in the 10 African countries benefiting from special economic assistance programmes, the Secretary-General mentioned with regard to the Comoros such activities as a mission by UNIDO to identify potential projects, a 1978 mission by FAO which had identified 18 projects for possible external aid, the development of health services and statistics with the aid of WHO, a $5 million World Bank credit for roads and training, a reconnaissance mission from IFAD, technical assistance from ILO for vocational training, and a mission by UNESCO to analyse the education system.

Assistance to Djibouti

Pursuant to a 1978 resolution of the General Assembly, ⁷¹ the Secretary-General sent a review mission to Djibouti from 31 March to 6 April 1979 to assess the economic situation and the implementation of the emergency economic assistance programme initiated following a 1977 Assembly resolution. ⁷² The mission's report was annexed to a report dated 17 July submitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly.

The mission found that the process of strengthening and diversifying the economy had gathered momentum. Projects already under way or about to begin included the improvement of Djibouti's port facilities, pilot irrigation schemes, water resources development, seaweed production and the construction of a mineral-water plant.

As to the status of the $114 million assistance programme endorsed by the Assembly in 1978, the mission found that, in addition to direct and indirect contributions towards meeting Djibouti's recurrent budget deficit, project funding and pledges to the country during 1978 and 1979 had totalled nearly $90 million, mostly from Saudi Arabia. In addition to aid needed to strengthen its economy, Djibouti required help in dealing with the problems posed by the presence of approximately 30,000 refugees.

On 3 June, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its fifth session at Manila, Philippines, adopted resolution 118(V), by which it appealed urgently to States to provide the assistance needed by Djibouti to overcome its serious difficulties. The Conference also recommended that Djibouti be included in the category of least developed countries. (See p. 568.)

The Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Economic and Social Council on 27 July that Djibouti needed about $20 million more in external assistance to complete its development programme. This information was repeated to the Assembly's Second Committee on 15 October by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes, who added that increased aid was also needed to meet the basic needs of refugees.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/124. The Second Committee had similarly approved the text on 21 November, as sponsored by 57 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations of the mission to Djibouti. It invited the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to include Djibouti in the new list of least developed countries to be drawn up in the context of the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s). It called on Member States and organizations to provide Djibouti with ample and appropriate assistance, bilaterally and multilaterally, whenever possible in the form of grants. The Assembly requested UNHCR to increase refugee assistance programmes.

The Assembly urged Member States and international financial institutions to contribute to the special account established by the Secretary-General for Djibouti. It requested United Nations organizations to maintain and increase their assistance and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in organizing an international assistance programme. The Secretary-General was requested to continue to mobilize resources, to continue his efforts to organize a donors' meeting on behalf of Djibouti, to keep the situation in Djibouti under review, and to keep the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council informed in 1980.

A report by the Secretary-General on activities of various United Nations organizations in the 10 African countries benefiting from special economic assistance programmes mentioned a number of activities in Djibouti, including a mission by UNIDO to identify aid projects, a mission by FAO to identify agricultural requirements, advice by WHO on smallpox eradication and water supply, an economic mission from the World Bank, vocational training and social security activities by ILO, and fellowships in mathematics and educational planning by UNESCO.

Assistance to Guinea-Bissau

In pursuance of a 1978 request by the General Assembly, ⁷³ the Secretary-General sent a review mission to Guinea-Bissau from 28 to 30 March 1979 to examine the country's economic situation and the progress made in implementing the special economic assistance programme initiated by the Assembly in 1977. ⁷⁴ The mission's report was annexed to a report dated 3 August submitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General.

The mission found that the international response to the needs of Guinea-Bissau had fallen short of the country's requirements and that only 21 of the 58 projects included in the $38 million special economic assistance programme had received partial or complete funding from outside. The mission also reported continuing though reduced budget and balance-of-payments deficits, and called for more assistance to deal with the shortfall of resources and food shortages.

The Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Economic and Social Council on 27 July that, despite efforts by the Government, there was no foreseeable possibility in the near future of a national budget surplus that might become available for public investment. Moreover, arrears in the balance of payments were accumulating, since foreign assistance was not enough to finance imports. He estimated that Guinea-Bissau needed a further $10 million in aid for 1979.

To assist Guinea-Bissau, the Assembly on 14 December adopted without vote resolution 34/121. The Second Committee had approved the text on 21 November, also without vote, as sponsored by 64 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations of the March review mission to Guinea-Bissau. It reiterated its appeal to Member States and organizations to provide assistance to help the country overcome its financial and economic difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes identified by the mission. It called in particular for food aid and for assistance in developing water transport. It also drew attention to the special account established by the Secretary-General to channel contributions to Guinea-Bissau.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize resources for Guinea-Bissau, to pursue with the Government the question of organizing a meeting of donors, to keep the situation in Guinea-Bissau under review, and to keep the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council informed in 1980.

The sponsors revised the original version of their draft resolution in respect of two provisions calling for special measures for Guinea-Bissau. First, they replaced a paragraph which would have had the Assembly call on Member States to accord the country, as a matter of priority, privileges and benefits and to give special consideration to including it in their development assistance programmes by a text requesting Member States and United Nations organizations and programmes to accord it special measures for the rest of the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s). Second, the sponsors added a paragraph by which the Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to consider including Guinea-Bissau in the new list of least developed countries.

The Assembly also had before it a report by the Secretary-General on activities by various United Nations organizations in the 10 African countries benefiting from special economic assistance programmes. With regard to Guinea-Bissau, the report mentioned such activities as help in economic planning by an expert furnished by UNIDO, a mission by FAO to formulate projects for possible financing by Governments, the provision by WHO of staff and equipment for health services development and communicable disease control, a $9 million International Development Association credit for road rehabilitation, technical assistance by ILO to a technical vocational training institute, the preparation of several education projects by a 1977 mission from UNESCO, and help from IMCO in maritime safety inspection and the improvement of navigational aids.

Assistance to Sao Tome and Principe

In response to a 1978 request by the General Assembly, ⁷⁵ the Secretary-General sent a mission to Sao Tome and Principe from 3 to 6 April 1979 to review the economic situation and the implementation of the special economic assistance programme initiated under a 1976 Assembly resolution. ⁷⁶ The mission's report was annexed to a report dated 6 August. which the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly.

The mission reported that the Government needed external assistance to finance its investment budget of $19 million. The country would also have to import substantial quantities of food in 1979 and early in 1980 in order to cover losses in food production resulting from a prolonged drought and a severe outbreak of African swine pest threatening pork production. Only 17 projects had been implemented out of the 48 making up the $21 million special economic assistance programme drawn up by a 1978 mission.

The Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Economic and Social Council on 27 July that the combination of a decline in copra exports, the impact of world inflation and mounting import prices was likely to lead to a 1979 trade deficit of $3.5 million and a budget deficit of more than $5 million. Also, further international assistance was needed to control the swine pest epidemic.

Supplementing this information, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Second Committee on 15 October that the thrust of the assistance programme was directed to transport, as the Government was anxious to develop adequate sea and air transport between the two islands and with the African mainland.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/131. Its Second Committee had approved the text on 23 November, also without vote, as sponsored by 45 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The Assembly thereby endorsed the assessment and recommendations made by the April review mission. It reiterated its appeal to Member States and organizations to provide assistance, including food aid, to Sao Tome and Principe. It urged United Nations organizations to assist the Government in formulating development projects and in implementing its development programme. It drew attention to the special account established by the Secretary-General to channel contributions to Sao Tome and Principe. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was asked to consider assigning to the country a full-time UNDP representative.

The Secretary-General was requested to continue to mobilize resources for Sao Tome and Principe, to pursue with the Government the question of organizing a meeting of donors, to keep the situation in the country under review, and to keep the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council informed in 1980.

The text as adopted was revised to incorporate two changes made by the sponsors to their original version, as well as two other changes suggested by the Federal Republic of Germany. The first pair of changes were: (1) to replace a paragraph appealing to Member States to accord Sao Tome and Principe, as a priority matter, special assistance normally given to a least developed country and to give special consideration to including it in their development assistance programmes by a paragraph by which the Assembly requested Member States and United Nations programmes and organizations to accord Sao Tome and Principe special measures for the rest of the Second United Nations Development Decade; and (2) to insert a paragraph by which the Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to consider including Sao Tome and Principe in the new list of least developed countries.

The amendments by the Federal Republic of Germany were: (1) to have the Assembly urge UNDP and other United Nations organizations to respond favourably to "requests," rather than "any request," for technical assistance by Sao Tome and Principe; and (2) to delete from the paragraph requesting the assignment of a UNDP representative to Sao Tome and Principe a phrase stating that such an official might also assist the Government in co-ordinating its social and economic development programmes.

A report by the Secretary-General to the Assembly listed activities by various United Nations organizations in the 10 African countries affected by special economic assistance programmes. With regard to Sao Tome and Principe, it mentioned such activities as a study by unido on the extension of a brewery, assistance by who in planning health programmes and strengthening health services, a study by an illo adviser on prospects for launching a vocational training project, and missions in 1977 by unesco on a national institute of education and culture project and on the development of television.

Assistance to Seychelles

In response to a 1978 request by the General Assembly, 77 the Secretary-General sent a review mission to Seychelles from 15 to 19 May 1979 to assess the economic situation and the implementation of the special assistance programme for the country initiated under a 1977 Assembly resolution.⁷⁸ The mission's report was annexed to a report dated 15 August which the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly.

The mission found that, in consequence of depleted reserves and the large current account deficit projected for 1979, Seychelles urgently required additional assistance, or a significant increase in the inflow of private capital, to prevent a further fall in 1979 of its foreign exchange reserves. However, the international response had not been commensurate with needs. Of 27 economic assistance projects designed strengthen the country's social and economic infrastructure, four had been fully funded by external assistance, partial financing had been arranged for seven, and five others were the subject of advanced negotiation.

The Joint Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes told the Economic and Social Council on 27 July that, whereas the growth of tourism had produced a surplus in Seychelles' balance of payments from 1974 to 1977, the increase in import prices had produced a deficit in 1978 and foreign exchange reserves had fallen by nearly $2 million. The situation would be worse in 1979 without external aid.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/126, which had been similarly approved on 21 November by the Second Committee. The text was sponsored by 48 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly endorsed the assessment and recommendations made by the missions sent to Seychelles by the Secretary-General in 1978⁷⁹ and 1979. It drew attention to the special development problems confronting Seychelles as a developing island country with a small population, and appealed again to Member States and organizations to provide assistance to Seychelles for its social and economic infrastructure. It requested United Nations organizations to maintain and increase their assistance and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an assistance programme. In addition, it drew attention to the special account established by the Secretary-General to channel contributions to Seychelles, and asked him to continue to mobilize resources, to pursue with the Government the question of organizing a donors' meeting, to keep the situation in Seychelles under review, and to keep the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council informed in 1980.

The Assembly also called on Member States to accord Seychelles, as a priority matter, special assistance and benefits and to give special consideration to including it in the new list of least developed countries to be drawn up in the context of the next development decade.

After approval of the text, Canada, Denmark (on behalf of the Nordic countries), France and the Federal Republic of Germany restated their position with regard to the necessity of applying the established procedures and criteria for according least-developed-country status.

The sponsors orally revised their original submission to include references to the Secretary-General's 1978 report on assistance to Seychelles.

Another report by the Secretary-General detailed some of the activities carried out by United Nations organizations in the 10 African countries benefiting from special economic assistance programmes. With regard to Seychelles, it mentioned such activities as: projects by UNIDO to identify industrial potentials and operate a boat-building complex; formulation of potential projects by FAO; assistance by WHO for health services planning and manpower development; a reconnaissance mission by the World Bank; technical assistance by ILO in industrial safety and vocational training; help by UNESCO in 1977 in preparing a five-year development plan for education and, in 1979, in setting up a communication infrastructure; and advisory services by IMCO.

Resolution 34/119, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/127 of 19 December 1978, in which it made an appeal to the international community to provide generous and immediate assistance to the development programme recommended in the report of the Secretary-General on the mission which he sent to Cape Verde in response to General Assembly resolution 32/99 of 13 December 1977, and in which it requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Cape Verde,

Recalling also that in its resolutions 31/17 of 24 November 1976 and 32/99 of 13 December 1977 it noted with concern the grave economic situation existing in Cape Verde as a result of severe drought, the total lack of infrastructure for development and other social and economic strains on the economy of the country,

Recalling further its resolutions 31/180 of 21 December 1976, 32/170 of 19 December 1977 and 33/133 of 19 December 1978 concerning measures to be taken for the benefit of the drought-stricken countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region,

Recalling its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976 and 32/185 of 19 December 1977, as well as resolution 111(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, concerning specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Noting that Cape Verde is classified by the United Nations as a least developed country as well as a most seriously affected country, and is a member of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, Bearing in mind resolution 122(V) of 3 June 1979 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which contains a Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries.

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 9

August 1979, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Cape Verde in response to General Assembly resolution 33/127,

Taking note of the current development priorities of the Government of Cape Verde, which include urgent programmes for increasing agricultural production and water supplies, the development of fisheries, the promotion of manufacturing, the exploitation of minerals, the development of inter-island transport and port facilities and the improvement of educational facilities.

Taking into account the fact that the majority of the projects of the programme of development approved by the General Assembly at its thirty-third session are not as yet financed,

Noting the severe strain on the recurrent budget of Cape Verde, resulting largely from the drought, and the Government's policy of austerity to reduce the financial deficit,

Noting the minimum food needs of Cape Verde for 1979, as described in table 7 of the report of the Secretary-General,

Gravely concerned that the expected harvest for 1980 has been lost as the result of the failure of the seasonal rains and the recurrence of drought,

Recognizing the essential role of food aid for the country at the current stage of development and the fact that the food aid made available to Cape Verde has helped to ensure a minimum availability of food and has, in addition, contributed to labour-intensive development projects through the use of sale proceeds.

Recognizing also the gravity and urgency of the economic and social problems confronting Cape Verde and the country's need for more effective and immediate assistance for the integral implementation of a programme of accelerated development.

- Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Cape Verde;
- Endorses fully the assessment and recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General and draws the attention of the international community to the urgent requirements for assistance identified in it;
- 3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States and international organizations for the assistance provided to Cape Verde, both in food aid and development aid;
- 4. Reiterates its appeal to all States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Cape Verde so as to enable it to carry out a programme of accelerated development;
- 5. Calls upon Member States to give special consideration to the early inclusion of Cape Verde in their programmes of development assistance and, in cases where assistance programmes for Cape Verde are already in force, to expand them, wherever possible;
- 6. Calls upon the international community to contribute generously to all appeals for food and fodder assistance made by the Government of Cape Verde or on its behalf by the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to help it cope with the critical situation in the country:
- 7. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Cape Verde and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1980.
- 8. Draws the attention of the international community to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/99, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Cape Verde;
- 9. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Cape Verde:

- 10. Requests the Secretary-General:
- (a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Cape Verde;
- (b) To pursue with the Government of Cape Verde the question of organizing a meeting of donors and, in this respect, to co-ordinate efforts with the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic Commission for Africa and the World Bank:
- (c) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Cape Verde and the mobilization of assistance;
- (d) To keep the situation in Cape Verde under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1980, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Cape Verde;
- (e) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Cape Verde and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/42 of 1 December 1976, in which it urgently appealed to the international community to assist the Comoros in an effective and continuous manner so as to enable it to face successfully the critical situation resulting from the economic difficulties experienced by that newly independent country,

Recalling also its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries, and 32/185 of 19 December 1977, in which it urged all organizations in the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific action in favour of developing island countries.

Recalling further its resolution 32/92 of 13 December 1977, in which it endorsed the assessment and recommendations of the United Nations Mission to the Comoros, contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 3

November 1977, and its resolution 33/123 of 19 December 1978, in which it appealed to Member States and regional and interregional organizations to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to the Comoros to help it overcome its financial and economic difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes identified in the report of the Mission,

Taking note of the special problems confronting the Comoros as a developing island country and as one of the least developed among the developing countries,

Noting the priority which the Government of the Comoros has assigned to the problems of restructuring the administration, reorganizing State enterprises and introducing effective budgeting and accounting procedures and controls,

Noting further the grave budget and balance-of-payments problems facing the Comoros,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 7 July 1978, to which was annexed a progress report on the programme of special economic assistance to the Comoros recommended by the Mission,

- 1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Comoros;
- 2. Notes with satisfaction the response by various Member States and organizations to its appeal and that of the Secretary-General for assistance to finance, in whole or in part, a number of projects identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 3 November 1977;
- 3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance thus far provided falls short of the country's urgent requirements and that a substantial amount of assistance is still urgently required to carry out the projects identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General of 3 November 1977;
- 4. Reiterates its appeal to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to the Comoros to help it overcome its financial and economic difficulties, in particular, its budgetary and balance-of-payments deficits;

- 7. Draws the attention of the international community once again to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/92, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to the Comoros:

Taking note of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session, in response to the application of Djibouti for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries, that Djibouti should be assisted during the remainder of the current decade and that the special difficulties and upheavals experienced by Djibouti required special measures,

Noting that the situation in Djibouti has been adversely affected by the prevailing economic difficulties in the region and the inability of the existing meagre resources to deal with the serious magnitude of the refugee situation in the country,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 17 July 1979, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Djibouti,

Taking note of the critical economic situation of Djibouti and the list of urgent and priority projects, formulated by the Government of Djibouti, that require international assistance,

A/C.2/34/L.27 and Rev.1. Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Denmark, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Maldives, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Portugal, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Swaziland, Sweden, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution and revision, approved without vote by Second Committee on 21 November 1979, meeting 46.

A/34/635/Add.1. Report of Second Committee (part II) (on report of Economic and Social Council), draft resolution IV.

Resolution 34/121, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3339(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, in which it invited Member States to provide economic assistance to the then newly independent State of Guinea-Bissau,

Recalling also its resolution 32/100 of 13 December 1977, in which it, inter alia, expressed deep concern at the serious economic situation in Guinea-Bissau resulting from the many years of struggle for national liberation, the return of large numbers of refugees and the total lack of infrastructure for development, and in which it appealed to the international community to provide financial and economic assistance to help Guinea-Bissau overcome serious social and economic difficulties and to meet its economic development needs,

Recalling further its resolution 33/124 of 19 December 1978, in which it expressed continued concern at the state of the economy of Guinea-Bissau and the acute shortages facing the country and reiterated its appeal to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Guinea-Bissau,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning at its fourteenth session, in response to the application of Guinea-Bissau for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries, that Guinea-Bissau should be assisted during the remainder of the current decade and that the special difficulties and upheavals experienced by Guinea-Bissau required special measures,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 3 August 1979, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Guinea-Bissau in response to General Assembly resolution 33/124,

Noting with concern that Guinea-Bissau continues to be beset by a wide range of economic and financial difficulties,

Noting that the Government of Guinea-Bissau, by the application of a policy of stringent economy, was able to reduce the budget deficit in 1978 to a level substantially lower than in the two preceding years,

Noting also that, despite the imposition of new and heavier taxes, there is no foreseeable possibility of a recurrent budget surplus becoming a significant source of public capital investment, and that the country will continue to be dependent upon external sources for public capital expenditure,

Further noting with concern the deficit in the over-all balance of payments in 1977 and 1978, the unmanageably low level of foreign exchange reserves and the yearly accumulation of payment arrears,

Concerned that, in real terms, the projected level of imports for 1979 is significantly lower than in the two preceding years and that the low level of imports will impede development.

Noting that Guinea-Bissau continues to suffer the effects of the 1976 and 1977 drought, particularly with regard to the marketable rice surplus, and that the transport and storage of food present problems,

Recalling its resolutions 32/160 of 19 December 1977 and 33/197 of 29 January 1979 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Noting, in this connexion, the emphasis placed by the Government of Guinea-Bissau on the need for assistance to expand and improve transport facilities, in particular, river and coastal transport,

Recognizing the need of Guinea-Bissau for international assistance to overcome the obstacles to its short-term and long-term development,

- 1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Guinea-Bissau;
- 2. Endorses fully the assessment and recommendation: contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-Genera and draws the attention of the international community to the requirements for assistance for the projects and programmer identified in it:
- Expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations which have provided assistance to Guinea-Bissau in response to appeals by the General Assembly and the Secretary-General;
- 4. Reiterates its appeal to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental bodies to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Guinea-Bissau to help it overcome its financial and economic difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes identified in the report of the Secretary-General;
- 5. Requests Member States and the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to accord Guinea-Bissau special measures for the rest of the Second United Nations Development Decade, pending the examination of its situation by the Committee for Development Planning;
- 6. Invites the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to examine the situation of Guinea-Bissau as a priority matter and, in the light of upto-date statistical data, to give consideration to the inclusion of Guinea-Bissau in the new list of the least developed countries to be drawn up in the context of the third United National development decade;

- 7. Calls upon Member States and appropriate international organizations to respond generously to the need of Guinea-Bissau for food aid;
- 8. Further calls upon Member States to assist Guinea-Bissau in developing its water transport system;
- 9. Draws the attention of the international community to the special account which was established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/100, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Guinea-Bissau;
- 10. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Guinea-Bissau and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 August 1980;
- 1. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Guinea-Bissau;
 - 12. Requests the Secretary-General:
- (a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Guinea-Bissau;
- (b) To pursue with the Government of Guinea-Bissau the question of organizing a meeting of donors and, in this respect, to co-ordinate efforts with the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic Commission for Africa and the World Bank:
- (c) To ensure that adequate financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to Guinea-Bissau and the mobilization of assistance;
- (d) To keep the situation in Guinea-Bissau under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1980, of the current status of the special economic assistance programme for Guinea-Bissau;
- (e) To arrange for a review of the economic situation of Guinea-Bissau and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special economic assistance programme for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session.

Assistance to Sao Tome and Principe

A/34/371. Report of Secretary-General (transmitting report of review mission to Sao Tome and Principe, 3-6 April 1979).

A/C.2/34/L.39. Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, India, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Portugal, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Cameroon, United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Zaire, Zambia: draft resolution.

A/C.2/34/L.39/Rev.1. Revised draft resolution, as sponsored by above 43 powers and by Burundi and Central African Republic, approved without vote by Second Committee on 23 November 1979, meeting 48.

AI341635IAdd.1. Report of Second Committee (part II) (on report of Economic and Social Council), draft resolution XIV.

Resolution 34/131, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/187 of 21 December 1976, in which, inter alia, it expressed deep concern at the serious economic and social situation in Sao Tome and Principe as a result of the total lack of infrastructure for development and appealed urgently to the international community to assist the Government of Sao Tome and Principe to enable it to establish the necessary social and economic infrastructure for development.

Recalling also its resolutions 32/96 of 13 December 1977 and 33/125 of 19 December 1978, in which it reiterated its appeal to the international community to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Sao Tome and Principe,

Recalling further that in its resolution 33/125 it noted the recommendation of the Committee for Development Planning, at its fourteenth session, that Sao Tome and Principe should be assisted during the remainder of the current decade and that the special difficulties and upheavals experienced by Sao Tome and Principe required special measures, Bearing in mind its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries, and 32/185 of 19 December 1977, in which it urged all organizations in the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific action in favour of developing island countries.

Aware that the economic and social development of Sao Tome and Principe has been seriously hindered not only by inadequate health, educational and housing facilities but also by inadequate transport infrastructure, and that urgent improvement in these sectors is a prerequisite for the country's future progress.

Taking note of the current development priorities of the Government of Sao Tome and Principe, notably in agriculture and livestock, in fisheries, manufacture, mining, transport and other infrastructure, and in education, training, health and housing,

Recalling its resolutions 32/160 of 19 December 1977 and 33/197 of 29 January 1979 on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Noting, in this connexion, that substantial international assistance is needed to improve the infrastructure in sea, air and land transport in Sao Tome and Principe,

Noting also the request of the Government of Sao Tome and Principe that a representative of the United Nations Development Programme should be assigned to the country on a full-time basis in order to administer more effectively the United Nations assistance programme as well as to assist in the co-ordination of other development programmes and projects

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 6 August 1979, to which was annexed the report of the mission which he sent to Sao Tome and Principe early in the year in response to General Assembly resolution 33/125,

Recognizing the fragility of the economy associated with its heavy reliance on a single-crop export and the sharp fall in the volume of cocoa exports which resulted from prolonged drought in 1978.

Noting with concern that the reduction in the volume of exports combined with the impact of higher import prices is expected to result in a substantial trade deficit in 1979, and that financing has not been found for the 1978 investment programme,

Noting with concern that the majority of the projects and programmes identified in the report of the Secretary-General are not as yet financed,

Also concerned by the conclusion of the mission sent to the country that, unless there is a significant increase in the volume of international assistance, the Government will not be able to finance a development programme,

Further concerned that food production in the islands has been seriously reduced as a result of the recent drought and outbreak of African swine pest, and that, in consequence, additional quantities of food will need to be imported in 1979 and early in 1980.

Resolution 34/126, as recommended by Second Committee, A/34/635/Add.1, adopted without vote by Assembly on 14 December 1979, meeting 104.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3421(XXX) of 8 December 1975 concerning the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to extend assistance to the newly independent and emerging States,

Recalling its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, in which it urged all Governments, in particular those of the developed countries, to lend their support, in the context of their assistance programmes, for the implementation of the specific action envisaged in favour of developing island countries, and 32/185 of 19 December 1977, in which it urged all organizations in the United Nations system to implement, within their respective spheres of competence, appropriate specific action in favour of developing island countries,

Assistance for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of African countries

In addition to taking action on special economic assistance programmes devised for 10 African countries, dealt with in the preceding subchapters, the General Assembly adopted resolutions in 1979 calling for the mobilization of international resources to aid three other African countries—Chad, Equatorial Guinea and Uganda in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of economies damaged by internal difficulties. In each case, the Assembly encouraged or welcomed efforts by the national Government, and urgently appealed to Member States, United Nations organizations, and international economic and financial institutions to contribute aid bilaterally or multilaterally, making use of a special account for each country established by the Secretary-General to channel contributions. It requested the Secretary-General to organize or mobilize resources for an international programme of financial, technical and material assistance, and it asked United Nations organizations to co-operate by maintaining and increasing their aid programmes to these countries and by reporting periodically on what they were doing. The Secretary-General was requested to dispatch a mission to each country to consult with the Government on its needs.

To permit a follow-up to its resolutions on assistance to these three countries, the Assembly invited United Nations organizations to report to the Secretary-General on actions taken by their governing bodies, and it asked him to report to the Assembly in 1980 on implementation measures.

All three resolutions were adopted, without vote, by the Assembly on 14 December on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which approved them without vote on 21 November.

Assistance to Chad

On 3 October 1979, the Commissioner of State for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of Chad made an urgent appeal in the General Assembly for international aid to help his country rebuild after 13 years of civil strife. He said the economy was in a catastrophic state and had to be completely reorganized. Food production and exports had dropped substantially, communication facilities had been destroyed, roads had deteriorated, hospitals and clinics were out of date, medication was lacking, medical staff had departed, and educational staff and materials were insufficient.

On the basis of a draft resolution sponsored in the Second Committee by 61 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), the Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 34/120, by which it urgently appealed to Member States, organizations and institutions to provide generous emergency aid to Chad for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, and requested the Secretary-General to organize an assistance programme. It also asked him to review with the Government of Chad the question of organizing a meeting of donors.

Assistance to Equatorial Guinea

Speaking in the Second Committee on 15 October 1979, the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions and Co-ordinator of Special Economic Assistance Programmes drew attention to an urgent appeal for aid by Equatorial Guinea. Following a change of government on 3 August, the Secretary-General had received a letter from the new President, dated 8 August, requesting United Nations assistance to deal with the critical economic and social situation. In response, the Co-ordinator noted, the Secretary-General had arranged for an interagency mission to discuss with the Government the formulation of an emergency programme of humanitarian assistance.

The situation in the country was described to the Assembly by the First Vice-Chairman of the Supreme Military Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Equatorial Guinea on 27 September. He said that, following 11 years of dictatorship, the country was in a state of economic and social chaos, with cocoa and coffee production greatly reduced, diseases rampant and education impoverished.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/123, sponsored in the Second Committee by 67 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below). The Assembly appealed to Member States and organizations to con tribute generously for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country, and requested the Secretary-General to organize an assistance programme.

The sponsors of the resolution in Committee made two oral changes to their original text. First, they redrafted a paragraph to have the Assembly request Member States and United Nations organizations to accord Equatorial Guinea special measures for the rest of the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s); by the original version, the Assembly would have called on them to extend to it for the balance of the Decade the privileges and benefits of a least developed country and to give special consideration to including it in their development assistance programmes. Second, the sponsors added a paragraph by which the Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council to ask the Committee for Development Planning to examine the situation in the country, as a priority matter, and to give consideration to including it in the new list of least developed countries.

Assistance to Uganda

On 28 September 1979, the General Assembly heard an appeal for international economic assistance for Uganda from the country's new President. He said the Government had inherited economic chaos from the former regime, including a collapse of agricultural and manufacturing production and a halt in tourism. The war of liberation had also taken its toll of life, property, buildings, installations, plants and machinery, with two cities in ruins.

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 34/122, by which it appealed to Member States and organizations to contribute to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Uganda. The resolution was sponsored in the Second Committee by 50 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

By this resolution, the Assembly urged Member States and international economic and financial institutions to respond generously to the appeal made at a donors' meeting organized from 6 to 8 November in Paris by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. It requested the Secretary-General to mobilize resources for an international assistance programme and to ensure the co-ordination at Kampala, Uganda, of efforts by United Nations organizations in relation to that programme.

Communications concerning relations between the United Republic of Tanzania and Uganda

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 15 February 1979, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya transmitted the text of a letter of the same date from its Secretary for Foreign Affairs, who said his country found an announcement by the Ugandan President that troops from the United Republic of Tanzania had entered Uganda a matter of great danger to the peace and security of Africa. He stated that it was necessary and urgent to act in order to bring about a peaceful evacuation of Tanzanian troops, and expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would act promptly, guided by the principle that no State had the right to overthrow the régime of another by force or any other means.

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 5 March, Angola transmitted the text of a communiqué issued by the front-line States on 4 March, at the end of a two-day summit meeting at Luanda, Angola. The summit communique stated that the unprovoked and premeditated war of aggression launched by the régime of Idi Amin against the United Republic of Tanzania served the objective of the enemy of the front-line States, for the aggression could only be designed to force Tanzania to divert resources from the liberation struggle against the minority racist régimes to the defence of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

By a letter dated 28 March, Uganda requested that an urgent meeting of the Security Council be convened in connexion with the question of aggression by the United Republic of Tanzania against Uganda. On 5 April, Uganda informed the Council President by letter that its request for a meeting had been withdrawn as a result of an appeal by the African group of States at the United Nations to the Government of Uganda.

Communication concerning relations between Ethiopia and Somalia

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 2 January 1979, Somalia gave details of what it described as further acts of aggression and violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity by Ethiopia. It cited reconnaissance flights over Somali territory on 26 and 28

December 1978 by war-planes bearing Ethiopian markings, and a further violation of Somalia's airspace on 30 December, by which date, according to the letter, there had been 151 major Ethiopian violations of Somalia's airspace since June 1978.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

In a report to the thirty-fourth (1979) session of the General Assembly on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Secretary-General outlined collaboration between the two organizations in four areas: consultations and exchange of information, co-operation on the situation in southern Africa, co-operation in economic and social development, and co-operation in information and publicity.

In regard to exchange of information and reciprocal representation at meetings, the report noted that the United Nations Secretary-General had addressed the sixteenth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, held from 17 to 20 July at Monrovia, Liberia, where he had also held talks with many African heads of State and leaders of liberation movements. His representative had also attended, as an observer, the thirty-second and thirty-third ordinary sessions of the OAU Council of Ministers, which met at Nairobi, Kenya, in January and at Monrovia in July, respectively. The resolutions, declarations and other decisions adopted at Monrovia were circulated as an Assembly document at the request of Lesotho, Chairman for October of the African group of States at the United Nations.

The Administrative Secretary-General of OAU had visited United Nations Headquarters in New York on 2 October 1978, exchanging views with the Secretary-General on matters of common concern as well as on means of enhancing co-operation between the two organizations.

In regard to southern Africa, the report noted that OAU and the Assembly's Special Committee against Apartheid had continued to co-operate closely, sending officials to participate in meetings organized by the other. The Centre against Apartheid in the United Nations Secretariat had continued to maintain ties with OAU, particularly with regard to publicity against apartheid and assistance to the oppressed people of South Africa and their liberation movements. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa had also co-operated closely with the OAU Bureau for the Placement and Education of African Refugees. In addition, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁸⁰ and the United Nations Council for Namibia had continued to maintain a close working relationship with OAU.

The report went on to state that OAU had participated in an observer capacity at the February/March session of the Commission on Human Rights at Geneva, and had continued to assist the Commission's Ad Hoc Group of Experts on southern Africa, particularly with regard to publicity for its work and contacts with the liberation movements. In addition, as instructed by the Assembly and the Commission, the United Nations Secretariat's Division of Human Rights had offered its co-operation to the OAU secretariat in the establishment of regional institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights in Africa.

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization had continued to train Namibians in a technical assistance programme developed in consultation with OAU and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO). Contacts were maintained between the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and OAU, and in countries hosting liberation movements, such as Angola, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia, UNICEF representatives were collaborating with OAU representatives in developing assistance programmes. Additional funds were being sought for humanitarian assistance to children and mothers in refugee camps.

The report stated that co-operation had been further strengthened between the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and OAU in formulating and supporting projects to benefit several national liberation movements. The Programme had been called on to participate in the Nationhood Programme for Namibia⁸¹ and to finance some pre-independence projects. It had agreed to finance an economic and social survey of Zimbabwe, to be carried out by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development with the co-operation of the Patriotic Front of Zimbabwe; the aim was to prepare for the country's transition to full economic independence. As requested by the Assembly in 1978,82 UNDP had convened in New York in June a meeting of representatives of OAU and United Nations organizations to review their relations. The meeting had discussed measures to improve the programming and implementation of humanitarian assistance to national liberation movements. It had concluded that such meetings should be held annually until the countries concerned became independent.

The Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and OAU had co-operated in sponsoring the Conference on the Situation of Refugees in Africa, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 7 to 17 May (see p. 916). The Commission had also been involved in organizing and servicing a symposium on the exploitation of blacks in southern Africa and Namibia and on prison conditions in South African gaols, held under United Nations auspices at Maseru, Lesotho, from 17 to 22 July. The Commission had developed projects for women in southern Africa who had been victimized by the unjust conditions created by racial and colonial policies.

Aid to refugees from colonial territories in Africa continued to be given by UNHCR in consultation with OAU. Training programmes organized by UNHCR. familiarized African national liberation movements with its humanitarian activities.

The Chairman of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government for 1979/1980, William R. Tolbert, President of Liberia, addressed the General Assembly on 26 September. He called for increased assistance to the front-line States in southern Africa, the imposition of a complete oil and arms embargo and other economic sanctions against South Africa, enforcement measures by the Security Council to end South Africa's occupation of Namibia, increased support for SWAPO, and non-recognition of the régime in Southern Rhodesia. Africa, he said, was counting on continued support by the United Nations and its specialized agencies to implement the Strategy for Economic Development in Africa, adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at Monrovia.

On 9 November, the Assembly adopted without vote, on the basis of a proposal sponsored by 49 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), resolution 34/21, on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU. The Assembly reaffirmed the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with OAU, to intensify its efforts to eliminate colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid in southern Africa. It recommended that the Preparatory Committee for the New International Development Strategy take full account of the Monrovia Strategy for Economic Development in Africa and ensure that it was reflected in the international development strategy for the third United Nations development decade (the 1980s).

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen co-operation with OAU, particularly with regard to assistance to the victims of colonialism-and apartheid in southern Africa. It also asked him, in consultation with the OAU Administrative Secretary-General, to arrange for a meeting in Africa, before the 1980 regular session of the General Assembly, at which representatives of OAU and of United Nations organizations would study means of implementing programmes of mutual concern, including assistance to liberation movements. It called on United Nations bodies to continue to associate OAU closely with all their work concerning Africa, and invited United Nations organizations to intensify their co-operation with OAU. Finally, it requested the Secretary-General to report again in 1980.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa continued during 1979 to grant scholarships for education and training to persons from Namibia, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) and territories formerly under Portuguese administration. Awards of scholarships to inhabitants of territories formerly under Portuguese administration were discontinued in 1976, following independence, but scholarships granted earlier were continued until the completion of courses for which they had been granted.

The Secretary-General's 1979 report to the General Assembly on the progress of the Programme covered the period from 1 November 1978 to 30 September 1979. Contributions and pledges from 45 Member States totalled $3,690,346. Total contributions to the Programme since its establishment in 1967 amounted to more than $19 million. In addition, the following 21 States offered scholarships for study in their countries: Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Egypt, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Israel, Jamaica, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Pakistan, Qatar, Romania, the Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda and the USSR.

As at 30 September 1979, the total number of scholarship holders was 1,560. There were 37 from Angola, 10 from Cape Verde, 33 from Guinea-Bissau, 2 from Mozambique, 232 from Namibia, 9 from Sao Tome and Principe, 583 from South Africa and 654 from Southern Rhodesia.

Applications and awards under the Programme for the period from 1 October 1978 to 30 September 1979 were as follows:

	Applications received	New a wards granted	Awards renewed	Current scholarship holders
Namibia	110	45	187	232
South Africa	827	181	402	583

The Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa held two meetings in 1979, at which it considered the development and growth of the Programme. The Committee was particularly concerned that the increase in contributions received in 1979 was slight; the rising costs of scholarship awards granted to students from southern Africa in different educational institutions necessitated finding alternative solutions to the financial problem. The Committee held preliminary consultations on an evaluation of the Programme, requested by the Assembly in 1978,83 and arrangements were being made so that it could take place early in 1980. The evaluation team expected to visit the specialized agencies and other organizations in Europe, certain donor countries and a number of host countries in Africa. In addition, the Committee recommended for approval by the Secretary-General the appointment of its six new members authorized by the Assembly in 1978. 84 On 21 November, the Assembly adopted without objection resolution 34/31, by which it requested the Secretary-General to complete arrangements, in consultation with the Advisory Committee, for an early evaluation of the Programme in order to determine its effectiveness and to identify priorities for further work. It encouraged the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee to continue close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and other scholarship donors to maximize benefits.

Recognizing the need for a substantial increase in contributions in order to meet higher costs and current obligations and deal with increased demand, the Assembly appealed to all States, organizations and individuals for financial support.

Resolution 34/31 was adopted on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved it unanimously on 6 November 1979 on a proposal by 39 States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 33/42 of 13 December 1978,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the Programme for 1978/79 and the results of the Conference on the Situation of Refugees in Africa, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 7 to 17 May 1979,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of the Programme is essential in order to assist the people of South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, Recognizing that a substantial increase in contributions is required in order to enable the Programme to meet its current level of obligations and to deal with a marked increase in the level of demand for assistance.

Noting that an evaluation of the Programme, as requested by the General Assembly in paragraph 4 of its resolution 33/42, will be undertaken in 1980,

- Expresses its appreciation to all those who have made voluntary contributions or provided scholarships to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme of Southern Africa:
- 2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for their efforts to promote the Program me;
- 3. Expresses its satisfaction that six new members have been added to the Advisory Committee pursuant to General Assembly resolution 33/42;
- 4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Advisory Committee, to complete arrangements for an early evaluation of the Programme in order to determine its effectiveness and to identify priorities for further work;
- 5. Encourages the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee to continue to develop close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity and other scholarship donors with a view to co-ordinating policies, to the extent possible and desirable, in order that maximum over-all benefits may be obtained from available sources;
- 6. Appeals to all States, organizations and individuals to recognize the increasing demand for educational opportunities by the people of South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and to acknowledge the rapidly increasing costs of higher education and training at advanced levels by offering generous financial support to the Programme in order to ensure its continuation and expansion.

Question of the islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India

On 12 December 1979, by resolution 34/91, the General Assembly invited France to negotiate with Madagascar for the reintegration with Madagascar of the islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India, located in the Indian Ocean to the west and north of Madagascar.

The resolution was adopted, by a recorded vote of 93 to 7, with 36 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which on 30 November approved it by a roll-call vote of 74 to 6, with 34 abstentions. It was sponsored by Algeria, Angola, Benin, Cape Verde, the Congo, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Kenya, Lesotho, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mozambique, Papua New Guinea, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

By this resolution, the Assembly reaffirmed the necessity of scrupulously respecting the national unity and territorial integrity of a colonial territory when it became independent. It invited France to initiate negotiations with Madagascar without delay for the reintegration of the islands arbitrarily separated from Madagascar. It called on France to repeal measures infringing Madagascar's sovereignty and territorial integrity, and to refrain from taking measures that could hinder the search for a just solution. It requested the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1980.

The item entitled "Question of the islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India" was placed on the Assembly's 1979 agenda at the request of Madagascar, by a letter dated 12 November. An explanatory memorandum attached to the letter said that in 1960, just before agreeing to the independence of Madagascar, France had arbitrarily detached the islands from Madagascar and placed them under the French Minister for Overseas Departments and Territories. The islands were natural dependencies of Madagascar, and under international law geographical proximity gave a neighbouring State a natural right of sovereignty over nearby small islands. Madagascar also denounced the gradual militarization of some of the islands as being incompatible with the creation of a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean, and it protested France's delimitation of a 200-mile exclusive economic zone around the islands.

Appended to the memorandum were the text of a resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) at its thirty-third ordinary session (Monrovia, Liberia, 6-20 July) and an extract from the Final Declaration of the Sixth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Havana, Cuba, 3-9 September), both calling for the return of the islands to Madagascar.

This item was included in the Assembly's agenda on the recommendation of the General Committee, approved in Committee on 15 November by 20 votes to 1, with 2 abstentions. Madagascar told the Committee that it had sought to negotiate with France on the matter but its requests had always been rejected. France opposed inclusion of the item on the ground that the islands were under French sovereignty and said their status could not be discussed in the Assembly without infringing the non-intervention clause in the Charter of the United Nations. Support for Madagascar's request was expressed by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, as current Chairman of the African group of States at the United Nations, and by Mozambique. Belgium, Costa Rica, Pakistan, Singapore and Thailand said they would vote for inclusion of the item without prejudice to their position on the substance.

The Assembly's Special Political Committee considered the question at three meetings held between 27 and 30 November.

In this debate, Madagascar questioned France's contention that it had discovered the islands and said they had already belonged to Madagascar when France annexed Madagascar together with the islands in 1898. France's 1960 decree unilaterally separating the islands from Madagascar was internationally illegal in that it destroyed the national unity and territorial integrity of Madagascar. The State which transferred sovereignty was obliged to yield sovereignty over the entire territory. France had not responded to requests by Madagascar in 1960, 1973 and 1979 to open negotiations on the issue. Although the islands had a total area of only 54 square kilometres and no permanent population, they were in a strategic military and political zone.. Moreover, the maritime resources around them should be used to benefit the people of Madagascar rather than those of an industrialized power. By renouncing sovereignty over the islands, Madagascar would be exposed to a series of dangers and injustices.

France said that although differences of opinion might exist with Madagascar, there was no genuine dispute. The islands had become French possessions during the previous century by virtue of their effective occupation, as uninhabited territories, by France; futhermore, being for centuries virtually unknown to the inhabitants of Madagascar, they had never been considered natural dependencies of Madagascar. The International Court of Justice, in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases of 1969, 85 had emphasized the well-established legal principle that mere proximity did not by itself constitute a title to land. French presence on the islands could not contribute to the creation of tension in the region since the French Government's policy was based on friendship and co-operation and did not constitute a threat to any of its neighbours. The size and configuration of the islands was such that they could not be used for harbour installations or other large-scale works. The handful of meteorologists on the islands could hardly be held to be a threat to Madagascar.

During the discussion, most speakers supported the territorial integrity of Madagascar and called on France to initiate negotiations. Several also cited the strategic significance of the islands. Thus, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, stating that the question was a colonial issue with security implications for Africa and the world, said that France's position was incompatible with international endeavours to make the Indian Ocean a zone of peace. Cuba said that, although the issue was being dealt with in the context of territorial disputes among States, it had other aspects such as neo-colonialism, threats to national and regional security, and militarization of an area which neighbouring States wished to establish as a zone of peace. Benin stressed the vital strategic importance of the islands and the concern arising from their occupation by a foreign power which might use them as a base for intervention against neighbouring States.

Papua New Guinea, stating that it was illogical for the islands to have been detached from Madagascar on its independence, said that the matter should be resolved through negotiations with France, with the assistance of the United Nations and OAU. Algeria, also calling for negotiations, said that, whenever a colonial power tried to hand over only part of a territory, disputes had arisen which could be resolved only by ensuring that the entire territory was handed over. Democratic Yemen said that the United Nations must not tolerate the existence of the socalled French overseas territories, since their existence was contrary to the Charter and a violation of international law. Kenya said that the case showed the various tactics and arguments used by colonial powers to perpetuate their occupation. Burundi said that France had recognized Madagascar's sovereignty over the islands during the colonial period in texts employing such terms as "Madagascar and its dependent islands."

Speaking shortly before the resolution was put to the vote in both the Committee and the plenary Assembly, France strongly opposed the text, stating that it constituted interference in France's internal affairs within the meaning of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter. 86 The islands were French, and the Assembly had no power to distribute territories.

Gabon and Zaire, explaining their abstentions, said they preferred the matter to be resolved by bilateral negotiations, without such an Assembly resolution. Explaining its abstention, Brazil said the text prejudged the results of the negotiations which should be held between the parties.

Chapter XI

Questions concerning Asia

Situation in South-East Asia

During the early part of 1979, the Security Council met on three occasions to consider the situation in South-East Asia.

It met from 11 to 15 January—at the request of Democratic Kampuchea which had charged Viet Nam with aggression—and rejected, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, a seven-nation draft resolution which would have had the Council demand strict adherence to the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States, and call upon all foreign forces to observe a cease-fire, end hostilities and withdraw from that country.

From 23 to 28 February, the Council met in response to a request from Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States to consider the situation in South-East Asia and its implications for international peace and security. After resuming consideration of the subject on 16 March, the Council rejected, also owing to the negative vote of a permanent member, a fivenation draft resolution which would have had the Council call for cessation of hostilities, withdrawal of troops and settlement of disputes by peaceful means, and appeal for restraint in order not to widen the conflicts.

The situation in Kampuchea was also considered by the General Assembly at its regular 1979 session. The Assembly adopted resolution 34/22 by which it appealed for aid to civilians in Kampuchea, called for observance of human rights, cessation of hostilities, and the withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea, and appealed for non-interference in its internal affairs. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to exercise his good offices towards a peaceful solution and to explore of the possibilities of holding an international conference on Kampuchea.

Details of these subjects as well as a brief account of communications concerning relations between Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam and between China and Viet Nam are to be found in the sections below.

Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam

Communications and report (1-15 January)

During the first two weeks of January, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of communications concerning the situation between Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam.

By telegrams of 31 December 1978 and 3 January 1979, the Deputy Prime Minister in charge of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, Ieng Sary, charged that Viet Nam was intensifying acts of aggression against his country, including ground and air attacks, pillaging, burning and killing, while seeking to seize Democratic Kampuchea. He requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to condemn Viet Nam's attack and to ensure that it would cease aggression and respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Democratic Kampuchea.

By a letter of 4 January, the representative of Viet Nam transmitted a 2 December 1978 declaration of the United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea and the Front's 26 December statement on foreign policy. These documents charged that the regime of Prime Minister Pol Pot and Foreign Minister Ieng Sary of Democratic Kampuchea had usurped power, transformed the revolutionary forces into mercenaries for the Chinese authorities, and threatened the Kampuchean people with extermination; they urged the Kampuchean people to overthrow the regime, set forth the Front's objectives, and called for support for the Front from all Governments and national and international organizations.

In a letter dated 7 January 1979, the representative of China transmitted a statement issued that day by his Government which charged that Viet Nam had invaded Democratic Kampuchea, was occupying a large part of the country and, with USSR support, intended to annex Kampuchea by force and set up an "Indo-Chinese Federation" under its control. He expressed China's support for the Government of Democratic Kampuchea and its request for a Security Council meeting.

Five letters of 8 January from the Vietnamese representative transmitted: a report of 7 January of the Saporamean Kampuchea (SPK) news agency of the United Front for National Salvation of Kampuchea concerning what it termed the liberation on that day of the capital of Phnom Penh by the revolutionary armed forces of Kampuchea; a statement of 7 January by a spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Viet Nam on an intensive concentration of Chinese military forces at the border with Viet Nam; a statement of 5 January by the Central Committee of the United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea rejecting alleged slanders by what was referred to as the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary régime and its move to bring the Kampuchean problem to the Security Council; a statement of 6 January by the Foreign Ministry of Viet Nam stating that the Kampuchean people's struggle, under the leadership of the United Front, to overthrow that regime was an internal affair, and welcoming the Front's policy to end the border war with Viet Nam provoked by the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary clique and to negotiate a solution to questions concerning relations between Viet Nam and Kampuchea; and a statement of 8 January issued by the SPK news agency on the establishment of what it called the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea headed by Heng Samrin. The statement declared that the Revolutionary Council controlled all the territory of Kampuchea and that any meeting of the Security Council to hear the representative of the Pol Pot régime would constitute intervention in the internal affairs of the Kampuchean people.

By a letter dated 9 January, Indonesia transmitted a statement issued that day at Jakarta by its Minister for Foreign Affairs, as Chairman of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) Standing Committee, on behalf of the five ASEAN Foreign Ministers, regarding the escalation of the conflict between two Indo-Chinese States and expressing grave concern over its impact in South-East Asia. The ASEAN countries—Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand—supported the convening of the Security Council to discuss the Viet Nam—Kampuchea conflict and indicated that a visit to the area by the Secretary-General or his special representative would be useful.

A further letter from Indonesia, of 12 January, transmitted a joint statement of a special meeting of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers, held at Bangkok, Thailand, on 12 and 13 January, in which they: reaffirmed their position of 9 January on the escalation of armed conflict; deplored the armed intervention in Kampuchea; affirmed the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their future by themselves; called for the immediate withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchean territory; and urged the Security Council to restore peace, security and stability in the area.

In a letter of 10 January, Democratic Kampuchea's representative requested that his country's delegation, headed by Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, be allowed to participate in the Security Council's deliberations. In that connexion, the representative of Viet Nam, on 11 January, transmitted a telegram of that date sent by Heng Samrin, identified as the President of the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea, stating that if a Security Council meeting were convened to discuss the question of Kampuchea, the People's Revolutionary Council would send its Minister for Foreign Affairs, Hun Sen, to represent it.

In an 11 January report to the Security Council, the Secretary-General stated that he had received a communication on 9 January, signed by the Deputy Prime Minister in charge of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea, concerning the composition of the delegation of that country and, inasmuch as the thirty-third (1978) session of the General Assembly had accepted the credentials of that delegation emanating from the same authority, its credentials, attached to the report, were considered to be in order.

By a letter of the same day, Democratic Kampuchea's, representative transmitted statements, dated 2 and 5 January, by his Government and Prime Minister which charged that Viet Nam and Warsaw Treaty forces were continuing their invasion operations.

A letter of 14 January from China transmitted a statement issued that day by its Government reiterating support for the Government of Democratic Kampuchea against aggression by Viet Nam and the USSR. China charged that the so-called People's Republic of Kampuchea was an illegal puppet and tool of Viet Nam and the USSR.

In a letter dated 13 January, Viet Nam transmitted a telegram sent by the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization on behalf of participants at the seventh meeting of its Presidium, held at Hanoi from 13 to 15 January, appealing to the United Nations to support the People's Revolutionary Council.

In a letter of 15 January, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a statement by his Government dated 11 January, reiterating charges of Vietnamese aggression and appealing for support.

Security Council meetings (11-15 January)

The Security Council considered the question of the situation in Kampuchea at five meetings held from 11 to 15 January, in accordance with the request of Democratic Kampuchea contained in its letter of 3 January.

On 11 January, the representatives of Czechoslovakia and the USSR said that they objected to the Security Council's consideration of a communication from the Pol Pot régime as they considered the United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea to be the genuine and sole representative of the Kampuchean people, and that the situation in that country was an internal matter. Accordingly, the representative of the USSR proposed adjournment of the meeting in order that representatives of the People's Revolutionary Council might participate in the Security Council's deliberations. This proposal received 2 votes in favour (Czechoslovakia and the USSR) and 13 against, and was therefore rejected.

The representative of China contended that the Government of Democratic Kampuchea was the legal Government of Kampuchea since the credentials of its delegation, headed by Prince Sihanouk, had been accepted as valid. China charged that the People's Revolutionary Council was a puppet organization of Viet Nam.

The representative of the United States felt that the points raised by Czechoslovakia and the USSR were of concern to the Security Council but, regardless of what Council members thought about the situation in Kampuchea, that should not prevent it from considering a request from a recognized Member of the United Nations to hear a grievance. Bangladesh and Kuwait also supported participation of the delegation led by Prince Sihanouk and considered it was the right of every State to seek action from the Council when it faced a situation likely to endanger peace and security.

The Council then extended an invitation to the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea to participate in its work and approved the report submitted by the Secretary-General in connexion with the credentials of that delegation (see subsection above).

At their request, the representatives of Australia, Bulgaria, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Mongolia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Poland, Singapore, the Sudan, Thailand, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia were also invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The representative of Democratic Kampuchea asserted that his country was the victim of largescale aggression by Viet Nam, supported by the USSR. He charged that the so-called United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea, which had occupied Phnom Penh and most of Kampuchea's cities, was only a puppet of Viet Nam, and that the Government and army of Democratic Kampuchea were administering and defending the country in the unoccupied zone. He called upon the Security Council to condemn the Vietnamese invasion, to ensure there was no recognition of or aid to Viet Nam and its puppets, and to demand immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal of its forces from Kampuchea.

China affirmed support for Democratic Kampuchea and condemned Viet Nam for aggression against Kampuchea as part of a premeditated plan to annex Kampuchea and establish an Indo-China Federation, with the full support of the USSR. China introduced a draft resolution which would have had the Council stress that the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Democratic Kampuchea must be strictly respected and strongly condemn Viet Nam for armed invasion of and aggression against Democratic Kampuchea. The Council would have commended Democratic Kampuchea's heroic struggle and called upon Viet Nam immediately to halt its armed aggression. In the event of Viet Nam's continuance and refusal to withdraw its forces, the Council would convene again to consider adoption of effective measures in accordance with relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The Council would also have asked the specialized agencies and other United Nations-related international organs and urged all Governments to stop any aid to Viet Nam, and would have requested the Secretary-General to submit an early report on the resolution's implementation.

Viet Nam's representative drew distinctions between the Kampuchean-Vietnamese border war and the revolutionary war of the Kampuchean people. He asserted that Viet Nam had shown military restraint by attempting to end the conflict with Kampuchea through negotiations, but the Pol Pot régime, supported by China, had persisted in aggression against Viet Nam, which had the right to defend its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. In the revolutionary war of the Kampuchean people, the United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea had overthrown the former régime and taken full control. Viet Nam recognized the People's Revolutionary Council as the sole representative of the country and expressed regret that the Security Council had refused to hear the Revolutionary Council's voice.

Bangladesh, Gabon, Jamaica, Nigeria, the Sudan and Zambia stressed the need to observe the United Nations Charter's principles of non-interference in the internal affairs of States, respect for their independence, sovereignity and territorial integrity, and the settlement of disputes by peaceful means. Kuwait called for scrupulous observance of a cease-fire and the withdrawal of all foreign elements.

France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom were among those which said that, although they had objected to the violations of human rights by the Pol Pot Government, the policies of that Government could not justify intervention by another State.

Malaysia drew attention to the 12 January joint statement of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers (see subsection above) and hoped that the Council would adopt a resolution affirming respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kampuchea and the right of its people to decide their future for themselves without outside interference, calling for withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, and creating conditions conducive to the restoration of peace and stability in the region.

These views were supported by Australia, Indonesia, Japan, New Zealand, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand, which added their concern at the grave danger of widening and escalating the conflict in South-East Asia.

The United Kingdom also welcomed the statement issued by the ASEAN Foreign Ministers and shared its views. The representative of the United States said that border disputes and violations of human rights did not give one nation the right to impose government on another by force. He called on all States to counsel restraint on the parties to the conflict, to press for withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea, to ensure the integrity of all frontiers in South-East Asia and to find ways to avoid expansion of the conflict.

The representative of Bolivia said it should be made clear that hearing testimony by Democratic Kampuchea did not imply Bolivia's support for the acts of the Pol Pot régime. He also supported the ASEAN initiative and suggested that the Secretary-General visit Kampuchea and Viet Nam to consider the best means of bringing about withdrawal of foreign forces, in order to permit free elections under United Nations control.

The representative of Yugoslavia stressed the principles of the non-aligned movement, which included non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries and the peaceful settlement of disputes. He expressed grave concern at the conflict between the two countries and deemed it indispensable for the Security Council to restore peace in South-East Asia and protect the independence and free development of Kampuchea.

The USSR termed the debate an attempt to move the Council towards intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea. It said that Viet Nam was the victim of the aggressive Pol Pot régime, supported by China, and that the United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea aimed to build an independent, democratic and non-aligned Kampuchea and restore friendly relations with Viet Nam and all other countries of South-East Asia.

The idea that the decision to hold a meeting of the Security Council was not justified in that a new Government exercised sovereignty over all of Kampuchea was also expressed by Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland. Czechoslovakia warned of the danger of the United Nations internationalizing an internal conflict. Poland said Viet Nam had manifested unusual moderation and patience in the face of repeated and flagrant provocation by the Pol Pot régime. Hungary believed that Prince Sihanouk had no right to represent Kampuchea.

Viet Nam called attention to a letter dated 15 January which it had forwarded to the President of the Security Council transmitting a statement of 14 January by which the Foreign Ministry of the People's Republic of Kampuchea refuted all contentions made in the Council, which was meeting despite the protest by the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. The Foreign Ministry regarded all conclusions by this meeting as wrong and invalid.

On the same day, Kuwait introduced a draft resolution sponsored also by Bangladesh, Bolivia, Gabon, Jamaica, Nigeria and Zambia. By this draft, the Security Council would have: reaffirmed that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State was a fundamental principle of the Charter; called upon all foreign forces involved in the situation in Democratic Kampuchea to observe scrupulously an immediate cease-fire, to put an end to hostilities and to withdraw from that country; demanded that the parties concerned should adhere strictly to the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States; and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on progress towards implementation of this resolution within two weeks.

The representative of the USSR called the draft resolution a one-sided document based on distorted information about the actual situation in Kampuchea. In his view, in the absence of the genuine representatives of the Kampuchean people, adoption of any resolution on the situation could only be regarded as an intervention in the internal affairs of that State.

Later the same day, the President announced that he had been informed that, in view of efforts made by the sponsors of the draft resolution introduced by Kuwait, China would not press for a vote on its draft.

The Council proceeded to vote on the sevenpower draft resolution; the vote was 13 in favour to 2 against (Czechoslovakia and the USSR) and was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council.

Explaining its support for the resolution, China said that, even though it considered that the text was not strong enough, it felt that by calling upon all foreign forces to withdraw from Kampuchea, the draft did, in effect, condemn the Vietnamese authorities. Furthermore, the debate had revealed that the overwhelming majority of Council members had recognized that Viet Nam, supported by the USSR, was the aggressor in Democratic Kampuchea.

Czechoslovakia and the USSR said that, as the Council had refused to listen to the true representatives of Kampuchea, it was not in a position to produce a decision to reflect objectively the current state of affairs in that country.

The representative of Democratic Kampuchea paid tribute to those countries which had supported its cause and said the debate and the vote had clearly shown that the Government of Democratic Kampuchea was the legitimate Government and that Viet Nam was the aggressor.

Communications (19 January-27 December)

From mid-January to late December 1979, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of further communications dealing with the situation between Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam.

By a letter dated 19 January, Egypt transmitted a Government statement of 13 January calling on all parties to respect the principles of non-intervention and the right of peoples to choose their own régime freely, and calling upon the States of the region to abide strictly by Charter purposes and principles and to observe basic principles of non-aligment.

On 29 January, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea charged that the Vietnamese army was committing new crimes against his nation, including theft of art objects which were part of Kampuchea's national heritage. On 31 January, Viet Nam rejected those charges as slanderous and fabricated.

By a letter dated 2 February, Viet Nam transmitted a telegram of 27 January from Foreign Minister Hun Sen stating that on 7 January the people of Kampuchea had overthrown the Pol Pot régime and established the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea with the functions of the State and Government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and as the sole legal representative of Kampuchea. Only the Revolutionary Council, he said, had the right to accredit a representative of Kampuchea to international or other organizations. He repeated this last statement in a message of 16 February forwarded by Viet Nam.

In a telegram of 4 February and two telegrams of 6 February, the Deputy Prime Minister in charge of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea stated that, since 15 January, the army and people of Kampuchea had launched generalized counter-attacks in all parts of the country against the Vietnamese invasion and the Government had remained in place to direct fighting. He also charged that Viet Nam was attempting to gain recognition of an administration, Khmer in name only, which it had installed in Phnom Penh by force of arms, seeking to make Kampuchea an integral part of Viet Nam.

By letters of 14 and 17 February, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council, charging that Vietnamese aggression against Kampuchea had intensified militarily and polititally. On 16 February, he transmitted a telegram of 12 February addressed to heads of State by the Chairman of the State Presidium of Democratic Kampuchea, calling on all countries and international organizations, the United Nations and the non-aligned movement to denounce the invasion, to reject Vietnamese attempts to obtain recognition of the Phnom Penh administration, to halt all aid to Viet Nam and to support the people of Kampuchea under the leadership of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

In a letter of 20 February, Viet Nam transmitted the text of a Treaty of Peace, Friendship and Co-operation between the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam and the People's Republic of Kampuchea, signed at Phnom Penh on 18 February by Heng Samrin, President of the People's Revolutionary Council, and Pham Van Dong, Premier of the Government of Viet Nam. This Treaty was also the subject of a letter of 20 February to the President of the Security Council by which the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a Government Declaration rejecting all treaties and agreements concerning Kampuchea devised by the so-called Front or Revolutionary Council. The Democratic Kampuchean representative on 26 March transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement from his country's Ministry of Foreign Affairs rejecting a treaty signed on 23 March at Phnom Penh by what it termed the lackeys of the Vietnamese in Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, and those in Phnom Penh. The Ministry, in a statement of 3 December, also rejected, denounced and vigorously condemned an agreement on freedom of movement between Viet Nam and Kampuchea signed on 30 November, which it said had been invented by the clique of Lê Duan, General Secretary of the Vietnamese Communist Party.

The deteriorating situation in Indo-China was the subject of two further letters from ASEAN during 1979. By a letter of 20 February, Indonesia transmitted a statement issued that day in Bangkok by the Indonesian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in his capacity as Chairman of ASEAN's Standing Committee, appealing for a cessation of hostilities and withdrawal of all foreign forces from all areas of conflict in Indo-China. In a letter of 17 December, Malaysia transmitted a joint statement issued at the end of an informal meeting of the ASEAN Foreign Ministers, held at Kuala Lumpur on 14 December, in which they expressed grave concern at the growing seriousness of the conflict in Kampuchea, particularly along the Thai-Kampuchean border, called for measures to reduce tension and prevent future escalation, and agreed to intensify their efforts towards a peaceful solution.

Editorials and commentaries broadcast by radio by La Voix du Kampuchea democratique which referred to various aspects of aggression and expansionism attributed to Viet Nam and the USSR were transmitted by the representative of Democratic Kampuchea on 28 February, 8 and 27 March, 4, 6 and 10 April, and 13 times in May. Ten further radio editorials and commentaries transmitted in June, and others on 5 and 11 July urged the people of Kampuchea to resist Vietnamese aggression.

Letters of 23 February, 6, 12, 19, 22 and 28 March, 2, 9, 12 and 30 April, 9, 14 and 30 May, 4, 8, 12 and 26 June, and 6, 9, 16 and 26 July from Democratic Kampuchea transmitted summary accounts of developments in the conflict in Kampuchea.

By a letter dated 12 March, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a statement of 8 March by his country's Ministry of Foreign Affairs charging that a general mobilization order issued by Viet Nam was designed to intensify aggression against Kampuchea. By a statement of 7 April transmitted on 10 April, the Foreign Ministry denied that the leadership of the people's war for the liberation of Kampuchea had taken refuge in Thailand; it was directing the war in Kampuchea.

On 11 April, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a message of 29 March from his Government's Deputy Prime Minister in charge of Foreign Affairs to the Foreign Ministers of the non-aligned countries, calling on those countries to take measures with a view to stopping the escalation of the Vietnamese aggressive war against Democratic Kampuchea, to demand immediate withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea, and to refuse to recognize the régime in Phnom Penh. On 13 April, Democratic Kampuchea's representative drew attention to the intensification of Vietnamese aggression against Kampuchea, and annexed a biographical sketch of Heng Samrin. On 20 April, the representative transmitted a statement by the President of the State Presidium of Democratic Kampuchea commemorating the fourth anniversary of the establishment of Democratic Kampuchea on 17 April 1975, and urging resistance to Viet Nam's annexationist policy.

In a letter of 18 May, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted the text of a press release of 13 May concerning a meeting of the Council of Ministers of Democratic Kampuchea on 6 and 7 May to assess the situation in that country and to plan future strategy. On 11 June, he transmitted a statement made on 7 June by his Government at the ministerial meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Countries held at Colombo, Sri Lanka. The statement, made in reply to Vietnamese remarks, outlined the conflict in Kampuchea.

The problem of Kampuchean refugees in Thailand was the topic of several communications received by the Secretary-General from June to August.

On 20 June, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 16 June telegram sent by his Prime Minister to the Prime Minister of Thailand concerning the influx of refugees into Thailand. Blaming Hanoi's policies for the problem, the Government of Democratic Kampuchea said it approved of Thailand's measures to return to it Kampucheans who had temporarily taken shelter on Thai territory, and would cooperate with Thailand in their return. Democratic Kampuchea also considered that an international conference should be convened to determine the root cause of the problem and take measures to solve it.

The representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted on 25 June a telegraphic message from the Chairman of the State Presidium, calling attention to the problem of Kampucheans fleeing Vietnamese aggression and seeking refuge in Thailand, and also charging that Vietnamese nationals were being settled in Kampuchea. On 7 August, Viet Nam rejected the 25 June letter as a gross slander against the Vietnamese Government and reiterated its view that since 7 January the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea was the sole, legal representative of Kampuchea.

The position of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea on the refugee problem was contained in a 17 July statement, transmitted by its representative the following day, welcoming the holding of an international Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia, to be convened by the Secretary-General at Geneva on 20 and 21 July (see p. 918).

Thailand stated, in a letter of 23 October, that, as a result of fighting in Kampuchea, approximately 100,000 Kampucheans had entered Thailand.

On 20 July, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted the text of a communique dated 16 July of the High Command of the Revolutionary Army of Kampuchea concerning the country's current military geography—regions under Government and enemy control, guerrilla bases, and Government and enemy forces.

In a letter of 24 July, he transmitted three documents of 17 July: a declaration from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs demanding total withdrawal of Vietnamese troops and forces from Democratic Kampuchea; an appeal from his Government to the Vietnamese people and Vietnamese residing abroad, urging them to intensify the struggle against the aggression being waged by the Hanoi authorities; and an appeal from the Ministry of Information to the Vietnamese army to refuse to continue fighting.

Letters of 2 and 20 August, 26 September, 3, 5, 16, 22 and 29 October, 13 and 23 November, and 21 December from Democratic Kampuchea's representative transmitted further periodic accounts of military developments in the Kampuchean conflict issued by the Ministry of Information. In letters dated 3 and 17 August, and 3 and 25 September, he transmitted editorials and commentaries by La Voix du Kampuchea démocratique which detailed war developments and Vietnamese troop strengths and movements.

On 6 August, he transmitted a statement of 2 August by the Foreign Ministry defending the right of Democratic Kampuchea to representation at the Sixth Summit Conference of Non-Aligned Countries to be held at Havana, Cuba, in September.

In a letter of 16 August, he transmitted a 10 August statement issued by the Press and Information Department of the Foreign Ministry denouncing a propaganda campaign being waged against Democratic Kampuchea by what it termed the Lê Duan—Pham Van Dong clique, which had alleged that the Democratic Kampuchean Government was starving the people and destroying the country's infrastructure; the Ministry also charged, in a statement of 20 August transmitted on 23 August, that a war of aggression and racial extermination was being waged in Kampuchea by this clique.

By a letter dated 30 August, the representative of Viet Nam transmitted a Viet Nam-Kampuchea joint statement of 25 August on the occasion of an official visit to Viet Nam from 22 to 25 August by a delegation of the United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea and the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea. On 7 September, he transmitted a letter containing a communique of 25 August of a Vietnamese Commission of Inquiry into Chinese aggression, recounting crimes said to have been committed in Kampuchea by the Pol Pot—Ieng Sary régime in eight south-western border provinces of Viet Nam.

The representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted, on 6 September, a statement of 21 August by the Chairman of the State Presidium, introducing a draft political programme of the Patriotic and Democratic Front of Great National Union of Kampuchea, established to unite all patriotic forces inside and outside the country in a united front for the struggle against the Vietnamese aggression and to build an independent non-aligned Kampuchea.

On 10 and 18 September, 12 October, and 5 and 16 November, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted Ministry of Information press releases charging that Vietnamese forces were dropping toxic chemicals on Kampuchean civilians. On 2 October, he transmitted a press statement by the Foreign Ministry accusing Vietnamese forces of carrying out large-scale ground-clearing operations to destroy rice crops and deprive Kampucheans of food. He also transmitted a statement of 3 October by the Foreign Ministry charging the Vietnamese with large-scale search and genocide operations; and, on 8 October, a statement made that day by his delegation to the General Assembly's 1979 session calling for immediate and complete withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and requesting emergency aid against famine, the cause of 500,000 deaths.

The channelling of international aid was the subject of several letters to the Secretary-General from the representatives of Democratic Kampuchea and Viet Nam from September through December.

Viet Nam transmitted letters of 27 September, 10 October and 5 November annexing a declaration of 26 September and statements of 5 October and 4 November by the "Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea," declaring that all such aid should be delivered without political conditions, through the People's Revolutionary Council, and condemning manœuvres to abuse humanitarian aid in order to interfere in Kampuchea's internal affairs. Vietnamese letters of 18 and 26 October contained news reports by the SPK news agency of aid distribution and national reconstruction efforts in Kampuchea.

Democratic Kampuchea transmitted on 29 October a Government statement made the previous day welcoming the 5 November United Nations Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea (see p. 919). Democratic Kampuchea considered that sufficient United Nations forces should be appointed to ensure direct distribution of relief to Kampuchean victims in all regions. On 28 November, it forwarded a 24 November Government declaration which alleged that international aid for Kampuchea was falling into the hands of Vietnamese troops or being resold in Viet Nam, and called on the United Nations to supervise direct aid-distribution, investigate crimes of genocide and implement a General Assembly resolution of 14 November (see p. 293) calling for immediate withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea. A further letter, of 4 December, enclosed a 2 December Government statement calling on the United Nations and other international organizations to reconsider the problem of channelling humanitarian assistance, to prevent that assistance from being used as a weapon in the genocidal war against the people of Kampuchea and to ensure that the aid actually reached those people.

In this connexion, Viet Nam on 12 December transmitted press reports of statements by the Regional Director of Information of the United Nations Children's Fund on 10 December and the Director of OXFAM—the Oxford Committee for Famine Relief—on 1 December that there was no evidence that the Vietnamese were obstructing international relief in Kampuchea.

By a letter dated 8 October, Viet Nam transmitted a report by the President of the Central Committee of the United Front for the National Salvation of Kampuchea, Heng Samrin, to the Front's Second National Congress, delivered at Phnom Penh on 28 September. The report detailed developments since the Front's victory of 7 January in Kampuchea in the military, politic al, economic, cultural and social fields and at the diplomatic level, reviewed the background to these achievements and outlined the Front's goals. The first anniversary of the Front, founded on 2 December 1978, was celebrated in Phnom Penh on 1 December 1979 and, on 6 December, Viet Nam transmitted extracts from an address by Heng Samrin reporting accomplishments in these spheres.

During October and November, further letters from the representative of Democratic Kampuchea accused Viet Nam of various acts of aggression. On 24 and 29 October, he transmitted statements of 22 and 26 October by his Government charging Vietnamese forces with further crimes of racial extermination and with extending and intensifying the war; on 26 October, and 1 and 23 November, he forwarded accounts given in statements, letters and press reports of crimes against the Kampuchean people allegedly committed by the Vietnamese; on 7 November, he transmitted a 30 October telegram from the President of the State Presidium, who said that the Hanoi authorities were intensifying their extermination plan and destroying Kampuchea's economy, resulting in more than 1 million Kampuchean deaths to date, and advocated immediate dispatch of United Nations observers; on 26 November, he conveyed a Democratic Kampuchea statement at the Regional Preparatory Conference for the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, held at New Delhi, India, from 5 to 9 November, appealing for help to save Kampuchean women from extermination by Viet Nam; and on 30 November, he reiterated charges of genocide, expansionism, illegal occupation and slander by Viet Nam.

Viet Nam's relations with China were the topic of several letters received by the Secretary-General from the Vietnamese representative during October and November. On 9 October, he transmitted a white paper issued by the Minis try of Foreign Affairs in September, recounting deteriorating relations during the previous 30 years and accusing China of aggression against Viet Nam since February 1979; on

24 October, he forwarded a speech by the head of his country's delegation at a 19 October meeting of Viet Nam and China which accused China of preparing a war of aggression against Viet Nam and distorting accounts of the situation and events in Kampuchea; and on 1 and 2 November, he forwarded several documents published by a tribunal held in Phnom Penh for the trial on charges of genocide of the Pol Pot—Ieng Sary régime which, he contended, provided evidence of China's involvement in Kampuchea under that régime—an extract from a statement of 6 February 1976 by a Chinese army official, a note of 5 October 1977 from the General Staff of the Chinese army to its counterpart in the Democratic Kampuchean army, an itemized list of weapons and military equipment which China supplied as non-reimbursable aid to Kampuchean forces during 1976 to 1978, and an extract from Kampuchea-China talks of 29 September

During October and November, the representative of Thailand alleged violations of Thai territory. On 16 and 23 October, he charged that on 14 and 21 October mortar rounds fired from Kampuchean territory had landed in Thai territory, killing and wounding Thai civilians and Kampuchean refugees, thereby violating Thai neutrality. On 1 and 23 November, and 27 December, he reported a number of further violations, consisting of troop intrusions, shelling, and clashes between Thai search patrols and foreign forces.

On 28 November and 21 December, the Vietnamese representative transmitted statements by the "Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea" dated 24 November and 18 December, which charged Thailand with colluding with the remnants of the Pol Pot—Ieng Sary régime and creating tension on the Thai-Kampuchean frontier by tolerating the use of Thai territory for supply centres and sanctuaries for combatants.

On 20 November, Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a statement of 13 November by a Foreign Ministry spokesman rejecting an accusation by what it called the puppets in Phnom Penh that the Government of Democratic Kampuchea had executed six Americans and two Australians in 1978. In this connexion, Viet Nam transmitted on 23 November the text of a news report published by the SPK news agency on 22 November alleging that several foreigners, including six Americans and two Australians, had been killed at the lycée-prison of Toul Sleng before Pol Pot's men fled Phnom Penh.

By a letter of 27 December, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a press communiqué on the holding of the Congress of the Standing Committee of the Assembly of the People's Representatives of Kampuchea, the Government of Democratic Kampuchea and representatives of the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea, and representatives of various governmental departments, from 15 to 17 December. The communiqué promulgated the Declaration of the Congress, outlining the general situation of the country in 1979, in particular since the propagation of the Political Programme of the Patriotic and Democratic Front of Great National Union of Kampuchea in September, concerning Vietnamese aggression, a new strategic policy and a reshuffle of Government and State apparatus to implement that policy.

China and Viet Nam

Communications (20 January-23 February)

From 20 January to 23 February 1979, the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council received a number of letters from the representatives of China and Viet Nam concerning the situation between the two countries, containing charges and counter-charges of aggression and border violations.

By a letter of 20 January, China transmitted notes of 18 and 19 January from the Chinese Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Embassy in China. The first note charged that, between 23 December 1978 and 15 January 1979, Vietnamese armed personnel had intruded into Chinese territory in several sectors, killing and wounding Chinese citizens and border guards and removing a Chinese fishing boat. The second note denounced Viet Nam for using a forced temporary stoppage of the Vietnamese border railway-traffic to sabotage repairs, slander China and plan serious border incidents.

In a letter dated 25 January, Viet Nam transmitted: a note of 20 January from the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry to the Chinese Embassy in Hanoi, which refuted China's allegations about the Viet Nam-China railway service, accused China of nibbling at Vietnamese territory while helping Viet Nam restore its railway, and further accused China of planning crimes in the area and along other parts of the border; and a statement of 19 January by the Foreign Ministry, charging China with repeated armed incursions into Vietnamese territory, destroying property, and killing and wounding Vietnamese border guards and civilians.

On 10 February, Viet Nam transmitted an urgent message from its Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, which charged that China had recently intensified armed activities at the Vietnamese frontier in preparation for war, by deploying there about 20 divisions, hundreds of fighter aircraft, many tanks and other war matériel and repeatedly violating Vietnamese territory. Viet Nam hoped the Security Council would consider appropriate action.

Further letters were received in February from China, accusing Viet Nam of various acts of armed incursion into Chinese territory. On 12 and 16 February, it transmitted notes of 10 and 16 February from the Chinese Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Embassy in China, detailing numerous incidents at the frontier in January and February; and on 15 February, China charged that Viet Nam had created over 1,100 border disputes and expressed the hope that the United Nations would act so that Viet Nam would immediately halt armed incursions and provocations against China, halt aggression against and military occupation of Kampuchea, withdraw all its forces from Kampuchea and cease all acts jeopardizing peace and security.

A memorandum issued by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry on 14 February, transmitted by Viet Nam on 16 February, detailed Chinese harassment and provocations in the border area, which, it claimed, had accelerated since 1974 and in 1978 had totalled 583 cases. In January and the first weeks of February, there had been no fewer than 230 such instances and, Viet Nam charged, the Chinese were currently massing troops and war matériel near the Sino-Vietnamese border.

On 17 February, China transmitted a statement authorized by its Government and issued that day by the Xinhua News Agency, declaring that, because Vietnamese authorities had ignored China's warnings and repeatedly encroached on Chinese territory and attacked Chinese frontier guards and inhabitants, China had been forced to counter-attack. The statement added that Chinese troops would keep strictly to defending the border of their country and said that the Chinese Government was prepared to enter into negotiations on measures that could ensure peace and settle boundary disputes.

A message dated and transmitted on 17 February from the Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs charged that several divisions of Chinese infantry, armoured vehicles and artillery with air support had launched massive attacks that day along the entire Vietnamese-Chinese frontier and had occupied Vietnamese frontier posts and numerous villages. He added that China was currently waging a war of aggression against Viet Nam. He indicated that the Security Council should consider the situation and take appropriate measures to end the aggression and compel the Chinese forces to withdraw from Viet Nam.

Also transmitted on 17 February to the Secretary-General was a statement made that day by the Vietnamese Government accusing China of starting a war of aggression against Viet Nam, and calling on the United Nations to condemn that war.

The representative of the USSR transmitted to the Secretary-General on 18 February a statement issued that day by his Government, charging China with aggression against Viet Nam, blatantly flouting international law and exposing the essence of Peking's hegemonic policy in South-East Asia. The Chinese rulers, it stated, did not want to reconcile themselves to the fact that the people of Kampuchea had thrown off the Pol Pot régime and restored friendly relations with Viet Nam. The USSR would honour its obligations under the 3 November 1978 Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation between the USSR and Viet Nam. All responsibility for the consequences of the continuing aggression against Viet Nam would be borne by the current Chinese leadership. The USSR demanded an end to the aggression and the immediate withdrawal of Chinese troops from Vietnamese territory.

Several representatives transmitted statements to the Secretary-General from their respective Governments, charging China with aggression against Viet Nam, demanding an end to that aggression and immediate withdrawal of Chinese military forces, and expressing support for Viet Nam. Statements in this vein, dated 18 February, were received from Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Mongolia and Poland and, dated 19 February, from Hungary.

By a letter of 20 February, Indonesia transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement issued that day in Bangkok by its Minister for Foreign Affairs, in his capacity as Chairman of the ASEAN Standing Committee, urgently appealing to the conflicting parties to cease all hostilities and urging withdrawal of all foreign forces from areas of conflict in Indo-China. The ASEAN countries also appealed to powers outside the region to refrain from any acts which might lead to an escalation or widening of the conflict.

On 22 February, the representative of Democratic Kampuchea transmitted a 19 February declaration by his country's Foreign Ministry concerning the conflict between China and Viet Nam, voicing support for the measures taken by China to defend its territorial integrity and frontiers.

In a joint letter of 22 February, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States requested the President of the Security Council to convene an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the situation in South-East Asia and its implications for international peace and security. On the same day, Japan expressed its Government's wish that the Council should meet as soon as possible on the Indo-China situation. Australia, Canada and New Zealand also expressed the view, in a joint letter of 23 February, that the situation in South-East Asia should be a matter for urgent Council consideration.

Security Council meetings (23-28 February)

The Security Council, in accordance with the request of Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States, considered the situation in South-East Asia and its implications for international peace and security at five meetings held from 23 to 28 February 1979.

The Council had before it a letter dated 23 February, by which Viet Nam transmitted a message from the "Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea" stating that the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea was the only authentic legal representative of the Kampuchean people and that all meetings of the Security Council on questions related to Kampuchea in which there was no participation of those representatives were null and void.

Prior to the adoption of the agenda, the representatives of Czechoslovakia and the USSR said they objected to the proposal to consider the question of the situation in South-East Asia, as this was designed to divert attention from Chinese aggression against Viet Nam. The Council must deal with this question exclusively and it should be made clear in the wording of the agenda item.

The representative of China maintained that Vietnamese aggression against and occupation of Kampuchea was the root cause of the threat to stability and peace in South-East Asia and should be considered separately as a first priority. However, he did not oppose the item under consideration, as it would include this question.

Following a statement by the President, who said that he understood that the agenda commanded the consent of the majority of the members, the agenda was adopted.

At their request, the representatives of Angola, Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba, Democratic Kampuchea, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Japan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Mongolia, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Singapore, Thailand, Viet Nam and Yugoslavia were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The USSR objected to the participation of the representative of Democratic Kampuchea on the grounds that the People's Revolutionary Council had the sole right to appoint representatives of Kampuchea to the United Nations. This position was rejected by China which stated that the Government of Democratic Kampuchea was the sole legal Government of Kampuchea, as had been confirmed by the plenary Assembly at the thirty-third (1978) session and reaffirmed during the Security Council's meetings held from 11 to 15 January 1979.

Opening the discussion, the representative of the United States said that his Government had joined the request for the Council meeting in view of serious breaches of the peace in South-East Asia and the threat of broader conflict in that region; no other inference should be drawn from that request. He asserted that China's disputes with Viet Nam in no way gave China the right to attack Viet Nam, any more than Viet Nam's dispute with Cambodia gave Viet Nam the right to overrun that country. The United States would not take sides in these conflicts and urged restraint and the peaceful resolution of outstanding issues. In his view, the Council should call for an immediate cease-fire, withdrawal of all foreign forces from the territories of Viet Nam and Cambodia, a commitment by all parties to settle their differences peacefully and begin practical diplomatic processes to that end, and international efforts to help the parties reach a settlement, perhaps under the auspices of the Secretary-General.

The representative of the USSR charged that China had begun and was continuing an unprovoked aggressive war against Viet Nam and that China's invasion was a constituent element of its general expansionist policy which it had pursued for a number of years vis-à-vis South-East Asia in general and Viet Nam in particular. He said that China's aggression had created a serious threat to peace and security not only in that region but throughout the world. The Security Council must categorically condemn the Chinese Government for its actions against Viet Nam and take decisive measures to put an end to its aggression.

The USSR introduced a draft resolution, cosponsored by Czechoslovakia, which would have had the Security Council: strongly condemn China's aggression against Viet Nam; call upon all Member States to cease all supplies of arms to China and the transfer of any technology which might be used for military purposes; and demand that China immediately withdraw its troops from Vietnamese territory, respect the in dependence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Viet Nam, and make full reparation for material damage inflicted on Viet Nam as a result of its invasion. This draft was not put to a vote.

The representative of China said that Viet Nam's aggression against Kampuchea was a gross violation of the United Nations Charter and the Council should take swift and effective measures to halt that invasion, which was part of a USSR-backed scheme to achieve dominance in South-East Asia. He asserted that the Sino-Vietnamese border conflict was created solely by Viet Nam. Viet Nam's armed aggression and military occupation of Democratic Kampuchea, he said, was entirely different from China's being compelled to make a limited counterattack in defence of its frontier. He accused Viet Nam of provoking border incidents in increasing numbers, and therefore China's counter-attack was a necessary action of self-defence fully in accordance with Charter principles. The Chinese Government again proposed that the two sides speedily hold negotiations to restore peace and to settle boundary disputes.

On 24 February, the President informed the Council that China had submitted a draft resolution. This text would have had the Council: condemn Viet Nam for its armed aggression against and military occupation of Democratic Kampuchea; demand the immediate cessation by Viet Nam of all its military actions against Democratic Kampuchea and the immediate withdrawal of all Vietnamese armed forces and related personnel from Kampuchean territory; appeal to all States to respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Democratic Kampuchea; and urge Viet Nam and Democratic Kampuchea to enter into early negotiations for a settlement. This draft was not put to a vote.

The Vietnamese representative stated that there was no problem before the Council that could be described as the South-East Asian or Indo-Chinese problem, but only the large-scale aggression of China against Viet Nam. He asserted that it was not a frontier war but an outright war of aggression, involving mass attacks deep into Vietnamese territory; it was part of China's ambitions for hegemony in the region and in no way involved simply a defensive counter-attack. He charged that there was evidence that Japan and the United States had given their consent, if not their encouragement, to China in its aggression against Viet Nam and that the United States had confused the issue by linking this aggression with the Kampuchean problem. Viet Nam fully endorsed the draft resolution sponsored by Czechoslovakia and the USSR.

The United States rejected as wholly false assertions that it had consented to the Chinese attack.

The representative of the Lao People's Democratic Republic charged China with an act of deliberate aggression and called upon it to withdraw its troops totally from Vietnamese territory so as to create conditions favourable to the opening of negotiations to settle their problems peacefully.

The representative of Democratic Kampuchea charged that Viet Nam continued to occupy his country and was increasing its acts of provocation on the Sino-Vietnamese border in order to divert attention from its aggression against Democratic Kampuchea, which supported China's measures to contribute to the defence of independence in South-East Asia and throughout the world.

The principal task of the Council, according to the representative of Czechoslovakia, was to halt Chinese aggression against Viet Nam. Attempts to divert the attention of the Council by slandering Viet Nam and by distorting the true state of affairs in Kampuchea constituted connivance and encouragement of the aggressor to continue its actions, he said. He characterized as absurd Chinese attempts to disguise its aggression by calling it a small punitive counter-attack in self-defence.

The majority of speakers expressed concern at the deterioration of the situation in South-East Asia, emphasizing that the threat or use of force was unacceptable as a means of settling disputes between States.

France stated that it had expressed frequently the concern it felt about increasing tension in South-East Asia and had followed with growing preoccupation operations being carried out on the borders of China and Viet Nam, escalation of which would likely endanger detente and peace. France considered that these operations must be halted immediately and that the forces which had entered Viet Nam should fall back behind the international frontier. France added that, during the last Council debate, it had called for withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea, which had not yet taken place.

Norway considered that the foundation for a peaceful settlement required the unconditional withdrawal of all foreign forces from the respective areas of conflict and full respect for the territorial integrity and political independence of the States involved. This view was shared by Portugal, which also appealed to all countries outside the area to continue to exercise restraint and avoid any action that might lead to a widening of the conflict. Portugal was joined by Australia in welcoming an offer by the Secretary-General in a statement of 22 February to make his good offices available in the search for a peaceful solution. India also hoped the Council would take this offer into account and pointed to the Secretary-General's prompt and timely reaction in expressing deep concern that the current hostilities could have unforeseeable consequences. India felt that this action should have been immediately reinforced by the Security Council, which instead had delayed while quibbling over formulation of its agenda.

Bolivia proposed that the Council call for an immediate cease-fire and withdrawal from all invaded territories. Gabon added that it would support any call for the parties concerned to evince the utmost moderation.

Kuwait said China's action against Viet Nam could not be viewed in isolation from the situation in the rest of the region; it opposed China's action as it opposed the involvement of Viet Nam in Kampuchea.

Zambia urged the countries in conflict to use the similarity of their social systems as a common denominator in favour of peace, and appealed to the permanent members of the Council to co-operate in ensuring that the Council reached a decision in the interests of peace and security by not abusing the power of veto—a position endorsed by Jamaica, which added that a clear-cut concrete decision would contribute positively to. the solution of the area's problems.

A number of representatives stressed that the treatment of differences in the region must be moved from the military to the political level. The United Kingdom stated that the Council had to be free of the myopia of the conflicting parties and their backers and deal with the situation in South-East Asia as a whole. The Council should also consider longer-term action to eliminate the underlying causes of tension in the area. Canada expressed the hope that the Council could proceed beyond the essential first steps of a military cease-fire and withdrawal to consider practical ways and means of developing a climate conducive to peace and security. New Zealand noted with interest suggestions that an international conference be held to reach agreement on guaranteeing the independence and neutrality of Kampuchea, and appealed to China and Viet Nam to begin the process of finding a peaceful solution by ceasing military activities immediately—a view shared by Australia, Bangladesh, Japan and Pakistan. Japan pointed out that both its Prime Minister and its Minister for Foreign Affairs had recently appealed to China to exercise the utmost self-restraint in dealing with the current situation.

Yugoslavia stressed that a lasting solution to the complex crisis in South-East Asia could be founded only on the basis of the principles of non-alignment, namely, strict respect for national independence, sovereignty, equality, the free national and social development of all countries, non-interference in internal affairs, nonintervention, and the inviolability of legally established international borders, as well as the settlement of disputes by peaceful means. He stated that those principles were embodied, inter alia, in the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki (Finland) Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe ¹ and repeatedly confirmed at all gatherings of non-aligned countries.

Expressing concern about recent developments in Indo-China, their consequences for the countries in South-East Asia and the opportunity they might provide for outside powers to interfere in the internal affairs of those States. Indonesia drew attention to the ASEAN statement of 20 February urgently appealing to the conflicting parties to cease all hostilities and urging the withdrawal of all foreign forces. The ASEAN countries would co-operate if the Council wished to use this statement as a basis for a resolution. The other four ASEAN States—Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand-also emphasized the united ASEAN view and stressed that urgent action was needed to arrest the dangerous trend towards escalation of hostilities. The Philippines said it was encouraged by the offer made by one of the conflicting parties to negotiate and hoped for reciprocal action by the others.

The view that the subject of the Council's deliberations was not the situation in South-East Asia or Indo-China, but Chinese aggression against Viet Nam, was expressed by Bulgaria Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia and Poland, which called for action on the basis of the draft resolution intro duced by the USSR. In condemning the Chinese aggression, Poland regarded it as China's most recent manifestation of expansionism and hegemonism, while Mongolia submitted that any attempt to link the Chinese invasion of Viet Nam to the internal affairs of Kampuchea was merely an effort to justify China's aggression. The German Democratic Republic said that China itself had confirmed the violation of Viet Nam's frontier and had not denied occupation of its territory; China's statement in the Council demonstrated that it intended to continue its aggression. Cuba described China's actions as a betrayal of the cause of socialism and communism.

Communications (7-15 March)

During the first half of March 1979, further communications were received by the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council on the situation in South-East Asia.

On 1 March, China transmitted a note sent that day by its Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Embassy in China, referring to China's proposal of 17 February for negotiations to end their border conflict and regretting that Viet Nam had failed to respond. China again proposed that both sides appoint a Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs, to meet as soon as possible at a mutually agreed place, to negotiate an end to their border conflict and settle their disputes peacefully.

In response to the Chinese note, Viet Nam transmitted on 3 March a note sent the previous day by its Foreign Ministry to the Chinese Foreign Ministry. Viet Nam pointed out that, excluding many talks between border provinces of the two countries, it had twice sent delegations to Beijing (Peking) for talks on the border issue. China must unconditionally withdraw all its troops to the Chinese side of the historical frontier which both sides had agreed to respect in an exchange of letters in 1957 and 1958, and respect Viet Nam's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. In that way, Viet Nam would be prepared to enter into talks with China on normalizing relations.

A statement authorized by the Chinese Government and issued by the Xinhua News Agency on 5 March, transmitted by China, announced that China had that day started withdrawal of its forces to Chinese territory, having achieved the goals of its counter-attack in self-defence. Renewing its proposal for negotiations, China expressed the hope that peace-loving countries would urge Viet Nam to stop its aggression against Kampuchea, withdraw all its forces back to its own territory and thereby serve the interests of peace in the region.

The following day, Viet Nam transmitted a statement issued on 5 March by its Foreign Ministry charging that Chinese forces were in fact pursuing their attacks; if China really withdrew all its troops from Vietnamese territory, Viet Nam would be disposed to begin negotiations immediately with China at a place and date to be mutually agreed upon. A further statement by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, dated 11. March, alleged that China had delayed its troop withdrawal, had moved marker posts further into Vietnamese territory and had looted and destroyed many areas. On 15 March, the Vietnamese Ministry said that the Chinese were taking their troops home but were trying to occupy a number of places in Vietnamese territory and continued to destroy and loot property. It added that, one week after the complete withdrawal of Chinese troops to the other side of the historical border, Viet Nam would begin negotiations with China either in Hanoi, on the border or at places alternating between Vietnamese and Chinese territory on the border.

The representative of the USSR, on 2 March, transmitted a Government statement charging that Chinese aggression against Viet Nam continued to expand and that reports were being received of a concentration of Chinese troops on China's border with the Lao People's Democratic Republic, threatening Lao independence and sovereignty. The USSR called for immediate cessation of all such activities.

A statement of 3 March from the Mongolian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, transmitted by Mongolia on 5 March, also reported receiving information that Chinese authorities were intensifying troop concentrations and military matériel and stepping up provocative acts on the Chinese-Lao border. Mongolia demanded that China terminate its aggression against Viet Nam and halt its military preparations to extend the aggression in Indo-China.

In a telegram of 5 March, the President of Haiti expressed his Government's concern about the war between China and Viet Nam, and urgently appealed to their leaders to seek a peaceful settlement.

Security Council meeting (16 March)

The Security Council resumed consideration of the situation in South-East Asia and its implications for international peace and security on 16 March.

In introducing a draft resolution sponsored by the five countries of ASEAN—Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand—the representative of Thailand said that, though none of the ASEAN countries were currently Council members, they had been encouraged by the general support among members for the draft. By this text, the Council, noting with grave concern that the situation in the region had seriously deteriorated, would: urgently call upon all parties to cease all hostilities forthwith, withdraw their forces to their own countries and settle their disputes by peaceful means in accordance with the United Nations Charter; appeal to them and to States outside the region to exercise the utmost restraint, and refrain from any act which might further escalate or widen the conflicts; reaffirm that all States must scrupulously respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of other States; welcome the offer of the good offices of the Secretary-General in the search for a peaceful solution; and decide to remain seized of the question.

The representative of Viet Nam reiterated his rejection of any linkage between Chinese aggression against Viet Nam and the so-called problem of Kampuchea, which was non-existent. The Czechoslovak representative agreed with this viewpoint, adding that he would vote against the five-power text as it did not contain a clear-cut condemnation of Chinese aggression or call for immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Chinese troops. He also rejected the ambiguity of the appeals to all parties as an attempt to defend the Chinese, and saw no possibility for the use of the good offices of the Secretary-General in this connexion; to commit him in this situation might adversely affect the possible exercise of his mediation, if necessary, after the total elimination of China's aggression against Viet Nam. The representative of the USSR said he too would vote against the draft, as Chinese aggression against Viet Nam was not condemned and the question was virtually linked to the situation in Kampuchea, disregarding the actual state of affairs in that country. He drew attention to a joint communiqué of India and the USSR, published on 15 March on the occasion of a visit to India of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, which called for the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Chinese troops from Vietnamese territory.

At the request of Norway, the Council proceeded to vote on the five-power draft resolution. The vote was 13 in favour to 2 against (Czechoslovakia and the USSR) and the resolution was not adopted, owing to the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council.

Speaking after the vote, China said that the draft resolution was unsatisfactory in that it had failed to focus on the issue of Viet Nam's invasion and occupation of Democratic Kampuchea and to state that the Vietnamese authorities had provoked the Sino-Vietnamese border conflict. China had voted for the resolution, however, as the basic content was positive and implied a demand that Viet Nam first of all withdraw its invading forces from Democratic Kampuchea. China asserted that all its forces had that day completed their withdrawal to Chinese territory.

Australia, Bolivia, Canada, France, Japan, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed support for the ASEAN draft and for the fundamental principles of respect for the territorial integrity and sovereignty of States and non-recourse to force on which it was based.

The United States added that it regretted that the USSR had for the second time in just over a month vetoed a resolution supported by the overwhelming majority of the Council. It reiterated United States readiness to give strong diplomatic support to measures to end the conflict in South-East Asia. It also encouraged elaboration of earlier proposals for an international conference on Kampuchea and welcomed the Secretary-General's offer of his good offices. The United Kingdom saw the need for action on a wider basis to eradicate the underlying sources of instability in the region. These views were supported by Australia, Bolivia, Canada, Japan and New Zealand.

Democratic Kampuchea's representative said the Council's vote constituted resounding proof of support for the Kampuchean people's struggle and confirmed that the USSR together with Viet Nam was the instigator of the war in South-East Asia.

Communications (22 March-21 December)

The Secretary-General received a series of further communications through December, concerning the situation in South-East Asia and the China—Viet Nam conflict.

In a letter of 27 March, the Lao People's Democratic Republic transmitted an 18 March letter from its Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, charging that China was pursuing a hostile policy towards his country and was preparing an armed invasion by massing armed forces along their common frontier, penetrating Lao territory, infiltrating spies and collaborating with Lao reactionaries to disrupt law and order. He enclosed a statement of 6 March by his Government concerning the Chinese threat, which contained these same charges, and two communications from the Lao Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The first of these communications, a letter of 7 March, requested that Chinese labourers who had been helping in road construction in the northern part of the Lao People's Democratic Republic be recalled and that China suspend construction work temporarily because of the situation prevailing in the area. The second communication, a note verbale of 15 March, accused China of continuing to build up its armed forces along the frontier, encroaching on Lao territory and threatening it with invasion. It demanded that China halt these activities immediately.

In this connexion, China on 30 March requested circulation of two letters. The first, a letter of 22 March, transmitted the texts of two communications: a Chinese Government memorandum of 10 March to the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, stating that the Lao accusations of 6 March were fabricated, premeditated and were instigated by Viet Nam and the USSR; and a note of 14 March from the Chinese Foreign Ministry to the Lao Foreign Ministry stating that, by requesting suspension of road construction and withdrawal of Chinese workers, the Lao Government had unilaterally breached an agreement of 3 October 1974 between the two countries. The second letter, dated 26 March, from the representative of China to the Secretary-General repeated the charge that the recent anti-China acts had been taken by the Lao authorities under the instigation of Viet Nam and the USSR.

The Lao Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs in a letter of 26 April, charged that China continued to mass troops along the Lao frontier, sow disorder and occupy a portion of Lao territory.

On 22 March, the representative of Viet Nam transmitted a statement and a note from his country's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the latter to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of China, alleging that Chinese troops remained on Vietnamese territory and had moved boundary markers, calling for immediate and unconditional withdrawal of these troops, and reaffirming Viet Nam's readiness to enter into negotiations with China after such a withdrawal.

The Vietnamese allegations were rejected by China in notes dated 19 and 26 March from the Chinese Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, transmitted by China on 28 March. The first note proposed that Sino-Vietnamese negotiations at the level of Vice-Foreign Ministers begin about 28 March and be held in turn in Hanoi and Beijing, with the first round to be held in Hanoi. The second note stated that all Chinese frontier troops had been withdrawn to Chinese territory as of 16 March.

The Chinese troop withdrawal and negotiations between the two countries was the subject of several additional communications between their respective foreign ministries, transmitted by the Chinese and Vietnamese representatives.

A note by Viet Nam of 27 March, transmitted the following day, further accused China, whose troops it said were still stationed in over 10 places on Vietnamese territory, of delaying its troop withdrawal, stating that delay of the talks rested entirely with China. A Vietnamese note of 4 April, transmitted that day, said Chinese troops were continuing to dig trenches and build fortifications on Vietnamese territory and again declared Viet Nam's willingness to commence negotiations, suggesting 10 April in Hanoi.

A Chinese note of 31 March, transmitted on 1 April, charged Viet Nam with placing an unreasonable pre-condition for the holding of negotiations; if Viet Nam held a different opinion from China's on the boundary alignment, this should be resolved through negotiations. In a note of 6 April, transmitted three days later, China refuted Viet Nam's allegations of nonwithdrawal, saying that the places where there were Chinese troops were all on the Chinese side of the boundary and had always been under Chinese jurisdiction; it added that, as Viet Nam no longer insisted on its unreasonable precondition, China's delegation would arrive in Hanoi on 14 April. By a note of 7 April, transmitted on 9 April, Viet Nam said it was prepared to receive the Chinese delegation and requested China to provide a name-list of its delegation.

An account of the border history between the two countries from the Vietnamese standpoint was set forth in a 15 March memorandum, transmitted on 9 April by Viet Nam.

A 13 April note from China, transmitted on 16 April, protested against a Vietnamese armed incursion into the sea area of the Xisha Islands on 10 April, thereby poisoning the atmosphere for the forthcoming negotiations.

China set forth an account of the development of Sino-Vietnamese relations, as contained in a memorandum outlining a talk between the Chinese Vice-Premier and the Vietnamese Premier on 10 June 1977, which, together with an editorial note, was forwarded by China on 18 April 1979

From April to December, negotiations towards restoring peace along the Sino-Vietnamese border and settlement of boundary and territorial disputes were held between China and Viet Nam. The first round of talks commenced on 18 April in Hanoi, and statements and speeches by the Chinese and Vietnamese delegations during the negotiations were transmitted to the Secretary-General by the respective representatives throughout the year.

A letter of 25 April from China contained speeches made by the head of its delegation on arrival at Hanoi airport on 14 April and at the first meeting on 18 April. At this meeting, China said it would study proposals put forward earlier that day by Viet Nam and transmitted to the Secretary-General.

These proposals encompassed a three-point settlement which comprised: urgent measures to secure peace and stability and the return of those captured during the war, including a pullback of both sides' armed forces three to five kilometres from the line of actual control prior to 17 February 1979, the area between to become a demilitarized zone, an exchange of a list of those captured for return as soon as possible, and the setting up of a joint commission to supervise and control implementation of agreed measures; restoration of normal relations, on the basis of respect for independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, non-aggression and nonuse of force or threat of force, non-interference, negotiated settlement of disputes, and development of economic and cultural relations in a spirit of mutual respect and benefit; and settlement of border and territorial disputes.

At the second meeting on 26 April, Viet Nam urged China to respond positively to its three-point proposal.

During this meeting, China submitted an eight-point proposal of principles for handling

Sino-Vietnamese relations which included: restoration of friendly relations on the basis of the five principles of mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, non-aggression, noninterference, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence; neither side seeking hegemony nor stationing troops in other countries, joining military blocs directed against the other or providing military bases to other countries; mutual respect for the boundary line as delimited in Sino-French boundary accords of 1887 and 1895, which would serve as a basis for a negotiated settlement, pending which the 1957-1958 boundary agreements would be maintained; respect for each side's sovereignty over its 12-mile territorial sea; recognition of China's sovereignty over the Xisha and Nansha islands (see also section below); guarantees of the rights and interests of each country's nationals residing in the other country; repatriation of Vietnamese citizens expelled to Chinese territory; and restoration of trade and communication services, to be dealt with through consultations.

The Chinese delegation's speech at the 26 April meeting stated that if China's proposals were effected this would remove tension and restore normal relations, whereas the Vietnamese proposal evaded the crucial issues. At the third meeting on 4 May, China added that the root cause impairing Sino-Vietnamese relations was hegemonism, which was not touched upon by the Vietnamese three-point proposal. At that meeting, Viet Nam, which held that the Chinese proposal contained extremely unreasonable and arrogant demands, suggested that the fourth meeting be devoted to discussing the first point of the Chinese proposal, and that the fifth meeting be devoted to the first part of the Vietnamese proposal.

At the fourth meeting on 12 May, China accused Viet Nam of using the border dispute to fan nationalistic anti-China sentiments, and announced that it had unilaterally decided to release a group of captured Vietnamese.

In statements made at the fourth meeting, Viet Nam said it would meet with the Chinese side with a view to handing over wounded and sick Chinese captured during the war and discuss the return of all those captured by both sides. It charged that China was trying to elude Viet Nam's suggestion that the two sides begin discussion of the first points of the respective proposals.

On 16 May, the representative of Viet Nam transmitted a press conference communique issued the previous day on crimes said to have been committed by the Chinese during its 17 February invasion, issued by a Viet Nam Committee for Investigation into the Crimes of the Chinese Expanionists and Hegemonists during Their War against Viet Nam.

At the fifth plenary meeting, held on 18 May, China said that Viet Nam, by raising the issue of how to conduct future negotiations, was evading the substantive issues in Sino-Vietnamese relations and avoiding discussion of the principle of not seeking hegemony.

At this same meeting, Viet Nam said China had evaded Viet Nam's three-point proposal, wanted only to impose the eight-point hegemonistic policy and had even refused to discuss point one of its own proposal. Viet Nam, therefore, suggested that each side alternately raise the problems it was interested in discussing one meeting in advance.

In a letter of 20 June, China transmitted a 16 June statement by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, charging that Vietnamese authorities were exporting people and creating refugees from Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam, and called on the United Nations to stop such policies. China supported a United Kingdom proposal of 31 May on the convening of a special United Nations conference to discuss the problem of Indo-Chinese refugees. The Lao People's Democratic Republic, in a letter dated 25 June, stated that its Government could not be held responsible for persons who had left the country of their own volition.

The second round of talks began in Beijing on 28 June with the sixth meeting, at which China reiterated that Viet Nam had evaded the substantive issues during the first round of negotiations and had taken new steps to escalate its opposition and hostility to China and further aggravate tension between the two countries. At this meeting, Viet Nam said that China had eluded the urgent measures to secure peace and stability in the border areas of the two countries and proposed the text of an immediate agreement between the two States, pending continued discussions, on measures to end armed provocations which would come into effect on 5 July.

On 5 July, at the seventh meeting, China said it would not agree to this latest Vietnamese proposal as this was a further attempt to avoid discussion of the basic issues. Viet Nam charged China with trying to cover up its own hegemonistic actions by accusing Viet Nam of regional hegemonism in Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, and suggested that anti-hegemonism be discussed and include: non expansion of territory; non-aggression and non use of punitive force; non-imposition of ideology non-interference in internal affairs; and non alliance with imperialism and other reactionary forces.

At the eighth meeting on 18 July, China requested Viet Nam to prove its anti-hegemonist policy by immediately stopping provocations against and incursions into China, withdrawing its troops from Kampuchea and the Lao People's Democratic Republic and ending its policy of exporting refugees. At this meeting, Viet Nam reiterated its proposal put forward at the 28 June meeting, and said it was ready to discuss a new date on which the agreement would become effective,

On 30 July, at the ninth meeting, China restated that Viet Nam's refusal to discuss the principle of not seeking hegemony or the principles of coexistence was the cause of lack of progress in the negotiations. Viet Nam urged China to return to the purpose of the talks. which, Viet Nam said, was to discuss urgent measures to restore peace and stability in border areas, to restore normal relations and to settle border and territorial disputes between the two countries.

At the tenth meeting, on 14 August, China appealed to Viet Nam to stop obstructing and sabotaging the negotiations, while Viet Nam said China was trying to force Viet Nam to discuss only China's issues on the pretext that they were the crux of the negotiations.

On 29 August and 20 September, at the eleventh and twelfth meetings, China again called on Viet Nam to consider China's eight-point proposal, while Viet Nam urged China to respond positively to Viet Nam's three-point proposal and join it in raising for discussion, in turn, questions of interest concerning bilateral relations.

At the thirteenth meeting, on 19 October, China said the question of how to break the deadlock was one to which the two sides should give serious consideration. It charged Viet Nam with anti-China propaganda and with preparations for a new offensive against the Kampuchean people. Viet Nam said it had been reported that China was preparing a military attack against Viet Nam similar to that of 17 February.

In a note dated 20 November from the Chinese Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Embassy in China, China gave details of a Vietnamese attack on 4 November, and said that from August to October Viet Nam had made more than 370 military provocations, killing or wounding more than 30 Chinese. In a note to the Chinese Foreign Ministry of the same day, the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry rejected these allegations, charging that it was China which on 4 November had sent a large force into Vietnamese territory.

On 22 November and 19 December, at the fourteenth and fifteenth meetings, China again accused Viet Nam of sending armed personnel to encroach upon Chinese territory.

Other communications received by the Secretary-General from the representative of Viet Nam included:

- a 25 September letter transmitting a 22 September memorandum outlining intensified Chinese armed activities and war preparations against Viet Nam;
- a 1 October letter transmitting a white paper on Viet Nam's sovereignty over the Hoang Sa and Truong Sa archipelagos, made public on 27 September by Viet Nam's Ministry of Foreign Affairs (see also section below);
- a 9 October letter transmitting a white paper on Viet Nam-China relations over the previous 30 years, issued by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry in September;
- a 2 November letter transmitting a memorandum of 28 October from the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry charging that China was preparing for a new war of aggression against Viet Nam;
- a letter of 1 December transmitting a letter of the same day, addressed also to the President of the General Assembly, from the Vietnamese Foreign Minister drawing attention to the serious situation in the South-East Asian region which, he charged, was caused by armed aggression and threats of war by the Chinese against Viet Nam. The letter also said that China had since 1974 occupied offshore islands over which Viet Nam claimed sovereignty.

Additional communications from China's representative to the Secretary-General included a letter of 28 November transmitting three articles published by the People's Daily and Xinhua News Agency commentators: the first, dated 14 November, called the white paper on Viet Nam-China relations a confession of Vietnamese be tray al of Sino-Vietnamese friendship and a scandal; the second, dated 20 November, discussed Sino-Vietnamese relations during Viet Nam's struggle against France and the United States; and the third, dated 25 November, gave China's reasons for the worsening relationship between the two countries since Viet Nam's unification.

On 21 December, China transmitted a note of 18 December by its Foreign Ministry to the Vietnamese Embassy in China lodging a strong protest against Vietnamese armed border provocations and incursions which it charged had taken place in November and early December.

Communications concerning sovereignty over coastal islands

Several communications concerning sovereignty over coastal islands in South-East Asia were received by the Secretary-General in 1979. The archipelagos over which sovereignty was claimed by both China and Viet Nam were called Xisha and Nansha by the Chinese, and Hoang Sa and Truong Sa by the Vietnamese. They were also known as the Paracels and Spratly.

By a letter of 16 April, China transmitted a note by its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, sent on 13 April to the Vietnamese Embassy in China, protesting against an intrusion by armed Vietnamese vessels into the sea area of the Xisha islands. China regarded this as an incursion into its territorial sea and as a serious threat to its security.

On 1 October, Viet Nam transmitted a white paper in evidence of Viet Nam's sovereignty over the Hoang Sa and Truong Sa archipelagos. The document had been made public on 27 September by the Vietnamese Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Included in this document were copies of maps, historical records, official chronicles, ordinances, meteorological records, and a chronology of events from the seventeenth century to August 1979. Also included was a statement of 7 August by the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry which said that, by illegally occupying the Hoang Sa archipelago, China had encroached on Viet Nam's territorial integrity.

In a letter of 1 November, Viet Nam transmitted a Foreign Ministry statement of 3 September in response to a 23 July communiqué by the Chinese General Department of Civil Aviation which had stipulated four danger areas in the international waters and the territorial sea of the Hoang Sa archipelago and forbad all flights at a certain altitude over those areas. Viet Nam said that the Chinese communiqué was a violation of Vietnamese territorial sovereignty and of international law on the freedom of flight over international waters, and a contradiction of the aims of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

On 22 November, China transmitted documentary evidence which, China claimed, showed that the Vietnamese Government recognized the Xisha and Nansha islands as Chinese territory. Included were copies of a note of 14 September 1958 from the Vietnamese Premier to the Chinese Premier, and facsimiles of Vietnamese newspapers, maps and pages of a geography textbook for students. China said that after 1974 the Vietnamese authorities had reversed their position, had advanced territorial claims and had sent troops to occupy some of the islands of the Nansha archipelago.

By a letter of 1 December, Viet Nam transmitted a letter, addressed to the President of the General Assembly as well as the Secretary-General, from its Foreign Minister stating that in January 1974 China had attacked and occupied the Hoang Sa islands and demanding that the Chinese authorities withdraw their armed forces from them

Communication from Viet Nam concerning its territorial sea

By a letter of 23 August to the Secretary-General, the representative of Viet Nam transmitted a statement of 21 August concerning Viet Nam's territorial sea by his country's Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He rejected a statement of 10 August attributed to the United States State Department indicating that the United States would only recognize a three-mile territorial sea for maritime nations and that its ships and aircraft could operate in disputed areas outside that three-mile limit. The Foreign Ministry recalled that, on 12 May 1977, the Vietnamese Government had issued a statement regarding its territorial sea, contiguous zone, exclusive economic zone and continental shelf, affirming a territorial sea of 12 nautical miles for Viet Nam.

Viet Nam stated that it had complete sovereignty over its territorial sea, as well as the superjacent airspace and the sea-bed and subsoil thereof, and would take appropriate measures to protect that sovereignty and defend its interests in the maritime zones and on the continental shelf under its jurisdiction.

Additional communications

Communications concerning a People's Revolutionary Tribunal of the People's Republic of Kampuchea for the trial of what it termed the crimes of genocide of the Pol Pot—Ieng Sary clique, held in Phnom Penh from 15 to 19 August, were received by the Secretary-General from the representative of Viet Nam during September and October.

An indictment, transmitted on 4 October, charged detailed acts of genocide. A report of a fact-finding mission to Viet Nam between 25 April and 5 May by a delegation of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, transmitted on 8 October, analysed the legal position of the situation in Kampuchea as well as frontier incidents between China and Viet Nam and Chinese military action on and after 17 February, and contained statements made by lawyers and jurists before the Tribunal. A report to the Tribunal by a committee of inquiry, transmitted on 8 October, charged specific instances of genocide against national minorities in general and the Cham minority in particular. An investigation report, dated 15 August, on crimes alleged against the Phnom Penh population was transmitted on 11 October. A report, transmitted on 12 October, alleged genocide against religions and believers in Kampuchea. The Judgement of the Tribunal, transmitted on 17 September, found Pol Pot and Ieng Sary guilty of the crime of genocide and condemned them to death in absentia.

Situation in Kampuchea

APPROVAL OF THE AGENDA ITEM

By a letter of 17 August 1979, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand—the ASEAN States—expressed grave concern at the continuing conflict and worsening situation in Kampuchea, which they perceived to be a threat to the peace and security of the entire region, and requested inclusion of an item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea" in the agenda of the General Assembly's thirty-fourth (1979) session.

This request was considered by the General Committee on 19 September.

Opening discussion of the subject, Thailand said that the armed conflict in Kampuchea was creating a refugee problem and thereby imposing an immense strain on neighbouring countries. The United Nations was the most appropriate forum for a comprehensive discussion of the question.

Viet Nam opposed inclusion of the item, as the request had been made without the express consent of the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea, which was in Viet Nam's view the sole legitimate representative of the people of Kampuchea, and therefore represented interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs in violation of Article 1 of the United Nations Charter containing the purposes of the United Nations.² Viet Nam added that the question concerned maintenance of international peace and security, which was primarily within the competence of the Security Council. The Byelorussian SSR, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the USSR also urged that the item not be included because of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, non-intervention. The Lao People's Democratic Republic considered that the situation in Kampuchea did not pose a greater threat than the situation faced by the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam along the borders they shared with China.

China supported inclusion of the item, charging Viet Nam with aggression against Democratic Kampuchea which, it said, posed a serious threat to the security and stability of South-East Asia and endangered international peace.

Benin suggested that consideration of the item be deferred until the Credentials Committee, which was meeting that day (see subsection below), had reported to the plenary Assembly.

Singapore argued that the question of the representation of Kampuchea, currently before the Credentials Committee, differed from the item proposed by the ASEAN States and added that Articles 11 and 14 of the Charter, on the functions and powers of the General Assembly, supported the item's inclusion—a view shared by the United Kingdom. Singapore stressed that ASEAN was not in favour of the Pol Pot régime but wished to protect the principles of territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence.

Supporting inclusion of the item, Costa Rica said it felt ASEAN's proposal could facilitate a political solution to the humanitarian problems involved: Papua New Guinea stated that it was evident to all that there was a real problem in Kampuchea, and the United States agreed that the situation demanded the attention and concern of the international community.

The General Committee decided, by 19 votes to 5, with 1 abstention, to recommend that the General Assembly include the item in its agenda.

QUESTION OF CREDENTIALS

Communications

During 1979, a number of communications were addressed to the Secretary-General and the Presidents of both the General Assembly and the Security Council concerning the question of the credentials of the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea.

In letters of 31 January and 2 February, Viet Nam drew attention to a telegram of 27 January from Hun Sen, identified as the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, stating that the Pol Pot régime had been overthrown on 7 January and that the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea was the authentic legal representative of Kampuchea with the sole right to accredit representatives to the United Nations and other international organizations. This position was reiterated in a message of 16 February and a letter of 26 March. The letter, transmitted by Viet Nam on 27 March, also charged that the acceptance by the Secretary-General of the credentials of Thiounn Prasith, representing the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary régime, was contrary to the realities in Kampuchea, an interference in its internal affairs and a violation of the Charter. Viet Nam supported this position in a letter of 3 April, also stating that it totally rejected all allegations of Thiounn Prasith, who it said was slandering Viet Nam through statements, press releases and other documents.

By a letter of 10 April, the representative of the Lao People's Democratic Republic charged that the self-styled representative of Democratic Kampuchea was abusing the machinery of the $^{2\ \}mbox{For text}$ of Article 1 of the Charter and of other Articles referred to herein, see APPENDIX II.

United Nations to disseminate untruthful statements against Members of the United Nations, including his own country.

Several other communications supporting the position that the only legal Government of the Kampuchean people was the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea were received from Bulgaria (18 May), Cuba (17 April), Czechoslovakia (4 May), the German Democratic Republic (16 May), Mongolia (18 May), Poland (29 June) and the USSR (19 April).

On 10 September, Viet Nam transmitted a message of 7 September from Hun Sen who said that so-called Democratic Kampuchea had been abolished on 7 January and the leaders of the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary régime had been sentenced to death in absentia by the People's Revolutionary Tribunal; they were therefore not qualified in any way to represent the Kampuchean people. He requested the General Assembly to dismiss the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary clique from the United Nations and restore the seat of Kampuchea to the People's Revolutionary Council, adding that inclusion of matters related to Kampuchea in the Assembly's agenda without the consent of that Council or their discussion without the presence of its representatives would constitute interference in Kampuchea's internal affairs.

Support for the position of the People's Revolutionary Council and, in particular, the right of representatives of that Council to take the seat of Kampuchea in the United Nations was expressed in communications from the Byelorussian SSR (21 September), Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic (18 September), Hungary (19 September), the Lao People's Democratic. Republic (17 September), the Ukrainian SSR (19 September), the USSR (14 September) and Viet Nam (17 September).

By a letter of 17 September, Viet Nam transmitted a message of the previous day from Heng Samrin, identified as the President of the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, giving the membership of its delegation to be sent to participate in the Assembly's 1979 regular session.

Report of the Credentials Committee

The credentials of the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea to the Assembly's 1979 regular session were examined by the Credentials Committee on 19 September.

The Congo proposed that no recognition be granted to any delegation from Kampuchea until information concerning the situation was fully understood. This proposal was supported by Panama and the USSR, both of which said they believed that the People's Revolutionary Council was the sole legitimate representative of the Kampuchean people.

China stated that Viet Nam's challenge in the Assembly to the valid credentials of Democratic Kampuchea's representative was unreasonable since the puppet régime of the Vietnamese authorities had been repudiated by the Cambodian people. This position was supported by Pakistan as, in its view, the proposal that the seat be kept vacant would be inconsistent with the Assembly's rules of procedure and contrary to previous practice. Both Pakistan and the United States said they did not support the actions of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea, but stated that the issue in question was solely the validity of the credentials of that country. In the view of the United States, those credentials fulfilled the requirements of rule 27 of the rules of procedure.3

Belgium stated that the Committee had a technical problem to solve; the political aspect of the problem could be discussed in the Assembly. Ecuador concurred with this view; the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea should be accepted. Senegal also said that Democratic Kampuchea's credentials should be accepted; it was not up to the Committee to decide whether a Government was good or bad. The USSR, however, did not agree that the Committee's task was purely formal but was political.

On an oral proposal by the Chairman, a draft resolution, by which the Committee accepted the credentials of the delegation of Democratic Kampuchea, was adopted by 6 votes to 3. The Committee therefore recommended, on an oral proposal by its Chairman, that the Assembly adopt a resolution approving the first report of the Credentials Committee.

By a letter of 20 September, Viet Nam transmitted a message addressed to the President of the General Assembly from Foreign Minister Hun Sen, who urged the Assembly to reject the recommendation of the Credentials Committee.

The Assembly considered the report of the Credentials Committee during two plenary meetings on 21 September and adopted the text recommended by the Committee as resolution 34/2 A, by a recorded vote of 71 to 35, with 34 abstentions. The recorded vote was requested by Belgium, Chairman of the Credentials Committee.

Before its adoption, an amendment to the Committee's draft was proposed by Benin, the Congo, Guinea-Bissau, India, Madagascar, Sao

Tome and Principe, and Sierra Leone. By this amendment, the Assembly would have, rather than approve the report, indicated that it had considered the report and decided, without prejudice to the positions of Member States, to suspend consideration of the report and to keep the seat of Kampuchea vacant for the time being.

The Assembly also had before it a draft resolution sponsored by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam. By this draft, the Assembly would have: considered that the Credentials Committee had failed to examine properly all communications and aspects of the question; decided to disregard the first report of the Committee; resolved that Kampuchea should be represented in the United Nations only by representatives appointed by the People's Revolutionary Council of the People's Republic of Kampuchea; and invited the legitimate representatives appointed by that Council to take their seat.

Among the States which felt that, despite what they considered the deplorable record of Democratic Kampuchea, there was no justification for acceptance of the credentials of a régime installed through external intervention were Malaysia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Singapore, Somalia and the United States. Australia, Malaysia and Thailand expressed the opinion that to keep the seat vacant would be to condone armed intervention, and Zaire said that would also imply denial of the sovereign rights of a Member State. Senegal and Yugoslavia felt that the unseating of an existing delegation would create a dangerous precedent. Bangladesh supported acceptance of Democratic Kampuchea until conditions were such as to enable the Kampuchean people to choose a government freely without outside interference.

China charged that the controversy had been provoked by the USSR and Viet Nam which had imposed a war of aggression on the Kampuchean people.

Introducing the 11-power draft resolution, Bulgaria said that the basic prerequisites for credibility of credentials were the competence and legitimate powers of those who issued them, for no one could delegate powers that he himself did not possess. Afghanistan, Benin, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Grenada, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland and Viet Nam were among those which stated that the Pol Pot régime no longer existed; support for the recommendation of the Credentials Committee would mean support for this régime, according to Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR. Poland and Viet Nam asserted that the communication from the People's Revolutionary Council had not been given equal treatment by the Committee; according to Afghanistan, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba and Mongolia, the Committee had approached the question from a purely formal viewpoint and had not taken into account the real situation in Kampuchea. Grenada and Mozambique said that they would accept the seven-power draft amendment as a compromise.

India said that adoption of the seven-power draft would prevent the Assembly from taking a decision it might later regret since, by accepting the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly would not in reality be accepting credentials of anyone who could discharge its membership obligations.

A number of speakers said that the sevenpower draft was in fact a new proposal. These included Bangladesh, China, Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Singapore, Thailand, the United States and Zaire. Thailand suggested that, since legal interpretations might differ, the Legal Counsel should be asked for an opinion.

By a recorded vote of 81 to 31, with 26 abstentions, the Assembly decided to request the Legal Counsel for an opinion on whether the seven-power draft constituted an amendment or a new proposal.

The Legal Counsel said that the document in question did not fall within the definition of an amendment under rule 90 of the rules of procedure,⁴ but added that, since the Assembly had always been extremely flexible in past practice in its understanding of what constituted an amendment, it might determine for itself the nature of the document.

Bulgaria informed the Assembly that, in view of the debate, the sponsors of the 11-power draft resolution would not insist on a vote on their text, but would support the seven-power draft, which should not, however, be taken as a change in their position of principle.

At the suggestion of the President, a motion that the text contained in the seven-power draft was an amendment was put to the vote and was rejected by a recorded vote of 43 in favour to 80 against, with 19 abstentions. The Assembly also rejected, by a recorded vote of 39 in favour to 76 against, with 23 abstentions, a proposal by India that the seven-power draft be given priority over the draft resolution recommended by the Credentials Committee.

In view of the adoption of resolution 34/2 A, the Assembly decided not to take a decision on the seven-power draft proposal.

Explaining their positive votes after adoption of the resolution, Colombia, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy and Sri Lanka stated that their votes were based on respect for the Charter and did not imply support for the Pol Pot régime. Argentina said it considered that the Assembly should support the work of bodies to which it had delegated technical functions.

Austria, France, Spain, Suriname and Sweden abstained as, in their opinion, neither party had the right to represent the people of Kampuchea.

Democratic Kampuchea said that the Assembly had, by its vote, recognized the victim of aggression.

Earlier in the year, when the Assembly had resumed its thirty-third session to consider the question of Namibia, the issue of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea had also arisen (see p. 1076).

GENERAL ASPECTS

In considering the situation in Kampuchea at plenary meetings held between 12 and 14 November, the General Assembly had before it two letters of 12 November from Viet Nam.

The first letter transmitted a memorandum dated 10 November from the Vietnamese Ministry of Foreign Affairs stating that the Assembly's current discussion of the so-called situation in Kampuchea concerned neither the question of withdrawal of, Vietnamese troops nor that of finding a political solution, but the policy of aggression and expansion pursued by the Chinese rulers in connivance with the United States and others which seriously threatened the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Viet Nam, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Kampuchea, the stability of South-East Asia and world peace. All resolutions relating to Kampuchea resulting from such discussion, without the agreement of the People's Revolutionary Council of Kampuchea, were illegal and invalid.

The second letter transmitted a declaration by the "Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea" stating that, if there was still a problem in Kampuchea, it concerned liquidating the Pol Pot-Ieng Sary régime and preventing its restoration by China. The Ministry also regarded the debate in the Assembly as invalid, since the People's Revolutionary Council was the only lawful representative of Kampuchea.

On 14 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 34/22, by which it strongly appealed to all States and national and international humanitarian organizations to render urgent, non-discriminatory humanitarian relief to the civilian population of Kampuchea, including those who had sought refuge in neighbouring countries, and called on all States urgently to resettle from these countries the displaced Kampucheans. The Assembly urged all parties to the conflict to co-operate to facilitate humanitarian relief efforts and to settle their disputes peacefully in accordance with the United Nations Charter, and called on them to observe fully the fundamental principles of human rights and to cease hostilities forthwith. The Assembly called for the immediate withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea and called on all States to refrain from acts or threats of aggression and interference in the internal affairs of States in South-East Asia. It appealed to States to refrain from interference in the internal affairs of Kampuchea in order to enable the Kampuchean people to decide their own future and destiny, and to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of Kampuchea, resolving that the Kampucheans should be enabled to choose democratically their own government.

The Assembly welcomed the Secretary-General's efforts to co-ordinate relief assistance and to ensure its distribution to those for whom it was intended, and requested him: to follow the situation closely and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to the problem's peaceful solution; to explore the possibility of holding an international conference on Kampuchea as one means of implementing this resolution; and to report to Member States at the earliest opportunity on the situation.

Resolution 34/22, sponsored by 30 Member States (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below), was adopted by a recorded vote of 91 to 21, with 29 abstentions.

Earlier on 14 November, on the proposal of Malaysia, the Assembly had decided, by a recorded vote of 85 to 32, with 23 abstentions, to give priority in voting to this text over two other draft resolutions it had received for consideration

The first of these was sponsored by Afghanistan, Angola, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the German Democratic Republic, Grenada, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Poland, Sao Tome and Principe, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam.

By the preamble, the Assembly would have: reaffirmed that settlement of international disputes by peaceful means, refraining from threat or use of force and non-interference in internal affairs of States were among the fundamental principles of the United Nations Charter; recalled that peoples resisting forcible action in exercise of their right to self-determination were entitled to seek and receive support in accordance with Charter principles; borne in mind that Kampuchea had been subjected to a régime that committed genocide against its own people and that provoked armed conflicts against neighbouring countries which had threatened peace and stability in South-East Asia; and noted that the Kampuchean people had regained their independence and begun the process of national reconstruction and that efforts were being made by Governments, the Secretary-General and international organizations to bring urgent humanitarian aid to the people of Kampuchea.

The Assembly would have then: called upon all States to refrain from any activity detrimental to the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kampuchea; declared that any problem concerning Kampuchea and other South-East Asian countries should be settled by those countries themselves, without foreign interference, on the basis of fundamental Charter principles; expressed the hope that those countries would pursue establishment of a zone of peace, freedom, neutrality and stability in the region; called upon all Governments and international and national organizations to increase humanitarian aid to the Kampuchean people, without political conditions; and requested the Secretary-General to ensure its judicious and effective use.

On the proposal of Senegal, the Assembly decided on 14 November, by a recorded vote of 62 to 36, with 38 abstentions, not to take a decision on the 20-power draft.

The second draft, sponsored by India, would have had the Assembly urge the States members of ASEAN and the States of Indo-China to hold a conference to discuss all the issues which had given rise to the tensions in South-East Asia and make all efforts to create an atmosphere conducive to peace, stability and co-operation in the area, call upon all other States not to hinder the convening of a conference or vitiate the atmosphere for its successful conclusion, and request the Secretary-General to assist in its convening.

At the conclusion of the debate, India informed the Assembly that it would not press for a decision on this draft.

During the debate, Democratic Kampuchea charged that its existence was threatened by a Vietnamese war of aggression which was a direct threat to the peace of the region and beyond. It appealed for the right to decide its own destiny, through free general elections by secret ballot under the Secretary-General's supervision. China also accused Viet Nam of aggression against Kampuchea which it said was the outcome of collusion between the USSR and Viet Nam aimed at dominating the Asia-Pacific region.

Introducing the 30-power resolution, Malaysia asserted that intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea was the root cause of the serious situation in Indo-China. That situation was of immediate concern to ASEAN and other neighbouring States and should also be of concern to all United Nations Members, since this involved a clear breach of Charter principles. Malaysia added that, while a political solution of the conflict was essential, the dire plight of the Kampuchean people should not be lost sight of. Zaire associated itself with the Malaysian position.

Bangladesh, Bhutan, Nepal, Papua New Guinea and Singapore were among those which said that, unless the international community succeeded in bringing massive relief to the Kampuchean people, stopping the war and finding a peaceful political solution, those people were threatened with extinction. Australia, Japan and New Zealand felt that assistance to Kampuchea should be the most immediate concern, but stressed that solutions to the political problems must also be found. Canada agreed, but said that relief efforts were only a palliative. Austria stated that its participation in the debate was to save the remnants of the Kampuchean people from total annihilation.

Speaking on behalf of the nine members of the European Economic Community, Ireland said they supported the concern of the ASEAN States. A political solution must be based on an independent Kampuchea with a genuinely representative Government, free from foreign military presence, maintaining friendly relations with all countries of the region, and having the benefit of international assistance for reconstruction. Similar views were expressed by Sweden.

The Federal Republic of Germany advocated the dispatch of United Nations observers to Kampuchea and the Thai-Kampuchean border to identify possible United Nations contributions towards restoring peace.

Fiji and Norway expressed concern about possible hindrance to humanitarian relief operations in Kampuchea and appealed to all those concerned to ensure that aid was distributed efficiently and impartially. The United States said that increased fighting prevented relief efforts from reaching large parts of the country, threatened the security of Thailand and had consequences for peace and stability in the region. This view was shared by Egypt.

Pakistan and United Kingdom said that the 30-power draft contained the steps necessary to restore to the people of Kampuchea conditions of peace, economic viability and political independence, whereas the 20-power draft ignored the famine conditions in Kampuchea and the major military campaign currently taking place there. New Zealand said the latter draft was a deliberate distortion of history. The Philippines expressed the view that in the 20-power draft the political dimension was paramount; the humanitarian aspect, it said, appeared to have been added only as an afterthought because the universal outcry had become untenable. Yugoslavia stated that it could not support this draft because it was aimed at justifying and legitimizing the situation created by foreign intervention. Thailand pointed out that it was the country most affected by the massive waves of Kampuchean refugees and displaced persons, and expressed appreciation to the Secretary-General for sending, on 12 November, a factfinding mission to observe the situation along the Thai-Kampuchean border. Greece was among those which praised Thailand for opening its borders to the refugees.

Supporters of the 20-power draft deplored the absence of representatives of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and expressed the view that the proposal of the ASEAN countries was based on a false assessment of the situation in Kampuchea aimed at imposing on the people of Kampuchea a solution contrary to their interests.

Introducing the 20-power draft, the Lao People's Democratic Republic stated that it reflected the actual situation in Kampuchea. The presence of Vietnamese troops in Kampuchea was at the request of the People's Revolutionary Council and was an internal matter; peace and stability in the region were threatened not by the presence of those troops, but by the policies of China. After expressing similar views, Viet Nam said that to repatriate its armed forces would be to betray a commitment towards a sister nation and create conditions for the return to power of the Pol Pot régime. Viet Nam further stated that efforts at finding a political solution to the socalled problem of Kampuchea constituted overt interference in that country's internal affairs.

The USSR considered that the 30-power draft violated the sovereign rights of an independent State by ignoring the existence of the People's Republic of Kampuchea and calling for democratic elections; an absolute majority of Kampucheans supported the new Government and approved of its policies.

Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR were among those which expressed full support for the People's Revolutionary Council and opposed any attemps to interfere in the internal affairs of Kampuchea; they regarded the request to deal with the so-called situation in Kampuchea as a violation of the Charter and stated that peace and security in South-East Asia were threatened by those who supported the Pol Pot régime. Cuba added that Kampuchea's return to civilized life and peaceful coexistence with its neighbours required all States to refrain from intervention in its domestic affairs

Czechoslovakia observed that it was offering assistance to the People's Republic of Kampuchea without any political conditions. Any further international assistance should be given on this basis and not be exploited against the interests of the Kampuchean people. Afghanistan said that Kampuchea had accepted emergency assistance without political strings, but rejected assistance for the so-called two sides in Kampuchea, as such assistance would have been channelled to support the Pol Pot régime. Nicaragua said that the true solution to the problem did not lie in calling for withdrawal of Vietnamese troops; the problem of peace in South-East Asia was more complex and involved troops coming from different countries.

Introducing its draft, India stated that the two other drafts before the Assembly reflected conflicting perspectives of the situation in and around Kampuchea and would not resolve the political and humanitarian problems in South-East Asia. India described its text as complementary to the other drafts and added that its purpose was to provide a forum for dialogue between the States of the region.

Thailand commented that the sponsors of the 30-power draft found India's proposal incompatible with their own. Australia said the objectives of India's draft were impeccable but the actions proposed did not meet the needs of the situation. New Zealand added that it prejudged what might be the most useful approach to resolving the Kampuchean problem. New Zealand believed that the form which negotiations should take should be left for further consideration, in close consultation with the States primarily concerned. Pakistan felt India's draft was superfluous in view of that of the 30 powers. Hungary, however, said it had no objection to examining the Indian proposal separately.

FURTHER COMMUNICATIONS

Several communications addressed to the Secretary-General were received after the adoption of resolution 34/22.

A statement of 16 November by Democratic Kampuchea, transmitted on 19 November, expressed its thanks to the General Assembly for the adoption of the resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of all foreign troops from Kampuchea. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Viet Nam, by a statement of 15 November transmitted on 21 November, rejected the resolution as illegal and an interference in the internal affairs of the Kampuchean people. On 23 November, Viet Nam transmitted a statement of 16 November by the "Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Kampuchea" which also rejected the resolution and declared it null and void, charging that it distorted the realities in Kampuchea.

EMERGENCY HUMANITARIAN RELIEF

Concern over the refugee problem in South-East Asia led the Secretary-General to convene a Meeting on Refugees and Displaced Persons in South-East Asia on 20 and 21 July at Geneva (see p. 918) and a Pledging Conference for Emergency Humanitarian Relief to the People of Kampuchea on 5 November at United Nations Headquarters, at which $210 million was pledged (for details, see p. 919).

Relations between Iran and the United States

Communications (9 November-3 December)

In a letter dated 9 November 1979 to the President of the Security Council, the United States stated that on 4 November its Embassy in Teheran had been occupied, that its personnel were' being held by a group of Iranians, and that efforts to secure their release had failed. As that action and the support it had received violated the basis for maintenance of international peace and security, the United' States requested that the Security Council urgently consider action to secure the release of the diplomatic personnel and to restore their sanctity as well as that of the establishments.

On 9 November, the Council President made the following statement:

Following consultations among the members of the Security Council, I am authorized, as President of the Council, to express the profound concern of the Council at the prolonged detention of American diplomatic personnel in Iran. Speaking as President of the Council on behalf of the Council, and while not wishing to interfere in the internal affairs of any country, I must emphasize that the principle of the inviolability of diplomatic personnel and establishments must be respected in all cases in accordance with internationally accepted norms. Therefore, I urge in the strongest terms that the diplomatic personnel being held in Iran should be released without delay and provided protection. I further urge the Secretary-General to continue to use his good offices to assist in attaining this objective.

By a letter of 13 November, Iran transmitted a letter of that date to the Secretary-General from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which charged that the United States was striving, in connexion with a crisis which the United States had caused, to create a war psychosis in the United States and in Western countries in order to justify an attack on Iran. It considered that Iran's security and that of other countries in the area was being threatened and requested a meeting of the Security Council. It also hoped that the Secretary-General would induce the United States to abandon its hostile attitude and accede to Iran's proposals, which included recognition of the guilt of the former Shah—who was accused of crimes against the people of Iran—and restitution to Iran of property and funds belonging to him, members of his family and leading members of his régime.

Support for Iran's request for a meeting of the Council was expressed by Pakistan in a letter of 22 November to the Secretary-General from its Adviser for Foreign Affairs. Pakistan said that the meeting would afford the Council an invaluable opportunity to avert the threat of military measures and ease tension in the region.

In a letter of 25 November to the Council President, the Secretary-General referred to the grave situation which had arisen in relations between the United States and Iran. He said that the United States was deeply disturbed by the seizure of its Embassy and the detention of its personnel, in violation of international conventions, while Iran was seeking redress for injustices and abuse of human rights which, in its view, were committed by the previous régime. It was the Secretary-General's opinion that the crisis posed a serious threat to international peace and security and he therefore requested that the Security Council be convened urgently to seek a peaceful solution to the problem.

Several other communications during late November and early December to the Secretary-General or the President of the Security Council indicated the international community's concern over events in Iran.

A telegram of 27 November from the Chairman of the Permanent Council of the Organization of American States transmitted a declaration made by that Council on 26 November which reaffirmed the inviolability of diplomatic agents and premises and appealed to Iran to terminate occupation of the Embassy and release the hostages.

A statement containing the views of the heads of State or Government and Foreign Ministers of the nine member States of the European Community, meeting in the European Council in Dublin on 30 November, was transmitted by the representative of Ireland. The nine States appealed to Iran to respect the fundamental rights and duties of international law.

A 1 December statement by Tunisia informed the Security Council that, during a meeting with representatives of the Council of the Revolution of Iran on 23 November, Tunisia's Minister for Foreign Affairs had entreated the Iranian delegation to transmit to the leaders in Teheran Tunisia's deep concern, to urge them to reflect on the unforeseeable consequences of escalation of tension in the area and to comply with rules governing international relations.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Ivory Coast, in a message of 23 November transmitted on 3 December, associated his country with the representations to obtain evacuation of the Embassy occupied by Iranian students and to release the hostages.

On 3 December, the Latin American group of Member States at the United Nations issued a statement, transmitted by its current Chairman, Saint Lucia, in which the group reiterated adherence to the norms of international law guaranteeing the inviolability of diplomatic agents and premises and expressed profound interest that a peaceful solution be found to the situation.

A message of 22 November addressed to the President of Iran and the King of Saudi Arabia from the President of Guinea was transmitted on 30 November by Guinea, urgently requesting Iran to release the diplomats taken hostage and, at the same time, protesting against an armed seizure of the Grand Mosque of Mecca by a group of terrorists on 22 November.

On 1 December, the Iranian Minister for Foreign Affairs charged that the United States was spreading rumours predicting the possibility of terrorist acts in the United States by so-called Iranian agents, thereby trying to manipulate public opinion and influence the Security Council's deliberations. Meetings of the Security Council (27 November-4 December)

The Security Council, at five meetings held from 27 November to 4 December, considered, in response to the Secretary-General's letter, of 25 November, the situation which had arisen in relations between the United States and Iran.

The representatives of Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Egypt, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Iran, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Malawi, Mauritius, the Netherlands, Panama, Spain, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Yugoslavia and Zaire were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

Opening consideration of the item on 27 November, the Secretary-General called upon Iran and the United States to exercise maximum restraint and refrain from any action which might further inflame the situation.

The President of the Security Council reiterated the Council's previous appeal of 9 November for release and protection of United States diplomatic personnel detained in Iran. He also drew the Council's attention to a request by Iran in a letter of 27 November that the deliberations be postponed. Iran had emphasized the importance of convening the Council before the holy days of Tassua and Ashura, days of mourning revered in many Islamic countries, including Iran. Out of respect for these holy days and considering the sensitivity of the issues, it was Iran's view that a Council meeting during this time would be neither opportune nor productive. Iran would be prepared to participate in a full debate in the Council as of the evening of 1 December, when its Foreign Minister was scheduled to arrive in New York.

After consultations, the President announced that the Council had agreed to adjourn.

On resuming its consideration of the item on 1 December, the Council was informed by the President that Iran did not intend to be present.

Opening the debate, the representative of the United States said that the situation in Teheran had a feature unlike any other assaults on diplomatic ties that bound the world, for the Iranian Government had defended the violence which held at least 50 Americans hostage in the United States Embassy. He said that this was intolerable and insisted that United States personnel be released and its premises restored, adding that those were not negotiable matters. The United States, however, was not deaf to voices in Iran which cried out against past wrongs and asked for understanding, he continued. His country remained ready, once the hostages were released, to discuss differences existing between the two countries and to seek their resolution.

The general view expressed in the Council was that continued occupation of the United States Embassy in Teheran and detention of its personnel constituted a serious violation of the fundamental principles of international law and diplomatic practice.

While expressing understanding for the desire of the Iranian people to obtain redress with respect to past grievances and recognizing their right to determine freely their own national and cultural identity, it was generally felt that the issues should be resolved peacefully through procedures to be devised within the framework of international law. All speakers, including Council members, urged that the hostages be released and allowed to return safely to their country.

Norway, on behalf of the Nordic countries, expressed deep concern over the fate of the hostages. These States were joined by Gabon, Portugal and the USSR, which stated that the holding of such personnel violated the April 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations. Gabon pledged support for any Council initiative which might lead to release of the hostages and end the conflict between Iran and the United States. Czechoslovakia, however, cautioned that a hasty, incorrect step by the Council might have a negative effect and threaten world peace.

Bolivia regretted Iran's decision not to participate in the Council's deliberations, but felt that Iran's image and negotiating position would be improved if its leaders were to respond favourably to the urgent appeals of the international community. Bangladesh said that, in the absence of Iran, the Secretary-General should assure the Iranian Government that its case, if presented to the Council, would receive full and fair consideration. Zambia called for bilateral negotiations under the Secretary-General's auspices. Nigeria believed that Iran's grievances would be properly addressed in suitable forums once it heeded the Council's appeal, while for the United Kingdom, release of the hostages was an essential precondition of the peaceful resolution of the remaining issues between Iran and the United States. Jamaica expressed similar views.

China expressed appreciation for the Secretary-General's initiative and said that, although there should be no interference in the internal affairs of other countries, principles guiding international relations and accepted diplomatic immunities should be universally respected.

Kuwait proposed creation of a consultative body that might assist in identifying human rights violations under the previous régime in Iran.

Among the non-members of the Council, Zaire cautioned that the third world would be the first to suffer if respect for international law were disregarded, while Egypt was concerned at the adverse propaganda which Islam, a religion of justice and tolerance, was receiving as a result of the events in Iran.

Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Italy, Japan and the Netherlands joined the appeal for early release of the hostages and for fulfilment by Iran of its international obligations, no matter what its grievances.

It would be tragic, said the Federal Republic of Germany, if the struggle for justice of the Iranian people were to make them insensitive to violations of the most fundamental principles of international law. Spain added that persistence in the current situation would erode the credibility of the political process in Iran.

Yugoslavia said freeing the hostages would contribute to establishment of constructive relations between Iran and the United States, to the solving of the broader issues raised by Iran and to further affirmation of the Iranian revolution.

While also appealing for the hostages' release, Malawi urged the United States to withdraw its weaponry from the vicinity; Swaziland stressed the need to avoid a confrontation which could have disastrous consequences. Speaking in like manner, Mauritius urged Iran to refrain from actions which would isolate it from the international community.

During consultations among members of the Council, a draft resolution was prepared and, on 4 December, the Council unanimously adopted it as resolution 457(1979).

By the resolution, the Council expressed deep concern at the dangerous level of tension between Iran and the United States and reaffirmed the obligation of all States under existing conventions to respect 'the inviolability of diplomatic personnel and premises. The Council urgently called upon Iran to release immediately the United States Embassy personnel being held in Teheran, to provide them protection and to allow them to leave the country. The Council also called on Iran and the United States to resolve peacefully the remaining issues between them in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, urging both to exercise the utmost restraint. In addition, the Council requested the Secretary-General to lend his good offices for the resolution's immediate implementation, further requesting him to report urgently on developments regarding his efforts.

Further communications and report

By a letter of 4 December, the Upper Volta transmitted a telegram addressed to the President of Iran, in which the President of the Upper Volta urged that the United States hostages be freed, and expressed regret that Iran had remained deaf to the unanimous decision of the Security Council.

On 15 December, the Registrar of the International Court of Justice, in accordance with Article 41, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court,6 transmitted an official copy of an Order of the same day by which the Court indicated provisional measures in the case concerning the United States diplomatic and consular staff in Teheran. These included immediate restoration to the United States of its Embassy, Chancery and Consulates, the immediate release of all persons held hostage and their protection, including immunity from criminal jurisdiction and freedom to leave Iran. Iran and the United States should, by the Order, also ensure that no action was taken which might aggravate tension between them. (See also p. 1122.)

On 22 December, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on developments which had taken lace since the adoption of resolution 457(1979). After giving details of contacts with the parties concerned and informing the Council of his contacts with a number of other Governments and organizations, the Secretary-General concluded that no early progress towards a settlement of the crisis could be achieved. He had mentioned to the Iranian Foreign Minister that it would be useful for the Secretary-General to send a personal representative to Teheran to get a more direct and detailed idea of the issues and problems and what kind of approach might prove fruitful. The Secretary-General assured the Council that he would pursue a mutually acceptable solution.

Also on 22 December, the United States, in a letter to the Council President, said that, since the Secretary-General's efforts had not met with a positive response, and Iran had rejected the International Court of Justice Order and continued to hold the hostages in defiance of decisions and appeals of the international community, the United States requested an early meeting of the Security Council to consider measures to be taken to induce Iran to comply with its international obligations.

Meetings of the Security Council (29-31 December)

In response to the request of the United States, the Security Council held three meetings from 29 to 31 December. The representatives of Australia, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and Singapore were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Secretary-General informed the Council that he was ready to leave for Iran at any time in order to carry out the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Council.

The United States Secretary of State said that, since Iran continued to hold the hostages after the Council and the world community had unanimously called for their release, action against that country under Chapter VII of the Charter⁷ would be not only justified but also required to promote a peaceful solution of the crisis. All members of the Council should ensure that its earlier unanimous decision was implemented. The United States sought condemnation of Iran's failure to comply with the Council's earlier action and that of the International Court of Justice; it would have the Council request the Secretary-General to intensify his good offices efforts and, in case the hostages were not released by a certain date, meet again to adopt specific sanctions under Article 41 of the Charter.

At the same time, he said, the United States was aware of the grievances of the Iranian people and respected their right to decide their own form of government. Once the hostages were released unharmed, the United States was prepared to try to resolve the issues between the two countries.

Australia supported the position of the United States and added that, should the leaders of Iran refuse to release the hostages, the Council should take measures under Chapter VII of the Charter. Norway said immediate action by the Council under that Chapter was necessary. Bolivia, France, Jamaica and Japan felt that, unless the Secretary-General's proposed mission were successful, additional measures would be necessary. Portugal also was in favour of action should new ways and means suggested by the Council fail. Singapore stated that the Council should demand the unconditional release of the hostages and the ending of the Embassy's occupation but, if a reasonable period of time passed without compliance, the Council should meet again to consider further action.

On the other hand, Czechoslovakia reiterated that hasty measures could have detrimental effects on the situation, and action should be based on Chapter VI of the Charter, on the pacific settlement of disputes, which provided the means to resolve the problem. The Federal Republic of Germany, however, said that the proposed mission of the Secretary-General must be seen as the last chance of action under that Chapter. Zambia cautioned that if the Secretary-General were to proceed to Iran, the Council should not attach conditions, which would be tantamount to prejudging issues.

The United Kingdom said nothing stood in the way of normal relations between the United Kingdom and Iran except the unacceptable continuing detention of the hostages. The United Kingdom added that it would do whatever it could to assist the United States.

Nigeria appreciated the impatience and bitterness of the United States over the prolonged detention of the hostages, but appealed to it not to resort to the use of force.

The Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs said that to ignore the need for communal corrective action would be to threaten the fabric of the international community and added that it was imperative that Iran be made to understand that international institutions were as much at its service as they were at the service of the United States.

On 31 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 461(1979) by which, taking into account the Order of the International Court of Justice, it deplored the continued detention of the hostages contrary to resolution 457 (1979) of 4 December (see section above), and urgently called again for their immediate release. The Council took note of the Secretary-General's readiness to go to Iran and requested him to intensify his efforts and report back before the Council met again. The Council decided to meet again on 7 January 1980 to review the situation and, in case of non-compliance with the current resolution, to adopt effective measures under Articles 39 and 41 of the Charter.

Resolution 461(1979), sponsored by the United States, was adopted by 11 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions (Bangladesh, Czechoslovakia, Kuwait and the USSR).

Reservations were expressed, before the vote, on the paragraph dealing with measures against Iran in the event of non-compliance with the current resolution.

Bangladesh felt that securing the hostages' release would be better served by postponing consideration of the matter until the Secretary-General reported to the Council after his visit to Iran. The references to Articles 39 and 41 and the proposal to use sanctions on a specified date would divide the international community and might be prejudicial to the Secretary-General's mission.

Kuwait also had strong reservations on this paragraph, maintaining that the Council should not threaten punitive measures against a party whose goodwill and co-operation were needed to overcome the problem, particularly as the Secretary-General was preparing to visit that country. Zambia also opposed that paragraph.

China's position was that, should it be necessary for the Council to review the situation and adopt measures in accordance with that paragraph, the Council should take a prudent attitude conducive to both relaxation of tension and release of the hostages.

The USSR felt that the dispute was bilateral and should be settled peacefully between the parties; the dispute did not fall under Chapter VII of the Charter and there was, therefore, no justification to attach to it the question of sanctions, which would exacerbate the situation and create a threat to peace.

Communications concerning the question of Korea

By a letter of 21 February 1979 to the President of the Security Council, the representative of the United States transmitted, on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950 Council decision, a report of the United Nations Command concerning the maintenance of the Korean Armistice Agreement of 27 July 1953 during the period 17 December 1977 to 17 December 1978.

The report dealt with the Armistice mechanism and procedures, and the Military Armistice Commission and its activities, and recounted major incidents during the period, including charges of naval intrusions and attacks in April, May and June 1978 and the construction of an illegal tunnel under the demilitarized zone in October by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The report concluded by stating that the United Nations Command would continue to fulfil its obligations under the mandate of the Agreement until the parties directly concerned were able to arrive at more permanent arrangements.

A letter of 29 April 1980 to the President of the Security Council from the United States representative transmitted the report of the United Nations Command for the period 18 December 1978 to 15 December 1979.

This report also covered the Armistice struc ture and procedures, activities of the Military Armistice Commission, developments during the period, violations of the Agreement and major incidents. These included charges of a naval in trusion in July 1979, an infiltration of armed intruders in October and the construction of a barrier system along the Military Demarcation Line beginning in June.

The report stated that during the period under review the United Nations Command had reported more than 5,700 violations of the Armistice Agreement by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and that, despite the existing tension and hostility, the Armistice Agreement and the Military Armistice Commission had been the primary mechanisms for reduction of tension and had continued to facilitate communication between the two sides.

Questions concerning Latin America

Situation in Nicaragua

Communications

Several communications concerning the situation in Nicaragua and the positions of the Organization of American States (OAS) and the United States in that regard were received by the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council in 1979.

By a letter of 20 June, Cuba transmitted to the Council President a statement of the previous day from its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, charging the United States with pressuring a number of Latin American foreign ministries to secure the adoption of decisions by oas that would facilitate its military intervention in, Nicaragua to snatch away the victory, won in 1979 under the leadership of the Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional, against the former regime. The Cuban statement urged support for the Nicaraguan Provisional Government of National Reconstruction and mobilization to prevent armed intervention by the imperialists.

The Secretary-General of oas transmitted to the Secretary-General on 23 June the text of a resolution adopted that day at the Seventeenth Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs. Stating that the armed conflict in Nicaragua was caused by the inhumane conduct of the dictatorial régime and that a solution was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Nicaraguan people, the OAS Ministers urged the immediate and definitive replacement of the régime of Anastasio Somoza, the installation in Nicaraguan territory of a democratic government, guarantee of respect for human rights for all Nicaraguans and free elections. They also urged OAS members to take steps, while respecting the principle of non-intervention, to facilitate an enduring and peaceful solution of the Nicaraguan problem, to promote humanitarian assistance and to contribute to the country's social and economic recovery.

By a letter dated 2 July, the United States transmitted to the Security Council President a statement by the Acting Secretary of State explaining his country's affirmative vote on the OAS resolution. In the letter, the United States encouraged all States to eschew unilateral actions which might be construed as intervention. In the statement, it said it was pleased to join the resolution in the interest of hemispheric solidarity and to permit constructive action by OAS members.

By a letter to the Secretary-General dated 25 June, Sri Lanka transmitted the text of a communique issued that day by the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries. The Bureau said it had examined recent attempts to undermine the struggle of the Nicaraguan people against the tyrannical Somoza régime. It noted with satisfaction the joint action of the Andean and other Latin American and Caribbean countries in opposing any kind of foreign intervention in Nicaragua, particularly military action as proposed by the United States. It reiterated its call for measures leading to the immediate and definitive elimination of the Somoza régime.

(See also p. 830.)

Assistance for the reconstruction of Nicaragua

In 1979, international assistance for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and development of Nicaragua, to overcome the effects of civil strife, was recommended by both the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) and the General Assembly.

The recommendation by ECLA was made at the twelfth special session of its Committee of the Whole, held on 27 and 28 September at United Nations Headquarters, New York. It was convened by the ECLA Executive Secretary at the request of the Nicaraguan Government and in response also to an appeal by the Secretary-General for international assistance for Nicaragua.

At the opening meeting, the Secretary-General stated that the country was undergoing the most severe crisis in its history as it emerged from a struggle for national identity and aspired to a future of peace and social justice. He had appealed for the immediate shipment of food, medicines, seeds and agricultural equipment, and several United Nations organizations had launched programmes to meet urgent humanitarian needs.

A representative of Nicaragua estimated damage during the struggle at $480 million, or a third of the gross national product. Nicaragua had also to face the burden of a $1.6 billion external debt incurred by the previous régime.

On 28 September, the ECLA Committee unanimously adopted a resolution calling for financial, trade, technical and other assistance to Nicaragua.

With regard to financial co-operation, the Committee urged Governments to help Nicaragua overcome its shortage of foreign exchange, appealed for speedy and flexible consideration of any requests for assistance it might submit to the International Monetary Fund, urged Governments to facilitate the placement of "Bonds for the Reconstruction of Nicaragua," recommended that developed countries consider cancelling debts incurred by Nicaragua in bilateral official development assistance, and called on Governments to facilitate renegotiation of Nicaraguan credit on the most favourable terms possible. Other recommendations concerned rescheduling of debts, financing of development programmes, balance-of-payments support from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, contributions to the International Fund for the Reconstruction of Nicaragua established by that Government and assistance to refugees.

The Committee appealed to Governments to grant Nicaraguan products access to their markets on preferential terms for a reasonable period. It called on United Nations specialized agencies to expand their technical assistance programmes in Nicaragua and asked the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to accede rapidly and favourably to any requests for special assistance from Nicaragua. Further, it recommended that Nicaragua receive the same treatment as that granted to the least developed countries, and that the General Assembly and the specialized agencies bear the country's economic situation in mind in connexion with the payment of its dues.

An item entitled "Assistance for the reconstruction of Nicaragua" was placed on the agenda of the regular 1979 Assembly session at the request of Panama, representing the Latin American group of States at the United Nations.

In a letter/explanatory memorandum dated 4 September, Panama said that, as a result of a bloody civil war, Nicaragua was facing a very serious human, economic and social situation which called for decisive and urgent measures of solidarity on the part of the international community.

On 25 October, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 34/8, by which it endorsed the resolution adopted by the ECLA Committee of the Whole, urged United Nations Member States and international organizations to supply with the utmost urgency the assistance envisaged in that resolution, and requested the Secretary-General to report during the next two years concerning the implementation of the Assembly resolution.

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee approved the text on 16 October without vote, as submitted by Costa Rica on behalf of 45 sponsors (see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

In explanation of vote, Finland, on behalf of the five Nordic countries, and supported by Australia, said some recommendations in the resolution might not lend themselves to immediate implementation by their countries for legislative or budgetary reasons.

Chapter XIII

Questions relating to the Middle East

In 1979, as in previous years, aspects of the situation in the Middle East occupied the attention of the Security Council, the General Assembly and several other United Nations bodies. A number of communications were also received, including charges and countercharges, as events in the region evolved.

Following a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel that entered into force on 25 April, several withdrawals were made from the Sinai peninsula by Israel. The mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF), deployed in the zone of disengagement between Egyptian and Israeli forces in the Sinai, lapsed on 24 July and was not renewed by the Security Council. The Council in May and November renewed six-month mandates for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), which continued to supervise a 1974 disengagement agreement between Israeli and Syrian forces in the Golan Heights area, noting that, despite the quiet prevailing in the sector, the over-all situation in the Middle East remained potentially dangerous.

At the beginning of 1979, the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) had been operational for 10 months. The Force had been established to confirm withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, restore international peace and security and assist the Lebanese Government in restoring its authority to the southern part of the country.

The mandate was largely unimplemented in 1979. Lebanese de facto forces, composed of Christian and allied militias, continued to occupy the border area turned over to them by Israeli forces after their withdrawal in June 1978. The de facto forces, alone or supported by Israeli forces, continued to encroach on the UNIFIL area of operation, and incursions by Israeli forces continued to be reported. Efforts by UNIFIL to control infiltration by other armed elements, which included the Palestine Liberation Organization as well as the Lebanese national movement and other Lebanese groups, also led to incidents. Heavy exchanges of fire over and across UNIFIL's area of operation were frequent. Following a cease-fire arranged by UNIFIL on 26 August, the situation remained generally quiet, despite isolated cases of firing.

The Security Council extended UNIFIL's mandate three times during 1979: in January, for a period of five months; in June, for the following six months; and in December, for a further six months until 19 June 1980 (resolutions 444(1979), 450(1979) and 459(1979)).

The General Assembly discussed several aspects of the situation in the Middle East during the year. Financing for UNDOF was arranged by the Assembly at its regular session on 25 October and on 3 and 17 December. At the last two meetings, the Assembly also arranged financing for the liquidation of UNEF. Financing for UNIFIL was arranged by the Assembly on 1 November and 17 December.

At the end of October, the Secretary-General submitted a comprehensive report on the situation in the Middle East which was discussed by the Assembly. The report dealt with: the status of the cease-fire and the activities of the United Nations peace-keeping forces in the area; United Nations efforts concerning the situation in the occupied territories and the question of Jerusalem; the Palestine refugee problem; the question of the rights of the Palestinian people; and developments in connexion with the search for a peaceful settlement. The Secretary-General said that the general situation was unstable and would remain so without a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem.

Throughout the year, Lieutenant-General Ensio P. H. Siilasvuo continued as Chief Coordinator of United Nations Peace-keeping Missions in the Middle East.

Having considered the question of the situation in the Middle East at its regular 1979 session, the Assembly on 6 December adopted resolution 34/70, by which it condemned continued Israeli occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories, declared that a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East question must be based on a comprehensive solution, and called anew for the early convening of the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East under United Nations auspices.

On 29 November and 12 December, the Assembly adopted four resolutions—34/65 A-D—on the question of Palestine. By these texts, the Assembly: expressed its regret and concern that the recommendations drawn up in 1976 by the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to be applied in efforts to establish peace in the Middle East, had not been implemented; declared that the 1978 Camp David accords, and other agreements concluded outside the framework of the United Nations purporting to determine the future of the Palestinian people and occupied territories, had no validity; authorized the Palestinian Rights Committee to continue promoting implementation of its recommendations and asked for co-operation in this regard from other United Nations bodies; and requested the Secretary-General to ensure the co-operation of the Secretariat in an expanded programme of information on the subject.

The Security Council met in March to discuss the accelerating erosion of the status of Jerusalem and the rest of the Arab territories occupied by Israel, as a result of the Israeli settlement and colonization of those territories. On 22 March, it adopted a resolution by which it determined that the Israeli settlement policy had no legal validity and constituted a serious obstruction to achieving a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. It called again on Israel to abide scrupulously by the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention, to rescind its measures and to desist from changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the occupied Arab territories. The Council also set up a three-member Commission to examine the situation. The Assembly, by resolution 34/133, endorsed a decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme concerning assistance to the Palestinian people and called on United Nations organizations to intensify efforts to improve their social and economic conditions.

The Assembly also adopted three resolutions —34/90 A-C—on the treatment of the civilian population in the occupied territories, based on the findings of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories. In a related action—resolution 34/29—it called on Israel to rescind a decision to deport the Mayor of Nablus, a West Bank city. Decisions were also taken declaring illegal Israeli measures to exploit resources, wealth and economic activities in those territories (resolution 34/136) and asking for a comprehensive report on living conditions of the Palestinian people (resolution 34/113).

By six resolutions—34/52 A-F—on the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), adopted on 23 November, the Assembly took decisions dealing with assistance to Palestine refugees and other persons in the area displaced as a result of the June 1967 hostilities, Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip, the return of displaced inhabitants, offers of grants and scholarships for Palestine refugees, and the financing of UNRWA. It also urged Governments to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the needs of UNRWA, in the light of the Agency's budgetary deficit, and asked that UNRWA's headquarters be relocated within its area of operations as soon as possible. Also considered were the health needs of Palestinian refugee children.

In September, the Secretary-General announced the appointment of a Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon.

Details of these and other related actions on Middle Eastern questions are described in the following pages.

Situation in the Middle East: status of the cease-fire

Egypt-Israel sector: United Nations Emergency Force

Reports of the Secretary-General

The mandate of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) had been renewed in 1978 until 24 July 1979. On 19 July, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the activities of the Force for the period from 18 October 1978 to 19 July 1979. He observed that during that period the situation in the Egypt-Israel sector had remained quiet and there had been no incidents of a serious nature. The Force had continued to man and control a buffer zone in the western part of the Sinai, carrying out periodic inspections of the area of limited forces and armaments on both sides of the zone, supervising the cease-fire and assisting in the implementation of the Agreement between Egypt and Israel of 4 September 1975 and the Protocol of 22 September 1975.² A peace treaty signed on 26 March between Egypt and Israel entered into force on 25 April (see p. 355). On 25 May, Israeli forces withdrew from a northern coastal area in the Sinai to the east of El Arish, and Egyptian authorities took over that area.

However, despite the recent developments in the sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continued to be unstable and potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so without a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem.

The Secretary-General noted that, as before, UNEF was composed of contingents from Australia, Canada, Finland, Ghana, Indonesia, Poland and Sweden. On 15 March, part of the Finnish contingent had been detached to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, reducing UNEF's total strength as at 16 July to 4,031. The Force was assisted by 120 military observers of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO).

In concluding his report, the Secretary-General pointed out that the original context in which UNEF was created and had functioned had changed during the period under review. The Governments of Egypt and Israel favoured an extension of its mandate, but others opposed that course. The Secretary-General recalled that UNEF's continued operation was to be referred to the Security Council for decision, according to guidelines approved by the Council in its resolution of 27 October 1973.³

The Council did not renew UNEF's mandate upon its expiration.

In a further comprehensive report on the situation in the Middle East, of 24 October 1979, the Secretary-General recalled the observations he had made on UNEF in his July report and noted that two further Israeli withdrawals had taken place from other Sinai areas on 25 July and 25 September.

Communications

By a letter of 24 July to the President of the Security Council, the Secretary-General took note of recent Council consultations on UNEF and understood that it had been agreed that there should be no extension of the UNEF mandate, which would lapse at midnight on 24 July. Accordingly, he intended to make the necessary arrangements for an orderly withdrawal of UNEF.

In a letter of 24 July to the Council President, Kuwait dissociated itself from the Council's inaction on the continued presence of UNTSO in the Egypt-Israel sector, because it regarded United Nations involvement within the framework of the bilateral treaty as unacceptable. In a further letter of 31 July to the Secretary-General, Kuwait stated that its position represented also that of the Arab group of Member States at the United Nations.

By a letter of 27 July, Egypt asked that a letter to the Secretary-General of the previous day be circulated as a Council document. It expressed the Egyptian Government's appreciation of the exemplary manner in which UNEF had carried out its functions, assuring the Secretary-General of full co-operation in facilitating the orderly withdrawal of the Force and reaffirming its acceptance of the UNTSO military observers on Egyptian territory.

In a letter of 27 September, Qatar, as current Chairman of the Arab group, informed the Secretary-General that the group was opposed to any action or undertaking by any organ of the United Nations, including UNTSO, which could facilitate the recognition, endorsement, approval and implementation of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Israel-Syria sector: United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

Communications and reports

In a letter of 13 March 1979, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that in accordance with a decision of the Government of Iran the Iranian contingent would be repatriated from the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF). He proposed to transfer a company of the Finnish contingent of the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) to UNDOF as a temporary measure. In a letter of 14 March, the Council President informed him that following informal consultations on that day the Council members had agreed with his proposal, adding that China had dissociated itself from the

In a letter of 26 July to the Council President, the Secretary-General, noting that with the termination of UNEF's mandate on 24 July the logistic support provided to UNDOF by UNEF was no longer available, proposed, subject to the usual consultations, that the logistic component of UNDOF be increased by 200 men, bringing its over-all strength to about 1,450. Replying on 1 August, the Council President informed him that Council members had agreed with his proposal. China, however, had dissociated itself from the matter.

In a note verbale of 9 August, the Secretary-General informed the Council that, subject to the usual consultations, he intended to accept an offer from Finland to bring the strength of its UNDOF contingent to 390, to equal that of the Iranian battalion which it had replaced in March. In a reply dated 16 August, the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members agreed with his proposal, with China again dissociating itself from the matter.

With the mandate of UNDOF due to expire on 31 May, the Secretary-General submitted a report, dated 24 May, giving an account of the activities of the Force to date from 25 November 1978. The Secretary-General observed that UNDOF had continued to supervise the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic, the area of separation—to ensure that there were no military forces there—and the areas of limitation of armaments and forces, in accordance with a 1974 Agreement on Disengagement between Israeli and Syrian Forces⁴ in the Golan Heights area.

During the period under review, the cease-fire had been maintained, no complaints having been lodged by either side in this regard. The Secretary-General noted, however, that restrictions on contingents' freedom of movement still existed, and efforts to correct that situation were continuing.

As at 18 May, the strength of the Force was 1,025, with contingents drawn from Austria, Canada, Finland and Poland and including 91 military observers detailed from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO). On 21 April, Colonel Guenther G. Greindl of the Austrian contingent was designated Officer-in-Charge, pending appointment of a new Force Commander to replace Major-General Hannes Philipp, whose term of duty had ended.

The Secretary-General noted that, despite the prevailing quiet in the sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so without a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem. He expressed the hope that determined efforts would be made by all concerned to achieve a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by the Security Council in its resolution 338(1973).⁵

He considered the continued presence of UNDOF in the area to be essential and recommended that the Council extend its mandate for a further six months, until 30 November. He added that Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic had agreed to the proposed extension. The Council, by resolution 449(1979) of 30 May, renewed UNDOF's mandate for six months (see section below).

Before the mandate expired on 30 November, the Secretary-General, on 23 November, submitted a report on the activities of the Force for the period from 25 May to that date. He stated that UNDOF had continued, with the co-operation of the parties, to fulfil the tasks entrusted to it. The situation in the sector had remained quiet and there had been no serious incidents. The strength of the Force as at 23 November was 1,260, made up of contingents from Austria (538), Canada (210), Finland (389) and Poland (101), with 22 United Nations military observers detailed from UNTSO.

However, given the over-all situation in the Middle East, the Secretary-General considered the continued presence of UNDOF in the area to be essential and recommended that its mandate be extended until 31 May 1980, indicating that the Governments concerned had expressed agreement.

In a letter of 29 November, the Secretary-General informed the Council that, if it decided to extend the mandate of UNDOF, he planned, subject to Council consent, to appoint Colonel Greindl Commander of UNDOF as from 1 December. He understood that Austria intended to confer on him the rank of Major-General upon appointment. Replying on 30 November, the Council President informed the Secretary-General that Council members had considered the matter in consultations and agreed with his proposal, adding that China had dissociated itself from the matter.

Decisions of the Security Council (May and November)

On 30 May, the Council met to consider the report of the Secretary-General on UNDOF covering the period from 25 November 1978 to 24 May 1979 (see section above).

The Council had before it a draft resolution prepared in the course of consultations among the members. The text was immediately put to the vote, without debate, and adopted by 14 votes to 0, with one member (China) not participating in the vote.

By resolution 449(1979), the Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, decided to renew the mandate of UNDOF until 30 November 1979, to call on the parties concerned to implement immediately Council resolution 338(1973), and to request the Secretary-General to report in six months on measures taken to implement that resolution and on developments in the situation.

The Council President then made the following statement.

In connexion with the adoption of the resolution on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council regarding the resolution just adopted:

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states in paragraph 28 that, 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' This statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Further, on behalf of the delegation of China, I wish to state that, as it has not participated in the vote on this resolution, it takes the same position with regard to the statement which I have just read out on behalf of the members of the Council.

In a letter of 30 May, Kuwait reaffirmed the views on UNDOF it had expressed during the Council's meeting of 30 November 1978,6 reiterating that it accepted the extension of the mandate only because the Syrian Arab Republic accepted it.

The Council met again on 30 November to consider the Secretary-General's report on UNDOF covering the period from 25 May to 23 November 1979 (see section above), and a draft resolution on extension of UNDOF's mandate. The draft was adopted, without debate, by 14 votes to 0; China did not participate in the vote. By resolution 456(1979), the Council renewed UNDOF's mandate until 31 May 1980, again called for implementation of resolution 338 (1973), and asked the Secretary-General to report at the end of six months on measures taken to implement it and on developments.

The Council President then made the following statement.

In connexion with the adoption of the resolution on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council regarding the resolution just adopted:

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states in paragraph 25 that, 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' This statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Situation in the Israel-Lebanon sector

Communications and report (1-19 January)

The President of the Security Council received a number of complaints at the beginning of 1979 concerning incidents in the Israel-Lebanon sector, in which the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) was deployed to assist the Lebanese Government in re-establishing its authority in the area.

By a letter of 14 January, Israel informed him of an attack against a guest-house in the town of Ma'alot near the border with Lebanon carried out the previous day by three terrorists who were killed in subsequent fighting. One civilian woman also died, two others were wounded and a soldier was injured. Radio stations in Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic had broadcast a statement from the Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a constituent of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), taking responsibility for the attack, Israel said.

On 16 and 19 January, Kuwait transmitted letters from the Acting Observer of PLO to the United Nations concerning Israeli attacks on Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon. On 15 and 19 January, Israeli naval artillery bombarded coastal Rashidiyah and Burj ash Shamali, and another force shelled an inland area extending from Nabatiyah to Hasbani. Six persons were killed, nine wounded and several houses destroyed.

In a letter of 19 January, Yemen expressed its Government's condemnation of Israeli attacks on Palestinian refugee camps inside Lebanon on 16 and 18 January, the continued presence of Israeli military personnel in that country and interference by Israel in Lebanese domestic affairs. Yemen considered it imperative that the Council take action against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

In a letter of 12 January, the Secretary-General informed the Council that the French infantry battalion and the Iranian contingent of UNIFIL would be withdrawn. Subject to the renewal of the mandate of UNIFIL and the usual consultations, he intended to accept the offer of the Netherlands to provide an infantry battalion on 1 March and of Fiji and Nigeria to increase their contingents by 300 and 150 respectively. Replying on 17 January, the President stated that Council members agreed with the Secretary-General's proposals, although China had dissociated itself from the matter.

With the mandate of UNIFIL due to expire on 19 January, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Council on 12 January, giving an account of activities of the Force from 14 September 1978 to date.

He noted that during the period under review the UNIFIL activities had been concentrated on three objectives: to ensure that the area was not used for hostile activities and to promote a progressive return to normal conditions; to extend its deployment in the border area, which had been handed over to Lebanese de facto armed groups by the Israeli forces during the last phase of their withdrawal in June 1978; and to assist the Government of Lebanon in restoring its effective authority in the area. It had also continued to support the United Nations emergency relief and reconstruction programme for southern Lebanon (see p. 419).

⁷ For text of Chapter VII of the Charter, see APPENDIX II.

As at 12 January, the strength of UNIFIL was 5,888, with contingents drawn from Fiji, France, Iran, Ireland, Nepal, Nigeria, Norway and Senegal and including 36 military observers from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine (UNTSO). The Force continued to be commanded by Major-General Emmanuel Alexander Erskine.

A joint working group of UNIFIL and the Lebanese army was set up in December 1978 to work out ways of promoting deployment of the army in southern Lebanon. Through these efforts, in January 1979 small teams of Lebanese military personnel were attached to the UNIFIL contingents in order to represent the Lebanese Government in the area.

In the area where it had full control, UNIFIL had continued to prevent the entry of armed personnel and to provide the population with some measure of assurance and safety. However, despite energetic efforts by the Chief Co-ordinator of United Nations Peace-keeping Missions in the Middle East and the Force Commander, there had been virtually no further progress in deploying the Force in the area in the south held by de facto armed groups composed of Christian and allied militias; the Israeli authorities maintained that UNIFIL suggestions on further deployment should be discussed with Major Saad Haddad of the Lebanese de facto groups. Although it was obliged to deal with Major Haddad on a pragmatic basis, UNIFIL considered that it could not officially recognize his status or his right to control the remainder of UNIFIL's area of operation.

Incidents involving the de facto armed groups had occurred almost daily. The Secretary-General called the attention of the Council to a pattern of behaviour on the part of the de facto forces suggesting a deliberate intention to harass UNIFIL in its efforts to fulfil the tasks assigned to it by the Council in its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978.8 The Force lacked the co-operation of both the de facto groups and the Israel Defence Force. There were, in addition, a number of incidents during the reporting period involving Palestinian armed elements and Lebanese de facto forces and between Israeli forces and Palestinian elements outside the UNIFIL area of operation, as well as occasional incidents involving Palestinian and Lebanese groups and UNIFIL, mainly attempts at infiltration. On a number of occasions, UNIFIL had also observed the presence of Israeli military personnel on Lebanese territory.

The Force had reached the end of its second mandate period with the tasks assigned it unfinished. The Secretary-General added that UNIFIL performed, an essentially stabilizing function and that its premature withdrawal would inevitably disrupt the fragile peace existing in southern Lebanon. He said the Lebanese Government had informed him of its full agreement with his recommendation for a six-month extension of the Force's mandate. He reiterated that the situation in southern Lebanon could not be divorced from the situation in the rest of the country and in the region as a whole.

Consideration by the Security Council (19 January)

The Security Council met on 19 January to consider the Secretary-General's report on

At their request, Israel, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. Kuwait asked the Council, in a letter of 19 January, to invite the PLO representative to participate in the discussion. The Council President observed that the proposal had not been made pursuant to rule 379 or rule 3910 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. If approved, the invitation would confer on PLO the same rights as those conferred on Member States when invited to participate under rule 37.

At the request of the United States, the Council took a vote on the Kuwaiti proposal, which was adopted by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom).

The United States recalled that it had consistently taken the position that representatives of PLO could be granted a hearing under rule 39 but not with the same rights as a Member State. It believed that the special procedure employed was not appropriate.

Before the discussion, a draft resolution, prepared in the course of consultations among members, was adopted as resolution 444(1979) by 12 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (Czechoslovakia and the USSR). China did not participate in the voting.

By the preamble, the Council, having studied the Secretary-General's report and expressing concern over the situation in southern Lebanon, ⁸ See Y.U.N., 1978, p. 312, resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978).

⁹ Rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure reads: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter." For text of Article 35, paragraph 1, of the Charter, see APPENDIX II.

reaffirmed the necessity for strict respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Lebanon. Re-emphasizing the temporary nature of UNIFIL, the Council, by the operative paragraphs of the resolution: deplored the lack of co-operation, particularly on Israel's part, with UNIFIL's efforts to implement fully its mandate; expressed satisfaction with the declared policy of the Lebanese Government and the steps taken for deployment of its army in the south; and invited that Government to draw up, in consultation with the Secretary-General, a phased programme of activities to be carried out over the following three months to promote the restoration of its authority. Deciding to renew the mandate of UNIFIL for a period of five months, until 19 June, the Council urged all Member States in a position to do so to bring their influence to bear on those concerned so that UNIFIL could discharge its responsibilities fully and unhampered. It reaffirmed its determination, in the event of continuing obstruction of UNIFIL's mandate, to examine practical ways in accordance with the United Nations Charter to secure the full implementation of resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978.

After adoption of the resolution, the President said he was authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council.

The Security Council, after considering the report of the Secretary-General..., paid special attention, at its meeting on 19 January 1979, to the question of the restoration of the authority of the Lebanese Government over the entire territory of southern Lebanon.

The Council takes note of the recent efforts made by the Government of Lebanon to establish a presence in the southern part of the country and expresses the hope that the continuation and expansion of such activities will be encouraged.

The Council accordingly suggests that the Government of Lebanon, in consultation with the Secretary-General, should draw up a phased programme of activities to be carried out over the next three months to promote the restoration of its authority.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to report to it by 19 April 1979 on the implementation of this programme.

In a statement to the Council, the Secretary-General appealed to the parties concerned to modify their attitude so as to afford UNIFIL the cooperation necessary for it to be effective. He believed strongly that UNIFIL's success would benefit all parties and make a major contribution to peace in the area. He believed that the current situation was serious and UNIFIL's credibility was at stake.

In response to questions from Council members concerning a reported Israeli military operation in southern Lebanon early that morning, the Secretary-General said that the incident, which involved a heavy exchange of fire between armed elements to the north of the Litani River and de facto forces and Israeli forces in the south, had taken place north of the UNIFIL area and UNIFIL had not been involved in the action.

The majority of speakers considered the Secretary-General's report to be a realistic appraisal of a potentially dangerous situation. They deplored Israel's aggressive actions, which blocked the deployment of UNIFIL on the internationally recognized borders of Lebanon and made it impossible for the Force to complete its mandate.

Most members stressed the fact that UNIFIL could succeed only with the co-operation of the parties directly concerned and discussed ways of securing that co-operation. Bangladesh, France, Kuwait, Nigeria, Norway, the United Kingdom and Zambia believed that the role of UNIFIL was seriously diminished by the active harassment the Force was experiencing in southern Lebanon near the Litani River.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Norway said that full deployment of the Force would be a positive contribution to the security of all States in the region. He shared the Secretary-General's concern about harassment of UNIFIL by de facto forces—a situation that went beyond a mere lack of co-operation. The United Kingdom said that the pattern of behaviour of those forces suggested a deliberate attempt to harass UNIFIL. Bangladesh and Zambia believed that the collusion between Israeli authorities and the armed groups under Major Haddad were maintaining for Israel a de facto occupation zone in Lebanon Kuwait held a similar view: UNIFIL, instead of protecting Lebanon and assisting it to safeguard its territorial integrity and sovereignty, was being held hostage to rebels supported and controlled by Israel.

Jamaica and Portugal emphasized UNIFIL's role in restoring peace and security to its area of operation and deplored the attitude of parties that did not give the Force their full cooperation. Gabon said that the parties concerned must be made to realize that they must co operate with UNIFIL. Bangladesh, Bolivia and Kuwait also felt that pressure should be brought to bear on reluctant parties. The United King dom considered that refusal to co-operate with the peace-keeping forces threatened the fragile equilibrium in Lebanon.

Bangladesh, China, Czechoslovakia, Kuwait and the USSR felt that it was the Council's duty to condemn Israel for criminal aggression against Lebanon. Bangladesh said the Council should, have called directly on Israel to desist from interfering with UNIFIL's operations and to cease forthwith its military collaboration with the outlaw forces in the area. Czechoslovakia, Jamaica and Kuwait, among others, believed that the only way to restore peace was for Member States to exert pressure on Israel.

The USSR said it had been shown that Israel and its protégés, the anti-Government detachments under Major Haddad's command, were responsible for the continuing tension in the area. While it expressed dissatisfaction that the resolution did not contain a firm condemnation of Israel, it had not opposed its adoption because the Arab parties directly interested wanted the mandate extended. The USSR, however, confirmed its position on such questions as control of the Force by the Council, the principles for selection of national contingents and the system of financing, including its view that the costs should be borne by the aggressor. Czechoslovakia, in abstaining, also confirmed its position with regard to the finances of the Force.

The United States stressed the need for cooperation by all parties—not only by Israel and the de facto forces. It said that those who had directed the infiltration into the UNIFIL area and, through it, into Israel by armed Palestinian elements should also cease such activities.

Bangladesh, Gabon and Kuwait considered that the Council faced a problem in connexion with the renewal of UNIFIL's mandate. Gabon said it might become necessary to review either the nature of UNIFIL or its mandate. Bangladesh said that the Council should perhaps seriously consider either the withdrawal of UNIFIL or the strengthening of its mandate into an enforcement role under relevant provisions of the Charter. As matters stood, UNIFIL had no authority to use force against harassment, and its presence was being turned to the advantage of the aggressors. Kuwait expressed dissatisfaction at the renewal of the mandate of a force which, it said, was a victim of Israel's trickery, but believed that without UNIFIL's presence Israel would invent an excuse to invade the area. Meanwhile, Kuwait said, UNIFIL's task of restoring peace and security could not be carried out, thereby making the Council a party to the failure of its own decisions.

Nigeria felt it was essential to recall a cardinal aspect of the mandate—the principle of strict respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of Lebanon within its recognized boundaries—in order to avoid UNIFIL's being turned into a force for the protection of Israel's northern border.

China, which did not take part in the vote because of its position with regard to United Nations peace-keeping operations, felt that Lebanon's territorial integrity was at risk and approved of those paragraphs of the resolution condemning Israel's obstruction of the exercise of sovereignty by the Lebanese Government in southern Lebanon.

The question of the mandate's duration was discussed by Bangladesh, Bolivia, France, Jamaica, Nigeria and the United States. France said that by renewing the mandate for five months, instead of the six months that had been requested, the Council had indicated that it refused to accept the existing situation, one which endangered its authority. France could not have supported a renewed mandate carrying the implication that UNIFIL would become a permanent fixture in the region. It had accepted five months rather than the four months it favoured because of the technical difficulties a short mandate would produce for the Secretary-General and his services.

Jamaica, Nigeria and the United States would have preferred a full six-month renewal but could not accept UNIFIL's permanent presence in the area

A number of countries, including Bangladesh, China, France, Kuwait, the United Kingdom and the United States, endorsed the President's statement inviting Lebanon to undertake activities to restore its legal presence in southern Lebanon. France and Kuwait expressed approval of the initial measures taken in that connexion by Lebanon in collaboration with UNIFIL. The United Kingdom also welcomed these efforts and hoped to see in the following three months a determined attempt to extend the presence of the Lebanese Government, civilian as well as military, to the south.

Jamaica referred to the recent action by Israeli forces, as reported by the Secretary-General. That attack must be seen as outright defiance of the Council, not only because Israeli troops had crossed the UNIFIL area of operation, but also because the invasion had taken place at the height of the Council's consideration of the renewal of the Force's mandate.

Lebanon said that it would have preferred a more explicit condemnation of Israel and further strengthening of UNIFIL's effective capabilities. The latest Israeli aggression, that same morning, against Lebanon was further proof that Israel had opted for continued war in Lebanon while pretending to seek peace elsewhere. The Lebanese Government had no desire to perpetuate UNIFIL's presence, but it strongly believed that there was a clear international commitment which Israel's defiance should not be allowed to destroy. Lebanon expressed satisfaction that the resolution called for a definitive plan of action, within a limited time-frame. It felt capable of being fully associated with UNIFIL in the execution of that plan, and the Lebanese Parliament completely supported the joint action.

Israel expressed regret that the Council had so far failed to come to grips with the central issue. Instead, Israel said, it had again produced an unbalanced political resolution singling out Israel for criticism but without facing the real threat to UNIFIL in the implementation of its mandate and to international peace and security. The frequency and gravity of terrorist-instigated incidents had increased. According to Israel, armed PLO terrorists south of the Litani River threatened the inhabitants of northern Israel, the villagers of southern Lebanon and the men of UNIFIL. Israel, in striking at PLO bases, was exercising its inherent right of self-defence. Israel said it also considered the presence of Syrian forces in Lebanon a threat to the peace and security of that country.

Israel remained committed to the restoration of international peace and of genuine. Lebanese authority throughout Lebanon. To detach the question of southern Lebanon from the situation in Lebanon as a whole would not enhance the cause of peace.

The PLO representative said that his organization had co-operated with UNIFIL from the beginning, as the Secretary-General's report had made clear. It was totally committed to respect for Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. He denied that acts of the Palestinians in defence of their rights could be regarded as terrorism. In the PLO's view, Israel, for the past 30 years, had subjected the Palestinian people to criminal acts.

The Syrian Arab Republic said that the documented incidents described in the Secretary-General's report pointed to Israel as the only culprit in the Lebanese situation. Moreover, Syrian forces were in Lebanon with the express permission of the Lebanese Government, as part of the Arab Deterrent Force agreed upon by the League of Arab States.

Communications and reports (23 January-25 April)

In letters of 23 January and 11 April to the Secretary-General, the representative of Lebanon submitted new charges that Israeli forces had shelled and attacked by air villages and refugee camps in Lebanon, causing injuries and three deaths. In a letter of 8 March, he protested against an incident that had taken place on 6 March within UNIFIL's area of operation, in which a Lebanese army officer had been physically assaulted by an Israeli major, following an incident near the village of Haris involving the French battalion of UNIFIL and unidentified armed elements with the major.

Kuwait transmitted on 23 January and on 11, 24 and 25 April several letters to the President of the Security Council from the Permanent Observer or Deputy Permanent Observer of PLO: on 22 January, PLO called attention to an Israeli armoured advance and artillery and rocket bombardment of several towns and refugee camps in Lebanon; on 10 April, it called for immediate measures to halt such acts as an Israeli air force raid that day on Tyre and Damour in which five persons were killed; and on 23 and 24 April, PLO protested against Israeli naval and air force raids on those and preceding days on refugee camps in Lebanon, including northern Lebanon, resulting in several deaths, among which were women and children.

On 2 February, the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted to the Secretary-General two letters of 31 January from the PLO Deputy Permanent Observer, by one of which he reported that explosives planted in a car in Beirut by the Israeli intelligence agency, Mossad, had caused the death of the Chief of Security of the Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, four of his assistants and five civilian passers-by, and injuries to 20 others. (See also p. 382.)

In a letter of 24 January to the Council President and in letters of 16, 19 and 22 April to the Secretary-General, the Israeli representative submitted complaints of infiltration, and of indiscriminate shelling of civilian targets in Israel, causing eight Israeli deaths on 22 April by a terrorist gang, and numerous injuries and property damage during that period, committed by PLO elements operating from Lebanese territory. He listed additional incidents since the beginning of the year in which he said 17 children had been casualties of PLO outrages. (See also p. 356.)

In a special report of 19 April, the Secretary-General drew the Council's attention to incidents in which de facto forces under Major Haddad had shelled UNIFIL positions, including its headquarters at Naqoura and barracks at Tyre, on 15 and 18 April in connexion with the move of the Lebanese army contingent into southern Lebanon. In an exchange of fire, a UNIFIL soldier was killed, eight UNIFIL members were wounded by shelling, and buildings and vehicles were damaged.

In an interim report of the same date, submitted pursuant to resolution 444(1979) (see preceding section), the Secretary-General informed the Council on the phased programme of activities to promote restoration of the authority of the Lebanese Government in southern Lebanon, and described the situation in UNIFIL's area of operation where the number of incidents—infiltration attempts, hijacking of vehicles and firing—involving UNIFIL with armed elements and de facto forces had increased during the review period. There had been numerous breaches of the cease-fire by armed elements deployed west and north of the UNIFIL area, by the de facto forces under Major Haddad and, on occasion, by Israeli forces.

On 3 February, two Fijian soldiers had been killed and four wounded in an attack on UNIFIL positions in the Qana area, and four members of a Norwegian medical team had been killed in a helicopter crash. A French soldier had been killed and two wounded in a small-arms attack on UNIFIL headquarters on 29 March. There had been 200 recorded border violations by Israeli military personnel up to 8 April, as well as airspace violations, heavy exchanges of fire between Lebanese de facto forces and armed elements north of the Litani River, and several incidents involving Israeli forces and Palestinian armed elements outside the UNIFIL area of operation.

Efforts had been concentrated on the first phase of the programme of activities in the south, which included four points: (a) the increase of the presence of civilian administration by the Lebanese Government, including reinforcement of the Lebanese gendarmerie; (b) the further deployment of Lebanese military personnel; (c) the intensification of United Nations and UNIFIL efforts to consolidate the cease-fire and to end harassment by the de facto forces; and (d) intensified efforts to secure further deployment of UNIFIL and control of the border area, placing special emphasis on enlisting the co-operation of the Government of Israel.

The Secretary-General observed that little progress had been achieved on the basis of the above plan, as Major Haddad had expressed strong opposition to the move of the Lebanese army contingent into southern Lebanon and had threatened to fire on UNIFIL and Lebanese army units if the proposed move took place.

In response to diplomatic efforts, Israel agreed to co-operate with UNIFIL to facilitate the planned move. On 17 April, the Lebanese army contingent left Beirut, arrived in southern Lebanon early the following morning and was deployed in the UNIFIL area.

The Secretary-General viewed the situation with anxiety, observing that UNIFIL was blocked in fully implementing its mandate and, by force of circumstances, was playing a role substantially different from the role it was set up to play; nevertheless it was performing an invaluable task in bringing calm to a sorely affected area.

In a letter of 25 April, the representative of Lebanon, drawing the Council's attention to the grave situation resulting from what he said was Israel's obstruction of the implementation of the phased programme of activities called for in resolution 444(1979), requested a meeting of the Council to examine the Secretary-General's special and interim reports of 19 April.

Consideration by the Security Council (26 April)

The Security Council met without formal debate on 26 April in response to Lebanon's request of 25 April.

The President referred to extensive consultations that had been held with the members of the Council and other interested parties, as a result of which he had been authorized to make the following statement on behalf of the Council members.

The Security Council has studied the Secretary-General's interim report on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, circulated on 19 April 1979..., in accordance with the request made by the Council at its 2113th meeting, on 19 January 1979.

On behalf of members of the Council, I wish to state that they are following with the deepest concern the significant increase of tension in the area, particularly during the past months, and that they share the Secretary-General's anxiety over the present situation in which the Force is unable fully to implement its mandate. I wish to express to the Secretary-General the satisfaction and appreciation we feel for the efforts that he has undertaken towards the full implementation of Council resolution 425(1978),¹¹ and also to commend most highly the performance of the officers and men of the Force under the most difficult circumstances. If for any reason the Force were to be eroded, a highly dangerous and volatile situation would inevitably arise in the area.

Members of the Security Council share the views expressed in the Secretary-General's report about what should still be done towards the full implementation of the objectives of resolution 425(1978) and emphasize in this connexion the importance of the deployment of the Force in all parts of southern Lebanon.

The Security Council expresses its special satisfaction at actions taken by the Government of Lebanon and in particular the deployment of the Lebanese army contingent under the "phased programme of activities." Members of the Council consider that the continuation of such efforts, called for by the resolutions of the Council, should ultimately lead to the return of the effective authority of the Government of Lebanon over all its territory. In this respect, the Council reiterates its call for strict respect for the territorial integrity, unity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. Members of the Council consider that all measures should be taken urgently towards the implementation of the "phased programme of activities," and particularly such measures as are deemed necessary to ensure the safety of the Force and of its headquarters. If such measures are not taken and, a fortiori, if further serious incidents occur, they feel that the Council should meet without delay to consider the situation.

Communications and report (30 April-15 May)

By a letter of 30 April to the Council President, the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted the text of a telegram of 25 April from the Chairman of PLO to the Secretary-General, charging that for five consecutive days the Palestinian and Lebanese people in southern Lebanon had been subjected to a war of elimination carried out by Israeli forces by air, ground and sea, using all manner of destructive weapons given them by the United States.

In a letter of 1 May to the Council President, Israel expressed support for the objective set out in his statement of 26 April (see preceding section) regarding the return of the Lebanese Government's effective authority over all its territory, and charged that that objective could not be realized unless the foreign domination of Lebanon imposed by Syrian and PLO forces was withdrawn.

In a letter of 2 May, Lebanon inquired of the Council President what measures had been taken towards urgent implementation of the phased programme of activities. If none had been taken, Lebanon felt it was imperative that the Council should meet without delay to take appropriate measures.

Referring to the Syrian role in Lebanon, in a letter of 4 May to the President, the Syrian representative stated that his country was committed to one Lebanon and his Government's forces were there in response to an appeal by the Lebanese Government and people and as part of the Arab Deterrent Force under the direct command of the Lebanese Government, which had the full right to decide on the duration of its mission in Lebanon.

By letters dated 30 April and 8 May, Kuwait transmitted to the President letters of 27 April and 7 May from the Permanent Observer of PLO, complaining of the use against civilians on 18 April and since then of a type of artillery weapon known as the fragmentation shell, causing scores of deaths, hundreds of injured and heavy damage, and of aerial bombardment by Israeli forces on 6 May of Lebanese villages and Palestinian refugee camps in southern Lebanon.

In a letter of 7 May to the President, Lebanon, referring to the increasing difficulties encountered by UNIFIL, said it was imperative that the Council consider taking further steps in accordance with the Charter to implement fully resolution 425(1978), towards which the phased programme was only a first step. The programme of activities had not been carried through because of forceful opposition, and Israel's responsibility in this regard had been proved. The measures called for by the Council on 26 April concerning UNIFIL's safety were only a first step towards completing the programme, which should give the Force full freedom of movement in the border areas. Beyond the programme, UNIFIL must acquire control of the so-called enclave, up to the internationally recognized boundaries.

Lebanon felt that UNIFIL should have a greater military credibility. It hoped that the Council would find a way to redefine UNIFIL's mission in a manner guaranteeing the implementation of resolution 425(1978), and asked that its letter be submitted for Council consideration at the earliest possible time. Lebanon charged that Israeli military personnel were still inside Lebanon, that they exercised a determining influence in the border area and that their continued use of the so-called de facto Christian forces, which were equipped, financed and controlled by Israel, remained a major obstacle to implementation of the Council's resolutions and restoration of Lebanese national sovereignty.

By a letter of 9 May to the Secretary-General, the representative of Sri Lanka transmitted a communiqué issued that day by the Coordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, condemning Israel for its continued violation of the territorial integrity of Lebanon. The Bureau also expressed concern for the safety of UNIFIL and called on the Security Council to take steps to end Israeli aggression and restore Lebanese authority over its territory.

On the same date, and again on 14 May, Israel submitted to the Council President charges of a series of terrorist activities in Israeli territory over the preceding six months carried out by PLO elements operating from Lebanon, where, it asserted, some 14,000 to 16,000 armed terrorists were to be found, several hundred of them inside the UNIFIL area of operation. Their criminal activities had resulted in the deaths of 17 civilians and the injury of 240 others. It was time, Israel continued, for every effort to be made to achieve a negotiated peace between Israel and Lebanon. To that end, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin had on 7 May in a Knesset address made a direct appeal to President Elias Sarkis of Lebanon, inviting him to discuss a peace treaty between their two countries. The 14 May letter charged that a PLO explosion in Tiberias that day had killed two persons and wounded 32 others.

in a special report on UNIFIL of 9 May, the Secretary-General informed the Council of an incursion that morning by Israeli troops and tanks into the UNIFIL area of operation in the vicinity of the village of Shaqra. The Force had lodged a strong protest. Subsequently, de facto forces had appeared, and Major Haddad, with two Israel Defence Force officers, had asked to search some houses that they suspected were occupied by armed elements, which, they said, had raided the Israeli village of Ramin the night before. Their request was refused by the UNIFIL Commander. Soldiers of the UNIFIL Irish battalion had then searched two houses but found nothing. Following further discussions, the Israeli forces had withdrawn.

Consideration by the Security Council (15 May)

The Council met without formal debate on 15 May to consider Lebanon's letter of 7 May (see preceding section).

The Council President made the following statement as a result of consultations held with Council members.

Since the President's statement was read out to the Council on 26 April 1979, grave events have occurred in southern Lebanon which have merely served to show the precarious and fragile situation in that area. That the situation is not even worse is due largely to. the presence of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, whose forces are trying to fulfil their mandate in extremely difficult conditions and with an exemplary dedication admired by us all. This was particulary underlined in the report of the Secretary-General to the Council of 9 May 1979....

In view of the gravity of these events, the Government of Lebanon has decided to request the Council to give further consideration to the situation and has accordingly addressed to me the letter contained in [the letter of 7 May 1979 from Lebanon].

Members have been informed of the steps taken in recent days under the auspices of the Council to secure a rapid improvement in that situation. These efforts seem to have produced some results. Talks have resumed between the representatives of the United Nations and the Government of Israel on various points that it is essential to try to settle if the Force is to carry out its mandate successfully.

These talks must be pursued with perseverance but in an atmosphere conducive to the full implementation of resolutions 425(1978) and 444(1979).

As it has done since the events that led to the establishment of the Force, the Council is following the situation with the deepest attention and concern.

I am confident that the Council will be meeting at an early date to debate this question and to take any action warranted by developments in the situation.

In the absence of any objections to this line of action, the President of the Council will proceed with his present diplomatic efforts.

Communications (16-30 May)

In a letter of 16 May, Israel, referring to the statement by the Council President, informed him that the Israeli Government supported the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon, and reiterated that the situation in southern Lebanon could not be detached from the situation in the country as a whole. It asserted that PLO constituted a menace not only to Israel, UNIFIL and the citizens of southern Lebanon, but also to the restoration of Lebanese authority in the south where there were some 2,000 armed PLO terrorists. That restoration, it said, was also hampered by the presence of the Syrian army.

On 17 May, Lebanon transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a resolution adopted at the Tenth Conference of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Islamic States, held at Fez, Morocco, between 8 and 12 May. The Conference had strongly condemned Israeli acts of aggression in Lebanon, called for measures to end them and apply sanctions, and called on the Security Council to enforce its resolutions regarding southern Lebanon.

In letters of 24 and 29 May to the Secretary-General, Lebanon charged that Israeli warplanes, ships and artillery had again attacked towns, villages and refugee camps in southern Lebanon on 23 May, causing deaths, injuries and material damage.

On 25 May, Kuwait transmitted to the Council President a letter of the preceding day to the Secretary-General from the PLO Permanent Observer, charging that on 22 and 23 May Israeli aircraft, ships and artillery had caused 11 deaths, numerous injuries and destruction in Palestinian refugee camps and settlements in southern Lebanon, and had seized a merchant vessel flying a Panamanian flag.

By a letter of 30 May, Lebanon transmitted a memorandum to the Council, proposing: a review of the question of southern Lebanon; the revival of the Israel-Lebanon Mixed Armistice Commission (ILMAC) and creation of conditions that would make it operationally more effective; respect for the General Armistice Agreement of 22 March 1949 between israel and Lebanon; 12 and a redefinition of the mandate and prerogatives of UNIFIL, so as to assure its freedom of deployment, secure Israel's total and unconditional withdrawal, and restore the territorial sovereignty of Lebanon.

On the same date, Lebanon requested the Council President to call an urgent meeting to discuss the rapidly deteriorating situation in southern Lebanon resulting from escalation of Israeli attacks.

Consideration by the Security Council (31 May)

The Security Council met on 31 May in response to Lebanon's request of 30 May.

The representatives of Israel and Lebanon, at their request, were invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. On a proposal by Kuwait, the Council also decided, by 10 votes to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom), to invite the PLO representative to participate in the discussion in accordance with the procedure established at a previous meeting (see p. 322). The United States, which had requested the vote, reiterated its position: it was prepared to agree to a hearing of PLO's representative only under rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. ¹³

In a statement to the Council, the Secretary-General reported that since 26 May there had been a heavy daily exchange of artillery and mortar fire between the de facto forces and armed elements situated in the Tyre pocket, and to the north of the Litani River. Some of the de facto forces' fire had been directed at targets in the UNIFIL area of operation, causing casualties among the civilian population and the destruction of some UNIFIL buildings. As a result, the inhabitants of the area were in a state of extreme disturbance, and that had inevitably shaken their confidence in UNIFIL.

The reason given by Major Haddad for shelling targets in the UNIFIL area was that firing was being directed at de facto forces from inside that area—an allegation that was totally rejected by UNIFIL in a public statement on 30 May. All firing ceased on the morning of 31 May, the armed elements and de facto forces agreeing to the cease-fire.

The Secretary-General was deeply concerned at the prevailing situation. He had no doubt that, if the cease-fire was not maintained, the exodus of the civilian population would increase, as would the risk of loss of life both to the population and to UNIFIL personnel. The Secretary-General noted that there had been continous efforts aimed at further deployment of the Force in the whole of its area of operation.

The representative of Lebanon, after reviewing the efforts undertaken since 15 May to create better conditions for implementation of relevant Council resolutions, asked the Council to issue an injunction to end all acts of hostility against Lebanon and all Israeli violation of its sovereignty, to make a strong and determined effort to fulfil the mandate of UNIFIL, and to restore immediately the General Armistice Agreement of 1949, which he considered to be the only valid framework for peace in southern Lebanon.

Lebanon was prepared to discuss a resolution which would articulate those proposals. However, should hostilities continue and Israel persist in its defiance, Lebanon felt strongly that a condemnation of that country would become imperative, as would the search for new avenues provided for by the Charter. Only peace, not further violence, could bring an end to the Palestinian dispersion—a "Diaspora-in-revolt"—the representative said. The Christians in southern Lebanon were first and foremost Lebanese citizens. They should not be considered accessories to Israel's strategic interest. Their future depended on Lebanon's restored independence and sovereignty, and their security was best guaranteed by UNIFIL.

The representative of Israel reiterated that his Government. supported the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. According to Israel, PLO terrorist groups were responsible for the situation in southern Lebanon. In the preceding few months, there had been a marked escalation in criminal acts against Israel perpetrated from Lebanese territory. In those circumstances, Israel was compelled to exercise its inherent right of self-defence. Its actions were specifically directed against concentrations of terrorists in Lebanon. Unfortunately, for years those terrorists had chosen to take cover behind refugees in camps and Lebanese civilians in towns and villages throughout that country.

The PLO representative said that Israel had distorted the facts. His organization was committed to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon. The Palestinians were not in Lebanon by choice; they were there because they had been expelled from their homes and property in Palestine and supplanted by immigrants., In PLO's view, the destruction of the Palestinian nation was the greatest act of terror committed in recent history. No other people was as interested in peace, because no other people had suffered as long. For the sake of peace, the Palestinians would continue to struggle until their rights were restored. It was their right to fight against the illegal occupation of their land.

Ninety-nine per cent of the victims of Israeli air attacks were civilians, according to PLO, and the aeroplanes and weapons used were made in the United States.

Communications and report (31 May-11 June)

In a letter of 31 May, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of Norway's decision to withdraw its helicopter unit from UNIFIL at the end of the current mandate. He intended to accept the offer of the Italian Government to provide a replacement unit, subject to the usual consultations.

The Council President informed him on 7 June that, following informal consultations that day, Council members agreed with his proposals. China had dissociated itself from the matter.

In a letter of 5 June, Israel informed the Secretary-General that on 4 June, in Israeli waters, an Israeli navy coastal patrol had intercepted and sunk a speedboat armed with missiles and a floating rocket-launcher. Israel also reported similar terrorist acts, and others, against Israeli civilians in April and May, for which PLO had claimed responsibility.

By a letter of 6 June, Kuwait transmitted a letter of 25 May to the Secretary-General from the Chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, charging that the Israeli air force had attacked two villages south of Beirut, inflicting heavy casualties on Lebanese and Palestinian civilians, and had continued attacks by land, sea and air against southern Lebanon.

In a letter of 11 June to the Secretary-General, the representative of Lebanon complained that Israeli war-planes had been overflying Beirut and other areas of Lebanon for seven consecutive days. Shelling was also continuing. He submitted a list of 12 incidents that had occurred in Lebanon between 6 and 10 June, after the latest cease-fire of 31 May.

In a report of 8 June, before expiration of UNIFIL's mandate on 19 June, the Secretary-General gave an account of the activities of the Force during the period from 13 January to date. Contacts with the parties had been maintained both at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and in the area. The deployment of a Lebanese army battalion in the UNIFIL area of operation and an increase of Lebanese civilian administrative personnel in southern Lebanon represented important steps towards restoring Lebanese authority and sovereignty.

Despite all efforts, however, a stalemate had persisted since mid-April, aggravated by heightened tension in the area. Continued representations to the Israeli authorities had thus far failed to achieve the change of position required for a significant improvement in UNIFIL's deployment.

Incidents involving Lebanese and Palestinian armed elements and UNIFIL, mostly attempts at infiltration, had significantly increased during the five months under review: UNIFIL had reported 291 border violations.

There had, however, been certain developments that might lead to a relaxation of tension. The PLO leadership had reaffirmed its commitment not to initiate any action from inside the UNIFIL area of operation and had stated that it would not shell Israel Defence Force or de facto force targets from Lebanese territory unless first attacked. A joint communiqué issued by PLO and allied Lebanese parties stated that all armed forces would be evacuated from villages and towns and that PLO offices would be removed from Tyre.

The Secretary-General again emphasized the indispensable function performed by UNIFIL in bringing calm to the area and in reducing the threat to international peace and security. For that reason, he recommended the extension of UNIFIL's mandate for a further six months and said that the Lebanese Government had informed him of its agreement with that recommendation.

The Secretary-General reiterated his view that UNIFIL could not continue to function without an adequate security zone around its Naqoura headquarters, cessation of harassment of the civilian population and UNIFIL by the de facto forces, a change in the Israeli authorities' position and continuation of the over-all cooperation of PLO.

Consideration by the Security Council (12 and 14 June)

On 12 June, the Security Council resumed its debate on the complaint by Lebanon of 30 May and its consideration of the 25 May letter from Kuwait annexing PLO's communication of 24 May, the letter from Lebanon of 11 June and the Secretary-General's report of 8 June concerning the UNIFIL operation.

In addition to Israel, Lebanon and PLO, the Council invited the representatives of Egypt, Iran, Ireland, Jordan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, the Netherlands and the Syrian Arab Republic, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

The Secretary-General said that since his report there had been renewed exchanges of fire between Palestinian armed elements near Beaufort Castle and de facto forces in the Marjayoun area, and air raids by Israel against targets north of the UNIFIL area of operation.

While recommending extension of the mandate, the Secretary-General re-emphasized the conditions essential to UNIFIL's functioning: an adequate security zone around its headquarters; cessation of harassment; a change in Israel's position; and continued PLO co-operation. Unless those conditions were met, there was no real possibility for the Force to complete its mandate, and it might even become necessary to envisage withdrawal of the Force, despite all the dangers that would entail.

With regard to the financial aspect of the UNIFIL operation, the Secretary-General found it regrettable that the troop-contributing countries could not expect anything near the reimbursement to which they were entitled. He appealed to all United Nations Member Governments to consider urgently what measures they could take to alleviate that burden.

Most speakers, including those from Bangladesh, China, Czechoslovakia, France, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR, the United Kingdom and Zambia, believed that the deteriorating situation and the erosion of UNIFIL's authority and credibility were due to Israel's policy and its unwillingness to cooperate with the United Nations, and that the completion of UNIFIL's mandate was contingent on a basic change in Israel's attitude. Ireland noted that UNIFIL was chiefly obstructed in the exercise of its mandate by the de facto forces supported by Israel. The United States also felt that Israel had not co-operated fully with UNIFIL, and could not accept a-situation in which UNIFIL was constantly harassed by forces supplied and assisted by Israel. However, it felt that the Arab world must assist Lebanon in requiring Palestinian extremist elements in Lebanon to cease their activities against Israel. France expressed the hope that Israel would adopt an attitude more in accord with Council decisions and the interests of peace.

Kuwait believed that the only way to make Israel change its attitude was through the intervention of the United States. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya expressed regret that Israel's aggressive policy was encouraged by the support it received from the United States. The Syrian Arab Republic believed that Israel, encouraged by its separate peace treaty with Egypt, would continue to defy the Council's authority. Iran said that the basic issue was whether the community of nations was going to allow the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a Member State, Lebanon, to be flagrantly and repeatedly violated.

Arab States, supported by Bangladesh, Nigeria and the USSR, believed that the escalation of Israel's attacks demanded prompt Council action, including Charter measures, and supported a sixmonth extension of UNIFIL's mandate.

China strongly condemned Israel, believing that the Middle East question could only be solved by forcing Israel to withdraw from all occupied Arab territories and by restoring the national rights of the Palestinian people. Bangladesh, Bolivia, Egypt, Iran, Nigeria and the Syrian Arab Republic agreed with the view that the solution for Lebanon was linked to the entire problem of the Middle East and involved a settlement of the Palestinian question.

The Syrian Arab Republic believed that the Council should redefine UNIFIL's mandate to enable the Force to carry it out. It believed that UNIFIL should be empowered to defend itself when attacked by Israeli or de facto forces. It also agreed with the Lebanese proposal to reactivate ILMAC, in order to find out who was in fact violating the cease-fire agreement and crossing international borders.

Bangladesh, France, Jamaica, Kuwait, Lebanon, the Netherlands, Portugal and the United Kingdom welcomed PLO's decision to withdraw its armed forces from towns and villages in Lebanon and the reaffirmation of its commitment not to attack first. Jamaica said that action represented a positive development which took into account the welfare of the Lebanese people and could significantly help to restore peace in Lebanon if matched by a corresponding commitment from the other parties. Jamaica and the United Kingdom believed that it was in Israel's best interests to co-operate with UNIFIL and expressed concern that Israel planned to continue its policy of pre-emptive strikes against PLO bases. Kuwait said that Israel's response to PLO's gesture had been to intensify its campaign against the Palestinians.

The United States said it was not aware that PLO's commitment to reduce violence in southern Lebanon had actually been carried out and hoped that the promised withdrawal would, in fact, take place.

The PLO representative said that the position of his organization on UNIFIL was one of full cooperation in order to allow it. to implement its mandate. The previous week, on 5 June, PLO and the Lebanese national movement had adopted a declaration that would facilitate UNIFIL's work and accommodate the Lebanese Government. Among essential points of that declaration, the PLO had declared that it would withdraw all resistance offices from Tyre and all armed forces from villages and towns in southern Lebanon. Israel, he said, had responded to that gesture by air raids on Lebanese and Palestinians.

Certain conditions had to be established for peace to be achieved, the PLO representative said: total Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories; recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to self-determination and national independence; and a just solution of the Palestine refugee problem. He said PLO considered that the Camp David accords concluded between Israel and Egypt in 1978¹⁴ and the peace treaty which followed in March 1979 denied self-determination to Palestinians by legitimizing Israeli occupation of territories it had seized in 1967.

In Israel's opinion, the sole purpose of the joint communique issued by PLO and its Lebanese allies was to serve as a smoke-screen for continued PLO violence both within UNIFIL's area of operation and across the border with Israel. The so-called PLO commitment not to attack first, Israel charged, was carefully phrased so as not to apply to civilians, its usual target. Israel believed that Lebanon's problems had begun with the presence of PLO. Subsequently, the Syrian Arab Republic had invaded Lebanon under the pretext of aiding its Government against PLO and restoring peace. In Israel's view, there could be no peace in Lebanon while a Syrian occupation army threatened Beirut, and armed PLO terrorists were allowed' on Lebanese territory. Israel appealed to the Council to face the problem of Lebanon with realism; there should be a forthright condemnation of PLO's flagrant violation of UNIFIL's mandate.

Israel said it was exercising its inherent right of self-defence. If States were unwilling or unable to prevent terrorists from operating out of their countries, they should be prepared for reprisals.

The 1949 Israeli-Lebanese General Armistice Agreement had been renounced by Lebanon in 1967, the Israeli representative charged, and Israel felt it was time to move towards a negotiated peace. It awaited Lebanon's answer to the peace proposal the Israeli Prime Minister had made on 7 May. He reiterated that Israel was prepared to co-operate with UNIFIL, and its position vis-à-vis Lebanon remained unchanged: Israel supported the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries.

Lebanon observed that the Israeli Prime Minister's offer to Lebanon to negotiate a peace treaty, under which Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic would absorb and resettle stateless Palestinian refugees, was unacceptable to Lebanon and could only be viewed as a diversionary tactic.

Egypt said that the self-defence pretexts advanced by Israel to justify its attacks against Lebanon had no validity. Egypt had condemned such actions as undermining efforts aimed at achieving a just peace in the Middle East, which depended on the resolution of the Palestinian problem. Sincere efforts in that direction were necessary, particularly on the part of Israel. Egypt and France held that Israel had no legitimate reason to cross an international border.

Jordan said that the occupation of parts of Lebanese territory by the de facto forces was a cover for Israel's presence there; one of their aims was to control the headwaters of the Jordan River and parts of the Litani River to ensure that Israel had an ample water supply. Kuwait also charged that the water supply of the Palestinians in Lebanon was being diverted to illegal Jewish settlements.

On 14 June, the Council voted on a draft resolution, prepared in the course of consultations among Council members, which it adopted as resolution 450(1979) by 12 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (Czechoslovakia and the USSR). China did not participate in the voting.

By the resolution, the Council renewed the mandate of UNIFIL for six months, until 19 December. The Council reaffirmed in the preamble its call for the strict respect for the territorial integrity, unity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. Convinced that the situation had serious implications for peace in the Middle East, it expressed anxiety about the obstacles to the full deployment of UNIFIL and the threats to the Force's safety and freedom of movement.

By the operative paragraphs, the Council: strongly deplored acts of violence against Lebanon; called on Israel to cease forthwith its acts against the territorial integrity, unity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon, in particular its assistance to irresponsible armed groups; called on all parties concerned to cooperate for the fulfilment of the objectives of UNIFIL; reaffirmed the validity of the 1949 General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Lebanon and called on the parties to take the necessary steps to reactivate ILMAC and ensure full respect for the safety and freedom of action of UNTSO; urged all Member States in a position to do so to bring their influence to bear so that UNIFIL could discharge its responsibilities fully and unhampered; and reaffirmed its determination, in the event of continuing obstruction of UNIFIL's mandate, to examine practical ways, in accordance with the United Nations Charter, to secure the full implementation of resolution 425(1978).

Speaking after the vote, Israel welcomed the renewal of the mandate but categorically rejected the political elements of the resolution. It felt that the text ignored the loss of innocent Israeli lives, and it rejected the implication that Israel had endangered the territorial integrity of Lebanon, which had been undermined by PLO and Syrian forces. It also rejected the reference to the 1949 Armistice Agreement.

The USSR said it had abstained in the voting because of its position regarding UNIFIL, including questions concerning the direction of UNIFIL by the Council, the principles governing the recruitment of national contingents and the method of financing the Force. The USSR said it wished to reaffirm that all expenditure incurred as a result of Israel's aggression against Lebanon should be borne by the aggressor.

Taking into account Lebanon's position, Czechoslovakia said it would not object to UNIFIL's extension. However, for the record, its position and reservations with regard to the Force had to be reaffirmed.

The United States said it considered that the Armistice Agreement remained in force and supported it as one way for the two Governments to remain in contact. However, the United States considered that the paragraph by which the Council deplored acts of violence against Lebanon lacked balance, since it did not deplore such acts against Israeli citizens. Norway said it also would have liked a more balanced formulation, to include all forms of violence.

Kuwait and the USSR expressed regret that the resolution did not contain a stronger condemnation of Israel.

Communications (17 June-28 August)

In letters of 17 and 25 June to the Secretary-General, Israel charged that an officer of the Nigerian contingent of UNIFIL had been arrested in Israel on 15 June on charges of smuggling arms into Israel for PLO, and charged PLO with shelling the civilian population of northern Galilee in Israel on 8, 9, 10 and 19 June, adding that PLO's so-called renewed commitment not to attack first and the joint communique promising withdrawals were an exercise in deception.

By letters of 27 and 28 June and 3 July, Kuwait transmitted letters of 25 and 27 June from the Permanent Observer of PLO to the Council President and a letter of 29 June to the Secretary-General, charging that Israel had carried out 76 consecutive days of air and naval attacks and heavy artillery bombardment against civilian targets and refugee camps in southern Lebanon, which had resulted in the loss of lives, material damage and a mass exodus of the population from the region.

In a letter of 28 June to the Secretary-General, France cited a declaration on the situation in the Middle East issued by the nine members of the European Community on 18 June in Paris, in which they expressed support for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and concern over the difficulties encountered by UNIFIL in the execution of its mandate. (See also p. 363.)

In letters of 11 July and 6 August to the Council President and of 23 July to the Secretary-General, Lebanon charged that, since the adoption of resolution 450(1979) on 14 June, Israel had consistently flouted all United Nations decisions and had engaged in almost daily harassment in the UNIFIL area of operation and other parts of southern Lebanon, causing many casualties and deaths and extensive property damage. A number of incidents that had occurred since 22 July were enumerated, and Lebanon protested very strongly against these acts of aggression.

On 20 August, Kuwait transmitted a letter of 15 August to the Council President from the Permanent Observer of PLO, who charged that Israel had intensified its attacks in southern Lebanon, with the moral and material encouragement of the United States.

In a letter of 20 August to the Secretary-General, Israel listed several incidents in August involving interception of sea-borne invaders and detonations of explosive devices which it attributed to PLO's campaign of violence waged from Lebanon, aimed at subverting the ongoing peace process in the Middle East.

In two letters of 22 August to the Secretary-General, Lebanon complained that Israel had committed acts of aggression against Lebanon, shelling and raiding villages on 19, 21 and 22 August. Many Lebanese children had been wounded and five killed, as a result of indiscriminate bombardment.

On 24 August, Lebanon requested the President to convene an urgent meeting of the Security Council, in view of the continued escalation of violence and the loss of civilian lives resulting from Israeli attacks and shelling of Lebanese territory, in progress along a wide front. The Lebanese Government felt it was imperative to ask the Council to take appropriate measures, including the imposition of sanctions on Israel, in order to end its aggression against Lebanon.

In a letter dated 28 August, Lebanon said that events of the preceding week had reached the danger point. It requested that measures be taken urgently to ensure the safety, integrity and freedom of movement of UNIFIL by providing the Force with weapons and equipment of a defensive character, to reconsider the definition of the area of operation of UNIFIL, to increase the number of UNTSO posts and personnel on the border with Israel, and to reactivate ILMAC.

On the same day, Lebanon again requested a meeting of the Security Council at the earliest possible date in order to help consolidate a de facto cease-fire reached locally through United Nations efforts.

In a note verbale of 13 August, the Secretary-General informed the Council President that Ghana had offered a battalion of 600 men to replace the Iranian battalion withdrawn from UNIFIL in January. He noted that it was his intention, subject to the usual consultations, to accept that offer. Replying on 15 August, the President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members had agreed to his proposal. China had dissociated itself from the matter.

Consideration by the Security Council (29 and 30 August)

On 29 August, the Council met again, at the request of Lebanon, to discuss the prevailing situation. Ireland, Israel, Lebanon, the Netherlands and the Syrian Arab Republic were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. At the request of Kuwait, PLO was also invited to take part in accordance with the procedure established at previous meetings, following a statement by the United States, which again objected to the manner in which the invitation was formulated in terms of the rules of procedure and asked that the matter be put to a vote. The vote was 12 to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom).

The Council President recalled that, at a Council meeting on 24 August (see p. 364), after having received-reports of intense military activity in recent days in southern Lebanon, he had appealed for restraint by all concerned so that the hostilities might be stopped.

He conveyed information received from the Secretariat on the most recent events in the area. Acts of violence since 14 August, including ambushing, shooting and shelling, had taken the lives of three UNIFIL soldiers from the Fijian contingent and severely wounded several others. A cessation of hostilities—a de facto cease-fire in which opposing forces, while not all agreed to a cease-fire, stopped shooting—had finally been arrived at on 26 August, except for minor outbreaks of firing. He appealed to all parties to exercise maximum restraint and to give the current cease-fire a chance to become permanently effective.

In a statement to the Council, the Secretary-General said that, while he fully understood the preoccupation of the Israeli Government with security, he did not believe that the policy of preemptive strikes on targets in Lebanon was acceptable or indeed justified by the prevailing circumstances. The recent bombardments had been on a scale that had caused much loss of innocent lives, a new wave of refugees and the destruction of property and normal living conditions.

Lebanon stated that it was not asking the Council for yet another resolution. What it wanted was a reconsideration of the United Nations peace-keeping operation—that UNIFIL be provided with the necessary instruments to enable it to fulfil its mandate, and that its area of operation and methods of deployment be redefined in the light of developments on the ground. Lebanon also wanted an increase in the number of UNTSO observers and the reactivation of ILMAC. These actions would give Lebanon added leverage and credibility in implementing such security measures as had been blocked by the continued deterioration of the situation in the south. Lebanon emphasized that peace in Lebanon could not wait for a comprehensive settlement of the entire Middle East problem.

In Israel's view, the Council had been convened merely to find a scapegoat for Lebanon's problems and a way to avoid facing up to them directly. According to Israel, the problem of Lebanon lay in its occupation by two foreign elements: the Syrian Arab Republic, which had deployed 30,000 men there, and PLO, with between 10,000 and 15,000. Until that occupation ended, the Council could do nothing. Israel asserted that PLO was an instrument in the hands of certain Arab States, particularly Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic. In those circumstances, Israel had no choice but to move into Lebanon to prevent the launching of acts of terror by PLO. Israel reminded Lebanon of the peace proposals made by its Prime Minister on 7 May, and reaffirmed its desire to co-operate with UNIFIL in the implementation of its mandate in all its parts.

The PLO representative said that Palestinian support for Lebanon's sovereignty was a matter of record, as was PLO's co-operation with UNIFIL. It had, in fact, implemented its declaration of 5 June. However, soon after the withdrawal of its military personnel from towns and villages in the south, the area had been subjected to heavy bombardment. Israeli attacks on southern Lebanon were therefore not in response to Palestinian violence, as had been claimed.

The need to make UNIFIL more effective was discussed by Council representatives. Bangladesh, Bolivia, France, Nigeria, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom felt that the Lebanese proposals for strengthening UNIFIL merited careful consideration. France said it was necessary to tighten the security of UNIFIL and its headquarters and was in favour of a study of means of improving the Force's defensive equipment. Nigeria believed that consultations should begin as soon as possible on the matter. Norway was prepared to consider the idea of raising the ceiling set for the strength of the Force.

Bolivia, Ireland and Norway stressed that it was not the basic structure of UNIFIL that prevented it from fulfilling its mandate but the refusal of many parties to co-operate with it in the maintenance of peace.

China, Kuwait, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR and Zambia said that Israel and its policies were to blame for the current situation. Kuwait and the USSR expressed the view that United States support for Israel was also responsible.

The representative of the United States said that Israel's military policies in Lebanon, as manifested in the preceding few months, were wrong and unacceptable to his Government. He condemned both terrorist attacks against Israeli civilians and pre-emptive attacks on Lebanese towns, villages and refugee camps carried out by Israel and the Lebanese groups it supported. In order to break the prevailing deadlock of terror and counter-terror, both sides should co-operate with UNIFIL, Israel should end pre-emptive strikes, and the Palestinian leadership should renounce the use of Lebanese territory to carry out attacks against Israel.

The Netherlands, Portugal, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Kingdom and Zambia deprecated Israel's policy of pre-emptive strikes. The Syrian Arab Republic said that the strategy against the civilian population had been confirmed as Government policy by Israel. The time had come for the Council to act decisively to end Israel's policy of aggression. Bangladesh and Kuwait said the Council should apply pressure on Israel, including sanctions under the Charter.

The USSR charged that Israel had shown no intention of implementing the many Council decisions calling for strict observance of Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity and commented that Israel's attacks against Lebanon had become increasingly provocative following the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty on 26 March. It was the view of the USSR that the policy of separate deals would never lead to a durable peace in the Middle East. Such peace could only result from the complete withdrawal of Israeli troops from the territory occupied in 1967, the implementation of the rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to establish an independent State, and the right of all States to live within the area boundaries.

The Netherlands said that as a troop-contributor to UNIFIL it was deeply concerned at the worsening situation. It appealed to the de facto forces to desist from trying to expand their area of control, to PLO to carry out its pledge to remove all its armed groups from villages and towns in southern Lebanon, and to Israel to end its policy of pre-emptive strikes. Ireland, also a contributor, found it totally unacceptable that there should be interference with a United Nations peace-keeping force from any quarter.

Nigeria supported the view that, although the Lebanese crisis was inextricably linked to the over-all politicization question, peace in Lebanon could not be deferred pending resolution of the larger Middle East problem.

Further communications and reports

To a letter of 24 September to the Secretary-General, Lebanon annexed extracts from a speech by its President concerning United Nations action in Lebanon. Noting that the many Council resolutions on southern Lebanon had had only a limited effect, the President expressed the hope that it would soon be possible for the international forces to be deployed, together with the Lebanese army, throughout the area. He hoped that thereby the crisis of southern Lebanon could be dissociated from the Middle East crisis, allowing Lebanon to turn its attention to other internal problems.

In a letter of 20 November, Israel drew the attention of the Secretary-General to recent terrorist actions—sea-borne infiltration and bomb explosions—which it said had been undertaken by PLO from Lebanese territory. Israel reiterated its determination to take all necessary measures to protect the lives and safety of its citizens.

Lebanon, in a letter of 13 December to the President of the Council referring to the need to renew UNIFIL's mandate before 19 December, conveyed the views of heads of Arab States and Governments expressed at the Tenth Arab Summit Conference (Tunis, Tunisia, 20-22 November) concerning the situation in southern Lebanon. Among other things, the Conference supported the deployment of the Lebanese army in the south.

The Secretary-General included a brief summary of UNIFIL's activities in his comprehensive report on the situation in the Middle East, submitted on 24 October in pursuance of a General Assembly request of 7 December 1978¹⁵ (see p. 357).

As the mandate of UNIFIL was due to expire on 19 December, the Secretary-General on 14 December submitted a report on the activities of the Force for the period from 9 June to 10 December in which he noted that, despite intensive efforts, it had proved very difficult to make significant progress in fulfilling the mandate of the Force. The composition of UNIFIL as at 10 December was 6,126, with contingents from Fiji, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway and Senegal, assisted by 38 military observers from UNTSO.

During the earlier part of the period under review, there had been heavy exchanges of fire across and over the UNIFIL area, involving the armed elements (mainly PLO and the Lebanese national movement) on one side, and the de facto forces (Christian and associated militias) or the Israeli forces, or both combined, on the other. Concurrently, the level of conflict between Israeli forces and PLO outside the UNIFIL area had escalated dangerously. During the reporting period, five UNIFIL members were killed and 15 wounded as a result of hostile action, and two others were killed and 16 injured in accidents. A de facto cease-fire brought about through UNIFIL on 26 August had eased the highly dangerous situation, but, as the Secretary-General noted, the basic problems remained unresolved. The essential problem, he pointed out, was the inability of UNIFIL to assume complete control over its area of operation, as a preliminary to the restoration of the Lebanese Government's authority in the entire area. One main element of that problem was the intransigence of the de facto forces, which had intensified their encroachments into the UNIFIL area and had established four positions which were a source of constant tension and increased harassment of the local population. Another problem resulted from the continuing attempts by armed elements to infiltrate the UNIFIL area.

A plan of action had been formulated in consultation with the Lebanese Government, with priority given to maintenance of the cease-fire and consolidation of UNIFIL's area of operation. The long-term objectives were the restoration of the sovereignty and effective authority of the Lebanese Government up to the internationally recognized boundary and reactivation of ILMAC. Lebanon indicated its intention of sending more troops and civilian personnel to the south.

The Secretary-General also observed that an essential factor in the success of UNIFIL was the position of the Israeli Government, since it supported de facto forces. Israel's attitude towards the situation in southern Lebanon was interrelated with its perception of the situation in the Middle East as a whole.

Since any move to withdraw or reduce UNIFIL at the current juncture would in his view be extremely dangerous, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of the Force be extended for another six months. Lebanon had informed him of its agreement with this recommendation.

By a letter of 10 January 1980 to the Secretary-General, Israel charged that attacks, not mentioned in the Secretary-General's report, had been made by PLO for some months, without provocation, against Lebanese villages along the border with Israel from positions in the Beaufort Castle area north of UNIFIL's area of operation. On 24 December 1979, two persons had been injured. Two photographs from a Lebanese newspaper article of 24 August were attached to the letter, showing artillery; picture captions stated that guns were aimed from the castle at Israeli targets in the region of Galilee.

Consideration by the Security Council (19 December)

The Security Council met on 19 December to consider the Secretary-General's report of 14 December. The Council had before it a draft resolution which had been drawn up in the course of consultations among its members.

The representatives of Israel, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. At the request of Kuwait, and following a vote of 10 to 1 (United States), with 4 abstentions (France, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom), the Council also invited the PLO representative to take part in the meeting under the same conditions as at previous meetings. The vote was taken at the request of the United States, which considered it inappropriate to invite PLO to participate in the discussion with the same rights of participation as a Member State.

Before hearing statements, the Council renewed the mandate of UNIFIL for six months, until 19 June 1980, by adopting resolution 459(1979) by 12 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (Czechoslovakia and the USSR), with one member (China) not participating.

The Council, noting with concern the continued violations of the cease-fire and expressing anxiety about the obstacles to the full deployment of UNIFIL and the threats to its security and freedom of movement, welcomed Lebanon's efforts to reassert its sovereignty and restore its authority in southern Lebanon.

By the operative paragraphs of the resolution, the Council, expressing support for the Secretary-General's efforts to consolidate the cease-fire, called on all parties to co-operate for the fulfilment of UNIFIL's aims. The Council took note of the determination of the Government of Lebanon to draw up a programme of action, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to promote restoration of its authority, and of the efforts of that Government to obtain international recognition for the protection of the archaeological treasures of Tyre.

It reaffirmed the validity of the 1949 General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Lebanon, and called on the parties to reactivate ILMAC and respect the safety and freedom of action of UNTSO. It urged all Member States in a position to do so to continue to bring their influence to bear on all concerned so that UNIFIL could discharge its mandate fully and unhampered. In the event of continuing obstruction of that mandate, the Council reaffirmed its determination to examine ways to secure full implementation of resolution 425(1978), in accordance with relevant Charter provisions.

Most Council members agreed that little progress had been made in carrying out UNIFIL's deployment in southern Lebanon up to the internationally recognized borders, 'and that this unsatisfactory state of affairs was due to Israel's negative attitude. All Council members who spoke asked for Israel's co-operation. Concerned that the role of the de facto forces was the chief obstacle to UNIFIL's effectiveness, France, Jamaica and the United Kingdom appealed to Israel to cease its support.

The United Kingdom and the United States were gratified that Israel had halted its preemptive strikes against Palestinians on Lebanese territory and that a tenuous cease-fire, was holding. The United States said that the implementation of UNIFIL's mandate required the withdrawal of all armed groups from UNIFIL's area of operation, restraint on all sides and reliance on UNIFIL as the instrument for dealing with cease-fire violations.

Kuwait and Norway expressed concern at the four positions established by the de facto forces inside the UNIFIL area; Norway stressed that there should be no armed presence inside that area except for the forces of the Lebanese State and the United Nations.

Bangladesh, Norway, Portugal and the United States said that the plan of action detailed by the Secretary-General in his report had their approval. Bangladesh said that the Council must concert actively to implement that plan.

Bolivia said that the Latin American countries were devoting considerable effort to finding an over-all solution to the Middle East problem and that the situation in Lebanon was dependent on that solution.

Although it approved the renewal of UNIFIL's mandate, Kuwait pointed out that automatic renewal was not in the interests of UNIFIL. Kuwait expressed the hope that Lebanon would take advantage of the six-month renewal to assert its authority in southern Lebanon. Gabon stated that the mandate could not be indefinitely prolonged because of the heavy financial sacrifices it entailed for Member States.

The USSR said it would again like to stress that all expenses involved in eliminating the consequences of Israel's aggression should be borne by the aggressor. It was-becoming increasingly clear that the separate Egypt-Israel treaty concluded in March 1979 had freed Israel's hands in the Sinai and enabled it to intensify its expansionist and military adventurism against other Arab States, particularly Lebanon. The USSR was opposed to any attempts to broaden the mandate in a way that would involve UNIFIL in the internal affairs of Lebanon.

Kuwait, the Syrian Arab Republic and the USSR expressed regret that there had been no clear condemnation in the resolution of Israel for its continuing acts of aggression against Lebanon. Czechoslovakia and the USSR deplored that there were increasing attempts by Council members to lessen the pressure on Israel and transfer it to the Palestinians. Guided by their positions of principle regarding UNIFIL and its financing, both States had abstained in the vote on the resolution. Bangladesh accused Israel of manipulating UNIFIL's mandate so that southern Lebanon was reduced to a buffer zone supporting Israel's expansionist policies.

Lebanon, while expressing its gratitude for the presence of UNIFIL and its commitment to the objectives of the Council, reiterated its Government's view that peace in Lebanon should not wait for a final settlement of the Middle East problem. Lebanon refused to be trapped into becoming part of a broader scheme within which some might be tempted to view it as a negotiable piece of real estate. That was also the position of the Arab League members. With regard to the resolution just adopted, Lebanon had insisted that the renewal of UNIFIL's mandate be linked to a plan of implementation. Should no progress be possible within a reasonable period, Lebanon would again ask the Council to take action to restore Lebanese sovereignty over all its territory.

Israel considered that the report of the Secretary-General was slanted in favour of PLO terrorists, whose attempts at infiltration into UNIFIL's area of operation had greatly intensified in the period under review. Israel reiterated its support for the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon; it was awaiting that country's response to the formal invitation to negotiate peace which the Israeli Prime Minister had made on 7 May. Its position concerning the General Armistice Agreement remained consistent; by Lebanon's declarations and actions, that Government had made it clear that the Agreement had come to an end. It was Israel's view that the question of southern Lebanon could not be detached from the situation in Lebanon as a whole. Peace could not be restored to that country while Syrian and PLO armed groups were there.

The PLO representative recalled that the Palestinians were in Lebanon not by choice, but as a result of being driven out of their country, Palestine, by what he said was a criminally conceived campaign of terror. The Council could be assured that they had no intention of making Lebanon their final home. All they wished was to be allowed to return to their own country to establish their own State and live in peace.

The Syrian Arab Republic denied the Israeli contention that it was occupying Lebanon. The presence of Syrian forces in that country had been decided by the Arab League, and those forces were under the direct command of the President of Lebanon.

Financing of United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East

The General Assembly in 1979 appropriated a total of $153,814,997 for the three United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East, including a sum for liquidating the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) following the expiration of its mandate on 24 July. This total consisted of $22,674,997 for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Israel-Syria sector for the period 1 June 1979 to 31 May 1980, $112,938,000 for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) for the period 19 January to 18 December 1979 and $18,202,000 for the liquidation of UNEF. The dates corresponded to the varying mandates of the Forces as established by the Security Council (see preceding subchapters). The Assembly also provided for financial authority to meet the expenses of UNDOF and UNIFIL for specified periods beyond these dates in the event the Council decided to continue them beyond the expiry of the six-month mandates in effect when the Assembly acted.

In each case, the Assembly apportioned the expenses for the Forces among all Member States in accordance with the special scale used for this purpose since the establishment of UNEF in 1973. 16 According to this arrangement, the permanent members of the Security Council were assessed more than they would have been under the scale of assessments for the United Nations regular budget, while most developing countries were assessed 80 per cent less and the least developed countries 90 per cent less than under the regular scale. In authorizing this arrangement, the Assembly said in the preambles of its appropriation resolutions that it was taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries were in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries had a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures.

In respect of all three Forces, the Assembly decided that Dominica and Solomon Islands, admitted to the United Nations in 1978, would be placed in the category of least developed States for assessment purposes.

The Assembly invited voluntary contributions for UNDOF and UNIFIL, both in cash and in services and supplies, and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the Forces were conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

The Assembly acted on the basis of appropriation requests submitted in reports of the Secretary-General and of recommendations by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). It adopted several other resolutions on various aspects of the Forces' financing.

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly made appropriations for UNDOF spanning the two six-month extensions of the Force's mandate approved by the Security Council in 1979 (1 June to 30 November 1979 and 1 December 1979 to 31 May 1980) For the year ending 30 November 1979, appropriations were at the monthly rate of $1,682,833 gross ($1,666,000 net of staff assessment). This rate rose to $2,096,333 gross ($2,077,000 net) in the financial year beginning 1 December 1979, due in part to the increase of 200 troops, to a total estimated strength of 1,360. The 200-man increase had been agreed. to by the Security Council on 1 August (see p. 319).

Appropriations for the first of these extensions covered two separate periods, reflecting the fact that the Assembly in 1978 had authorized financial commitments only through 24 October

1979,¹⁷ renewing this authority on 25 October for the balance of the extension. The actual appropriations for these two parts of the six-month mandate period were made by resolution 34/7 C of 3 December 1979, in the amounts of $8034,170 gross ($7,953,805 net) for the period 1 June to 24 October and $2,062,827 gross ($2,042,193 net) for the period 25 October to 30 November. By the same resolution, $12,578,000 was appropriated for the six months from 1 December 1979 to 31 May 1980, covering the new mandate of the Force.

Also by resolution 34/7 C, the Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to enter into financial commitments for UNDOF for the period 1 June to 30 November 1980 should the Council continue the Force beyond the existing mandate. It limited such commitments to the monthly rate of expenditure approved for the six months beginning 1 December 1979, namely $2,096,333 gross ($2,077,000 net).

The resolution also contained provisions relating to the apportionment of expenses among Member States and other matters (summarized in the introduction to this subchapter).

The Assembly adopted resolution 34/7 C by a recorded vote of 97 to 3, with 17 abstentions, following its approval in the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 30 November—together with a resolution on appropriations for liquidating UNEF (see section below)—by a recorded vote, requested by Iraq, of 78 to 2, with 13 abstentions. By a separate recorded vote, requested by the USSR, the text relating only to UNDOF was approved by 78 to 2, with 14 abstentions. The sponsors were Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ghana, Ireland, Norway and Sweden.

Before adopting this appropriation resolution, and in order to give itself time to consider the Secretary-General's report on the financing of the Force, the Assembly, on 25 October, authorized financial commitments for UNDOF for the balance of its then current mandate—25 October to 30 November—at the monthly expenditure rate of $1,682,833 gross ($1,666,000 net) in effect throughout the financial year which began on 25 October 1978. It took this action in adopting resolution 34/7 A by a recorded vote of 101 to 3, with 23 abstentions, following approval by the Fifth Committee on 23 October, by 84 votes to 5, with 17 abstentions, of the text as submitted by the Chairman.

The appropriations for UNDOF were in the amounts requested by the Secretary-General in a report dated 22 October. He also reported that an increasingly serious financial management problem had been posed by the $52.9 million shortfall of contributions for UNEF and UNDOF for the six-year period from 25 October 1973 to 24 October 1979. This sum, out of total assessments of $531.7 million for the period, was the amount apportioned among Member States that had said they did not intend to pay. The Secretary-General had continually faced difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis. Payments to troop-contributing States in particular had never been made on time and were falling further behind. Moreover, the troop contributors had not been reimbursed fully in accordance with agreed rates.

In view of the termination of UNEF, whose 12-month mandate periods beginning on 25 October of each year were the basis for the financial administration of both UNEF and UNDOF, the Secretary-General proposed that the next financial period of UNDOF be from 25 October 1979 to 30 November 1980, and that any future periods run from 1 December for a full 12 months.

In its report, dated 15 November, ACABQ recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's estimates of expenses of the Force and his proposal for changing the financial period of UNDOF.

Introducing the text of what became resolution 34/7 C on behalf of the sponsors, Canada expressed concern at the continued withholding of assessed contributions for the Forces by a number of states, and remarked that the expenses of the peace-keeping operations were insignificant compared to the incalculable cost of another Middle East war.

Iraq, which voted against the resolution, stated that for the international community to finance UNDOF was tantamount to recognizing the legitimacy of Israeli aggression and the occupation of territories by force. Albania and the Syrian Arab Republic also opposed the resolution, saying they would not participate in the financing of the Force; the Syrian Arab Republic added that the costs should be borne by the aggressor.

Benin, China and Viet Nam announced that they would not participate in the vote or assume financial obligations in respect of UNDOF. Benin added that the Forces existed because of a policy of expansionism, domination and racism, while Viet Nam stated its view that Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations, ¹⁸ concerning arrears in contribution payments, did not apply to peace-keeping operations. Democratic Yemen, which abstained, and Morocco, which voted in favour, were disquieted at the continuation of what was supposed to be a temporary measure, and rejected Israel's policy of occupying Arab territories. Yemen abstained in the Assembly's vote, stating that the aggressor should bear the burden of its aggression. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also said it was not participating in the vote.

¹⁸ For text of Article 19 of the Charter, see APPENDIX II.

The Congo said that, while it did not question the reasons for the Force, it had reservations on the Congo's assessment, which did not reflect its capacity to pay; it would therefore not participate in the vote. The USSR, explaining its abstention, said the sums requested were excessive and had not been properly substantiated. Although voting in favour, Sierra Leone also expressed concern about the amount of the appropriation.

Israel, which voted in favour, said it had supported the operations of UNDOF since their inception and thought that United Nations Member States could not avoid financing the peace-keeping forces without violating the Charter.

The Assembly took another action aimed at making additional funds available to UNDOF by adopting resolution 34/7 D on 17 December by a recorded vote of 111 to 9, with 7 abstentions. The Fifth Committee had approved the text on 4 December by a recorded vote, requested by Canada, of 69 to 9, with 6 abstentions. It was sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Norway, Panama and Sweden.

By this resolution, the, Assembly decided to suspend certain provisions of the United Nations Financial Regulations so as to enable the United Nations to retain the unspent portion of 1978 appropriations for undof, amounting to $5,260,420 as of 24 October 1978, instead of having to return this "book surplus" to Member States as a credit against their subsequent assessments. In the preamble to its resolution, the Assembly recognized that, because of the withholding of contributions by certain States, the surplus balance in the UNDOF account had been fully drawn upon to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting the expenses of uner and undor. Applying the rules in this case, it added, would aggravate their already difficult financial situation.

The Assembly also decided to retain in force the provisions of a 1978 resolution by which it had taken a similar action for the first time and had created a separate account for the purpose. ¹⁹ The new amount was to be added to that account and held in suspense pending a further decision.

The Advisory Committee, noting in its report on undof financing that this "surplus" balance had been fully drawn upon to meet the expenses of the Forces, said the $5,260,420 balance should be regarded as no more than a theoretical surplus.

Canada, in introducing the 12-nation text, said the sum in question was only a "book surplus," since UNDOF continued to incur a deficit owing to the refusal of some States to pay their assessed contributions. Supporting the resolution, the United Kingdom regretted its necessity but noted that it ensured that those who withheld their contributions would not benefit from doing so. The Federal Republic of Germany also supported the text so as not to add to the burden of the troop-contributing countries, but regarded the procedures prescribed by the resolution as anomalous.

The USSR, which voted against the resolution, said the deficit must be eliminated not by violating the Financial Regulations but by attacking the substance of the problem, which was that some States were not paying their assessments because of the special circumstances involved.

China, the Congo and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said they would not participate in the vote in light of their previously stated positions on the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East.

Financing the liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Force

On 3 December 1979, the General Assembly appropriated $18,202,000 to pay for the liquidation of UNEF as from 25 July. It did so by adopting resolution 34/7 B by a recorded vote of 98 to 12, with 7 abstentions. The expenses were to be apportioned among Member States according to the special formula used for peace-keeping operations, with Dominica and Solomon Islands added to the list of least developed States for apportionment purposes (see the introduction to this subchapter).

The text of this resolution had been proposed in the Fifth Committee by the 12 States that sponsored resolution 34/7 C on appropriations for under (see section immediately preceding) and was submitted along with that resolution. The Committee approved the text on 30 November by a recorded vote, requested by the USSR, of 73 to 10, with 4 abstentions. It then approved both these resolutions together by a recorded vote, requested by Iraq, of 78 to 2, with 13 abstentions.

In his report on the financing of UNEF and UNDOF, the Secretary-General noted that the Security Council had not renewed UNEF's mandate beyond 24 July. No appropriations being available for the purpose, he had sought and received the concurrence of ACABQ to commit up to $8 million, under the procedure for meeting unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, for the repatriation of troops and the liquidation of the Force.

The Secretary-General estimated the repatriation and liquidation costs at $18,202,000, less income of $4,534,000, mainly from disposal of surplus property such as equipment, stores and other supplies. Some of this would be transferred to other peace-keeping operations and the rest would be sold.

The Advisory Committee, in its report on the subject, noted that the other operations were to be charged an average of 50 per cent of the "book value" of the property, depending on its condition. The Committee noted that it was proposed to stockpile UNEF surplus property in excess of current needs for the future use of other peace-keeping operations, with credit, tentatively estimated at $2 million, accruing to UNEF at the time of transfer. The Committee had no objections to the estimates proposed for UNEF by the Secretary-General.

In the Fifth Committee, Iraq voted against the resolution, stating that UNEF had failed to attain its objectives of restoring peace or halting the fighting, and it wondered, therefore, why the international community should be asked to vote millions for its upkeep while reducing appropriations for important humanitarian sections of the budget. The USSR, which also voted against, objected that the process of liquidating UNEF was unwarrantedly protracted and the costs were unreasonable; it added that it would not pay the part of its assessment required to meet UNEF expenses arising from the 1975 Egyptian-Israeli Agreement,20 as the USSR had nothing to do with that Agreement, which circumvented the Geneva Peace Conference on the Middle East.

Albania and the Syrian Arab Republic, voting against, said they would not take part in the financing. China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said they would not participate in the vote on the resolution, China adding that it would not assume any financial obligation that might result.

Among those voting in favour, Israel regretted that the UNEF mandate had not been renewed, while Poland expressed regret at the deficit in the Force's accounts, which had delayed reimbursement to troop contributors such as Poland.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly, by resolution 34/9 B of 17 December 1979, appropriated funds covering the two extensions of the UNIFIL mandate approved by the Security Council in 1979—the five months from 19 January to 18 June and the six months from 19 June to 18 December. For the five-month mandate, appropriations totalled $51,906,000 gross ($51,468,000 net of staff assessment). For the following six months, there were two appropriations, corresponding to an expenditure rate of $10,172,000 gross per month ($10,084,500 net)—that is, $44,756,800 gross ($44,371,800 net) for the period 19 June to 31 October and $16,275,200 gross ($16,135,200 net) for the period 1 November to 18 December.

Also by this resolution, the Assembly, as it had done in 1978,²¹ authorized the Secretary-General to enter into financial commitments for UNIFIL should the Council continue the Force beyond the existing mandate. This authorization covered the period from 19 December 1979 to 18 December 1980, at a monthly expenditure rate not to exceed $10,767,166 gross ($10,676,666 net). The Council, on 19 December 1979, by resolution 459(1979), extended the Force's mandate until 19 June 1980 (see preceding subchapter).

The Assembly's resolution also contained provisions relating to the apportionment of expenses among all Member States according to the special scale for peace-keeping operations, and the inclusion of Dominica and Solomon Islands among the States assessed at the lowest rate (see the introduction to this subchapter).

The text of resolution 34/9 B had been sponsored in the Fifth Committee by Argentina, Austria, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Lebanon, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Portugal, Senegal and Sweden, as the first section of a three-part draft resolution. The other two sections concerned claims by troop-contributing States and an appeal for voluntary contributions (see below).

The Fifth Committee approved all three parts together on 7 December by a recorded vote of 85 to 13, with 2 abstentions. The Assembly adopted resolution 34/9 B by a recorded vote of 111 to 13, with 2 abstentions.

The appropriations through 18 December followed earlier action by the Assembly to authorize financial commitments in advance of actual appropriations. Such authorization had been granted by the Assembly in 1978 for the period 19 January to 31 October 1979. By resolution 34/9 A of 1 November 1979, the Assembly authorized monthly commitments not to exceed $10,172,000 gross ($10,084,500 net) for the period from 1 November to 18 December, in order to allow time to consider the Secretary-General's report on the financing of the Force. This resolution was adopted by 82 votes to 16, with 5 abstentions. The text had been submitted to the Fifth Committee by its Chairman and approved on 29 October by 93 votes to 14, with 1 abstention.

These appropriations were at levels requested by the Secretary-General in a report dated 25 October and endorsed by ACABQ in a report of 15 November. They were within the authorization of $11,142,000 per month provided by the Assembly in 1978.²³ However, the authorization for the year beginning 19 December 1979 amounted to $1 million less than the $65,603,000 which the Secretary-General had estimated for the six months to 18 June 1980, based on an average Force strength of 6,000 troops. The $1 million reduction had been recommended by ACABQ which did not apply it to any particular item of expenditure but considered that strict attention to economy and efficiency should result in savings.

As to the status of contributions, the Secretary-General reported that the shortfall attributed to States that had stated that they did not intend to pay for UNIFIL had risen from $14 million in 1978 to $52.4 million as at 30 September 1979, out of the $201.2 million in assessments of Member States from the inception of the Force on 19 March 1978 to 31 October 1979. The shortfall posed a serious financial management problem. Payments due to the troop-contributing countries had never been made on time and were falling further behind. Troop contributors, which had not been currently and fully reimbursed in accordance with agreed rates, had conveyed their serious concern over the heavy burden this placed on their Governments.

The Secretary-General reported that no voluntary contributions had been received in response to an Assembly invitation of 3 November 1978.²⁴

By resolution 34/9 C, the Assembly approved special arrangements giving States contributing troops to UNIFIL more time to submit claims for reimbursement by the United Nations. Under these arrangements, the normal period in which appropriations remained available for payment of unliquidated obligations—12 months beyond the period of the appropriation—was to be extended in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Force. Governments would have four years beyond the normal 12-month period to submit claims for goods supplied and services rendered, after which any unliquidated obligations would be cancelled, and the remaining balance of any appropriations retained for possible payment Would be surrendered. Once a claim had been received, it would remain payable until payment was effected.

Resolution 34/9 C was adopted on 17 December by a recorded vote of 111 to 13, with 3 abstentions, following its approval by the Fifth Committee as part of a three-part draft on UNIFIL financing (see above).

By resolution 34/9 D, the Assembly renewed its invitation to Member States to make voluntary contributions to UNIFIL, both in cash and in services and supplies, and decided to establish a Suspense Account for voluntary contributions, to be used solely to supplement the regular UNIFIL account in reimbursing Governments for the costs they incurred in contributing troops, equipment and supplies. Provisions to govern the Suspense Account—its purpose, guiding principles, resources, financial administration and arrangements for review—were annexed to the resolution.

Resolution 34/9 D was adopted on 17 December by a recorded vote of 108 to 13, with 6 abstentions, following its approval by the Fifth Committee as part of a three-part draft on UNIFIL financing (see above).

Ireland, which introduced the three texts, stated that voluntary contributions to the Suspense Account would be considered as cash advances to troop contributors, to be returned to the donor States when sufficient assessed contributions had been received. It would allow a number of Member States to make voluntary contributions without violating their positions of principle; while not concealing the policy of withholding practised by certain States, it might help mitigate the serious effects of that policy and permit the financial burden to be shared more equitably.

By resolution 34/9 E, adopted on 17 December by a recorded vote of 111 to 11, with 5 abstentions, the Assembly suspended temporarily the provisions of Financial Regulations under which $122,492 recorded as a surplus in UNIFIL accounts would have had to be surrendered and credited to all Member States. It decided to enter this amount in a separately identified account, to be held in suspense pending a further decision. The action was similar to that which the Assembly took on 17 December in respect of UNDOF (see p. 343).

The Advisory Committee had reported that this "surplus" was no more than theoretical, as it had been fully drawn upon because of the withholding of contributions by some States.

²⁴ Ibid., section IV.

The text of resolution 34/9 E had been approved by the Fifth Committee on 7 December by 85 votes to 13, with 3 abstentions, It was sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Lebanon, Nepal, the Netherlands, Norway, Panama, Senegal and Sweden.

By decision 34/439, adopted without vote on 17 December—the text of which had been approved without objection by the Fifth Committee at the Chairman's suggestion on 7 December—the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to maintain the UNIFIL Special Account for the periods of its mandates subsequent to 18 January 1979. The Secretary-General had recommended this action in his report on UNIFIL financing, and ACABQ had endorsed the recommendation. The Special Account consisted of the regular contributions for the Force assessed against Member States.

In the discussion of the UNIFIL financing resolutions, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Japan, Lebanon, Morocco, Portugal and the United States spoke in support of the Force and the resolutions. Canada added that its support did not alter its basic position that the financing of peace-keeping operations should be based on universal assessments, and that withholding was contrary to the United Nations Charter. The Federal Republic of Germany said it did not agree that the voluntary funds in the Suspense Account should be used to finance the deficit created by withholding. Portugal stated that the maintenance of peace in the Middle East was the collective responsibility of all States, while the United States called on nations in arrears to reassess their positions and clear their debts.

Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the USSR and Viet Nam, explaining their votes against the resolutions, as well as Benin and China, which did not participate in the votes, reiterated their refusal to take part in the financing of UNIFIL. These countries, as well as Cuba and Iraq, which also voted against, stated that the aggressor should bear the cost of the Force. Poland voted against because of its position of principle with regard to the financing of UNIFIL. The Congo did not participate in the votes on the ground that its capacity to pay did not permit it to assume such expenses. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya also declined to take part in the voting.

Review of reimbursement rates to troop contributors

By resolution 34/166, adopted on 17 December 1979 by a recorded vote of 110 to 10, with 9 abstentions, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to study, in consultation with the States contributing troops to UNDOF and UNIFIL, the existing standard rates of reimbursement by the United Nations for pay and allowances as well as for clothing, gear and equipment, with a view to ensuring an equitable reimbursement rate to troop-contributing States. In so doing, it recognized that inflation and escalating troop costs had adversely affected the existing rates. The Secretary-General was to report on the matter in 1980.

The Fifth Committee had, on 7 December, by 86 votes to 12, with 3 abstentions, approved the text of this resolution, which was sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Lebanon, Nepal, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Peru, Senegal and Sweden.

Explaining its affirmative vote, Japan recorded its understanding that the resolution did not preclude consultation with Member States other than troop contributors. The USSR opposed the resolution because it believed that the reimbursement rates were already excessive. China and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated that they would not participate in the vote.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, 363(1974) of 29 November 1974, 369(1975) of 28 May 1975, 381(1975) of 30 November 1975, 390(1976) of 28 May 1976, 398(1976) of 30 November 1976, 408(1977) of 26 May 1977, 420(1977) of 30 November 1977, 429(1978) of 31 May 1978, 441(1978) of 30 November 1978, 449(1979) of 30 May 1979 and 456(1979) of 30 November 1979,

Retailing its resolutions 3101 (XXVIII) of 11 December 1973, 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3374 C (XXX) of 2 December 1975, 31/5 D of 22 December 1976, 32/4 C of 2 December 1977, 33/13 D of 8 December 1978 and 34/7 A of 25 October 1979,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations.

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

I

- 1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of $8,034,170 gross ($7,953,805 net) authorized and apportioned by section III of Assembly resolution 33/13 D for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 24 October 1979 inclusive;
- 2. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, without prejudice to the positions of principle that may be taken by Member States in any consideration by the General Assembly of arrangements for the financing of peace-keeping operations, to apportion the amount of $2,130,699, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 1 to 31 December 1979 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978 and 1979 and the amount of $10,447,301, pertaining on a pro rata basis to the period from 1 January to 31 May 1980 inclusive, among Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1980, 1981 and 1982, and:
- (a) To apportion an amount of $7,396,874 for the above-mentioned six-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (a) of General Assembly resolution 3101 (XXVIII), of which $1,305,053 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978 and 1979 and $6,091,821 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1980, 1981 and 1982;

- (c) To apportion an amount of $291,514 for the abovementioned six-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (c) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII), section II, paragraph 2 (c), of resolution 3374 C (XXX) and section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 33/13 D, of which $44,958 shall be apportioned in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1978 and 1979 and $246,556 in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for 1980, 1981 and 1982;
- (d) To apportion an amount of $6,076 for the abovementioned six-month period among the Member States referred to in paragraph 2 (d) of resolution 3101 (XXVIII), section V, paragraph 1, of resolution 3374 C (XXX), section V,

Ш

Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed $2,096,333 gross ($2,077,000 net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1980 inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 456(1979) of 30 November 1979, the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

IV

- Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;
- 2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is conducted with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 4 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant Security Council resolutions,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face growing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the troopcontributing Governments,

Recalling its resolution 33/13 E of 14 December 1978,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces,

- Decides that the provisions of its resolution 33/13 E shall remain in force until a further decision of the General Assembly;
- 2. Decides further that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of $5260,420, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision of the Assembly.

- 3. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the estimated income of $4 million other than staff assessment income;
- 4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of $534,000;
