Noting with satisfaction the work of the Interagency Panel on Juvenile Justice and of its members, in particular their coordination in providing technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice, and the active participation of civil society in their respective work,

Convinced that the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and the integrity of the judicial system as well as an independent legal profession are essential prerequisites for the protection of human rights, the rule of law, good governance and democracy, as well as for ensuring that there is no discrimination in the administration of justice, and should therefore be respected in all circumstances,

Recalling that every State should provide an effective framework of remedies to redress human rights grievances or violations,

Emphasizing that the right to access to justice for all forms an important basis for strengthening the rule of law through the administration of justice,

Mindful of the importance of ensuring respect for the rule of law and human rights in the administration of justice as a crucial contribution to building peace and justice and ending impunity,

Aware of the need for special vigilance with regard to the specific situation of children, juveniles and women in the administration of justice, in particular while they are deprived of their liberty, and their vulnerability to various forms of violence, abuse, injustice and humiliation,

Reaffirming that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all decisions concerning the child in the administration of justice, including in relation to pre-trial measures, as well as being an important consideration in all matters concerning the child related to sentencing of his or her parents, or, where applicable, legal guardians or primary caregivers,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the most recent report submitted by the Secretary-General to the Human Rights Council on human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, emphasizing, inter alia, that the administration of justice extends beyond the criminal justice system to other means of administering justice;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of all United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

3. Reiterates its call to all Member States to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as adequate resources, to ensure the full implementation of those standards;

4. Invites States to make use of technical assistance offered by the relevant United Nations programmes in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of the administration of justice;

5. Appeals to Governments to include in their national development plans the administration of justice as an integral part of the development process and to allocate adequate resources for the provision of legal aid services with a view to promoting and protecting human rights, and invites the international community to respond favourably to requests for financial and technical assistance for the enhancement and strengthening of the administration of justice;

6. Stresses the special need for national capacity-building in the field of the administration of justice, in particular through reform of the judiciary, the police and the penal system, as well as juvenile justice reform, in order to establish and maintain stable societies and the rule of law in post-conflict situations, and in this context welcomes the role of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in supporting the establishment and functioning of transitional justice mechanisms in post-conflict situations;

7. Affirms that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism, including in the administration of justice, complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

8. Notes with appreciation the decision to establish an open-ended intergovernmental expert group to exchange information on best practices, as well as on national legislation and existing international law, and on the revision of existing United Nations standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners so that they reflect recent advances in correctional science and best practices, with a view to making recommendations to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on possible next steps, and in this regard invites the expert group to benefit from the expertise of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and also of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant stakeholders;

9. Encourages States to endeavour to reduce, where appropriate, pretrial detention, inter alia, by adopting legislative and administrative measures and policies on its preconditions, limitations, duration and alternatives and by taking measures aimed at the implementation of existing legislation, as well as by ensuring access to justice and legal advice and assistance;

10. Also encourages States to pay due attention to the United Nations Rules for the Treatment of Women Prisoners and Non-custodial Measures for Women Offenders (the Bangkok Rules) when developing and implementing relevant legislation, procedures, policies and action plans, and invites relevant special procedure mandate holders, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and all other relevant organizations to take these rules into consideration in their activities;

11. Stresses the importance of paying greater attention to the impact of the imprisonment of parents on their children, while noting with interest the upcoming day of general discussion on the theme "The situation of children of prisoners", to be organized in 2011 by the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

12. Calls upon States to identify and promote good practices in relation to the needs and physical, emotional, social and psychological development of babies and children affected by parental detention and imprisonment, and emphasizes that, when sentencing or deciding on pretrial measures for a pregnant woman or a child's sole or primary caregiver, appropriate priority should be given to non-custodial measures, bearing in mind the gravity of the offence and after taking into account the best interests of the child;

13. Recognizes that every child and juvenile in conflict with the law must be treated in a manner consistent with his or her rights, dignity and needs, in accordance with international law, bearing in mind relevant international standards on human rights in the administration of justice, and calls upon States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to abide strictly by its principles and provisions;

14. Encourages States that have not yet integrated children's issues into their overall rule of law efforts to do so, and to develop and implement a comprehensive juvenile justice policy to prevent and address juvenile delinquency, as well as with a view to promoting, inter alia, the use of alternative measures, such as diversion and restorative justice, and complying with the principle that deprivation of liberty of children should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, as well as to avoid, wherever possible, the use of pretrial detention for children;

15. Stresses the importance of including rehabilitation and reintegration strategies for former child offenders in juvenile justice policies, in particular through education programmes, with a view to their assuming a constructive role in society;

16. Urges States to ensure that, under their legislation and practice, neither capital punishment nor life imprisonment without the possibility of release is imposed for offences committed by persons under 18 years of age;

17. Encourages States to collect relevant information concerning children within their criminal justice systems so as to improve their administration of justice, while being mindful of the children's right to privacy, with full respect for relevant international human rights instruments, and bearing in mind applicable international standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

18. Calls upon States to consider establishing independent national or subnational mechanisms to contribute to monitoring and safeguarding the rights of children, including children within their criminal justice systems, and to address children's concerns;

19. Invites Governments to provide for tailored and interdisciplinary training, including anti-racist, multicultural and gender-sensitive training, in human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, to all judges, lawyers, prosecutors, social workers, immigration and police officers and other professionals concerned, including personnel deployed in international field presences;

20. Encourages the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, United Nations institutes active in the areas of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice, and other relevant parts of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field, and other segments of civil society, including the media, to continue to develop their activities in promoting human rights in the administration of justice;

21. Invites States, upon their request, to benefit from technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice provided by the relevant United Nations agencies and programmes, in particular the Interagency Panel on Juvenile Justice, in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of the administration of justice, in particular juvenile justice;

22. Invites the Human Rights Council and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to closely coordinate their activities relating to the administration of justice;

23. Invites the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to reinforce, within their respective mandates, their activities relating to national capacity-building in the field of the administration of justice, in particular in post-conflict situations, and in this context to cooperate with relevant departments of the Secretariat, including the Peacebuilding Support Office, the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations;

24. Underlines the importance of rebuilding and strengthening structures for the administration of justice and of respecting the rule of law and human rights, including in post-conflict situations, as a crucial contribution to building peace and justice and ending impunity, and in this respect requests the Secretary-General to ensure system-wide coordination and coherence of programmes and activities of the relevant parts of the United Nations system, including through the Rule of Law Coordination and Resource Group, and in cooperation with the Peacebuilding Commission, including assistance provided through United Nations field presences;

25. Invites relevant special procedure mandate holders of the Human Rights Council to give special attention to questions relating to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, and to provide, wherever appropriate, specific recommendations in this regard, including proposals for advisory services and technical assistance measures;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report on the latest developments, challenges and good practices in human rights in the administration of justice, as well as the activities undertaken by the United Nations system as a whole;

27. Decides to continue its consideration of the question of human rights in the administration of justice at its sixty-seventh session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Right to the truth

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 685], the High Commissioner in July [A/HRC/15/33] submitted a report on the right to the truth that reviewed international legal provisions on States' obligations to protect witnesses, victims and others, as well as relevant judicial practice and jurisprudence; discussed national and international witness protection measures and programmes; explained the key elements for establishing effective programmes; and addressed good practices and standards. The report concluded that too few examples existed of national witness protection programmes relating to investigation and prosecution of gross human rights violations. Witness protection measures should be consistent with the principle of the right to fair trial and an integral part of the justice sector strategy. States were urged to develop comprehensive witness protection programmes covering all types of crimes, as well as programmes protecting witnesses of grave human rights violations.

Human Rights Council action. On 17 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/7)], the Council recommended that the General Assembly proclaim 24 March the International Day for the Right to the Truth concerning Gross Human Rights Violations and for the Dignity of Victims. The Council recognized the human rights work of Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero [YUN 1980, p. 828], of El Salvador, whose dedication to the service of humanity in the context of armed conflict led to his death on 24 March 1980.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/451], adopted resolution 65/196 without vote [agenda item 63].

Proclamation of 24 March as the International Day for the Right to the Truth concerning Gross Human Rights Violations and for the Dignity of Victims

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant instruments of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recognizing the universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights,

Recalling articles 32 and 33 of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and article 24, paragraph 2, of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/177 of 20 December 2006, according to which each victim has the right to know the truth regarding the circumstances of the enforced disappearance, the progress and results of the investigation and the fate of the disappeared person,

Taking into account the right to the truth as defined in Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/66 of 20 April 2005 and Human Rights Council decision 2/105 of 27 November 2006 and resolutions 9/11 of 24 September 2008 and 12/12 of 1 October 2009 on the right to the truth,

Welcoming Human Rights Council resolution 14/7 of 17 June 2010 entitled “Proclamation of 24 March as the International Day for the Right to the Truth concerning Gross Human Rights Violations and for the Dignity of Victims”,

Acknowledging the reports of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the significant conclusions therein related to the right to the truth,

Recognizing the importance of promoting the memory of victims of gross and systematic human rights violations and the importance of the right to truth and justice,

Acknowledging, at the same time, the significance of paying tribute to those who have devoted their lives to, and lost their lives in, the struggle to promote and protect human rights for all,

Recognizing in particular the important and valuable work of Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero, of El Salvador, who was actively engaged in the promotion and protection of human rights in his country, and whose work was acknowledged internationally through his messages, in which he denounced violations of the human rights of the most vulnerable populations,

Recognizing the values of Monsignor Romero and his dedication to the service of humanity, in the context of armed conflicts, as a humanist dedicated to defending human rights, protecting lives and promoting human dignity, his constant calls to dialogue and his opposition to all forms of violence to avoid armed confrontation, which consequently led to his death on 24 March 1980,

1. Proclaims 24 March the International Day for the Right to the Truth concerning Gross Human Rights Violations and for the Dignity of Victims;

2. Invites all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations and civil society entities, including non-governmental organizations and individuals, to observe the International Day in an appropriate manner;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Independence of judges and lawyers

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a report [A/HRC/14/26] issued in April, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Gabriela Carina Knaul de Albuquerque e Silva (Brazil), reported on her activities between August 2009 and February 2010 and examined the need for continuing education in international human rights law for magistrates, judges, prosecutors, public defenders and lawyers. She noted the gap between the continuing human rights legal education offered to judges and lawyers and the outcomes obtained with regard to the application of international human rights law in specific domestic cases. She recommended a global thematic study to assess the human rights education and continuing training of those law practitioners, which would provide the scientific basis for an international conference on how best to provide legal human rights education and training; the creation of an international database giving States access to technical assistance, best practices and case law; and measures to strengthen the legal education and capacity-building of law practitioners.

An addendum of 18 June [A/HRC/14/26/Add.1] summarized 106 communications sent to 47 governmental authorities between 16 March 2009 and 15 March 2010 and replies received between 1 May 2009 and 10 May 2010.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2008, p. 801], the Secretary-General in August [A/65/274] transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, which addressed the need for a strong judiciary as a fundamental tool in the fight against impunity. She said that States should assure the protection of all judicial actors against attacks, threats and acts of intimidation or reprisals, identified judicial corruption as a factor contributing to impunity, and emphasized the need for efficient witness protection programmes to combat impunity. To counter judicial corruption, systems for allocating cases to judges should be transparent. The Rapporteur called on States to develop a human rights-based approach when developing an impunity strategy, to cooperate fully with the international tribunals, in particular with the International Criminal Court, and to implement in full their decisions and resolutions, as well as their arrest warrants. For their part, the tribunals should constitute a model in terms of due process and the rights of detainees to a fair trial.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 21 December (decision 65/536).

Mission reports. Following her visit to Mexico (1–15 October) [A/HRC/17/30/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur stated that as the country was confronted with escalating violence, primarily on the part of groups linked to organized crime, it was essential to have a sound, independent and effective judiciary, and to protect court officials from threats and intimidation. A major challenge for the justice system was the issue of impunity, which was linked not only to structural shortcomings in criminal investigations, but also to widespread corruption, particularly at the state and municipal levels. The legal institution of preventive custody (arraigo) was incompatible with the principle of the presumption of innocence and the right to liberty and should be expunged. There was a lack of uniformity in the requirements for admission to the bar, and no independent oversight body to uphold the quality, integrity, ethics and good repute of the legal profession. She recommended that the Office of the Public Defender be made independent of the executive branch in all the federative entities and that the Government address the issue of access to justice, particularly for indigenous peoples and women.

During her mission to Mozambique (26 August–3 September and 6–10 December) [A/HRC/17/30/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur examined factors affecting the independence of the judiciary and the conditions for ensuring the free and independent exercise of the legal profession, such as the participation of the judiciary in deciding on its budget; court fees; salaries; and the assignment of cases. The Rapporteur made recommendations on strengthening the judicial system and ensuring the independence and integrity of magistrates and judges, the impartiality of prosecutors and the free exercise of the legal profession.

Human Rights Council action. On 29 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/3)], the Council encouraged States to take into consideration principles and individual and institutional parameters for guaranteeing the independence of the judiciary and the free and independent functioning of lawyers and the legal profession. It called on States to protect judges, lawyers and prosecutors and their families against violence, threats, retaliation and harassment. The Council also requested the Rapporteur to carry out a global thematic study to assess human rights education and continuing training of judges, prosecutors, public defenders and lawyers, with recommendations for appropriate follow-up, to be presented at the Council's twentieth (2012) session.

Right to a nationality

Report of Secretary-General. A report [A/HRC/13/34] of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to a request of the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 689] recalled the legal framework applicable to the right to nationality and addressed the prohibition of arbitrary deprivation of nationality. The report emphasized that States had an obligation to implement the principle of non-discrimination, in particular when deciding on issues relating to the acquisition and retention of a nationality; recalled the general obligation of States to prevent statelessness; and addressed the question of the right to a nationality and arbitrary deprivation of nationality in the context of State succession.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/2)], the Council called on States to refrain from taking discriminatory measures and from maintaining legislation that would arbitrarily deprive persons of their nationality on grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, especially if such measures and legislation rendered a person stateless. The Council urged States to adopt legislation with a view to avoiding statelessness, in particular by preventing arbitrary deprivation of nationality and statelessness as a result of State succession. It also requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the impact that arbitrary deprivation of nationality may have on the enjoyment of persons of their human rights and to present it to the Council's nineteenth (2012) session.

Freedom of expression

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2008, p. 814], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Frank La Rue (Guatemala), in April submitted his second annual report [A/HRC/14/23], detailing his activities between March 2009 and March 2010. The Rapporteur addressed four themes: general considerations on the freedom of opinion and expression; freedom of expression for groups in need of particular attention and the role of freedom of expression in combating discrimination; permissible restrictions and limitations on freedom of expression; and protection of journalists and freedom of the press. The Rapporteur made recommendations concerning those subjects.

An addendum [A/HRC/14/23/Add.1] summarized 304 communications sent to 84 Governments between 1 January 2009 and 19 March 2010 and replies received between 16 May 2009 and 14 May 2010. Of the 304 communications, 284 were signed jointly with other special procedures mandate holders.

In March [A/HRC/14/23/Add.2], the Rapporteur transmitted the joint declaration "Ten key challenges to freedom of expression in the next decade", adopted on 3 February by the four rapporteurs holding mandates regarding freedom of expression—the others being the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe Representative on Freedom of the Media, the Organization of American States Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression and Access to Information.

In August [A/65/284], pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 702], the Secretary-General transmitted the first report of the Special Rapporteur to the General Assembly. The Rapporteur outlined his activities; examined trends regarding violence against journalists worldwide and the obligation of States to guarantee their protection; explored trends regarding violence against journalists in situations of armed conflict and the protection afforded to them under international humanitarian and human rights law; and shed light on difficulties faced by “citizen journalists” and identified State obligations to ensure their protection. The Rapporteur made recommendations to enhance the protection of journalists and citizen journalists in both conflict and non-conflict situations.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 21 December (decision 65/536).

Mission reports. Following his visit to the Republic of Korea (6–17 May) [A/HRC/17/27/Add.2 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur focused on issues of concern: defamation, freedom of opinion and expression on the Internet, freedom of opinion and expression before elections, freedom of opinion and expression of public officials, freedom of assembly, restrictions on freedom of expression on the basis of national security, independence of the media, and the National Human Rights Commission. The Rapporteur expressed his concern about increased restrictions on individuals’ right to freedom of opinion and expression, primarily due to an increasing number of prosecutions, based on laws that often were not in conformity with international standards, and the harassment of individuals who expressed views not in agreement with the Government’s position. The Rapporteur made recommendations on each of the main issues to fully guarantee the right of all individuals to express diverse opinions, which would further consolidate the country’s democratic foundations.

Following his mission to Mexico (9–24 August) [A/HRC/17/27/Add.3], jointly with the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the UN Special Rapporteur described a situation of violence and impunity, exemplified by the fact that few of the 66 cases of journalists murdered between 2000 and December 2010 had been solved, 12 journalists had been disappeared between 2005 and December 2010, and 18 attacks on media outlets had occurred in the past five years. The Rapporteur recommended the establishment of a national mechanism for the protection of journalists, which would be implemented through a high-level inter-institutional committee; be headed by a federal authority; be able to coordinate among the various authorities and levels of government; have sufficient resources; and guarantee the participation of journalists and civil society organizations in its design, operation and evaluation. He also made recommendations on strengthening the Special Prosecutor’s Office for Crimes against Freedom of Expression in the Attorney General’s Office and local prosecutor’s offices; the adoption of a regulatory framework that offered legal certainty, reduced the concentration of ownership and control of radio and television and helped generate pluralist media accessible to all sectors of the population; the allocation of official government advertising through objective, clear, transparent and non-discriminatory criteria; the amendment of state criminal codes to remove offences that were used to criminalize freedom of expression; and the repeal of the 1917 Print Offences Act, which provided for custodial sentences, and remained in force.

Freedom of association

Establishment of new mandate. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/21)], the Council decided to appoint for a three year-period a special rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, whose tasks would include reporting on violations of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, as well as discrimination, threats or use of violence, harassment, persecution, intimidation or reprisals directed at persons exercising those rights, and drawing the attention of the Council and the High Commissioner to situations of concern. It also requested the rapporteur to submit an annual report to the Council on his or her activities.

Journalists in armed conflict

Human Rights Council action. Alarmed at the large and increasing number of death and injuries among members of the press in armed conflict, the Council on 26 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/24)] decided to convene at its fourteenth (2010) session a panel discussion on the protection of journalists in armed conflict.

OHCHR report. An OHCHR report issued in August [A/HRC/15/54] summarized the panel discussion (Geneva, 4 June). Participants examined the international norms and standards applicable to journalists in armed conflict and made proposals to enhance the protection of journalists.

Civilians in armed conflict

OHCHR report. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 689], an OHCHR report issued in June [A/HRC/14/40] summarized the discussion held during the expert consultation on protecting the human rights of civilians in armed conflict (Geneva, 31 March). At the consultation, attended by 24 Member States, the experts explored how human rights mechanisms, judicial organs and civil society organizations had applied international human rights and international humanitarian law to conflict situations.

Security Council action. By presidential statement S/PRST/2010/25 of 22 November (see p. 59), the Security Council reaffirmed that parties to armed conflict bore the primary responsibility to ensure the protection of affected civilians.

(For information on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, see p. 58.)

Other issues

Capital punishment

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolutions 1745(LIV) [YUN 1973, p. 575] and 1995/57 [YUN 1995, p. 747], the Secretary-General submitted his eighth quinquennial report on capital punishment [E/2010/10 & Corr.1], covering the period 2004–2008. At the end of 2008, 95 States had abolished the death penalty, 8 had abolished it for ordinary crimes, 46 had retained it but were de facto abolitionist and 47 had retained it. The report confirmed a marked trend towards abolition and restriction of the use of capital punishment in most countries. Countries that retained the death penalty were, with rare exceptions, significantly reducing its use in terms of numbers of persons executed and the crimes for which it might be imposed. Where capital punishment remained in force, there were serious problems with regard to the respect of international norms and standards, notably in the limitation of the death penalty to the most serious crimes, the exclusion of juvenile offenders from its scope, and guarantees of a fair trial.

The Economic and Social Council took note of that report on 23 July (decision 2010/258).

In July [A/HRC/15/19], the Secretary-General reported on developments with regard to the death penalty from 30 June 2009 to 1 July 2010. Angola had abolished the death penalty for all crimes, and Brazil had acceded to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty [YUN 1989, p. 484]. While developments suggested that the trend towards abolition was continuing, any analysis of the application of the death penalty remained difficult due to a lack of transparency by some States in providing information on sentences and executions.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 63/168 [YUN 2008, p. 802], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/280 & Corr.1] on moratoriums on the use of the death penalty, which confirmed the global trend towards abolition. He recommended that Member States introduce a moratorium; that States not willing to establish a moratorium apply the death penalty only in the case of the most serious crimes; and that the protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty be ensured. In that regard, States had an obligation not to practise the death penalty in secrecy, nor to practice discrimination in its application.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/206 by recorded vote (109-41-35) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Moratorium on the use of the death penalty

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming its resolutions 62/149 of 18 December 2007 and 63/168 of 18 December 2008 on the question of a moratorium on the use of the death penalty, in which the General Assembly called upon States that still maintain the death penalty to establish a moratorium on executions with a view to abolishing it,

Mindful that any miscarriage or failure of justice in the implementation of the death penalty is irreversible and irreparable,

Convinced that a moratorium on the use of the death penalty contributes to respect for human dignity and to the enhancement and progressive development of human rights, and considering that there is no conclusive evidence of the deterrent value of the death penalty,

Noting ongoing national debates and regional initiatives on the death penalty, as well as the readiness of an increasing number of Member States to make available information on the use of the death penalty,

Noting also the technical cooperation among Member States in relation to moratoriums on the death penalty,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 63/168 and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Also welcomes the steps taken by some countries to reduce the number of offences for which the death penalty may be imposed and the decisions made by an increasing number of States to apply a moratorium on executions, followed in many cases by the abolition of the death penalty;

3. Calls upon all States:

(a) To respect international standards that provide safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, in particular the minimum standards, as set out in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984, as well as to provide the Secretary-General with information in this regard;

(b) To make available relevant information with regard to their use of the death penalty, which can contribute to possible informed and transparent national debates;

(c) To progressively restrict the use of the death penalty and to reduce the number of offences for which it may be imposed;

(d) To establish a moratorium on executions with a view to abolishing the death penalty;

4. Calls upon States which have abolished the death penalty not to reintroduce it, and encourages them to share their experience in this regard;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to continue its consideration of the matter at its sixty-seventh session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Disappearance of persons

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 2010: its ninetieth (Geneva, 15–19 March), ninety-first (Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina, 22–25 June) and ninety-second (Geneva, 3–12 November) [A/HRC/16/48]. In addition to its core mandate to assist families in determining the fate or whereabouts of family members who had been reportedly disappeared and to act as a communication channel between families and the Government concerned, the Group monitored compliance with the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance [YUN 1992, p. 744]. The Group, which in 2010 commemorated its thirtieth anniversary, deplored the fact that enforced disappearances continued to occur all over the world and that tens of thousands of cases remained unclarified, many going back decades. The total number of cases transmitted by the Group to Governments since its inception was 53,337. Cases under active consideration that had not been clarified, closed or discontinued totalled 42,633 concerning 83 States. The Group had clarified 1,814 cases over the past five years. Between 14 November 2009 and 12 November 2010, the Group transmitted 105 new cases of enforced disappearance to 22 Governments. Of those, 50 were sent under the urgent action procedure to 15 Governments. The Group also clarified 70 cases in 16 States. The Group's report summarized information on disappearances relating to 93 countries and the Palestinian Authority.

In 2010, the Group adopted two general comments: on enforced disappearance as a continuous crime and on the right to the truth in relation to enforced disappearance.

Mission report. Following its visit to Bosnia and Herzegovina (14–21 June) [A/HRC/16/48/Add.1], the Group stated that much remained to be done to achieve the right to the truth, to justice and to reparation for the disappeared and their families. Recommendations included the establishment of the Central Records of Missing Persons and of the Fund for Support to the Families of Missing Persons, as provided for in the Law on Missing Persons; the integration of enforced disappearance as an autonomous crime in the criminal legislation; increased support to the work of the Missing Persons Institute and to prosecutors working on exhumations and war crimes prosecutions; the establishment of a national programme on reparations for relatives of victims; and the strengthening of protection and assistance programmes for victims and witnesses.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/10)], the Council called on Governments to prevent the occurrence of enforced disappearances, including by abolishing secret places of detention and interrogation. It urged Governments to elucidate the fate of disappeared persons and to ensure that the authorities in charge of investigation and prosecution were provided with adequate means and resources to resolve cases and bring perpetrators to justice. It also encouraged the General Assembly to proclaim 30 August the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances, and requested the Working Group to submit a report on best practices on enforced disappearances in domestic criminal legislation to the Council's sixteenth (2011) session.

In accordance with that request, the Group submitted a December report [A/HRC/16/48/Add.3 & Corr.1] containing examples of best practices, legal analyses, and recommendations to assist States in enhancing existing laws and developing new legislation on enforced disappearance.

General Assembly action. By resolution 65/209 of 21 December (see p. 654), the Assembly declared 30 August the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances.

Missing persons

Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 690], the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee in March submitted a progress report [A/HRC/14/42] on the status of the study on best practices in the matter of missing persons in situations of armed conflict, requested by the Council in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 796]. The report focused on the international legal obligations of States and parties to an armed conflict relating to the issue of missing persons. In response to a questionnaire transmitted to Governments in November 2009, the Secretariat had received replies from 21 Governments. For the final report, the drafting group would analyse those replies and identify the best practices.

Human Rights Council action. On 17 June [A/65/53 (dec. 14/118)], the Council requested the Committee to finalize the study and submit it to the Council's sixteenth (2011) session.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 63/183 [YUN 2008, p. 796], the Secretary-General in August [A/65/285] submitted a report on missing persons reviewing implementation of the resolution. Information received from 17 States, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Commission on Missing Persons and the Argentine Forensic Anthropology Team was grouped under four themes: measures to prevent persons from going missing; the right of families to know; developments in forensic recovery; and the question of impunity. The Secretary-General called on States to adopt measures to prevent persons from going missing, to establish the right to know, to develop forensic science capacity and to counter impunity. As the issue was particularly severe in the context of armed conflict and its aftermath, measures should be taken to minimize the phenomenon, including by establishing processes to locate, identify and repatriate the missing to their families, as well as through the judiciary, parliamentary commissions and truth-seeking mechanisms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/210 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Missing persons

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes, principles and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations,

Guided also by the principles and norms of international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as international standards of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Taking duly into account the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/177 of 20 December 2006,

Recalling all previous relevant resolutions on missing persons adopted by the General Assembly, as well as the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council,

Noting with deep concern that armed conflicts are continuing in various parts of the world, often resulting in serious violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law,

Noting that the issue of persons reported missing in connection with international or non-international armed conflicts, in particular those who are victims of serious violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, continues to have a negative impact on efforts to put an end to those conflicts and inflicts grievous suffering on the families of missing persons, and stressing in this regard the need to address the issue, inter alia, from a humanitarian and rule of law perspective,

Considering that the problem of missing persons may raise questions of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, as appropriate,

Stressing the importance of ending impunity for violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law with respect to missing persons,

Cognizant that States that are parties to an armed conflict have a responsibility for countering the phenomenon of missing persons, taking all appropriate measures to prevent persons from going missing and determining the fate of missing persons and for recognizing their accountability as regards implementing the relevant mechanisms, policies and laws,

Bearing in mind the effective search for and identification of missing persons using forensic sciences, and recognizing that great technological progress has been made in this field, including DNA forensic analysis, which can significantly assist efforts to identify missing persons and to investigate violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law,

Recalling the Agenda for Humanitarian Action, in particular its general objective 1, to “respect and restore the dignity of persons missing as a result of armed conflicts or other situations of armed violence and of their families”, adopted at the Twenty-eighth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 2 to 6 December 2003, and resolution 3 entitled “Reaffirmation and implementation of international humanitarian law: preserving human life and dignity in armed conflict”, adopted at the Thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 November 2007,

Noting the panel discussion on the question of missing persons held at the ninth session of the Human Rights Council,

Taking note of the progress report of the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee on best practices on the issue of missing persons, and noting the request of the Human Rights Council to the Advisory Committee to finalize the study on best practices and to submit it to the Council at its sixteenth session,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 63/183 of 18 December 2008,

Noting with appreciation the ongoing international and regional efforts to address the question of missing persons and the initiatives undertaken by international and regional organizations in this field,

1. Urges States to strictly observe and to respect and ensure respect for the rules of international humanitarian law, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and, where applicable, in the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977;

2. Calls upon States that are parties to an armed conflict to take all appropriate measures to prevent persons from going missing in connection with the armed conflict, to account for persons reported missing as a result of such a situation and to ensure the effective investigation and prosecution of offences linked to missing persons, consistent with their international obligations;

3. Reaffirms the right of families to know the fate of their relatives reported missing in connection with armed conflicts;

4. Also reaffirms that each party to an armed conflict, as soon as circumstances permit and, at the latest, from the end of active hostilities, shall search for the persons who have been reported missing by an adverse party;

5. Calls upon States that are parties to an armed conflict to take all necessary measures, in a timely manner, to determine the identity and fate of persons reported missing in connection with the armed conflict and, to the greatest extent possible, to provide their family members, through appropriate channels, with all relevant information that they have on their fate;

6. Recognizes, in this regard, the need for the collection, protection and management of data on missing persons according to international and national legal norms and standards, and urges States to cooperate with each other and with other concerned actors working in this area, inter alia, by providing all relevant and appropriate information related to missing persons;

7. Requests States to pay the utmost attention to cases of children reported missing in connection with armed conflicts and to take appropriate measures to search for and identify those children and to reunite them with their families;

8. Invites States that are parties to an armed conflict to cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross in establishing the fate of missing persons and to adopt a comprehensive approach to this issue, including all such legal and practical measures and coordination mechanisms as may be necessary, based on humanitarian considerations only;

9. Urges States that are parties to an armed conflict to cooperate, consistent with their international obligations, in order to effectively solve cases of missing persons, including by providing mutual assistance in terms of information-sharing, victim assistance, location and identification of missing persons and recovery, identification and return of human remains;

10. Urges States, and encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to take all necessary measures at the national, regional and international levels to address the problem of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflicts and to provide appropriate assistance as requested by the concerned States, and welcomes in this regard the establishment and efforts of commissions and working groups on missing persons;

11. Calls upon States, without prejudice to their efforts to determine the fate of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflicts, to take appropriate steps with regard to the legal situation of missing persons and the needs of their family members, in such fields as social welfare, financial matters, family law and property rights;

12. Stresses the need to address the issue of missing persons as a part of peace and peacebuilding processes, with reference to all justice and rule of law mechanisms, including the judiciary, parliamentary commissions and truth-finding mechanisms, on the basis of transparency, accountability and public involvement and participation;

13. Invites relevant human rights mechanisms and procedures, as appropriate, to address the problem of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflicts in their forthcoming reports to the General Assembly;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Human Rights Council at its relevant session and to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution, including relevant recommendations;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, the competent United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations;

16. Decides to consider the question at its sixty-seventh session.

Extralegal executions

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2008, p. 803], the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Philip Alston (Australia), in May, submitted his final report [A/HRC/14/24] covering his activities in 2009 and early 2010. The report analysed the activities and working methods of the mandate over the previous six years and identified issues for future research. From December 2004 to March 2009, the Rapporteur sent 523 communications to 87

States (in all regions) concerning over 6,250 individuals. The response rate was generally poor. About half of those drew no response at all, while a quarter drew largely satisfactory responses. Of the 15 countries that received most communications, 7 failed to respond to more than 50 per cent of letters sent. The Rapporteur sent 231 urgent appeals, 276 allegation letters and 16 follow-up letters. Most of the letters concerned death penalty cases (over 150 letters), attacks or killings (over 90 letters), and deaths in custody (over 80). The Rapporteur concluded that a paradox emerged from the review of the mandate's impact. In formal terms, the Council only rarely took any specific action, even when serious violations of the prohibition of extrajudicial executions were apparent. Nor did it generally debate the details of country visit reports or troubling communications exchanges. Meanwhile, there was immense reluctance to respond to the persistent failure of certain States to agree to visit requests over a long period of years. If the Council had the political will, it could do more to prevent unlawful killings and to put in place mechanisms for accountability when atrocities did occur. In terms of real impact, however, the broad range of activities undertaken by the mandate pursuant to the Council's authorization had mattered a great deal. Lives had been saved, lethal practices had been abandoned, greater caution had been shown, and awareness of the issues had grown.

An addendum [A/HRC/14/24/Add.1] detailed communications to and from 44 Governments and the Occupied Palestinian Territory between 16 March 2009 and 15 March 2010, replies received between 1 May 2008 and 30 April 2010, and responses to communications sent in earlier years. Further addenda followed up on the Special Rapporteur's recommendations following his 2007 [A/HRC/14/24/Add.4] visit to Brazil [YUN 2007, p. 746] and his 2008 [A/HRC/14/24/Add.5] visit to the Central African Republic [YUN 2008, p. 803], and presented in-depth studies on targeted killings [A/HRC/14/24/Add.6], election-related violence and killings [A/HRC/14/24/Add.7], and police oversight mechanisms and accountability for killings by the police [A/HRC/14/24/Add.8].

In August [A/65/321], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 63/182 [YUN 2008, p. 805], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report focusing on the relevance of new technologies in tackling extrajudicial executions and the rampant impunity that attached to the phenomenon. The human rights community had failed to take advantage of the opportunities offered by new technologies, whether for fact-finding, monitoring or supervision of States' obligations, and had been slow in coming to grips with the implications of new technologies in areas such as robotics. The Rapporteur examined new technologies and human rights fact-finding; targeted killings and accountability; and extrajudicial executions and robotic technologies. He recommended creating two expert groups: one to examine the more effective use of emerging information and communication technology for human rights monitoring and protection; and the other to examine steps to ensure that robotic technologies were optimized in terms of their capacity to promote more effective compliance with international human rights and humanitarian law.

Mission reports. Following his visit to the Democratic Republic of the Congo (5–15 October 2009) [A/HRC/14/24/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur pointed out that impunity for all forms of killings was the norm. His investigations focused on political killings in Kinshasa and Bas Congo, killings by rebels and the Congolese army in the Kivus and in Province Orientale, deaths in prisons, incidents of sexual violence leading to death, the killing of accused "witches", the killing of human rights defenders and journalists, and vigilante killings. The Rapporteur recommended six achievable reforms to reduce killings and promote accountability: Government provision of uniforms to soldiers that identified their name and rank as a precondition for UN assistance; the indictment of senior commanders accused of war crimes; vastly improved preventative and protection measures for civilians; the integration of the Republican Guard into the Congolese army; a census of the prison population and the establishment of a budget for each prison; and improvements to UN monitoring and reporting.

The Special Rapporteur's visit to Albania (15–23 February 2010) [A/HRC/17/28/Add.3] focused on extrajudicial executions in the context of blood feuds and domestic violence. The blood feuds involved the premeditated revenge killing of a member of a murder victim's family, committed in order to restore the honour lost as a result of the initial murder. While such killings had decreased, the phenomenon had not been eliminated, and its broader implications had a corrosive effect on society. The most important problems were self-isolation by families fearing a revenge killing, and a continued belief in the legitimacy of collective punishment of a wrongdoer's family members. The Rapporteur recommended that the Government ensure adequate research to address root causes and bolster education. In addition, much remained to be done to address the pervasive domestic violence against women. The Government should also prioritize accountability for past crimes, including cooperation with the investigations into killings that allegedly took place following the Kosovo war, and a full accounting for the thousands of disappearances and deaths during the communist era.

Following his mission to Ecuador (5–15 July) [A/HRC/17/28/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur stated that the country faced major challenges relating to extrajudicial executions. The homicide rate had skyrocketed over the previous 20 years. The Government had taken significant steps to address the problem of hired killers, but police and prosecutors were often unwilling to undertake serious investigations where the victim had a criminal or police record. The conflict in Colombia had spilled over into northern Ecuador. Illegal armed groups operating at the border had engaged in abuses and killings of civilians, and the armed forces had committed abuses against civilians. Impunity was a cause and aggravator of all types of killings. Police and prosecutors were often poorly trained and resourced. Witnesses did not know about or trust the witness protection programme. The courts were slow and corruption and threats in the criminal justice system were common. Recommendations included the establishment of a high-level expert commission to evaluate the performance of the national police force; adoption of a national strategy to combat hired killings; and follow-up on the work of the Government's Truth Commission, which had examined violations from 1984 to 2008 and had amassed an invaluable amount of information on abuses.

Appointment of new Special Rapporteur. On 18 June the Human Rights Council appointed Christof Heyns (South Africa) as the new Special Rapporteur.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/208 by recorded vote (122-1-62) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person, the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant human rights conventions,

Reaffirming the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, as set out in Council resolution 8/3 of 18 June 2008,

Welcoming the universal ratification of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, which alongside human rights law provide an important framework of accountability in relation to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions during armed conflict,

Mindful of all its resolutions on the subject of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and of the Human Rights Council on the subject,

Noting with deep concern that impunity continues to be a major cause of the perpetuation of violations of human rights, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions,

Acknowledging that international human rights law and international humanitarian law are complementary and mutually reinforcing,

Noting with deep concern the growing number of civilians and persons hors de combat killed in situations of armed conflict and internal strife,

Acknowledging that extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions may under certain circumstances amount to genocide, crimes against humanity or war crimes, as defined in international law, including in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and recalling in this regard that each individual State has the responsibility to protect its populations from such crimes as set out in General Assembly resolutions 60/1 of 16 September 2005 and 63/308 of 14 September 2009,

Convinced of the need for effective action to prevent, combat and eliminate the abhorrent practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, which represent flagrant violations of human rights or a negative impact on the enjoyment of human rights, particularly the right to life,

1. Strongly condemns once again all the extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that continue to occur throughout the world;

2. Demands that all States ensure that the practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions is brought to an end and that they take effective action to prevent, combat and eliminate the phenomenon in all its forms and manifestations;

3. Reiterates the obligation of all States to conduct exhaustive and impartial investigations into all suspected cases of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to identify and bring to justice those responsible, while ensuring the right of every person to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law, to grant adequate compensation within a reasonable time to the victims or their families and to adopt all necessary measures, including legal and judicial measures, to put an end to impunity and to prevent the further occurrence of such executions, as recommended in the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extralegal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions;

4. Calls upon Governments, and invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to pay greater attention to the work of national-level commissions of inquiry into extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions with a view to ensuring the effective contribution of these commissions to accountability and to combating impunity;

5. Calls upon all States, in order to prevent extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to comply with their obligations under relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, and further calls upon States which retain the death penalty to pay particular regard to the provisions contained in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and articles 37 and 40 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, bearing in mind the safeguards and guarantees set out in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and 1989/64 of 24 May 1989 and taking into account the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions regarding the need to respect essential procedural guarantees, including the right to seek pardon or commutation of sentence;

6. Urges all States:

(a) To take all measures required by international human rights law and international humanitarian law to prevent loss of life, in particular that of children, during public demonstrations, internal and communal violence, civil unrest, public emergencies or armed conflicts and to ensure that the police, law enforcement agents, armed forces and other agents acting on behalf of or with the consent or acquiescence of the State act with restraint and in conformity with international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including the principles of proportionality and necessity, and in this regard to ensure that police and law enforcement officials are guided by the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials;

(b) To ensure the effective protection of the right to life of all persons under their jurisdiction, to investigate promptly and thoroughly all killings, including those targeted at specific groups of persons, such as racially motivated violence leading to the death of the victim, killings of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities or because of their sexual orientation, killings of persons affected by terrorism or hostage-taking or living under foreign occupation, killings of refugees, internally displaced persons, migrants, street children or members of indigenous communities, killings of persons for reasons related to their activities as human rights defenders, lawyers, journalists or demonstrators, killings committed in the name of passion or in the name of honour, all killings committed for discriminatory reasons on any basis as well as all other cases where a person's right to life has been violated, to bring those responsible to justice before a competent, independent and impartial judiciary at the national or, where appropriate, international level and to ensure that such killings, including those committed by security forces, police and law enforcement agents, paramilitary groups or private forces, are neither condoned nor sanctioned by State officials or personnel;

7. Affirms the obligation of States, in order to prevent extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to protect the lives of all persons deprived of their liberty in all circumstances and to investigate and respond to deaths in custody;

8. Urges all States to ensure that persons deprived of their liberty are treated humanely and with full respect for their human rights and that their treatment, including judicial guarantees, and conditions conform to the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and, where applicable, to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 8 June 1977, in relation to all persons detained in armed conflict, as well as to other pertinent international instruments;

9. Urges States to prevent and, where such situations exist, to end prisoner control of prisons, bearing in mind the obligation of the State to protect human rights, including protection against extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

10. Welcomes the International Criminal Court as an important contribution to ending impunity concerning extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and, noting the growing awareness of the Court worldwide, calls upon those States that are under an obligation to cooperate with the Court to provide such cooperation and assistance in the future, in particular with regard to arrest and surrender, the provision of evidence, the protection and relocation of victims and witnesses and the enforcement of sentences, further welcomes the fact that one hundred and fourteen States have already ratified or acceded to and one hundred and thirty-nine States have signed the Rome Statute of the Court, and calls upon all those States that have not ratified or acceded to the Rome Statute to give serious consideration to doing so;

11. Acknowledges the importance of ensuring the protection of witnesses for the prosecution of those suspected of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, urges States to intensify efforts to establish and implement effective witness protection programmes or other measures, and in this regard encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to develop practical tools designed to encourage and facilitate greater attention to the protection of witnesses;

12. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and to support projects with a view to training or educating military forces, law enforcement officers and government officials in human rights and humanitarian law issues connected with their work and to include a gender and child rights perspective in such training, and appeals to the international community and requests the Office of the High Commissioner to support endeavours to that end;

13. Expresses its concern about the occurrence of vigilante killings around the globe, encourages States, in order to support efforts to prevent and end such killings, to undertake or facilitate systematic studies of the phenomenon with a view to taking context-specific measures and focused action, and requests the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant United Nations entities, upon request, to support such studies and their follow-up;

14. Notes the potential of new technologies in the prevention and investigation of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to consider convening, within existing resources, an expert consultation to discuss the current and potential human rights applications of new technologies and the risks and obstacles relating to their effective use, open to the participation of Governments, regional organizations, relevant United Nations bodies, civil society organizations and other relevant stakeholders, and invites the Office to report on the outcome of the consultation, in the form of a summary of discussions, to the Human Rights Council;

15. Takes note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur to the General Assembly;

16. Commends the important role that the Special Rapporteur plays towards the elimination of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue, within his mandate, to collect information from all concerned, to respond effectively to reliable information that comes before him, to follow up on communications and country visits and to seek the views and comments of Governments and to reflect them, as appropriate, in his reports;

17. Acknowledges the important role of the Special Rapporteur in identifying cases where extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions could amount to genocide and crimes against humanity or war crimes, and urges the Special Rapporteur to collaborate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and, as appropriate, the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide in addressing situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that are of particularly serious concern or in which early action might prevent further deterioration;

18. Welcomes the cooperation established between the Special Rapporteur and other United Nations mechanisms and procedures in the field of human rights, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue efforts in that regard;

19. Urges all States, in particular those that have not done so, to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur so that his mandate can be carried out effectively, including by favourably and rapidly responding to requests for visits, mindful that country visits are one of the essential tools for the fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, and by responding in a timely manner to communications and other requests transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur;

20. Expresses its appreciation to those States that have received the Special Rapporteur, asks them to examine his recommendations carefully, invites them to inform him of the actions taken on those recommendations, and requests other States to cooperate in a similar way;

21. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standards of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to have been respected;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with adequate human, financial and material resources to enable him to carry out his mandate effectively, including through country visits;

23. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close collaboration with the High Commissioner, in conformity with the mandate of the High Commissioner established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues form part of United Nations missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with serious violations of human rights, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

24. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth and sixty-seventh sessions a report on the situation worldwide in regard to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and his recommendations for more effective action to combat this phenomenon;

25. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its sixty-seventh session.

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2008, p. 810], the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, Manfred Nowak (Austria), in February [A/HRC/13/39] reported on his activities between 15 December 2008 and 18 December 2009. He observed that torture remained a global phenomenon practised widely in many countries, the major structural reason being the malfunctioning of the administration of justice and, consequently, the lack of respect for safeguards. Most States parties to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813] had failed to fulfil their obligations, such as criminalizing torture, investigating allegations, prosecuting perpetrators and providing redress for victims. In many countries, conditions of detention in police custody, pretrial detention, other detention facilities and sometimes correctional institutions for convicted prisoners amounted to inhuman or degrading treatment; detainees belonged to the most vulnerable and forgotten sectors of society. Other forms of widespread cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment included excessive police violence during arrest, in reacting to demonstrations and political gatherings, combating riots and similar law-enforcement activities, and corporal punishment. States also did not live up to the standard of due diligence required by the obligation not to commit torture by acquiescence when combating torture and ill-treatment by private actors, including harmful traditional practices, such as female genital mutilation, domestic violence and human trafficking, notably of women and children. He made recommendations for the establishment of a global fund to assist States in their efforts to reform national criminal justice systems and for the Human Rights Council to consider drafting a UN convention on the rights of detainees to codify all human rights of persons deprived of liberty.

An addendum [A/HRC/13/39/Add.1 & Corr.1] summarized 70 letters of allegations of torture to 38 Governments and 175 urgent appeals to 59 Governments on behalf of persons who might be at risk of torture or other forms of ill-treatment sent between 15 December 2008 to 18 December 2009, as well as Government responses received up to 31 December 2009.

Further addenda presented a study of the phenomena of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including an assessment of conditions of detention [A/HRC/13/39/Add.5]; and summarized information provided by Governments and non-governmental sources on the implementation of recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and his predecessors following visits in 19 countries [A/HRC/13/39/Add.6].

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 64/153 [YUN 2009, p. 693], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the interim report [A/65/273] of the Special Rapporteur addressing issues of special concern to him. He drew the Assembly's attention to his assessment that torture continued to be widely practised in most States, with impunity being one of its root causes. No further standard-setting was required, as the Convention against Torture contained a broad range of State obligations aimed at preventing and combating torture. Unfortunately, most States had not implemented the obligations aimed at combating impunity. If a competent authority established that torture had been committed, the victims should enjoy the right to reparation, including the means for full rehabilitation. States, therefore, had a legal obligation to establish and support rehabilitation centres for victims and to ensure the safety of the staff and patients of such centres. To prevent torture, the Rapporteur called on States to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture [YUN 2002, p. 631] and to establish, in accordance with its provisions, independent national preventive mechanisms tasked with conducting regular and unannounced visits to places of detention.

Mission reports. During his visit to Jamaica (12–21 February) [A/HRC/16/52/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur did not find that torture, in the classical sense of deliberately inflicting severe pain or suffering as a means of extracting a confession or information, constituted a major problem. He did find, however, a general atmosphere of violence and aggression in almost all police stations, as well as discriminatory practices against detainees. The overall conditions at police stations reflected a complete disregard for the dignity of detainees, and detention in such conditions for up to several years amounted to inhuman treatment. The Rapporteur also received consistent allegations that corporal punishment was routinely applied in remand and correctional centres. Torture was not defined in criminal legislation, nor was Jamaica a party to the Convention against Torture. The Rapporteur recommended ratification of the Convention and Optional Protocol by the Government; prompt and thorough ex officio investigations for allegations of ill-treatment or excessive use of force; reduction of the time limits for police custody to 48 hours; the establishment of accessible and effective complaints mechanisms; bringing the Independent Commission of Investigation into force; the removal of children in conflict with the law from adult detention facilities and the establishment of clear guidelines for punishments; and abolishing the death penalty.

During his mission to Papua New Guinea (14–25 May) [A/HRC/16/52/Add.5], the Special Rapporteur found a considerable number of cases where persons were subjected to different degrees of beatings by the police during arrest and as a form of punishment, which might amount to torture. Impunity for torture and ill-treatment was fuelled by the lack of effective complaint mechanisms, independent investigations, monitoring and other safeguards. The Rapporteur found a general atmosphere of violence and neglect in places of detention. He recommended that the Government's highest authorities issue an unambiguous declaration that they would not tolerate torture or ill-treatment by public officials. He urged the Government to ratify the Convention and the Optional Protocol; amend legislation to include the crime of torture with adequate penalties; ensure prompt and thorough ex officio investigations for all allegations and suspicions of ill-treatment or excessive use of force; reduce the time limits for police custody to 48 hours; establish effective complaint mechanisms; and reform the Royal Papua New Guinea Constabulary. He also recommended establishing an OHCHR country presence.

Following his mission to Greece (10–20 October) [A/HRC/16/52/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur pointed out the overwhelming situation faced by law-enforcement officials confronted with a major increase of irregular migrants and refugees, mostly via the land border with Turkey. He had received numerous reports of ill-treatment by police officers, some amounting to torture, but with little forensic evidence to corroborate the allegations. The non-functioning system of police investigation and complaint mechanisms created an environment of powerlessness for victims of abuse and might perpetuate a system of impunity for police violence. The Rapporteur called upon the European Union (EU) and UN agencies to assist the country with its migration burden. He also urged EU member States to suspend all returns under the Dublin II Regulation and to design a fairer system of burden-sharing with respect to receiving irregular migrants and refugees.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/19)], the Council emphasized that States must take persistent, determined and effective measures to prevent and combat all acts of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. It encouraged States to prohibit acts constituting cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Communication. On 22 February [A/HRC/13/G/15], Kazakhstan submitted its comments on the Special Rapporteur's 2009 mission to the country [YUN 2009, p. 693].

Appointment of Special Rapporteur. On 29 September, the Human Rights Council appointed Juan Ernesto Méndez (Argentina) as the new Special Rapporteur.

Voluntary Fund for torture victims

Report of Secretary-General. In his annual report [A/65/265] to the General Assembly on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, the Secretary-General provided information on the recommendations of the Fund's Board of Trustees at its thirty-first [YUN 2009, p. 693] and thirty-second (Geneva, 1–3 February) sessions. At those sessions, the Board made recommendations for grants for 2010 for more than 230 projects carried out by NGOs in over 70 countries, for an amount of $11,343,072. The High Commissioner for Human Rights approved those recommendations on behalf of the Secretary-General. Contributions from 17 countries and two individuals from 23 October 2009 to 5 August 2010 amounted to $9,434,321, while pledges from five countries totalled $7,948,069.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 21 December (decision 65/536).

The Secretary-General further reported [A/HRC/16/31] on the Board's thirty-third session (Geneva, 18–22 October), at which the Board made recommendations for allocating in 2011 $9,525,050 in grants for over 303 projects in more than 70 countries. The High Commissioner approved the recommendations on 22 November on behalf of the Secretary-General. Between 1 January and 25 November, the Fund received $9,048,6598 in contributions and pledges from 19 countries as well as individuals. Consideration of funding for training and seminars was postponed to the thirty-fourth (2011) session, subject to the availability of resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.1], adopted resolution 65/205 without vote [agenda item 68 (a)].

Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that no one shall be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling that freedom from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is a non-derogable right that must be protected under all circumstances, including in times of international or internal armed conflict or disturbance or any other public emergency, that the absolute prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is affirmed in relevant international instruments and that legal and procedural safeguards against such acts must not be subject to measures that would circumvent this right,

Recalling also that the prohibition of torture is a peremptory norm of international law and that international, regional and domestic courts have held the prohibition of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment to be customary international law,

Recalling further the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, without prejudice to any international instrument or national legislation which contains or may contain provisions of wider application,

Emphasizing the importance of properly interpreting and implementing the obligations of States with respect to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and of abiding strictly by the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention,

Noting that, under the Geneva Conventions of 1949, torture and inhuman treatment are a grave breach and that, under the statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, the statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 and the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, acts of torture can constitute crimes against humanity and, when committed in a situation of armed conflict, constitute war crimes,

Emphasizing that the entry into force as soon as possible of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance and its implementation will make a significant contribution to the prevention and prohibition of torture, including by prohibiting secret places of detention, and encouraging all States that have not done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the Convention,

Commending the persistent efforts of civil society organizations, including non-governmental organizations, national human rights institutions and the considerable network of centres for the rehabilitation of victims of torture, to prevent and combat torture and to alleviate the suffering of victims of torture,

1. Condemns all forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including through intimidation, which are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever and can thus never be justified, and calls upon all States to implement fully the absolute and non-derogable prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

2. Emphasizes that States must take persistent, determined and effective measures to prevent and combat all acts of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, stresses that all acts of torture must be made offences under domestic criminal law, and encourages States to prohibit under domestic law acts constituting cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

3. Welcomes the establishment of national preventive mechanisms to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, encourages all States that have not yet done so to establish such mechanisms, and calls upon States parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to fulfil their obligation to designate or establish truly independent and effective national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

4. Emphasizes the importance of States ensuring proper follow-up to the recommendations and conclusions of the relevant treaty bodies and mechanisms, including the Committee against Torture, the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

5. Condemns any action or attempt by States or public officials to legalize, authorize or acquiesce in torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under any circumstances, including on grounds of national security or through judicial decisions;

6. Stresses that an independent, competent domestic authority must promptly, effectively and impartially investigate all allegations of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, as well as wherever there is reasonable ground to believe that such an act has been committed, and that those who encourage, order, tolerate or perpetrate such acts must be held responsible, brought to justice and punished in a manner commensurate with the severity of the offence, including the officials in charge of the place of detention where the prohibited act is found to have been committed;

7. Recalls, in this respect, the Principles on the Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the Istanbul Principles) as a useful tool in efforts to prevent and combat torture and the updated set of principles for the protection and promotion of human rights through action to combat impunity;

8. Calls upon all States to implement effective measures to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, particularly in places of detention and other places where persons are deprived of their liberty, including education and training of personnel who may be involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any individual subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment;

9. Urges States, as an important element in preventing and combating torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, to ensure that no authority or official orders, applies, permits or tolerates any sanction or other prejudice against any person or organization for having been in contact with any national or international monitoring or preventive body active in the prevention and combating of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

10. Calls upon all States to adopt a gender-sensitive approach in the fight against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, paying special attention to gender-based violence;

11. Calls upon States to ensure that the rights of persons with disabilities, bearing in mind the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, are fully integrated into torture prevention and protection, and welcomes the efforts of the Special Rapporteur in this regard;

12. Encourages all States to ensure that persons convicted of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment have no subsequent involvement in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any person under arrest, detention, imprisonment or other deprivation of liberty and that persons charged with torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment have no involvement in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any person under arrest, detention, imprisonment or other deprivation of liberty while such charges are pending;

13. Emphasizes that acts of torture in armed conflict are serious violations of international humanitarian law and in this regard constitute war crimes, that acts of torture can constitute crimes against humanity and that the perpetrators of all acts of torture must be prosecuted and punished;

14. Strongly urges States to ensure that no statement that is established to have been made as a result of torture is invoked as evidence in any proceedings, except against a person accused of torture as evidence that the statement was made, calls upon States to consider extending that prohibition to statements made as a result of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and recognizes that adequate corroboration of statements, including confessions, used as evidence in any proceedings constitutes one safeguard for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

15. Stresses that States must not punish personnel for not obeying orders to commit or conceal acts amounting to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

16. Urges States not to expel, return (“refouler”), extradite or in any other way transfer a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that the person would be in danger of being subjected to torture, and recognizes that diplomatic assurances, where used, do not release States from their obligations under international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law, in particular the principle of non-refoulement;

17. Recalls that, for the purpose of determining whether there are such grounds, the competent authorities shall take into account all relevant considerations, including, where applicable, the existence in the State concerned of a consistent pattern of gross, flagrant or mass violations of human rights;

18. Calls upon States parties to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to fulfil their obligation to submit for prosecution or extradite those alleged to have committed acts of torture, and encourages other States to do likewise, bearing in mind the need to fight impunity;

19. Stresses that national legal systems must ensure that victims of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment obtain redress, are awarded fair and adequate compensation and receive appropriate social, psychological, medical and other relevant specialized rehabilitation, and urges States to establish, maintain, facilitate or support rehabilitation centres or facilities where victims of torture can receive such treatment and where effective measures for ensuring the safety of their staff and patients are taken;

20. Recalls its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988 on the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, and in this context stresses that ensuring that any individual arrested or detained is promptly brought before a judge or other independent judicial officer in person and permitting prompt and regular medical care and legal counsel as well as visits by family members and independent monitoring mechanisms are effective measures for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

21. Reminds all States that prolonged incommunicado detention or detention in secret places can facilitate the perpetration of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and can in itself constitute a form of such treatment, and urges all States to respect the safeguards concerning the liberty, security and dignity of the person and to ensure that secret places of detention and interrogation are abolished;

22. Emphasizes that conditions of detention must respect the dignity and human rights of detainees, highlights the importance of reflecting on this in efforts to promote respect for and protection of the rights of detainees, and notes in this regard concerns about solitary confinement;

23. Calls upon all States to take appropriate effective legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures to prevent and prohibit the production, trade, export and use of equipment that is specifically designed to inflict torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

24. Urges all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority, and calls upon States parties to give early consideration to signing and ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention;

25. Urges all States parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to make the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 concerning inter-State and individual communications, to consider the possibility of withdrawing their reservations to article 20 and to notify the Secretary-General of their acceptance of the amendments to articles 17 and 18 with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of the Committee as soon as possible;

26. Urges States parties to comply strictly with their obligations under the Convention, including, in view of the high number of reports not submitted in time, their obligation to submit reports in accordance with article 19 of the Convention, and invites States parties to incorporate a gender perspective and information concerning children and juveniles and persons with disabilities when submitting reports to the Committee;

27. Welcomes the work of the Committee and its report submitted in accordance with article 24 of the Convention, recommends that the Committee continue to include information on the follow-up by States to its recommendations, and supports the Committee in its intention to further improve the effectiveness of its working methods;

28. Invites the Chairs of the Committee and of the Subcommittee to present oral reports on the work of the committees and to engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments";

29. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in conformity with her mandate established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to continue to provide, at the request of States, advisory services for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including for the preparation of national reports to the Committee and for the establishment and operation of national preventive mechanisms, as well as technical assistance for the development, production and distribution of teaching material for this purpose;

30. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue to include in his recommendations proposals on the prevention and investigation of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including its gender-based manifestations;

31. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue to consider including in his report information on the follow-up by States to his recommendations, visits and communications, including progress made and problems encountered, and on other official contacts;

32. Calls upon all States to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in the performance of his task, to supply all necessary information requested by the Special Rapporteur, to fully and expeditiously respond to and follow up on his urgent appeals, to give serious consideration to responding favourably to requests by the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries and to enter into a constructive dialogue with the Special Rapporteur on requested visits to their countries as well as with respect to the follow-up to his recommendations;

33. Stresses the need for the continued regular exchange of views among the Committee, the Subcommittee, the Special Rapporteur and other relevant United Nations mechanisms and bodies, as well as for the pursuance of cooperation with relevant United Nations programmes, notably the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, with regional organizations and mechanisms, as appropriate, and with civil society organizations, including non-governmental organizations, with a view to enhancing further their effectiveness and cooperation on issues relating to the prevention and eradication of torture, inter alia, by improving their coordination;

34. Recognizes the global need for international assistance to victims of torture, stresses the importance of the work of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, appeals to all States and organizations to contribute annually to the Fund, preferably with a substantial increase in the level of contributions, and encourages contributions to the Special Fund established by the Optional Protocol to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee as well as education programmes of the national preventive mechanisms;

35. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to transmit to all States the appeals of the General Assembly for contributions to the Funds and to include the Funds on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

36. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Human Rights Council and to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the operations of the Funds;

37. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure, within the overall budgetary framework of the United Nations, the provision of adequate staff and facilities for the bodies and mechanisms involved in preventing and combating torture and assisting victims of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including, in particular, the Committee, the Subcommittee and the Special Rapporteur, commensurate with the strong support expressed by Member States for preventing and combating torture and assisting victims of torture, in order to enable them to discharge their mandates in a comprehensive, sustained and effective manner and taking fully into account the specific nature of their mandates;

38. Calls upon all States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other United Nations bodies and agencies, as well as relevant intergovernmental and civil society organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to commemorate, on 26 June, the United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture;

39. Decides to consider at its sixty-sixth session the reports of the Secretary-General, including the report on the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture and the Special Fund established by the Optional Protocol, the report of the Committee against Torture and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Arbitrary detention

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its fifty-seventh (3–7 May), fifty-eighth (30 August–3 September) and fifty-ninth (18–26 November) sessions in Geneva [A/HRC/16/47 & Corr.1]. Between 1 January and 30 November, the Group adopted 33 opinions concerning 98 persons in 23 States; the texts of 23 opinions were contained in an addendum [A/HRC/16/47/Add.1 & Corr.1] and 10 in a later addendum [A/HRC/19/57/Add.1]. Between 16 November 2009 and 17 November 2010, the Group transmitted 102 urgent appeals to 56 States concerning 2,826 individuals, including 50 women and 2 boys. Governments and sources reported that 23 persons were released.

The States informed the Group that they had taken measures to remedy the situation of the detainees: in some cases, the detainees were released; in other cases, the Working Group was assured that the detainees concerned would be guaranteed a fair trial. The Working Group engaged in a continuous dialogue with the countries it visited, in respect of which it recommended changes to domestic legislation governing detention or the adoption of other measures. Information about the implementation of the recommendations made by the Group to the countries visited in 2008 [YUN 2008, pp. 798–799] was received from Ukraine.

In 2010, the Working Group devoted its attention to the application of international human rights law to situations of armed conflict and its impact on the Group's mandate. It also addressed the issue of secret detention in the context of countering terrorism. The Group stressed that Governments should comply with norms of international human rights law protecting individuals against arbitrary detention even during armed conflict. No jurisdiction should allow for individuals to be deprived of their liberty in secret for potentially indefinite periods without the possibility of resorting to legal procedures, including habeas corpus. The Group also raised concerns over reprisals suffered by a judge as well as individuals who were the subject of its urgent appeals or opinions. It reiterated its proposal to the Human Rights Council to expand its mandate to include the examination of conditions of detention around the world, and the monitoring of State compliance with obligations concerning the rights of detained and imprisoned persons.

Joint study. A global joint study into the practice of secret detention [A/HRC/13/42] prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the protection of human rights while countering terrorism, the Special Rapporteur on Torture, the Chair-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Vice-Chair of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, highlighted examples in 66 States, from all geographical regions, which appeared to have been implicated in secret detention in the context of counter-terrorism (see p. 713).

Mission reports. Following its visit to Malaysia (7–17 June) [A/HRC/16/47/Add.2], the Working Group noted that most prisons met international standards on conditions. The Group observed, however, the relatively long periods accused persons spent in pretrial detention. Police agents often failed to inform detainees about their rights to contact family members and to consult a lawyer. Limited pretrial discovery prevented defendants from defending themselves and prosecution evidence was not consistently made available. The law imposed excessive restrictions on appeals and the habeas corpus resource was rarely used, and solely for procedural issues. The Group recommended that the Government abrogate four preventive laws hindering human rights guarantees; bring detention under immigration powers in line with international human rights law; and strengthen the National Human Rights Commission.

Following its mission to Armenia (6–15 September) [A/HRC/16/47/Add.3], the Working Group noted the many legislative reforms and initiatives against the occurrences of deprivation of liberty. Greater commitment was needed, however, in implementing those laws, along with systemic changes to improve the practices of the police, prosecution and the judiciary in ensuring that human rights standards were adhered to when a person was deprived of liberty. The Group recommended that the Government: protect the right to due process and the independence of judges and magistrates; make changes to the law and practice on remand and sentencing; and eliminate the use of torture and ill-treatment of people deprived of liberty. The law and practice on remand, in relation to sentencing, had resulted in lengthy detentions that were disproportionate to the crimes of which a person was convicted. Violence during arrest and interrogation also required attention. Criminal procedure reform should regulate the practice of inviting persons as witnesses to police interviews and subsequently considering them as suspects, because of the possibility of non-respect of the maximum term for police detention and potential violations of their rights. The Group also recommended better protection for asylum-seekers, refugees and migrants in an irregular situation.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/18)], the Council requested the States concerned to take account of the Working Group's views and take steps to remedy the situation of persons arbitrarily deprived of their liberty. Noting that a persistent proportion of the Group's urgent appeals had been left unanswered, the Council urged States to give the necessary attention to those appeals. The Council extended the Group's mandate for a further three-year period and requested OHCHR to organize in 2011 a one-day event to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the Group's establishment.

Terrorism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 698], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, Martin Scheinin (Finland), reported on his activities from 1 August to 15 December 2009 [A/HRC/13/37]. He highlighted concerns regarding the protection of the right to privacy in the fight against terrorism, including the importance of data protection, and noted that the erosion of the right to privacy took place through the use of surveillance powers and new technologies, which were used without adequate legal safeguards. States had endangered the protection of the right by not extending safeguards in their cooperation with third countries and private actors. Those measures led to violations of the right to privacy, and had an impact on due process rights and the freedom of movement—especially at borders—and could have a chilling effect on the freedoms of association and of expression. Without a rigorous set of legal safeguards and a means to measure the necessity, proportionality and reasonableness of the interference, States had no guidance on minimizing the risks to privacy generated by their new policies. The Rapporteur identified some of the legal safeguards that had emerged from around the world and made recommendations to legislative assemblies, executive powers and the United Nations to improve the protection of that right in the fight against terrorism.

An addendum [A/HRC/13/37/Add.1] summarized 19 communications and one press release transmitted to 15 Governments in 2009, and 11 replies received from 10 Governments.

In May [A/HRC/14/46], as requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 698], the Special Rapporteur submitted a compilation of good practices on legal and institutional frameworks and measures that ensured respect for human rights by intelligence agencies while countering terrorism, including on their oversight. The compilation was the outcome of consultations with Governments, experts and practitioners, whose submissions were issued as an addendum [A/HRC/14/46/Add.1].

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 64/168 [YUN 2009, p. 698], the Secretary-General in August transmitted to the Assembly the report [A/65/258] of the Special Rapporteur, which addressed the question of UN compliance with international human rights law when countering terrorism. After an account of the Rapporteur's activities between November 2009 and July 2010, the report assessed the role and contributions of the General Assembly, the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force, the Human Rights Council, the Security Council and its subsidiary bodies, and UN field presences in promoting and protecting human rights in the context of their counter-terrorism activities. The report's main recommendation was for the Security Council to seize the opportunity of the approaching tenth anniversary of its resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61] to replace resolutions 1373(2001), 1624(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 102] and 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] (as amended) with a single resolution, not adopted under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, in order to systematize States' counter-terrorism measures and reporting duties under one framework. The proposal was motivated by the Rapporteur's assessment that Chapter VII did not provide the proper legal basis for maintaining the current framework of mandatory and permanent Security Council resolutions of a quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial nature. The report also addressed ways and means of improving the human rights accountability of UN field operations, including in the context of countering terrorism, as well as the contributions of various actors in implementing the 2006 UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy [YUN 2006, p. 66].

Mission reports. Following his visit to Tunisia (22–26 January) [A/HRC/16/51/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur concluded that the definition of terrorism was vague and broad, hence deviating from the principle of legality and allowing for wide usage of counter-terrorism measures. He stressed the importance of a strict definition of terrorism, which also affected other legal provisions relating to membership in and support for terrorist organizations and incitement to terrorism. Some of those provisions might lead to undue restrictions of other human rights, such as freedoms of expression, religion and association. He observed a pattern of unacknowledged detention being used vis-à-vis terrorist suspects, during which those suspects were at high risk of being subjected to torture and ill-treatment. The secrecy that surrounded custody and interrogations by the police unit in charge of interrogating those suspects rendered investigations into abuses improbable and, consequently, led to a lack of accountability and to impunity. The Rapporteur recommended revising the definition of terrorism, amending provisions of the counter-terrorism law regarding incitement, membership and financing of terrorism, ending secret detention, allowing for independent monitoring, establishing effective complaints mechanisms, reinforcing accountability, strengthening the independence of the judiciary and ensuring the right to a fair trial.

Following his mission to Peru (1–8 September) [A/HRC/16/51/Add.3 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur concluded that the country provided important lessons with regard to the provision of justice and compensation for the suffering caused by the internal armed conflict between 1980 and 2000, yet was concerned by the slow progress in the implementation of the reparations scheme. Also of concern was the tendency in certain political circles to associate human rights defenders and social protest movements with terrorism. He made a number of recommendations to counter their stigmatization; implement collective reparation programmes; accelerate the resolution of the remaining cases of human rights violations committed by State security forces during the conflict; and bring criminal legislation on terrorism into line with international human rights standards. Implementing those recommendations would address conditions conducive to terrorism and make legitimate counter-terrorism measures even more effective.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/168 [YUN 2009, p. 698], the Secretary-General in August reported [A/65/224] on developments within the UN system in relation to human rights and counter-terrorism, including through the activities of OHCHR, the Human Rights Council and its special procedures mandates, the human rights treaty bodies, the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force and its Working Group on Protecting Human Rights while Countering Terrorism, the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate. He reported on the consideration by the UN human rights system of issues relating to compliance of legislation, and policies and practices for countering terrorism with international law, including international human rights laws. He urged Member States to ensure respect for human rights and the rule of law as the fundamental basis of all counter-terrorism measures.

Report of High Commissioner. In accordance with a request by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 698], the High Commissioner in January [A/HRC/13/36] reported on the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism. She highlighted the need to protect and promote all human rights and to maintain effective counter-terrorism measures; those were mutually reinforcing objectives that must be pursued together as part of the duty of States to protect human rights. The High Commissioner outlined her activities regarding counter-terrorism measures and her role in implementing the UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and its Plan of Action [YUN 2006, p. 66]. She identified challenges related to complying with human rights obligations, in particular the issues of accountability, ending impunity and effective remedies in the context of countering terrorism.

Joint study. In February, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, together with the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention and the Working Group on Enforced and Involuntary Disappearances, submitted to the Council a joint study [A/HRC/13/42] on global practices in relation to secret detention in the context of countering terrorism. The study described the international legal framework applicable to secret detention, provided an historical overview of its use, discussed its use in the context of the “global war on terror” and addressed the level of involvement and complicity of a number of countries.

On 27 January, Romania submitted its comment [A/HRC/13/G/13] on the draft joint study, rejecting allegations by the international mass media concerning the existence in the country of United States Central Intelligence Agency detention centres for suspected terrorists.

On 26 February, the United Kingdom submitted a note [A/HRC/13/G/12] in response to the joint study, rejecting allegations of United Kingdom involvement in the practice of secret detention.

On 1 March [A/HRC/13/G/14], Mauritius addressed references in the study to the “United Kingdom Overseas Territory of Diego Garcia”, reiterating that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia island, was part of the territory of Mauritius. Mauritius expressed concern that its territory might be used for activities in breach of international human rights treaties.

On 10 March [A/HRC/13/G/17], the United Kingdom replied that it had no doubt about its sovereignty over the British Indian Ocean Territory and reiterated that it would cede the Territory to Mauritius when it was no longer required for defence purposes.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/26)], the Council called on States to ensure that any measure taken to counter terrorism complied with international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law; to ensure that persons whose human rights had been violated had access to an effective remedy and adequate reparations; and to safeguard the right to privacy in accordance with international law. The High Commissioner and the Special Rapporteur were requested to report to the Council’s sixteenth (2011) session.

On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/15)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period.

On 1 October [dec. 15/116], the Council decided to convene, at its sixteenth (2011) session, a panel discussion on the issue of human rights in the context of action taken to address terrorist hostage-taking, with a special focus on the responsibility of States to promote and protect human rights; the strengthening of international cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism; and the protection of the rights of all victims of terrorism. OHCHR was requested to submit a report on the panel discussion.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/221 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming further the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Reaffirming the fundamental importance, including in response to terrorism and the fear of terrorism, of respecting all human rights and fundamental freedoms and the rule of law,

Reaffirming also that States are under the obligation to protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons,

Reaffirming further that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group,

Reiterating the important contribution of measures taken at all levels against terrorism, consistent with international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law, to the functioning of democratic institutions and the maintenance of peace and security and thereby to the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the need to continue this fight, including through strengthening international cooperation and the role of the United Nations in this respect,

Deeply deploring the occurrence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of the fight against terrorism, as well as violations of international refugee and humanitarian law,

Noting with concern measures that can undermine human rights and the rule of law, such as the detention of persons suspected of acts of terrorism in the absence of a legal basis for detention and due process guarantees, the deprivation of liberty that amounts to placing a detained person outside the protection of the law, the trial of suspects without fundamental judicial guarantees, the illegal deprivation of liberty and transfer of individuals suspected of terrorist activities, and the return of suspects to countries without individual assessment of the risk of there being substantial grounds for believing that they would be in danger of subjection to torture, and limitations to effective scrutiny of counter-terrorism measures,

Stressing that all measures used in the fight against terrorism, including the profiling of individuals and the use of diplomatic assurances, memorandums of understanding and other transfer agreements or arrangements, must be in compliance with the obligations of States under international law, including international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

Recalling article 30 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and reaffirming that acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations are activities aimed at the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and democracy, threatening the territorial integrity and security of States and destabilizing legitimately constituted Governments, and that the international community should take the necessary steps to enhance cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Reaffirming its unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, regardless of their motivation, as criminal and unjustifiable, and renewing its commitment to strengthen international cooperation to prevent and combat terrorism,

Recognizing that respect for all human rights, respect for democracy and respect for the rule of law are interrelated and mutually reinforcing,

Emphasizing the importance of properly interpreting and implementing the obligations of States with respect to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and of abiding strictly by the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, in the fight against terrorism,

Recalling its resolution 64/168 of 18 December 2009 and Human Rights Council resolution 13/26 of 26 March 2010 and other relevant resolutions and decisions as stated in the preamble to resolution 64/168, and welcoming the efforts of all relevant stakeholders to implement those resolutions,

Recalling also its resolution 60/288 of 8 September 2006, by which it adopted the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, and its resolution 64/297 of 8 September 2010 on the review of the Strategy, and reaffirming that the promotion and protection of human rights for all and the rule of law are essential to the fight against terrorism, recognizing that effective counter-terrorism measures and the protection of human rights are not conflicting goals but complementary and mutually reinforcing, and stressing the need to promote and protect the rights of victims of terrorism,

Recalling further Human Rights Council resolution 15/15 of 30 September 2010, by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism,

Recalling its resolution 64/115 of 16 December 2009 and the annex thereto entitled "Introduction and implementation of sanctions imposed by the United Nations", in particular the provisions of the annex regarding listing and de-listing procedures,

1. Reaffirms that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

2. Deeply deplores the suffering caused by terrorism to the victims and their families, expresses its profound solidarity with them, and stresses the importance of providing them with assistance;

3. Expresses serious concern at the occurrence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as of international refugee and humanitarian law, committed in the context of countering terrorism;

4. Reaffirms that counter-terrorism measures should be implemented in accordance with international law, including international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law, thereby taking into full consideration the human rights of all, including persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, and in this regard must not be discriminatory on grounds such as race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin;

5. Also reaffirms the obligation of States, in accordance with article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect certain rights as non-derogable in any circumstances, recalls, in regard to all other Covenant rights, that any measures derogating from the provisions of the Covenant must be in accordance with that article in all cases, and underlines the exceptional and temporary nature of any such derogations, and in this regard calls upon States to raise awareness about the importance of these obligations among national authorities involved in combating terrorism;

6. Urges States, while countering terrorism:

(a) To fully comply with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law, with regard to the absolute prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(b) To take all steps necessary to ensure that persons deprived of liberty, regardless of the place of arrest or detention, benefit from the guarantees to which they are entitled under international law, including the review of the detention and other fundamental judicial guarantees;

(c) To ensure that no form of deprivation of liberty places a detained person outside the protection of the law, and to respect the safeguards concerning the liberty, security and dignity of the person, in accordance with international law, including international human rights and humanitarian law;

(d) To treat all prisoners in all places of detention in accordance with international law, including international human rights and humanitarian law;

(e) To respect the right of persons to equality before the law, courts and tribunals and to a fair trial as provided for in international law, including international human rights law, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and international humanitarian and refugee law;

(f) To safeguard the right to privacy in accordance with international law, and to take measures to ensure that interferences with the right to privacy are regulated by law, and subject to effective oversight and appropriate redress, including through judicial review or other means;

(g) To protect all human rights, including economic, social and cultural rights, bearing in mind that certain counter-terrorism measures may have an impact on the enjoyment of these rights;

(h) To ensure that guidelines and practices in all border control operations and other pre-entry mechanisms are clear and fully respect their obligations under international law, particularly international refugee and human rights law, towards persons seeking international protection;

(i) To fully respect non-refoulement obligations under international refugee and human rights law and, at the same time, to review, with full respect for these obligations and other legal safeguards, the validity of a refugee status decision in an individual case if credible and relevant evidence comes to light that indicates that the person in question has committed any criminal acts, including terrorist acts, falling under the exclusion clauses under international refugee law;

(j) To refrain from returning persons, including in cases related to terrorism, to their countries of origin or to a third State whenever such transfer would be contrary to their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law, including in cases where there are substantial grounds for believing that they would be in danger of subjection to torture, or where their life or freedom would be threatened, in violation of international refugee law, on account of their race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion, bearing in mind obligations that States may have to prosecute individuals not returned;

(k) Insofar as such an act runs contrary to their obligations under international law, not to expose individuals to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment by way of return to another country;

(l) To ensure that their laws criminalizing acts of terrorism are accessible, formulated with precision, non-discriminatory, non-retroactive and in accordance with international law, including human rights law;

(m) Not to resort to profiling based on stereotypes founded on grounds of discrimination prohibited by international law, including on racial, ethnic and/or religious grounds;

(n) To ensure that the interrogation methods used against terrorism suspects are consistent with their international obligations and are reviewed to prevent the risk of violations of their obligations under international law, including international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

(o) To ensure that any person whose human rights or fundamental freedoms have been violated has access to an effective remedy and that victims receive adequate, effective and prompt reparations, where appropriate, including by bringing to justice those responsible for such violations;

(p) To ensure due process guarantees, consistent with all relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and their obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, and the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto in their respective fields of applicability;

(q) To shape and implement all counter-terrorism measures in accordance with the principles of gender equality and non-discrimination;

7. Also urges States, while countering terrorism, to take into account relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions on human rights, and encourages them to give due consideration to the recommendations of the special procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council and to the relevant comments and views of United Nations human rights treaty bodies;

8. Acknowledges the adoption of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance in its resolution 61/177 of 20 December 2006, and recognizes that the entry into force of the Convention and its implementation will be an important step in support of the rule of law in countering terrorism;

9. Recognizes the need to continue ensuring that fair and clear procedures under the United Nations terrorism-related sanctions regime are strengthened in order to enhance their efficiency and transparency, and welcomes and encourages the ongoing efforts of the Security Council in support of these objectives, including by establishing an office of the ombudsperson and continuing to review all the names of individuals and entities in the regime, while emphasizing the importance of these sanctions in countering terrorism;

10. Urges States, while ensuring full compliance with their international obligations, to ensure the rule of law and to include adequate human rights guarantees in their national procedures for the listing of individuals and entities with a view to combating terrorism;

11. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism to continue to contribute to the work of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force, including by raising awareness, inter alia, through regular dialogue, about the need to respect human rights and the rule of law while countering terrorism;

12. Welcomes the ongoing dialogue established in the context of the fight against terrorism between the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee and the relevant bodies for the promotion and protection of human rights, and encourages the Security Council and its Counter-Terrorism Committee to strengthen the links, cooperation and dialogue with relevant human rights bodies, in particular with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, other relevant special procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council, and relevant treaty bodies, giving due regard to the promotion and protection of human rights and the rule of law in their ongoing work relating to counter-terrorism;

13. Calls upon States and other relevant actors, as appropriate, to continue to implement the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, which, inter alia, reaffirms respect for human rights for all and the rule of law as the fundamental basis of the fight against terrorism;

14. Calls upon the United Nations entities involved in supporting counter-terrorism efforts to continue to facilitate the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as due process and the rule of law, while countering terrorism;

15. Requests the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force to continue its efforts to ensure that the United Nations can better coordinate and enhance its support to Member States in their efforts to comply with their obligations under international law, including international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law, while countering terrorism, and to encourage the Working Groups of the Task Force to incorporate a human rights perspective into their work;

16. Encourages relevant United Nations bodies and entities and international, regional and subregional organizations, in particular those participating in the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force, which provide technical assistance, upon request, consistent with their mandates and as appropriate, related to the prevention and suppression of terrorism to step up their efforts to ensure respect for international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law, as well as the rule of law, as an element of technical assistance, including in the adoption and implementation of legislative and other measures by States;

17. Urges relevant United Nations bodies and entities and international, regional and subregional organizations, including the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, within its mandate related to the prevention and suppression of terrorism, to step up their efforts to provide, upon request, technical assistance for building the capacity of Member States in the development and implementation of programmes of assistance and support for victims of terrorism in accordance with relevant national legislation;

18. Calls upon international, regional and subregional organizations to strengthen information-sharing, coordination and cooperation in promoting the protection of human rights, fundamental freedoms and the rule of law while countering terrorism;

19. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, submitted pursuant to resolution 64/168;

20. Requests the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism to make recommendations, in the context of his mandate, with regard to preventing, combating and redressing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the context of countering terrorism;

21. Requests all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism in the performance of the tasks and duties mandated, including by reacting promptly to the urgent appeals of the Special Rapporteur and providing the information requested, and to give serious consideration to responding favourably to his requests to visit their countries, as well as to cooperate with other relevant procedures and mechanisms of the Human Rights Council regarding the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism;

22. Welcomes the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to implement the mandate given to her in 2005, in resolution 60/158, and requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts in this regard;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Human Rights Council and to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session;

24. Decides to consider at its sixty-sixth session the report of the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism.

Right to peace

OHCHR report. OHCHR in March [A/HRC/14/38] reported on the expert workshop on the right of peoples to peace (Geneva, 15–16 December 2009), held following a request by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 702] and attended by representatives from 21 Member States as well as civil society organizations. Participants discussed the different dimensions of the right of peoples to peace, the content of the right, the right from a human rights perspective, and measures and actions to raise awareness and to promote the right.

Human Rights Council action. On 17 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/3)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 31 to 14, with 1 abstention, reaffirmed that peoples had a sacred right to peace. It requested the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee to prepare a draft declaration on the rights of peoples to peace and to report to the Council's seventeenth (2011) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/222 by recorded vote (127-54-4) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Promotion of peace as a vital requirement for the full enjoyment of all human rights by all

Recalling its resolutions 60/163 of 16 December 2005 and 62/163 of 18 December 2007,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/56 of 20 April 2005 entitled "Promotion of peace as a vital requirement for the full enjoyment of all human rights by all",

Recalling further its resolution 39/11 of 12 November 1984 entitled "Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace", and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Determined to foster strict respect for the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Underlining, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, its full and active support for the United Nations and for the enhancement of its role and effectiveness in strengthening international peace and security and justice and in promoting the solution of international problems, as well as the development of friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered,

Emphasizing its objective of promoting better relations among all States and contributing to setting up conditions in which their people can live in true and lasting peace, free from any threat to or attempt against their security,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its commitment to peace and security and justice and the continuing development of friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Rejecting the use of violence in pursuit of political aims, and stressing that only peaceful political solutions can ensure a stable and democratic future for all people around the world,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring respect for the principles of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter and international law,

Reaffirming also that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Reaffirming further the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that peace and development are mutually reinforcing, including in the prevention of armed conflict,

Affirming that human rights include social, economic and cultural rights and the right to peace, a healthy environment and development, and that development is in fact the realization of those rights,

Underlining the fact that the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental rights, is contrary to the Charter and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and cooperation,

Recalling that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Convinced of the aim of creating conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

Convinced also that life without war is the primary international prerequisite for the material well-being, development and progress of countries and for the full implementation of the rights and fundamental human freedoms proclaimed by the United Nations,

Convinced further that international cooperation in the field of human rights contributes to creating an international environment of peace and stability,

1. Reaffirms that the peoples of our planet have a sacred right to peace;

2. Also reaffirms that the preservation of the right of peoples to peace and the promotion of its implementation constitute a fundamental obligation of all States;

3. Stresses that peace is a vital requirement for the promotion and protection of all human rights for all;

4. Also stresses that the deep fault line that divides human society between the rich and the poor and the ever-increasing gap between the developed and developing worlds pose a major threat to global prosperity, peace and security and stability;

5. Emphasizes that the preservation and promotion of peace demands that the policies of States be directed towards the elimination of the threat of war, particularly nuclear war, the renunciation of the use or threat of use of force in international relations and the settlement of international disputes by peaceful means on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Affirms that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and an international system based on respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter and the promotion of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development and the right of peoples to self-determination;

7. Urges all States to respect and to put into practice the purposes and principles of the Charter in their relations with other States, irrespective of their political, economic or social system and of their size, geographical location or level of economic development;

8. Reaffirms the duty of all States, in accordance with the principles of the Charter, to use peaceful means to settle any dispute to which they are parties and the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, as a vital requirement for the promotion and protection of all human rights of everyone and all peoples;

9. Underlines the vital importance of education for peace as a tool to foster the realization of the right of peoples to peace, and encourages States, the specialized agencies of the United Nations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute actively to this endeavour;

10. Invites States and relevant United Nations human rights mechanisms and procedures to continue to pay attention to the importance of mutual cooperation, understanding and dialogue in ensuring the promotion and protection of all human rights;

11. Decides to continue consideration of the question of the promotion of the right of peoples to peace at its sixty-seventh session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Traditional values

In December [A/HRC/16/37], the High Commissioner reported on the workshop on traditional values and human rights (Geneva, 4 October), held following a request by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 702] and attended by experts representing different civilizations and legal systems, as well as representatives of Member States, academia and intergovernmental and civil society organizations. The workshop focused on how the traditional values underpinning international human rights contributed to the promotion and protection of human rights in general. Panellists discussed human dignity and equality; freedom and responsibility through the prism of different cultures and traditions; and practical approaches to seize opportunities and tackle challenges.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Realizing economic, social and cultural rights

Report of High Commissioner. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 702], the High Commissioner in April [A/HRC/14/33] reported on the 2009 activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), treaty bodies and special procedures in relation to economic, social and cultural rights. The report also covered OHCHR activities on assistance and technical cooperation with States, UN agencies, civil society and other actors.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/13)], the Council called on States to implement Council resolution 4/1 [YUN 2007, p. 761], on the question of the realization in all countries of economic, social and cultural rights, with a view to improving the realization of those rights. It also requested the High Commissioner to continue to submit an annual report on the issue.

Impact of economic and financial crises

OHCHR report. In follow-up to the tenth special session of the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 702], which examined the impact of the global economic and financial crises on the universal realization and effective enjoyment of human rights, and in response to a Council request [ibid., p. 703], OHCHR in February submitted a report [A/HRC/13/38] on the impact of the crises on human rights and on possible actions to alleviate it, drawing on contributions received from Member States and other stakeholders. According to the report, the global crisis had the potential to reverse or slow down the progress made towards achieving the internationally agreed development goals. Potential impacts included an increase in global poverty or unemployment; a possible decrease in social spending resulting in more limited access to health care, education, housing and other social programmes; and a deterioration of the situation of marginalized groups. The report noted the importance of monitoring the impact of the crisis on human rights in order to guide efforts to ensure protection of the rights of those who were affected by the crisis.

OHCHR summary. In May, OHCHR issued a summary [A/HRC/14/CRP.2] of the Human Rights Council panel discussion (New York, 1 March) on the impact of the global economic and financial crises on the realization of all human rights, held during the high-level segment of its thirteenth session. The summary would be submitted to the General Assembly Open-ended Working Group to follow up on the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development [YUN 2009, p. 947].

Right to development

Task force activities. The high-level task force of the Working Group on the Right to Development was established in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 746] to assist the Working Group (see below) in making recommendations to various actors on issues related to the implementation of the right to development. Concluding its mandate at its sixth session (Geneva, 14–22 January) [A/HRC/15/WG.2/TF/2 & Corr.1], the task force examined targets of Millennium Development Goal (MDG) 8 on access to essential medicines, on technology transfer and on debt relief. It also reviewed the right-to-development criteria and corresponding operational sub-criteria [YUN 2009, p. 703]. In its recommendations, the task force made suggestions for consideration by the Working Group relating to further action on the criteria, thematic areas of international cooperation for consideration, and mainstreaming the right to development. The conclusions of the task force with regard to the dialogue for the right-to-development criteria and in relation to its dialogue with institutions on MDG 8 were contained in addenda issued respectively on 8 March [A/HRC/15/WG.2/TF/2/Add.2] and 25 March [A/HRC/15/WG.2/TF/2/Add.1 & Corr.1]. The latter conclusions were made in the context of the consolidation of the task force's findings on all aspects of its mandate.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on the Right to Development, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 26–30 April) [A/HRC/15/23], considered the report of the high-level task force on its sixth session, comprising the main report and related addenda. The Group concluded that further work should be undertaken at the intergovernmental level to adequately reflect both the national and international dimensions. It invited Member States and other stakeholders to share their views on the task force's work and on the way forward and requested its Chairperson-Rapporteur to prepare two compilations of the submissions received from Governments, groups of Governments and regional groups, as well as the inputs received from other stakeholders.

By a 21 June note [A/65/87], the Secretary-General transmitted the Group's report on its eleventh session to the General Assembly, which took note of it on 21 December (decision 65/536).

Report of Secretary-General and High Commissioner. In response to General Assembly resolution 64/172 [YUN 2009, p. 704], the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in June [A/HRC/15/24] reported on the activities undertaken by OHCHR with regard to the promotion and realization of the right to development. The activities ranged from mainstreaming that right to providing support to the Human Rights Council and its subsidiary mechanisms related to the right to development.

By a 6 August note [A/65/256], the Secretary-General transmitted the report to the Assembly, which took note of it on 21 December (decision 65/536).

Human Rights Council action. On 1 October [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/25)], by a recorded vote of 45 to none, with 1 abstention, the Council endorsed the recommendations of the Working Group; took note of the task force's work, including its consolidation of findings and the list of right-to-development criteria and corresponding operational sub-criteria; requested OHCHR to seek the views of Member States and stakeholders on the task force's work and the way forward; and requested the Group to prepare two compilations of the submissions received from Governments, groups of Governments and regional groups, as well as the inputs received from other stakeholders, and present them to the Group's twelfth (2011) session. Following the consideration of the compilations by the Group, the criteria and operational sub-criteria should be used to elaborate a comprehensive set of standards for implementing the right to development, which could evolve into a binding international legal standard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/219 by recorded vote (133-24-28) [agenda item 68 (b)].

The right to development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, which expresses, in particular, the determination to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and, to that end, to employ international mechanisms for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling also the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling further that the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986, confirmed that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations, and that the individual is the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Stressing that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action reaffirmed the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of fundamental human rights, and the individual as the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Reaffirming the objective of making the right to development a reality for everyone, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000,

Deeply concerned that the majority of indigenous peoples in the world live in conditions of poverty, and recognizing the critical need to address the negative impact of poverty and inequity on indigenous peoples by ensuring their full and effective inclusion in development and poverty eradication programmes,

Reaffirming the universality, indivisibility, interrelatedness, interdependence and mutually reinforcing nature of all civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, including the right to development,

Expressing deep concern over the lack of progress in the trade negotiations of the World Trade Organization, and reaffirming the need for a successful outcome of the Doha Development Round in key areas such as agriculture, market access for non-agricultural products, trade facilitation, development and services,

Recalling the outcome of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in Accra from 20 to 25 April 2008, on the theme "Addressing the opportunities and challenges of globalization for development"

Recalling also all its previous resolutions, Human Rights Council resolution 15/25 of 1 October 2010, previous resolutions of the Council and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to development, in particular Commission resolution 1998/72 of 22 April 1998 on the urgent need to make further progress towards the realization of the right to development as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling further that 2011 marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Welcoming the outcome of the eleventh session of the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 April 2010, as contained in the report of the Working Group and as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the right to development,

Recalling the Fifteenth Summit Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, from 11 to 16 July 2009, and the previous summits and conferences at which the States members of the Movement stressed the need to operationalize the right to development as a priority,

Reiterating its continuing support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development as a development framework for Africa,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Chair-Rapporteur of the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council and the members of the high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development in completing the 2008–2010 three-phase road map established by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 4/4 of 30 March 2007,

Deeply concerned about the negative impacts of the global economic and financial crises on the realization of the right to development,

Recognizing that poverty is an affront to human dignity,

Recognizing also that extreme poverty and hunger are the greatest global threat that requires the collective commitment of the international community for its eradication, pursuant to Millennium Development Goal 1, and therefore calling upon the international community, including the Human Rights Council, to contribute towards achieving that goal,

Recognizing further that historical injustices have undeniably contributed to the poverty, underdevelopment, marginalization, social exclusion, economic disparity, instability and insecurity that affect many people in different parts of the world, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing that poverty eradication is one of the critical elements in the promotion and realization of the right to development and that poverty is a multifaceted problem that requires a multifaceted and integrated approach in addressing economic, political, social, environmental and institutional dimensions at all levels, especially in the context of the Millennium Development Goal of halving, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations adopted by consensus by the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council at its eleventh session, and calls for their immediate, full and effective implementation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant actors;

2. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Working Group, as renewed by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 9/3 of 24 September 2008, with the recognition that the Working Group will convene annual sessions of five working days and submit its reports to the Council;

3. Emphasizes the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 60/251 of 15 March 2006 establishing the Human Rights Council, and in this regard calls upon the Council to implement the agreement to continue to act to ensure that its agenda promotes and advances sustainable development and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and also in this regard to lead to raising the right to development, as set out in paragraphs 5 and 10 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, to the same level as and on a par with all other human rights and fundamental freedoms;

4. Notes with appreciation that the high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development continued its work, including the consolidation of findings and the list of right to development criteria and corresponding operational sub-criteria;

5. Endorses the recommendations of the Working Group, as outlined in paragraphs 45 to 47 of its report, which would ensure that the two compilations of the submissions to be received from Governments, groups of Governments and regional groups as well as the inputs to be received from other stakeholders, on the work of the high-level task force and the way forward, will be presented to the Working Group at its twelfth session, in 2011;

6. Stresses the importance that views requested of Member States and relevant stakeholders on the work of the high-level task force and the way forward take into consideration the essential features of the right to development, using as a reference the Declaration on the Right to Development and resolutions on the right to development of the Commission on Human Rights, the Human Rights Council and the General Assembly;

7. Also stresses that the above-mentioned compilations of views, criteria and corresponding operational sub-criteria, once considered, revised and endorsed by the Working Group, should be used, as appropriate, in the elaboration of a comprehensive and coherent set of standards for the implementation of the right to development;

8. Emphasizes the importance of the Working Group taking appropriate steps to ensure respect for and practical application of the above-mentioned standards, which could take various forms, including the elaboration of guidelines on the implementation of the right to development, and to develop the standards into a basis for consideration of an international legal standard of a binding nature, through a collaborative process of engagement;

9. Stresses the importance of the core principles contained in the conclusions of the Working Group at its third session, congruent with the purpose of international human rights instruments, such as equality, non-discrimination, accountability, participation and international cooperation, as critical to mainstreaming the right to development at the national and international levels, and underlines the importance of the principles of equity and transparency;

10. Also stresses that it is important that the high-level task force and the Working Group, in the discharge of their mandates, take into account the need:

(a) To promote the democratization of the system of international governance in order to increase the effective participation of developing countries in international decision-making;

(b) To also promote effective partnerships such as the New Partnership for Africa's Development and other similar initiatives with the developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, for the purpose of the realization of their right to development, including the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

(c) To strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international level, while urging all States to undertake at the national level the necessary policy formulation and to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as an integral part of fundamental human rights, and also urging all States to expand and deepen mutually beneficial cooperation in ensuring development and eliminating obstacles to development in the context of promoting effective international cooperation for the realization of the right to development, bearing in mind that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level and a favourable economic environment at the international level;

(d) To consider ways and means to continue to ensure the operationalization of the right to development as a priority;

(e) To mainstream the right to development in the policies and operational activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, funds and programmes, as well as in the policies and strategies of the international financial and multilateral trading systems, bearing in mind in this regard that the core principles of the international economic, commercial and financial spheres, such as equity, non-discrimination, transparency, accountability, participation and international cooperation, including effective partnerships for development, are indispensable in achieving the right to development and preventing discriminatory treatment arising from political or other non-economic considerations in addressing the issues of concern to the developing countries;

11. Encourages the Human Rights Council to consider how to ensure follow-up to the work of the former Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on the right to development, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights and in compliance with decisions to be taken by the Council;

12. Invites Member States and all other stakeholders to participate actively in future sessions of the Social Forum, while recognizing the strong support extended to the Forum at its first four sessions by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights;

13. Reaffirms the commitment to implement the goals and targets set out in all the outcome documents of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their review processes, in particular those relating to the realization of the right to development, recognizing that the realization of the right to development is critical to achieving the objectives, goals and targets set in those outcome documents;

14. Also reaffirms that the realization of the right to development is essential to the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which regards all human rights as universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, places the human person at the centre of development and recognizes that, while development facilitates the enjoyment of all human rights, the lack of development may not be invoked to justify the abridgement of internationally recognized human rights;

15. Stresses that the primary responsibility for the promotion and protection of all human rights lies with the State, and reaffirms that States have the primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized;

16. Reaffirms the primary responsibility of States to create national and international conditions favourable to the realization of the right to development, as well as their commitment to cooperate with each other to that end;

17. Also reaffirms the need for an international environment that is conducive to the realization of the right to development;

18. Stresses the need to strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international and national levels, and calls upon States to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as an integral part of fundamental human rights;

19. Emphasizes the critical importance of identifying and analysing obstacles impeding the full realization of the right to development at both the national and the international levels;

20. Affirms that, while globalization offers both opportunities and challenges, the process of globalization remains deficient in achieving the objectives of integrating all countries into a globalized world, and stresses the need for policies and measures at the national and global levels to respond to the challenges and opportunities of globalization if this process is to be made fully inclusive and equitable;

21. Recognizes that, despite continuous efforts on the part of the international community, the gap between developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide, that most of the developing countries continue to face difficulties in participating in the globalization process and that many risk being marginalized and effectively excluded from its benefits;

22. Expresses its deep concern, in this regard, about the negative impact on the realization of the right to development due to the further aggravation of the economic and social situation, in particular of developing countries, as a result of the ongoing international energy, food and financial crises, as well as the increasing challenges posed by global climate change and the loss of biodiversity, which have increased vulnerabilities and inequalities and have adversely affected development gains, in particular in developing countries;

23. Underlines the fact that the international community is far from meeting the target set in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of halving the number of people living in poverty by 2015, reaffirms the commitment made to meet that target, and emphasizes the principle of international cooperation, including partnership and commitment, between developed and developing countries towards achieving the goal;

24. Urges developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts towards meeting the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.2 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, and encourages developing countries to build on the progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to meet development goals and targets;

25. Recognizes the need to address market access for developing countries, including in agriculture, services and non-agricultural products, in particular those of interest to developing countries;

26. Calls for the implementation of a desirable pace of meaningful trade liberalization, including in areas under negotiation in the World Trade Organization; the implementation of commitments on implementation-related issues and concerns; a review of special and differential treatment provisions, with a view to strengthening them and making them more precise, effective and operational; the avoidance of new forms of protectionism; and capacity-building and technical assistance for developing countries as important issues in making progress towards the effective implementation of the right to development;

27. Recognizes the important link between the international economic, commercial and financial spheres and the realization of the right to development; stresses in this regard the need for good governance and for broadening the base of decision-making at the international level on issues of development concern and the need to fill organizational gaps, as well as to strengthen the United Nations system and other multilateral institutions; and also stresses the need to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

28. Also recognizes that good governance and the rule of law at the national level assist all States in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the right to development, and agrees on the value of the ongoing efforts being made by States to identify and strengthen good governance practices, including transparent, responsible, accountable and participatory government, that are responsive and appropriate to their needs and aspirations, including in the context of agreed partnership approaches to development, capacity-building and technical assistance;

29. Further recognizes the important role and the rights of women and the application of a gender perspective as a cross-cutting issue in the process of realizing the right to development, and notes in particular the positive relationship between women's education and their equal participation in the civil, cultural, economic, political and social activities of the community and the promotion of the right to development;

30. Stresses the need for the integration of the rights of children, girls and boys alike, in all policies and programmes and for ensuring the promotion and protection of those rights, especially in areas relating to health, education and the full development of their capacities;

31. Welcomes the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS adopted at the High-level Meeting on HIV/AIDS of the General Assembly on 2 June 2006, stresses that further and additional measures must be taken at the national and international levels to fight HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases, taking into account ongoing efforts and programmes, and reiterates the need for international assistance in this regard;

32. Recalls the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, which entered into force on 3 May 2008, and stresses the need to take into consideration the rights of persons with disabilities and the importance of international cooperation in the realization of the right to development;

33. Stresses its commitment to indigenous peoples in the process of the realization of the right to development, and reaffirms the commitment to promote their rights in the areas of education, employment, vocational training and retraining, housing, sanitation, health and social security, in accordance with recognized international human rights obligations and taking into account, as appropriate, the

United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/295 of 13 September 2007;

34. Recognizes the need for strong partnerships with civil society organizations and the private sector in pursuit of poverty eradication and development, as well as for corporate social responsibility;

35. Emphasizes the urgent need for taking concrete and effective measures to prevent, combat and criminalize all forms of corruption at all levels, to prevent, detect and deter in a more effective manner international transfers of illicitly acquired assets and to strengthen international co-operation in asset recovery, consistent with the principles of the United Nations Convention against Corruption, particularly chapter V thereof, stresses the importance of a genuine political commitment on the part of all Governments through a firm legal framework, and in this context urges States to sign and ratify the Convention as soon as possible and States parties to implement it effectively;

36. Also emphasizes the need to strengthen further the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and realization of the right to development, including by ensuring effective use of the financial and human resources necessary to fulfil its mandate, and calls upon the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the High Commissioner with the necessary resources;

37. Reaffirms the request to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in mainstreaming the right to development, to undertake effectively activities aimed at strengthening the global partnership for development between Member States, development agencies and the international development, financial and trade institutions, and to reflect those activities in detail in her next report to the Human Rights Council;

38. Reaffirms the request to the Office of the High Commissioner, in consultation with States Members of the United Nations and other relevant stakeholders, to launch preparations for the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Right to Development in 2011;

39. Calls upon the United Nations funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, to mainstream the right to development in their operational programmes and objectives, and stresses the need for the international financial and multilateral trading systems to mainstream the right to development in their policies and objectives;

40. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs and bodies, specialized agencies, funds and programmes, international development and financial institutions, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations;

41. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session and an interim report to the Human Rights Council on the implementation of the present resolution, including efforts undertaken at the national, regional and international levels in the promotion and realization of the right to development, and invites the Chair-Rapporteur of the Working Group on the Right to Development to present a verbal update to the Assembly at its sixty-sixth session.

Human rights and international solidarity

Report by independent expert. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 708], the independent expert on human rights and international solidarity, Rudi Muhammad Rizki (Indonesia), in July submitted a report [A/HRC/15/32] that summarized the answers to a questionnaire on human rights and international solidarity sent to States, UN bodies, international organizations, NGOs and special procedures mandate holders. Drawing from those responses and his review and observations, the expert identified elements of a conceptual and normative framework for human rights and international solidarity, and highlighted areas of focus and emerging approaches in international cooperation. The expert concluded that there was an abundance of hard and soft laws, policies and values that could form the basis of a conceptual and normative framework on the issue, and, eventually, a draft declaration on the right of peoples and individuals to international solidarity.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/13)], by a recorded vote of 32 to 14, with no abstentions, the Council requested the independent expert to continue to prepare a draft declaration on the right of peoples and individuals to international solidarity, and to further develop guidelines, standards, norms and principles to protect that right; reiterated its request to the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee to prepare inputs to the draft declaration and to guidelines, standards, norms and principles; and requested the expert to report to the Council's eighteenth (2011) session.

Democratic and equitable international order

During the year, the General Assembly continued to address issues related to the right of all peoples to a democratic and equitable international order as originally confirmed by the Human Rights Council in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 823].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/223 by recorded vote (126-54-5) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Promotion of a democratic and equitable international order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order, including resolution 64/157 of 18 December 2009, and taking note of Human Rights Council resolution 8/5 of 18 June 2008,

Reaffirming the commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, other instruments relating to human rights and international law,

Affirming that the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights should continue to be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law as set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter and, inter alia, with full respect for sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence, the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State,

Recalling the Preamble to the Charter, in particular the determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small,

Reaffirming that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Reaffirming also the determination expressed in the Preamble to the Charter to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practise tolerance and good-neighbourliness, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Stressing that the responsibility for managing worldwide economic and social issues, as well as threats to international peace and security, must be shared among the nations of the world and should be exercised multilaterally, and that in this regard the central role must be played by the United Nations, as the most universal and representative organization in the world,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter, including promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international co-operation in the field of human rights is essential for the full achievement of the purposes of the United Nations, including the effective promotion and protection of all human rights,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Recognizing that the promotion and protection of human rights should be based on the principle of cooperation and genuine dialogue and aimed at strengthening the capacity of Member States to comply with their human rights obligations for the benefit of all human beings,

Emphasizing that democracy is not only a political concept, but that it also has economic and social dimensions,

Recognizing that democracy, respect for all human rights, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, and effective participation by civil society are an essential part of the necessary foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development,

Noting with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalization and social exclusion,

Reaffirming that dialogue among religions, cultures and civilizations could contribute greatly to the enhancement of international cooperation at all levels,

Underlining the fact that it is imperative for the international community to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people, and that only through broad and sustained efforts, based on our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable,

Deeply concerned that the current global economic, financial, energy and food crises, resulting from a combination of several major factors, including macroeconomic and other factors, such as environmental degradation, desertification and global climate change, natural disasters and the lack of financial resources and the technology necessary to confront their negative impact in developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries and small island developing States, represent a global scenario that is threatening the adequate enjoyment of all human rights and widening the gap between developed and developing countries,

Stressing that efforts to make globalization fully inclusive and equitable must include policies and measures, at the global level, that correspond to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition and are formulated and implemented with their effective participation,

Stressing also the need for adequate financing of and technology transfer to developing countries, in particular the landlocked developing countries and small island developing States, including to support their efforts to adapt to climate change,

Having listened to the peoples of the world, and recognizing their aspirations to justice, to equality of opportunity for all, to the enjoyment of their human rights, including the right to development, to live in peace and freedom and to equal participation without discrimination in economic, social, cultural, civil and political life,

Resolved to take all measures within its power to secure a democratic and equitable international order,

1. Affirms that everyone is entitled to a democratic and equitable international order;

2. Also affirms that a democratic and equitable international order fosters the full realization of all human rights for all;

3. Calls upon all Member States to fulfil their commitment expressed in Durban, South Africa, during the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance to maximize the benefits of globalization through, inter alia, the strengthening and enhancement of international cooperation to increase equality of opportunities for trade, economic growth and sustainable development, global communications through the use of new technologies and increased intercultural exchange through the preservation and promotion of cultural diversity, and reiterates that only through broad and sustained efforts to create a shared future based upon our common humanity and all its diversity can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable;

4. Affirms that a democratic and equitable international order requires, inter alia, the realization of the following:

(a) The right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they can freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

(b) The right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources;

(c) The right of every human person and all peoples to development;

(d) The right of all peoples to peace;

(e) The right to an international economic order based on equal participation in the decision-making process, interdependence, mutual interest, solidarity and cooperation among all States;

(f) International solidarity, as a right of peoples and individuals;

(g) The promotion and consolidation of transparent, democratic, just and accountable international institutions in all areas of cooperation, in particular through the implementation of the principle of full and equal participation in their respective decision-making mechanisms;

(h) The right to equitable participation of all, without any discrimination, in domestic and global decision-making;

(i) The principle of equitable regional and gender-balanced representation in the composition of the staff of the United Nations system;

(j) The promotion of a free, just, effective and balanced international information and communications order, based on international cooperation for the establishment of a new equilibrium and greater reciprocity in the international flow of information, in particular correcting the inequalities in the flow of information to and from developing countries;

(k) Respect for cultural diversity and the cultural rights of all, since this enhances cultural pluralism, contributes to a wider exchange of knowledge and understanding of cultural backgrounds, advances the application and enjoyment of universally accepted human rights across the world and fosters stable, friendly relations among peoples and nations worldwide;

(l) The right of every person and all peoples to a healthy environment and to enhanced international cooperation that responds effectively to the needs for assistance of national efforts to adapt to climate change, particularly in developing countries, and that promotes the fulfilment of international agreements in the field of mitigation;

(m) The promotion of equitable access to benefits from the international distribution of wealth through enhanced international cooperation, in particular in economic, commercial and financial international relations;

(n) The enjoyment by everyone of ownership of the common heritage of mankind in connection to the public right of access to culture;

(o) The shared responsibility of the nations of the world for managing worldwide economic and social development, as well as threats to international peace and security, that should be exercised multilaterally;

5. Stresses the importance of preserving the rich and diverse nature of the international community of nations and peoples, as well as respect for national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds, in the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights;

6. Also stresses that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and reaffirms that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Urges all actors on the international scene to build an international order based on inclusion, justice, equality and equity, human dignity, mutual understanding and promotion of and respect for cultural diversity and universal human rights, and to reject all doctrines of exclusion based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

8. Reaffirms that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and, to that end, should do their utmost to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as to ensure that the resources released by effective disarmament measures are used for comprehensive development, in particular that of the developing countries;

9. Also reaffirms the need to continue working urgently for the establishment of an international economic order based on equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest and cooperation among all States, irrespective of their economic and social systems, which shall correct inequalities and redress existing injustices, make it possible to eliminate the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries and ensure steadily accelerating economic and social development and peace and justice for present and future generations;

10. Further reaffirms that the international community should devise ways and means to remove the current obstacles and meet the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and to prevent the continuation of human rights violations resulting therefrom throughout the world;

11. Urges States to continue their efforts, through enhanced international cooperation, towards the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order;

12. Requests the Human Rights Council, the human rights treaty bodies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the special mechanisms extended by the Council and the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee to pay due attention, within their respective mandates, to the present resolution and to make contributions towards its implementation;

13. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to build upon the issue of the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs, bodies and components, intergovernmental organizations, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations, and to disseminate it on the widest possible basis;

15. Decides to continue consideration of the matter at its sixty-sixth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Globalization

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 64/160 [YUN 2009, p. 711], the Secretary-General in July submitted a report [A/65/171] that summarized the views on the issue received from 12 Governments (Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Guatemala, Mauritius, Mexico, Oman, Qatar, Russian Federation, Serbia, Spain), and some UN or UN-related organizations, including the United Nations Development Programme, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the World Trade Organization. The report provided recommendations on ways to address the impact of globalization on the full enjoyment of all human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/216 by recorded vote (132-54-0) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing, in particular, the need to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Right to Development adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome documents of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 10 June 2000 and in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, respectively,

Recalling also its resolutions 64/160 and 64/174 of 18 December 2009,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/17 of 14 April 2005 on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more exposed to external developments, positive as well as negative, inter alia, in the field of human rights,

Realizing also that globalization is not merely an economic process, but that it also has social, political, environmental, cultural and legal dimensions, which have an impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Emphasizing the need to fully implement the global partnership for development and enhance the momentum generated by the 2005 World Summit in order to operationalize and implement the commitments made in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the 2005 World Summit, in the economic, social and related fields, and reaffirming in particular the commitment contained in paragraphs 19 and 47 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome to promote fair globalization and the development of the productive sectors in developing countries to enable them to participate more effectively in and benefit from the process of globalization,

Realizing the need to undertake a thorough, independent and comprehensive assessment of the social, environmental and cultural impact of globalization on societies,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value that deserve recognition, respect and preservation, convinced that, in their rich variety and diversity and in the reciprocal influences that they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind, and aware of the risk that globalization poses more of a threat to cultural diversity if the developing world remains poor and marginalized,

Recognizing also that multilateral mechanisms have a unique role to play in meeting the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization,

Realizing the need to consider the challenges and opportunities linked to globalization with a view to addressing such challenges and building on possible opportunities in order to achieve the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Emphasizing the global character of the migratory phenomenon, the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation and the need to protect the human rights of migrants, particularly at a time in which migration flows have increased in the globalized economy,

Expressing concern at the negative impact of international financial turbulence on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly in the light of the current global financial and economic crisis, which has an adverse impact on the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, particularly the Millennium Development Goals, and recognizing that developing countries are in a more vulnerable situation when facing such impact,

Expressing deep concern at the negative impact of the rising global food and energy challenges and climate change on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights for all,

Recognizing that globalization should be guided by the fundamental principles that underpin the corpus of human rights, such as equity, participation, accountability, non-discrimination at both the national and the international levels, respect for diversity, tolerance and international cooperation and solidarity,

Emphasizing that the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full realization and effective enjoyment of human rights and that its immediate alleviation and eventual elimination must remain a high priority for the international community,

Acknowledging that there is greater acceptance that the increasing debt burden faced by the most indebted developing countries is unsustainable and constitutes one of the principal obstacles to achieving sustainable development and poverty eradication and that for many developing countries excessive debt servicing has severely constrained their capacity to promote social development and to provide basic services to realize economic, social and cultural rights,

Strongly reiterating the determination to ensure the timely and full realization of the development goals and objectives agreed at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including those agreed at the Millennium Summit, described as the Millennium Development Goals, which have helped to galvanize efforts towards poverty eradication,

Deeply concerned at the inadequacy of measures to narrow the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and within countries, which has contributed to, inter alia, deepening poverty and has adversely affected the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries,

Emphasizing that transnational corporations and other business enterprises have a responsibility to respect all human rights,

Underlining that human beings strive for a world that is respectful of human rights and cultural diversity and that in this regard they work to ensure that all activities, including those affected by globalization, are consistent with those aims,

1. Recognizes that, while globalization, by its impact on, inter alia, the role of the State, may affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights is first and foremost the responsibility of the State;

2. Emphasizes that development should be at the centre of the international economic agenda and that coherence between national development strategies and international obligations and commitments is imperative for an enabling environment for development and an inclusive and equitable globalization;

3. Reaffirms that narrowing the gap between rich and poor, both within and between countries, is an explicit goal at the national and international levels, as part of the effort to create an enabling environment for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

4. Also reaffirms the commitment to create an environment at both the national and the global levels that is conducive to development and to the eradication of poverty by, inter alia, promoting good governance within each country and at the international level, eliminating protectionism, enhancing transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and committing to an open, equitable, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

5. Recognizes the impacts that the global financial and economic crisis is still having on the ability of countries, particularly developing countries, to mobilize resources for development and address the impact of this crisis, and in this context calls upon all States and the international community to alleviate, in an inclusive and development-oriented manner, any negative impacts of this crisis on the realization and the effective enjoyment of all human rights;

6. Also recognizes that, while globalization offers great opportunities, the fact that its benefits are very unevenly shared and its costs unevenly distributed represents an aspect of the process that affects the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries;

7. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, which focuses on the liberalization of agricultural trade and its impact on the realization of the right to development, including the right to food, and takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

8. Reaffirms the international commitment to eliminating hunger and to securing food for all, today and tomorrow, and reiterates that the relevant United Nations organizations should be assured the resources needed to expand and enhance their food assistance, and support safety net programmes designed to address hunger and malnutrition, when appropriate, through the use of local or regional purchase;

9. Calls upon Member States, relevant agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and civil society to promote equitable and environmentally sustainable economic growth for managing globalization so that poverty is systematically reduced and the international development targets are achieved;

10. Recognizes that the responsible operations of transnational corporations and other business enterprises can contribute to the promotion, protection and fulfilment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular economic, social and cultural rights;

11. Also recognizes that only through broad and sustained efforts, including policies and measures at the global level to create a shared future based upon our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable and have a human face, thus contributing to the full enjoyment of all human rights;

12. Underlines the urgent need to establish an equitable, transparent and democratic international system to strengthen and broaden the participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

13. Affirms that globalization is a complex process of structural transformation, with numerous interdisciplinary aspects, which has an impact on the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development;

14. Also affirms that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that promotes and protects human rights while ensuring respect for the cultural diversity of all;

15. Underlines, therefore, the need to continue to analyse the consequences of globalization for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

16. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to seek further the views of Member States and relevant agencies of the United Nations system and to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a substantive report on the subject based on these views, including recommendations on ways to address the impact of globalization on the full enjoyment of all human rights.

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Monaco, Montenegro, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Palau, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, San Marino, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: None.

Foreign debt

Reports of independent expert. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 713], the independent expert on the effects of foreign debt and other related international financial obligations of States on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights, Cephias Lumina (Zambia), in a report [A/HRC/14/21] submitted in April, described his activities since his last report to the Council [YUN 2009, p. 713]. The expert pointed out that while international debt relief efforts had helped reduce the external debt burden of heavily indebted poor countries and created fiscal space for resources to be channelled to poverty-reducing expenditures and economic development, the voluntary nature of debt relief measures had created opportunities for some commercial creditors to eschew debt relief efforts and attempt to recover the full value of their debt through litigation. Those creditors—termed “vulture funds”—purchased the defaulted debt at significant discounts, held out for other creditors to cancel their debts and then aggressively pursued repayments that were vastly in excess of the amount they had paid for the debt. Those activities diluted the impact of debt relief by reducing the resources available to the targeted debtor countries to finance development and reduce poverty, and diminished the capacity of indebted poor countries to realize economic, social and cultural rights. The report sought to draw global attention to the adverse impacts of vulture fund activities on international debt relief and on the capacity of poor countries to fulfil their human rights obligations and attain their development goals. The expert called for definitive international and national action to combat vulture fund activity.

As requested by the Human Rights Council in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 828] and in resolution 14/4 (see p. 730), the Secretary-General in August [A/65/260 & Corr.1] transmitted to the General Assembly the expert's report, which outlined his activities since his previous report to the Assembly [YUN 2009, p. 713]. The expert also explored the linkages between debt and trade. He argued that coherence in trade and finance policymaking could provide better sustainable development outcomes and contribute to a solution to the debt problems of developing countries and the realization of human rights in those countries. He examined the impact of trade liberalization on debt relief and human rights; highlighted limitations of debt sustainability assessments under the joint International Monetary Fund/World Bank Debt Sustainability Framework; called for a new debt sustainability framework incorporating sustainable development and human rights concerns; and underscored the need for policy coherence in the areas of trade and finance. The expert urged Member States to consider the establishment of an independent debt workout mechanism under UN auspices and for the international community to adopt a binding legal framework on responsible lending and borrowing.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 21 December (decision 65/536).

Human Rights Council action. On 17 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/4)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 31 to 13, with 3 abstentions, affirmed that the activities of vulture funds highlighted some of the problems in the global financial system and were indicative of the unjust nature of the system, and called on States to take measures to combat those funds. It encouraged the independent expert to further develop the proposed elements for a conceptual framework for understanding the relationship between foreign debt and human rights; welcomed the areas of focus identified by the expert for 2009–2010, in particular the development of draft general guidelines on foreign debt and human rights and the issue of illegitimate debt; and requested the expert to report on implementation of the resolution to the Assembly's sixty-fifth (2010) session and to the Council in 2011.

Transnational corporations

Reports of Special Representative. The Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises, John Ruggie (United States), in April submitted a progress report [A/HRC/14/27] in follow-up to a previous report [YUN 2008, p. 829]. He illustrated his working methods in operationalizing and promoting the “protect, respect and remedy” framework [ibid.], which rested on three pillars: the State duty to protect against human rights abuses by third parties, including business, through appropriate policies, regulation, and adjudication; the corporate responsibility to respect human rights, which meant to act with due diligence to avoid infringing on the rights of others; and greater access by victims to effective remedy, judicial and non-judicial. He summarized his current thinking on the three pillars and the synergies among them, pointing towards the guiding principles that would constitute the mandate's final product.

In August, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the report [A/65/310] of the Special Representative reviewing his work since the presentation of the above report to the Council. The Representative would submit two products at the end of his mandate in 2011: a set of guiding principles for implementing the “protect, respect and remedy” framework, and an options paper outlining possible ways the Council might follow up on the mandate. The Representative outlined the consultative process that he would pursue in elaborating the guiding principles, addressed challenges posed by the issue of extraterritorial jurisdiction in the context of business and human rights, discussed the scope and application of the corporate responsibility to respect human rights in the supply chains of business enterprises, and reviewed his work to promote the framework.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 21 December (decision 65/536).

Unilateral coercive measures

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 714], the Secretary-General in June submitted a report [A/HRC/15/43] that summarized responses received from 11 Governments (Algeria, Argentina, Belarus, Burkina Faso, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Jamaica, Qatar, Russian Federation, Serbia, Slovakia) on the impact of unilateral coercive measures on their populations. A report [A/65/119] issued in July in response to General Assembly resolution 64/170 [YUN 2009, p. 714] summarized information received from the Syrian Arab Republic on the same topic.

Human Rights Council action. On 1 October [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/24)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 32 to 14, with no abstentions, called on States to stop adopting or implementing unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law, international humanitarian law, the UN Charter and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States, in particular those of a coercive nature with extraterritorial effects, which created obstacles to trade relations. OHCHR was requested to submit a thematic study on the issue to the Council's eighteenth (2011) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/217 by recorded vote (131-53-0) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on this subject, the most recent of which was resolution 64/170 of 18 December 2009, Human Rights Council resolution 15/24 of 1 October 2010 and previous resolutions of the Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/170 and the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Assembly resolutions 52/120 of 12 December 1997 and 55/110 of 4 December 2000,

Stressing that unilateral coercive measures and legislation are contrary to international law, international humanitarian law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and in this regard reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling the Final Document of the Fifteenth Summit Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, from 11 to 16 July 2009, and those adopted at previous summits and conferences, in which States members of the Movement agreed to oppose and condemn those measures or laws and their continued application, persevere with efforts to effectively reverse them and urge other States to do likewise, as called for by the General Assembly and other United Nations organs, and request States applying those measures or laws to revoke them fully and immediately,

Recalling also that, at the World Conference on Human Rights, held in Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, States were called upon to refrain from any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights and also severely threatens the freedom of trade,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996, and their five-year reviews,

Expressing concern about the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on international relations, trade, investment and cooperation,

Expressing grave concern that, in some countries, the situation of children is adversely affected by unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and hinder the well-being of the population in the affected countries, with particular consequences for women and children, including adolescents,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this question by the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Commission on Human Rights and recent major United Nations conferences, and contrary to general international law and the Charter, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented, with all their negative implications for the social humanitarian activities and economic and social development of developing countries, including their extraterritorial effects, thereby creating additional obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights by peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

Bearing in mind all the extraterritorial effects of any unilateral legislative, administrative and economic measures, policies and practices of a coercive nature against the development process and the enhancement of human rights in developing countries, which create obstacles to the full realization of all human rights,

Reaffirming that unilateral coercive measures are a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling article 1, paragraph 2, common to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which provides, inter alia, that in no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence,

Noting the continuing efforts of the open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council, and reaffirming in particular its criteria, according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to cease adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States, in particular those of a coercive nature, with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Also urges all States not to adopt any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that impede the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries, in particular children and women, that hinder their well-being and that create obstacles to the full enjoyment of their human rights, including the right of everyone to a standard of living adequate for his or her health and well-being and his or her right to food, medical care and education and the necessary social services, as well as to ensure that food and medicine are not used as tools for political pressure;

3. Strongly objects to the extraterritorial nature of those measures which, in addition, threaten the sovereignty of States, and in this context calls upon all Member States neither to recognize those measures nor to apply them, as well as to take administrative or legislative measures, as appropriate, to counteract the extraterritorial applications or effects of unilateral coercive measures;

4. Condemns the continuing unilateral application and enforcement by certain Powers of unilateral coercive measures, and rejects those measures, with all their extraterritorial effects, as being tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, adopted with a view to preventing those countries from exercising their right to decide, of their own free will, their own political, economic and social systems, and because of the negative effects of those measures on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

5. Reaffirms that essential goods such as food and medicines should not be used as tools for political coercion and that under no circumstances should people be deprived of their own means of subsistence and development;

6. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to abide by the principles of international law, the Charter, the declarations of the United Nations and world conferences and relevant resolutions and to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are parties by revoking such measures at the earliest possible time;

7. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

8. Recalls that, according to the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, and the relevant principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX), in particular article 32 thereof, no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights and to secure from it advantages of any kind;

9. Rejects all attempts to introduce unilateral coercive measures, and urges the Human Rights Council to take fully into account the negative impact of those measures, including through the enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application which are not in conformity with international law, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

10. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging her functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development and bearing in mind the continuing impact of unilateral coercive measures on the population of developing countries, to give priority to the present resolution in her annual report to the General Assembly;

11. Underlines the fact that unilateral coercive measures are one of the major obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, and in this regard calls upon all States to avoid the unilateral imposition of economic coercive measures and the extraterritorial application of domestic laws that run counter to the principles of free trade and hamper the development of developing countries, as recognized by the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council;

12. Recognizes that, in the Declaration of Principles adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, States were strongly urged to avoid and refrain from any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations in building the information society;

13. Supports the invitation of the Human Rights Council to all special rapporteurs and existing thematic mechanisms of the Council in the field of economic, social and cultural rights to pay due attention, within the scope of their respective mandates, to the negative impact and consequences of unilateral coercive measures;

14. Reaffirms the request of the Human Rights Council that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights prepare a thematic study on the impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States, to continue to collect their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to submit an analytical report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session, while reiterating once again the need to highlight the practical and preventive measures in this respect;

16. Decides to examine the question on a priority basis at its sixty-sixth session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Social Forum

Human Rights Council action. On 25 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/17)], the Council took note of the report of the 2009 Social Forum [YUN 2009, p. 717]; decided that the Social Forum in 2010 would meet for three working days in Geneva, focusing on climate change and human rights; requested the High Commissioner to submit a background report for the dialogues and debates to be held at the Social Forum; and invited the Social Forum to submit a report to the Council.

Social Forum session. The Social Forum (Geneva, 4–6 October) [A/HRC/16/62 & Corr.1], which was attended by Member States, UN system bodies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, academic institutions and independent experts, had before it a background report by the High Commissioner [A/HRC/SF/2010/2 & Corr.1] reviewing developments in the UN human rights system with regard to addressing the impact of climate change on human rights, and an OHCHR study [YUN 2009, p. 727] on the relationship between human rights and climate change. Participants heard expert presentations, each complemented by an interactive exchange of views, leading to recommendations in relation to the adverse effects of climate change on the full enjoyment of human rights, including the right to life and economic, social and cultural rights; measures and actions to address the impact of climate change on the full enjoyment of human rights at the local, national, regional and international levels, including on most vulnerable groups; and international assistance and cooperation in addressing the human rights-related impact of climate change.

Reports of independent expert. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2008, p. 833], the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, Magdalena Sepúlveda Carmona (Chile), in March submitted a report [A/HRC/14/31] focusing on non-contributory pensions or so-called social pensions. Social pensions consisted of cash benefits received by older persons that did not require prior compulsory contributions from beneficiaries, employers or the State and were an important dimension of social security systems. Considering the vulnerability of older persons, States should establish social security schemes providing benefits to all older persons without discrimination, including to those working outside the formal employment sector. As contributory pension schemes, such as employment-based pensions, did not reach all older persons, the expert pointed out that States must recognize that social pensions were a critical element for the progressive realization of the right to social security for older people. Non-contributory pensions could significantly reduce poverty and vulnerability among old people, particularly women, who lived longer and were less likely to benefit from contributory systems. The expert provided recommendations on how to ensure that non-contributory pensions complied with core human rights standards, and addressed the role of international assistance and cooperation in the field of social security.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2008, p. 833], the Secretary-General in August [A/65/259] transmitted to the General Assembly the expert's report highlighting the importance of social protection measures in the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) agenda. It stressed that social protection measures carried out within the framework of a rights-based approach were more likely to ensure the achievement of the MDGs and to result in long-term improvements. In addition, the report argued that the use of a rights-based approach to social protection could maximize synergies across the MDGs and have greater effect in terms of reducing extreme poverty. The expert called on States to devote increased attention to the issue of gender equality while designing, implementing and evaluating social protection programmes within a human rights framework.

Mission report. Following her visit to Viet Nam (23–31 August) [A/HRC/17/34/Add.1], the independent expert recognized the progress made in poverty reduction over two decades of rapid economic development, yet noted that the benefits of that progress had not been equally shared and rising inequality was a concern. Renewed attention was urgently required to reach the significant portion of the population that continued to live in extreme poverty, and to ensure that those whose situation had improved were protected from future crises. That demanded new strategies to ensure better protection for those who were particularly vulnerable to poverty, including ethnic minorities. The expert called on the Government to increase investment in social protection; stressed the need to increase support to social assistance mechanisms; and highlighted the importance of ensuring that financial costs were not imposed on persons living in extreme poverty when accessing basic health care and education.

Draft guiding principles. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 718], the independent expert in August submitted a report [A/HRC/15/41] containing recommendations on improving the draft guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights [YUN 2006, p. 900] prepared by the Sub-commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights. The report benefited from the contributions of States and other stakeholders that participated in various consultative processes conducted after 2006. It included both the rationale behind the proposals and the basic conceptual definitions framing the recommendations; outlined the main challenges experienced by persons living in extreme poverty that had to be taken into account when preparing the principles; and presented an annotated outline of the expert's proposal on improving the draft guiding principles. The expert pointed out that the guiding principles could help States and other actors operationalize human rights obligations for persons living in extreme poverty.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/19)], the Council invited OHCHR to seek the views of States, UN human rights bodies, intergovernmental organizations, national human rights institutions and NGOs on the expert's report on the draft guiding principles; to organize, in Geneva before June 2011, a two-day consultation on the draft guiding principles with the expert and relevant stakeholders; and to submit to the Council, by its nineteenth (2012) session, an analytical compilation on the basis of the submissions received and those made at the consultation. The Council invited the independent expert to submit a final draft of the guiding principles to the Council's twenty-first (2012) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/214 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Human rights and extreme poverty

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and other human rights instruments adopted by the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it declared 17 October the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, and its resolution 62/205 of 19 December 2007, by which it proclaimed the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), as well as its resolution 63/175 of 18 December 2008 and its previous resolutions on human rights and extreme poverty, in which it reaffirmed that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them,

Recalling also its resolution 52/134 of 12 December 1997, in which it recognized that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights was essential for the effective understanding, promotion and protection of all human rights,

Recalling further Human Rights Council resolutions 2/2 of 27 November 2006, 7/27 of 28 March 2008, 8/11 of 18 June 2008 and 12/19 of 2 October 2009,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 15/19 of 30 September 2010, in which it invited the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty, on the basis of the report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to pursue further work on the draft guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights with a view to submitting a final draft of the revised guiding principles to the Council at its twenty-first session, in order to allow the Council to take a decision on the way forward with a view to the adoption by 2012 of guiding principles on the rights of persons living in extreme poverty,

Reaffirming the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and welcoming the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and recalling its outcome document, contained in resolution 65/1 of 22 September 2010,

Deeply concerned that extreme poverty persists in all countries of the world, regardless of their economic, social and cultural situation, and that its extent and its manifestations, such as hunger, trafficking in human beings, disease, lack of adequate shelter, illiteracy and hopelessness, are particularly severe in developing countries, while acknowledging the significant progress made in several parts of the world in combating extreme poverty,

Deeply concerned also that gender inequality, violence and discrimination exacerbate extreme poverty, disproportionately impacting women and girls,

Stressing that special attention should be given to children, older persons, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples who are living in extreme poverty,

Concerned by the challenges faced today, including those derived from the financial and economic crisis, the food crisis and ongoing concerns over food security, as well as the increasing challenges posed by climate change and the loss of biodiversity, and by their impact on the increase in the number of people living in extreme poverty and their negative effect on the capacity of all States, especially developing countries, to fight extreme poverty,

Recognizing that the eradication of extreme poverty is a major challenge within the process of globalization and requires coordinated and continued policies through decisive national action and international cooperation,

Recognizing also that social protection systems make a critical contribution to the realization of human rights for all, in particular for those who are in vulnerable or marginalized situations and are trapped in poverty and subject to discrimination,

Stressing the necessity of better understanding and addressing the causes and consequences of extreme poverty,

Reaffirming that, since the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and may, in some situations, constitute a threat to the right to life, its immediate alleviation and eventual eradication must remain a high priority for the international community,

Stressing that respect for all human rights, which are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, is of crucial importance for all policies and programmes to fight extreme poverty,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and contribute to the eradication of extreme poverty,

1. Reaffirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Also reaffirms that it is essential for States to foster participation by the poorest people in the decision-making process in the societies in which they live, in the promotion of human rights and in efforts to combat extreme poverty and that it is essential for people living in poverty and vulnerable groups to be empowered to organize themselves and to participate in all aspects of political, economic, social and cultural life, in particular the planning and implementation of policies that affect them, thus enabling them to become genuine partners in development;

3. Emphasizes that extreme poverty is a major issue to be addressed by Governments, civil society, community-based social organizations and the United Nations system, including international financial institutions, and in this context reaffirms that political commitment is a prerequisite for the eradication of poverty;

4. Reaffirms that the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and renders democracy and popular participation fragile;

5. Recognizes the need to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to address the most pressing social needs of people living in poverty, including through the design and development of appropriate mechanisms to strengthen and consolidate democratic institutions and governance;

6. Reaffirms the commitments contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the commitments to spare no effort to fight against extreme poverty and to achieve development and poverty eradication, including the commitment to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one United States dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger;

7. Also reaffirms the commitment made at the 2005 World Summit to eradicate poverty and promote sustained economic growth, sustainable development and global prosperity for all, including women and girls;

8. Further reaffirms the commitment made at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals to accelerating progress in order to eradicate extreme poverty and hunger;

9. Recalls that promoting universal access to social services and providing social protection floors can make an important contribution to consolidating and achieving further development gains and that social protection systems that address and reduce inequality and social exclusion are essential for protecting the gains made towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

10. Encourages States, when designing, implementing, monitoring and evaluating social protection programmes, to ensure gender mainstreaming and the promotion and protection of all human rights in accordance with their obligations under international human rights law, through this process;

11. Welcomes the ongoing efforts to strengthen and support South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, and stresses that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation;

12. Encourages the international community to strengthen its efforts to address challenges that are contributing to extreme poverty, including those derived from the financial and economic crisis, the food crisis and ongoing concerns over food security, as well as the increasing challenges posed by climate change and the loss of biodiversity in all parts of the world, especially in developing countries, by enhancing its cooperation to help to build national capacities;

13. Reaffirms the critical role of both formal and informal education in the achievement of poverty eradication and other development goals as envisaged in the Millennium Declaration, in particular basic education and training for eradicating illiteracy, and efforts towards expanded secondary and higher education as well as vocational education and technical training, especially for girls and women, the creation of human resources and infrastructure capabilities and the empowerment of those living in poverty, and in this context reaffirms the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum on 28 April 2000, and recognizes the importance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization strategy for the eradication of poverty, especially extreme poverty, in supporting the Education for All programmes as a tool to achieve the Millennium Development Goal of universal primary education by 2015;

14. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to give high priority to the question of the relationship between extreme poverty and human rights, and also invites her to further pursue the work in this area;

15. Calls upon States, United Nations bodies, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Development Programme, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to continue to give appropriate attention to the links between human rights and extreme poverty, and encourages the private sector and international financial institutions to proceed likewise;

16. Invites States, as well as relevant United Nations agencies and treaty bodies, relevant special procedures mandate holders of the Human Rights Council, intergovernmental organizations, national human rights institutions and non-governmental organizations, especially those working with people living in extreme poverty, and other relevant stakeholders, to contribute to the work of the High Commissioner by expressing their views, comments and suggestions on the progress report on the draft guiding principles submitted by the independent expert on the question of human rights and extreme poverty;

17. Invites the independent expert and relevant stakeholders, including representatives of States, development and human rights practitioners and organizations at the local, national, regional and international levels, to participate in the two-day consultation on the progress report on the draft guiding principles that the High Commissioner will organize, within existing resources, in Geneva before June 2011;

18. Welcomes the efforts of entities throughout the United Nations system to incorporate the Millennium Declaration and the internationally agreed development goals set out therein into their work;

19. Also welcomes the work on social protection and human rights undertaken by the independent expert and her reports, submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth and sixty-fifth sessions;

20. Decides to consider the question further at its sixty-seventh session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Right to food

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 720], the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Olivier De Schutter (Belgium), submitted a report [A/HRC/13/33] that examined the role of commodity buyers, food processors and retailers in the realization of the right to food. Those actors played a key role, as they connected producers to consumers and transformed raw commodities into edible food. Yet the vast majority of those who were hungry in the world were part of the food system; small independent food producers or waged agricultural workers working on farms in the formal or informal sector represented over half of the billion who went hungry. The report therefore asked how the sourcing, pricing, and wage policies of commodity buyers, food processors and retailers affected the right to food. It sought to contribute to a better understanding by agribusiness corporations and States of their responsibilities and obligations under international law. The report concluded with 10 recommendations to States and the agribusiness sector to ensure that the transformation of the food chain under way would contribute to realizing the right to food. The recommendations related to areas such as codes of conduct and international framework agreements, cooperatives, marketing boards, public procurement, and competition law.

An addendum [A/HRC/13/33/Add.1] summarized communications, including urgent appeals, allegation letters and follow-up, for the period from 5 December 2008 to 5 December 2009 and the responses received until 6 February 2010. During that period, the Rapporteur sent 18 communications to 16 Member States as well as 13 communications to other actors, including corporations. He received seven replies from Member States and seven from other actors.

A further addendum [A/HRC/13/33/Add.2] analysed a trend that had accelerated following the 2008 global food price crisis: large-scale acquisitions and leases of land. It was estimated that between 15 and 20 million hectares of farmland in developing countries had been subject to transactions or negotiations involving foreign investors since 2006. The Rapporteur examined the potential impact on the human right to adequate food, and proposed a set of core principles and measures for host States and investors. The main aim of those principles was to ensure that negotiations leading to land acquisitions and leases complied with procedural requirements, including the informed participation of local communities. They also sought to ensure adequate benefit-sharing, and a proviso that under no circumstances should such transactions be allowed to trump the human rights obligations of States.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 64/159 [YUN 2009, p. 720], the Secretary-General in August [A/65/281] transmitted to the Assembly the interim report of the Rapporteur, which explored the threats posed by the increasing pressures on land and on three categories of land users: indigenous peoples, smallholders and special groups such as herders, pastoralists and fisherfolk. It examined how States and the international community could better respect, protect and fulfil the right to food by giving increased recognition to land as a human right. The Rapporteur argued that, while security of tenure was crucial, individual titling and the creation of a market for land rights might not be the most appropriate means to achieve that right. Instead, the strengthening of customary land tenure systems and the reinforcement of tenancy laws could significantly improve the protection of land users. He emphasized the importance of land redistribution for the realization of the right to food and called for the prioritization of development models that did not lead to evictions, disruptive shifts in land rights and increased land concentration.

Mission reports. Following his visit to the Syrian Arab Republic (29 August–7 September) [A/HRC/16/49/Add.2], the Rapporteur said that the mission took place in a challenging context characterized by the fourth consecutive year of drought in the north-eastern region, the presence of a large number of Iraqi refugees, and the transition from a centrally planned to a social market economy. He assessed the enjoyment of the right to food in the country; the challenges posed by drought and climate change; the enjoyment of the right to food by Iraqi refugees, herders in the Badia region and stateless Kurds; and the challenges relating to the right to food faced by the Government in its transition to a social market economy. He recommended that the Government adopt a comprehensive national strategy to realize the right to food, monitor the distributional impact of reforms on the incomes of smallholder farmers and vulnerable groups, and continue to diversify the agricultural sector.

Following his mission to China (15–23 December) [A/HRC/19/59/Add.1], the Rapporteur pointed out that despite significant progress made in reducing poverty and food insecurity, situations of food insecurity still occurred among poor rural and urban households. New challenges were associated with changing diets and food safety, while others related to increasing land degradation, the pollution of arable land and climate change. People in rural areas who relied on agricultural land for their livelihood faced problems related to security of tenure. Nomadic herders and rural residents faced threats under resettlement and rehousing policies. The Rapporteur recommended that the Government adopt measures to strengthen the security of tenure of rural households; support farmers' participation in contract farming by ensuring that the scheme was sustainable and equitable; develop a national strategy to address problems relating to rapidly shifting diets and the resulting spread of non-communicable diseases; and suspend the non-voluntary resettlement of nomadic herders from their traditional lands and the non-voluntary relocation or rehousing programmes of other rural residents in order to allow for meaningful consultations.

Communication. On 4 March [A/HRC/13/G/16], Brazil submitted its comments on the Special Rapporteur's report on his visit to the country [YUN 2009, p. 719].

Advisory Committee study. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 626], the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee in February submitted a preliminary study [A/HRC/13/32] on discrimination in the context of the right to food.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/4)], the Council encouraged States to incorporate a human rights perspective in their national strategies for the realization of the right to food, to promote the conditions for everyone to be free from hunger, and to establish appropriate institutional mechanisms. The Council also extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period and requested him to report to the Council's sixteenth (2011) session; welcomed the Advisory Committee's preliminary study on discrimination in the context of the right to food; requested OHCHR to collect the views of Member States, UN bodies and other stakeholders on the good practices of anti-discriminatory policies and strategies set out in the study; and requested the Advisory Committee to undertake a preliminary study on ways and means to advance the rights of people working in rural areas, in particular smallholders engaged in the production of food and/or other agricultural products, and to report to the Council's sixteenth (2011) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/220 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

The right to food

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming all previous resolutions and decisions on the right to food adopted within the framework of the United Nations,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for her or his health and well-being, including food, the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition and the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular Millennium Development Goal 1 on eradicating extreme poverty and hunger by 2015,

Recalling also the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in which the fundamental right of every person to be free from hunger is recognized,

Bearing in mind the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, adopted in Rome on 13 June 2002,

Reaffirming the concrete recommendations contained in the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in November 2004,

Reaffirming also the Five Rome Principles for Sustainable Global Food Security contained in the Declaration of the World Summit on Food Security, adopted in Rome on 16 November 2009,

Reaffirming further that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and that they must be treated globally, in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Reaffirming that a peaceful, stable and enabling political, social and economic environment, at both the national and the international levels, is the essential foundation that will enable States to give adequate priority to food security and poverty eradication,

Reiterating, as in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, that food should not be used as an instrument of political or economic pressure, and reaffirming in this regard the importance of international cooperation and solidarity, as well as the necessity of refraining from unilateral measures that are not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations and that endanger food security,

Convinced that each State must adopt a strategy consistent with its resources and capacities to achieve its individual goals in implementing the recommendations contained in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and, at the same time, cooperate regionally and internationally in order to organize collective solutions to global issues of food security in a world of increasingly interlinked institutions, societies and economies where coordinated efforts and shared responsibilities are essential,

Recognizing that the complex character of the global food crisis, in which the right to adequate food is threatened to be violated on a massive scale, is a combination of several major factors, such as the global financial and economic crisis, environmental degradation, desertification and the impacts of global climate change, as well as natural disasters and the lack in many countries of the appropriate technology, investment and capacity-building necessary to confront its impact, particularly in developing countries, least developed countries and small island developing States,

Resolved to act to ensure that the human rights perspective is taken into account at the national, regional and international levels in measures to address the global food crisis,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters, diseases and pests and their increasing impact in recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and livelihood and threatened agricultural production and food security, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing the importance of reversing the continuing decline of official development assistance devoted to agriculture, both in real terms and as a share of total official development assistance,

Recognizing the importance of the protection and preservation of agrobiodiversity in guaranteeing food security and the right to food for all,

Recognizing also the role of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as the key United Nations agency for rural and agricultural development and its work in supporting the efforts of Member States to achieve the full realization of the right to food, including through its provision of technical assistance to developing countries in support of the implementation of national priority frameworks,

Taking note of the final Declaration adopted at the International Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in Porto Alegre, Brazil, on 10 March 2006,

Acknowledging the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis established by the Secretary-General, and supporting the Secretary-General in his continuing efforts in this regard, including continued engagement with Member States and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the right to food,

1. Reaffirms that hunger constitutes an outrage and a violation of human dignity and therefore requires the adoption of urgent measures at the national, regional and international levels for its elimination;

2. Also reaffirms the right of everyone to have access to safe, sufficient and nutritious food, consistent with the right to adequate food and the fundamental right of everyone to be free from hunger, so as to be able to fully develop and maintain his or her physical and mental capacities;

3. Considers it intolerable that, as estimated by the United Nations Children's Fund, more than one third of the children who die every year before the age of 5 do so from hunger-related illness, and that, as estimated by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the number of people who are undernourished is about 1 billion worldwide, including as a result of the global food crisis, while, according to the latter organization, the planet could produce enough food to feed everyone around the world;

4. Expresses its concern that women and girls are disproportionately affected by hunger, food insecurity and poverty, in part as a result of gender inequality and discrimination, that in many countries, girls are twice as likely as boys to die from malnutrition and preventable childhood diseases and that it is estimated that almost twice as many women as men suffer from malnutrition;

5. Encourages all States to take action to address gender inequality and discrimination against women, in particular where it contributes to the malnutrition of women and girls, including measures to ensure the full and equal realization of the right to food and ensuring that women have equal access to resources, including income, land and water and their ownership, as well as full and equal access to education, science and technology, to enable them to feed themselves and their families;

6. Encourages the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the right to food to continue mainstreaming a gender perspective in the fulfilment of his mandate, and encourages the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and all other United Nations bodies and mechanisms addressing the right to food and food insecurity to integrate a gender perspective into their relevant policies, programmes and activities;

7. Reaffirms the need to ensure that programmes delivering safe and nutritious food are inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities;

8. Encourages all States to take steps with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the right to food, including steps to promote the conditions for everyone to be free from hunger and, as soon as possible, to enjoy fully the right to food, and to create and adopt national plans to combat hunger;

9. Recognizes the advances reached through South-South cooperation in developing countries and regions in connection with food security and the development of agricultural production for the full realization of the right to food;

10. Stresses that improving access to productive resources and public investment in rural development are essential for eradicating hunger and poverty, in particular in developing countries, including through the promotion of investments in appropriate small-scale irrigation and water management technologies in order to reduce vulnerability to droughts;

11. Recognizes that 80 per cent of hungry people live in rural areas and 50 per cent are small-scale farm-holders, and that these people are especially vulnerable to food insecurity, given the increasing cost of inputs and the fall in farm incomes; that access to land, water, seeds and other natural resources is an increasing challenge for poor producers; that sustainable and gender-sensitive agricultural policies are important tools for promoting land and agrarian reform, rural credit and insurance, technical assistance and other associated measures to achieve food security and rural development; and that support by States for small farmers, fishing communities and local enterprises is a key element for food security and the provision of the right to food;

12. Stresses the importance of fighting hunger in rural areas, including through national efforts supported by international partnerships to stop desertification and land degradation and through investments and public policies that are specifically appropriate to the risk of drylands, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa;

13. Urges States that have not yet done so to favourably consider becoming parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and to consider becoming parties to the International Treaty on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture as a matter of priority;

14. Recalls the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and acknowledges that many indigenous organizations and representatives of indigenous peoples have expressed in different forums their deep concerns over the obstacles and challenges they face for the full enjoyment of the right to food, and calls upon States to take special actions to combat the root causes of the disproportionately high level of hunger and malnutrition among indigenous peoples and the continuous discrimination against them;

15. Notes the need to further examine various concepts such as, inter alia, “food sovereignty” and their relation with food security and the right to food, bearing in mind the need to avoid any negative impact on the enjoyment of the right to food for all people at all times;

16. Requests all States and private actors, as well as international organizations within their respective mandates, to take fully into account the need to promote the effective realization of the right to food for all, including in the ongoing negotiations in different fields;

17. Recognizes the need to strengthen national commitment as well as international assistance, upon the request of and in cooperation with the affected countries, towards the full realization and protection of the right to food, and in particular to develop national protection mechanisms for people forced to leave their homes and land because of hunger or humanitarian emergencies affecting the enjoyment of the right to food;

18. Stresses the need to make efforts to mobilize and optimize the allocation and utilization of technical and financial resources from all sources, including external debt relief for developing countries, and to reinforce national actions to implement sustainable food security policies;

19. Calls for the early conclusion and a successful, development-oriented outcome of the Doha Round of trade negotiations of the World Trade Organization as a contribution to creating international conditions that permit the full realization of the right to food;

20. Stresses that all States should make all efforts to ensure that their international policies of a political and economic nature, including international trade agreements, do not have a negative impact on the right to food in other countries;

21. Recalls the importance of the New York Declaration on Action against Hunger and Poverty, and recommends the continuation of efforts aimed at identifying additional sources of financing for the fight against hunger and poverty;

22. Recognizes that the promises made at the World Food Summit in 1996 to halve the number of persons who are undernourished are not being fulfilled, while recognizing the efforts of Member States in this regard, and invites once again all international financial and development institutions, as well as the relevant United Nations agencies and funds, to give priority to and provide the necessary funding to realize the aim of halving by 2015 the proportion of people who suffer from hunger, as well as the right to food as set out in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

23. Reaffirms that integrating food and nutritional support, with the goal that all people at all times will have access to sufficient, safe and nutritious food to meet their dietary needs and food preferences for an active and healthy life, is part of a comprehensive effort to improve public health, including the response to the spread of HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and other communicable diseases;

24. Urges States to give adequate priority in their development strategies and expenditures to the realization of the right to food;

25. Stresses the importance of international cooperation and development assistance as an effective contribution both to the expansion and improvement of agriculture and its environmental sustainability, food production, breeding projects on diversity of crops and livestock, and institutional innovations such as community seed banks, farmer field schools and seed fairs and to the provision of humanitarian food assistance in activities related to emergency situations, for the realization of the right to food and the achievement of sustainable food security, while recognizing that each country has the primary responsibility for ensuring the implementation of national programmes and strategies in this regard;

26. Also stresses that States parties to the World Trade Organization Agreement on Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights should consider implementing that agreement in a manner that is supportive of food security, while mindful of the obligation of Member States to promote and protect the right to food;

27. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant stakeholders to support national efforts aimed at responding rapidly to the food crises currently occurring across Africa, and expresses its deep concern that funding shortfalls are forcing the World Food Programme to cut operations across different regions, including southern Africa;

28. Invites all relevant international organizations, including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, to continue to promote policies and projects that have a positive impact on the right to food, to ensure that partners respect the right to food in the implementation of common projects, to support strategies of Member States aimed at the fulfilment of the right to food and to avoid any actions that could have a negative impact on the realization of the right to food;

29. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur;

30. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, as extended by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 6/2 of 27 September 2007;

31. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide all the human and financial resources necessary for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur;

32. Welcomes the work already done by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting the right to adequate food, in particular its General Comment No. 12 (1999) on the right to adequate food (article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights), in which the Committee affirmed, inter alia, that the right to adequate food is indivisibly linked to the inherent dignity of the human person and is indispensable for the fulfilment of other human rights enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights, and is also inseparable from social justice, requiring the adoption of appropriate economic, environmental and social policies, at both the national and the international levels, oriented to the eradication of poverty and the fulfilment of all human rights for all;

33. Recalls General Comment No. 15 (2002) of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on the right to water (articles 11 and 12 of the Covenant), in which the Committee noted, inter alia, the importance of ensuring sustainable access to water resources for human consumption and agriculture in realization of the right to adequate food;

34. Reaffirms that the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in November 2004, represent a practical tool to promote the realization of the right to food for all, contribute to the achievement of food security and thus provide an additional instrument in the attainment of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

35. Welcomes the continued cooperation of the High Commissioner, the Committee and the Special Rapporteur, and encourages them to continue their cooperation in this regard;

36. Calls upon all Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in his task, to supply all necessary information requested by him and to give serious consideration to responding favourably to the requests of the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries to enable him to fulfil his mandate more effectively;

37. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution and to continue his work, including by examining the emerging issues with regard to the realization of the right to food within his existing mandate;

38. Invites Governments, relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies, civil society actors and non-governmental organizations, as well as the private sector, to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate, inter alia, through the submission of comments and suggestions on ways and means of realizing the right to food;

39. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixty-sixth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Right to adequate housing

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 780], the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in that context, Raquel Rolnik (Brazil), submitted her annual report [A/HRC/13/20], in which she discussed the impact of major international sports events (mega-events) on the realization of the right to adequate housing, in particular, the positive and negative legacy of hosting the Olympic Games and the World Cup. She reviewed the practices and procedures of the International Olympic Committee (IOC) and the Fédération Internationale de Football Association (FIFA), especially on their bidding and selection processes for host cities and countries. She also offered insights on the role played by sponsors, as well as examples of positive and negative practices of host cities and countries. The Rapporteur urged States to uphold their human rights obligations when organizing mega-events and addressed recommendations to States, IOC and FIFA.

An addendum [A/HRC/13/20/Add.1] summarized 49 communications sent to 32 States between 6 December 2008 and 22 December 2009 and 18 replies received from 13 States between 3 February 2009 and 3 February 2010.

A further addendum [A/HRC/13/20/Add.2] followed up on recommendations issued following missions in Kenya [YUN 2004, p. 765], Brazil [ibid.] and Cambodia [YUN 2005, p. 843].

Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 780], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the annual report of the Rapporteur [A/65/261], which analysed the legal entitlements and protections granted to migrants with respect to the right to housing in international treaties and other legal instruments. The report explored regulations and public policies affecting the right to adequate housing of migrants and provided examples of good practices. It addressed recommendations to Governments on how to guarantee and improve the enjoyment of the right of migrants to adequate housing.

Mission reports. Following her visit to Croatia (5–13 July) [A/HRC/16/42/Add.2], the Rapporteur reviewed issues related to post-conflict housing reconstruction and restitution, access to housing in the context of the transition from a State-run to a market economy, and housing challenges and policies. She recommended that the Government accelerate the implementation of the programme for former holders of occupancy tenant rights; adopt comprehensive housing policies, to be implemented without discrimination and addressed particularly to vulnerable groups; and adopt legal and practical mechanisms to enable the sustainable return of refugees.

Following her mission to Kazakhstan (6–13 September) [A/HRC/16/42/Add.3], the Rapporteur highlighted the adverse impact of the global economic and financial crises on the enjoyment of the right to adequate housing and the large-scale evictions or displacement of individuals and communities living in or around the cities of Astana and Almaty. The legal and policy framework in the field of housing, and in particular the national legislation on forced eviction, did not comply fully with international human rights standards, such as the general comments of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the basic principles on development-based evictions and displacement. National courts did not apply norms of international treaties, nor did they refer to international human rights standards. There was a high rate of demolition of informal settlements and forced evictions without prior notification, judicial control or review, or provision of adequate compensation or alternative accommodation. The Rapporteur made a series of recommendations to assist the Government in its efforts to strengthen the effective enjoyment of the right to adequate housing.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/10)], the Council called on States, in the context of mega-events, to promote the right to adequate housing and to create a sustainable, development-oriented housing legacy. It encouraged States to share with the Rapporteur good practices with regard to the realization of the right to adequate housing in the context of mega-events.

On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/8)], the Council extended for a three-year period the mandate of the Special Rapporteur. It noted the work on the basic principles and guidelines on development-based evictions and displacement and the need to continue to work on them, including through consultations with States and other stakeholders.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 783], the Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, Anand Grover (India), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/14/20] that examined the relationship between that right and the criminalization of three forms of private, adult, consensual sexual behaviour: same-sex conduct and sexual orientation, sex work, and HIV transmission. He considered the denial of sex workers' enjoyment of the right to health that resulted from the criminalization of sex work. The lack of legal recognition of the sex-work sector resulted in infringements of the right to health through the failure to provide safe working conditions, and a lack of recourse to legal remedies for occupational health issues. Additionally, legislation and interventions failed to distinguish between sex work and trafficking, infringing sex workers' right to health. The Rapporteur also examined the impact of the criminalization of HIV transmission with respect to the right to health. Criminal laws had a far-reaching impact on the enjoyment of the right to health, while failing to achieve public health aims or the objectives of the law. He concluded that only intentional, malicious HIV transmission could be criminalized; specific criminal laws concerning HIV transmission were generally unnecessary. The Rapporteur suggested that decriminalization was necessary in response to those issues, alongside other measures as part of a comprehensive right-to-health approach. Such measures included human rights education, the participation and inclusion of vulnerable groups, and efforts to reduce stigma and discrimination in respect of those groups.

An addendum [A/HRC/14/20/Add.1 & Corr.1] summarized 64 communications sent to 34 States, the Palestinian Authority and other actors from 16 March 2009 to 15 March 2010, and replies received from 2 May 2009 to 1 May 2010.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 783], the Secretary-General in August [A/65/255] transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Rapporteur, which examined the right to health and international drug control. He observed that the international drug control system had focused on creating a drug-free world, almost exclusively through use of law-enforcement policies and criminal sanctions. Evidence suggested, however, that the approach had failed, primarily because it did not acknowledge the realities of drug use and dependence. The excessively punitive regime had not achieved its public health goals and had resulted in countless human rights violations. People who used drugs might be deterred from accessing services owing to the threat of criminal punishment, or might be denied access to health care altogether. Criminalization and excessive law enforcement practices also undermined health promotion initiatives, perpetuated stigma and increased health risks for the population at large. The international drug control regime also unnecessarily limited access to essential medications, thus violating the right to health. Widespread implementation of interventions that reduced harms associated with drug use and of decriminalization of certain laws would improve the health and welfare of drug users and the general population. He made recommendations for UN entities and Member States to adopt a right-to-health approach to drug control; encourage system-wide coherence and communication; incorporate the use of indicators and guidelines and consider developing a new legal framework concerning certain illicit drugs.

Mission reports. During his visit to Guatemala (12–18 May) [A/HRC/17/25/Add.2], the Rapporteur noted that the health sector was severely under-resourced and concentrated in urban areas. Substantial inequalities existed in the enjoyment of the right to health for indigenous communities and women, particularly with regard to sexual and reproductive health. He expressed concern over Government policies that restricted access to medicines, the status of abortion laws and the resulting high rate of unsafe abortions, and the increasing prevalence of violence against women. In addition, Government policies concerning drug procurement and the intellectual property provisions of the Central American Free Trade Agreement curtailed access to medicine. The Rapporteur recommended that the Government adopt a comprehensive health strategy for the promotion of rights of indigenous people; increase investments to improve accessibility to health-care facilities, goods and services in rural communities; increase the number of rural primary care facilities and health professionals and accessibility of those facilities; improve information on contraception within the public health-care system; and ensure that women who had been subjected to violence had access to the justice system.

During his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic (7–14 November) [A/HRC/17/25/Add.3], the Rapporteur focused on access to health care for vulnerable and marginalized groups and persons in detention. He also explored issues related to women's health, including maternal health, family planning and gender-based violence. He recommended that the Government collect comprehensive, disaggregated data to ensure that no ethnic or minority groups were discriminated against in respect of access to health-care services; enable community participation in health-care service delivery through engagement of civil society organizations in health-related policymaking; conduct impact assessments of the proposed private insurance scheme; and develop a nation-wide sexual and reproductive health education curricula, to be delivered through late primary and early secondary schools.

Communications. On 28 June [A/HRC/14/G/4] and 18 August [A/HRC/14/G/5], Poland transmitted its corrections and comments on the Rapporteur's report on his visit to the country [YUN 2009, p. 729].

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/22)], the Council called on States to promote and protect the right to health without discrimination; extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period; requested the Rapporteur, with OHCHR assistance, to prepare a study on the realization of the right to health of older persons; and decided to address the study at a panel discussion during its eighteenth (2011) session.

Maternal mortality

OHCHR report. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 729], OHCHR in April submitted a report [A/HRC/14/39] on preventable maternal mortality and morbidity and human rights, which identified the human rights dimensions of preventable maternal mortality and morbidity in the international legal framework. It also reviewed initiatives and activities within the UN system to address the problem and identified how the Council could add value to existing initiatives through a human rights analysis.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [res. 15/17], the Council called on States to collect disaggregated data on maternal mortality and morbidity to ensure effective targeting of policies and programmes; requested States to renew their political commitment to eliminate preventable maternal mortalidity and morbidity; requested OHCHR to prepare an analytical compilation of good or effective practices embodying a human rights-based approach; and decided to address the compilation at the Council's eighteenth (2011) session.

Water and sanitation

Reports of independent expert. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2008, p. 844], the independent expert on the issue of human rights obligations related to access to safe drinking water and sanitation, Catarina de Albuquerque (Portugal), in June submitted a report [A/HRC/15/31] to the Council that focused on the human rights obligations and responsibilities which applied in cases of non-State service provision of water and sanitation. She reviewed the role that non-State service providers played in delivering water and sanitation, and outlined the human rights obligations of States and the responsibilities of non-State service providers, highlighting three potentially challenging areas in that regard: decision-making, operation of services, and accountability and enforcement. She emphasized that the human rights framework did not express a preference over models of service provision, but insisted that, in all instances, the human rights to water and sanitation be guaranteed. She recommended that States develop a national plan, including legislation, to progressively achieve the rights to water and sanitation, independent of the modalities of the service provision chosen.

In an addendum [A/HRC/15/31/Add.1], the expert presented a framework for assessing good practices from a human rights perspective, using five normative criteria (availability, quality/safety, acceptability, accessibility and affordability) and five cross-cutting criteria (non-discrimination, participation, accountability, impact and sustainability). She encouraged stakeholders to submit their good practices, in conformity with those criteria, for inclusion in the compendium of good practices to be submitted to the Human Rights Council in 2011.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 731], the Secretary-General in August [A/65/254] transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the expert, which focused on how human rights, in particular the human rights to water and sanitation, could contribute to realizing the MDGs. She examined how human rights could address gaps in the MDG framework relating to universal access, international cooperation and assistance, aligning targets and indicators with human rights standards, non-discrimination and attention to the most marginalized and disadvantaged groups, participation and accountability. The final section of the report contained conclusions and recommendations.

Mission reports. Following her visit to Slovenia (24–28 May) [A/HRC/18/33/Add.2], the expert observed that there was near universal access to water and sanitation in Slovenia, yet expressed concern about access for the Roma population. The fact that the main responsibility for ensuring access to water and sanitation belonged to the municipalities did not absolve the Government of its human rights obligations. The expert called on the central Government to ensure that all people in Slovenia were able to enjoy those rights on an equal basis.

Following her mission to Japan (20–28 July) [A/HRC/18/33/Add.3], the expert raised concerns on access to water and sanitation by the poor, the homeless, persons with disabilities, underserved persons of Korean descent and prisoners. She recommended that the State: fully guarantee economic, social and cultural rights in domestic law, including by ensuring that those rights were justiciable in national courts; adopt a comprehensive law on non-discrimination, including provisions on economic, social and cultural rights; establish an independent national human rights institution with competencies to monitor the enjoyment of all human rights and to receive individual complaints; and adopt a comprehensive law guaranteeing the right of all people to safe water and sanitation and clearly delineating the responsibilities of national and municipal actors.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/9)], the Council called on States to develop tools and mechanisms—which might encompass legislation and comprehensive plans and strategies, including financial ones—to achieve progressively the full realization of human rights obligations related to access to safe drinking water and sanitation; adopt and implement effective regulatory frameworks for all service providers in line with the human rights obligations of States; and ensure that non-State service providers contributed to the provision of a regular supply of safe, acceptable, accessible and affordable drinking water and sanitation services of good quality and sufficient quantity. The Council also requested the independent expert to report annually to the Council and the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 108], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/292 [draft: A/64/L.63/Rev.1 & Add.1] by recorded vote (122-0-41) [agenda item 48].

The human right to water and sanitation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/175 of 17 December 1999 on the right to development, 55/196 of 20 December 2000, by which it proclaimed 2003 the International Year of Freshwater, 58/217 of 23 December 2003, by which it proclaimed the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, 59/228 of 22 December 2004, 61/192 of 20 December 2006, by which it proclaimed 2008 the International Year of Sanitation, and 64/198 of 21 December 2009 regarding the midterm comprehensive review of the implementation of the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”; Agenda 21 of June 1992; the Habitat Agenda of 1996; the Mar del Plata Action Plan of 1977 adopted by the United Nations Water Conference; and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development of June 1992,

Recalling also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Recalling further all previous resolutions of the Human Rights Council on human rights and access to safe drinking water and sanitation, including Council resolutions 7/22 of 28 March 2008 and 12/8 of 1 October 2009, related to the human right to safe and clean drinking water and sanitation, general comment No. 15 (2002) of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, on the right to water (articles 11 and 12 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights) and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the scope and content of the relevant human rights obligations related to equitable access to safe drinking water and sanitation under international human rights instruments, as well as the report of the independent expert on the issue of human rights obligations related to access to safe drinking water and sanitation,

Deeply concerned that approximately 884 million people lack access to safe drinking water and that more than 2.6 billion do not have access to basic sanitation, and alarmed that approximately 1.5 million children under 5 years of age die and 443 million school days are lost each year as a result of water- and sanitation-related diseases,

Acknowledging the importance of equitable access to safe and clean drinking water and sanitation as an integral component of the realization of all human rights,

Reaffirming the responsibility of States for the promotion and protection of all human rights, which are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and must be treated globally, in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Bearing in mind the commitment made by the international community to fully achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and stressing, in that context, the resolve of Heads of State and Government, as expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people who are unable to reach or afford safe drinking water and, as agreed in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”), to halve the proportion of people without access to basic sanitation,

1. Recognizes the right to safe and clean drinking water and sanitation as a human right that is essential for the full enjoyment of life and all human rights;

2. Calls upon States and international organizations to provide financial resources, capacity-building and technology transfer, through international assistance and cooperation, in particular to developing countries, in order to scale up efforts to provide safe, clean, accessible and affordable drinking water and sanitation for all;

3. Welcomes the decision by the Human Rights Council to request that the independent expert on human rights obligations related to access to safe drinking water and sanitation submit an annual report to the General Assembly, and encourages her to continue working on all aspects of her mandate and, in consultation with all relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, to include in her report to the Assembly, at its sixty-sixth session, the principal challenges related to the realization of the human right to safe and clean drinking water and sanitation and their impact on the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 64/292:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Myanmar, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Seychelles, Singapore, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tunisia, Tuvalu, United Arab Emirates, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Ethiopia, Greece, Guyana, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Latvia, Lesotho, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, New Zealand, Poland, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Slovakia, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Zambia.

Cultural rights

Report of independent expert. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 724], in March Farida Shaheed (Pakistan), the independent expert in the field of cultural rights—a mandate established in 2009 [ibid.]—submitted her first report [A/HRC/14/36] to the Council, providing preliminary views on the conceptual and legal framework of her mandate. Focusing on the challenges regarding the scope and content of cultural rights, she reviewed the relevant provisions in UN human rights instruments and examined the interaction among the principle of universality of human rights, the recognition and implementation of cultural rights and the need to respect cultural diversity. The priority issues she proposed to address related to two main topics: cultural rights, globalization of exchanges and of information, and development processes; and participation, access and contribution to cultural life, without any discrimination.

Mission report. Following her visit to Brazil (8–19 November) [A/HRC/17/38/Add.1], the expert examined aspects of the promotion and protection of cultural rights in the country, particularly the right to take part in cultural life, the right to enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications and the right to use one's own language. In her recommendations, she encouraged the Government to ensure the availability of cultural resources and assets, especially in smaller cities and regions; ensure indigenous peoples' right to self-determination; combat discrimination and intolerance; redouble measures to protect persons and sites associated with religions of African origin; and promote knowledge about mechanisms for redress of violations of cultural rights.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/9)], the Council welcomed the holding of the seminar on the theme "Implementing cultural rights: nature, issues at stake" (Geneva, 1–2 February); took note of the expert's report; and requested the expert to report to the Council's seventeenth (2011) session.

Right to education

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2008, p. 842], the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, Vernor Muñoz Villalobos (Costa Rica), in April submitted his sixth and final annual report [A/HRC/14/25 & Corr.1] to the Council, devoted to the question of the right to education of migrants, refugees and asylum-seekers. He pointed out that those who had crossed national borders were generally at risk of marginalization and discrimination in the provision of education. The report, which aimed to inform and assist Governments and other parties in their efforts to address those matters and develop best practices to ensure the enjoyment of the unfulfilled right to education for those groups, addressed six issues: the legal and normative framework; social and cultural issues; language and curriculum; teachers; accreditation; and learning for life. The Rapporteur concluded that attention to those issues was indispensable in meeting the educational challenges and opportunities related to migration.

An addendum [A/HRC/14/25/Add.1] summarized 12 communications sent to 12 Governments between 16 March 2009 and 15 March 2010, and 12 replies received between 1 May 2009 and 30 April 2010.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2008, p. 842], the Secretary-General in July transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report [A/65/162] of the Rapporteur, which focused on the human right to comprehensive sexual education, placing the topic in the context of patriarchy and control of sexuality. He explained the interdependence of sexuality, health and education and the relationship of the right to sexual education to other rights from a gender and diversity perspective. He discussed the right to sexual education in the context of international human rights law and analysed international and regional standards. He then addressed the situation of that right, taking State responsibility into account and analysing regional and national trends, differing perspectives and the key role of the family and the community. He concluded by reiterating the necessity and the relevance of that right and presenting recommendations for States and the international community.

Mission reports. Following his visit to Mongolia (1–8 October 2009) [A/HRC/14/25/Add.3], the Rapporteur discussed the challenges the educational system was facing, notably school dropouts and the lack of reliable statistics; the infrastructure conditions of schools in respect to access to water and sanitation; the state of dormitories in rural areas; the phenomenon of internal migration to cities, which was leading to overcrowding in urban schools; and the education of children with disabilities. He made recommendations to overcome those challenges, emphasizing the need to move towards a human rights culture and to see education as the vehicle for development—not as a service or a commodity but as a basic human right.

Following his mission to Mexico (8–18 February 2010) [A/HRC/14/25/Add.4], the Rapporteur pointed to the need to secure a national consensus on education that would outlive changes of Government and involved various actors: parents, the academic world, civil society organizations, students, teachers, and federal and state authorities. He recommended reinforcing the measures to eliminate the payment of fees for education; setting targets for achieving gradual compliance with the obligation under the General Education Act to allocate 8 per cent of gross domestic product to education; taking emergency action to combat educational deficits in persons over 15 years of age; and increasing the budget for programmes and departments concerned with indigenous and intercultural education.

Appointment of Special Rapporteur. On 18 June, the Human Rights Council appointed Kishore Singh (India) as Special Rapporteur

Human Rights Council action. On 29 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/4)], the Council encouraged States to ensure the right to education of migrants, refugees, asylum-seekers and internally displaced persons. It also urged States to promote lifelong education and learning in both formal and informal settings, including human rights education and training.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 July [meeting 106], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/290 [draft: A/64/L.58 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 114].

The right to education in emergency situations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that everyone shall enjoy the human right to education, and recalling in that regard the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities,

Recalling all relevant United Nations resolutions related to the right to education in emergency situations,

Recalling also that, in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, it was resolved that children everywhere, boys and girls alike, would be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and that girls and boys would have equal access to all levels of education by 2015,

Recognizing that a large proportion of the world's children out of school live in conflict-affected areas and in natural-disaster-stricken regions, and that this is a serious challenge to the fulfilment of the international education goals, including millennium development goal 2,

Underscoring the fact that the Convention on the Rights of the Child must constitute the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child and that the requirements for the realization of the right to education, pertinent also to emergency situations, are set out in articles 28 and 29 of that Convention,

Deeply concerned that, despite the progress made in recent years towards achieving the goals of the Education for All initiative agreed upon at the World Education Forum, held in Dakar in April 2000, the level of funding for international education goals is inadequate,

Deeply concerned also that, in the humanitarian consolidated and flash appeals launched in 2009, the education sector was one of the most underfunded with respect to meeting the original requirements,

Recognizing that ensuring the right to education in emergency situations requires specifically designed, flexible and inclusive approaches consistent with protection needs, conflict mitigation initiatives and disaster risk reduction considerations,

Condemning the targeting of civilians as such in situations of armed conflict, including schoolchildren, students and teachers, as well as attacks on civilian objects such as educational institutions, as prohibited under international law, recognizing that such acts may constitute grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and, for States parties, war crimes under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and reminding all parties to armed conflict of their obligations under international law to refrain from the use of civilian objects, including educational institutions, for military purposes and child recruitment,

Acknowledging that protecting schools and providing education in emergencies should remain a key priority for the international community and Member States,

Recognizing the important role that education can play in supporting efforts in emergency situations to halt and prevent abuses committed against affected populations, in particular efforts to prevent all forms of violence, including rape and other acts of sexual violence, exploitation, trafficking in persons and the worst forms of child labour,

Emphasizing the importance of the promotion of human rights education and learning at all levels, including through the implementation of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, as appropriate, and encouraging all States to develop initiatives in that regard,

Considering that quality education can mitigate the psychosocial impact of armed conflicts and natural disasters by providing a sense of normalcy, stability, structure and hope for the future,

Considering also that, in situations of displacement, education, among other factors, can play a significant role in contributing towards preparing for and promoting durable solutions for the affected population,

1. Welcomes the work of the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, and takes note of his report on the right to education in emergency situations;

2. Welcomes the work carried out by the Committee on the Rights of the Child through the holding on 19 September 2008 of a day of general discussion on the right of the child to education in emergency situations;

3. Notes with appreciation the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict on violations and abuses committed against children in armed conflict, and notes the importance of her continuing work, within her existing mandate, on the adverse impact of armed conflict on the education of children;

4. Welcomes the global advocacy initiative, the “One million safe schools and hospitals” campaign, launched on 8 April 2010 in Manila, aimed at making schools and hospitals safer from disasters, as part of the “Making Cities Resilient” global campaign of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction for 2010 and 2011;

5. Recognizes the establishment of the Education Cluster by the United Nations Inter-Agency Standing Committee and other initiatives as measures to address, in a coordinated manner, educational needs in emergency situations, including through partnerships for the implementation of the “Minimum standards for education: preparedness, response, recovery” handbook of the Inter-Agency Network for Education in Emergencies, calls upon donors to support the work of the Cluster, and emphasizes that those measures should continue to be taken in close coordination with relevant authorities;

6. Recalls its thematic debate of 18 March 2009 on access to education in emergency, post-crisis and transition situations caused by man-made conflicts or natural disasters;

Education in all stages of humanitarian response

7. Urges Member States to implement strategies and policies to ensure and support the realization of the right to education as an integral element of humanitarian assistance and humanitarian response, to the maximum of their available resources, with the support of the international community, the United Nations system, donors, multilateral agencies, the private sector, civil society and non-governmental organizations;

8. Requests Member States to ensure that the best possible systems of education are in place, including through the allocation of sufficient resources, the appropriate adaptation of curricula and training of teachers, the implementation of risk assessments, disaster preparedness programmes in schools, the legal framework for protection, and health and basic social services, so as to withstand emergencies;

Safe and protective educational environment

9. Recommends that Member States ensure access to education in emergency situations to all affected populations, in accordance with their obligations under international law and without discrimination of any kind;

10. Urges all parties to armed conflict to fulfil their obligations under international law, in particular their applicable obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law, including to respect civilians, including students and educational personnel, to respect civilian objects such as educational institutions and to refrain from the recruitment of children into armed forces or groups, urges Member States to fulfil their applicable obligations under international law, including international humanitarian law, related to the protection of and respect for civilians and civilian objects, and urges them, in order to prevent and combat impunity, to criminalize under their domestic law attacks on educational buildings, and stresses that such attacks may constitute grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and, for States parties, war crimes under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court;

11. Urges Member States to ensure that disaster risk and safety considerations are factored into all phases of the planning, design, construction and reconstruction of educational facilities, through the consideration, inter alia, of the recommendations contained in the “Minimum standards for education: preparedness, response, recovery” handbook of the Inter-Agency Network for Education in Emergencies and its “Guidance notes on safer school construction”;

12. Also urges Member States, in their support for education, to specifically address the gender-specific needs of girls in emergency contexts, including their increased vulnerability to gender-based violence;

13. Invites relevant United Nations entities and partners to allocate sufficient technical expertise to enhance, in close consultation with concerned Member States and relevant authorities, data collection on and documentation of the impact of emergencies on the access of children and young people to quality education, disaggregated by age and gender, and on attacks on educational institutions, students and educators, with due consideration given to information provided by concerned States and relevant authorities;

14. Urges Member States to implement gender-sensitive policies and programme interventions, in order to ensure that populations affected by emergency situations have equal access to safe, quality and relevant education;

Reconstruction and post-emergency situations

15. Also urges Member States to provide quality education in emergency situations that is gender-sensitive, centred on learners, rights-based, protective, adaptable, inclusive, participatory and reflective of the specific living conditions of children and youth, and that pays due regard, as appropriate, to their linguistic and cultural identity, mindful that quality education can foster tolerance and mutual understanding and respect for the human rights of others;

16. Calls upon all parties concerned to ensure that all peace processes and agreements and post-conflict recovery, peacemaking and peacebuilding efforts, as well as reconstruction planning, are sensitive to the special and specific needs of women, children and youth and include specific measures for the protection of civilians, including the facilitation of early access to education, learning and training, and to ensure the participation of women, children and young persons in those processes;

17. Calls upon States and other relevant actors to ensure the facilitation of early access to education and training for children and adults in secure and friendly environments in the aftermath of emergencies, including through the implementation of specific related measures in early recovery initiatives, peacemaking and peacebuilding processes, capacity-building strategies, the participation of children and youth and the mobilization and prioritization of human, technical and financial resources;

The importance of political will and financing

18. Reaffirms its commitment to supporting the efforts of developing countries to ensure that all children have access to and complete free and compulsory primary education of good quality, to eliminating gender inequality and imbalances and renewing efforts to improve the education of girls, and to continuing to support the efforts of developing countries in the implementation of the Education for All initiative, including with enhanced resources of all types through the Education for All fast-track initiative in support of country-led national education plans, and urges donors to honour their pledged contributions;

19. Calls upon States, as primary duty-bearers, to ensure the realization of the right to education in all phases of emergency situations, in a manner that meets the essential needs of the affected populations, recognizing the role of the donor community and humanitarian agencies in assisting those efforts;

20. Calls upon all Member States, including donors, and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to continue to support diverse humanitarian funding channels and to consider increasing their contributions to education programmes defined in humanitarian appeals, including humanitarian consolidated and flash appeals, based on and in proportion to assessed needs, as a means of ensuring adequate, timely, predictable, flexible and needs-based resources;

Follow-up

21. Requests the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, in close cooperation with all relevant stakeholders, including Governments, United Nations agencies and programmes, civil society and other relevant United Nations mandate holders, to include in his next interim report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session an update to his report on the right to education in emergencies, in order to identify gaps and remaining challenges in ensuring the right to education in emergency situations.

Environmental and scientific concerns

Forensic genetics

OHCHR report. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2008, p. 799], OHCHR in August submitted a report [A/HRC/15/26] on the right to the truth and on forensic genetics and human rights, which summarized information received from 18 countries as well as specialized institutions. The report examined the use of forensic experts in cases of gross violations of human rights; forensic genetics and human rights, including national practices in the use of forensic genetics for identifying victims of human rights violations and the voluntary creation of genetic databanks; the context and primary components of a text on forensic genetics and human rights; and the existing human rights legal framework. OHCHR concluded that forensic experts had a crucial role to play in identifying victims of serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law.

Human Rights Council action. On 29 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/5)], the Council encouraged States to use of forensic genetics to identify the remains of victims of human rights violations and to address the issue of impunity; encouraged States to use forensic genetics to restore the identity of those persons who were separated from their families in situations of human rights violations and in the context of armed conflicts; and requested the High Commissioner to report to the Council's eighteenth (2011) session.

In response to Economic and Social Council decision 2008/233 [YUN 2008, p. 845], the Secretary-General in May [E/2010/82] transmitted to the Council a note by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on genetic privacy and non-discrimination.

On 23 July, by decision 2010/259, the Council deferred its consideration of genetic privacy and non-discrimination until its 2011 substantive session so as to benefit from further information collected from Member States, the results of analysis by the Inter-Agency Committee on Bioethics (UNIACB) and further exchanges among UN agencies and inter-governmental organizations. It encouraged UNIACB to further its work in that field, and requested the UNESCO Director General to report thereon to the Council at its 2011 substantive session.

Toxic wastes

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2008, p. 843], the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights, Okechukwu Ibeanu (Nigeria), in July submitted a report [A/HRC/15/22] providing a critical review of the Rapporteur's work and activities. The report examined the scope of the mandate vis-à-vis the norms, standards, and principles of environmental law to regulate the production, management, trade and disposal of toxic and dangerous products and wastes. It identified areas of focus for the mandate and emerging issues. It also provided recommendations to the Human Rights Council and the new mandate holder on how to strengthen the mandate in order to maximize the protection of those individuals and communities that might be adversely affected by the movement and disposal those substances. He further recommended that the Council expand the mandate so as to request the Rapporteur to monitor the adverse effects of those substances during the whole life cycle, from their production to their disposal, and to request the new mandate holder to develop a set of guidelines on human rights-based approaches to the sound management and disposal of toxic and dangerous products and wastes.

An addendum [A/HRC/15/22/Add.1] summarized communications sent to 8 Governments and companies between 1 July 2009 and 30 June 2010, as well as responses received between 19 August 2009 and 19 August 2010.

Mission report. The Special Rapporteur visited India (11–21 January) [A/HRC/15/22/Add.3] to examine the adverse effects that hazardous activities, such as shipbreaking and the recycling of electrical and electronic waste (e-waste), had on the enjoyment of human rights of countless individuals working in those sectors or living close to where those activities took place. He pointed out that national legislation on waste management and health and safety at work was not effectively implemented, and the institutional framework appeared inadequate to respond to the related health and environmental challenges. The health and safety situation prevailing at the shipbreaking yards remained critical. He recommended that the Government better define the role and functions of the central and state government institutions responsible for the implementation of related national legislation and develop mechanisms to ensure better coordination; provide adequate resources to institutions responsible for enforcing the legislation; and adopt measures to curb illegal import of hazardous waste.

Appointment of Special Rapporteur. The Human Rights Council on 18 June appointed Calin Georgescu (Romania) as Special Rapporteur.

Slavery and related matters

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 784], the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, Gulnara Shahinian (Armenia), in June submitted a report [A/HRC/15/20] that focused on the manifestations and causes of domestic servitude. Although the victims were largely invisible, domestic servitude was a global human rights concern, affecting every region in the world. It took many shapes and forms, ranging from slavery to slavery-like practices, such as bonded domestic labour and child domestic labour. Millions of women and girls pursuing the opportunities that domestic work provided, while making a valuable contribution to society, were at risk because their rights were not adequately protected. The criminalization of all forms of slavery and servitude was one aspect of an effective response. At the same time, the issue was embedded in the wider challenge to ensure that domestic workers were provided with equal protection of their labour rights. The Rapporteur recommended that States: criminalize servitude in all its forms and manifestations, including bonded labour, child and forced marriages and other so-called “cultural” practices; prosecute perpetrators and ensure that victims obtained reparation; put in place information and complaints mechanisms for victims; and take action against anyone unduly restricting the freedom of movement and communication of domestic workers.

An addendum [A/HRC/15/20/Add.1] summarized communications sent from 1 July 2009 to 1 June 2010 to four Governments and replies received from 1 July 2009 to 2 August 2010.

Mission reports. Following her visit to Ecuador (25 January–1 February) [A/HRC/15/20/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur said that contemporary forms of slavery persisted and were directly related to pervasive instances of discrimination, social exclusion and poverty. They affected Afro-descendants and indigenous peoples, as well as asylum-seekers, refugees, irregular and smuggled migrants, women, and children of impoverished families. Contemporary forms of slavery were also present in specific industries such as gold-mining, flower and banana plantations, palm oil extraction, domestic servitude and the informal economy sector. The Rapporteur made recommendations on addressing the worst forms of child labour; preventing slavery-like situations among asylum-seekers, refugees and migrants; protecting domestic workers against slavery-like practices; and providing assistance to victims.

During her mission to Brazil (17–28 May) [A/HRC/15/20/Add.4], the Rapporteur found that forced labour in the rural areas was most prevalent in the cattle ranching industry, followed by the agricultural industry. The victims were predominantly boys and men aged 15 years and older. In urban centres, forced labour was a feature of the garment industry. Such sectors were in need of reform to prevent slavery-like practices from being used. The exemplary policies that the Government had put in place to combat the phenomenon were threatened by the impunity enjoyed by landowners, local and international companies and intermediaries. The Rapporteur made recommendations to combat slave labour in rural areas and in the garment industry, as well as recommendations for the business community.

Following her mission to Romania (13–17 December) [A/HRC/18/30/Add.1], the Rapporteur reported that child labour, the economic exploitation of children and other exploitative and slave-like situations persisted. She recommended addressing the worst forms of child labour; preventing slavery-like situations among non-European Union country migrant workers, Romanian migrant workers and victims of human trafficking; and responding to risks indicating vulnerabilities to exploitation and slave-like situations. She invited the Government to develop programmes to support the implementation of legislation on the worst forms of child labour and other slave-like situations, and to ensure equal enjoyment of human rights by Roma, including by promoting equal access of Roma children to education.

Human Rights Council action. On 29 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/2)], the Council renewed the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period and requested the Rapporteur to submit annual reports to the Council.

Fund on slavery

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General in August [A/66/217] reported on the financial status of the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. At its fifteenth session (Geneva, 6–10 December), the Fund's Board of Trustees recommended 61 new project grants amounting to $555,115 to assist 61 NGO projects in 46 countries and territories. Eleven countries and one individual had contributed $656,793 since the Board's fourteenth session [YUN 2009, p. 731]. The Board estimated that the Fund would need at least $1.5 million before its sixteenth session, scheduled for 28 November–5 December 2011. The High Commissioner approved the Board's recommendations on behalf of the Secretary-General.

Slavery and transatlantic slave trade

Commemorative meeting. On 25 March, the General Assembly, on the proposal of its President, decided to convene on that day a special commemorative meeting on the occasion of the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade (decision 64/552). The meeting was addressed by seven Member States, on behalf of regional groups, as well as by other speakers [A/64/PV.80].

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General in September reported [A/65/390] on the UN programme of educational outreach on the transatlantic slave trade and slavery, as requested by General Assembly resolution 64/15 [YUN 2009, p. 732]. The UN Department of Public Information (DPI) reinforced efforts to implement its outreach programme, established in 2008 to improve understanding of the history and impact of the 400-year-long slave trade [YUN 2008, p. 845]. In that regard, in 2010 it raised awareness through public information campaigns and by promoting and facilitating knowledge-sharing, in particular studies and expert discussions on the topic. The Department collaborated with States Members of the Caribbean Community and the African Union to organize the third annual observance of the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade on 25 March. The theme, "Expressing our freedom through culture", underlined the significance of the cultural heritage of enslaved peoples in their fight for survival and freedom. Weeklong commemorative activities held at Headquarters included a cultural evening celebrating Afro-Caribbean music and food, the screening of a documentary film, a panel discussion and an international student videoconference. Through its network of information centres and other news and media outreach resources, DPI carried the message of the observance internationally and carried out follow-up awareness-raising activities.

Communications. On 2 March, Jamaica, in its capacity as Chairman of the Committee of Interested States established to oversee the decision to erect, at a place of prominence at UN Headquarters, a permanent memorial in acknowledgement of the tragedy and in consideration of the legacy of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade [YUN 2007, p. 784], transmitted to the General Assembly President an updated list [A/64/699] of Member States that had contributed to the Trust Fund for the permanent memorial. The total amount was $708,806, of which $443,506 was received and $270,800 was pledged.

On 3 November, Jamaica submitted another updated list [A/65/597] indicating that the total Trust Fund amount was $810,094, of which $802,594 was received and $7,500 was pledged. The estimated amount required for the project was $5.4 million.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by General Assembly resolution 64/15 [YUN 2009, p. 732], the Secretary-General in December [A/65/605] reported on the status of the UN Trust Fund for Partnerships—Permanent Memorial. As at 30 November, $801,298 had been received in contributions to the Trust Fund comprising $773,548 in contributions from Member States and $27,750 in private donations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/239 [draft: A/65/L.36 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 116].

Permanent memorial to and remembrance of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 61/19 of 28 November 2006, entitled “Commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade” and subsequent resolutions entitled “Permanent memorial to and remembrance of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade”,

Recalling also the designation of 25 March as the annual International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade,

Noting the initiatives undertaken by States in reaffirming their commitment to implement paragraphs 101 and 102 of the Durban Declaration of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, aimed at countering the legacy of slavery and contributing to the restoration of the dignity of the victims of slavery and the slave trade,

Recalling, in particular, paragraph 101 of the Durban Declaration, which, inter alia, invited the international community and its members to honour the memory of the victims,

Stressing the importance of educating and informing current and future generations about the causes, consequences and lessons of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade,

Recognizing how little is known about the transatlantic slave trade and its lasting consequences, felt throughout the world, and welcoming the increased attention that the annual commemoration by the General Assembly has brought to the issue, including raising awareness in many States,

Recalling that the permanent memorial initiative within the General Assembly complements the work being done at the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the Slave Route Project, including its commemorative activities,

1. Welcomes the initiative of Member States to erect, at a place of prominence at United Nations Headquarters that is easily accessible to delegates, United Nations staff and visitors, a permanent memorial in acknowledgement of the tragedy and in consideration of the legacy of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade;

2. Recalls the establishment of a committee of interested States to oversee the permanent memorial project, drawn from all geographical regions of the world, with Member States from the Caribbean Community and the African Union playing a primary role, in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, representatives of the Secretariat, the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture of the New York Public Library and civil society;

3. Also recalls the establishment of a trust fund for the permanent memorial, referred to as the United Nations Trust Fund for Partnerships—Permanent Memorial, administered by the United Nations Office for Partnerships, and notes the current status of contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Recognizes the necessity of sustained voluntary contribution in order to achieve in a timely manner the goal of erecting a permanent memorial in honour of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade;

5. Expresses sincere appreciation to those Member States that have already made contributions to the Trust Fund, encourages additional contributions, and invites Member States and other interested parties that have not done so to do likewise;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to organize a series of activities annually to commemorate the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, including a commemorative session of the General Assembly at United Nations Headquarters and, as appropriate, activities through the network of United Nations information centres;

7. Requests the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in cooperation with the countries concerned and with relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to take appropriate steps to enhance world public awareness of the commemorative activities and the permanent memorial initiative, and to facilitate efforts to erect the permanent memorial at United Nations Headquarters;

8. Reiterates its request in resolution 64/15 of 16 November 2009 for Member States to develop, in accordance with their national legislation, educational programmes, including through school curricula, designed to educate and inculcate in future generations an understanding of the lessons, history and consequences of slavery and the slave trade, and to provide such information to the Secretary-General for inclusion in his report;

9. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to launch an international design competition for the permanent memorial, which is to be funded from the Trust Fund, in view of the considerable experience of that Organization with the Slave Route Project, international competitions and its worldwide presence through its network of field offices and National Commissions;

10. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to assist the committee in defining guidelines for the selection process and in identifying qualified candidates, including from its pool of international specialists to serve on the international jury;

11. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the programme of educational outreach on the transatlantic slave trade and slavery relating to the diverse educational outreach strategy to increase awareness of and to educate future generations about the causes, consequences, lessons and legacy of the transatlantic slave trade and to communicate the dangers of racism and prejudice, and encourages continued action in this regard;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on continued action to implement the programme of educational outreach, including actions taken by Member States in implementing the present resolution, as well as steps to enhance world public awareness of the commemorative activities and the permanent memorial initiative;

13. Requests the United Nations Office for Partnerships, through the Secretary-General, to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the status of the Trust Fund and, in particular, on contributions received and their utilization;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session the item entitled "Follow-up to the commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade".

The General Assembly on 24 December decided that the agenda item on the follow-up to the commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-fifth (2011) session (decision 65/544).

Vulnerable groups

Women

OHCHR study. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 733], OHCHR in August submitted a study [A/HRC/15/40] on discrimination against women in law and in practice, and on how the issue was addressed throughout the UN human rights system. The study provided conclusions on additional steps the UN human rights system might take to stimulate reform of discriminatory laws and enhance domestic monitoring processes to identify new laws that discriminated explicitly or that were discriminatory in impact or implementation. UN bodies could identify laws that discriminated; facilitate the sharing of model laws and best practices in legislation and implementation; provide technical assistance; and support the work of Governments, parliaments, national human rights institutions and other entities. The main impetus for reform, however, must come from the national level. The study made recommendations for action to the Human Rights Council and to UN-Women. It also recommended the establishment of a new special procedure of the Council that would focus on laws and practices that discriminated against women.

Human Rights Council action. On 1 October [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/23)], the Council called on States to revoke any remaining laws that discriminated on the basis of sex; remove gender bias in the administration of justice; and ensure full representation and equal participation of women in political, social and economic decision-making.

General Assembly action. The General Assembly, by resolution 65/229 of 21 December (see p. 1120), adopted the United Nations Rules for the Treatment of Women Prisoners and Non-custodial Measures for Women Offenders ("the Bangkok Rules").

Working group on discrimination against women

Establishment of new mandate. On 1 October [res. 15/23], the Council established, for a three-year period, a working group of five independent experts on the issue of discrimination against women in law and in practice. It requested the working group to submit an annual report, starting at the Council's twentieth (2012) session; prepare a compendium of best practices; and undertake a study on the ways and means in which it could cooperate with States to fulfil their commitments to eliminate discrimination against women in law and in practice.

Violence against women

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2008, p. 848], the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Rashida Manjoo (South Africa), in April submitted her first thematic report [A/HRC/14/22] highlighting her activities in 2009 and early 2010 and addressing the topic of reparations to women who had been subjected to violence in the contexts of both peace and post-conflict. The Rapporteur pointed out that most human rights and humanitarian law treaties provided for a right to a remedy. The obligation to provide adequate reparations involved ensuring the rights of women to access criminal and civil remedies and the establishment of effective protection, support and rehabilitation services for survivors of violence. When it came to implementing the obligation to reparation, however, very little information was available regarding State obligations to provide adequate reparations for acts of violence against women, and that aspect of due diligence remained grossly underdeveloped. The report discussed conceptual challenges that prevailed when placing the question of gender-sensitive reparations on the national and international agendas; analysed considerations emerging in reparations initiatives responding to violence in conflict, post-conflict and authoritarian settings; and examined reparations to women and girls in contexts of “peace” or consolidated democracies by looking at discriminatory practices against certain groups of women, and by highlighting landmark cases in the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights. In her recommendations, the Rapporteur said that reparations for women could not merely entail returning them to the situation in which they were found before the individual instance of violence, but instead should have a transformative potential.

An addendum [A/HRC/14/22/Add.1] summarized 38 communications—15 allegation letters and 23 urgent appeals—sent to 28 Member States from 1 March 2009 to 15 April 2010; 34 of them were sent jointly with other Human Rights Council mandate holders. The Rapporteur remained concerned that only 14 Governments had replied.

Mission reports. Following her visit to El Salvador (17–19 March) [A/HRC/17/26/Add.2], the Rapporteur noted that the situation had changed little since the visit of the previous mandate holder in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 775]. The failure of the authorities to investigate, prosecute and punish those responsible for gender-based violence contributed to an environment of impunity that resulted in little confidence in the justice system. Impunity for crimes, socioeconomic disparities and the machista culture fostered a generalized state of violence, subjecting women to a continuum of multiple violent acts. The Rapporteur said that the recommendations in her predecessor’s report [ibid.] were still relevant, and she reiterated the need to take action in five ways: create a gender-sensitive information and knowledge base, including through the creation of a statistical commission; ensure the protection of women and girls through legislative, investigative and judicial reforms, including through the establishment of a specialized investigation and prosecution unit on femicides; strengthen institutional infrastructure; initiate further training and awareness programmes; and enforce international and regional human rights standards.

Following her mission to Algeria (1–10 November) [A/HRC/17/26/Add.3], the Rapporteur noted that legal, institutional and policy measures taken by the Government had not been able to remove all obstacles to de jure and de facto discrimination and to transform entrenched patriarchal attitudes and stereotypes in society. Violence against women in the family, sexual harassment at work and in educational and training institutions, and stigmatization of and hostility towards unmarried single women and women living on their own were areas of concern. Challenges that required attention included enhanced protection of women through further legislative reforms, such as the adoption of specialized legislation; the need for reinforcing institutional infrastructure for the effective promotion and protection of women’s human rights generally, and the right to be free from violence in particular; the initiation of further training and awareness-raising programmes; the establishment of a comprehensive data collection system; and enhanced collaboration with civil society organizations.

Following her mission to Zambia (6–11 December) [A/HRC/17/26/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur pointed out that progress achieved by the Government had not translated into concrete improvements in the lives of the majority of women, who remained marginalized, discriminated against and at risk of being subjected to violence. Women’s access to justice and protection was impeded by generalized impunity, limited numbers of shelters, insufficient legal representation and limited awareness of their rights, as well as by economic dependency and societal reluctance to recognize numerous forms of violence as crimes and human rights violations requiring attention. The persistence of negative customary and religious practices exacerbated discrimination and women’s position of dependence and subordination. The Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government relating to law and policy reforms, statistics and data collection, and the social and cultural context of women.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/12)], the Council called on States to enact, reinforce or amend legislation to investigate, prosecute, punish and redress the wrongs done to women and girls subjected to any form of violence; decided to include the theme of violence against women and girls, with an emphasis on prevention, in the annual full-day discussion on women’s rights at its seventeenth (2011) session; and requested OHCHR to prepare a summary of the proceedings as well as a compilation of good prevention practices and to present the report at the full-day discussion.

Trafficking in women and girls

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2008, p. 848], the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, Joy Ngozi Ezeilo (Nigeria), submitted a May report [A/HRC/14/32] covering the period from April 2009 to March 2010. The Rapporteur reviewed her activities during the past year; analysed activities undertaken by regional and subregional organizations in the fight against trafficking, highlighting good practices and initiatives that promoted a human rights-based approach to combating trafficking; described the main regional and subregional anti-trafficking cooperation mechanisms and analysed their main achievements and the main challenges they faced. The Rapporteur's recommendations were addressed to regional and subregional anti-trafficking cooperation mechanisms and the international community.

An addendum [A/HRC/14/32/Add.1] summarized nine communications sent to seven countries from 1 January 2009 to 31 March 2010, as well as five Government replies received from 1 January 2009 to 10 May 2010.

As requested by the Council [YUN 2008, p. 848], the Secretary-General in August transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report [A/65/288] of the Rapporteur, covering the period from 1 October 2009 to 30 September 2010. The Rapporteur outlined her activities, and focused on the prevention of trafficking in persons. She analysed various aspects of measures aimed at preventing trafficking, highlighting the importance of the participation of trafficked persons in designing and implementing such measures. She discussed innovative public-private partnerships for preventing trafficking and highlighted the importance of collecting accurate data on trafficking, as well as of monitoring and evaluation, to ensure the effectiveness of prevention measures. The Rapporteur offered recommendations to States in developing and implementing prevention efforts.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 21 December (decision 65/536).

Seminars and consultations. The Rapporteur submitted to the Council a summary [A/HRC/15/27] of discussions and recommendations of the seminar entitled "A human rights approach to combating human trafficking: challenges and opportunities. Implementing the Recommended Principles and Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking" (Geneva, 27–28 May), organized in accordance with a Council request [YUN 2009, p. 735]. An addendum [A/HRC/15/27/Add.1] summarized the views of stakeholders on the Recommended Principles and Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking [YUN 2002, p. 748], developed by OHCHR.

The Rapporteur convened a consultation on the role of regional and subregional mechanisms in international efforts to counter trafficking in persons, especially women and children (Dakar, Senegal, 4–5 October) [A/HRC/17/35/Add.5]. Participants agreed that coordination of the various anti-trafficking initiatives and enhanced cooperation among all those involved in combating trafficking was essential to maximizing resources, minimizing duplication and addressing States' fatigue vis-à-vis the number of demands to which they were required to attend.

The Rapporteur convened an expert consultation on the right to an effective remedy for trafficked persons (Bratislava, Slovakia, 22–23 November) [A/HRC/17/35/Add.6], which focused on the normative framework, content and scope of that right, as well as States' responses and national strategies. Participants agreed that access to information, legal assistance including free legal aid, and regularization of their residence status while seeking remedies, were preconditions for trafficked persons to exercise that right. Participants stressed the importance of properly identifying trafficked persons from the moment they suffered harms and applying the principle of non-criminalization and non-prosecution of trafficked persons as the fundamental first step in providing remedies.

Mission reports. Following her mission to Egypt (11–21 April 2010) [A/HRC/17/35/Add.2], the Rapporteur said that the Government faced considerable challenges in addressing trafficking, including collecting accurate and comprehensive data on trafficking and thorough analysis of the trend and forms of trafficking; establishing proper identification and referral mechanisms for trafficked persons; building infrastructure and services to meet the needs of trafficked persons; implementing measures directed at addressing root causes of trafficking; and protecting migrants' labour rights, particularly the labour rights of domestic migrant workers. The Rapporteur made recommendations to address those challenges.

Following her visit to Argentina (6–11 September) [A/HRC/17/35/Add.4], the Rapporteur listed as challenges: the lack of comprehensive data on the trend of trafficking in persons; the weak coordination of anti-trafficking activities; the lack of identification and referral mechanisms for trafficked persons; and the insufficient availability of aid facilities and services. She recommended that the Government approve legislation to guarantee more stringent penalties against traffickers and to eliminate the issue of consent and distinction based on age; allocate adequate resources to anti-trafficking offices and units to ensure that protection and assistance measures were carried out throughout the country; provide assistance to victims; establish a federal central agency to enhance coordination and carry out prevention efforts to regulate businesses, such as within the textile industry, agriculture (including fisheries) and construction, and the entertainment and sex industries.

Following her mission to Uruguay (13–17 September) [A/HRC/17/35/Add.3], the Rapporteur identified challenges for the Government to address, including the lack of comprehensive data on the trend of trafficking in persons, the weak coordination of anti-trafficking activities, the lack of identification and referral mechanisms for trafficked persons, and the insufficient level of facilities and services to assist trafficked persons. She recommended that the Government carry out a national survey on human trafficking to obtain updated information; launch campaigns to raise public awareness; design a national plan of action on combating trafficking; and establish a central agency to address the problem.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March [A/65/53 (dec. 13/117)], the Council decided to hold a panel discussion at its fourteenth session to give voice to victims of trafficking in persons, with a view to reinforcing the centrality of their human rights and needs, and taking into account their recommendations when devising actions to combat trafficking. The panel discussion [A/HRC/14/37] was held on 2 June.

On 17 June [res. 14/2], the Council urged Governments to protect, assist and provide access to redress to victims, including the possibility of obtaining compensation from the perpetrators. It also called on Governments to enhance regional and subregional cooperation against trafficking.

General Assembly action. By resolution 65/190 of 21 December (see p. 1172), the General Assembly called on Governments to address the demand that fostered the trafficking of women and girls for all forms of exploitation, and to enhance preventive measures to deter exploiters of trafficked persons.

Children

Violence against children

Reports of Special Representative. Following the establishment of the mandate [YUN 2009, p. 735], Marta Santos Pais (Portugal), the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on violence against children, in February submitted her first report [A/HRC/13/46] to the Human Rights Council, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 64/146 [YUN 2009, p. 637]. She recalled the history leading up to the establishment of the position of the Special Representative and the scope of the mandate, as defined by Assembly resolution 62/141 [YUN 2007, p. 681]. The Special Representative outlined her vision and priority areas for her work and the strategies she intended to use to implement the mandate, which built on the recommendations of the UN study on violence against children [YUN 2006, p. 916]. She emphasized three overarching recommendations: the development in each State of a comprehensive strategy on violence against children; the introduction of an explicit national legal ban on all forms of violence; and the consolidation of data and research. During the initial months of her mandate, the Representative sought to advance progress in follow-up to the study; promote a consultative process and strengthen partnerships; and secure support for her mandate.

In response to General Assembly resolution 64/146, the Secretary-General in August [A/65/262] submitted to the Assembly the annual report of the Special Representative, reviewing developments that had marked the initial period of her mandate, including initiatives undertaken by UN agencies to integrate violence against children within their agendas; strides by regional organizations, political groups and civil society networks to institutionalize implementation of the study's recommendations; and national improvements to protect children from violence. The Representative was committed to maintaining momentum around violence prevention and responses; increasing visibility and concern at the harmful effects of violence on children; addressing social norms to encourage positive behaviour and social change; and mobilizing political support to combat the phenomenon. The Representative would focus on: advancing her two-year campaign for the universal ratification of the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and promoting global adherence to other treaties aimed at protecting children from violence; promoting progress in her three strategic areas of concern (see above); and supporting the development of a report on safe, child-sensitive and accessible counselling, complaint and reporting mechanisms.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/20)], the Council urged States to take legislative and other measures to prohibit, criminalize and eliminate all forms of sexual violence and sexual abuse against children; and to ensure accountability and seek to end impunity of perpetrators of sexual violence and abuse against children in all settings, including in conflict and emergencies. The Council requested the High Commissioner to prepare a summary of the Council's full-day meeting on the rights of the child, held on 10 March, which focused on the fight against sexual violence against children. The Special Representative and the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography were invited to cooperate on themes of mutual interest and report to the Council's sixteenth (2011) session on effective and child-sensitive counselling, complaint and reporting mechanisms to which children could safely report incidents of violence, including sexual violence and exploitation.

Report of High Commissioner. As requested by the Council, the High Commissioner in December submitted a summary [A/HRC/16/55] of the Council's full-day meeting on the rights of the child (Geneva, 10 March).

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 64/146 [YUN 2009, p. 637], the Secretary-General in August transmitted to the Assembly the first report [A/65/221] of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Najat Maalla M'jid (Morocco), which described her activities from September 2009 to July 2010. In the context of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography [YUN 2000, p. 615], the report focused on remaining challenges with respect to awareness and understanding of those problems and the actions undertaken to address them. The Rapporteur recommended measures to improve the effective implementation of the Protocol, first among them, a better understanding of the Protocol and greater awareness for better action.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 21 December (decision 65/534).

Mission reports. Following her visit to El Salvador (23–31 August) [A/HRC/16/57/Add.4], the Rapporteur observed that while the true extent of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography remained unknown, she was encouraged by the consultative and integrated process involved in the adoption of the 2009 law on the comprehensive protection of childhood and adolescence and in the elaboration of a strategy aiming to guarantee the rights of children at the national and local levels. She encouraged the Government to ensure their full implementation in 2011. Regarding corporate responsibility, the Government should pursue partnerships with the private sector, particularly tourism and travel agencies, Internet service providers, telecommunication companies and banks, to combat the sexual exploitation of children, including child sex tourism and the exploitation of children online, by adopting a code of conduct.

Following her mission to the United States (12–27 October) [A/HRC/16/57/Add.5], the Rapporteur reported a growing availability of child pornography online, the use of ever-younger children, an increase in the violence of images recorded, and the persistence of child prostitution, principally involving girls. The true scope of those phenomena remained difficult to measure in part due to the absence of a standardized, centralized information gathering and treatment system. A key challenge remained the lack of harmonization between Federal and state legislation, and between States. Further, law enforcement in certain jurisdictions still identified children in prostitution as criminals rather than as victims. Detaining children involved in prostitution also occurred due to a lack of viable placement alternatives for children. There was a need to move beyond awareness-raising campaigns. Effective prevention should include stronger support to communities and families, working on social perceptions, addressing the situation of children at risk, and tackling the demand for sex with children, particularly the roles of buyers, intermediaries and traffickers. The efficiency of strategies and programmes could be improved through better coordination and allocation of resources.

Children and armed conflict

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1882(2009) [YUN 2009, p. 739], the Secretary-General in April submitted a report [A/64/742-S/2010/181] on children and armed conflict, covering developments in 2009. As requested by resolution 1882(2009), two annexes listed those parties to armed conflict that engaged in patterns of killing and maiming of children and/or rape and other sexual violence against children, in contravention of international law. The report reviewed measures undertaken by parties listed in the annexes to end violations and abuses against children that served as indicators of progress made in follow-up to the recommendations of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict. It also reviewed the implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism established by the Council in resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863]; and provided information on grave violations committed against children, in particular recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children, rape and other sexual violence against children, abductions of children, attacks on schools and hospitals, and the denial of humanitarian access to children by parties to armed conflict. It also provided information on the criteria and procedures used for listing and de-listing parties to armed conflict in the annexes.

According to the report, grave violations had occurred in Afghanistan, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Colombia, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Haiti, India, Iraq, Lebanon, Myanmar, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel, Somalia, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Thailand, Uganda and Yemen. The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council insist that those parties implement action plans to halt those violations, and take measures against any party that failed to comply. Member States should allow contact between the United Nations and non-State actors to ensure the protection of children.

Security Council consideration (June). On 16 June [S/PV.6341], the Council considered the Secretary-General's report. It also had before it a concept paper [S/2010/314] submitted by Mexico. Following a day-long meeting that heard over 60 speakers—including the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, representatives of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and a young abduction victim from Nepal—the Council, by a presidential statement (see p. 756), expressed its readiness to take targeted and graduated measures against persistent perpetrators of violations and abuses against children.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 June [meeting 6341], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2010/10 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council takes note with appreciation of the ninth report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict and the recommendations contained therein, as well as the positive developments referred to in the report, and notes the continuing challenges in the implementation of its resolutions 1612(2005) and 1882(2009) and other relevant resolutions reflected therein.

The Council reiterates its equally strong condemnation of all violations of applicable international law involving the recruitment and use of children by parties to armed conflict as well as their re-recruitment, killing and maiming, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, attacks against schools or hospitals and denial of humanitarian access by parties to armed conflict. The Council condemns all other violations of international law, including international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law, committed against children in situations of armed conflict. The Council demands that all relevant parties immediately put an end to such practices and take special measures to protect children.

The Council expresses deep concern about the growing number of attacks or threats of attacks in contravention of applicable international law against schools and educational facilities, and teachers and pupils, in particular the specific targeting of girls, and in this regard calls upon all parties to armed conflict to cease immediately these violations of international humanitarian law.

The Council welcomes the steps taken by the Secretary-General in the implementation of resolution 1882(2009) by including in the annexes to his report those parties to armed conflict that engage, in contravention of applicable international law, in patterns of killing and maiming of children and/or rape and other sexual violence, in situations of armed conflict.

The Council calls upon the Secretary-General to redouble his efforts to ensure strengthening of the capacities of the monitoring and reporting mechanism with a view to the implementation of resolution 1882(2009) to allow for prompt advocacy and effective response to all violations and abuses committed against children, inter alia, by ensuring that all relevant United Nations agencies actively help to collect accurate, objective, reliable and verifiable information on acts of rape and other sexual violence committed against children, and also by ensuring synergies and avoiding overlap among relevant United Nations entities, at the headquarters and country levels, as requested in resolutions 1882(2009) and 1888(2009).

The Council reaffirms its decision, in paragraph 11 of its resolution 1882(2009), to continue to include specific provisions for the protection of children in the mandates of all relevant United Nations peacekeeping, peacebuilding and political missions, encourages the deployment of child protection advisers to such missions and calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that such advisers are recruited and deployed in line with the relevant country-specific resolutions of the Council and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations Policy Directive on Mainstreaming the Protection, Rights and Well-being of Children Affected by Armed Conflict. It further underscores the importance of training in child rights and child protection for all personnel involved in United Nations peacekeeping, peacebuilding and political missions and in this regard welcomes the ongoing efforts by the Department in developing the policy implementation plan, including training programmes and materials.

The Council welcomes the progress made in preventing and responding to violations and abuses committed against children, especially with regard to the signing of action plans by some parties as mentioned in the ninth report of the Secretary-General.

The Council reiterates its call upon parties to armed conflict listed in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict that have not already done so to prepare and implement, without further delay, action plans to halt the recruitment and use of children, patterns of killing and maiming of children and/or rape and other sexual violence against children, in violation of applicable international law, in situations of armed conflict.

The Council also reiterates its call to all parties listed in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict to address all other violations and abuses committed against children and undertake specific commitments and measures in this regard.

The Council expresses deep concern that certain parties persist in committing violations and abuses against children, and expresses its readiness to adopt targeted and graduated measures against persistent perpetrators, taking into account the relevant provisions of its resolutions 1539(2004), 1612(2005) and 1882(2009). To this end, the Council invites:

(a) Its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict to exchange pertinent information with relevant sanctions committees, in particular through communication of the relevant recommendations of the Working Group;

(b) Its relevant sanctions committees to consider inviting more regularly the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to brief them on specific information contained in the reports of the Secretary-General;

(c) The Special Representative to share specific information contained in the reports of the Secretary-General with relevant sanctions committee expert groups.

The Council expresses its intention, when establishing or renewing the mandate of relevant sanctions committees, to consider provisions pertaining to parties that are in violation of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflict.

The Council expresses its readiness to consider specific recommendations of the Working Group on violations and abuses committed against children by parties listed in the annexes to the reports of the Secretary-General, whenever they occur, with a view to considering action on them, without prejudging or implying a decision by the Council as to whether or not to include a situation in its agenda.

The Council calls upon concerned Member States to take decisive and immediate action against persistent perpetrators of violations and abuses against children in situations of armed conflict, and further calls upon them to bring to justice those responsible for such violations that are prohibited under applicable international law, including with regard to the recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming and rape and other sexual violence, through national justice systems, and where applicable, international justice mechanisms and mixed criminal courts and tribunals, with a view to ending impunity for those committing crimes against children.

Given the regional dimensions of some armed conflicts referred to in the report of the Secretary-General, the Council reiterates its request that United Nations peacekeeping, peacebuilding and political missions as well as United Nations country teams, within their respective mandates and in close cooperation with the Governments of the countries concerned, develop appropriate strategies and coordination mechanisms for information exchange and cooperation on cross-border child protection concerns.

The Council welcomes the overall work of the Special Representative and highlights the importance of her field visits in enhancing dialogue with concerned Governments and parties to conflict, including by negotiating action plans, securing commitments, advocating for appropriate response mechanisms and ensuring appropriate attention and follow-up to the conclusions and recommendations of the Working Group.

The Council also welcomes the efforts undertaken by the United Nations Children's Fund in carrying out its mandate on child protection by supporting the overall development and implementation of the monitoring and reporting mechanism and ensuring appropriate response to children in armed conflict, and encourages it to continue to follow up, through the monitoring and reporting mechanism country task forces, on relevant conclusions and recommendations of the Working Group.

The Council welcomes the sustained activity of the Working Group and stresses the importance of continuing to adopt timely conclusions and recommendations in line with resolutions 1612(2005) and 1882(2009). Furthermore, the Council invites the Working Group to fully implement its toolkit, inter alia, by carrying out a country-specific visit within one year, to examine a situation referred to in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General in order to better fulfil its mandate and enhance its capacity to protect children affected by armed conflict.

Recalling previous statements by its President on children and armed conflict, as well as paragraph 18 of resolution 1882(2009), the Council reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to provide administrative and substantive support for the Working Group and further requests the Secretary-General to take action on this subject within one month of this date.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by May 2011 on the implementation of its resolutions and the statements by its President on children and armed conflict, including the present statement.

Reports of Special Representative. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/146 [YUN 2009, p. 637], the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), in September submitted a report

[A/HRC/15/58] to the Human Rights Council covering the period May 2009 to May 2010. The report described progress made in addressing grave violations against children in armed conflict, called for universal ratification of the Optional Protocol on the involvement of children in armed conflict and described field visits by the Representative. During the period under review, the Representative carried out field missions to the Sudan (November 2009), Nepal (December 2009), Afghanistan (February 2010) and Uganda (May–June 2010). The Representative made recommendations for States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to strengthen measures for preventing recruitment of children into the armed forces or armed groups and their use in hostilities; for States to establish 18 as the minimum age for voluntary recruitment into armed forces; and for Member States to comply with international law for the protection of children and bring to justice individuals responsible for recruiting and using children in the armed forces or armed groups.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/77 [YUN 1996, p. 665], the Representative submitted to the Assembly a report [A/65/219] covering the period from August 2009 to August 2010, highlighting critical child protection issues that required concerted action. It proposed ways to address the impunity of perpetrators of grave violations against children, including through the judicious use of sanctions and other targeted measures; stressed the imperative to undertake dialogue for child protection purposes with all parties to a conflict; and identified opportunities to strengthen child protection in UN peacemaking and peacekeeping. As 2010 marked the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict [YUN 2000, p. 615], the report highlighted the two-year campaign launched by UN system partners for universal ratification by 2012. The Representative stressed the need to engage with Governments to ensure that the United Nations was able to support more effectively the efforts of national institutions in protecting, reintegrating and rehabilitating children.

Working Group activities. In August [S/2010/410], the Chairman of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict reported on the Group's activities since its last report [YUN 2009, p. 739]. The Group held five meetings in 2010 (4 February, 29 April, 8 September, 9 November, 22 December), during which it adopted conclusions on children and armed conflict in Colombia [S/AC.51/2010/3], Nepal [S/AC.51/2010/4], the Philippines [S/AC.51/2010/5], Sri Lanka [S/AC.51/2010/2] and Uganda [S/AC.51/2010/1]. The Group undertook a mission to Nepal (22–26 November).

On the basis of the Working Group's conclusions, the Security Council President sent letters to the Secretary-General on Burundi (26 January) [S/2010/45], the Sudan (26 January) [S/2010/46], Sri Lanka (16 September) [S/2010/487], Colombia (6 October) [S/2010/521], Nepal (30 November) [S/2010/610] and the Philippines (30 December) [S/2010/680].

Internally displaced persons

Reports of Secretary-General's Representative.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2007, p. 793], the Secretary-General's Representative on the human rights of internally displaced persons (IDPs), Walter Kälin (Switzerland), in January submitted a report [A/HRC/13/21 & Corr.1] that discussed the achievements and activities of the mandate during the tenure of the Representative. The report identified progress made as well as challenges remaining in relation to the rights of IDPs. According to the report, millions of people were internally displaced every year as a result of conflict and violence. Disasters displaced even more people and climate change would exacerbate that trend. Development-induced displacement was also on the rise. With international attention focused on IDP camps, many other displaced remained invisible, because they stayed with host families, were dispersed in urban areas or their existence was officially denied. The Representative urged Member States and humanitarian actors to recognize, protect and assist all IDPs; increase efforts to protect and assist the urban displaced; and pay greater attention to displaced elderly persons, those with disabilities, women heads of households and their children, and displaced persons belonging to ethnic minorities or indigenous peoples.

An addendum [A/HRC/13/21/Add.4] contained a Framework on Durable Solutions for Internally Displaced Persons, which aimed to provide clarity on the concept of a durable solution and provided guidance on how to achieve it.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/153 [YUN 2007, p. 793], the Secretary-General in August submitted the report [A/65/282 & Corr.1] of the Representative, which outlined his activities from August 2009 to July 2010 and reviewed the duty of States to provide humanitarian assistance and the corresponding right of IDPs to receive such assistance—an issue closely linked to that of humanitarian access. The Representative called on Member States to shape a rule-based framework to international humanitarian assistance, and in particular to recognize in national laws, policies and administrative and military instructions, the right of IDPs and others affected by conflict or disaster to request and receive humanitarian assistance in an equal and non-discriminatory manner; as well as the corresponding obligation of the State to ensure assistance, including by facilitating international assistance where local resources were insufficient.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 21 December (decision 65/536).

A further report [A/HRC/16/43/Add.5] of the Representative contained the Operational Guidelines on the Protection of Persons in Situations of Natural Disasters, which detailed the key principles that should guide humanitarian action in the context of natural disasters.

Mission reports. Following his visit to Azerbaijan (19–24 May) [A/HRC/16/43/Add.2 & Corr.1], in follow-up to his 2007 visit [YUN 2007, p. 792], the Representative emphasized that the protracted nature of the displacement, which had persisted for nearly two decades, continued to affect the human rights of close to 600,000 IDPs in the country. While the Government had taken measures to address the situation, old and new problems were affecting the rights of the displaced, including access to adequate housing, health and education. Stronger efforts were necessary to provide IDPs with livelihood opportunities and decrease dependency on Government transfers. The Representative encouraged the Government to continue its efforts to address those issues, reduce the isolation and the insular effects experienced by some displaced communities, and promote self-reliance and the full economic and social integration of IDPs. He also emphasized the need to strengthen efforts towards achieving a peace agreement—one that took the rights of IDPs into consideration.

Following his mission to the Central African Republic (9–17 July) [A/HRC/16/43/Add.4], in follow-up to his 2007 mission [YUN 2007, p. 792], the Representative found the situation of the internally displaced extremely worrying, with nearly 200,000 IDPs in the country. He was alarmed by the large new waves of displacements, exacerbated by restrictions on humanitarian access in some areas mainly due to security problems. The brutal mass atrocities committed by the Lord's Resistance Army had resulted in displacements in the south-east. In the north, the activities of armed actors and well-armed highway robbers terrorized civilians and prevented them from returning home. The Representative recommended that the Government cooperate with the international community and the Governments of neighbouring countries to improve the protection of civilians. He was concerned at allegations of new cases of human rights violations by the State security forces and noted that politicians and military officers suspected of serious violations continued to enjoy complete impunity. He recommended that the Government draft and adopt a law and a political strategy on displacement, based on the recommendations of a national workshop (Bangui, 15–16 July), to which the Representative had contributed.

Following his mission to Georgia (13–16 September) [A/HRC/16/43/Add.3], in follow-up to his 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 870] and 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 855] visits, the Representative addressed the remaining challenges in the search for durable solutions for the more than 350,000 IDPs. While the closing of collective centres for IDPs was to be welcomed, he urged the authorities to put in place clear procedures to ensure that evictions were carried out in accordance with international standards and that they not be undertaken without offering the persons concerned viable alternatives with regard to housing, livelihoods and access to basic services. The main obstacles to more IDP returns to Abkhazia, Georgia, remained political, as the authorities in control in Abkhazia were reluctant to allow any returns beyond the Gali district. The prospects of return for those displaced from the Gali district and elsewhere in Abkhazia almost 20 years ago remained low due to concerns for their security, the lack of adequate housing and insufficient employment opportunities. The restitution of housing, land and property left behind by IDPs or the provision of compensation in lieu of restitution remained a challenge that needed to be addressed. As a first step, the Representative called on the Abkhazian authorities to carry out a study reviewing the various types of property-like rights which prevailed at the time when IDPs were displaced.

Following his mission to Iraq (26 September–3 October) [A/HRC/16/43/Add.1], the Representative said that the scale and complexity of the internal displacement situation required stronger efforts by the Government and the international community. He recommended developing a comprehensive strategy to address the immediate humanitarian needs and human rights of displacement-affected communities, and devise durable solutions. An estimated 1.5 million Iraqis remained displaced since 2006, and 500,000 persons, most of whom were reported to be internally displaced, were living in difficult conditions in informal settlements in Baghdad and other cities. An action plan should be developed in close collaboration between the Kurdistan Regional Government and federal authorities to ensure assistance and longer-term solutions for the estimated 30,000 internally displaced families living in the Kurdistan Region. Registration of IDPs should be resumed and a moratorium on evictions from informal settlements should be renewed. Finding durable solutions including return, local integration or settlement in a different location, and measures for allocating land for those who could not return, was an essential part of peacebuilding.

Human Rights Council action. On 17 June [A/65/53 (res. 14/6)], the Council called on States to provide durable solutions and encouraged strengthened international cooperation to assist affected countries; extended the mandate of the special procedure as a special rapporteur for a three-year period; and invited the Special Rapporteur to submit annual reports.

Appointment of Special Rapporteur. The Human Rights Council on 29 September appointed Chaloka Beyani (Zambia) Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons.

Persons with disabilities

Human Rights Council action. On 25 March [A/65/53 (res. 13/11)], the Council encouraged States, in partnership with international and regional organizations and civil society, to ensure that international cooperation, including international development programmes, was inclusive of persons with disabilities. The Council decided that its next annual interactive debate on the rights of persons with disabilities would be held at its sixteenth (2011) session, and that it would focus on the role of international cooperation in support of national efforts to realize the purpose and objectives of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities [YUN 2006, p. 785]. The Council requested OHCHR to prepare a study to enhance awareness of the role played by international cooperation in support of such efforts.

OHCHR study. As requested by the Council, OHCHR in December submitted a study [A/HRC/16/38] on the role of international cooperation in realizing the rights of persons with disabilities. The study was based on 43 responses from States, eight from inter-governmental and regional organizations, 15 from national human rights institutions, 11 from civil society organizations, a contribution from the Global Partnership for Disability and Development, and a submission from the Special Rapporteur on Disability of the Commission for Social Development. The study analysed international cooperation under the Convention, set out examples of such cooperation involving States, international and regional organizations and civil society organizations, and identified challenges to such cooperation.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 798], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, James Anaya (United States), in July submitted his third report [A/HRC/15/37] to the Council, which summarized his activities during the second year of his mandate, including cooperation with international and regional mechanisms in the field of indigenous rights, and the activities carried out in his four principal areas of work: promoting good practices; thematic studies; country reports; and communications relating to alleged violations. The report also analysed corporate responsibility with respect to indigenous rights in the framework of the international community's expectations in that regard. The Rapporteur concluded that the absence of clarity with respect to corporate responsibility, especially transnational corporate responsibility, in relation to indigenous rights was the source of numerous abuses worldwide. The implementation of corporate activities without taking account of those rights had given rise to highly negative impacts on the environment and the economic, social, cultural and spiritual life of indigenous peoples. Such irresponsible corporate activity, sometimes abetted or ignored by Governments, engendered social conflicts in indigenous areas. The Rapporteur recommended that companies exercise due diligence by identifying legal, institutional or other factors affecting the enjoyment of the rights of indigenous peoples; recognize their rights to land, territories and natural resources; and respect their rights to participate in decisions affecting them.

An addendum [A/HRC/15/37/Add.1] summarized communications sent to 23 Governments between 1 July 2009 and 31 May 2010, and replies received between 27 August 2009 and 31 July 2010.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 748], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the interim report [A/65/264] of the Special Rapporteur, which reviewed his activities between July 2009 and July 2010, and discussed three key issues that the Rapporteur had addressed during the previous year: the right of indigenous peoples to development with culture and identity, their right to participation and the obligation of States to implement the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 2007, p. 691]. The Rapporteur offered recommendations related to those issues.

Mission reports. Following his visit to Colombia (22–27 July 2009) [A/HRC/15/37/Add.3], the Rapporteur expressed concern over the multiple indications that the grave situation of indigenous peoples had not been addressed with the urgency it deserved. Government laws, programmes and policies did not ensure effective protection of indigenous rights and the situation of indigenous people was aggravated by the internal armed conflict. Major challenges included rights to land, natural resources, prior consultation on decisions that affected indigenous peoples, and the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights. The Rapporteur recommended adopting public policies and national laws for enforcing indigenous rights, including a law on consultation processes, with the participation of indigenous authorities and representatives. He urged the Government to ensure support for the effective functioning of the State organs of control and justice, including the Early Warning System, and to provide adequate funding to the local representatives of the Ombudsman's Office, as well as to the Constitutional Court to enable it to follow up its decisions. Other recommendations dealt with the internal armed conflict, land and natural resources, and economic, social and cultural rights.

During his visit to the Russian Federation (4–16 October 2009) [A/HRC/15/37/Add.5], the Rapporteur focused on those groups whose members numbered less than 50,000 and were recognized as "small-numbered indigenous peoples" entitled to special protections, although other groups with similar, historically rooted characteristics of economic and social disadvantage, and whose cultures and ways of life were also threatened, were likewise in need of attention. Indigenous peoples continued to face multiple impediments to the full enjoyment of their rights, especially in some regions. Further efforts were needed to ensure that the laws guaranteeing indigenous communities' rights over land and to natural resources were consistently implemented; that indigenous peoples were ensured adequate political representation at the municipal, regional and federal levels of government; and that indigenous people's right to consultation in decisions affecting them were fully respected.

Following his mission to Ecuador (7–10 December 2009) [A/HRC/15/37/Add.7], the Rapporteur presented his recommendations regarding progress made in implementing the provisions on indigenous affairs set forth in the 2008 Constitution, which marked a step forward in recognizing indigenous rights and set an international precedent. Gaps, however, persisted in the implementation of indigenous rights. It was essential for indigenous peoples and representatives of indigenous communities to participate in efforts to establish a legal framework for the indigenous justice system. Progress needed to be made with other legislative initiatives to ensure that the indigenous rights recognized in the Constitution were respected. Mechanisms for dialogue with indigenous peoples and nationalities on all new legislative proposals that might affect their rights needed to be established or strengthened. The Rapporteur recommended that the State refrain from promoting any investment, infrastructure, natural-resource extraction or development projects until consultations had been held with the indigenous peoples concerned; and pay particular attention to the Tagaeri and Taromenane peoples, who were living in isolation. Steps should also be taken to avoid forced contact of any kind, including contact through petroleum development or logging activities.

The Rapporteur examined [A/HRC/18/35/Add.2] the human rights situation of the Sami people of Finland, Norway and Sweden, on the basis of information he presented to a conference organized by the Sami

Parliamentary Council (Rovaniemi, Finland, 14–16 April). The conference gathered representatives of the Sami parliaments of Finland, Norway and Sweden; Government officials from those countries; and representatives of Sami NGOs. While noting that Finland, Norway and Sweden paid a high level of attention to indigenous issues, the Rapporteur said that more remained to be done to ensure that the Sami people could pursue their self-determination and develop their common goals as a people living across more than one State. Nordic States should continue their efforts to advance the rights of Sami people within each of the States in which they lived.

In Guatemala (14–18 June) [A/HRC/18/35/Add.3], the Rapporteur focused on the rights of indigenous people in the context of extraction and other types of projects that affected their traditional territories. He examined the case of the communities affected by the Marlin mine, in the municipalities of San Miguel Ixtahuacán and Sipacapa, Department of San Marcos. Business activities in traditional indigenous territories had generated an atmosphere of social conflict, which was affecting indigenous rights and threatening Guatemala's governance and economic development. The repercussions included allegations concerning the effects on the health and the environment of the indigenous people as a result of the pollution caused by the extractive activities; the loss of indigenous lands and damage to indigenous people's property and houses; the disproportionate response to legitimate acts of social protest; and the harassment of human rights defenders and community leaders. The Rapporteur called on the Government and other parties, including businesses, to guarantee the rights of the indigenous people concerned. He recommended carrying out consultations with indigenous peoples in the light of related international instruments. He also drew attention to the alarming lack of legal protection for the rights of indigenous people over their traditional lands, which left Guatemala lagging behind other countries in the region.

Following his visit to New Zealand (18–23 July) [A/HRC/18/35/Add.4], the Rapporteur noted that the country had made progress in advancing the rights of Maori people. The principles enshrined in the Treaty of Waitangi of 1840 and international human rights instruments should be incorporated into the legal system in order not to be vulnerable to political discretion. Efforts to secure Maori political participation should be strengthened. Consultations with Maori on matters affecting them should be applied consistently and in accordance with international standards and traditional Maori decision-making procedures. The Treaty settlement process should be strengthened and funding should be ensured for the Waitangi Tribunal so that it could resolve its pending caseload of historical grievances. With respect to Treaty settlement negotiations, the Government should involve all groups that had an interest in the issues under consideration. Finally, the Rapporteur noted the extreme disadvantage in the social and economic conditions of Maori people in comparison to the rest of society. More remained to be done to achieve the increased social and economic parity that was necessary for Maori and non-Maori New Zealanders to move forward as true partners, as contemplated under the Treaty of Waitangi.

During his visit to the Congo (2–12 November) [A/HRC/18/35/Add.5], the Rapporteur examined the situation of those groups that had previously been known as Pygmies and that were generally regarded as the country's indigenous peoples. He drew attention to the extreme social and economic disadvantages of those peoples and their discrimination and marginalization in comparison to the rest of society, especially in labour relations, housing, education, access to health services, civil status, participation in public life, and access to land and natural resources. The new Law on the Promotion and Protection of the Rights of Indigenous Peoples represented a good practice roughly in line with international standards; however, there were challenges in implementing the law and other initiatives. The Rapporteur stressed the need for consultation with indigenous peoples, especially for projects affecting their lands, resources or ways of life.

Report of High Commissioner. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 748], the High Commissioner in July [A/HRC/15/34] reviewed activities of human rights bodies and mechanisms relating to the rights of indigenous peoples between January 2009 and May 2010. She also outlined the activities undertaken by OHCHR at headquarters and in the field that contributed to promoting and implementing the provisions of the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/7)], the Council decided to hold at its eighteenth (2011) session a half-day panel on the role of languages and culture in promoting and protecting the well-being and identity of indigenous peoples; requested the Special Rapporteur to report to the General Assembly's sixty-sixth (2011) session; and requested the High Commissioner to submit to the Council an annual report on the rights of indigenous peoples containing information on developments in human rights bodies and mechanisms and activities undertaken by OHCHR.

Also on 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/14)], the Council extended for a three-year period the Special Rapporteur's mandate and requested the Rapporteur to report to the Council in accordance with its annual programme of work.

Expert Mechanism

The Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, at its third session (Geneva, 12–16 July) [A/HRC/15/36], discussed the progress report [A/HRC/EMRIP/2010/2] on the study on indigenous peoples and the right to participate in decision-making in order to finalize it. The Human Rights Council in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 748] had requested the Expert Mechanism to carry out that study with a view to presenting a final text to the Council's eighteenth (2011) session. The Expert Mechanism also had before it an OHCHR contribution [A/HRC/EMRIP/2010/3] to the study; a secretariat note [A/HRC/EMRIP/2010/4] on a technical workshop on the right of indigenous peoples to participate in decision-making (Geneva, 23–24 March); and the report of the UN seminar on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous peoples (Hobbema, Canada, 14–17 November 2006) [A/HRC/EMRIP/2010/5].

The Expert Mechanism held discussions on proposals to be submitted to the Human Rights Council and on the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, with a focus on its use at the international, regional and national levels. The Expert Mechanism adopted the progress report on the study (see above), as well as a number of proposals. The session was attended by representatives of States, UN bodies, NGOs, national human rights institutions, academics and representatives of indigenous peoples.

The Expert Mechanism in August submitted to the Council the progress report [A/HRC/15/35], which examined the international human rights framework, the internal decision-making processes and institutions of indigenous peoples, participation in decision-making mechanisms linked to both State and non-State institutions, and processes affecting indigenous peoples.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/7)], the Council encouraged the Expert Mechanism to finalize the study, taking into account the discussions held at its third session, and requested it to give examples of good practices at different levels of decision-making. The Council decided to hold, on an annual basis, an interactive dialogue with the Expert Mechanism following the presentation of its report. It further decided, bearing in mind the need to ensure continuity in the functioning of the Expert Mechanism, that while the regular mandate of the members of the Expert Mechanism would continue to be three years, two out of five members to be elected in 2011 would serve for two years, and the staggering of the terms of membership would be defined by the drawing of lots by the Council President after the election of the five members.

Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, at its twenty-third session (Geneva, 8–12 February) [A/65/163], recommended 64 travel grants totalling $299,210 to enable indigenous representatives to attend the ninth session of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 763) and another 37 grants totalling $113,314 to enable those representatives to attend the third session of the Expert Mechanism (see above). On 24 February, the High Commissioner approved the Board's recommendations on behalf of the Secretary-General.

OHCHR report. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 748], OHCHR in July submitted a report [A/HRC/15/38] on the practical implications of a change in the mandate of the Voluntary Fund, in particular its expansion. The report addressed the implications of a possible change of mandate to cover the participation of indigenous people's representatives to sessions of the treaty bodies and the Human Rights Council, which had been proposed by the Expert Mechanism at its 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 857] and 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 748] sessions.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/65/53/Add.1 (res. 15/7)], the Council recommended that the General Assembly approve the expansion of the mandate of the Voluntary Fund so that it could also be used to assist representatives of indigenous communities and indigenous organizations to attend sessions of the Council and of human rights treaty bodies.

Voluntary Fund for International Decade

The Voluntary Fund for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, 2005–2014, established by General Assembly resolution 59/174 [YUN 2004, p. 799], continued to promote, support and implement the goals of the Second Decade in terms of promoting indigenous peoples' culture, education, health, human rights, environment and economic development. In April, the Bureau of the UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (see p. 763), serving as the Advisory Group for the Fund, considered project proposals for funding received by the Secretariat, in accordance with resolution 59/174. It proposed to award grants to 18 projects being implemented by indigenous organizations and NGOs in 17 countries.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 63/161 [YUN 2008, p. 857], the Secretary-General in July submitted a report [A/65/166] on the midterm assessment of the progress made in the achievement of the goal and objectives of the Second International Decade. The report provided an analysis and examples of the progress made. It also summarized information received from 11 Member States, 19 UN agencies and intergovernmental organizations, and 11 non-governmental and indigenous organizations. The report concluded that substantive advances had been made towards achieving the goal and objectives of the Decade, and acknowledged the importance of the adoption, in 2007, of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the role it had in consolidating a human rights-based approach to indigenous issues. A gap, however, remained between intentions at the policy level and the actual implementation of the objectives of the Decade. Further efforts should be made to transform policy initiatives into effective action for and with indigenous peoples.

Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues

The 16-member Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, established by Economic and Social Council resolution 2000/22 [YUN 2000, p. 731] to address indigenous issues relating to economic and social development, the environment, health, education and culture, and human rights, at its ninth session (New York, 19–30 April) [E/2010/43], considered as its special theme “Indigenous peoples: development with culture and identity: articles 3 and 32 of the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples”. It had before it reports [E/C.19/2010/1–18] submitted by its secretariat and subsidiary mechanisms, Governments, UN system bodies, intergovernmental organizations, regional organizations and NGOs. The Forum recommended three draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council on: an international expert group meeting on the theme “Indigenous peoples and forests”; venue and dates of the tenth session of the Forum; and the provisional agenda for that session. The Forum identified proposals, objectives, recommendations and areas of possible action and, through the Council, recommended that States, UN system entities, intergovernmental organizations, indigenous peoples, the private sector and NGOs assist in their realization. The Forum issued recommendations on: the special theme for 2010; dialogue with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people and other special rapporteurs; the follow-up summary report and recommendations of the Permanent Forum’s missions to Bolivia and Paraguay; the half-day discussion on North America; the comprehensive dialogue with the Secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity; and future work. The Forum held a half-day discussion on indigenous peoples and forests.

Economic and Social Council action. On 22 July [E/2010/99], the Council decided that the tenth session of the Permanent Forum would be held in New York from 16 to 27 May 2011 (decision 2010/249); approved the provisional agenda for that session (decision 2010/250); and authorized a three-day international expert group meeting on the theme “Indigenous peoples and forests”, also requesting that the results of the meeting be reported to the tenth session of the Permanent Forum and to the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests (decision 2010/248). On 23 July, the Council took note of the report of the Permanent Forum on its ninth session (decision 2010/258).

Expert meetings and conferences

An international expert group meeting addressed the theme “Indigenous peoples: development with culture and identity: articles 3 and 32 of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples” (New York, 12–14 January) [E/C.19/2010/14], providing conclusions and recommendations to the Permanent Forum.

The International Labour Organization, OHCHR and the secretariat of the Permanent Forum organized an international expert meeting (Geneva 20–21 September) [E/C.19/2011/11] on the theme “Keeping track—indicators, mechanisms and data for assessing the implementation of indigenous peoples’ rights”.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/453], adopted resolution 65/198 without vote [agenda item 65 (a) & (b)].

Indigenous issues

The General Assembly,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council and the Economic and Social Council relating to the rights of indigenous peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 59/174 of 20 December 2004 on the Second International Decade of the World’s Indigenous People (2005–2014),

Recalling further the 2007 United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, which addresses their individual and collective rights,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 15/14 of 30 September 2010, by which the Council decided to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, and resolution 15/7 of 30 September 2010 on human rights and indigenous peoples,

Noting the first Peoples' World Conference on Climate Change and the Rights of Mother Earth, hosted by the Plurinational State of Bolivia in Cochabamba from 20 to 22 April 2010,

Concerned about the extreme disadvantages that indigenous peoples have typically faced across a range of social and economic indicators and about the impediments to their full enjoyment of their rights,

1. Welcomes the work of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, and takes note with appreciation of his report on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people and his report on the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People;

2. Also welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations;

3. Decides to expand the mandate of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations so that it can assist representatives of indigenous peoples' organizations and communities to participate in sessions of the Human Rights Council and of human rights treaty bodies, based on diverse and renewed participation and in accordance with relevant rules and regulations, including Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996;

4. Urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations and the Trust Fund for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, and invites indigenous organizations and private institutions and individuals to do likewise;

5. Encourages those States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the International Labour Organization Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) to consider doing so and to consider supporting the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and welcomes the increased support by States for the Declaration;

6. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the midterm assessment of the progress made in the achievement of the goal and objectives of the Second International Decade;

7. Calls upon States to consider the recommendations contained in the midterm assessment of the implementation of the Second International Decade and to enhance national and international efforts, including international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous peoples in such areas as culture, education, health, human rights, the environment and social and economic development by means of action-oriented programmes and specific projects, increased technical assistance and relevant standard-setting activities;

8. Decides to organize a high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly, to be known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, to be held in 2014, in order to share perspectives and best practices on the realization of the rights of indigenous peoples, including to pursue the objectives of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and invites the President of the General Assembly to conduct open-ended consultations with Member States and with representatives of indigenous peoples within the framework of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, as well as with the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the Special Rapporteur, in order to determine the modalities for the meeting, including the participation of indigenous peoples in the Conference;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and mechanisms and other stakeholders, including organizations representing indigenous peoples, to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report that evaluates the progress made in the achievement of the goal and objectives of the Second International Decade and its impact on the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

10. Decides to continue consideration of the question at its sixty-sixth session under an item entitled "Rights of indigenous peoples".

Human rights country situations

In 2010, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Secretary-General, Special Rapporteurs and independent experts addressed the human rights situation in Member States.

In Africa, the human rights situation worsened in Côte d'Ivoire, following presidential elections in November, as well as in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, where impunity and the use of child soldiers remained serious concerns. In Somalia, indiscriminate attacks on civilian populations worsened the human rights and humanitarian situation, however, Somaliland saw a decrease in human right abuses and successful presidential elections in June. In Guinea, a new President, Alpha Condé, promised the establishment of a truth and reconciliation commission to ensure accountability for past human rights violations. The Sudan made some progress in institutional and legislative reform, but the justice sector and the police remained ill-equipped and under-resourced. General elections in April were largely orderly and peaceful, marking the country's first multiparty elections in 24 years.

In Asia, the human rights situation worsened in Afghanistan due to intensified armed conflict, and in Iran due to a crackdown on human rights defenders, women's rights activists, journalists and political opponents. The first Khmer Rouge trial was completed in Cambodia, where noteworthy progress was made in the promotion and protection of human rights. In Kyrgyzstan, loss of life occurred during protests leading to the change of government on 7 April and during renewed violence in May and June. In Myanmar, the human rights situation remained serious despite national parliamentary elections in November and a review of laws for conformity to international standards. The General Secretary of the National League for Democracy, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, was released from house arrest, yet many other prisoners of conscience remained in detention. The Muslim community in Northern Rakhine State continued to face endemic discrimination.

Israel continued its blockade of the Gaza Strip and its restrictions of the movement of Palestinians through the construction of the wall in the West Bank, multiple checkpoints and the fragmentation of the West Bank and East Jerusalem. Impunity for violations of international human rights and humanitarian law remained widespread, the Palestinian people's right to self-determination was violated and the human rights situation in East Jerusalem worsened. On 31 May, Israel attacked a flotilla of ships seeking to bring humanitarian aid to Gaza. An international fact-finding mission concluded that Israel had committed a series of violations of international law during the interception of the flotilla and the subsequent detention of passengers prior to deportation.

The Human Rights Council held two special sessions on particular human rights situations: its thirteenth special session (27–28 January) on support to the recovery process in Haiti after the earthquake of 12 January 2010; and its fourteenth special session (23 December) on the human rights situation in Côte d'Ivoire in relation to the conclusion of the 2010 presidential election.

General aspects

In the annual report on the activities undertaken by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) [A/HRC/16/20], the High Commissioner, Navanethem Pillay, reviewed the work of the Office at the country and regional levels, including its efforts to respond to deteriorating human rights situations. At the country level, its work was conducted through human rights field presences, support for human rights mechanisms and dialogue between the High Commissioner and Member States—including bilateral meetings, open or confidential communication, country visits by the High Commissioner, technical cooperation programmes and rapid response operations.

In December, OHCHR had 56 field presences: 12 regional presences, of which five included gender advisers; 12 offices at the country level; 15 human rights components in UN peace missions; and 17 human rights advisers in UN country teams. Regional presences included: Southern Africa (Pretoria, South Africa); East Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia); West Africa (Dakar, Senegal); Southeast Asia (Bangkok, Thailand); the Pacific (Suva, Fiji); the Middle East (Beirut, Lebanon); Central Asia (Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan); Europe (Brussels, Belgium); Central America (Panama City); and Latin America (Santiago, Chile); as well as the United Nations Sub-Regional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon) and the United Nations Human Rights Training and Documentation Centre for South-West Asia and the Arab Region (Doha, Qatar).

In May, OHCHR established a country office in Guinea, which was officially inaugurated in August. In December, the OHCHR country office in Mauritania started functioning. Country offices were located in Bolivia, Cambodia, Colombia, Guatemala, Guinea, Mauritania, Mexico, Nepal, Togo and Uganda. In addition, OHCHR maintained a presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and in Kosovo.

Within peace missions, OHCHR supported human rights components in Afghanistan, Burundi, the Central African Republic, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Iraq, Liberia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan and Timor-Leste. In addition, OHCHR worked closely with the human rights officer based in Tajikistan. Human rights advisers were posted in Burundi (covering the Great Lakes region), Ecuador, Georgia (covering the Southern Caucasus), Guinea, Kenya, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Moldova, Nicaragua, the Niger, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, the Russian Federation, Rwanda, Serbia, Sri Lanka and Tajikistan.

The OHCHR Rapid Response Unit contributed to short-term missions, fact-finding missions and commissions of inquiry. In January, to respond to the protection crisis that followed the earthquake in Haiti, 15 staff members were deployed over a six-month period to monitor the human rights situation in camps for internally displaced persons and to lead the Protection Cluster. In February, as a result of the deteriorating human rights situation in Togo, OHCHR deployed three human rights officers and one logistician to assist the field office to monitor the situation and enhance national capacity for human rights monitoring. In response to the outbreak of violence in Kyrgyzstan in June, OHCHR deployed eight staff members to monitor the human rights situation.

The High Commissioner observed that human rights work was a collective effort in a historic movement, and strategic priorities were long term. Her Office would deepen its engagement against the background of an untenable financial situation stemming from the gap between increased requests for mandated activities, zero regular budget growth and shrinking extrabudgetary resources.

Africa

Burundi

Report of independent expert. In September [A/HRC/16/CRP.1], the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Burundi, Akich Okola (Kenya), reported on his eleventh (19–30 January 2009), twelfth (30 November–11 December 2009) and thirteenth (23–29 May 2010) visits to the country.

While noting some achievements in terms of peace consolidation, institution- and capacity-building, and the enactment of some progressive laws, the expert observed a significant deterioration in the human rights situation before and during the 2010 electoral period. Areas of concern included impunity, the situation of vulnerable groups, gender-based violence, the judiciary, prison conditions and respect for economic, social and cultural rights.

Regarding the electoral context, clashes between politically affiliated youth as well as several apparently politically motivated killings were reported ahead of the communal elections of 24 May 2010. Amid allegations of procedural irregularities, the security situation worsened, with a massive increase in grenade attacks: 72 of them were recorded in June prior to the presidential elections of 28 June, which was marked by three large explosions in Bujumbura. Numerous reports alleged arbitrary arrests, intimidation, and ill-treatment of members of the opposition. Allegations of torture had reappeared, following two years during which no systemic use of torture had been reported. All those issues were being addressed by the Human Rights and Justice Division of the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi in the context of its monitoring and reporting activities.

The independent expert urged the Government to establish transitional justice mechanisms: a Truth and Reconciliation Commission and a Special Tribunal. He also called upon the Government and the Parliament to pass the law establishing the National Human Rights Commission. The expert noted that the Government had made no progress in investigating the Gatumba [YUN 2004, p. 149] and Munyinga massacres and in bringing the perpetrators to justice.

Appointment of independent expert. On 18 June, the Human Rights Council appointed Fatsah Ouguergouz (Algeria) as independent expert on the situation of human rights in Burundi.

Côte d'Ivoire

Human Rights Council special session

On 21 December, Nigeria, on behalf of the Group of African States, and the United States requested the convening of a special session of the Human Rights Council on 23 December to address the situation of human rights in Côte d'Ivoire since the 28 November elections. The request was supported by 31 States Members of the Council.

On 23 December [A/HRC/S-14/1 (res. S-14/1)], the Council, at its fourteenth special session, condemned the human rights violations that took place in different parts of the country in relation to the conclusion of the presidential election, including abductions, enforced or involuntary disappearances, arbitrary detentions, extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, acts of sexual violence, denial of right to peaceful assembly, the loss of lives and the destruction of property (see p. 177). The Council urged all media outlets to refrain from inciting violence, hostility and hate speech, and called for an end to media restrictions. The Government was urged to strengthen the protection of the civilian population, and to investigate and bring to justice perpetrators of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. The international community was called on to support the Government in stabilizing the situation and to aid refugees, internally displaced persons (IDPs) and vulnerable populations. The High Commissioner was requested to report to the Council on the abuses and violations of human rights.

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on the situation of human rights and the activities of her Office in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) [A/HRC/16/27], the High Commissioner highlighted a lack of improvement in the country since 2009. Challenges included arbitrary detention, prison conditions, torture and ill-treatment in detention, sexual violence and violations of economic and social rights. The situation of journalists, human rights defenders, victims and witnesses had worsened, and the judiciary lacked adequate resources and faced widespread corruption and political and military interference. During the reporting period, the United Nations Joint Human Rights Office (UNJHRO) reported serious violations by national security forces and armed groups. Conditions in detention facilities remained deplorable, with high numbers of deaths, rapes and physical assaults on detainees, and prison escapes through violence or complicity with corrections officers.

The High Commissioner recommended that the DRC protect the rights of persons in detention, ensure that UNJHRO had free access to places of detention, and provide compensation to persons detained arbitrarily; ensure that the judicial system brought the perpetrators of violence against women, including domestic violence, to justice; create a fund within the national budget to pay damages to victims of sexual violence committed by State agents; execute arrest warrants of the International Criminal Court; ensure access to affordable basic health care; ensure that health centres and hospitals had the necessary human, medical and financial resources; respect its international obligation to freedom of expression and the press; and implement a zero-tolerance policy for human rights violations. The Council should ensure the monitoring of the situation in the DRC by calling on the Government to interact more closely with the various human rights mechanisms and keep it regularly appraised of progress in formulating and implementing its plan of action. The international community should assist the DRC by refraining from participation in the illegal exploitation of natural resources and by holding accountable those involved in illegal activities.

Report of mandate holders. In response to a request of the Human Rights Council [YUN 2009, p. 753], seven special procedures mandate holders in March issued a second joint report on the DRC [A/HRC/13/63]. The human rights situation continued to deteriorate and the recommendations made in the experts' initial report [YUN 2009, p. 752] had not been implemented. Systematic and gross violations of human rights and grave breaches of international humanitarian law took place, particularly in the east. Members of the armed forces and the police continued to commit serious violations, including summary execution; rape; arbitrary arrest and detention; forced labour; and torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. Non-State armed groups continued to breach humanitarian law and, in some instances, committed crimes against humanity. The Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs estimated that 1,859,078 Congolese had been internally displaced, mostly due to clashes between armed groups. Humanitarian access to the displaced and other crisis-affected populations remained difficult due to attacks on humanitarian workers. Acute malnutrition reached high levels in some parts of the country. The prevalence of sexual violence was explained by the climate of impunity, the absence of rule of law, and the general acceptance of and tolerance for violence against women and girls.

The experts recommended that the Government fight impunity and strengthen the law enforcement and justice sectors; ensure gender equality; and address economic root causes of human rights violations, such as the illegal exploitation of natural resources. They called for an end to the continued presence of perpetrators of serious violations in the security forces; reiterated the importance of transitional justice to address the violations that took place between 1993 and 2003; and welcomed the progress regarding identification and reintegration of child soldiers, while highlighting the continued recruitment and use of juveniles in conflict. Due to the high level of human rights violations, the Human Rights Council should consider the creation of a country-specific mandate.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March [A/HRC/13/56 (res. 13/22)], the Council encouraged the DRC to pursue reforms in the framework of consolidating peace and national reconciliation, as well as in the justice system, the army and the national police. The Government was requested to develop a plan for implementing the recommendations received, particularly in the areas of protection of women and children, combating impunity, the rule of law, and the administration of justice. The Council invited the High Commissioner and the seven experts to report again in 2011.

Guinea

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March [A/HRC/13/56 (res. 13/21)], the Council condemned the massacre of unarmed civilians during a peaceful rally in Conakry on 28 September 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 229], and in particular the sexual violations committed by members of the security forces. The Council recommended that the authorities combat impunity of those responsible for, or involved in, serious human rights violations; protect the victims of violence; and reform the justice and security sectors. The Council appealed to the international community to provide the transitional authorities with assistance as a contribution to the restoration of peace and the constitutional order, and invited the High Commissioner to report to the Council in 2011.

Report of High Commissioner. In a later report [A/HRC/16/26] covering developments from April to December, the High Commissioner highlighted key human rights challenges, including impunity, corruption, discrimination and gender-based violence. The Government had expressed its intention to investigate and prosecute alleged human rights violations committed by members of the army and other security forces in September 2009; however, no prosecution had taken place. On 21 December, the new President, Alpha Condé, committed himself to establishing a truth and reconciliation commission to deal with past human rights abuses and ensure accountability. The High Commissioner recommended that measures be taken to combat impunity: reform the judicial and security systems; prevent, punish and eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls; and bring legislation in line with international standards. The international community should provide further assistance to the Government to strengthen its judiciary, assist in the establishment and operation of truth and reconciliation mechanisms, and encourage Guinea to continue to cooperate with OHCHR, including by providing access to all places of detention.

Sierra Leone

Report of High Commissioner. Reporting on assistance to Sierra Leone in the field of human rights in 2010 [A/HRC/16/78], the High Commissioner said that the country had made progress in building its capacity for human rights promotion and protection. The enactment of crucial laws in the fields of women's and children's rights had improved the legal framework to protect the rights of vulnerable groups. However, customs and traditions perpetuated harmful practices such as female genital mutilation and discrimination against women.

Socio-economic conditions remained challenging. Financial and capacity constraints limited the ability of the national human rights institutions to carry out their tasks, negatively affecting the administration of justice and creating room for impunity. The constitutional review process had been delayed, and crucial recommendations made by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, including the abolition of the death penalty and amendment of discriminatory legal provisions, had not been implemented. The Reparations Programme had been affected due to gaps in the financial requirements and lack of political will.

OHCHR had been involved in Sierra Leone since 1998, as part of successive UN missions, including the current United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone (UNIPSIL). The Human Rights Section of UNIPSIL had engaged with the Government in promoting legislation to protect human rights and had supported the Human Rights Commission of Sierra Leone and civil society in their efforts to advance human rights. The Section had engaged in training and advocacy activities with a wide range of stakeholders, had monitored the human rights situation and had provided advice and technical services to the authorities.

The High Commissioner recommended that the Government: ensure support to the Human Rights Commission to enable it to fully exercise its functions; enhance the capacity of the Human Rights Committee in Parliament, whose role was key to ensuring the enactment of human rights-related bills; and ensure the implementation of crucial recommendations in the 2004 report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

Somalia

Reports of independent expert. In March [A/HRC/13/65], the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Somalia, Shamsul Bari (Bangladesh), reported to the Human Rights Council following his fourth visit to Kenya and Somalia (12–24 January). He visited Somaliland and Puntland but was unable to visit Mogadishu and south-central Somalia due to security concerns. The human rights situation continued to be deplorable, especially in the south-central region, where the conflict had worsened. Troops of the African Union Mission in Somalia who guarded Mogadishu and key Government installations were targeted by coordinated suicide attacks in late 2009. Civilians, especially women and children, continued to suffer from indiscriminate attacks and retaliatory acts from both Government forces and armed groups. Indiscriminate violence and attacks against civilians continued, including the use of heavy artillery, mortars and roadside bombs, targeted attacks, abduction and killings of aid workers and human rights defenders, and sexual and gender-based violence. The expert recommended visits by Government ministers and senior officials to refugee camps in Kenya and Yemen to seek refugees' views and boost morale. To ensure the rule of law and good governance, corrupt, inefficient and uncommitted Government officials should be replaced with those who were dedicated and properly trained. The Government should focus on three priorities: creating livelihood opportunities, reopening schools and supporting education institutions, and strengthening medical services. UN offices were urged to move into Somalia rather than work from Nairobi, and international organizations were called on to pay further attention to piracy, mixed migrations, human trafficking and terrorism in Puntland and Somaliland.

In a report issued in September [A/HRC/15/48], the independent expert reported on his fifth mission to Somalia (26 July–6 August). He was again unable to visit south-central Somalia and Mogadishu for security reasons. Intensified fighting in August resulted in more civilian deaths and led to a serious decline in the human rights and humanitarian law situation. The lack of schooling for children led to further recruitment by armed groups; most children recruited received weapons training, with an increase in the use of girls for logistics, transport and intelligence-gathering. In territories controlled by armed insurgents, many civilians could not access humanitarian aid and were at increased risk of arbitrary interpretations of sharia law. The situation of human rights defenders deteriorated significantly and many journalists sought refuge in neighbouring countries. In Somaliland, successful presidential elections took place in June and a new President was inaugurated. The expert called on the parties to recognize that there was no military solution to achieving their objectives. The Government and the international community should prioritize creating jobs, setting up residential schools and offering international scholarships and training.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/HRC/14/37 (dec. 14/119)], the Council decided to hold an interactive dialogue with the participation of the Government, OHCHR, the independent expert and the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Somalia on the status of technical cooperation, capacity-building programmes and measures to improve the human rights situation. The interactive dialogue was held on 29 September.

On 1 October [A/HRC/15/60 (res. 15/28)], the Council expressed concern at the growing negative impact of the prolonged instability of Somalia on neighbouring countries and beyond. The root causes and effects of the socio-economic and political crisis should be addressed, including the increasing number of IDPs displaced persons and refugees in neighbouring countries, human trafficking and piracy. All parties should refrain from violence against the civilian population, prevent human rights abuses and allow unhindered access to humanitarian assistance. The Council extended the mandate of the independent expert for one year.

Sudan

Reports of independent expert. In a report issued in May [A/HRC/14/41 & Corr.1] and covering the period from June 2009 to April 2010, the independent expert on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, Mohammed Chande Othman (United Republic of Tanzania), noted that the Government had made notable progress in institutional and legislative reform, yet serious deficiencies in the justice sector remained. He highlighted an ill-equipped and under-resourced police force, inadequate prison facilities and the near absence of basic rule of law infrastructure beyond major urban areas. In Darfur, violence continued and UN and humanitarian personnel faced significant risks to their lives, with some personnel abducted and held for long periods of time. National, state and local elections in April were largely orderly and peaceful, marking the first multiparty elections in 24 years and helping to prepare the country for the 2011 referendum on the South Sudan region.

The expert called on the Government to establish a National Human Rights Commission, intensify efforts to deploy police, prosecutors and judges to rural areas, and ratify the remaining international instruments for the protection of human rights, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Government should institute a moratorium on the death penalty in the light of the continued application of the penalty for minors and in cases without due process. It should ensure that human rights defenders, humanitarian workers, members of the opposition, journalists and other members of civil society were not intimidated, arbitrarily arrested and detained, ill-treated or tortured by State agents. The Government of South Sudan should address the increasing levels of conflict in the region, ensure that all allegations of human rights violations were investigated and distribute the State budget among key sectors, such as education, health, social services, law enforcement and the rule of law.

In a May addendum [A/HRC/14/41/Add.1] pursuant to a Council request [YUN 2009, p. 758], the independent expert reported on the implementation of the recommendations of the Group of Experts on Darfur [YUN 2007, p. 806]. He concluded that the Government had taken significant steps towards implementing some recommendations, including the passage of key legislations, such as the Child Act and the Press and Printed Materials Act, and the implementation of programmes to disarm, demobilize and reintegrate former child combatants. Nevertheless, several recommendations had not been implemented, and while the Government had taken initial steps with regard to other recommendations, these had not had a sufficient impact on the ground. The expert recommended that the Council keep the situation under review.

In September [A/HRC/15/CRP.1], the independent expert reported on developments between May and August. While the Government continued to take steps towards democratic transformation, the general human rights situation deteriorated. While the successful conduct of the elections in April marked an important milestone, the anticipated expansion of political space did not materialize. Instead, particularly in May and June, the country witnessed a pattern of political repression with a deteriorating environment for civil and political rights, including arrests of political opposition leaders, journalists and peaceful demonstrators, and restrictions on press freedom. In Darfur, the security and humanitarian situation deteriorated, with continued clashes between Government troops and the armed movements resulting in civilian casualties and further civilian displacement. In Southern Sudan, the post-election period was marred by violence and widespread human rights abuses, and the conduct of the army raised grave concerns.

Also in September [A/HRC/15/57], the independent expert provided an update on the implementation of the recommendations of the Group of Experts on Darfur. He welcomed the considerable progress made in collaboration with the United Nations in implementing programmes to disarm, demobilize and reintegrate child soldiers; however, he highlighted several recommendations, including protection against summary execution, arbitrary detention and torture, which had not been implemented.

Human Rights Council action. On 10 June [A/HRC/14/37 (dec. 14/117)], the Council extended the mandate of the independent expert until the end of its fifteenth session.

On 1 October [A/HRC/15/60 (res. 15/27)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 25 to 18, with 3 abstentions, urged all parties to implement the remaining obligations under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301]. The Government and the people of the Sudan were congratulated for organizing and widely participating in the April elections, which took place in a peaceful and orderly manner. Welcoming the passing of the Southern Sudan Referendum Bill and the establishment of the Southern Sudan Referendum Commission, the Council called on all parties to facilitate the holding of peaceful, fair and transparent referendums that reflected the will of the Southern Sudanese people. The Council renewed the mandate of the independent expert for a year and requested him to report in 2011.

Americas

Bolivia

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on OHCHR activities in Bolivia in 2010 [A/HRC/16/20/Add.2], the High Commissioner said that noteworthy progress was registered with respect to legislative developments to implement the extensive range of human rights recognized in the Constitution, as well as legal, political and institutional reforms aimed at eliminating discrimination and the exclusion of indigenous peoples, Afro-Bolivians and other vulnerable groups. Regarding indigenous peoples, advances were observed in the field of political rights and representation and with regard to the strengthening of the indigenous autonomous regions. The right to consultation played a substantial role in the drafting of the bill on judicial boundaries, but was not instituted or was only partially applied with respect to other measures that could affect indigenous interests. The situation of the Guaraní people continued to raise concern. In a social context characterized by frequent manifestations of racism, discrimination and intolerance, especially against indigenous peoples, Afro-Bolivians and women, the promulgation of the Law against Racism and All Forms of Discrimination was a historic advance. The Law provided guidelines for a strong public policy on that matter; however, it also established restrictions to freedom of expression and the press that should be brought in line with international standards.

Economic, social and cultural rights indicators, such as school attendance and extreme poverty, registered some improvements, the High Commissioner said. Despite legislative and other measures adopted to address historical problems in the administration of justice, the judicial system remained immersed in a structural crisis that was susceptible to political and economic pressures and insufficient access to justice. The establishment of the new higher courts—whose magistrates would be elected, for the first time, by popular vote—did not take place within the established schedule. Trials for serious human rights violations showed some progress, but a high level of impunity remained. Some cases of deaths, torture and other inhuman, cruel or degrading treatment were reported; in most cases, responsibility was attributed to the police. She expressed concern for the violence against women, as well as the situation of human rights defenders and journalists.

The High Commissioner urged the Legislative Assembly to ensure that all laws adopted fully respected international human rights standards, and to amend them when found not in line with such standards. She encouraged the State, the private sector, the media and civil society to carry out programmes and actions to eliminate racism and discrimination. The Government and the Legislative Assembly should ensure the right to consultation of indigenous peoples regarding laws and administrative decisions affecting their rights. The Ministries of the Interior and Defence should adopt measures to eradicate the excessive use of force, torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment by security officials.

Colombia

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on the human rights situation in Colombia [A/HRC/16/22], covering developments in 2010, the High Commissioner recognized the commitment to human rights expressed by the administration of President Juan Manuel Santos Calderón, which came into office in August, and welcomed the reduction in the practice known as false positives, which resulted in extrajudicial killings. However, the continuing internal armed conflict affected the enjoyment of human rights. All parties to the conflict, in particular guerrilla groups, continued to breach international humanitarian law. The situation was exacerbated by the violence caused by illegal armed groups that emerged after the demobilization of paramilitary organizations and by disputes among illegal armed actors to control drug trafficking. Other concerns included enforced disappearances, torture, sexual violence, discrimination and forced displacement. Cases of illegal wiretapping of emails, surveillance, information theft and harassment affecting members of social and political organizations were also reported. The High Commissioner recommended bold steps in the fight against impunity and corruption, as well as due process on alleged cases of extrajudicial executions attributed to members of security forces. The judicial authorities, especially the Attorney General, should provide further resources to continue investigations of killings and threats against human rights defenders. Plans should be prepared and implemented for the protection of indigenous peoples and Afro-Colombian communities.

Communication. In March [A/HRC/13/G/11], Colombia transmitted its comments on the High Commissioner's 2009 report [YUN 2009, p. 759].

Guatemala

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on OHCHR activities in Guatemala in 2010 [A/HRC/16/20/

Add.1 & Corr.1], the High Commissioner highlighted key human rights issues including the right to life; the proliferation and availability of firearms; the tendency to privatize public security; the fight against impunity; the deprivation of liberty; the vulnerability of human rights defenders; the right to food, education and health; and the lack of formal recognition of indigenous rights. During the year, OHCHR-Guatemala provided technical cooperation and advisory services to Congress, the Constitutional Court, the School of Judicial Trainers, the Public Prosecutor's Office, other State institutions and members of civil society. The High Commissioner called on the Government to implement the recommendations of the Presidential Commission on Human Rights (COPREDEH) and carry out an annual national evaluation of compliance with those recommendations. In preparation for the presidential and local elections of 2011, political parties should commit to the recommendations of COPREDEH and consider affirmative actions for women and indigenous people. The international community was called on to ensure that cooperation activities strengthened compliance with international human rights obligations.

Haiti

On 22 January [A/HRC/S-13/1], Brazil requested the convening of a special session of the Human Rights Council on 27 January on the support of the Council for the recovery process in Haiti after the earthquake of 12 January 2010: a human rights approach. The earthquake resulted in nearly 300,000 casualties, displaced more than 2 million people and destroyed a significant portion of the country's infrastructure, with serious consequences for the enjoyment of human rights. The request was supported by 38 States Members of the Council.

The Council held its thirteenth special session on 27 and 28 January [A/HRC/S-13/2 & Corr.1]. Expressing concern about the situation of children, women, IDPs, the elderly, persons with disabilities and the wounded, the Council on 28 January [A/HRC/S-13/2 (res. S-13/1)] underlined the need to ensure access to food, housing, health care, water and sanitation, education, work and the civil registry. The international community and the UN system, particularly the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), were urged to continue to ensure adequate and coordinated support for the Government and the people of Haiti in their efforts to overcome the challenges arising from the earthquake, keeping in mind the importance of integrating a human rights approach.

Report of independent expert. In a report issued in May [A/HRC/14/44], the independent expert on the situation of human rights in Haiti, Michel Forst (France), highlighted the difficult situation of vulnerable groups, which was aggravated by the earthquake, especially for women, children separated from their families, orphans, persons with pre-existing disabilities, and persons injured by the earthquake. He recommended that the authorities prioritize the question of violence against women, increase the number of female officers in the police force, and pay particular attention, in the fight against corruption, to the management of humanitarian aid funds.

In an addendum [A/HRC/14/44/Add.1], the independent expert reported on his visit to Haiti (21 April–1 May). He underlined the need to make protection a priority of the international community, and suggested improvements to the coordination of protection work, in particular the need to involve the Haitian authorities and organizations. He fleshed out his vision of the place of human rights in the reconstruction and proposed that civil society should be involved in decision-making. The human rights section of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti should be allocated additional human resources. Further resources were also needed to ensure that medical care was provided for persons with disabilities.

Statement by High Commissioner. In June [A/HRC/14/CRP.3], the High Commissioner reported on OHCHR support for the recovery and reconstruction process, focusing on the need to strengthen the State, to enhance human rights protection, especially of groups with special needs, and to ensure accountability and sustainability in the reconstruction effort.

Human Rights Council action. In a 30 September statement [A/HRC/15/60 (PRST/15/1)], the Council President reaffirmed the Council's solidarity with the Haitian people in the wake of the earthquake. The President stressed the need to tackle obstacles that were preventing the people from fully exercising their human rights, including access to food, decent housing, health care, drinking water, sanitation, education and employment. The independent expert, whose mandate was extended until September 2011, was invited to report to the Council in 2011.

Asia

Afghanistan

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan in 2010 [A/HRC/16/67], the High Commissioner said that the armed conflict had intensified throughout the country with a corresponding rise in civilian casualties. Targeted assassinations, executions, abductions and intimidation of thousands of civilians undermined international and Government efforts to provide protection and security in conflict-affected areas. Air strikes and night searches by pro-Government forces continued to place civilians at risk. Civilians also suffered from displacement, destruction of property and disruption of health care, education and other essential services. Lack of political will to address human rights violations was a significant factor driving a deeply entrenched culture of impunity. Armed conflict, dysfunctional governance, widespread and deeply entrenched impunity, a weak rule of law and extreme marginalization of and violence against women posed significant challenges to the enjoyment of human rights. Women continued to face discrimination through laws, policies, attitudes and practices that violated their basic human rights. Child marriage, offering girls for dispute resolution, forced isolation in the home, exchange marriage and honour killings continued.

The High Commissioner recommended that: international military forces provide compensation for victims of all military operations that resulted in death or injury to civilians; religious leaders speak out about harmful practices that were inconsistent with Islamic teachings; and the Government take steps to ensure greater participation and representation of civil society, especially women's groups, in the peace and reintegration process.

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/HRC/14/37 (res. 14/15)], the Council condemned attacks targeting innocent schoolchildren, particularly girls, in Afghanistan; expressed solidarity with the Government in its efforts to protect students from such attacks; urged all parties to take measures to protect children and uphold their rights; and encouraged Governments as well as UN and international agencies to respond positively to the requests made by Afghanistan for assistance in order to prevent and address such attacks.

Cambodia

Report of Secretary-General. In a report issued in September [A/HRC/15/47] pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 764], the Secretary-General highlighted the role and achievements of OHCHR in assisting the Government and people of Cambodia in the promotion and protection of human rights. Important steps were taken to strengthen the country's legal and institutional frameworks. Nevertheless, many poor rural and urban communities, including minority peoples in the north-eastern provinces, continued to be dispossessed of their land. The space for critical debate was eroded by threats and abusive use of defamation, disinformation and incitement lawsuits. Prosecution for acts of torture remained the exception and arbitrary detention was a serious problem. The Office welcomed the adoption of the Penal Code, the Law on Peaceful Demonstrations, the Law on Expropriation, the Anti-Corruption Law and a Housing Rights Policy, as well as the drafting of a new correctional law and steps towards developing a national mechanism to prevent torture. Despite OHCHR's work with journalists' associations, UN agencies and NGOs to improve the professional ethics of journalists and protect their profession, no one had been brought to justice for the murders of journalists since 1994.

The Office worked with the UN country team, notably the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme and civil society and humanitarian organizations, as well as the Phnom Penh Municipality and national authorities, to promote better standards of resettlement for 42 families whose members were living with HIV, and who were evicted and relocated outside of the capital in 2009. In addition, the Office embarked on a human rights education project with the Ministry of Education, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and UNICEF to integrate human rights education into school curricula at primary and secondary levels.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a report issued in September [A/HRC/15/46], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cambodia, Surya Subedi (Nepal), who visited the country twice in 2010 (17–30 January and 8–18 June), found progress regarding the protection and promotion of human rights, including the enactment of some major new laws. However, human rights violations continued in a number of areas. The major areas of concern related to access to land and housing rights, freedom of expression and the numerous challenges faced by the judiciary. The judiciary should apply the Press Law to allow for retractions, corrections and right of reply prior to legal proceedings. Public figures should tolerate more criticism and avoid using the courts to silence critics, and defamation and disinformation should be decriminalized. The Government should respect the independence of lawyers, create a transparent and competitive process of admission to training schools for judges and prosecutors, and provide special protection for people belonging to particular groups, such as a separate juvenile justice system. The Government should also ensure that those arrested and detained had proper legal representation and immediate access to a lawyer.

Communication. On 22 September [A/HRC/15/G/5], Cambodia submitted its comments on the report of the Special Rapporteur.

Human Rights Council action. On 30 September [A/HRC/15/60 (res. 15/20)], the Council reaffirmed the importance of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia as an independent and impartial body; welcomed the completion of the first Khmer Rouge trial; and supported the position of the Government and the United Nations to proceed with the tribunal in a fair, efficient and expeditious manner, given the advanced age and frail health of the persons charged and the long-overdue justice. The Council welcomed efforts made by the Government in combating corruption, preventing the trafficking of persons and commercial sexual exploitation, implementing land reform, and adhering to international human rights obligations. The Secretary-General and the international community should continue to work with the Government to increase democracy and promote human rights. The Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur by one year and requested him to report in 2011.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Communication. In a letter of 21 January to the Human Rights Council President [A/HRC/13/G/7/Rev.1], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) rejected the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK and called for the Council to terminate the politicized procedure.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In his final report to the Council, submitted in February [A/HRC/13/47], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK, Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand), reviewed the human rights situation from the middle of 2009 until the beginning of 2010. He said that the situation could be described as sui generis, given the multiple particularities and anomalies. There were many instances of human rights violations which were both harrowing and horrific. The responses from the authorities had been based mainly upon periodic law reform. Yet the sufferings of ordinary people continued. It was essential to mobilize more comprehensively the international system, especially the United Nations and its affiliates, to act in a more concerted manner, including through incentives and disincentives to influence the authorities. Resumption of the six-party talks to help denuclearize the country would be an added opportunity to provide space for an improved human rights environment.

The Rapporteur recommended that the DPRK: ensure effective provision of and access to food and other basic necessities for those in need of assistance; rectify the distorted pattern of food distribution; cooperate with UN agencies and other humanitarian actors on the issue; enable people to undertake economic activities to satisfy their basic needs and supplement their livelihood; adopt a moratorium on capital punishment; terminate public executions and abuses against the security of the person; end the punishment of those who sought asylum abroad and who were sent back to the country; and cooperate to resolve the issue of foreigners abducted by the country.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 March [A/HRC/13/56 (res. 13/14)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 28 to 5, with 13 abstentions, expressed concern at the continued systematic, widespread and grave violations of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights in the DPRK, as well as at the unresolved question of the abduction of foreign nationals. The Council urged the Government to ensure unimpeded access of humanitarian assistance. Regretting the Government's refusal to recognize the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and allow him access to the country, the Council extended the mandate for a year.

Appointment of Special Rapporteur. On 18 June, the Human Rights Council appointed Marzuki Darusman (Indonesia) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK.

Note by Secretary-General. In September [A/65/364], the Secretary-General confirmed that the Special Rapporteur, due to his late appointment, would not be in a position to present a substantive report in 2010.

Report of Secretary-General. In a report issued in September on the human rights situation in the DPRK [A/65/391], submitted pursuant to General Assembly 64/175 [YUN 2009, p. 766] and covering developments from August 2009 to August 2010, the Secretary-General addressed continued human rights concerns and the deteriorating humanitarian situation. The Government was urged to ensure the enjoyment of the right to food, water, sanitation and health; ratify key international human rights conventions; submit outstanding reports; and engage with OHCHR to make use of technical cooperation. The Government should provide access to the Special Rapporteur; neighbouring countries and the international community should be reminded of their obligations under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] to provide protection to those fleeing the country in order to seek asylum; and the international community should not constrain humanitarian aid due to political and security concerns.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/65/456/Add.3], adopted resolution 65/225 by recorded vote (106-20-57) [agenda item 68 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that States Members of the United Nations have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations that they have undertaken under the various international instruments,

Mindful that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Noting the universal periodic review of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea by the Human Rights Council, in December 2009, and hoping that the review will encourage the engagement of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in international cooperative efforts in the field of human rights so as to contribute to improving the situation of human rights in the country,

Recalling the concluding observations of the treaty-monitoring bodies under the four treaties to which the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is a party,

Noting with appreciation the collaboration established between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization in order to improve the health situation in the country, and the collaboration established with the United Nations Children's Fund in order to improve the quality of education for children,

Noting the decision on the resumption, on a modest scale, of the activities of the United Nations Development Programme in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and encouraging the engagement of the Government with the international community to ensure that the programmes benefit the persons in need of assistance,

Recalling its resolutions 60/173 of 16 December 2005, 61/174 of 19 December 2006, 62/167 of 18 December 2007, 63/190 of 18 December 2008 and 64/175 of 18 December 2009, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2003/10 of 16 April 2003, 2004/13 of 15 April 2004 and 2005/11 of 14 April 2005, Human Rights Council decision 1/102 of 30 June 2006 and Council resolutions 7/15 of 27 March 2008, 10/16 of 26 March 2009 and 13/14 of 25 March 2010, and mindful of the need for the international community to strengthen its coordinated efforts aimed at achieving the implementation of those resolutions,

Noting that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea did agree to a survey of the food situation by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme,

Taking note of the report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, regretting that he still has not been allowed to visit the country and that he received no cooperation from the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and taking note also of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea submitted in accordance with resolution 64/175,

Noting the importance of the inter-Korean dialogue, which could contribute to the improvement of the human rights and humanitarian situation in the country,

Taking note with appreciation of the recent reunion of separated families across the border, which is an urgent humanitarian concern of the entire Korean people, and hoping that necessary arrangements for further reunions on a larger scale and a regular basis will be made as early as possible between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea,

1. Expresses its very serious concern at:

(a) The persistence of continuing reports of systematic, widespread and grave violations of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including:

- (i) Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including inhuman conditions of detention, public executions, extrajudicial and arbitrary detention; the absence of due process and the rule of law, including fair trial guarantees and an independent judiciary; the imposition of the death penalty for political and religious reasons; collective punishments; and the existence of a large number of prison camps and the extensive use of forced labour;
- (ii) Limitations imposed on every person who wishes to move freely within the country and travel abroad, including the punishment of those who leave or try to leave the country without permission, or their families, as well as punishment of persons who are returned;
- (iii) The situation of refugees and asylum-seekers expelled or returned to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and sanctions imposed on citizens of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who have been repatriated from abroad, leading to punishments of internment, torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or the death penalty, and in this regard urges all States to respect the fundamental principle of non-refoulement, to treat those who seek refuge humanely and to ensure unhindered access to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his Office, with a view to improving the situation of those who seek refuge, and once again urges States parties to comply with their obligations under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto in relation to refugees from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who are covered by those instruments;
- (iv) All-pervasive and severe restrictions on the freedoms of thought, conscience, religion, opinion and expression, peaceful assembly and association, the right to privacy and equal access to information, by such means as the persecution of individuals exercising their freedom of opinion and expression, and their families, and the right of everyone to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives, of his or her country;
- (v) The violations of economic, social and cultural rights, which have led to severe malnutrition, widespread health problems and other hardship for the population in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in particular for persons belonging to particularly exposed groups, inter alia, women, children and the elderly;

(vi) Continuing violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women, in particular the trafficking of women for the purpose of prostitution or forced marriage and the subjection of women to human smuggling, forced abortions, gender-based discrimination, including in the economic sphere, and gender-based violence;

(vii) Continuing reports of violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of children, in particular the continued lack of access to basic economic, social and cultural rights for many children, and in this regard notes the particularly vulnerable situation faced by, inter alia, returned or repatriated children, street children, children with disabilities, children whose parents are detained, children living in detention or in institutions and children in conflict with the law;

(viii) Continuing reports of violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons with disabilities, especially on the use of collective camps and of coercive measures that target the rights of persons with disabilities to decide freely and responsibly on the number and spacing of their children;

(ix) Violations of workers' rights, including the right to freedom of association and collective bargaining, the right to strike as defined by the obligations of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the prohibition of the economic exploitation of children and of any harmful or hazardous work of children as defined by the obligations of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

(b) The continued refusal of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to recognize the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea or to extend cooperation to him, despite the renewal of the mandate by the Human Rights Council in its resolutions 7/15, 10/16 and 13/14;

(c) The refusal of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to articulate which recommendations enjoyed its support following its universal periodic review by the Human Rights Council, and regrets the lack of actions taken to date to implement the recommendations contained in the final outcome;

2. Reiterates its very serious concern at unresolved questions of international concern relating to abductions in the form of enforced disappearance, which violates the human rights of nationals of other sovereign countries, and in this regard strongly calls upon the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea urgently to resolve these questions, including through existing channels, in a transparent manner, including by ensuring the immediate return of abductees;

3. Expresses its very deep concern at the precarious humanitarian situation in the country, partly as a result of frequent natural disasters, compounded by the misallocation of resources away from the satisfaction of basic needs, and the increasing State restrictions on the cultivation and trade in foodstuffs, as well as the prevalence of chronic malnutrition, particularly among the most vulnerable groups, pregnant women, infants and the elderly, which, despite some progress, continues to affect the physical and mental development of a significant proportion of children, and urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in this regard, to take preventive and remedial action, cooperating where necessary with international donor agencies and in accordance with international standards for monitoring humanitarian assistance;

4. Commends the Special Rapporteur for the activities undertaken so far and for his continued efforts in the conduct of his mandate despite the limited access to information;

5. Strongly urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in this regard:

(a) To immediately put an end to the systematic, widespread and grave violations of human rights mentioned above, inter alia, by implementing fully the measures set out in the above-mentioned resolutions of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, and the recommendations addressed to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea by the Human Rights Council in the context of the universal periodic review and the United Nations special procedures and treaty bodies;

(b) To protect its inhabitants, address the issue of impunity and ensure that those responsible for violations of human rights are brought to justice before an independent judiciary;

(c) To tackle the root causes leading to refugee outflows and prosecute those who exploit refugees by human smuggling, trafficking and extortion, while not criminalizing the victims, and to ensure that citizens of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea expelled or returned to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are able to return in safety and dignity, are humanely treated and are not subjected to any kind of punishment;

(d) To extend its full cooperation to the Special Rapporteur, including by granting him full, free and unimpeded access to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and to other United Nations human rights mechanisms so that a full needs assessment of the human rights situation may be made;

(e) To engage in technical cooperation activities in the field of human rights with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and her Office, as pursued by the High Commissioner in recent years, with a view to improving the situation of human rights in the country, and strive to implement the recommendations made in the universal periodic review by the Human Rights Council;

(f) To engage in cooperation with the International Labour Organization with a view to significantly improving workers' rights;

(g) To continue and reinforce its cooperation with United Nations humanitarian agencies;

(h) To ensure full, safe and unhindered access to humanitarian aid and take measures to allow humanitarian agencies to secure its impartial delivery to all parts of the country on the basis of need in accordance with humanitarian principles, as it pledged to do, and to ensure access to adequate food and implement food security policies, including through sustainable agriculture;

(i) To improve cooperation with the United Nations country team and development agencies so that they can directly contribute to improving the living conditions of the civilian population, including accelerating progress towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in accordance with international monitoring and evaluation procedures;

6. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea at its sixty-sixth session, and to this end requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and requests the Special Rapporteur to continue to report his findings and recommendations.

Iran

Report of Secretary-General. In a report issued in September on the human rights situation in Iran [A/65/370], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/176 [YUN 2009, p. 769], the Secretary-General noted further negative developments. Submission of long-overdue periodic reports and the completion of the universal periodic review were overshadowed by an intensified crackdown on human rights defenders, in particular women's rights activists, journalists and Government opponents in relation to post-election unrest. Concerns remained regarding torture, arbitrary detentions and unfair trials, a dramatic increase in the application of the death penalty, including for political opponents and juveniles, and persistent discrimination against minority groups that in some cases amounted to persecution. In April, Iran was elected to the Committee on the Status of Women, although it had not ratified CEDAW. Women continued to be discriminated against in issues pertaining to marriage, divorce, nationality, child custody, inheritance, guardianship, the administration of justice and the right to hold any office of State. The law criminalized trafficking of persons and prohibited the forcing of women into prostitution and slavery; however, trafficking of women and girls remained a concern.

The Secretary-General was troubled by reports of excessive use of force, arbitrary arrests and detentions, unfair trials, torture and ill-treatment of opposition activists. While the authorities had taken steps to prevent stoning as a method of execution and limit the application of the death penalty to juveniles, the measures had not been fully enforced. Welcoming Iran's ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the Secretary-General called on the Government to ratify other international human rights treaties, in particular CEDAW and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, to ensure compliance with international human rights standards and to prevent discriminatory practices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.3], adopted resolution 65/226 by recorded vote (78-45-59) [agenda item 68 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, the most recent of which is resolution 64/176 of 18 December 2009,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 64/176, which highlights further negative developments in the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including an intensified crackdown on human rights defenders and reports of excessive use of force, arbitrary detentions, unfair trials and allegations of torture;

2. Expresses deep concern at serious ongoing and recurring human rights violations in the Islamic Republic of Iran relating to, inter alia:

(a) Torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including flogging and amputations;

(b) The continuing high incidence of and dramatic increase in death sentences carried out in the absence of internationally recognized safeguards, including public executions, notwithstanding a circular from the former head of the judiciary prohibiting public executions;

(c) The continuing imposition and carrying out of the death penalty against persons who at the time of their offence were under the age of 18, in violation of the obligations of the Islamic Republic of Iran under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

(d) The imposition of the death penalty for crimes that lack a precise and explicit definition, including moharabeh (enmity against God), or for crimes that do not qualify as the most serious crimes, in violation of international law;

(e) Stoning and suspension strangulation as methods of execution, and the fact that persons in prison continue to face sentences of execution by stoning, notwithstanding a circular from the former head of the judiciary prohibiting stoning;

(f) Pervasive gender inequality and violence against women, a continued crackdown on women's human rights defenders, arrests, violent repression and sentencing of women exercising their right to peaceful assembly and continuing discrimination against women and girls in law and in practice;

(g) Continuing discrimination and other human rights violations, at times amounting to persecution, against persons belonging to ethnic, linguistic, recognized religious or other minorities, including, inter alia, Arabs, Azeris, Baluchis, Kurds, Christians, Jews, Sufis and Sunni Muslims and their defenders;

(h) Increased incidents of persecution against unrecognized religious minorities, particularly members of the Baha'i faith, including attacks on Baha'is, including in State-sponsored media, increasing evidence of efforts by the State to identify, monitor and arbitrarily detain Baha'is, preventing members of the Baha'i faith from attending university and from sustaining themselves economically, the confiscation and destruction of their property, the vandalizing of their cemeteries and the sentencing of seven Baha'i leaders to ten years' imprisonment despite being repeatedly denied the due process of law that they are constitutionally guaranteed, including the right to timely and adequate access to legal representation of their choice and to a fair and open trial;

(i) Ongoing, systemic and serious restrictions of freedom of peaceful assembly and association and freedom of opinion and expression, including those imposed on the media, political opponents, human rights defenders, lawyers, journalists, Internet providers, Internet users, bloggers, clerics, artists, academics, students, labour leaders and trade unions from all sectors of Iranian society;

(j) The continuing harassment, intimidation and persecution, including by arbitrary arrest, detention or disappearance, as well as violent repression of, inter alia, political opponents, human rights defenders, lawyers, journalists and other media representatives, Internet providers, Internet users, bloggers, clerics, academics, students and labour leaders from all sectors of Iranian society, noting in particular the continuing harassment and detention of staff members of the Defenders of Human Rights Centre;

(k) The continuing use of State security forces and Government-directed militias to forcibly disperse Iranian citizens engaged in the peaceful exercise of freedom of expression and freedom of peaceful assembly and association;

(l) Severe limitations and restrictions on the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, including arbitrary arrest, indefinite detention and lengthy jail sentences, for those exercising this right, and the arbitrary demolition of places of worship;

(m) Persistent failure to uphold due process of law, and violations of the rights of detainees, including defendants held without charge or held incommunicado, the systematic and arbitrary use of prolonged solitary confinement, the lack of access of detainees to legal representation of their choice, the refusal to consider granting bail to detainees, as well as reports of detainees being subjected to torture, harsh interrogation techniques and the use of pressure exerted upon their relatives and dependants, including through arrest, to obtain false confessions that are then used at trials;

(n) Continuing arbitrary or unlawful interference by State authorities with the privacy of individuals, in particular related to private homes, and with their correspondence, including voicemail and e-mail communications, in violation of international law;

3. Expresses particular concern at the failure of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to conduct any comprehensive investigation or to launch an accountability process for alleged violations in the period following the presidential elections of 12 June 2009, and reiterates its call upon the Government to launch a process of credible, independent and impartial investigations into reports of human rights violations and to end impunity for such violations;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to address the substantive concerns highlighted in the report of the Secretary-General and the specific calls to action found in previous resolutions of the General Assembly, and to respect fully its human rights obligations, in law and in practice, in particular:

(a) To eliminate, in law and in practice, amputations, flogging and other forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(b) To abolish, in law and in practice, public executions and other executions carried out in the absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards;

(c) To abolish, pursuant to its obligations under article 37 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, executions of persons who at the time of their offence were under the age of 18;

(d) To abolish the use of stoning and suspension strangulation as methods of execution;

(e) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination and other human rights violations against women and girls;

(f) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination and other human rights violations against persons belonging to religious, ethnic, linguistic or other minorities, recognized or otherwise, to refrain from monitoring individuals on the basis of their religious beliefs, and to ensure that the access of minorities to education and employment is on a par with that of all Iranians;

(g) To implement, inter alia, the 1996 report of the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, which recommended ways in which the Islamic Republic of Iran could emancipate the Baha'i community, and to accord the seven Baha'i leaders held since 2008 the due process of law and rights that they are constitutionally guaranteed, including the right to adequate legal representation and the right to timely, fair and open legal proceedings;

(h) To end the harassment, intimidation and persecution of political opponents, human rights defenders, labour leaders, students, academics, journalists, other media representatives, bloggers, clerics, artists and lawyers, including by releasing persons imprisoned arbitrarily or on the basis of their political views;

(i) To end restrictions placed on Internet users and Internet providers that violate the rights to freedom of expression, association and privacy;

(j) To end restrictions on the press and media representatives, including the selective jamming of satellite broadcasts;

(k) To end the use of State security forces and Government-directed militias to forcibly disperse Iranian citizens engaged in the peaceful exercise of their rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association;

(l) To uphold, in law and in practice, procedural guarantees to ensure due process of law;

5. Also calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to strengthen its national human rights institutions in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights ("the Paris Principles");

6. Further calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to consider ratifying or acceding to the international human rights treaties to which it is not already a party, to effectively implement those human rights treaties to which it is already a party and to withdraw any reservations it may have made upon signature or ratification of other international human rights instruments where such reservations are overly general, imprecise or could be considered incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty;

7. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to cooperate fully with all international human rights mechanisms, and encourages the Government to continue exploring cooperation on human rights and justice reform with the United Nations, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

8. Expresses deep concern that, despite the Islamic Republic of Iran's standing invitation to all thematic special procedures mandate holders, it has not fulfilled any requests from those special mechanisms to visit the country in five years and has left unanswered the vast majority of the numerous and repeated communications from those special mechanisms, and strongly urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to fully cooperate with the special mechanisms, including facilitating their visits to its territory, so that credible and independent investigations of all allegations of human rights violations can be conducted;

9. Strongly encourages the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to seriously consider all of the recommendations put forward at its universal periodic review by the Human Rights Council, with the full and genuine participation of civil society and other stakeholders;

10. Strongly encourages the thematic special procedures mandate holders to pay particular attention to, with a view to investigating and reporting on, the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, in particular the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders, the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Independent Expert on minority issues, the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Working Group on Discrimination against Women in Law and in Practice;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, including options and recommendations to improve its implementation, and to submit an interim report to the Human Rights Council at its sixteenth session;

12. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran at its sixty-sixth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Kyrgyzstan

Human Rights Council action. On 18 June [A/HRC/14/37 (res. 14/14)], the Council expressed concern at the loss of life that occurred on 7 April during the protests leading to the change of government, as well as at the recent inter-ethnic violence and at the loss of life sustained as a result. Condemning the human rights violations committed during the protests, as well as the provocations and violence in Osh and Jalalabad, the Council called on the Government to conduct a full and transparent investigation to hold perpetrators accountable for the loss of life in relation to the events of 7 April and during the recent inter-ethnic violence. The Council urged the Government to promote interethnic reconciliation, called upon all actors to refrain from violence and expressed support for efforts to restore democratic and constitutional order and the rule of law. The international community was requested to provide humanitarian relief and assistance. The High Commissioner was requested to provide technical assistance and to report to the Council in 2011.

Myanmar

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a report issued in March [A/HRC/13/48], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, Tomás Ojea Quintana (Argentina), noted that far too many people were denied the basic rights to food, shelter, health and education. He visited Myanmar from 15 to 19 February at the invitation of the Government, and found that conflicts along the border areas continued to abet serious abuses against civilian populations, including the recruitment of child soldiers. The Rapporteur remained concerned about the systematic discrimination, framed as an immigration problem, faced by the Muslim community in Northern Rakhine State, which included restriction of movement, limitations on permission to marry and forced labour. Given the extent and persistence of the violations, and the lack of accountability, there was an indication that those violations were the result of a State policy. The main issues highlighted in the report included the situation of prisoners of conscience, conditions of detention, due process of law, freedom of expression, assembly and association in the light of the 2010 election, protection of civilians, discrimination, living conditions and humanitarian assistance. The Government should ensure credible elections and substantive changes to the human rights situation.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 March [A/HRC/13/56 (res. 13/25)], the Council expressed concern that urgent calls regarding the human rights situation had not been met; that restrictions imposed on the representatives of opposition parties continued to prevent dialogue, national reconciliation and transition to democracy; and that the General Secretary of the National League for Democracy, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, remained under arbitrary house arrest. The Government was called on to lift restrictions on freedom of assembly, association, movement and expression, including for free and independent media, by ensuring the use of the Internet and mobile telephone services, and by ending censorship. The Government was urged to desist from carrying out further politically motivated arrests, release all prisoners of conscience and investigate reports of human rights violations, including enforced disappearances, arbitrary detentions, rape and other forms of sexual violence, and torture and other forms of ill-treatment. The Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year.

Report of Secretary-General. In a report issued in September [A/65/367], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/238 [YUN 2009, p. 774], the Secretary-General addressed developments from 26 August 2009 to 25 August 2010, including the release of political prisoners, human rights abuses and national reconciliation. Upon the reassignment of Ibrahim Gambari on 1 January 2010, the Secretary-General designated his Chef de Cabinet, Vijay Nambiar, as Special Adviser to oversee the good offices mandate. The Secretary-General said that addressing the challenges of national reconciliation, democratization and respect for human rights remained essential. He called for unity of purpose and unity of action among key Member States, regional entities, multilateral development actors and international financial institutions to encourage all domestic stakeholders to contribute to positive change.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a report issued in September [A/65/368], in accordance with General Assembly resolution 64/238, the Special Rapporteur focused on human rights in relation to elections and the issue of justice and accountability. He noted increased tensions along the border, linked to the discrimination of ethnic groups and the vulnerability of civilians, and called for the Government to meet international standards when investigating human rights violations. The Rapporteur recommended that the Government respect freedom of expression, opinion and assembly, release all prisoners of conscience, address justice and accountability, facilitate access for humanitarian assistance and continue developing cooperation with the international human rights system. An annex contained the responses of the Government to the report.

In a further report [A/HRC/16/59], the Rapporteur said that Myanmar had held national legislative elections for the first time in over two decades on 7 November, and that one week later Ms. Suu Kyi had been released unconditionally upon the end of her house arrest term.

Communication. In a letter of 20 October to the Secretary-General [A/C.3/65/2], Myanmar highlighted areas of achievements, including reductions in human trafficking, violence against women, allegations of forced labour and the recruitment of child soldiers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/65/456/Add.3], adopted resolution 65/241 by recorded vote (85-26-46) [agenda item 68 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and recalling the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and the duty to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Reaffirming also its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the most recent of which is resolution 64/238 of 24 December 2009, those of the Commission on Human Rights, and those of the Human Rights Council, the most recent of which are resolutions 12/20 of 2 October 2009 and 13/25 of 26 March 2010,

Welcoming the statements made by the President of the Security Council on 11 October 2007 and 2 May 2008, and the Security Council statements to the press of 22 May and 13 August 2009,

Welcoming also the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in Myanmar and the observations contained therein, and recalling his visit to the country on 3 and 4 July 2009 and the visits of his Special Adviser on Myanmar from 31 January to 3 February and on 26 and 27 June 2009, respectively, while regretting that no further visits have been allowed in the course of the past year for the purpose of the good offices mission,

Welcoming further the reports of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, and urging the implementation of the recommendations contained therein and in previous reports, while regretting that a request by the Special Rapporteur for a follow-up visit has been rejected by the Government of Myanmar,

Deeply concerned that the urgent calls contained in the above-mentioned resolutions, as well as the statements of other United Nations bodies concerning the situation of human rights in Myanmar, have not been heeded, and emphasizing that, without significant progress towards heeding those calls of the international community, the situation of human rights in Myanmar will continue to deteriorate,

Deeply concerned also at restrictions to effective and genuine participation of the representatives of the National League for Democracy, other political parties, pro-democracy actors, ethnic minorities and other relevant stakeholders in a genuine process of dialogue, national reconciliation and transition to democracy,

Calling upon the Government of Myanmar to cooperate with the international community in order to achieve concrete progress with regard to human rights and fundamental freedoms, and political processes,

Deeply regretting that the Government of Myanmar did not take the steps necessary to ensure a free, fair, transparent and inclusive electoral process, noting in particular, in this respect, the restrictions imposed by the electoral laws as enacted and implemented by the Government, including those placed on the registration of voters, parties and candidates, as well as the detention of political activists, the restrictions on free reporting and on freedom of assembly, the limited access to media, funding and campaigning possibilities, the reported incidents of official intimidation, the cancellation of elections in certain ethnic areas and the lack of independence of the electoral commission, and expressing serious concern about reports of fraud, including through advance voting arrangements,

1. Strongly condemns the ongoing systematic violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms of the people of Myanmar;

2. Welcomes the release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi following the most recent period of her arbitrary house arrest, and, noting that her release is unconditional, calls upon the Government of Myanmar to ensure that no restrictions are placed on the exercise of all her human rights and fundamental freedoms in the future;

3. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar, while also noting the earlier release from house arrest of the Vice-Chairman of the National League for Democracy, U Tin Oo, to release all other prisoners of conscience, currently estimated at more than 2,100, including the Chairman of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy, U Hkun Htun Oo, the leader of the 88 Generation Students Group, U Min Ko Naing, and one of the founders of the 88 Generation Students Group, Ko Ko Gyi, without delay and without conditions, and to allow their full participation in the political process, and strongly calls upon the Government to reveal the whereabouts of persons who are detained or have been subjected to enforced disappearance and to desist from further politically motivated arrests;

4. Reaffirms the essential importance of a genuine process of dialogue and national reconciliation for a transition to democracy, regrets in this regard that the Government of Myanmar did not seize the opportunity to develop a substantive and meaningful dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and calls upon the new Government of Myanmar to take immediate measures to undertake a genuine dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and all other concerned parties, civil society groups and ethnic groups, and to permit them to consult freely among each other and with other domestic stakeholders;

5. Strongly regrets that the Government of Myanmar did not hold free, fair, transparent and inclusive elections and refused to allow international election observers and independent foreign or local journalists to freely monitor or report on the voting, and calls upon the Government to begin an inclusive post-election phase, including through meaningful dialogue and the participation of representatives of all groups in the political life of the country, within the framework of a transition to a civilian, legitimate and accountable system of government, based on the rule of law and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Strongly calls upon the Government of Myanmar to lift restrictions on the freedom of assembly, association and movement and the freedom of expression, including for free and independent media, including through the openly available and accessible use of Internet and mobile telephone services, and ending the use of censorship, including the use of restrictive laws to prevent the reporting of views critical of the Government;

7. Expresses grave concern at the continuing practice of arbitrary detentions, enforced disappearances, rape and other forms of sexual violence, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and urges the Government of Myanmar to undertake without further delay a full, transparent, effective, impartial and independent investigation into all reports of human rights violations and to bring to justice those responsible in order to end impunity for violations of human rights, and, regretting that previous calls to that effect have not been heeded, calls upon the Government to do so as a matter of priority and, if necessary, drawing on the assistance of the United Nations;

8. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to undertake a transparent, inclusive and comprehensive review of compliance of the Constitution and all national legislation with international human rights law, while fully engaging with democratic opposition, civil society groups, ethnic groups and other stakeholders, while recalling once more that the procedures established for the drafting of the Constitution resulted in a de facto exclusion of opposition groups from the process;

9. Urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and to guarantee due process of law, and to fulfil earlier assurances made to the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar to begin a dialogue on judicial reform;

10. Expresses concern about the conditions in prisons and other detention facilities and consistent reports of ill-treatment of prisoners of conscience, including torture, and about the moving of prisoners of conscience to isolated prisons far from their families where they cannot receive food and medicine;

11. Expresses deep concern about the risk of further armed conflict in some areas as a result of continued pressures imposed by the national authorities on certain ethnic groups and the exclusion of some key ethnic political parties from the election process, and calls upon the Government of Myanmar to protect the civilian population in all parts of the country and for all concerned to respect existing ceasefire agreements;

12. Strongly calls upon the Government of Myanmar to take urgent measures to put an end to continuing grave violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, including the targeting of persons based on their belonging to particular ethnic groups, the targeting of civilians as such in military operations, and rape and other forms of sexual violence, and to end impunity for such acts;

13. Also strongly calls upon the Government of Myanmar to end the practice of systematic forced displacement of large numbers of persons within their country and other causes of refugee flows into neighbouring countries;

14. Expresses its concern about the continuing discrimination, human rights violations, violence, displacement and economic deprivation affecting numerous ethnic minorities, including, but not limited to, the Rohingya ethnic minority in Northern Rakhine State, and calls upon the Government of Myanmar to take immediate action to bring about an improvement in their respective situations, and to grant citizenship to the Rohingya ethnic minority;

15. Urges the Government of Myanmar to provide, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, adequate human rights and international humanitarian law training for its armed forces, police and prison personnel, to ensure their strict compliance with international human rights law and international humanitarian law and to hold them accountable for any violations thereof;

16. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to consider ratifying and acceding to remaining international human rights treaties, which would enable a dialogue with the other human rights treaty bodies;

17. Also calls upon the Government of Myanmar to allow human rights defenders to pursue their activities unhindered and to ensure their safety, security and freedom of movement in that pursuit;

18. Strongly calls upon the Government of Myanmar to put an immediate end to the continuing recruitment and use of child soldiers in violation of international law by all parties, to intensify measures to ensure the protection of children from armed conflict, to pursue its collaboration with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, to swiftly conclude and implement the new joint action plan for the national armed forces, to facilitate access for dialogue on action plans with other parties listed in the annual report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, and to allow unrestricted access to all areas where children are recruited for these purposes;

19. Notes with appreciation the prolongation of the supplementary understanding between the International Labour Organization and the Government of Myanmar to eliminate the use of forced labour, and that some steps, particularly in relation to awareness-raising, have been taken with regard to it, but expresses grave concern at the continuing practice of forced labour, and calls upon the Government to intensify its cooperation with the International Labour Organization on the basis of the understanding, with a view to extending action against forced labour as widely as possible throughout the country and to fully implementing with urgency the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry of the International Labour Organization;

20. Welcomes the agreement between the Government of Myanmar and the United Nations on a two-year joint humanitarian initiative for Northern Rakhine State, and, in view of ongoing humanitarian needs throughout the country, encourages the Government to ensure that such cooperation is extended to other regions;

21. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to ensure timely, safe, full and unhindered access to all parts of Myanmar, including conflict and border areas, for the United Nations, international humanitarian organizations and their partners, and, taking into account the need for a swift facilitation of requests for visa and in-country travel permission, encourages the Government to build on the experience of the Tripartite Core Group and to continue its cooperation to allow humanitarian assistance to reach all persons in need throughout the country, including displaced persons;

22. Encourages the Government of Myanmar to resume its humanitarian dialogue with the International Committee of the Red Cross and to allow it to carry out its activities according to its mandate, in particular by granting access to persons detained and to areas of internal armed conflict;

23. Also encourages the Government of Myanmar to continue to cooperate with international health entities on HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis;

24. Reaffirms its full support for the good offices of the Secretary-General pursued through his Special Adviser on Myanmar, consistent with the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, and urges the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with the good offices mission, including by facilitating the visits of the Special Adviser to the country and granting him unrestricted access to all relevant stakeholders, including the highest level of leadership within the army, political parties, human rights defenders, representatives of ethnic groups, student leaders and other opposition groups, and to respond substantively and without delay to the proposals of the Secretary-General, including the establishment of a United Nations office in support of the mandate of the good offices;

25. Welcomes the role played by countries neighbouring Myanmar and members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in support of the good offices mission of the Secretary-General;

26. Also welcomes the continued contribution of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General on Myanmar in support of the work of the good offices mission;

27. Urges the Government of Myanmar to respond favourably to the requests of the Special Rapporteur to visit the country, and to cooperate fully with him in the exercise of his work as mandated by the Human Rights Council, and to implement the four core human rights elements recommended by the Special Rapporteur;

28. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to engage in a dialogue with the Office of the High Commissioner with a view to ensuring full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

29. Welcomes the recent workshop held in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner in view of the upcoming universal periodic review by the Human Rights Council, and encourages the Government of Myanmar to seek further technical cooperation in the preparation of the universal periodic review and to cooperate fully and constructively throughout the process;

30. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to provide his good offices and to pursue his discussions on the situation of human rights, the transition to democracy and the national reconciliation process with the Government and the people of Myanmar, involving all relevant stakeholders, including democracy and human rights groups, and to offer technical assistance to the Government in this regard;

(b) To give all necessary assistance to enable the Special Adviser and the Special Rapporteur to discharge their mandates fully, effectively and in a coordinated manner;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session, as well as to the Human Rights Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

31. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its sixty-sixth session, on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General and the Special Rapporteur.

Nepal

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on the human rights situation and the activities of her office, including technical cooperation, in Nepal [A/HRC/16/23], covering events in 2010, the High Commissioner noted some positive developments in relation to discrimination and impunity, yet highlighted that widespread inequality and discrimination persisted. Challenges included delays in transitional justice, weakening of rule-of-law institutions, withdrawal of criminal cases due to political pressure, and gender- and caste-based discrimination. A draft National Human Rights Commission act was yet to be adopted and impunity persisted. The political situation had a negative effect on human rights.

The High Commissioner commended the Government for implementing the national plans of action on gender-related issues. She recommended that political parties in the Constituent Assembly make concrete progress on drafting the new Constitution and adopt important draft legislation consistent with the Government's commitments under international law. The Government should establish an external civilian oversight mechanism for the security forces and increase the capacity of all State bodies forming the criminal justice system. The Attorney General's Office should fully discharge its legal obligation to supervise criminal investigations by the police. The Government should also strengthen the key provisions of the draft bill on the elimination and punishment of caste-based discrimination and untouchability crimes, strengthen protection for victims of sexual and gender-based violence, and ensure access to justice and protection for victims and witnesses.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Cyprus

In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2006, p. 760], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Council an OHCHR report on the question of human rights in Cyprus [A/HRC/16/21] covering the period up to 30 November. Human rights concerns included freedom of movement, missing persons, property rights, discrimination, the right to life, the right to education, freedom of religion and cultural rights. Positive developments included the opening of a new crossing point and legislative developments aimed at ensuring equal treatment of children of displaced mothers; however, the division of the island continued to constitute an obstacle to the full enjoyment of human rights. The Secretary-General hoped that the efforts by the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot leaders to negotiate a comprehensive settlement would improve the human rights situation.

Communications. In a note of 24 March [A/HRC/13/G/21], Turkey transmitted a letter reflecting the Turkish Cypriot views on the 2009 OHCHR report on the question of human rights in Cyprus [YUN 2009, p. 778]. Cyprus replied to that note by a letter of 27 April [A/HRC/13/G/23].

Middle East

Territories occupied by Israel

In 2010, human rights questions, including cases of violations in the territories occupied by Israel following the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East, were addressed by the Human Rights Council. Political and other aspects were considered by the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of High Commissioner. In response to Human Rights Council decision 2/102 [YUN 2006, p. 760], the High Commissioner in March submitted a report [A/HRC/13/68/Rev.1] on the issue of Palestinian pregnant women giving birth at Israeli checkpoints. The High Commissioner pointed out that the issue was best examined in the broader context of the severe restrictions on freedom of movement imposed by Israel on Palestinians in the Occupied Territory. No cases of such births had been reported since January 2009, and unless the Council requested a continuation of that reporting mandate, the issue would be covered in the periodic reports.

As requested by the Human Rights Council, the High Commissioner in March reported [A/HRC/13/54] on the implementation of Council resolutions S-9/1 [YUN 2009, p. 780] and S-12/1 [ibid., p. 787]. The report covered violations of human rights of the Palestinian people from 1 May 2009 to 3 February 2010, as well as the situation in East Jerusalem. The most critical violations included a lack of respect for the right to life; arbitrary detention; impediments to the right to freedom of religion; obstacles to the fulfilment of the right to health; restriction on freedom of movement; torture and other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment; a lack of remedy and redress for abuses and violations; and violence against women and children. The blockade of Gaza resulted in a breach of the right to health and the right to safe drinking water, while the construction of the wall in the West Bank, Israeli checkpoints, the fragmentation of the West Bank and the increasing separation of East Jerusalem brought into question the ability of Palestinians to exercise their right to self-determination. Many Palestinian families in East Jerusalem and Area C of the West Bank had been forcibly displaced, due to evictions and demolitions carried out by the Israeli authorities. Impunity for violations of human rights and international humanitarian law remained widespread. The High Commissioner recommended that Israel investigate allegations of human rights violations, lift the blockade of Gaza, ensure the supply of essential humanitarian materials to Gaza, desist from evicting Palestinians or demolishing their homes, and dismantle all Israeli settlements in the West Bank and East Jerusalem. The Palestinian Authority should fulfil its obligation under the Palestinian Basic Law and international human rights and humanitarian laws, investigate allegations of human rights violations committed by its forces or agents, and carry out a campaign to raise awareness and prevent crimes against women committed in the name of honour.

In a further report covering the period from 4 February to 30 November [A/HRC/16/71], the High Commissioner said that serious violations of international human rights law had occurred due to acts or omissions by Israel, as well as by the Palestinian Authority and the de facto authorities in Gaza. Those included arbitrary detention, torture, use of the death penalty, restrictions on movement, breach of self-determination rights, demolition of property and arrests and detention of children. The human rights situation in East Jerusalem worsened, in particular due to frequent violence by Israeli settlers, the demolition or occupation of Palestinian homes, limited access for Palestinians to the Al-Aqsa Mosque and arbitrary detention by Israeli security forces. OHCHR had received reports that the Israeli police had increased arrests of children in the Silwan neighbourhood of Jerusalem, mostly arrested late at night and charged with threatening Israeli security. Military Orders Nos. 1649 and 1650 appeared to authorize the Israel Defense Forces to detain, prosecute, imprison and forcibly transfer an undefined number of people from the West Bank, in breach of multiple rights. The High Commissioner recommended that Israel lift the blockade of Gaza, bring policies and practices regarding the detention of persons from the Occupied Territory into compliance with the Fourth Geneva Convention, clarify restrictions on freedom of movement inside Gaza, end the demolition of Palestinian homes, desist from building settlements and facilitate access to religious sites in East Jerusalem. Israel should investigate and prosecute violent acts perpetrated by Israeli settlers, bring policies and practices regarding the arrest and detention of children into compliance with international legal obligations and ensure the freedoms of association and expression. The de facto authorities in Gaza should end the launching of rockets and mortars toward Israel by armed groups active in Gaza, abolish the use of the death penalty and refrain from carrying out torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

Human Rights Council action. On 24 March [A/HRC/13/56 (res. 13/6)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 45 to 1, reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to establish a sovereign, independent and democratic State. The Council reaffirmed its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security; stressed the need for preserving the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem; and urged Member States and UN system bodies to assist the Palestinian people in realizing their right to self-determination.

On the same day [res. 13/7], the Council, by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, urged Israel to reverse the settlement policy in the Occupied Territories, including East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan, and, as a first step towards their dismantlement, to stop the expansion of settlements. The Council urged the parties to give renewed impetus to the peace process.

On the same day [res. 13/8], the Council, by a recorded vote of 31 to 9, with 7 abstentions, expressed concern at the illegal actions by Israel undermining the sanctity and inviolability of religious sites in the Occupied Territory, in particular in Jerusalem, and condemned all forms of violence against civilians. The Council demanded that Israel end its occupation of Palestinian land, end all military attacks and operations in the Occupied Territory, and cease all diggings and excavation works beneath and around the Al-Aqsa Mosque and other religious sites in Jerusalem. Israel should stop its illegal demolition of Palestinian houses in East Jerusalem, lift the siege imposed on the Gaza Strip, open all borders and crossing points and allow free access to fuel, medicine, materials and equipment needed for the reconstruction of Gaza.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2007, p. 827], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Richard Falk (United States), in August submitted a report [A/65/331] focusing on the impact of Israeli policies in the West Bank and East Jerusalem arising from prolonged occupation, which exhibited features of colonialism and apartheid, as well as transforming a de jure condition of occupation into a circumstance of de facto annexation. Attention was also devoted to concerns involving settlement growth in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, the problems posed by the continued construction of the separation wall, issues of collective punishment, and a variety of other human rights concerns, including concern over the health-related and other adverse impacts of the continuing blockade of the 1.5 million residents of Gaza, the flotilla incident of 31 May (see p. 439) and the effort to assess whether Israel and the Palestinian authorities had adequately investigated war crimes allegations arising from the Gaza conflict of 2008–2009. There were 121 Israeli settlements and approximately 102 “outposts” with a population of more than 462,000—with 271,400 settlers living in the West Bank and 191,000 in East Jerusalem. The Rapporteur stressed that Palestinian legal rights must be respected in all attempts at a peaceful resolution of the conflict between the two peoples. The United Nations should lend its support to the worldwide boycott, divestment and sanctions campaign, so long as Israel unlawfully occupied Palestinian territories, and should endorse a non-violent “legitimacy war”, as an alternative to both failed peace negotiations and armed struggle, as the best available means of promoting Palestinian rights.

In a further report [A/HRC/16/72], covering developments up to December, the Rapporteur documented the continuing expansion of settlements, the de facto annexation of East Jerusalem, expulsions from East Jerusalem as a means to annexation, the dual system of roads in the West Bank, international complicity in perpetuating the occupation, continuation of the Gaza blockade and abuse of children by Israeli authorities. The Rapporteur called for: efforts to have the International Court of Justice assess allegations that the occupation possessed elements of “colonialism”, “apartheid” and “ethnic cleansing”; efforts to attach legal consequences to the failure by Israel to end the blockade of the Gaza Strip; and measures to protect Palestinian children from illegal detention.

Occupied Syrian Golan. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council resolution on human rights in the occupied Syrian Golan [YUN 2009, p. 786], the Secretary-General in March submitted information [A/HRC/13/52] provided by five Governments (Algeria, Egypt, Morocco, Pakistan, Syrian Arab Republic) on their policy on the Golan.

On 24 March [A/HRC/13/56 (res. 13/5)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 31 to 1, with 15 abstentions, called on Israel to desist from the building of settlements, from the imposition of Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan and from repressive measures against them. Israel should allow the Syrian population of the occupied territory to visit their relatives in Syria through the Quneitra checkpoint and rescind its decision to prohibit those visits. Israel should release the Syrian detainees held in Israeli prisons and allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit prisoners to assess their health. The Secretary-General was requested to report on the matter to the Council in 2011.

Pursuant to that resolution, the Secretary-General in December [A/HRC/16/25] submitted information provided by three countries (Argentina, Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, Syria) on their implementation of the resolution.

Communication. On 5 August [A/HRC/15/G/1], Syria forwarded a letter on recent provocations and human rights violations in the occupied Syrian Golan, namely the arrest of Syrian citizens on false accusations.

Attacks against humanitarian flotilla

Human Rights Council action. On 2 June [A/HRC/14/37 (res. 14/1)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 32 to 3, with 9 abstentions, condemned the attack by Israeli forces against the flotilla of ships carrying humanitarian assistance (see p. 439), deplored the loss of life of innocent civilians and expressed sympathy and condolences to the victims and their families. The Council called on Israel to cooperate with the international community to seek and provide information on the whereabouts and condition of detained and injured persons, release all detained men and material and facilitate their return to their homelands. Israel should lift the siege on Gaza and ensure the unimpeded provision of humanitarian assistance. The Council decided to dispatch an independent international fact-finding mission to investigate violations of international law, including international humanitarian and human rights laws, resulting from the Israeli attacks on the flotilla.

Report of fact-finding mission. In a report issued in September [A/HRC/15/21], the international fact-finding mission described the events leading up to the interception on 31 May of the flotilla bound for Gaza, as well as the interception of a seventh ship on 6 June, the deaths of nine passengers and the wounding of many others, the detention of passengers in Israel and their deportation. The report concluded that the Israeli forces had committed violations of international humanitarian and human rights laws during the interception of the flotilla and during the detention of passengers in Israel prior to deportation. The firing of rockets and other munitions of war into Israeli territory from Gaza constituted serious violations of international law. But any response which constituted collective punishment of the civilian population in Gaza was not lawful in any circumstances. The conduct of the Israeli military towards the flotilla passengers was not only disproportionate but demonstrated levels of unnecessary and incredible violence. Those acts resulted in several offences: wilful killing, torture and inhumane treatment, and wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, as well as violations of the right to life, right to liberty and security, right of detainees to be treated with humanity, and freedom of expression. The mission expressed the hope that Israel would identify the perpetrators of the more serious crimes and that those who suffered loss would be compensated.

Human Rights Council action. On 29 September [A/HRC/15/60 (res. 15/1)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 30 to 1, with 15 abstentions, welcomed the report of the international fact-finding mission, regretted the non-cooperation by Israel with the mission, endorsed the report's conclusions and called upon all parties to ensure their implementation. The High Commissioner was requested to report to the Council in 2011.

Report of High Commissioner. In December [A/HRC/16/73], the High Commissioner provided information on follow-up to the report of the fact-finding mission. Turkey had expressed its interest in ensuring accountability for the violations of international law committed in the context of the attack on the flotilla, and regretted Israel's lack of cooperation with the international fact-finding mission.

Follow-up to 2009 Fact-Finding Mission on Gaza Conflict

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/10 [YUN 2009, p. 785], the Secretary-General in February reported [A/64/651] on the follow-up to the report of the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict [YUN 2009, p. 783], providing the replies of Israel, Palestine and Switzerland on the implementation of that resolution. The Secretary-General noted that the process initiated by Israel, Palestine and Switzerland was ongoing, and no determination could be made on their implementation of the resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 February [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/254 [draft: A/64/L.48 & Add.1] by recorded vote (98-7-31) [agenda item 64].

Second follow-up to the report of the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolution 64/10, adopted on 5 November 2009, in follow-up to the report of the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict,

Recalling also the relevant rules and principles of international law, including international humanitarian and human rights law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Recalling further the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the other human rights covenants, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming the obligation of all parties to respect international humanitarian law and international human rights law,

Reiterating the importance of the safety and well-being of all civilians, and reaffirming the obligations under international law regarding the protection of civilians in armed conflict,

Stressing the need to ensure accountability for all violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law in order to prevent impunity, ensure justice, deter further violations and promote peace,

Convinced that achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, is imperative for the attainment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace and stability in the Middle East,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 4 February 2010, submitted pursuant to paragraph 6 of its resolution 64/10;

2. Reiterates its call upon the Government of Israel to conduct investigations that are independent, credible and in conformity with international standards into the serious violations of international humanitarian and international human rights law reported by the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict, towards ensuring accountability and justice;

3. Reiterates its urging for the conduct by the Palestinian side of investigations that are independent, credible and in conformity with international standards into the serious violations of international humanitarian and international human rights law reported by the Fact-Finding Mission, towards ensuring accountability and justice;

4. Reiterates its recommendation to the Government of Switzerland, in its capacity as depositary of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, to reconvene as soon as possible a Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention on measures to enforce the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to ensure its respect in accordance with article 1, bearing in mind the convening of such a Conference and the statement adopted on 15 July 1999 as well as the reconvening of the Conference and the declaration adopted on 5 December 2001;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, within a period of five months, on the implementation of the present resolution, with a view to the consideration of further action, if necessary, by the relevant United Nations organs and bodies, including the Security Council;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 64/254:

In favour: Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Chile, China, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Finland, France, Gabon, Greece, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Qatar, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Singapore, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Against: Canada, Israel, Micronesia, Nauru, Panama, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Australia, Belarus, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Czech Republic, Georgia, Germany, Guatemala, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Mexico, Montenegro, Netherlands, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, San Marino, Slovakia, Ukraine.

Report of Secretary-General. In March [A/HRC/13/55], pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 785], the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 March [A/HRC/13/56 (res. 13/9)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 29 to 6, with 11 abstentions, called upon all parties to implement the recommendations of the United Nations Fact-Finding Mission. In the context of the follow-up to the report of the Mission, the Council established a Committee of independent experts in international humanitarian and human rights laws to monitor and assess any domestic, legal or other proceedings undertaken by the Government of Israel and the Palestinian side, in the light of General Assembly resolution 64/254 (see p. 786), including the independence, effectiveness and genuineness of those investigations and their conformity with international standards. The Council requested the Committee, the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General to report to the Council in 2011.

Reports of High Commissioner. In August [A/HRC/15/52], the High Commissioner provided information on the implementation of Council resolution 13/9 (see above).

In October [A/HRC/15/52/Add.1], the High Commissioner reported on the advice provided by the Office of Legal Affairs on the modalities for establishing an escrow fund pursuant to Council resolution 13/9.

Reports of Secretary-General. In August [A/64/890], pursuant to Assembly resolution 64/254, the Secretary-General submitted a second follow-up to the report of the Fact-Finding Mission. Annexed to the report were materials provided by Israel, Palestine and Switzerland.

In a September report [A/HRC/15/51] and a later report [A/HRC/16/28], the Secretary-General provided information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Fact-Finding Mission as of 8 December.

Report of Committee of independent experts. In September [A/HRC/15/50], the Committee of independent experts in international humanitarian and human rights laws reported that, due to a lack of cooperation from Israel, its bases of information were insufficient for a definitive assessment. Consequently, the Committee was not in a position to es-establish whether the investigations carried out by Israel met international standards. The Committee pointed out that the dual role of Israel's Military Advocate General to provide legal advice to the Israel Defense Forces with respect to the planning and execution of "Operation Cast Lead" and to prosecute alleged misconduct by soldiers during the operation raised a conflict of interest. There was no indication that Israel had opened investigations into the actions of those who designed, planned, ordered and oversaw "Operation Cast Lead". Israel had not met its duty to investigate the report's charge that officials at the highest levels were complicit in violations.

The Independent Investigation Commission established by the Palestinian Authority had carried out a careful and detailed inquiry into the allegations addressed to the Palestinian Authority. Its report alleged that serious violations were committed by public officials in the West Bank. The Committee concluded that the investigation conformed to international standards and could be considered credible and genuine.

The de facto authorities in Gaza had established two committees of inquiry. The report of the first committee, made up of officials of the de facto Gaza authorities, made no serious effort to address the allegations against the de facto authorities and focused on the allegations directed against Israel. The second report, prepared by three national and three international legal experts, provided some information about the actual measures taken to redress the alleged violations, but did not substantiate assertions that all political prisoners had been released and criminal prosecutions had taken place. The Committee could not conclude that the de facto authorities in Gaza had carried out credible and genuine investigations.

Human Rights Council action. On 29 September [A/HRC/15/60 (res. 15/6)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 27 to 1, with 19 abstentions, urged the Palestinian Independent Investigation Commission to complete its investigations about the allegations relating to the Gaza Strip made by the Fact-Finding Mission, and urged Israel to complete investigations into the serious violations reported by the Mission. The Council renewed the mandate of the Committee of independent experts and requested it to report to the Council in 2011. The High Commissioner was requested to report in 2011 on the implementation of the resolution.

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Development policy and international economic cooperation

Five years away from the agreed target date of 2015 for achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), progress in poverty reduction was unbalanced across regions and threatened in some parts of the world. Despite the financial and economic crisis, the momentum of economic growth in developing countries was strong enough to sustain progress on poverty and to put the world on track to meet the poverty reduction target.

A number of initiatives were under way with a view to accelerating progress towards the MDGs and other internationally agreed development goals. The UN system was advancing the implementation of its nine joint crisis initiatives designed to help countries weather and recover from the economic crisis. A plan of action for the Second United Nations Development Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017) sought to contribute to a system-wide response to the economic crisis and its impact. At the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on MDGs in September, world leaders put forward a road map outlining what was needed to meet the goals by 2015.

The Economic and Social Council focused on a broad range of issues relevant to the implementation of the UN development agenda. The Commission on Sustainable Development reviewed progress in the follow-up to the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development and implementation of Agenda 21, the action plan on sustainable development adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

The Commission's session took place at a crucial time, as the international community was preparing for several high-level meetings, including the High-Level Plenary Meeting on the MDGs, the High-Level Event on a Five-Year Review of the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy, the High-level Event on Biodiversity, as well as the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development to be held in 2012, and the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDC-IV) scheduled in 2011.

The Commission on Science and Technology for Development conducted a five-year review of progress made in the follow-up to the 2003–2005 World Summit on the Information Society. The Committee for Development Policy addressed the impact of global crises on gender equality and the empowerment of women; the international support measures available for least developed countries (LDCs); and UN system support for small island developing States. The Committee of Experts on Public Administration dealt with a review of the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance.

The special problems of the 49 countries designated as least developed were considered in connection with the implementation of the Brussels Declaration and Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 and preparations for LDC-IV. The Committee for Development Policy found that Equatorial Guinea and Maldives were on the path of smooth transition to post-LDC status. Samoa had suffered considerable human and economic losses from the September 2009 Pacific Ocean tsunami, and its economic outlook remained uncertain.

Implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, which addressed the needs of landlocked developing countries, was reviewed by the General Assembly at its 2010 regular session as well as at the Ninth Annual Ministerial Meeting in September on the sidelines of the Assembly session. In September, the General Assembly conducted a high-level review to assess progress made in addressing the problems of small island development States.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

International economic cooperation was considered in 2010 by a number of UN bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. The Assembly, by decision 65/525 of 20 December, took note of the report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/65/434 & Add.1–3] on macroeconomic policy questions, specifically international trade and development, the international financial system and development, and external debt sustainability and development.

At the general segment of its 2010 session, the Council had before it the Secretary-General's report on regional cooperation in the economic, social and related fields [E/2010/15 & Add.1], submitted in response to Assembly resolution 1823(XVII) [YUN 1962, p. 266] and Council resolution 1817(LV) [YUN 1973, p. 449]. The report examined how the different regions were affected by and responded to the global economic and financial crisis, and highlighted lessons learned and how Governments could apply those lessons in order to avoid further impacts from the crises, including on the achievements of the MDGs (see p. 968).

High-level segment of Economic and Social Council

The high-level segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council was held from 28 June to 2 July. It focused on a broad range of issues relevant to the implementation of the UN development agenda. At the annual ministerial review (28 June–1 July), the Council discussed progress made towards implementation of the UN development agenda and on concrete initiatives to accelerate the process, with a special focus on the goals and targets related to gender equality and the empowerment of women. Thirteen countries reported on progress made towards the goals and targets of the UN development agenda. The Development Cooperation Forum (29–30 June) discussed trends in international development cooperation, with a focus on the following aspects: promoting greater coherence; accountable and transparent development cooperation; the role of various forms of cooperation, including South-South and triangular cooperation; the impact of multiple crises; and achieving the MDGs by 2015. At the high-level policy dialogue on 2 July, the executive heads of international financial and trade institutions discussed the state of the world economy and its implications for the achievement of the UN development agenda.

Development Cooperation Forum. On 29 and 30 June, as part of its high-level segment, the Council held the second biennial Development Cooperation Forum. In preparation of the Forum, Austria presented the report [E/2010/98] of a High-level Symposium on the theme “Accountable and transparent development cooperation: towards a more inclusive framework” (Vienna, 12–13 November 2009).

Opening the Forum, the Council President said that the global economic landscape and the global aid architecture had both changed dramatically since the first Development Cooperation Forum in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 902]. In that new context, the Forum had a unique value as a universal and authoritative platform for dialogue. It offered an opportunity to enhance the effectiveness and coherence of development cooperation in the regions that most needed assistance, as well as in countries with pockets of poverty or in fragile and post-conflict situations, and to develop recommendations for achieving the MDGs on the basis of better development cooperation. A summary of the discussions held during the Forum would serve as an input for the negotiations at the High-level Plenary Meeting on MDGs in September (see p. 813), as well as for the Fourth High-level Forum on Aid Effectiveness, to be held in Seoul, Republic of Korea, in 2011.

The Forum considered a June report [E/2010/93] of the Secretary-General on trends and progress in international development cooperation, as requested by General Assembly resolution 61/16 [YUN 2006, p. 1589]. The report summarized progress in the implementation of certain aspects of the global partnership for development and discussed coherence in policies in both developed and developing countries. The report found that crucial development gains made over the past decade or more were beginning to erode as a result of the fundamental change in the global economic environment, which had brought with it a deep economic crisis, increased food insecurity, oil price volatility and climate change. Most areas of the global partnership for development were not living up to expectations and, without measures across the board, development cooperation would have limited impact.

Despite the atmosphere of anxiety and austerity in the global economy, development aid had risen in 2009 and most donors were expected to meet 2010 aid targets. Some countries not members of the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), many of them developing countries, were playing a critical role in delivering support to some of the poorest countries. Increasing support was also coming from foundations, private charities and civil society organizations, but some donors were well short of global commitments and many were likely to renege on pledges to sub-Saharan Africa. Some good work had been done on coherence procedures, but overall progress among OECD-DAC members had been weak and more political engagement was needed. Policies had to support progress towards the MDGs. In order for donors to make larger commitments, they needed clear and reliable information about aid operations and impact on the ground, while recipient countries needed guidance and technical assistance from donors if they were to improve their accountability procedures. The report recommended annual progress assessment, creation of a focal point to share best-practice lessons and full funding of the most useful mechanisms.

In November [E/2010/104], Finland presented to the Council's resumed substantive session the report of the Development Cooperation Forum High-level Symposium on the theme “Coherent development cooperation: maximizing impact in a changing world” (Helsinki, Finland, 3–4 June).

On 30 June, the Council held a special policy dialogue on “The role of women in countries in special situations” in the context of its discussion on the theme “Current global and national trends and challenges and their impact on gender equality and empowerment of women”. On 28 and 30 June and 1 July, the Council held its annual ministerial meeting on the theme “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and empowerment of women”, in accordance with Council decision 2008/258 [YUN 2008, p. 1268]. On 30 June, the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs introduced the report of the Secretary-General under the item [E/2010/4-E/CN.6/2010/2] (see p. 1134). On 2 July, the Council adopted a Ministerial Declaration [E/2010/L.8] of the high-level segment, entitled “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and empowerment of women” (see p. 1136). Also on 2 July, the Council held a high-level policy dialogue with international financial and trade institutions of the UN system on current developments in the world economy.

Communications. On 2 February [A/64/674], Kazakhstan transmitted to the Secretary-General the annual address by President Nursultan Nazarbayev on the implementation of the country’s development strategy until 2020. On 10 March [E/2010/47], Ghana presented to the President of the Council, as a contribution to the annual ministerial review and the Development Cooperation Forum, the Chair’s summary of the discussion of the Commission for Social Development (see p. 1072) on “Emerging issues: policy responses on employment and the social consequences of the financial and economic crisis, including its gender dimension”. On 24 August [A/65/336], Brazil transmitted to the President of the General Assembly a summary report on the conclusions reached at a forum held on the margins of the 2010 Council session, entitled “Feed minds, change lives: school feeding, the Millennium Development Goals and girls’ empowerment”. On 29 September [A/65/486], Yemen transmitted the Ministerial Declaration, adopted at the thirty-fourth annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 and China (New York, 28 September), which highlighted the need for a substantive and comprehensive reform of the international economic and financial system and architecture.

Globalization and interdependence

In response to General Assembly resolution 64/209 [YUN 2009, p. 794], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/272] which reviewed the major international economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development, and the role of the United Nations in addressing these issues in the light of the New International Economic Order declared by the Assembly at its sixth special session [YUN 1974, p. 306]. The report examined the effects of globalization, which had created increasing interdependence, with tremendous opportunities for innovation as well as serious challenges in the uneven distribution of benefits and costs. That heightened the risk of social, economic and environmental shocks spreading from one country to another with adverse effects and increased economic insecurity. The poorest and most vulnerable population of developing countries, in particular, had borne the brunt of external shocks. The transmission of shocks—through channels of reduced trade, remittances, investment and financial flows—had exacerbated inequities associated with globalization, jeopardizing development and human welfare. With aid flows also declining, impacts had been even more devastating for low-income countries and the poor.

The challenge was to realize the potential benefits of globalization while minimizing the considerable costs, risks and vulnerabilities it had created. Nevertheless, the global crises had also provided a rare opportunity for the international community to guide the world economy onto the path of more sustainable economic growth and recovery by simultaneously addressing the problems of food and energy insecurity, climate change and the developmental aspirations of developing countries. That goal could be achieved through inclusive multilateralism and equitable participation of all countries, both developed and developing, as envisioned in the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/438/Add.1], adopted resolution 65/168 without vote [agenda item 22 (a)].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 62/199 of 19 December 2007, 63/222 of 19 December 2008 and 64/210 of 21 December 2009 on the role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Recalling also the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling further its resolution 63/303 of 9 July 2009 entitled “Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development”,

Recalling the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling also its resolution 63/199 of 19 December 2008, in which it took note with interest of the adoption of the International Labour Organization Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome and all its relevant resolutions in the economic, social and related fields, in particular those that have built upon the 2005 World Summit Outcome, including its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 entitled “Follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals”,

Reaffirming the central role of the United Nations in promoting international cooperation for development and policy coherence on global development issues, including in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Reaffirming also the resolve expressed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all,

Recognizing that globalization and interdependence imply that the economic performance of a country is increasingly affected by factors outside its geographical borders and that maximizing in an equitable manner the benefits of globalization requires responses to globalization to be developed through a strengthened global partnership for development to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Reaffirming its strong support for fair and inclusive globalization and the need to translate growth into poverty reduction and, in this regard, its resolve to make the goals of full and productive employment and decent work for all, including for women and young people, a central objective of relevant national and international policies as well as national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, as part of efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

1. Recognizes that some countries have successfully adapted to the changes and have benefited from globalization but that many others, especially the least developed countries, have remained marginalized in the globalizing world economy, and recognizes also that, as stated in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the benefits are unevenly shared, while the costs are unevenly distributed;

2. Reaffirms the need for the United Nations to play a fundamental role in the promotion of international cooperation for development and the coherence, coordination and implementation of development goals and actions agreed upon by the international community, and resolves to strengthen coordination within the United Nations system in close cooperation with all other multilateral financial, trade and development institutions in order to support sustained economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development;

3. Recognizes that the scaling up of successful strategies, policies and approaches in the implementation and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals needs to be complemented by a strengthened global partnership for development;

4. Reaffirms the need to strengthen the central role of the United Nations in enhancing the global partnership for development, with a view to creating a supportive global environment for the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals, including by accelerating efforts to deliver and fully implement existing global partnership for development commitments;

5. Stresses that subregional, regional and interregional cooperation plays an important role in helping developing countries to integrate into the global economy and to achieve their development objectives and the Millennium Development Goals as well as in promoting the global partnership for development;

6. Recognizes that the increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rules-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, that is, the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and international development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations and that it is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space;

7. Notes with concern the continuing high levels of unemployment as a consequence of the global financial and economic crisis, recognizes that decent work remains one of the best routes out of poverty, and in this regard invites donor countries, multilateral organizations and other development partners to continue to assist Member States, in particular developing countries, in adopting policies consistent with the Global Jobs Pact adopted by the International Labour Conference at its ninety-eighth session, as a general framework within which each country can formulate policy packages specific to its situation and national priorities in order to promote a job-intensive recovery and sustainable development;

8. Recognizes that policies which link economic development and social development can contribute to reducing inequalities within and among countries with a view to guaranteeing that the poor and those living in the most vulnerable situations maximize their benefits from economic growth and development;

9. Underlines the fact that, in addressing the linkages between globalization and sustainable development, a particular focus should be placed on identifying and implementing mutually reinforcing policies and practices that promote sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development and that this may benefit from efforts to improve policy coherence for development at the national, regional and international levels;

10. Stresses the need for all countries to harness knowledge and technology and to stimulate innovation if they are to improve their competitiveness, benefit from trade and investment and promote sustainable development, and in this regard underlines the importance of concrete actions to promote the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable technologies and the transfer of such technologies on fair, transparent and mutually agreed terms to developing countries in support of the implementation of their development strategies;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the theme “Globalization and interdependence: sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth for a fair and more equitable globalization for all, including job creation”;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled “Globalization and interdependence”, the sub-item entitled “Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence”.

Also on 20 December, the Assembly, by decision 65/526, took note of the Secretary-General’s report.

New International Economic Order

The Secretary-General in an August report [A/65/272] on major economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development, and the role of the United Nations in addressing these issues, said the world was witnessing the transformation of the international economic order, but hardly along the lines proposed by the 1974 New International Economic Order. The United Nations Development Agenda, derived from United Nations world conferences and summits since the 1990s, reflected some of the spirit of the New International Economic Order and aimed to achieve “development for all”.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/438], adopted resolution 65/167 by recorded vote [126-1-52] [agenda item 22].

Towards a New International Economic Order

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations to promote the economic advancement and social progress of all peoples,

Recalling the principles of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, as set out in resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI), respectively, adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth special session, on 1 May 1974,

Recalling also its resolutions 63/224 of 19 December 2008 and 64/209 of 21 December 2009,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling also the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, including the development goals and objectives contained therein, and recognizing the vital role played by those conferences and summits in shaping a broad development vision and in identifying commonly agreed objectives,

Stressing the need to fulfil all financing for development commitments, including those contained in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and other relevant outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits,

Concerned about the multiple interrelated and mutually exacerbating current global crises, in particular the world financial and economic crisis, volatile energy prices, the food crisis and the challenges posed by climate change, which have a negative impact on the development prospects of developing countries, threaten to further widen the gap between developed and developing countries, including the technological and income gap, and could further undermine the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Underlining the need for a more sustainable economic growth and recovery, and recognizing that this goal can be achieved through inclusive multilateralism and the equal participation of all countries, as envisioned, inter alia, in the Declaration and the Programme of Action,

Recognizing that innovative and enhanced approaches to financing for development are needed to address the challenges posed by the current global economic situation, poverty and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and stressing that these new approaches should neither be a substitute for nor negatively affect the level of traditional sources of development financing, including official development assistance, and that they need to be developed in a spirit of partnership, cooperation and solidarity, bearing in mind the common interests and national priorities of each country,

Recognizing also that many relevant principles contained in the Declaration and the Programme of Action have not been fully realized and that enhanced efforts are needed to minimize the negative effects of globalization on developing countries and to ensure that it works as a positive force for all, in particular for developing countries,

Recognizing further that widespread financial deregulation has contributed to larger net capital outflows from developing countries to developed countries,

Stressing the need for policy space to allow the formulation of national development strategies by developing countries, aimed at bringing prosperity for all,

Reaffirming the need to enhance the voice and participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled “An overview of the major international economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development and of the role of the United Nations in addressing these issues in the light of the New International Economic Order”;

2. Reaffirms the need to continue working towards a new international economic order based on the principles of equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest, cooperation and solidarity among all States;

3. Decides to continue considering the international economic situation and its impact on development, and in that regard requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session, under the item entitled “Globalization and interdependence”, an updated overview of the major international economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development and of the role of the United Nations in addressing these issues, as well as possible ways and means to overcome those challenges, bearing in mind the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields and the principles contained therein, in the light of the relevant principles contained in the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.

New global human order

In an October report [A/65/483], submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/213 [YUN 2007, p. 839], the Secretary-General reviewed the key features of the new global human order that was first discussed in the Assembly at its 2000 session [YUN 2000, p. 782]. The new global human order was intended to promote multilateral approaches to global problems through integrating the economic, environmental, social, cultural and political aspects of development while highlighting its multidimensional character. The report pointed out the common elements that the new global human order shared with the Copenhagen Declaration [YUN 1996, p. 1007] and the UN Millennium Declaration adopted by Assembly resolution 55/2 [YUN 2000, p. 49]. It assessed the implications of inequality for development and reviewed trends in inequality, its causes and implications for economic and social development. The report concluded that there was strong evidence that economic policies such as financial liberalization, privatization and structural adjustment programmes had contributed to increases in income inequality. The promotion of decent and productive employment for all had been identified as a key instrument for addressing inequality within countries; in addition, the structural transformation of labour markets was essential to reduce inequality and poverty, and the transition from lower to higher productivity work required investment in education and training. Labour standards and regulations had to be strengthened if inequality were to be reduced, and policies ensuring that women and men had equal access to decent work and avenues of political participation and influence were essential in that regard.

A pro-poor growth agenda emphasizing agricultural productivity through investment in the agricultural sector could reduce inequality and poverty. Since the majority of the world's poor worked in agriculture, it was essential to increase wages in this sector. Radical land reform in the early phase of development could contribute significantly to the reduction of inequality as well as to the promotion of growth, thus ensuring “shared” growth.

Redistributive measures funded through progressive taxation were associated with greater equality, and redistributive policies such as minimum wages and policies funded through progressive taxation should be implemented. Universal social protection including basic health care, pensions and unemployment insurance could help to insulate those on the lowest level of the income distribution from the worst effects of poverty.

The international community might consider establishing a new international mechanism for equitable development that could support the international coordination of policies to address inequality. Currently, if a Government attempted to implement a new policy aimed at reducing inequality, it was likely to cause capital flight, with the end result of harming that country. Global policy coordination would help overcome that problem. Such coordination had already been achieved by the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Trade Organization (WTO) in respect of environment and trade issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/120 [draft: A/65/L.38 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 16].

The role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/48 of 29 November 2000, 57/12 of 14 November 2002 and 62/213 of 21 December 2007,

Acknowledging that peace and security, development and human rights are the pillars of the United Nations system and the foundations for collective security and well-being and that development, peace and security and human rights are interlinked and mutually reinforcing,

Reaffirming that development is a central goal by itself and that sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental aspects constitutes a key element of the overarching framework of United Nations activities,

Recognizing that the well-being of people and the full development of their potential is pivotal to sustainable development, and convinced of the urgency of international cooperation towards that end,

Deeply concerned about persistent and considerable disparities between rich and poor, both within and among countries, and about the adverse implications of these disparities for the promotion of human development throughout the world,

Stressing the multidimensional nature of inequality and unequal access to social and economic opportunities and their complex interrelationship with efforts to eradicate poverty, promote sustained, inclusive and equitable growth and sustainable development, and the full enjoyment of human rights, especially for those people living in situations of vulnerability,

Concerned by the prevalence of gender inequality in various forms worldwide, which is often expressed in poorer outcomes for women relative to men on many social development indicators,

Considering that inequalities continue to pose major barriers to attaining the Millennium Development Goals and that efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, often take inadequate account of the relationship and impact of inequality on economic and social development,

Recognizing the action already under way by all Member States, the United Nations system and other international, regional and national forums and organizations and the progress made to implement the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the new global human order;

2. Recalls the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome, which includes a broad-based consensus for action that needs to be further strengthened, within a comprehensive and holistic framework towards the achievement of the development goals involving all actors, namely Governments, the United Nations system and other international organizations and relevant actors of civil society, including the private sector, non-governmental organizations and other relevant stakeholders at all levels;

3. Underscores the continued relevance of the outcomes of all major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields and the commitments set out therein, including the Millennium Development Goals, which have raised awareness and continue to generate real and important development gains, have played a vital role in shaping a broad development vision and constitute the overarching framework for the development activities of the United Nations, and strongly reiterates its determination to ensure the timely and full implementation of those outcomes and commitments;

4. Recognizes that the increased pace of globalization and growing interdependence have heightened the importance of international cooperation and multilateralism in meeting global challenges and solving common problems, including those that have arisen from the uneven impact of globalization on development and human well-being;

5. Emphasizes the need to promote human well-being and the full realization of human potential;

6. Reaffirms that national ownership and leadership are indispensable in the development process and that there is no one-size-fits-all approach, and reiterates that each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies, domestic resources and development strategies cannot be overemphasized; domestic economies are now interwoven with the global economic system and, therefore, the effective use of trade and investment opportunities can help countries to fight poverty, and development efforts at the national level need to be supported by an enabling national and international environment that complements national actions and strategies;

7. Also reaffirms the commitment to sound policies, good governance at all levels and the rule of law, to mobilizing domestic resources, fostering international financial flows, assuring long-term investment in human capital and infrastructure, promoting international trade as an engine for economic growth and development and increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development, sustainable debt financing and external debt relief, and to enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems;

8. Recognizes that inequality within and among countries is a concern for all countries regardless of their level of development and that it represents a growing challenge with multiple implications for the realization of economic and social potential and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

9. Also recognizes that attention must be focused on the particular needs of developing countries and on the large and increasing economic and social inequalities that exist, and further recognizes that disparities between developed and developing countries and inequalities between the rich and the poor and between rural and urban populations, inter alia, remain persistent and significant and need to be addressed;

10. Calls upon Member States to continue their ambitious efforts to address inequality;

11. Stresses that, while efforts to promote sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth are necessary for accelerating progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, as well as for promoting sustainable development, they are not sufficient and that growth should enable everyone, in particular the poor, to participate in and benefit from economic opportunities, should lead to job creation and income opportunities and be complemented by effective social policies;

12. Considers that promoting universal access to social services and providing social protection floors can make an important contribution to consolidating and achieving further development gains, and that social protection systems that address and reduce inequality and social exclusion are essential for protecting the gains made towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

13. Encourages greater consideration of the impact of social and economic inequalities in development, including in the design and implementation of development strategies, and in this regard also encourages further analytical and empirical research, in particular by the relevant institutions of the United Nations system, as well as the regional commissions and other national and international organizations;

14. Recognizes the efforts of many countries in addressing inequality, and acknowledges the need for strengthened international efforts to complement national efforts in this area;

15. Also recognizes that regional, subregional and inter-regional cooperation can facilitate the exchange of knowledge and experience and promote the most effective use of resources aimed at achieving human development and reducing inequalities;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to include in the report recommendations on ways and means to address inequality at all levels, in particular within the United Nations framework, as a contribution to ongoing efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-seventh session the item entitled "The role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order".

Industrial development

UNIDO report. By an August note [A/65/220], the Secretary-General transmitted a report on industrial development cooperation, prepared by the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) in accordance with Assembly resolution 63/231 [YUN 2008, p. 908]. The report highlighted trends in industrial development, particularly in the context of the global financial and economic crisis, and examined the extent to which manufacturing in developing countries had withstood the effects of the crisis. It further determined how global trends, including the food and fuel price crises, climate change and globalization, continued to impact on the productive sectors and international trade in manufactures. It also examined the role of industrial development in helping enable those challenges to be met and the MDGs to be achieved. The specific and interlinked roles of green industry, access to modern forms of energy, and energy efficiency were also examined. In addition, the report described the response of UNIDO, as the specialized UN agency mandated to promote sustainable industrial development and international industrial cooperation, including the UNIDO contribution to the New Partnership for Africa's Development (see p. 908).

Statistics compiled by UNIDO led to the conclusion that world manufacturing had been strongly affected by the economic and financial crisis, but that developing countries as a group had continued along the path of growth. China and India were among those that accounted most for such growth, with the broader group of newly industrialized countries proving less resilient to the crisis. Trends in industrial development showed that growth in the productive sectors was providing the main impetus for growth in the wider economy, and for the achievement of the MDGs. However, success in reducing poverty and in achieving growth and the MDGs would depend on how developing countries and the international community reacted to an array of interrelated global megatrends, including the persistence of the food, fuel and financial crises; demographic change; gender equality; globalization; the illicit economy; climate change; and the emergence of green industry. The latter provided developing countries with opportunities to decouple the consumption of materials, water and energy from economic growth; at the same time, it could help reduce poverty by increasing productivity, promoting the founding of new industries and the provision of greater access to global markets, and creating new employment opportunities that supported environmental improvements and resource efficiency.

Access to modern forms of energy and improvements in energy efficiency were in the interest of both developed and developing countries and were essential for the achievement of the MDGs. International consensus should be achieved on delivering the goals elaborated by the Secretary-General's Advisory Group on Energy and Climate Change, namely, the attainment of universal access to modern, affordable and reliable energy by 2030, and an increase in energy efficiency by 40 per cent by the same year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/440/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/175 without vote [agenda item 24 (b)].

Industrial development cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/108 of 19 December 1994, 51/170 of 16 December 1996, 53/177 of 15 December 1998, 55/187 of 20 December 2000, 57/243 of 20 December 2002, 59/249 of 22 December 2004, 61/215 of 20 December 2006 and 63/231 of 19 December 2008 on industrial development cooperation,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome and its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Recalling the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recognizing that industrialization is an essential driver of sustained economic growth, sustainable development and poverty eradication in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and African countries, through, inter alia, the creation of productive employment, income generation and the facilitation of social integration, including the integration of women into the development process,

Stressing the importance of international cooperation to promote equitable and sustainable patterns of industrial development,

Recognizing the role of the business community, including the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the industrial sector, underlining the importance of the benefits of foreign direct investment in that process, and recognizing also in this regard that an enabling domestic environment is vital for mobilizing domestic resources, increasing productivity, reducing capital flight, encouraging the private sector and making effective use of international investment and assistance and that efforts to create such an environment should be supported by the international community,

Recognizing also the important and positive role of small and medium-sized enterprise clusters and organizations in the social and solidarity economy field, including cooperatives, as vehicles for promoting small-scale industry and for the implementation of the development goals in such fields as employment policy, social integration, regional and rural development, agriculture and environmental protection,

Recognizing further the importance of the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms to developing countries and countries with economies in transition as an effective means of international cooperation in the pursuit of poverty eradication and sustainable development,

Noting the important role played by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, including in the development of the public and private sectors, productivity growth, trade capacity-building, corporate social responsibility, environmental protection, energy access, energy efficiency, the promotion of renewable sources of energy and the implementation of energy interconnection initiatives among developing countries,

Noting also that the ongoing programme for change in and organizational renewal of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization aims to enhance its capacity to achieve focused, effective and efficient development results,

Recognizing the important role of international cooperation in promoting the development of small and medium-sized enterprises and their integration into productive chains at the regional and national levels,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the creation of wealth for poverty reduction and support for actions in favour of more vulnerable communities, especially with regard to women, through the development and strengthening of productive capacities in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through the development of the private sector and entrepreneurship, small and medium-sized enterprises and the promotion of agro-industry, enterprise upgrading, training, education and skills enhancement and an enabling environment for the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms, the flow of investments and participation in global supply chains;

3. Also reaffirms the essential contribution of industrial development to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and that industrial development is a key driver of sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth as well as sustainable development, poverty eradication, income generation, greater access to education and health care, and productive employment opportunities in developing countries;

4. Emphasizes the need to promote, in the context of industrial development, gender equality and the empowerment of women at all levels and in decision-making processes;

5. Stresses the importance of access to modern forms of energy and renewable energy, advanced energy technology, including cleaner fossil fuel technologies, and the promotion of energy efficiency for advancing industrial development and achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

6. Emphasizes that, in order to create the right environment for sustainable industrial development, the international community and the private sector should accelerate measures to facilitate the development, transfer and diffusion of environmentally sound technologies, on mutually agreed terms, to developing countries, as appropriate;

7. Also emphasizes that each country must take primary responsibility for its own industrial development and that national efforts should be supported by development partners, as appropriate, and need to be complemented by a rules-based multilateral trading system that facilitates trade and provides opportunities for developing countries to expand their export product mix, by strengthening their capacities and facilitating the structural transformation and diversification of their economies, which can help to promote economic growth and development;

8. Calls for the continuing use of official development assistance for sustainable industrial development, the achievement of greater efficiency and effectiveness of official development assistance resources and industrial development cooperation between developing countries and with countries with economies in transition;

9. Underlines the importance of mobilizing resources for sustainable industrial development at the country level;

10. Calls for the continuing use of all other resources, including private and public resources and foreign and domestic resources, for industrial development in developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

11. Underlines the importance of promoting the creation and development of small and medium-sized enterprises as a strategy to achieve industrial development, economic dynamism and poverty eradication, including through the mobilization of resources and measures to foster social inclusion and to enable cooperatives to effectively compete in their markets, on equal terms with other forms of enterprise, in order to strengthen their positive role and their ability to act as vehicles for building or increasing small and medium-sized enterprises;

12. Recognizes the key role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in promoting sustainable industrial development and in industrial development cooperation, and welcomes its clear programmatic focus on three thematic priorities, namely, poverty reduction through productive activities, trade capacity-building, and environment and energy;

13. Calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to play an active role in implementing General Assembly resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and Assembly resolution 64/289 of 2 July 2010 on system-wide coherence;

14. Welcomes the increased cooperation of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO, the World Trade Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the regional commissions, and invites the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to build and strengthen its partnership with other United Nations organizations having complementary mandates and activities, as well as with other entities, including in the private sector, with a view to achieving greater effectiveness and development impact and promoting increased coherence within the United Nations system;

15. Notes the importance placed by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, inter alia, through its centres for South-South industrial cooperation and through the promotion of various forms of public and private partnerships and the exchange of experience in private sector development, at the global, regional, subregional and country levels;

16. Welcomes the continued support of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the New Partnership for Africa's Development, the African Agribusiness and Agro-industries Development Initiative and other programmes of the African Union aimed at further strengthening the industrialization process in Africa through, inter alia, its role as the convener of the industry, trade and market access cluster of the regional consultation meetings led by the Economic Commission for Africa;

17. Recognizes the importance of industrial development in post-conflict countries, particularly through employment-generating activities and energy access, and encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to assist in these efforts within its mandate, including, where applicable, by providing assistance in the implementation of the integrated peacebuilding strategies of the Peacebuilding Commission;

18. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in participating in productive activities, including in the agro-industrial sector, as well as to strengthen their capacity to engage in international trade through small and medium-sized enterprise development and to help them to meet international product and process standards;

19. Also encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to promote environmentally sound and sustainable production, including through its programmes on cleaner production, industrial water management, industrial energy efficiency and the utilization of efficient, modern and affordable forms of energy for productive use, especially in rural areas, as well as through cooperation with United Nations organizations and other organizations to promote global goals on access to modern forms of energy and on energy efficiency;

20. Further encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to strengthen its delivery of sustainable development and poverty eradication by assisting developing countries and countries with economies in transition, inter alia, by making use of its network of centres, in developing sustainable human and institutional capacities and enhancing international competitiveness;

21. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to strengthen its delivery of sustainable development and poverty eradication and to promote the development of competitive industries in the least developed countries, and in this regard encourages that Organization to assist such countries in building human and institutional capacities, enhancing international competitiveness, promoting investments and technology transfer on mutually agreed terms and developing the agro-industrial, renewable energy, energy efficiency and pharmaceutical sectors;

22. Also encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to develop its effectiveness in each of its four capacities of technical cooperation, research and analysis, normative assistance and global forum activities, with the aim of enhancing the quality of the services it provides to developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sustainable development

In 2010, several UN bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the Commission on Sustainable Development, considered the implementation of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], particularly the Johannesburg Declaration and Plan of Implementation, which outlined actions and targets for stepping up the implementation of Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670]—and of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the Assembly at its nineteenth special session in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

The General Assembly, by decision 64/564 of 13 September, decided to continue to dedicate a specific meeting focused on development, including an assessment of progress over the previous year, of each Assembly session during the debate on the follow-up to the UN Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome, adopted by Assembly resolution 60/1 [YUN 2005, p. 48].

Commission on Sustainable Development

As the main body responsible for coordinating and monitoring implementation of the Summit outcomes, the Commission on Sustainable Development at its eighteenth (review) session (New York, 15 May 2009 and 3–14 May 2010) [E/2010/29] discussed, in line with the multi-year programme adopted by the Council in resolution 2003/61 [YUN 2003, p. 842], the thematic cluster for the 2010–2011 implementation cycle: transport; chemicals; waste management; mining; and a 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns. For its discussion, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General providing an overview of progress towards sustainable development and a review of the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Action [E/CN.17/2010/3]; and reviews of the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Action, pertaining to its thematic cluster, that is, with regard to transport [E/CN.17/2010/4], chemicals [E/CN.17/2010/5], waste management [E/CN.17/2010/6], mining [E/CN.17/2010/7] and a 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns [E/CN.17/2010/8 & Corr.1]. Also before the Commission were discussion papers by major groups pertaining to the thematic cluster items [E/CN.17/2010/11 & Add.1–9] and a report of the Secretary-General on partnerships for sustainable development [E/CN.17/2010/13].

The Commission [dec. 18/1] approved the requests of three intergovernmental organizations—International Lead and Zinc Study Group, International Copper Study Group and International Nickel Study Group—to participate as observers in the work of its session.

The Commission also [dec. 18/2] took note of the Secretary-General's note [E/CN.17/2010/12] on the proposed strategic framework for 2012–2013, subprogramme 4, Sustainable development of programme 7, Economic and social affairs.

Intersessional events. On 3 May, the Commission heard presentations on the outcomes of the following intersessional activities and events: Inaugural Meeting of the Regional 3R (Reduce, Reuse, Recycle) Forum in Asia (Tokyo, Japan, 11–12 November 2009); Workshop on Case Studies in the Sound Management of Chemicals (Geneva, 3–4 December 2009); international expert group meeting entitled “United Nations Forum on Climate Change Mitigation, Fuel Efficiency and Sustainable Development of Urban Transport” (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 16–17 March 2010); and International Consultative Meeting on Expanding Waste Management Services in Developing Countries (Tokyo, 18–19 March 2010).

Regional implementation meetings. The Commission, in 2003, had invited the regional commissions, in collaboration with its secretariat, to consider organizing regional implementation meetings in order to contribute to the work of the Commission. To provide an opportunity for presentation of the outcomes of those five regional meetings [E/CN.17/2010/10 & Add.1–5] and for exchanging experiences on region-specific barriers and constraints, lessons learned and best practices in relation to the thematic clusters of the issues under review, the Commission organized five regional discussions and one cross-regional interactive discussion. Participants highlighted the need to address the gap between policy development and implementation, and many emphasized the continued need for increased technology transfer and capacity-building on the cluster issues, as well as financial support.

High-level segment. The Commission's high-level segment (12–14 May) addressed the five thematic areas under consideration. On 12 and 13 May, respectively, the Commission held parallel round tables on sustainable production and consumption patterns and on managing mining for sustainable development, and on meeting the challenge of transportation needs in the twenty-first century and on strategies for sustainable chemicals and waste management. On 13 May, the Commission held an interactive ministerial dialogue with UN system representatives and heads of the Governing Councils of UN organizations and major groups, and on 14 May, an interactive ministerial discussion took place on the topic “The way forward”.

The Council, on 21 July, by decision 2010/234, took note of the Commission's report and approved the provisional agenda for its nineteenth (2011) session.

Other reports. Other documents issued in 2010, to be addressed during the Commission's 2011 session, included reports of the Secretary-General on policy options and actions for expediting progress in implementation of the five thematic cluster issues for the 2010–2011 implementation cycle: transport [E/CN.17/2011/4]; chemicals [E/CN.17/2011/5]; waste management [E/CN.17/2011/6]; mining [E/CN.17/2011/7]; and a 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns [E/CN.17/2011/8]. Another report [E/CN.17/2011/3] dealt with interlinkages and cross-cutting issues among the thematic clusters.

Trade and Development Board. The theme of the high-level segment at the Trade and Development Board's fifty-seventh session [TD/B/57/8] (see p. 964) was "Towards sustainable recovery". The Board held a substantive discussion with a panel of high-level government representatives and experts, reviewing national and global experiences of the economic and financial crisis, and the effectiveness of the policies that were put in place to help support demand and ward off complete financial collapse.

Implementation of Agenda 21, Programme for Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and Johannesburg Plan of Implementation

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 64/236 [YUN 2009, p. 802], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/298] on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development. He reviewed actions taken by Governments, UN organizations and major groups in advancing the implementation of sustainable development goals and targets, including through partnerships for sustainable development. The report also covered progress in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development to be held in 2012 (see below).

The Secretary-General noted that political commitment to sustainable development had waned, due to its mismatch with existing arrangements and approaches as well as with the economic framework. A third mismatch existed between needs (especially in developing countries) and essential—financial as well as technical—resources, which were mainly in developed countries. Sustainable development implied that all countries viewed development and poverty eradication as a common global agenda, and it required a "development transition", extending the benefits of science and technology to all inhabitants of the planet, just as much as it needed a resource transition (decoupling human welfare from increased resource use) and the demographic transition. The multiple threats seen in recent years, including those to development agendas and the MDGs, as well as the emergence of planetary boundaries, highlighted the urgency of renewed political commitment and decisive action to bring those dimensions together, to integrate environment, development and society.

Implementation of sustainable development principles, goals and policies was continuing at all levels, but the multiple crises had heightened perceptions in policymaking circles and the general public of possible trade-offs among the pillars of sustainable development. That only served to reinforce the importance of taking an integrated and holistic approach, based on an understanding of the interlinkages and synergies among economic, social and environmental goals. Broad participation in implementation of all stakeholders was needed, and a practical focus on specific sectors, problems and solutions should be developed. Hence, the Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly call on Governments, UN organizations and major groups to deepen their commitments to sustainable development by redoubling their efforts to implement Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, and that it call on Governments to continue providing support to the Commission on Sustainable Development.

Preparations for UN Conference on Sustainable Development. By resolution 64/236 [YUN 2009, p. 802], the General Assembly decided to organize in 2012 the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development at the highest possible level, including Heads of State and Government, with the objective of securing "renewed political commitment for sustainable development, assessing the progress to date and the remaining gaps in the implementation of the outcomes of the major summits on sustainable developments, and addressing new and emerging challenges". By the same resolution, the Assembly accepted Brazil's offer to host the conference. In accordance with the Assembly's decision, a preparatory committee was established within the framework of the Commission on Sustainable Development. In order to steer the preparatory process, a Bureau was elected at the first session of the Preparatory Committee (New York, 17–19 May) [A/CONF.216/PC/5]. To underpin its debate, the Committee had before it the Secretary-General's April report [A/CONF.216/PC/2] assessing progress and gaps in the implementation of sustainable development decisions since 1992, as well as providing an analysis of the themes of the Conference.

Substantive discussions at the first session of the Preparatory Committee focused on the objective and thematic areas of the Conference as defined by Assembly resolution 64/236 [YUN 2009, p. 802], notably the green economy in the context of sustainable development and poverty eradication, and institutional framework for sustainable development. On the procedural side, participants met in contact groups to consider how to organize their work in the lead-up to 2012, and discussed the Conference rules of procedure. To advance the preparatory process, the Committee requested the secretariat to prepare a report on progress to date and remaining gaps in the implementation of the outcomes of the major summits in the area of sustainable development, as well as an analysis of the themes of the Conference; and a synthesis report on best practices and lessons learned on the Conference objectives and themes. In addition, it was decided to organize open-ended intersessional meetings for a total duration of not more than six days. A questionnaire had been sent to Member States, the UN system and major groups to collect the information necessary for preparing the reports requested, which would be discussed during the second session of the Preparatory Committee scheduled for 7–8 March 2011.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.1], adopted resolution 65/152 without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/199 of 20 December 2000, 56/226 of 24 December 2001, 57/253 and 57/270 A of 20 December 2002 and 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, as well as its resolution 64/236 of 24 December 2009 and all other previous resolutions on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development,

Recalling also the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”), as well as the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling further the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Declaration and state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Reaffirming the commitment to implement Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including the time-bound goals and targets, and the other internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Reaffirming the decisions taken at the eleventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development,

Recalling that the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation designated the Commission to serve as the focal point for discussion on partnerships that promote sustainable development and contribute to the implementation of intergovernmental commitments in Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation,

Noting with satisfaction that the Commission, at its eighteenth session, undertook an in-depth evaluation of progress in implementing Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, focusing on the thematic cluster of issues, namely, transport, chemicals, waste management, mining and a ten-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns, taking into account their interlinkages as well as addressing the cross-cutting issues, including means of implementation, and identified best practices, constraints and obstacles in the process of implementation,

Reaffirming that eradicating poverty, changing unsustainable patterns of production and consumption and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are overarching objectives of and essential requirements for sustainable development,

Recognizing that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, in particular for developing countries, and that although each country has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and poverty eradication and the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, concerted and concrete measures are required at all levels to enable developing countries to achieve their sustainable development goals as related to the internationally agreed poverty-related targets and goals, including those contained in Agenda 21, the relevant outcomes of other United Nations conferences and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling that the Economic and Social Council should increase its role in overseeing system-wide coordination and the balanced integration of economic, social and environmental aspects of United Nations policies and programmes aimed at promoting sustainable development, and reaffirming that the Commission should continue to be the high-level body responsible for sustainable development within the United Nations system and to serve as a forum for the consideration of issues related to the integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development,

Recognizing that good governance within each country and at the international level is essential for sustainable development,

Noting with appreciation the offer of the Government of Panama to host, in January 2011, the intersessional meeting of the Commission on sustainable consumption and production patterns,

Noting with appreciation also the offer of the Government of Japan to host, in February 2011, the intersessional meeting of the Commission on sustainable waste management and that the Governments of Chile and Morocco hosted, in November 2010, the intersessional senior expert group meeting on the topic "Sustainable development of lithium resources in Latin America: emerging issues and opportunities" and the intersessional consultative meeting on the topic "Solid waste management in Africa" respectively,

Recalling its decision to hold the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development in Brazil in 2012,

Expressing deep concern that the resources available in the Commission trust fund are insufficient to fund the participation of delegates from developing countries, as well as representatives of major groups, in the meetings of the preparatory process of the Conference and in the Conference itself,

1. Takes note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development on its first session;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Reiterates that sustainable development is a key element of the overarching framework for United Nations activities, in particular for achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and those contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

4. Calls upon Governments, all relevant international and regional organizations, the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations funds and programmes, the regional commissions and specialized agencies, the international financial institutions, the Global Environment Facility and other intergovernmental organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates, as well as major groups, to take action to ensure the effective implementation of and follow-up to the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development, and encourages them to report on concrete progress in that regard;

5. Calls for the effective implementation of the commitments, programmes and time-bound targets adopted at the World Summit on Sustainable Development and for the fulfilment of the provisions relating to the means of implementation, as contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

6. Reiterates that the Commission on Sustainable Development is the high-level body responsible for sustainable development within the United Nations system and serves as a forum for the consideration of issues related to the integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development, and underlines the need to further support the work of the Commission, taking into account its existing mandate and the decisions taken at its eleventh session;

7. Emphasizes the importance of a consensus outcome and action-oriented policy sessions;

8. Recalls the decision of the Commission at its eleventh session that activities during Commission meetings should provide for balanced involvement of participants from all regions, as well as for gender balance;

9. Encourages donor countries to support the participation of representatives from developing countries in the nineteenth session of the Commission, inter alia, through contributions to the Commission trust fund;

10. Reaffirms the objective of strengthening the implementation of Agenda 21, including through the mobilization of financial and technological resources, as well as capacity-building programmes, in particular for developing countries, and in this regard invites donor Governments and international financial institutions, together with the international community, to support the efforts of developing countries to overcome barriers and constraints identified during the review year in the thematic cluster of issues, namely, transport, chemicals, waste management, mining and a ten-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns;

11. Also reaffirms the objective of enhancing the participation and the effective involvement of civil society and other relevant stakeholders, as well as promoting transparency and broad public participation, in the implementation of Agenda 21;

12. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to co-ordinate the participation of the relevant major groups in the thematic discussions at the nineteenth session of the Commission and the reporting on the fulfilment of corporate responsibility and accountability with respect to the thematic cluster of issues, in accordance with the provisions of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

13. Reaffirms the need to promote corporate social responsibility and accountability as envisaged by the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

14. Requests the secretariat of the Commission to make arrangements to facilitate the balanced representation of major groups from developed and developing countries in the sessions of the Commission, and in this regard invites donor countries to consider supporting the participation of major groups from developing countries, inter alia, through contributions to the Commission trust fund;

15. Reiterates its invitation to the relevant United Nations funds and programmes, the regional commissions and specialized agencies, the international and regional financial and trade institutions and the Global Environment Facility, as well as the secretariats of the multilateral environmental agreements and other relevant bodies, within their mandates, to actively participate in and to effectively contribute to the work of the Commission at its nineteenth session;

16. Encourages Governments and organizations at all levels, as well as major groups, to undertake results-oriented initiatives and activities to support the work of the Commission and to promote and facilitate the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including through voluntary multi-stakeholder partnership initiatives;

17. Underlines the importance of setting aside, at the nineteenth session of the Commission, adequate time for all activities envisaged in the policy sessions, including negotiations on policy options and possible actions, and in this regard notes the importance of having all required documents, including the draft negotiating document of the Chair, made available for consideration prior to the beginning of the session;

18. Reaffirms its decision to hold the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development in Brazil in 2012;

19. Endorses the recommendations contained in chapter IV, "Organizational and procedural matters: report of Contact Group 1 on the review of the preparatory process, including organizational and procedural matters, leading up to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development in 2012", and annex II to the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference on its first session;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all appropriate support to the work of the preparatory process of the Conference and of the Conference itself and to ensure inter-agency cooperation and effective participation and coherence within the United Nations system, as well as the efficient use of resources, in order to address all the objectives and themes of the Conference;

21. Invites Governments and all relevant stakeholders, including regional commissions, United Nations organizations and bodies, other relevant intergovernmental and regional organizations, international financial institutions and major groups involved in sustainable development, to participate fully and effectively at all levels and to provide ideas and proposals reflecting their experiences and lessons learned as a contribution to the preparatory process of the Conference, as agreed in the preparatory process by Member States;

22. Encourages Governments to actively involve and to coordinate inputs from all national agencies responsible for economic development, social development and environmental protection in their national preparations for the Conference;

23. Encourages the United Nations development system to support, as appropriate, national country preparations for the Conference, upon the request of national authorities;

24. Calls upon international and bilateral donors and other countries in a position to do so to provide voluntary contributions to the Commission trust fund, requests the Secretary-General to make further efforts to use the limited resources in the trust fund in an efficient and effective way in order to enhance the active participation of representatives from developing countries in the preparatory process of the Conference and in the Conference itself, and in this regard encourages the Secretary-General, when using the resources of the trust fund, to prioritize the coverage of economy class air tickets, daily subsistence and terminal expenses;

25. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development", and requests the Secretary-General, at that session, to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including on the progress of the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development.

Human security

Pursuant to paragraph 143 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome and General Assembly resolution 60/1, in which the Heads of State and Government committed themselves to discuss and define the notion of human security, the Secretary-General provided in a March report [A/64/701] an update on developments related to the advancement of human security and taking stock of discussions on human security, its various definitions and its relationship to State sovereignty and the responsibility to protect. The report also outlined the principles and the approach for advancing human security and its application to the current UN priorities. Key human security initiatives by Governments, regional and subregional intergovernmental organizations, as well as UN organizations and bodies, were presented as examples of the reach of that concept and its growing acceptance. The report concluded by identifying the core elements and the added value of human security, and provided recommendations as a follow-up to the commitment contained in the World Summit Outcome.

Human security was based on a fundamental understanding that Governments retained the primary role for ensuring the survival, livelihood and dignity of their citizens. Broadly defined, human security encompassed freedom from fear and freedom from want and freedom to live in dignity. At the United Nations, notable contributions had been made in advancing the human security concept and developments on human security at the global level were similarly reflected in the agendas and policy debates among regional intergovernmental organizations.

The broad understanding of human security was at the centre of the work of the United Nations, the Secretary-General said. With a mandate to address security, development and human rights, the UN system was instrumental in addressing human security issues. The application of the human security concept did not bring additional layers to the work of the Organization, but rather complemented and focused its activities in those areas. At the Secretariat, the United Nations Trust Fund for Human Security (see p. 902) played an important role in addressing human security challenges. The Secretary-General, acknowledging the support by Greece, Japan, Slovenia and Thailand, urged other Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund's valuable work. In concluding, he requested the General Assembly to take into account the added value of the human security concept and to discuss how best to mainstream human security in UN activities; to encourage Member States to give financial support to the work of the Trust Fund; and to request a periodic report on progress in mainstreaming human security in UN activities.

General Assembly debate. At the initiative of the General Assembly President, the Assembly held a debate on the notion of human security on 20 and 21 May [A/64/PV.87–89].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 107], the Assembly adopted resolution 64/291 [draft: A/64/L.61 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 48, 114].

Follow-up to paragraph 143 on human security of the 2005 World Summit Outcome

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its respect for all the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome, especially paragraph 143 thereof,

1. Takes note of the first formal debate, organized by the President of the General Assembly on 20 and 21 May 2010, in which different views on the notion of human security were presented by Member States, including on the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also takes note of the ongoing efforts to define the notion of human security, and recognizes the need to continue the discussion and to achieve an agreement on the definition thereof in the General Assembly;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of the Member States on the notion of human security, including on a possible definition thereof, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session;

4. Decides to continue its consideration of the notion of human security.

Education for sustainable development

By an August note [A/65/279], the Secretary-General transmitted a mid-term review of the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development, 2005–2014, prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/237 [YUN 2004, p. 832]. The report reviewed the work undertaken by UNESCO, the UN system, Member States, civil society organizations and other stakeholders in implementing the Decade and enhancing education for sustainable development, including progress made, obstacles faced and needs arising, and made recommendations to maintain visibility and momentum on the subject between the midpoint and the completion of the Decade. The Decade, which had been declared by Assembly resolution 57/254 [YUN 2002, p. 826], aimed to integrate the principles, practices and values of sustainable development into all aspects of education and learning.

The report concluded that the Decade offered countries the opportunity to rethink and reorient various dimensions of education and skills training so that learners, and their communities, were empowered to imagine and devise sustainable local solutions to development problems. As lead agency and international coordinator, UNESCO was committed to serving as a change agent, through education, to mobilize countries, partners, communities and individuals to implement the Decade, as well as to encourage the UN family to support countries and stakeholders in their efforts to promote its vision and goals. All UN agencies needed to support and engage in activities to promote the ends of the Decade, and countries needed to be in the driver's seat for ensuring its implementation at national level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.8], adopted resolution 65/163 without vote [agenda item 20 (h)].

United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005–2014)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 59/237 of 22 December 2004 and all relevant previous resolutions on the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development,

Acknowledging the importance of education for achieving sustainable development, including in the context of the Millennium Development Goals, Agenda 21, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), the upcoming United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the Education for All initiative,

Recognizing the importance of promoting a holistic approach towards education for sustainable development and the need to reinforce the interdisciplinary linkages of the three pillars of sustainable development, including different branches of knowledge,

Recognizing also the role of education for sustainable development in promoting the eradication of poverty and more sustainable patterns of consumption and production, particularly in the context of the nineteenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, to be held in New York in May 2011,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the mid-Decade review of the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development, 2005–2014, including the areas identified for further action in the remaining half of the Decade;

2. Also takes note of the Bonn Declaration of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization World Conference on Education for Sustainable Development, held from 31 March to 2 April 2009, including the areas identified for further action in the remaining half of the Decade;

3. Recognizes that, while progress has been made in raising awareness of the significance of education for sustainable development, such progress remains unevenly distributed;

4. Encourages the international community to reinforce its collective commitment to raise awareness of the significance of education for sustainable development, including by mobilizing resources, supporting national efforts and establishing processes that will continue beyond the end of the Decade;

5. Encourages Governments to continue implementing the Decade at the international, national and local levels, including by working with all relevant stakeholders, particularly education systems at all levels, introducing, as appropriate, the concept of sustainable development into curricula and cooperating in order to conserve, protect and restore the health and integrity of the Earth's ecosystem;

6. Invites Governments to continue to promote public awareness of and wider participation in the Decade, inter alia, through cooperation with and initiatives engaging civil society and other relevant stakeholders;

7. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as the designated lead agency, to continue its coordination role in promoting the Decade, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations organizations, funds and programmes;

8. Notes that the End-of-Decade World Conference on Education for Sustainable Development will be hosted jointly by the Government of Japan and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in 2014;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to prepare, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations organizations, funds and programmes, a review of the implementation of the Decade for submission to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, under the sub-item entitled "United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development".

Tourism

In August [A/65/275], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO) on the implementation of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism. The Code was adopted by the UNWTO General Assembly in 1999 and acknowledged by General Assembly resolution 56/212 [YUN 2001, p. 752], and consisted of a voluntary, comprehensive set of nine basic principles to guide tourism development with the objective of minimizing the negative impact of tourism on the natural environment, cultural heritage and local communities while maximizing its benefits in promoting sustainable development, including by alleviating poverty.

The report, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 60/190 [YUN 2005, p. 921], noted that 49 member States had implemented the Code into their legislative texts, while 48 had indicated that the principles were being used to guide the development of new laws and regulations. The Code's dissemination had been greatly enhanced through its translation into 43 national or local languages.

Much of UNWTO work was directly or indirectly in line with the Code and its principles. Issues such as climate change; biodiversity; poverty reduction; protection of vulnerable groups; economic and social sustainability of tourism development; empowerment of local and indigenous communities; and access to education, training and decent employment, as well as responsible business practices in the tourism sector constituted important areas of work for UNWTO, its members and tourism stakeholders. As such, the Code had been instrumental in promoting and developing sustainable forms of tourism based on ethical principles.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 65/148 without vote [agenda item 20].

Global Code of Ethics for Tourism

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/212 of 21 December 2001 and 60/190 of 22 December 2005,

Recalling also the Manila Declaration on World Tourism of 10 October 1980, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21 of 14 June 1992, the Amman Declaration on Peace through Tourism of 11 November 2000, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010,

Recalling further the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2010 of the Economic and Social Council, on the theme "Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and empowerment of women”.

Recognizing the important dimension and role of tourism as a positive instrument towards the eradication of poverty, the protection of the environment and the improvement of the quality of life for all people, its potential to make a contribution to sustainable development, especially of developing countries, and its emergence as a vital force for the promotion of international understanding, peace and prosperity,

1. Takes note of the report of the World Tourism Organization on the implementation of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism;

2. Welcomes the work of the World Tourism Organization and its World Committee on Tourism Ethics in the implementation of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism, as adopted by the General Assembly of the World Tourism Organization in 1999, and welcomes the establishment of the permanent secretariat of the Committee in Rome;

3. Encourages the World Tourism Organization, through its World Committee on Tourism Ethics and the permanent secretariat of the Committee, to continue to promote and disseminate the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism and to monitor the implementation of the ethical principles related to tourism by both the public and the private sectors;

4. Welcomes the growing interest among Member States, especially among the States and territories members of the World Tourism Organization, and their increasing institutional and legal commitment towards the implementation of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism, reiterates the invitation to those Member States and other tourism stakeholders, in particular in the private sector, that have not yet done so to introduce, as appropriate, the content of the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism into their relevant laws, regulations, professional practices and codes of conduct, and in this regard recognizes with appreciation those Member States and industry practitioners that have already done so;

5. Recognizes the need to promote the development of sustainable tourism, including non-consumptive tourism and ecotourism, taking into account the spirit of the International Year of Ecotourism, 2002, the United Nations Year for Cultural Heritage, 2002, the World Ecotourism Summit, 2002, the Quebec Declaration on Ecotourism and the Global Code of Ethics for Tourism, in order to increase the benefits from tourism resources for the population in host communities, while maintaining the cultures and the environmental integrity of those communities and enhancing the protection of ecologically sensitive areas and the natural heritage, and to promote the development of sustainable tourism and capacity-building in order to contribute to the strengthening of rural and local communities, taking into account the need to address, inter alia, the challenges of climate change and to halt the loss of biodiversity;

6. Invites States Members of the United Nations and other stakeholders to support the activities undertaken by, inter alia, the World Tourism Organization for the promotion of responsible and sustainable tourism, including in the context of emergency preparedness and response to natural disasters, as well as for capacity-building in order to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, by extending the benefits of tourism to all sectors of society, in particular the most vulnerable and marginalized groups of the population, while minimizing its negative impact;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on developments related to the implementation of the present resolution on the basis of the reports of the World Tourism Organization.

Also on 20 December [meeting 69], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/440], adopted resolution 65/173 without vote [agenda item 24].

Promotion of ecotourism for poverty eradication and environment protection

The General Assembly,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”), the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling further its resolution 53/200 of 15 December 1998 entitled “Proclamation of 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism”,

Stressing that poverty is a multifaceted problem that requires a multifaceted and integrated approach in addressing its economic, political, social, environmental and institutional dimensions at all levels,

Stressing also that ecotourism can, within the framework of sustainable tourism, contribute to the fight against poverty, the protection of the environment and the promotion of sustainable development,

Welcoming the efforts of the World Tourism Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Convention on Biological Diversity to promote ecotourism and sustainable tourism worldwide,

Welcoming also the efforts of the Marrakech Process on sustainable consumption and production, and in particular its task force on sustainable tourism development, as a cross-sectoral example of more sustainable consumption and production practices,

Noting the initiatives launched and the events organized at the subregional, regional and international levels in the field of ecotourism and sustainable development,

1. Recognizes that the development of ecotourism, within the framework of sustainable tourism, can have a positive impact on income generation, job creation and education, and thus on the fight against poverty and hunger, and can contribute directly to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

2. Emphasizes the need to maximize the economic, social and environmental benefits stemming from ecotourism activities in all countries, particularly developing countries, including African countries, the least developed countries and small island developing States;

3. Also emphasizes that ecotourism can contribute to sustainable development, in particular environment protection, and improve the well-being of local and indigenous communities;

4. Recognizes that ecotourism creates significant opportunities for the conservation, protection and sustainable use of natural areas by encouraging local and indigenous communities in host countries and tourists alike to preserve and respect the natural and cultural heritage;

5. Also recognizes the potential of ecotourism to reduce poverty by improving individual livelihoods in local communities and to generate resources for community development projects;

6. Underlines, in this regard, the importance of establishing, at the national level and in accordance with national priorities, appropriate guidelines and regulations for promoting and supporting ecotourism and minimizing its potential negative impact, and encourages Member States to promote investment in ecotourism, in accordance with their national legislation, which may include creating small- and medium-sized enterprises and facilitating access to finance, including through microcredit initiatives for the poor, local and indigenous communities in areas with high ecotourism potential, including rural areas;

7. Also underlines the importance of conducting an environmental impact assessment, in accordance with national legislation, for the development of ecotourism opportunities;

8. Stresses that indigenous cultures, traditions and knowledge, in all their aspects, are to be fully considered, respected and promoted in ecotourism policy development, and underlines the importance of promoting the full participation and involvement of local and indigenous communities in decisions that affect them and of integrating indigenous and local knowledge, heritage and values in ecotourism initiatives, as appropriate;

9. Emphasizes the need for effective measures in the context of ecotourism initiatives to ensure the full empowerment of women, including equal participation of women and men at all levels and in decision-making processes in all areas;

10. Calls upon the United Nations system, in the context of the global campaign for the Millennium Development Goals, to promote ecotourism as an instrument that can contribute to achieving those Goals, in particular the Goals of eradicating extreme poverty and of ensuring environmental sustainability, and to support the efforts and policies of developing countries in this field;

11. Encourages the regional and international financial institutions to provide adequate support to programmes and projects related to ecotourism, taking into account the economic and environmental benefits of such activities;

12. Recognizes the role of North-South cooperation in promoting ecotourism as a means to achieve economic growth, to reduce inequalities and to improve living standards in developing countries, and also recognizes that South-South and triangular cooperation, as complements to North-South cooperation, have potential for promoting ecotourism;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session, in collaboration with the World Tourism Organization and other relevant United Nations agencies and programmes, a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including recommendations on ways and means to promote ecotourism as a tool for fighting poverty and promoting sustainable development.

Eradication of poverty

Second UN Decade for the Eradication of Poverty

In August, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/216 [YUN 2009, p. 809], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/65/230] on the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), proclaimed by the Assembly in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 847]. The report detailed the response of the UN system to the theme of the Decade, “Full employment and decent work for all”, set by the Assembly in resolution 63/230 [YUN 2008, p. 917]. It reviewed current progress, highlighting the system-wide plan of action for the Second Decade, which was endorsed by the High-level Committee on Programmes of the United Nations Chief Executives Board for Coordination in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 809], and presented initiatives and activities by UN organizations in response to the plan of action. The major threat to global poverty eradication efforts during the Second Decade would be the crises and their impacts on employment and decent work opportunities. An effective response would require renewed efforts to enhance policy coherence and cooperation in the UN system. The successful implementation of the goals of the Second Decade, including the system-wide plan of action, required increased efforts and collaboration by Member States, civil society, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and all relevant partners. The Second Decade was an important framework for action to enhance UN system activities in support of national efforts to eradicate poverty, in particular national development strategies, the Secretary-General said. Its aim of coordinating international support for poverty eradication served as a key link in support of the integrated follow-up to the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/440/Add.1], adopted resolution 65/174 without vote [agenda item 24 (a)].

Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/196 of 22 December 1992, 48/183 of 21 December 1993, 50/107 of 20 December 1995, 56/207 of 21 December 2001, 57/266 of 20 December 2002, 58/222 of 23 December 2003, 59/247 of 22 December 2004, 60/209 of 22 December 2005, 61/213 of 20 December 2006, 62/205 of 19 December 2007, 63/230 of 19 December 2008 and 64/216 of 21 December 2009,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by Heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit, as well as the international commitment to eradicate extreme poverty and to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling its resolutions 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals, its resolution 61/16 of 20 November 2006 on the strengthening of the Economic and Social Council and its resolution 63/303 of 9 July 2009 entitled "Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development",

Recalling also its resolution 57/265 of 20 December 2002 on the establishment of the World Solidarity Fund,

Welcoming the poverty-related discussions in the annual ministerial reviews held by the Economic and Social Council, which play an important supporting role in the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017),

Noting with appreciation the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2006 of the Economic and Social Council on creating an environment at the national and international levels conducive to generating full and productive employment and decent work for all, and its impact on sustainable development, and Economic and Social Council resolution 2010/25 of 23 July 2010 entitled "Recovering from the world financial and economic crisis: a Global Jobs Pact",

Recalling the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling also the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly,

Underlining the fact that, in the face of the ongoing adverse impacts of the multiple, interrelated global crises and challenges, such as the financial and economic crisis, the food crisis, volatile energy and commodity prices and climate change, cooperation and increased commitment by all relevant partners, including the public sector, the private sector and civil society, are needed more than ever, and recognizing in this context the urgent need to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Expressing concern that, after the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006) and five years from the 2015 target date of the Millennium Development Goals, while there has been progress in reducing poverty in some regions, this progress has been uneven and the number of people living in poverty in some countries continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority of the most affected groups, especially in the least developed countries and, in particular, in sub-Saharan Africa,

Recognizing that rates of economic growth vary among countries and that these differences must be addressed by, among other actions, promoting pro-poor growth and social protection,

Concerned about the global nature of poverty and inequality, and underlining the fact that the eradication of poverty and hunger is an ethical, social, political and economic imperative of humankind,

Reaffirming that the eradication of poverty is one of the greatest global challenges facing the world today, in particular in Africa and the least developed countries, and underlining the importance of accelerating sustainable broad-based and inclusive economic growth, including full, productive employment generation and decent work,

Recognizing that the mobilization of financial resources for development at the national and international levels and the effective use of those resources are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing also the contributions of South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation to the efforts of developing countries to eradicate poverty and to pursue sustainable development,

Acknowledging that good governance at the national and international levels and sustained and inclusive economic growth, supported by full employment and decent work, rising productivity and a favourable environment, including public and private investment and entrepreneurship, are necessary to eradicate poverty, to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and to realize a rise in living standards and that corporate social responsibility initiatives play an important role in maximizing the impact of public and private investment,

Underlining the priority and urgency given by Heads of State and Government to the eradication of poverty, as expressed in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

1. Reaffirms that the objective of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017) is to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, the follow-up to the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, relating to the eradication of poverty and to coordinate international support to that end;

2. Also reaffirms that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and strategies cannot be overemphasized for the achievement of sustainable development and poverty eradication, and recognizes that increased effective national efforts should be complemented by concrete, effective and supportive international programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty;

3. Calls upon the international community, including Member States, to address the root causes of extreme poverty and hunger;

4. Emphasizes the need to accord the highest priority to poverty eradication within the United Nations development agenda, while stressing the importance of addressing the causes and challenges of poverty through integrated, coordinated and coherent strategies at the national, inter-governmental and inter-agency levels;

5. Reiterates the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting international cooperation for development, which is critical for the eradication of poverty;

6. Calls upon the international community to continue to give priority to the eradication of poverty, and calls upon donor countries in a position to do so to support the effective national efforts of developing countries in this regard, through adequate, predictable financial resources on either a bilateral or a multilateral basis;

7. Stresses the importance of ensuring, at the national, intergovernmental and inter-agency levels, coherent, comprehensive and integrated activities for the eradication of poverty in accordance with the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields;

8. Reaffirms the commitment to promote opportunities for full, freely chosen and productive employment, including for the disadvantaged, as well as decent work for all, with full respect for fundamental principles and rights at work under conditions of equity, equality, security and dignity, and also reaffirms that macroeconomic policies should, inter alia, support employment creation, taking fully into account the social and environmental impact and dimensions of globalization and that these concepts are key elements of sustainable development for all countries and therefore a priority objective of international cooperation;

9. Emphasizes that education and training are among the critical factors in empowering those living in poverty, while recognizing the complexity of the challenge of poverty eradication, and in this regard recognizes the role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in coordinating the Education for All partners and in promoting the development of sector-wide education policies by, inter alia, elaborating pedagogical tools for grass-roots organizations and policymakers;

10. Recognizes the role of other specialized agencies and United Nations funds and programmes, including the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Development Programme, in contributing to international advocacy for eradicating poverty, including through education and training;

11. Reaffirms the need to fulfil all official development assistance commitments, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015 and to reach a level of at least 0.5 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2010, as well as a target of 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to the least developed countries;

12. Welcomes the increasing efforts to improve the quality of official development assistance and to increase its development impact, recognizes that the Development Cooperation Forum of the Economic and Social Council, together with recent initiatives such as the high-level forums on aid effectiveness, which produced the 2005 Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness and the 2008 Accra Agenda for Action, make important contributions to the efforts of those countries which have made commitments to them, including through the adoption of the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization and managing for results, and bears in mind that there is no one-size-fits-all formula that will guarantee effective assistance and that the specific situation of each country needs to be fully considered;

13. Resolves to work to operationalize the World Solidarity Fund established by the General Assembly, invites Member States, international organizations, the private sector, relevant institutions, foundations and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the Fund, and requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the present resolution information on measures taken to better operationalize the Fund and recommendations in that regard;

14. Recognizes that sustained and inclusive economic growth is essential for eradicating poverty and hunger, in particular in developing countries, and stresses that national efforts in this regard should be complemented by an enabling international environment;

15. Calls upon Member States to continue their ambitious efforts to strive for more inclusive, equitable, balanced, stable and development-oriented sustainable socio-economic approaches to overcoming poverty and inequality;

16. Recognizes the appointment of the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs as the coordinator for the Second Decade;

17. Reiterates its call to the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to consider activities to implement the Second Decade, in consultation with Member States and other relevant stakeholders;

18. Recalls the inter-agency system-wide plan of action for poverty eradication involving more than twenty-one agencies, funds, programmes and regional commissions, and requests the Secretary-General to provide details on the implementation of the plan of action to Member States;

19. Reaffirms the need to give the highest priority to its consideration of the question of poverty eradication, and in that regard recalls its decision, in resolution 63/230, as a contribution to the Second Decade, to convene, at its

sixty-eighth session, a meeting of the General Assembly at the highest appropriate political level centred on the review process devoted to the theme relating to the issue of poverty eradication, and stresses that the meeting and the preparatory activities should be carried out within the budget level proposed by the Secretary-General for the biennium 2012–2013 and should be organized in the most effective and efficient manner;

20. Calls upon Member States to continue to support the theme “Full employment and decent work for all” for the Second Decade;

21. Notes with concern the continuing high levels of unemployment as a consequence of the global financial and economic crisis, recognizes that decent work remains one of the best routes out of poverty, and in this regard invites donor countries, multilateral organizations and other development partners to continue to assist Member States, in particular developing countries, in adopting policies consistent with the Global Jobs Pact adopted by the International Labour Conference at its ninety-eighth session, as a general framework within which each country can formulate policy packages specific to its situation and national priorities in order to promote a job-intensive recovery and sustainable development;

22. Urges the international community, including the United Nations system, to implement the outcome documents relating to the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

23. Also urges the international community, including the United Nations system, to implement the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development in support of the objectives of the Second Decade;

24. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates and resources, to support Member States, at their request, in strengthening their macroeconomic policy capacity and national development strategies so as to contribute to achieving the objectives of the Second Decade;

25. Encourages greater inter-agency convergence and collaboration within the United Nations system in sharing knowledge, promoting policy dialogue, facilitating synergies, mobilizing funds, providing technical assistance in the key policy areas underlying the decent work agenda and strengthening system-wide policy coherence on employment issues, including by avoiding duplication of effort;

26. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled “Eradication of poverty and other development issues”, the sub-item entitled “Implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017)”, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Microcredit and microfinance in the eradication of poverty

In an August report [A/65/267], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 63/229 [YUN 2008, p. 921], the Secretary-General assessed the benefits and limitations of microcredit and microfinance as a poverty eradication strategy, reviewed the impact of the financial and economic crisis on microfinance and addressed measures that Governments were taking to improve the delivery of microfinance services and to build inclusive financial systems. The report underscored the contributions of microfinance to reducing vulnerability among people living in poverty by smoothing consumption and generating self-employment, which could play a social protection role. The impact of microfinance might be reflected less in income measures than in broader dimensions of poverty, such as access to health or education. That perspective highlighted the need to complement microfinance services with other development strategies focused on building human capital and creating an enabling environment to maximize the poverty eradication potential of microfinance.

In the wake of the financial and economic crisis, the fundamentals of microfinance might offer lessons for a new, more stable financial model. With the world's attention focused on financial policy reform, Governments should seize the opportunity to extend access to financial services and policies should provide for regulatory frameworks that permitted diverse institutions and bank agents to deliver varied and innovative financial services. Additional measures should include regularly collecting and managing data on financial access, developing sound market infrastructures and promoting financial literacy. Electronic government-to-person payments might be considered as a cost-effective means to increase financial access. Financial inclusion policies should be developed in coordination with other social, economic and environmental policies to ensure adequate attention to and investment in areas such as health care, energy, education and livelihood skills, technology and transport, which complemented and supported the positive effects and potential of microfinance.

The report recommended that Governments adapt regulatory frameworks to expand the range of institutions permitted to provide savings and other non-lending services by providing for proportional supervision so as to enhance competition and widen financial access for people living in poverty; expand regulatory frameworks to enable agent banking, with a view to supporting the scaling-up of branchless banking; establish clear reporting guidelines for regulated financial institutions while supporting the development of and coordination with an effective market infrastructure, including in particular credit bureaus, to facilitate the availability of regular and accurate market data for use in product development and regulation; expand partnerships and coordinated investment in employment and in the development of entrepreneurial skills and infrastructure as key means of enhancing microfinance outcomes among excluded households and enterprises; develop mechanisms to strengthen financial policy coordination to improve responses to complex and interlinked development challenges, including poverty, climate change and social exclusion; strengthen support to local and community banks and to financial literacy programmes, and promote know-your-client principles so as to ensure long-term financial sustainability; and encourage empirical research into the impact of microcredit and microfinance on accelerating poverty reduction and expanding social protection, including improved data collection.

The General Assembly took note of that report by decision 65/528 of 20 December.

Millennium Development Goals

The Millennium Development Goals Report 2010, published by DESA [Sales No. E.10.1.7 & Add.1,2] and based on data available as at June, summarized the progress made in various regions on official MDG indicators. According to the report, data and analysis provided clear evidence that targeted interventions, sustained by adequate funding and political commitment, had resulted in rapid progress in some areas, while unmet commitments, inadequate resources, lack of focus and accountability, and insufficient dedication to sustainable development, aggravated by the global food and economic and financial crises, had created shortfalls in others, and the poorest groups, those without education or living in remote areas, had been neglected.

Nevertheless, the economic growth momentum in developing regions remained strong and, given the many successes of even the most challenged countries, achieving the MDGs was still within grasp. Progress on poverty reduction was being made, despite significant setbacks due to the 2008–2009 economic downturn and food and energy crises. The developing world as whole remained on track to achieve the poverty reduction target by 2015. Major advances had been made in getting children into school in many of the poorest countries, most of them in sub-Saharan Africa, and remarkable improvements in key interventions had cut child deaths from 12.5 million in 1990 to 8.8 million in 2008. The rate of deforestation, although still alarmingly high, appeared to have slowed, and increased use of improved water sources in rural areas narrowed the gap with urban areas. Other advances concerned the number of people receiving antiretroviral therapy, accelerated delivery of malaria interventions, and mobile telephone use for m-banking, disaster management and other non-voice applications for development.

Nevertheless, progress was uneven and without a major push forward, many of the MDG targets were likely to be missed in most regions. Old and new challenges threatened to further slow progress in some areas or even undo successes achieved. The most severe impact of climate change was being felt by vulnerable populations who had contributed least to the problem. The risk of death or disability and economic loss due to natural disasters was increasing globally and was concentrated in poorer countries. Armed conflict remained a major threat to human security and to hard-won MDG gains. Large populations of refugees remained in camps with limited opportunities to improve their lives. The number of undernourished people had continued to grow, while progress in reducing the prevalence of hunger stalled, or even reversed itself in some regions. The effects of the global financial crisis were likely to persist and poverty rates were expected to be higher. In the areas of gender equality and the empowerment of women, progress had been sluggish on all fronts, from education to access to political decision-making.

Achieving the MDGs would also require increased attention to those most vulnerable. Policies and interventions would be needed to eliminate the inequalities between the rich and the poor, between those living in rural or remote areas or in slums versus better-off urban populations, and to help those disadvantaged by geographic location, sex, age, disability or ethnicity. Looking towards 2015, the MDGs were still attainable; the critical question was how to transform the pace of change during the past decade into dramatically faster progress. The experience of the last ten years offered ample evidence of what worked and provided tools for achieving the MDGs by 2015.

Report of Secretary-General. A June report of the Secretary-General on regional cooperation in the economic, social and related fields [E/2010/15] (see p. 968), submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1823(XVII) [YUN 1962, p. 266] and Economic and Social Council resolution 1817(LV) [YUN 1973, p. 449], examined progress by different regions towards the MDGs and lessons learned from the global economic and financial crisis to address fallbacks, and suggested measures to accelerate the process of achieving the MDGs.

High-level Plenary Meeting on MDGs

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 64/184 [YUN 2009, p. 1375], Heads of State and Government gathered at UN Headquarters (New York, 20–22 September) for a High-level Plenary Meeting on the MDGs. By adopting an outcome document entitled “Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals”, world leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the MDGs and called for intensified collective action and the expansion of successful approaches. They called for action to ensure equal access by women and girls to education, basic services, health care, economic opportunities and decision-making, recognizing that achieving the MDGs depended largely on women's empowerment. World leaders also stressed that accelerated action on the goals required sustainable, inclusive and equitable economic growth—growth that enabled everyone to benefit from progress and share in economic opportunities. To accelerate progress towards the MDGs, the Secretary-General launched at the meeting the Global Strategy for Women's and Children's Health (see p. 1140).

Report of Secretary-General. The High-level Plenary Meeting had before it a February report of the Secretary-General [A/64/665] on progress made in achieving the MDGs, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/184. In the report, the Secretary-General suggested an action agenda from 2011 to 2015, by creating the policy and fiscal space to accelerate and sustain progress; expanding global partnership in support of the MDG agenda; and harnessing private sector potential for sustainable development. The Secretary-General set out five key principles for the actions of individuals, organizations, private companies and Governments: national ownership and leadership, complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies that aligned with national priorities and respected national sovereignty, were essential; the interdependence of human rights, gender equality, governance, development, and peace and security must be recognized to attain success and sustainability; the need to look at the MDGs through a gender lens was critical and all of the action areas needed to include specific strategies for tackling challenges faced by girls and women; the norms and values embedded in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] and international human rights instruments must provide the foundation for engagement; and the need to empower the poor through scaled-up efforts focused on citizen monitoring of MDG delivery, capacity-building and improving access to financial and legal services remained crucial.

Communications. By a 26 March letter [A/65/75], the Chair of the forty-third session of the Commission on Population and Development (see p. 1052) brought to the attention of the General Assembly President the work of the Commission at its forty-second session in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1045], which had considered as its special theme the contribution of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955] to the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs, and had adopted a resolution on the topic [YUN 2009, p. 1047]. By a 9 July note [A/65/117], prepared pursuant to resolution 64/184 [YUN 2009, p. 1375], the General Assembly President transmitted the summary of informal interactive hearings with representatives of NGOs, civil society organizations and the private sector (New York, 14–15 June). By a 3 September letter [A/65/360], China transmitted the Kunming Declaration of Poverty Alleviation, adopted at the Conference on Poverty Alleviation (Kunming, China, 13–18 July) of the International Conference of Asian Political Parties, as a contribution to the High-level Plenary Meeting. By a 16 September letter [A/65/525], Australia presented a declaration entitled "Advance global health: achieve the Millennium Development Goals", adopted at the sixty-third annual Conference of the UN Department of Public Information for Non-Governmental Organizations (Melbourne, Australia, 1 September). By a 15 September letter [A/65/384], Cuba transmitted the third national report on its progress in achieving the MDGs. On 27 September [A/65/508], the African Union (AU) transmitted the statement made by the Chairperson of the AU Commission at the High-level Plenary Meeting. By a 6 October letter [A/65/501], Madagascar, referring to its decision to decline the podium during the general debates of the High-level Plenary Meeting and of the Assembly session, transmitted the text of two statements its Minister for Foreign Affairs would have delivered on 22 and 29 September, respectively. Madagascar explained it had taken that decision not only with a view to preventing counterproductive statements, but also in order to preserve the peaceful unfolding of the Assembly. On 30 November [A/65/599], Namibia transmitted a statement by the 123rd Assembly of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (Geneva, October), endorsing the statement by the General Assembly President on the MDGs.

Intersessional panel meeting. The intersessional panel of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development was held in Geneva (15–17 December) [E/CN.16/2011/CRP.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 September [meeting 121], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/299 [draft: A/64/L.72] without vote [agenda items 48 & 114].

Draft outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 63/302 of 9 July 2009 and 64/184 of 21 December 2009,

Recalling also its decision 64/555 of 15 April 2010,

Decides to refer the draft outcome document annexed to the present resolution to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, to be held from 20 to 22 September 2010, for its consideration.

ANNEX

Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 65/1 below.]

On 22 September [meeting 9], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/1 [draft: A/65/L.1] without vote [agenda items 13 & 115].

Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals*The General Assembly*

Adopts the following outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals at its sixty-fifth session:

Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals

1. We, Heads of State and Government, gathered at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 20 to 22 September 2010, welcome the progress made since we last met here in 2005, while expressing deep concern that it falls far short of what is needed. We reaffirm our resolve to work together for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples, recalling the development goals and commitments emanating from the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome.

2. We reaffirm that we continue to be guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and with full respect for international law and its principles.

3. We also reaffirm the importance of freedom, peace and security, respect for all human rights, including the right to development, the rule of law, gender equality and an overall commitment to just and democratic societies for development.

4. We underscore the continued relevance of the outcomes of all major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields and the commitments contained therein, including the Millennium Development Goals, which have raised awareness and continue to generate real and important development gains. Together these outcomes and commitments have played a vital role in shaping a broad development vision and constitute the overarching framework for the development activities of the United Nations. We strongly reiterate our determination to ensure the timely and full implementation of these outcomes and commitments.

5. We recognize that progress, including in poverty eradication, is being made despite setbacks, including setbacks caused by the financial and economic crisis. In this context, we recognize the deeply inspiring examples of progress made by countries in all regions of the world through cooperation, partnerships, actions and solidarity. We are deeply concerned, however, that the number of people living in extreme poverty and hunger surpasses one billion and that inequalities between and within countries remain a significant challenge. We are also deeply concerned about the alarming global levels of maternal and child mortality. We believe that eradication of poverty and hunger, as well as combating inequality at all levels, is essential to create a more prosperous and sustainable future for all.

6. We reiterate our deep concern at the multiple and interrelated crises, including the financial and economic crisis, volatile energy and food prices and ongoing concerns over food security, as well as the increasing challenges posed by climate change and the loss of biodiversity, which have increased vulnerabilities and inequalities and have adversely affected development gains, in particular in developing countries. But this will not deter us in our efforts to make the Millennium Development Goals a reality for all.

7. We are determined to collectively advance and strengthen the global partnership for development, as the centrepiece of our cooperation, in the years ahead. The global partnership has been reaffirmed in the Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus.

8. We are committed to making every effort to achieve the Millennium Development Goals by 2015, including through actions, policies and strategies defined in the present outcome document in support of developing countries, in particular those countries that are lagging most behind and those Goals that are most off track, thus improving the lives of the poorest people.

9. We are convinced that the Millennium Development Goals can be achieved, including in the poorest countries, with renewed commitment, effective implementation and intensified collective action by all Member States and other relevant stakeholders at both the domestic and international levels, using national development strategies and appropriate policies and approaches that have proved to be effective, with strengthened institutions at all levels, increased mobilization of resources for development, increased effectiveness of development cooperation and an enhanced global partnership for development.

10. We reaffirm that national ownership and leadership are indispensable in the development process. There is no one size fits all. We reiterate that each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies, domestic resources and development strategies cannot be overemphasized. At the same time, domestic economies are now interwoven with the global economic system and, therefore, an effective use of trade and investment opportunities can help countries to fight poverty. Development efforts at the national level need to be supported by an enabling national and international environment that complements national actions and strategies.

11. We acknowledge that good governance and the rule of law at the national and international levels are essential for sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty and hunger.

12. We recognize that gender equality, the empowerment of women, women's full enjoyment of all human rights and the eradication of poverty are essential to economic and social development, including the achievement of all the Millennium Development Goals. We reaffirm the need for the full and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. Achieving gender equality and empowerment of women is both a key development goal and an important means for achieving all of the Millennium Development Goals. We welcome the establishment of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), and pledge our full support for its operationalization.

13. We acknowledge that peace and security, development and human rights are the pillars of the United Nations system and the foundations for collective security and well-being. We recognize that development, peace and security and human rights are interlinked and mutually reinforcing. We reaffirm that our common fundamental values, including freedom, equality, solidarity, tolerance, respect for all human rights, respect for nature and shared responsibility, are essential for achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

14. We are convinced that the United Nations, on the basis of its universal membership, legitimacy and unique mandate, plays a vital role in the promotion of international cooperation for development and in supporting the acceleration of the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. We reaffirm the need for a strong United Nations to meet the challenges of the changing global environment.

15. We recognize that all the Millennium Development Goals are interconnected and mutually reinforcing. We therefore underline the need to pursue these Goals through a holistic and comprehensive approach.

16. We acknowledge the diversity of the world and recognize that all cultures and civilizations contribute to the enrichment of humankind. We emphasize the importance of culture for development and its contribution to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

17. We call on civil society, including non-governmental organizations, voluntary associations and foundations, the private sector and other relevant stakeholders at the local, national, regional and global levels, to enhance their role in national development efforts as well as their contribution to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015, and we commit ourselves as national Governments to the inclusion of these stakeholders.

18. We acknowledge the role of national parliaments in furthering the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015.

A mixed story: successes, uneven progress, challenges and opportunities

19. We recognize that developing countries have made significant efforts towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals and have had major successes in realizing some of the targets of the Millennium Development Goals. Successes have been made in combating extreme poverty, improving school enrolment and child health, reducing child deaths, expanding access to clean water, improving prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV, expanding access to HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment and care, and controlling malaria, tuberculosis and neglected tropical diseases.

20. We acknowledge that much more needs to be done in achieving the Millennium Development Goals as progress has been uneven among regions and between and within countries. Hunger and malnutrition rose again from 2007 through 2009, partially reversing prior gains. There has been slow progress in reaching full and productive employment and decent work for all, advancing gender equality and the empowerment of women, achieving environmental sustainability and providing basic sanitation, and new HIV infections still outpace the number of people starting treatment. In particular, we express grave concern over the slow progress being made in reducing maternal mortality and improving maternal and reproductive health. Progress on other Millennium Development Goals is fragile and must be sustained to avoid reversal.

21. We underline the central role of the global partnership for development and the importance of Goal 8 in achieving the Millennium Development Goals. We recognize that without substantial international support, several of the Goals are likely to be missed in many developing countries by 2015.

22. We are deeply concerned about the impact of the financial and economic crisis, the worst since the Great Depression. It has reversed development gains in many developing countries and threatens to seriously undermine the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015.

23. We take note of the lessons learned and the successful policies and approaches in the implementation and achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and recognize that with increased political commitment these could be replicated and scaled up for accelerating progress, including by:

(a) Strengthening national ownership and leadership of development strategies;

(b) Adopting forward-looking, macroeconomic policies that promote sustainable development and lead to sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, increase productive employment opportunities and promote agricultural and industrial development;

(c) Promoting national food security strategies that strengthen support for smallholder farmers and contribute to poverty eradication;

(d) Adopting policies and measures oriented towards benefiting the poor and addressing social and economic inequalities;

(e) Supporting participatory, community-led strategies aligned with national development priorities and strategies;

(f) Promoting universal access to public and social services and providing social protection floors;

(g) Improving capacity to deliver quality services equitably;

(h) Implementing social policies and programmes, including appropriate conditional cash-transfer programmes, and investing in basic services for health, education, water and sanitation;

(i) Ensuring the full participation of all segments of society, including the poor and disadvantaged, in decision-making processes;

(j) Respecting, promoting and protecting all human rights, including the right to development;

(k) Increasing efforts to reduce inequality and eliminate social exclusion and discrimination;

(l) Enhancing opportunities for women and girls and advancing the economic, legal and political empowerment of women;

(m) Investing in the health of women and children to drastically reduce the number of women and children who die from preventable causes;

(n) Working towards transparent and accountable systems of governance at the national and international levels;

(o) Working towards greater transparency and accountability in international development cooperation, in both donor and developing countries, focusing on adequate and predictable financial resources as well as their improved quality and targeting;

(p) Promoting South-South and triangular cooperation, which complement North-South cooperation;

(q) Promoting effective public-private partnerships;

(r) Expanding access to financial services for the poor, especially poor women, including through adequately funded microfinance plans, programmes and initiatives supported by development partners;

(s) Strengthening statistical capacity to produce reliable disaggregated data for better programmes and policy evaluation and formulation.

24. We recognize that the scaling-up of the successful policies and approaches outlined above will need to be complemented by a strengthened global partnership for development, as set out in the action agenda below.

25. We take note of the first formal debate organized by the President of the General Assembly in which different views on the notion of human security were presented by Member States, as well as the ongoing efforts to define the notion of human security, and recognize the need to continue the discussion and to achieve an agreement on the definition of human security in the General Assembly.

26. We recognize that climate change poses serious risks and challenges to all countries, especially developing countries. We commit ourselves to addressing climate change in accordance with the principles and provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities. We maintain the Framework Convention as the primary international, intergovernmental forum for negotiating the global response to climate change. Addressing climate change will be of key importance in safeguarding and advancing progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

27. We recognize that attention must be focused on the particular needs of developing countries and on the large and increasing economic and social inequalities. Disparities between developed and developing countries and inequalities between the rich and the poor, and between rural and urban populations, inter alia, remain persistent and significant and need to be addressed.

28. We recognize that policies and actions must focus on the poor and those living in the most vulnerable situations, including persons with disabilities, so that they may benefit from progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals. In this respect, there is a particular need to provide more equitable access to economic opportunities and social services.

29. We recognize the urgency of paying attention to the many developing countries with specific needs, and the unique challenges they confront in achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

30. We acknowledge that the least developed countries face significant constraints and structural impediments in their development efforts. We express grave concern that the least developed countries are lagging behind in meeting internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. In that context, we call for continued implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 and look forward to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2011, which would further invigorate the international partnership to address the special needs of these countries.

31. We reiterate our recognition of the special needs of and challenges faced by the landlocked developing countries, caused by their lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness from world markets and also the concern that the economic growth and social well-being of landlocked developing countries remain very vulnerable to external shocks. We stress the need to overcome these vulnerabilities and build resilience. We call for the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, as reaffirmed in the Declaration of the high-level meeting of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action.

32. We recognize the unique and particular vulnerabilities of small island developing States and reaffirm our commitment to take urgent and concrete action to address those vulnerabilities through the full and effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States. We also recognize that the adverse effects of climate change and sea-level rise present significant risks to the sustainable development of small island developing States. We note the uneven progress of small island developing States in achieving the Millennium Development Goals and express concern that progress in some areas has been lagging. In this regard, we welcome the five-year high-level review of the Mauritius Strategy to be conducted on 24 and 25 September 2010 to assess progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States.

33. We recognize that more attention should be given to Africa, especially those countries most off track to achieve the Millennium Development Goals by 2015. Progress has been made in some African countries, but the situation in others remains a grave concern, not least because the continent is among the hardest hit by the financial and economic crisis. We note that aid to Africa has increased in recent years; however, it still lags behind the commitments that have been made. We therefore strongly call for the delivery of those commitments.

34. We recognize also the specific development challenges of middle-income countries. These countries face unique challenges in their efforts to achieve their national development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals. We also reiterate that their efforts in that regard should be based on national development plans that integrate the Millennium Development Goals and should be adequately supported by the international community, through various forms, taking into account the needs and the capacity to mobilize domestic resources of these countries.

35. We acknowledge that disaster risk reduction and increasing resilience to all types of natural hazards, including geological and hydro-meteorological hazards, in developing countries, in line with the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, can have multiplier effects and accelerate achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. Reducing vulnerabilities to these hazards is therefore a high priority for developing countries. We recognize that small island developing States continue to grapple with natural disasters, some of increased intensity, including as a result of the effects of climate change, impeding progress towards sustainable development.

The way forward: an action agenda for achieving the Millennium Development Goals by 2015

36. We resolve to promote and strengthen national ownership and leadership of development as a key determinant of progress in achieving the Millennium Development Goals, with each country taking the primary responsibility for its own development. We encourage all countries to continue to design, implement and monitor development strategies tailored to their specific situations, including through broad consultations and participation of all relevant stakeholders, as appropriate for each national context. We call on the United Nations system and other development actors to support the design and implementation of these strategies, at the request of Member States.

37. We recognize that the increasing interdependence of national economies in a globalizing world and the emergence of rules-based regimes for international economic relations have meant that the space for national economic policy, that is, the scope for domestic policies, especially in the areas of trade, investment and international development, is now often framed by international disciplines, commitments and global market considerations. It is for each Government to evaluate the trade-off between the benefits of accepting international rules and commitments and the constraints posed by the loss of policy space.

38. We reaffirm the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development in their entirety, and their integrity and holistic approach, and recognize that mobilizing financial resources for development and the effective use of all those resources are central to the global partnership for development, including in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals.

39. We call for the expeditious delivery of commitments already made by developed countries in the context of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development. Short-term liquidity, long-term development financing and grants, in accordance with these commitments, will be utilized to assist developing countries to adequately respond to their development priorities. In our common pursuit of growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development, a critical challenge is to ensure the necessary internal conditions for mobilizing domestic resources, both public and private, sustaining adequate levels of productive investment and increasing human capacity. Private international capital flows, particularly foreign direct investment, along with international financial stability, are vital complements to national and international development efforts.

40. We stress the need for further reform and modernization of the international financial institutions to better enable them to respond to and prevent financial and economic emergencies, effectively promote development and better serve the needs of Member States. We reaffirm the importance of enhancing the voice and representation of developing countries in the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, and note the reforms undertaken by the World Bank and the progress made by the International Monetary Fund in that direction.

41. We call for increased efforts at all levels to enhance policy coherence for development. We affirm that achievement of the Millennium Development Goals requires mutually supportive and integrated policies across a wide range of economic, social and environmental issues for sustainable development. We call on all countries to formulate and implement policies consistent with the objectives of sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development.

42. We reiterate the important role of trade as an engine of growth and development and its contribution to the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals. We emphasize the need to resist protectionist tendencies and to rectify any trade distorting measures already taken that are inconsistent with World Trade Organization rules, recognizing the right of countries, in particular developing countries, to fully utilize their flexibilities consistent with their World Trade Organization commitments and obligations. The early and successful conclusion of the Doha Round with a balanced, ambitious, comprehensive and development-oriented outcome would provide much needed impetus to international trade and contribute to economic growth and development.

43. We stress that promoting sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth is necessary for accelerating progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, as well as for promoting sustainable development, but it is not sufficient: growth should enable everyone, in particular the poor, to participate in and benefit from economic opportunities and should lead to job creation and income opportunities and be complemented by effective social policies.

44. We commit ourselves to redoubling our efforts to reduce maternal and child mortality and improve the health of women and children, including through strengthened national health systems, efforts to combat HIV/AIDS, improved nutrition, and access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation, making use of enhanced global partnerships. We stress that accelerating progress on the Millennium Development Goals related to health is essential for making headway also with the other Goals.

45. We reiterate our commitment to ensure that by 2015 children everywhere, boys and girls alike, will be able to complete a full course of primary education.

46. We emphasize the importance of addressing energy issues, including access to affordable energy, energy efficiency and sustainability of energy sources and use, as part of global efforts for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and the promotion of sustainable development.

47. We recognize the importance of developing economic and social infrastructure and productive capacities for sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, particularly in developing countries, bearing in mind the need to enhance employment and income opportunities for all, with a special focus on the poor.

48. We stress the need to create full and productive employment and decent work for all and further resolve to promote the Global Jobs Pact as a general framework within which each country can formulate policy packages specific to its situation and national priorities in order to promote a job intensive recovery and sustainable development. We call on Member States to take effective measures for promoting social inclusion and integration and incorporate these into their national development strategies.

49. We resolve to take further effective measures and actions, in conformity with international law, to remove obstacles and constraints, strengthen support and meet the special needs of the regions and countries struggling to achieve economic and social development, including the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States, middle-income countries, Africa, and people living in areas affected by complex humanitarian emergencies and in areas affected by terrorism. In addition, we acknowledge the need to take concerted actions, in conformity with international law, to remove the obstacles to the full realization of the rights of peoples living under foreign occupation to promote the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

50. We recognize the specific development challenges related to peacebuilding and early recovery in countries affected by conflict and the effect of these challenges on their efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals. We request donor countries to provide adequate, timely and predictable development assistance in support of these efforts, tailored to country-specific needs and situations, at the request of the recipient country. We are determined to strengthen international partnerships to address these needs, demonstrate progress and enable improved international support.

51. We consider that promoting universal access to social services and providing social protection floors can make an important contribution to consolidating and achieving further development gains. Social protection systems that address and reduce inequality and social exclusion are essential for protecting the gains towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

52. We stress that fighting corruption at both the national and international levels is a priority and that corruption is a serious barrier to effective resource mobilization and allocation and diverts resources away from activities that are vital for poverty eradication, the fight against hunger and sustainable development. We are determined to take urgent and decisive steps to continue to combat corruption in all of its manifestations, which requires strong institutions at all levels, and urge all States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the United Nations Convention against Corruption and to begin its implementation.

53. We recognize that the respect for and promotion and protection of human rights is an integral part of effective work towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

54. We acknowledge the importance of gender equality and empowerment of women to achieve the Millennium Development Goals. Women are agents of development. We call for action to ensure the equal access of women and girls to education, basic services, health care, economic opportunities and decision-making at all levels. We stress that investing in women and girls has a multiplier effect on productivity, efficiency and sustained economic growth. We recognize the need for gender mainstreaming in the formulation and implementation of development policies.

55. We reaffirm that States should, in accordance with international law, take concerted, positive steps to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, on the basis of equality and non-discrimination and recognizing the value and diversity of their distinctive identities, cultures and social organization.

56. We resolve to work with all stakeholders and strengthen partnerships in achieving the Millennium Development Goals. The private sector plays a vital role in development in many countries, including through public-private partnerships and by generating employment and investment, developing new technologies and enabling sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth. We call upon the private sector to further contribute to poverty eradication, including by adapting its business models to the needs and possibilities of the poor. Foreign direct investment and trade, as well as public-private partnerships, are important for the scaling-up of initiatives. In this connection we note the work of the United Nations Global Compact, in which companies have committed to corporate social responsibility and action in support of the Millennium Development Goals.

57. We stress the importance of strengthening regional and subregional cooperation for accelerating national development strategy implementation, including through regional and subregional development banks and initiatives. We also emphasize the importance of strengthening regional and subregional institutions to provide effective support to regional and national development strategies.

58. We reaffirm that the United Nations funds, programmes and regional commissions, and the specialized agencies, in accordance with their respective mandates, have an important role to play in advancing development and in protecting development gains, in accordance with national strategies and priorities, including progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals. We will continue to take steps for a strong, well-coordinated, coherent and effective United Nations system in support of the Millennium Development Goals. We emphasize the principle of national ownership and leadership, support the initiative of some countries to use, on a voluntary basis, common country programme documents, and emphasize our support for all countries that wish to continue using the existing frameworks and processes for country-level programming.

59. We stress the need for adequate quantity and quality of funding for the operational activities of the United Nations development system as well as the need to make funding more predictable, effective and efficient. We also reaffirm, in this context, the importance of accountability, transparency and improved results-based management and further harmonized results-based reporting on the work of the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies.

60. We resolve to enhance efforts to mobilize adequate and predictable financial and high-quality technical support, as well as to promote the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable technology and the transfer of such technologies on mutually agreed terms, which is crucial for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

61. We consider that innovative financing mechanisms can make a positive contribution in assisting developing countries to mobilize additional resources for financing for development on a voluntary basis. Such financing should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of financing. While recognizing the considerable progress in innovative sources of financing for development, we call for scaling-up of present initiatives, where appropriate.

62. We welcome the ongoing efforts to strengthen and support South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation. We stress that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation. We call for the effective implementation of the outcome document of the High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, held in Nairobi from 1 to 3 December 2009.

63. We recognize the regional efforts being made to advance the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015. In this regard, we welcome the convening of the fifteenth ordinary session of the Summit of the African Union in Kampala from 19 to 27 July 2010, with the theme "Maternal, infant and child health and development in Africa", the launch of the African Union Campaign on Accelerated Reduction of Maternal Mortality in Africa; the slogan "Africa cares: no woman should die while giving life"; the Special Ministerial Meeting to Review the Millennium Development Goals in Asia and the Pacific: run-up to 2015, held in Jakarta on 3 and 4 August 2010; the report of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean on progress in Latin America and the Caribbean towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals; and similar reports produced by other regional commissions, all of which have contributed positively to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly, as well as to the achievement of Millennium Development Goals by 2015.

64. We welcome the increasing efforts to improve the quality of official development assistance and to increase its development impact, and recognize that the Development Cooperation Forum of the Economic and Social Council, along with recent initiatives such as the high-level forums on aid effectiveness, which produced the 2005 Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness and the 2008 Accra Agenda for Action, make important contributions to the efforts of those countries which have committed to them, including through the adoption of the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization and managing for results. We also bear in mind that there is no one-size-fits-all formula that will guarantee effective assistance and that the specific situation of each country needs to be fully considered.

65. We encourage continued efforts in the Development Cooperation Forum, as the focal point within the United Nations system, to carry out a holistic consideration of issues related to international development cooperation, with the participation of all relevant stakeholders.

66. We consider that the cultural dimension is important for development. We encourage international cooperation in the cultural field, aimed at achieving development objectives.

67. We recognize that sport, as a tool for education, development and peace, can promote cooperation, solidarity, tolerance, understanding, social inclusion and health at the local, national and international levels.

68. We recognize that all countries require adequate, timely, reliable and disaggregated data, including demographic data, in order to design better programmes and policies for sustainable development. We commit ourselves to strengthening our national statistical systems, including for effectively monitoring progress towards the Millennium Development Goals. We also reiterate the need to increase efforts in support of statistical capacity-building in developing countries.

69. We take note of the Global Pulse initiative to develop more up-to-date and actionable data as a joint effort among all relevant stakeholders for rapid impact and vulnerability analysis.

Millennium Development Goal 1— Eradicate extreme poverty and hunger

70. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in order to achieve Millennium Development Goal 1, including by:

(a) Addressing the root causes of extreme poverty and hunger, while noting that the eradication of extreme poverty and hunger has a direct impact on the achievement of all the other Millennium Development Goals;

(b) Adopting forward-looking economic policies that lead to sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, and which increase employment opportunities, promote agricultural development and reduce poverty;

(c) Increasing efforts at all levels to mitigate the social and economic impacts, particularly on poverty and hunger, of the multiple crises through global responses that are comprehensive, effective, inclusive and sustainable, taking into account the needs of developing countries;

(d) Pursuing job-intensive, sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development to promote full and productive employment and decent work for all, including for women, indigenous people, young people, people with disabilities and rural populations, and promoting small- and medium-sized enterprises through initiatives such as skills enhancement and technical training programmes, vocational training and entrepreneurial skills development. Employers and workers' representatives should be closely associated with these initiatives;

(e) Improving opportunities for young people to gain access to productive employment and decent work through increased investment in youth employment, active labour-market support and public-private partnerships, as well as through the creation of enabling environments to facilitate the participation of young people in labour markets, in accordance with international rules and commitments;

(f) Taking appropriate steps to assist one another in the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, strengthening child protection systems and combating trafficking in children through, inter alia, enhanced international co-operation and assistance, including support for social and economic development, poverty eradication programmes and universal education;

(g) Promoting comprehensive systems of social protection that provide universal access to essential social services, consistent with national priorities and circumstances, by establishing a minimum level of social security and health care for all;

(h) Promoting inclusive financial services, particularly microfinance, and including affordable and accessible credit, savings, insurance and payments products for all segments of society, especially women, people in vulnerable situations and those who would not normally be served, or are underserved, by traditional financial institutions, as well as for micro-, small- and medium-sized enterprises;

(i) Promoting the empowerment and participation of rural women as critical agents for enhancing agricultural and rural development and food security and ensuring their equal access to productive resources, land, financing, technologies, training and markets;

(j) Reaffirming the international commitment to eliminating hunger and to securing access to food for all and reiterating, in this regard, the important role of relevant organizations, particularly the United Nations system;

(k) Supporting the Five Rome Principles for Sustainable Global Food Security contained in the Declaration of the World Summit on Food Security;

(l) Strengthening international coordination and governance for food security, through the Global Partnership for Agriculture, Food Security and Nutrition, of which the Committee on World Food Security is a central component, and reiterating that it is essential to enhance global governance, building on existing institutions and fostering effective partnerships;

(m) Promoting efforts to improve capacity-building in sustainable fisheries management, especially in developing countries, as fish is an important source of animal protein for millions of people and is an essential component in the fight against malnutrition and hunger;

(n) Supporting a comprehensive and coordinated response to address the multiple and complex causes of the global food crisis, including the adoption of political, economic, social, financial and technical solutions in the short, medium and long term by national Governments and the international community, including for mitigating the impact of the high volatility of food prices on developing countries. The relevant United Nations organizations have an important role to play in this regard;

(o) Promoting at all levels a strong enabling environment for enhancing agricultural production, productivity and sustainability in developing countries, including through public and private investment, land-use planning, efficient water management, adequate rural infrastructure, including irrigation, and developing strong agricultural value chains and improving access of farmers to markets and land and supportive economic policies and institutions at the national and international levels;

(p) Supporting small-scale producers, including women, to increase production of a wide spectrum of traditional and other crops and livestock, and improving their access to markets, credits and inputs, thereby increasing income-earning opportunities for poor people and their ability to purchase food and improve their livelihoods;

(q) Increasing the rate of agricultural productivity growth in developing countries through promotion of the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable agricultural technology, as well as the transfer of such technologies on mutually agreed terms, and supporting agricultural research and innovation, extension services and agricultural education in developing countries;

(r) Increasing the sustainable production and augmenting the availability and quality of food, including through long-term investment, access of smallholder farmers to markets, credit and inputs, improved land-use planning, crop diversification, commercialization, and development of an adequate rural infrastructure and enhanced market access for developing countries;

(s) Delivering on the commitments made to achieve global food security, and providing adequate and predictable resources through bilateral and multilateral channels, including the commitments set out in the Aquila Food Security Initiative;

(t) Addressing environmental challenges to sustainable agricultural development such as water quality and availability, deforestation and desertification, land and soil degradation, dust, floods, drought and unpredictable weather patterns and loss of biodiversity, and promoting the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable agricultural technologies and the transfer of such technologies on mutually agreed terms;

(u) Reaffirming the right of everyone to have access to safe, sufficient and nutritious food, consistent with the right to adequate food and the fundamental right of everyone to be free from hunger, so as to be able to fully develop and maintain his or her physical and mental capacities;

(v) Making special efforts to meet the nutritional needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities, as well as those living in vulnerable situations, through targeted and effective programming;

(w) Accelerating progress on the challenges faced by indigenous peoples in the context of food security, and in this regard taking special actions to combat the root causes of the disproportionately high level of hunger and malnutrition among indigenous peoples.

Millennium Development Goal 2— Achieve universal primary education

71. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in achieving Millennium Development Goal 2, including by:

(a) Realizing the right of everyone to education and re-emphasizing that education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and the sense of its dignity and shall strengthen respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(b) Making further progress towards the goal of universal primary education by building on the gains made during the past decade;

(c) Removing barriers, outside and within education systems, so as to provide equitable educational and learning opportunities for all children, since knowledge and education are key factors for sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and for the achievement of all the Millennium Development Goals, through continued political emphasis on education and by promoting, with the support of the international community, civil society and the private sector, appropriate and targeted, evidence-based measures such as abolishing school fees, providing school meals, ensuring that schools have separate sanitation facilities for boys and girls and in other ways making primary education for all children available, accessible and affordable;

(d) Addressing the root causes of the inequalities, disparities and diverse forms of exclusion and discrimination affecting children, particularly out-of-school children, including by enhancing enrolment, retention, participation and achievement of children, by developing and operationalizing an inclusive education and defining targeted, proactive strategies, policies and programmes, including cross-sectoral approaches, to promote accessibility and inclusion. In this regard, additional efforts should be undertaken to work across sectors to reduce drop-out, repetition and failure rates, especially for the poor, and to eliminate the gender gap in education;

(e) Ensuring quality education and progression through the school system. This requires establishing learner-friendly schools and institutions; increasing the number of teachers and enhancing their quality through comprehensive policies that address issues of recruitment, training, retention, professional development, evaluation, employment and teaching conditions as well as the status of teachers through increased national capacity; and building more classrooms and improving the material conditions of school buildings and infrastructure as well as the quality and content of the curriculum, pedagogy and learning and teaching materials, harnessing the capabilities of information and communications technology and the assessment of learning outcomes;

(f) Strengthening the sustainability and predictability of funding for national education systems by ensuring adequate national education budgets to, inter alia, address infrastructural, human resources, financial and administrative constraints. These systems should be supported by adequate and predictable development assistance and international cooperation for education, including through new, voluntary and innovative approaches for education financing that should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of finance;

(g) Continuing to implement national programmes and measures to eliminate illiteracy worldwide as part of the commitments made in the Dakar Framework for Action, adopted in 2000 at the World Education Forum, and in the Millennium Development Goals. In this regard, we recognize the important contribution of South-South and triangular cooperation through, inter alia, innovative pedagogical methods in literacy;

(h) Supporting the efforts of national Governments to strengthen their capacity to plan and manage education programmes by involving all education providers in line with national policies and educational systems;

(i) Giving greater focus to the transition from primary education and access to secondary education, vocational training and non-formal education and entry into the labour market;

(j) Strengthening efforts to ensure primary education as a fundamental element of the response to and preparedness for humanitarian emergencies, ensuring that affected countries are supported, at their request, in their efforts to restore their education systems by the international community.

Millennium Development Goal 3— Promote gender equality and empower women

72. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress to achieve Millennium Development Goal 3, including by:

(a) Taking action to achieve the goals of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and its twelve critical areas of concern, our commitments in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the obligations and commitments of States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

(b) Ensuring access to education and successful schooling of girls by removing barriers and expanding support for girls' education through measures such as providing free primary education, a safe environment for schooling and financial assistance such as scholarships and cash transfer programmes; promoting supportive policies to end discrimination against women and girls in education; and tracking completion and attendance rates with a view to retaining girls in schools through secondary levels;

(c) Empowering women, in particular women living in poverty, through, inter alia, social and economic policies that guarantee them full and equal access to all levels of quality education and training and vocational training, including technical, managerial and entrepreneurial training, and to affordable and adequate public and social services;

(d) Ensuring that women benefit from policy measures to generate full and productive employment and decent work for all, in accordance with commitments by States to International Labour Organization conventions, including policy measures to promote, inter alia, access of women and girls, including mothers and pregnant women, to formal and non-formal education, equal skills development and employment opportunities, and closing wage gaps between women and men, recognizing women's unpaid work, including care work;

(e) Investing in infrastructure and labour-saving technologies, especially in rural areas, benefiting women and girls by reducing their burden of domestic activities, affording the opportunity for girls to attend school and women to engage in self-employment or participate in the labour market;

(f) Taking action to improve the numbers and active participation of women in all political and economic decision-making processes, including by investing in women's leadership in local decision-making structures and processes, encouraging appropriate legislative action and creating an even playing field for men and women in political and Government institutions, and intensifying our efforts for the equal participation of women and men as key stakeholders at all levels in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and peacebuilding processes;

(g) Strengthening comprehensive national laws and policies as well as programmes to enhance accountability and raise awareness, prevent and combat all forms of violence against women and girls everywhere, which undermine their full enjoyment of all human rights, and to ensure that women have access to justice and protection, and that all perpetrators of such violence are duly investigated, prosecuted and punished in order to end impunity, in conformity with national legislation, international humanitarian law and international human rights law;

(h) Improving national-level capacity to monitor and report on progress, gaps and opportunities through better generation and use of sex- and age-disaggregated data, including with the support of the international community;

(i) Enhancing the impact of development assistance in advancing gender equality and empowerment of women and girls through targeted activities including capacity-building, as well as through gender mainstreaming and enhanced dialogue between donors and partners, involving, as appropriate, civil society and the private sector, with a view to ensuring adequate funding;

(j) Facilitating access by women to affordable micro-finance, in particular microcredit, which can contribute to poverty eradication, gender equality and the empowerment of women;

(k) Promoting and protecting women's equal access to adequate housing, property and land, including rights to inheritance, and enabling them to secure access to credit through appropriate constitutional, legislative and administrative measures;

(l) Promoting women's economic empowerment and ensuring women's access to productive resources. In this regard, strengthening gender responsive public management, in order to ensure gender equality in resource allocation, capacity development and benefit sharing in all sectors, including in central and local level governments.

Promoting global public health for all to achieve the Millennium Development Goals

73. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in promoting global public health for all, including by:

(a) Realizing the values and principles of primary health care, including equity, solidarity, social justice, universal access to services, multisectoral action, transparency, accountability, community participation and empowerment, as the basis for strengthening health systems, and recall, in this regard, the Declaration of Alma-Ata;

(b) Strengthening the capacity of national health systems to deliver equitable and quality health-care services and promoting the widest possible access to health-care services at the point of use, especially to those in vulnerable situations, through public policies that remove barriers to access to and use of health-care services, complemented by the support of international programmes, measures and policies that align with national priorities;

(c) Providing and strengthening comprehensive and affordable community-based primary health-care services so as to ensure a continuum from health promotion and disease prevention to care and rehabilitation, while paying particular attention to poor people and populations, especially in rural and remote areas, with a view to extending health protection to all those in need;

(d) Improving the quality and effectiveness of health-care services delivery by providing integrated health-care services through coordinated approaches at the country level, the increased use of common platforms and the integration of relevant services of other sectors, including water and sanitation;

(e) Realizing the international commitment to supporting national efforts in strengthening health systems that deliver equitable health outcomes as a basis for a comprehensive approach that includes health financing, the training and retention of the health workforce, procurement and distribution of medicines and vaccines, infrastructure, information systems and service delivery;

(f) Strengthening basic infrastructure, human and technical resources and the provision of health facilities so as to improve health systems and ensure the accessibility, affordability and quality, especially in rural and remote areas, of health-care services, as well as sustainable access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation, bearing in mind the commitment to halving, by 2015, the proportion of the population without sustainable access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation as a means of fighting waterborne diseases;

(g) Stressing the importance of multisectoral and inter-ministerial approaches in formulating and implementing national policies that are crucial for promoting and protecting health, and reiterating that Governments will play the central role, in collaboration with civil society organizations, including academia and the private sector, in implementing national strategies and action plans on social service delivery and in making progress towards ensuring more equitable health outcomes;

(h) Improving national health governance, including through the participation of civil society, the private sector and other relevant stakeholders, as well as strengthening international support, as appropriate, in order to ensure that national health systems are sustainable, well prepared and capable of responding to challenges, including crises and pandemics;

(i) Developing appropriate policies and actions to promote health education and literacy, including among young people, in order to address the lack of awareness about health and, in some cases, harmful practices which significantly inhibit women's and children's access to health-care services, and to ensure respect for human rights, promote gender equality and the empowerment of women as essential means of addressing the health of women and girls, and to address the stigmatization of people living with and affected by HIV and AIDS;

(j) Supporting the use of national data collection, monitoring and evaluation systems that can track sex-disaggregated access to health-care services and provide rapid feedback for improving the effectiveness and quality of health systems;

(k) Strengthening the effectiveness of health systems and proven interventions to address evolving health challenges such as the increased incidence of non-communicable diseases, road traffic injuries and fatalities, and environmental and occupational health hazards;

(l) Reviewing national recruitment, training and retention policies and developing national health workforce plans, based on lessons learned, that address the lack of health workers as well as their uneven distribution within countries, including in remote and rural areas, and throughout the world, which undermines the health systems of developing countries, in particular the shortage in Africa, and in this regard recognizing the importance of national and international actions to promote universal access to health-care services that take into account the challenges facing developing countries in the retention of skilled health personnel, in light of the adoption of the World Health Organization Global Code of Practice on the International Recruitment of Health Personnel, adherence to which is voluntary;

(m) Further strengthening international cooperation, inter alia, through exchange of best practices in strengthening health systems, improving access to medicines, encouraging the development of technology and the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms, the production of affordable, safe, effective and good quality medicines, fostering the production of innovative medicines, generics, vaccines and other health commodities, the training and retaining of health personnel and work to ensure that international cooperation and assistance, in particular external funding, become more predictable, better harmonized and better aligned with national priorities for capacity-building and channelled to recipient countries in ways that strengthen national health systems;

(n) Further promoting research and development, knowledge-sharing and the provision and use of information and communications technology for health, including by facilitating affordable access by all countries, especially developing countries;

(o) Enhancing public-private partnerships for health-care service delivery, encouraging the development of new and affordable technologies and their innovative application and developing new and affordable vaccines and medicines needed, in particular, in developing countries;

(p) Welcoming the Secretary-General's Global Strategy for Women's and Children's Health, undertaken by a broad coalition of partners, in support of national plans and strategies, in order to significantly reduce the number of maternal, newborn and under-five child deaths as a matter of immediate concern by scaling up a priority package of high-impact interventions and integrating efforts in sectors such as health, education, gender equality, water and sanitation, poverty reduction and nutrition;

(q) Welcoming also the various national, regional and international initiatives on all the Millennium Development Goals, including those undertaken bilaterally and through South-South cooperation, in support of national plans and strategies in sectors such as health, education, gender equality, energy, water and sanitation, poverty reduction and nutrition as a way to reduce the number of maternal, newborn and under-five child deaths.

Millennium Development Goal 4— Reduce child mortality

74. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in order to achieve Millennium Development Goal 4, including by:

(a) Scaling up efforts to achieve integrated management of childhood illnesses, particularly actions to address and prevent the main causes of child mortality, including newborn and infant mortality, these being, inter alia, pneumonia, diarrhoea, malaria and malnutrition. This can be achieved by developing, implementing and evaluating appropriate national strategies, policies and programmes for child survival, preventive pre-natal, para-natal and post-natal measures, vaccinations and immunization and by working to ensure that medicines, medical products and technologies are affordable and available. In addition, this can be achieved by improved nutrition, including nutrition prior to birth, as well as by strengthening specific health interventions, including emergency obstetric care and skilled attendance at birth to reduce maternal and child mortality. International support to national efforts, including financial resources, will continue to be key in this regard;

(b) Sustaining major successes and scaling up prevention and vaccination programmes as one of the most efficient tools to reduce child mortality, including the measles, polio, tuberculosis and tetanus campaigns, by ensuring sufficient funding, political commitment and conscientious implementation of control activities, especially in priority countries;

(c) Taking action to improve child nutrition through an integrated package of essential interventions and services, including, in particular, access to nutritious food, appropriate supplements, prevention and early management of diarrhoeal diseases and information and support for exclusive breastfeeding and for the treatment of severe acute malnutrition;

(d) Maintaining progress with regard to combating malaria and the extension of the use of insecticide-treated bed nets;

(e) Stepping up the fight against pneumonia and diarrhoea through the greater use of proven highly effective preventive and treatment measures, as well as new tools, such as new vaccines, which are affordable even in the poorest countries;

(f) Scaling up efforts, including awareness raising, to address the critical impact of increasing access to safe drinking water, sanitation coverage and hygienic care, including hand washing with soap, on reducing the death rate among children as a result of diarrhoeal diseases;

(g) Working to ensure that the next generation is born HIV-free by providing, on an urgent basis, extended and sustainable coverage and improved quality of services to prevent mother-to-child transmission as well as increasing access to paediatric HIV treatment services.

Millennium Development Goal 5— Improve maternal health

75. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in order to achieve Millennium Development Goal 5, including by:

(a) Taking steps to realize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, including sexual and reproductive health;

(b) Addressing reproductive, maternal and child health, including newborn health, in a comprehensive manner, inter alia, through the provision of family planning, prenatal care, skilled attendance at birth, emergency obstetric and newborn care and methods for the prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases and infections, such as HIV, within strengthened health systems that provide accessible and affordable integrated health-care services and include community-based preventive and clinical care;

(c) Building on effective, multisectoral and integrated approaches. We emphasize the need for the provision of universal access to reproductive health by 2015, including integrating family planning, sexual health and health-care services in national strategies and programmes;

(d) Taking action at all levels to address the interlinked root causes of maternal mortality and morbidity, such as poverty, malnutrition, harmful practices, lack of accessible and appropriate health-care services, information and education and gender inequality, and paying particular attention to eliminating all forms of violence against women and girls;

(e) Ensuring that all women, men and young people have information about, access to and choice of the widest possible range of safe, effective, affordable and acceptable methods of family planning;

(f) Expanding the provision of comprehensive obstetric care and strengthening the role of skilled health-care providers, including midwives and nurses, through their training and retention in order to fully utilize their potential as trusted providers of maternal health-care services, as well as expanding family planning within local communities and expanding and upgrading formal and informal training in sexual and reproductive health care and family planning for all health-care providers, health educators and managers, including training in interpersonal communications and counselling.

Millennium Development Goal 6— Combat HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases

76. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in order to achieve Millennium Development Goal 6, including by:

(a) Redoubling efforts to achieve universal access to HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment, care and support services as an essential step in achieving Millennium Development Goal 6 and as a contribution to reaching the other Millennium Development Goals;

(b) Significantly intensifying prevention efforts and increasing access to treatment by scaling up strategically aligned programmes aimed at reducing the vulnerability of persons more likely to be infected with HIV, combining biomedical, behavioural and social and structural interventions, and through the empowerment of women and adolescent girls so as to increase their capacity to protect themselves from the risk of HIV infection and through the promotion and protection of all human rights. Prevention programmes should take into account local circumstances, ethics and cultural values, including information, education and communication in languages most understood by local communities and should be respectful of cultures, with the aim of reducing risk-taking behaviours and encouraging responsible sexual behaviour, including abstinence and fidelity; expanded access to essential commodities, including male and female condoms and sterile injecting equipment; harm-reduction efforts related to drug use; expanded access to voluntary and confidential counselling and testing; safe blood supplies; and early and effective treatment of sexually transmitted infections, and should promote policies that ensure effective prevention and accelerate research and development into new tools for prevention, including microbicides and vaccines;

(c) Dealing with HIV/AIDS from a developmental perspective, which requires a national network of sound and workable institutions and multisectoral prevention, treatment, care and support strategies, addressing the stigmatization of and discrimination against people living with HIV and promoting their social integration, rehabilitation and greater involvement in HIV response, as well as strengthening national efforts at HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment, care and support and strengthening efforts to eliminate the mother-to-child transmission of HIV;

(d) Building new strategic partnerships to strengthen and leverage the linkages between HIV and other health- and development-related initiatives, expanding, to the greatest extent possible and with the support of international cooperation and partnerships, national capacity to deliver comprehensive HIV/AIDS programmes, as well as new and more effective antiretroviral treatments, in ways that strengthen existing national health and social systems, as well as using HIV platforms as a foundation for the expansion of service delivery. In this regard, expediting action to integrate HIV information and services into programmes for primary health care, sexual and reproductive health, including voluntary family planning and mother and child health, treatment for tuberculosis, hepatitis C and sexually transmitted infections and care for children affected, orphaned or made vulnerable by HIV/AIDS, as well as nutrition and formal and informal education;

(e) Planning for long-term sustainability, including addressing the expected increase in demand for second and third line drug regimens to treat HIV, malaria and tuberculosis;

(f) Strengthening support to affected countries in order to respond to HIV co-infection with tuberculosis, as well as multi-drug resistant and extensively drug resistant tuberculosis, including through earlier detection of all forms of tuberculosis;

(g) Sustaining national efforts and programmes, with the support of the international community, to address the challenges posed by malaria by strengthening effective prevention, diagnosis and treatment strategies, including by ensuring the accessibility to and availability of affordable, quality and effective medicines, generics, including artemisinin-combination therapy, as well as progress in the use of long-lasting, safe insecticide-treated bed nets to combat malaria and strengthening ongoing research for the prompt development of malaria vaccines;

(h) Renewing efforts to prevent and treat neglected tropical diseases, prevention and treatment services for malaria and tuberculosis, including by improving national health information systems, strengthening international cooperation, accelerating further research and development, developing innovative vaccines and medicines and adopting comprehensive prevention strategies;

(j) Undertaking concerted action and a coordinated response at the national, regional and global levels in order to adequately address the developmental and other challenges posed by non-communicable diseases, namely cardiovascular diseases, cancers, chronic respiratory diseases and diabetes, working towards a successful high-level meeting of the General Assembly in 2011;

(j) Increasing efforts to achieve universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support, strengthening the fight against malaria, tuberculosis and other diseases, including by providing adequate funding for the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria and through the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other multilateral and bilateral channels, strengthening innovative financing mechanisms, as appropriate, and contributing to the long-term sustainability of the response.

Millennium Development Goal 7— Ensure environmental sustainability

77. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in order to achieve Millennium Development Goal 7, including by:

(a) Pursuing sustainable development, in accordance with the principles contained in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, and taking into account the respective capabilities of countries, with a view to effectively implementing the outcomes of the major summits on sustainable development and addressing new and emerging challenges;

(b) Pursuing environmental sustainability through nationally owned comprehensive and coherent planning frameworks and the adoption of national legislation, in accordance with national circumstances and the appropriate implementation capacity; supporting developing countries in this regard in building capacity and providing financial resources; and promoting the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable technology and the transfer of such technologies on mutually agreed terms;

(c) Supporting the implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, through joint action of the international community in addressing the causes and poverty impacts of desertification and land degradation in arid, semi-arid and dry sub-humid areas, consistent with articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention, taking into account the ten-year strategic plan and framework to enhance the implementation of the Convention (2008–2018), and supporting the exchange of best practices and lessons learned, including from regional cooperation, and the mobilization of adequate and predictable financial resources;

(d) Strengthening political commitment and action at all levels to effectively implement the global objectives on forest and the sustainable forest management of all types of forests in order to reduce the loss of forest cover and improve the livelihoods of those that depend on forests through the development of a comprehensive and more effective approach to financing activities, involvement of local and indigenous communities and other relevant stakeholders, promoting good governance at the national and international levels, and enhancing international cooperation to address the threats posed by illicit activities;

(e) Continuing to pursue more efficient and coherent implementation of the three objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity and addressing implementation gaps, where appropriate, including through the fulfilment of commitments significantly reducing the rate of loss of biodiversity, including by preserving and maintaining knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities; and continuing ongoing efforts towards elaborating and negotiating an international regime on access and benefit sharing. We look forward to the successful outcome of the tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, to be held in Nagoya, Japan, from 18 to 29 October 2010;

(f) Supporting the implementation of national policies and strategies to combine, as appropriate, the increased use of new and renewable energy sources and low emission technologies, the more efficient use of energy, greater reliance on advanced energy technologies, including cleaner fossil fuel technologies, and the sustainable use of traditional energy resources, as well as promoting access to modern, reliable, affordable and sustainable energy services and enhancing national capacities to meet the growing energy demand, as appropriate, supported by international cooperation in this field and by the promotion of the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable energy technologies and the transfer of such technologies on mutually agreed terms;

(g) Maintaining that the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change is the primary international, intergovernmental forum for negotiating the global response to climate change, calling upon States to take urgent global action to address climate change in accordance with the principles identified in the Convention, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities, and looking forward to a successful and ambitious outcome of the sixteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, to be held in Cancun, Mexico, from 29 November to 10 December 2010;

(h) Continuing to increase sustainable access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation by prioritizing integrated water and sanitation strategies, which include the restoration, upgrading and maintenance of infrastructure, including water pipelines and sewage networks, as well as promoting integrated water management in national planning and exploring innovative ways of improving the tracking and monitoring of water quality;

(i) Promoting integrated waste management systems, in partnership with all relevant stakeholders and with international financial and technological support, as appropriate;

(j) Redoubling efforts to close the sanitation gap through scaled-up ground-level action, supported by strong political will and increased community participation, in accordance with national development strategies, promoting the mobilization and provision of adequate financial and technological resources, technical know-how and capacity-building for developing countries in order to increase the coverage of basic sanitation, especially for the poor, and noting in this regard the global effort to realize "Sustainable sanitation: the five-year drive to 2015";

(k) Working towards cities without slums, beyond current targets, by reducing slum populations and improving the lives of slum-dwellers, with adequate support of the international community, by prioritizing national urban planning strategies with the participation of all stakeholders, by promoting equal access for people living in slums to public services, including health, education, energy, water and sanitation and adequate shelter, and by promoting sustainable urban and rural development;

(l) Taking measures to ensure the sustainable management of marine biodiversity and ecosystems, including fish stocks, which contribute to food security and hunger and poverty eradication efforts, including through ecosystem approaches to ocean management, and to address the adverse effects of climate change on the marine environment and marine biodiversity;

(m) Supporting the efforts of countries to preserve fragile mountain ecosystems as an important source of fresh water and as repositories of rich biological diversity, with a view to achieving sustainable development and eradicating poverty;

(n) Promoting sustainable consumption and production patterns, in accordance with the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation");

(o) Fostering a greater level of coordination among national and local institutions responsible for economic and social development and environmental protection, including with respect to the promotion of investments relevant for sustainable development;

(p) Working towards a successful United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development in 2012.

Millennium Development Goal 8— Develop a global partnership for development

78. We commit ourselves to accelerating progress in order to achieve Millennium Development Goal 8, including by:

(a) Accelerating efforts to deliver on and fully implement existing Millennium Development Goal 8 commitments by enhancing the global partnership for development to ensure the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015;

(b) Supporting the implementation of national development strategies by developing countries to meet the Millennium Development Goals by 2015, including through external financial and technical support, to further promote economic growth and to respond to the increased challenges posed by the impact of the multiple crises, as well as long-term structural obstacles;

(c) Recognizing that the commitments made by developed and developing countries in relation to the Millennium Development Goals require mutual accountability;

(d) Strengthening the central role of the United Nations in enhancing global partnerships for development, with a view to creating a supportive global environment for the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals;

(e) Enhancing financing for development in the areas of domestic resource mobilization, foreign direct investment, international trade, international financial and technical cooperation for development, and debt and systemic issues by meeting our commitments made in the Monterrey Consensus and reaffirmed in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development and all other relevant outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, thus expanding fiscal capacity for financing the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals;

(f) The fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015 and to reach the level of at least 0.5 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2010, as well as a target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to least developed countries. To reach their agreed timetables, donor countries should take all necessary and appropriate measures to raise the rate of aid disbursements to meet their existing commitments. We urge those developed countries that have not yet done so to make additional concrete efforts towards the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries, including the specific target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to least developed countries in line with the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, in accordance with their commitments. To build on progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively, we stress the importance of democratic governance, improved transparency and accountability, and managing for results. We strongly encourage all donors to establish, as soon as possible, rolling indicative timetables that illustrate how they aim to reach their goals, in accordance with their respective budget allocation process. We stress the importance of mobilizing greater domestic support in developed countries towards the fulfilment of their commitments, including by raising public awareness, and by providing data on aid effectiveness and demonstrating tangible results;

(g) Making rapid progress to fulfil the Gleneagles and other donors' substantial commitments to increase aid through a variety of means. We are concerned that at the current rate the commitment of doubling aid to Africa by 2010 will not be reached;

(h) Exploring new innovative finance mechanisms and strengthening and scaling up existing ones, where appropriate, given their potential to contribute to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. Such voluntary mechanisms should be effective and should aim to mobilize resources that are stable and predictable, they should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of finance and should be disbursed in accordance with the priorities of developing countries and not unduly burden them. We note the ongoing work in this regard, including by the Leading Group on Innovative Financing for Development.

opment as well as by the Task Force on International Financial Transactions for Development and the Task Force on Innovative Financing for Education;

(j) Enhancing and strengthening domestic resource mobilization and fiscal space, including, where appropriate, through modernized tax systems, more efficient tax collection, broadening the tax base and effectively combating tax evasion and capital flight. While each country is responsible for its tax system, it is important to support national efforts in these areas by strengthening technical assistance and enhancing international cooperation and participation in addressing international tax matters. We look forward to the upcoming report by the Secretary-General examining the strengthening of institutional arrangements to promote international cooperation in tax matters;

(j) Implementing measures to curtail illicit financial flows at all levels, enhancing disclosure practices and promoting transparency in financial information. In this regard, strengthening national and multinational efforts to address this issue is crucial, including support to developing countries and technical assistance to enhance their capacities. Additional measures should be implemented to prevent the transfer abroad of stolen assets and to assist in the recovery and return of such assets, in particular to their countries of origin, consistent with the United Nations Convention against Corruption;

(k) Fully supporting and further developing a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory, equitable and transparent multilateral trading system, inter alia, by working expeditiously towards a balanced and ambitious, comprehensive and development-oriented outcome of the Doha Development Agenda of multilateral trade negotiations, in order to bring benefits to all and contribute to enhancing the integration of developing countries into the system, while recognizing the importance of making progress in key areas of the Doha Development Agenda of special interest to developing countries, and reaffirming the importance of special and differential treatment referred to therein;

(l) Emphasizing the critical importance of rejecting protectionism and not turning inward in times of financial uncertainty, mindful of the importance of trade for economic growth and development and for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015;

(m) Implementing duty-free and quota-free market access for all least developed countries in conformity with the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration adopted by the World Trade Organization in 2005;

(n) Further implementing aid for trade, including through the Enhanced Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries, to help strengthen and enhance the trade capacity and international competitiveness of developing countries so as to ensure equitable benefits from increased trading opportunities and to foster economic growth;

(o) Strengthening regional integration and trade as it is crucial for significant development benefits, growth and jobs and for generating resources to sustain progress towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

(p) Fulfilling, in the Doha Development Agenda, the 2005 pledge of members of the World Trade Organization to ensure the parallel elimination in agriculture of all forms of export subsidies and disciplines on all export measures with equivalent effect to be completed by the end of 2013;

(q) Assisting developing countries in ensuring long-term debt sustainability through coordinated policies aimed at fostering debt financing, debt relief and debt restructuring, as appropriate, while noting also that developing countries can seek to negotiate, as a last resort, on a case-by-case basis and through existing frameworks, agreements on temporary debt standstills between debtors and creditors in order to help mitigate the adverse impacts of the crisis and stabilize negative macroeconomic developments;

(r) Considering enhanced approaches to sovereign debt restructuring mechanisms based on existing frameworks and principles, the broad participation of creditors and debtors, the comparable treatment of all creditors and an important role for the Bretton Woods institutions, and in this regard welcoming and calling upon all countries to contribute to the ongoing discussion in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank and other forums on the need for, and feasibility of, a more structured framework for international cooperation in this area;

(s) Increasing partnerships with businesses to achieve positive development outcomes by mobilizing private sector resources that contribute to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

(t) Reaffirming the right to use, to the full, the provisions contained in the World Trade Organization Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS Agreement), the Doha Declaration on the TRIPS Agreement and Public Health, the decision of the General Council of the World Trade Organization of 30 August 2003 on the implementation of paragraph of the Doha Declaration on the TRIPS Agreement and Public Health, and, when formal acceptance procedures are completed, the amendment to article 31 of the Agreement, which provide flexibilities for the protection of public health, and, in particular, to promote access to medicines for all, and encourage the provision of assistance to developing countries in this regard. We also call for a broad and timely acceptance of the amendment to article 31 of the Agreement, as proposed by the General Council of the World Trade Organization in its decision of 6 December 2005;

(u) Promoting the strategic role of science and technology, including information technology and innovation in areas relevant for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in particular agricultural productivity, water management and sanitation, energy security and public health. The capacity for technological innovation needs to be greatly enhanced in developing countries, and there is an urgent need for the international community to facilitate the availability of environmentally sound technologies and corresponding know-how by promoting the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable technology, and the transfer of such technologies on mutually agreed terms, in order to strengthen national innovation and research and development capacity;

(v) Strengthening public-private partnerships in order to close the large gaps that remain in access to and affordability of information and communications technology across countries and income groups, including by upgrading the quality and quantity of existing telecommunication infrastructure, particularly in the least developed countries, to support more modern information and communications technology applications and greatly increase connectivity, access and investment in innovation and development and the effective use of innovative information and communications technology applications and e-governance tools; and in this regard encouraging further operationalizing of the voluntary Digital Solidarity Fund;

(w) Strengthening cooperation between originating and receiving countries to lower the transaction costs of remittances, especially promoting conditions for cheaper, faster and safer transfers of remittances, which can contribute to national efforts for development.

Staying engaged to achieve the Millennium Development Goals

79. We request the General Assembly to continue to review, on an annual basis, the progress made towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, including in the implementation of the present outcome document. We request the President of the General Assembly at its sixty-eighth session to organize a special event in 2013 to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals.

80. We reaffirm the role that the Charter of the United Nations and the General Assembly have vested in the Economic and Social Council as a principal body for coordination, policy review, policy dialogue and recommendations on issues of economic and social development and for the follow-up to the Millennium Development Goals, particularly through the annual ministerial review and the Development Cooperation Forum. We look forward to the upcoming review of the strengthening of the Council during the current session of the Assembly.

81. We request the Secretary-General to report annually on progress in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals until 2015 and to make recommendations in his annual reports, as appropriate, for further steps to advance the United Nations development agenda beyond 2015.

On 23 November [meeting 52], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/10 [draft: A/65/12 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 13].

Sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth for poverty eradication and achievement of the Millennium Development Goals

The General Assembly,

Recalling the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome,

Stressing that the promotion of sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth is necessary for accelerating progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, as well as for promoting sustainable development, but is not sufficient, and that growth should enable everyone, in particular the poor, to participate in and benefit from economic opportunities and should lead to job creation and income opportunities, and be complemented by effective social policies,

Recognizing that national efforts in this regard should be complemented by an enabling international environment,

Recognizing also, in this regard, the need to further explore policies for sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth to accelerate poverty eradication, achieve the Millennium Development Goals and promote sustainable development through the follow-up process of the outcome of the high-level plenary meeting of the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly,

1. Invites Member States, in particular within the United Nations framework, to share best practices and lessons learned in the process of pursuing sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth;

2. Invites the regional commissions to facilitate discussions of this issue in each region, including through their analytical work and support in the sharing of best practices and lessons learned, and the promotion of regional and subregional economic cooperation;

3. Requests the Economic and Social Council to hold a panel discussion at its substantive session of 2011 on sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth for accelerating poverty eradication and achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and invites civil society, the private sector and other relevant stakeholders to contribute to the discussion;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his annual report on progress in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals until 2015 an analysis of and policy recommendations on sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth for accelerating poverty eradication and achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

Science and technology for development

In 2010, several UN bodies dealt with the issue of science and technology for development and reviewed implementation and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society (wsis) in Geneva in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 857] and Tunis in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 933] and related themes. The Commission on Science and Technology held a five-year review of progress made in the follow-up to wsis. The United Nations Group on the Information Society, established in 2006 under the CEB [YUN 2006, p. 1000], held its sixth meeting during the wsis Forum 2010 (Geneva, 10–14 May), which addressed critical issues in multi-stakeholder discussions and consultations.

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

At its thirteenth session (Geneva, 17–21 May) [E/2010/31], the Commission on Science and Technology for Development (CSTD) undertook a five-year review of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of wsis at the regional and international levels. In addition, the Commission considered two priority themes, “Improvement and innovation in existing financial mechanisms” and “New and emerging technologies”. The session included a panel discussion on the theme “Gender and science and technology”, and a segment on science, technology and innovation policy reviews for Ghana and Lesotho.

The session included a ministerial segment and four multi-stakeholder panel discussions on: progress made in implementing wsis outcomes; enhanced co-operation; outcome of the 2009 Internet Governance Forum meeting [YUN 2009, p. 821]; and gender and science and technology. More than 15 Member States were represented at the ministerial level. Participants also included heads of UN system organizations or their representatives, as well as representatives of the Council of Europe and AU, and representatives of civil society and of business entities.

At its fourteenth session, the Commission selected two priority themes for consideration: “Technology to address challenges in areas such as agriculture and water”; and “Measuring the impact of information and communications technologies (ICTs) for development”. Member States welcomed the focus of the new priority theme on the impact of ICTs for development and encouraged the Commission, in examining the theme, to broaden its focus beyond the economic impact of such technologies so as to encompass their social and cultural impact. The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of two draft resolutions and four draft decisions. It drew to the attention of the Council the agreement of the Commission to transmit the summary by the Chair of the panel discussion on the theme “Gender and science and technology” [E/2010/92] as an input to the Council’s annual ministerial review in 2010 of the theme “Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and empowerment of women”.

The Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of wsis at the regional and international levels [A/65/64-E/2010/12]; improvements and innovations in existing financing mechanisms for ICT for development [E/CN.16/2010/3]; new and emerging technologies: renewable energy for development [E/CN.16/2010/4]; and enhanced cooperation on public policy issues pertaining to the Internet [YUN 2009, p. 821]. In addition, the Commission had before it a compilation of reports from international organizations and other stakeholders as inputs to the Secretary-General’s report on progress in wsis implementation and follow-up [E/CN.16/2010/CRP.2], as well as a summary report by UNCTAD on the CSTD intersessional panel meeting in November 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 816].

The Secretary-General’s March report on financing mechanisms for ICT for development presented findings and recommendations drawn from the 2009–2010 CSTD intersessional panel discussions, contributions by Commission members and other relevant literature. He concluded that financing mechanisms remained crucial and that further efforts were needed to address the access gap, develop new content and applications and build capacity. Capacity development and relevant content often lagged behind infrastructure and hardware investments. Financing those “soft” and less visible components, which were key to the use of technologies, remained a challenge. Those were areas where it had been more difficult to generate funds from the private sector—an indication of the importance of support from Governments and bilateral and multilateral donor organizations.

The March report on new and emerging technologies sought to identify ways to overcome the challenges associated with the deployment and scaling-up of new and emerging renewable energy technologies in developing countries. Improved access to energy services was widely accepted as being of crucial importance to achieving the MDGs. Added to this priority was the need to enhance energy security through diversification of energy supply, taking into account concerns about climate change. Renewable energy technologies (RETS) provided a viable way of achieving those objectives. The international community had a large role to play in assisting Governments to promote the deployment of RETs, by providing technical assistance in training, capacity-building and strategic planning. International financial institutions should make concessionary financing a priority, in order to mobilize large-scale resources to finance the development and deployment of RETs. Given the importance of building local innovative capabilities in the technology transfer process, the international community could serve as an important knowledge hub. Intergovernmental forums, such as CSTD, could provide a platform for the sharing of examples of good practice, and for promoting North-South and South-South partnerships. UNCTAD was particularly well placed to play a role in supporting Governments’ deployment of RETs.

Committee of Experts on Public Administration. At its April session, the Committee of Experts on Public Administration had before it a Secretariat note [E/C.16/2010/4] on and dealt with ICT and gender equality: new opportunities and challenges for public administration to implement the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs.

UNCTAD expert meeting. In January [TD/B/C.II/MEM.1/CRP.1], the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the second session of the UNCTAD Multi-year Expert Meeting on Enterprise Development Policies and Capacity-building in Science, Technology and Innovation (Geneva, 20–22 January) [TD/B/C.II/MEM.1/7] a note entitled “Science, technology and innovation indicators for policymaking in developing countries: an overview of experiences and lessons learned”. The experts concluded that improved innovation policies offered major opportunities to accelerate growth, reduce poverty and improve health and welfare; further work on innovation and best practices, therefore, had the potential of high and sustained returns.

Communication. On 25 May [A/64/803-E/2010/91], Spain transmitted to the Secretary-General the Madrid Declaration entitled “Towards a new stage in the bioregional partnership: innovation and technology for sustainable development and social inclusion”, adopted by the Heads of State and Government meeting at the sixth summit of the European Union and the Latin American and Caribbean States (Madrid, 18 May).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/2010/31], adopted resolution 2010/3 without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Science and technology for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome, which recognizes that science and technology, including information and communications technologies, are vital for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, and reaffirming the commitments contained therein, especially the commitment to support the efforts of developing countries, individually and collectively, to harness new agricultural technologies in order to increase agricultural productivity through environmentally sustainable means,

Recalling also that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development is the secretariat of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development,

Recalling further the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development during the intersessional period 2008–2009 on its two priority themes, “Science, technology and engineering for innovation and capacity-building in education and research” and “Development-oriented policies for a socio-economically inclusive information society, including access, infrastructure and an enabling environment”,

Welcoming the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on its two current priority themes, “New and emerging technologies” and “Improvements and innovations in existing financing mechanisms”, and its role as the United Nations torch-bearer for science, technology and innovation,

Recognizing the critical role of innovation in maintaining national competitiveness in the global economy,

Recognizing also the importance of science, technology and innovation policy reviews in assisting developing countries to improve their innovation systems,

Recalling the commitments made at the Fourth World Conference on Women, held in Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, in particular the strategic objectives and actions contained in section K, Women and the environment, of chapter IV of the Beijing Platform for Action,

Recalling also its call for mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the United Nations system,

Taking note of the outcomes of the intersessional panel meeting of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, held in Geneva from 9 to 11 November 2009, and of the summary report prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development at its thirteenth session,

Extending its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for his role in helping to ensure completion of the aforementioned reports in a timely manner,

Noting that the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the Millennium Development Goals, is highly dependent on an increase in access to modern energy services and that the deployment of renewable energy technologies should be one of the key components of any strategy aimed at achieving this increase,

Recognizing that the deployment of renewable energy technologies requires the application of new and emerging technologies, including, among others, materials science, nanotechnology, biotechnology and information and communications technologies,

Recognizing also that the sustainable deployment of emerging technologies can be facilitated by the transfer of technology, under mutually agreed conditions, an increase in domestic capabilities to develop, deploy and maintain technologies to meet local needs, the adoption of innovative financial mechanisms to power investment and the integration into national development agendas of strategies for the deployment of renewable energy technologies,

Recognizing further that any such strategy must be complemented by the transfer of skills and expertise to develop, adapt and modify renewable energy technologies, where necessary, to local conditions and capabilities, including the needs and capabilities of women, and must be supported by financing as well as technology, science and engineering training centres and knowledge networks in order to maximize the use and promote the enhancement of such capabilities,

Decides to make the following recommendations for consideration by Governments, the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development:

(a) Governments are encouraged to take into account the findings of the Commission and take the following actions:

- (i) Ensure that governmental priorities incorporate multi-stakeholder engagement in decision-making in regard to programme design, implementation, deployment, monitoring and evaluation and take

- into consideration local populations and mainstreaming of a gender perspective in the deployment of new and emerging and renewable energy technologies;
- (ii) Provide an enabling environment that encourages private and public sector initiatives in new and emerging technologies and the generation and dissemination of renewable energy technologies, including supporting universities and research centres linked to global learning networks and national diaspora, funded through a range of sources such as Governments, donors, venture capitalists and/or public-private partnerships dedicated to renewable energy technologies;
 - (iii) Adopt economic, regulatory and governmental procurement policies to foster competition and private sector development and attract domestic and foreign direct investment;
 - (iv) Consider the application of appropriate policy instruments in the private sector, such as incentives, subsidy schemes, feed-in tariffs, tax credits, financial guarantees and reduction of import duties, to support technology deployment in market niches and encourage joint ventures and foreign direct investment in the manufacture and use of renewable energy technologies;
 - (v) Enhance local innovative capabilities in the area of new and emerging technologies and renewable energy technologies with improved efficiency, developed and adapted to local conditions, through support for research, extension services, capacity-building and other related activities;
 - (vi) Encourage private enterprises to adopt and deploy renewable energy technologies through public-private partnerships;
 - (vii) Promote the establishment of science and technology parks, business incubators and innovation clusters to induce private sector participation in the development, growth and commercialization of new and emerging technologies, including renewable energy technologies;
- (b) The international community is encouraged to enhance the provision of technical assistance in capacity-building and strategic planning to promote new and emerging technologies and renewable energy technologies;
- (c) The Commission on Science and Technology for Development:
- (i) Is encouraged to continue serving as a platform for sharing examples of good practices and promoting North-South and South-South partnerships, especially in regard to new and emerging technologies and the transfer and deployment of renewable energy technologies;
 - (ii) Is encouraged to promote, in the context of the Internet-based science, technology and innovation collaborative network established in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2009/8 of 24 July 2009, collaborative networking as well as the initiation and hosting of sub-regional networks as operational models for replication, with the cooperation of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Trade Centre;
 - (iii) Is invited to make a contribution, in close collaboration with its Gender Advisory Board, to the consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-fifth session of the theme "Access and participation of women and girls in education, training and science and technology, including for the promotion of women's equal access to full employment and decent work";
 - (iv) Is encouraged to collaborate with the World Intellectual Property Organization in the facilitation of access to the database of research for development and innovation at minimum cost for all developing countries;
- (d) The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development is encouraged:
- (i) To increase significantly its efforts to conduct science, technology and innovation policy reviews, in response to a high demand from member countries, in close collaboration with other relevant international organizations, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and with the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the regional commissions and other appropriate stakeholders, including the World Bank and other international and regional development banks, with a view to assisting developing countries in strengthening their science, technology and innovation systems;
 - (ii) To carry out, in collaboration with other relevant international organizations, such as the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Renewable Energy Agency, a review of national experiences in developing local innovative capabilities related to new and emerging technologies and renewable energy technologies, including educational programmes and long-term training activities;
 - (iii) To survey collaborative research and development mechanisms that have been effective in facilitating the development and deployment of new and emerging technologies and renewable energy technologies through the global science and innovation infrastructure, including universities, institutions, centres of excellence, business incubators and science and technology parks, as well as through other innovation modalities, with a view to assisting developing countries to build capabilities;
 - (iv) To carry out research into methods for developing countries to integrate the deployment of renewable energy technologies into their national development and science, technology and innovation strategies, especially those related to poverty reduction and meeting the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including the Millennium Development Goals, taking into account a gender perspective.

By decision 2010/229 of the same date, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on its thirteenth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its fourteenth (2011) session.

Intersessional panel meeting. The CSTD intersessional panel meeting (Geneva, 15–17 December) [E/CN.16/2011/CRP.1] considered technologies to address challenges such as agriculture and water; measuring the impact of ICTs for development; and follow-up to WSIS.

Participation in Commission work

On 19 July, the Council adopted three decisions, inviting NGOs and civil society entities, on an exceptional basis, to participate in the work of CSTD until 2011 (decision 2010/226); extending the arrangements for the participation of academic entities in the Commission's work (decision 2010/227); and extending the arrangements for the participation of business sector entities, including the private sector (decision 2010/228).

Information and communication technologies

During 2010, the United Nations continued to consider that the benefits of new technologies, especially ICT, were available to all, in keeping with recommendations contained in the ministerial declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its 2000 high-level segment [YUN 2000, p. 799], the Millennium Declaration [ibid., p. 49], and the Declaration of Principles and Plan of Action [YUN 2003, p. 857] adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society (WSIS) [ibid.], and the Tunis Commitment and the Digital Solidarity Agenda adopted at its second phase [YUN 2005, p. 933].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/433], adopted resolution 65/141 without vote [agenda item 17].

Information and communications technologies for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/183 of 21 December 2001, 57/238 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 59/220 of 22 December 2004, 60/252 of 27 March 2006, 62/182 of 19 December 2007, 63/202 of 19 December 2008 and 64/187 of 21 December 2009, Economic and Social Council resolutions 2006/46 of 28 July 2006, 2008/3 of 18 July 2008 and 2009/7 of 24 July 2009 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 2010/2 of 19 July 2010 on the assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Noting that cultural diversity is the common heritage of humankind and that the information society should be founded on and stimulate respect for cultural identity, cultural and linguistic diversity, traditions and religions and foster dialogue among cultures and civilizations, and noting also that the promotion, affirmation and preservation of diverse cultural identities and languages as reflected in relevant agreed United Nations documents, including the Universal Declaration on Cultural Diversity of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, will further enrich the information society,

Recalling the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society at its first phase, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and endorsed by the General Assembly, and the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society adopted by the Summit at its second phase, held in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005, and endorsed by the General Assembly,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society at the regional and international levels,

Noting the establishment of the Broadband Commission for Digital Development at the invitation of the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and taking note of the report of the Commission prepared in cooperation with the International Telecommunication Union and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled "A 2010 Leadership Imperative: The Future Built on Broadband", which calls for broadband-friendly practice and policies towards the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, to ensure that the potential of broadband connectivity and content are at the service of development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on enhanced cooperation on public policy issues pertaining to the Internet, and recognizing the need to promote the participation of intergovernmental organizations from developing countries in future consultations,

Taking note also of the note by the Secretary-General on the continuation of the Internet Governance Forum,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in assisting the Economic and Social Council as the focal point in the system-wide follow-up, in particular the review and assessment of the progress made in implementing the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, while at the same time maintaining its original mandate on science and technology for development,

Noting the thirteenth session of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, held in Geneva from 17 to 21 May 2010,

Recognizing that, while in recent years considerable progress has been made in access to information and communications technologies, including the steady increase in Internet access to nearly one quarter of the world's population, the expanding penetration of cellular telephony and the availability of multilingual content and Internet addresses, the need remains to reduce the digital divide and to ensure that the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communications technologies, are available to all, and recognizing in this regard that less than 18 per cent of the population in developing countries uses the Internet, compared to more than 60 per cent in developed countries,

Reaffirming the need to harness the potential of information and communications technologies to promote the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and sustainable economic growth,

Expressing concern about the impact of the world financial and economic crisis on the positive trends in the diffusion of information and communications technology and the investment needed to ensure universal access to information and communications technologies,

Stressing the need to reduce the digital divide, including with regard to such issues as international interconnection charges for Internet use, and to ensure that the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communications technologies, are available to all,

Acknowledging that the Internet, a central element of the infrastructure of the information society, has evolved from a research and academic facility into a global facility available to the public,

Recognizing that the international management of the Internet should be multilateral, transparent and democratic, with the full involvement of Governments, the private sector, civil society and international organizations, as stated in paragraph 29 of the Tunis Agenda,

Recognizing also the importance of the Internet Governance Forum and its mandate as a forum for multi-stakeholder dialogue on various matters, including public policy issues related to key elements of Internet governance, in order to foster the sustainability, robustness, security, stability and development of the Internet, as well as its role in building partnerships among different stakeholders so as to help in addressing the various issues of Internet governance, while acknowledging the calls for improvements in its working methods,

Emphasizing the significance and urgency of the process towards enhanced cooperation in full consistency with the mandate provided in paragraph 71 of the Tunis Agenda and the need for enhanced cooperation to enable Governments on an equal footing to carry out their roles and responsibilities in respect of international public policy issues pertaining to the Internet but not in respect of the day-to-day technical and operational matters that do not impact upon those issues,

Recalling the consultations, at the fourth meeting of the Internet Governance Forum, held in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, from 15 to 18 November 2009, on the future of the Forum, which generally welcomed the renewal of its mandate and recognized the need for further discussion on the improvement of its working methods,

Welcoming the efforts undertaken by the host countries in organizing the first, second, third, fourth and fifth meetings of the Internet Governance Forum, held in Athens in 2006, in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 2007, in Hyderabad, India, in 2008, in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, in 2009 and in Vilnius in 2010, respectively,

Noting the contribution of the Global Alliance for Information and Communications Technologies and Development to the work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development,

Recognizing the pivotal role of the United Nations system in promoting development, including with respect to enhancing access to information and communications technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with all relevant stakeholders,

Welcoming, in view of the existing gaps in information and communications technologies infrastructure, the Connect Africa summits held in Kigali in 2007 and in Cairo in 2008, the Connect the Commonwealth of Independent States summit held in Minsk in 2009 and the meeting of Commonwealth countries held in Colombo in 2010, which are regional initiatives aimed at mobilizing human, financial and technical resources to accelerate the implementation of the connectivity goals of the World Summit on the Information Society,

1. Recognizes that information and communications technologies have the potential to provide new solutions to development challenges, particularly in the context of globalization, and can foster economic growth, competitiveness, access to information and knowledge, poverty eradication and social inclusion that will help to expedite the integration of all countries, especially developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, into the global economy;

2. Expresses concern regarding the digital divide in access to information and communications technology tools and broadband connectivity between countries at different levels of development, which affects many economically and socially relevant applications in areas such as government, business, health and education, and further expresses concern with regard to the special challenges faced in the area of broadband connectivity by developing countries, including the least developed countries, small island developing States and landlocked developing countries;

3. Acknowledges that a gender divide exists as part of the digital divide, and encourages all stakeholders to ensure the full participation of women in the information society and women's access to the new technologies, especially information and communications technologies for development;

4. Stresses that, for the majority of the poor, the development promise of science and technology, including information and communications technologies, remains unfulfilled, and emphasizes the need to effectively harness technology, including information and communications technologies, to bridge the digital divide;

5. Also stresses the important role of Governments in the design of public policies and in the provision of public services responsive to national needs and priorities through, inter alia, the effective use of information and communications technologies, including on the basis of a multi-stakeholder approach, to support national development efforts;

6. Recognizes that, in addition to financing by the public sector, financing of information and communications technologies infrastructure by the private sector has come to play an important role in many countries and that domestic financing is being augmented by North-South flows and South-South cooperation;

7. Also recognizes that information and communications technologies present new opportunities and challenges and that there is a pressing need to address the major impediments that developing countries face in accessing the new technologies, such as insufficient resources, infrastructure, education, capacity, investment and connectivity and issues related to technology ownership, standards and flows, and in this regard calls upon all stakeholders to provide adequate resources, enhanced capacity-building and technology transfer, on mutually agreed terms, to developing countries, particularly the least developed countries;

8. Further recognizes the immense potential that information and communications technologies have in promoting the transfer of technologies in a wide spectrum of socio-economic activity;

9. Recognizes that South-South and triangular cooperation can be useful tools for promoting the development of information and communications technologies;

10. Encourages strengthened and continuing cooperation between and among stakeholders to ensure the effective implementation of the outcomes of the Geneva and Tunis phases of the World Summit on the Information Society through, inter alia, the promotion of national, regional and international multi-stakeholder partnerships, including public-private partnerships, and the promotion of national and regional multi-stakeholder thematic platforms, in a joint effort and dialogue with developing and least developed countries, development partners and actors in the information and communications technologies sector;

11. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by Tunisia, host of the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Telecommunication Union and other relevant international and regional organizations, for organizing annually the ICT 4 All Forum and technological exhibition as a platform within the framework of the follow-up to the Summit to promote a dynamic business environment for the information and communications technologies sector worldwide;

12. Encourages the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, within their respective mandates, to contribute to the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, and emphasizes the need for resources in this regard;

13. Notes the organization of the World Summit on the Information Society Forum 2010 by the International Telecommunication Union, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to facilitate interaction among actors implementing the Summit's action lines, and invites organizers to fully engage Governments, international organizations, civil society and the private sector in the preparations for the World Summit on the Information Society Forum 2011, to be held in Geneva from 16 to 20 May 2011;

14. Recognizes the urgent need to harness the potential of knowledge and technology, and in this regard encourages the United Nations development system to continue its effort to promote the use of information and communications technologies as a critical enabler of development and a catalyst for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

15. Also recognizes the role of the United Nations Group on the Information Society as an inter-agency mechanism of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination designed to coordinate United Nations implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society;

16. Further recognizes that the Internet governance-related outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, namely the process towards enhanced cooperation and the convening of the Internet Governance Forum, are to be pursued by the Secretary-General through two distinct processes, and recognizes that the two processes may be complementary;

17. Decides to extend the mandate of the Internet Governance Forum for a further five years, and in this regard invites the Secretary-General to continue to convene the Forum for multi-stakeholder policy dialogue on Internet governance issues according to its mandate as set out in paragraph 72 of the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society, while at the same time recognizing the need to improve the Forum, with a view to linking it to the broader dialogue on global Internet governance;

18. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council, in paragraph 30 of its resolution 2010/2, to invite the Chair of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to establish, in an open and inclusive manner, a working group which would seek, compile and review inputs from all Member States and all other stakeholders on improvements to the Internet Governance Forum, in line with the mandate set out in the Tunis Agenda, and would make recommendations, as appropriate, to the Commission at its fourteenth session, in 2011, in a report that would constitute an input from the Commission to the General Assembly, through the Council;

19. Stresses that the consideration of improvements to the Internet Governance Forum should be based on the inputs to be provided to the working group by all Member States and all other stakeholders, including those comments received during the online consultation and the consultation undertaken by the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs during the fourth meeting of the Forum, held in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, in November 2009, with particular consideration for, inter alia, enhancing the participation of developing countries, exploring further voluntary options for financing the Forum and improving the modalities of the preparation process and the work and functioning of the secretariat of the Forum;

20. Decides that the desirability of the continuation of the Internet Governance Forum will be considered again by Member States in the General Assembly in the context of a ten-year review of the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit on the Information Society in 2015;

21. Stresses the need for the enhanced participation of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in all Internet Governance Forum meetings, and in this regard invites Member States, as well as other stakeholders, to support the participation of Governments and other stakeholders from developing countries in the Forum itself, as well as in the preparatory meetings;

22. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council, in paragraph 24 of its resolution 2010/2, to invite the Secretary-General to convene open and inclusive consultations involving all Member States and all other stakeholders with a view to assisting the process towards enhanced cooperation in order to enable Governments on an equal footing to carry out their roles and responsibilities in respect of international public policy issues pertaining to the Internet but not in respect of the day-to-day technical and operational matters that do not impact upon those issues, through a balanced participation of all stakeholders, especially developing countries, in their respective roles and responsibilities, as stated in paragraph 35 of the Tunis Agenda, requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its sixty-sixth session, through the Council, a report on the outcome of those consultations, and takes note of the invitation circulated by the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs to participate in the open consultations on enhanced cooperation on international public policy issues pertaining to the Internet;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session, through the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the Economic and Social Council, a report on the status of the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution, as part of his annual reporting on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society at the regional and international levels;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session the item entitled "Information and communications technologies for development".

Cooperation on governance policy issues pertaining to the Internet

In a May note [A/65/78-E/2010/68], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 60/252 [YUN 2006, p. 999], the Secretary-General, in consultation with Forum participants, examined the desirability of continuing the Internet Governance Forum beyond the initial five years. He recommended that the Assembly extend the Forum's mandate; in addition, based on the views expressed by participants, a number of improvements to its format, functions and operations should be considered.

The Economic and Social Council took note of that report by decision 2010/230 of 19 July.

Internet Governance Forum. Established in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1001] to support the Secretary-

General in carrying out the wsis mandate to convene a multi-stakeholder policy dialogue on Internet governance issues, the Internet Governance Forum held its fifth annual meeting (Vilnius, Lithuania, 14–17 September) on the theme "Developing the Future Together". Its sessions addressed managing critical Internet resources; access and diversity; security, openness and privacy; Internet governance for development; emerging issues—cloud computing; and taking stock of Internet governance and the way forward. The 2010 Forum devoted more space to regional and national initiatives. More than 1,400 participants from 107 countries attended the event. By a letter of 21 October [A/C.2/65/2], Lithuania transmitted the Chair's summary of the 2010 Forum.

Global Alliance for ICT and Development. The Global Alliance for Information and Communications Technologies and Development, established in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1004], continued to focus its attention on helping developing countries integrate ICTs into their development strategies and programmes and on mainstreaming ICT into the UN development agenda. The fifth annual forum of the Global Alliance (Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates, 5–6 December) discussed how best to use ICTs to achieve the MDGs.

Follow-up to World Summit on the Information Society

In response to Economic and Social Council resolutions 2006/46 [YUN 2006, p. 1001], 2007/8 [YUN 2007, p. 853], 2008/3 [YUN 2008, p. 931] and 2009/7 [YUN 2009, p. 822], the Secretary-General reported in March [A/65/64-E/2010/12] on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the wsis outcomes at the regional and international levels, also identifying obstacles and constraints encountered. E-government had become a powerful tool of development and essential to the achievement of the MDGs. Countries that had embraced e-government had experienced its transformative power—in revitalizing public administration, overhauling public management, fostering inclusive leadership and moving civil services towards higher efficiency, transparency and accountability. Even in small, least developed countries (LDCs) with limited economies of scale, the mobile revolution and growth of high-speed broadband and wireless access had begun to have a measurable economic impact, reinforced by expansion of e-government capacity in the public sector. The report highlighted the need for capacity-building, policy, content and indicators in order to build a more inclusive society and bridge the digital divide. In particular, capacity-building programmes at the international and regional levels were important. Bridging the digital divide was a priority area of concern for all regional commissions. The United Nations Economic Commission for Europe noted that the gap between the most and least developed European countries in terms of broadband penetration was widening. Similarly, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean observed the need to reduce the digital divide in terms of access and quality of access in building a more inclusive information society. In the region of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the level and speed of ICT uptake varied considerably. Remote and poor rural areas were particularly underserved and usage was less prevalent among women and certain disadvantaged communities. The Economic Commission for Africa noted that many African countries had made great progress towards harmonizing national e-strategies and plans as well as building subregional frameworks for regional economic integration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/2010/31], adopted resolution 2010/2 without vote [agenda item 13(b)].

Assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Recalling also its resolution 2006/46 of 28 July 2006 entitled "Follow-up to the World Summit on the Information Society and review of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development" and the mandate that it gave to the Commission,

Recalling further its resolution 2009/7 of 24 July 2009 on the assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 64/187 of 21 December 2009 on information and communication technologies for development,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit at the regional and international levels,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Improvements and innovations in existing financing mechanisms: information and communication technology for development",

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for his role in helping to ensure completion of the aforementioned reports in a timely manner,

Taking stock: reviewing the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society

1. Notes the ongoing implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, emphasizing in particular its multi-stakeholder nature, the roles played in this regard by leading agencies as action line facilitators and the roles of the regional commissions and the United Nations Group on the Information Society, and expresses its appreciation for the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in assisting the Economic and Social Council as the focal point in the system-wide follow-up to the World Summit;

2. Takes note of the respective reports of many United Nations entities, with their own executive summaries, submitted as inputs for the elaboration of the annual report of the Secretary-General to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and published on the website of the Commission as mandated in Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/8 of 25 July 2007, and recalls the importance of close coordination among the leading action line facilitators and with the secretariat of the Commission;

3. Notes the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit at the regional level facilitated by the regional commissions, as observed in the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit at the regional and international levels, including the steps taken in this respect, and emphasizes the need to continue to address issues of specific interest to each region, focusing on the challenges and obstacles that each may be facing with regard to the implementation of all goals and principles established by the World Summit, with particular attention to information and communications technology for development;

4. Reiterates the importance of maintaining a process of coordinating the multi-stakeholder implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit through effective tools, with the goals of exchanging information among action line facilitators, identifying issues that need improvement and discussing the modalities of reporting the overall implementation process, encourages all stakeholders to continue to contribute information to the stocktaking database on the implementation of the goals established by the World Summit, maintained by the International Telecommunication Union, and invites United Nations entities to update information on their initiatives in the stocktaking database;

5. Notes the benefits of forums such as the ICT 4 All Forum convened by Tunisia on 24 and 25 November 2009, which provided an opportunity to share national experiences in the use of information and communications technology for the development and promotion of entrepreneurship and competitiveness;

6. Highlights the urgent need for the incorporation of the recommendations of the outcomes of the World Summit in the revised guidelines for United Nations country teams on preparing the common country assessments and United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks, including the addition of an information and communications technology for development component;

7. Notes the holding in Geneva from 10 to 14 May 2010 of the World Summit on the Information Society Forum 2010, organized by the International Telecommunication Union, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Development Programme as a multi-stakeholder platform for the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit and to facilitate the implementation of the World Summit action lines;

8. Calls upon all States, in building the information society, to take steps to avoid and to refrain from taking any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that impedes the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries and hinders their well-being;

9. Reaffirms that, while the digital divide may be shrinking in some areas, many challenges remain unaddressed, with significant gaps existing within economies and societies that affect the demand for and the ability to use information and communications technologies;

10. Notes with dissatisfaction that, for the majority of the poor, the development promise of science and technology, including information and communications technologies, remains unfulfilled, and emphasizes the need to effectively harness technology, including information and communications technologies, to bridge the digital divide;

11. Recognizes that information and communications technologies present new opportunities and challenges and that there is a pressing need to address the major impediments that developing countries face in accessing the new technologies, such as insufficient resources, infrastructure, education, capacity, investment and connectivity and issues related to technology ownership, standards and flows, and in this regard calls upon all stakeholders to provide adequate resources, enhanced capacity-building and transfer of technology to developing countries, particularly the least developed countries;

12. Expresses its concern regarding the widening gap in broadband connectivity between countries at different levels of development, which affects many economically and socially relevant applications in areas such as government, business, health and education, and also expresses its concern with regard to the special challenges in the area of broadband connectivity faced by the least developed countries, the small island developing States, the landlocked developing countries and the heavily indebted poor countries;

13. Notes with concern the inequality of access to broadband infrastructure and services between developed and developing nations and within nations and, in particular, the broadband divide that further marginalizes the poor, rural communities and other disadvantaged groups such as women, the disabled and the elderly, and in this context recognizes the importance of current initiatives aimed at achieving rapid broadband deployment and the need to prioritize innovative approaches within national and regional development strategies in this regard;

14. Welcomes the recent establishment of the Broadband Commission for Digital Development at the initiative of the International Telecommunication Union and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with the key aim of accelerating the attainment of the aforementioned goals through the introduction of ubiquitous access to broadband connectivity within the global partnership for development;

15. Notes that, while a solid foundation for capacity-building in information and communications technology has been laid in many areas with regard to building the information society, there is still a need for continuing efforts to address the ongoing challenges, especially those faced by developing countries and the least developed countries, and draws attention to the positive impact of broadened capacity development that involves institutions, organizations and entities dealing with information and communications technologies and Internet governance issues;

16. Recognizes the need to focus on capacity development policies and sustainable support to further enhance the impact of activities and initiatives at the national and local levels aimed at providing advice, services and support, with a view to building a people-centred, inclusive and development-oriented information society;

17. Notes that topics that were not central at the first and second phases of the World Summit continue to emerge, such as the potential of information and communications technologies to combat climate change, the protection of online privacy and the empowerment and protection of vulnerable groups of society, in particular children and young people, particularly against cyberexploitation and abuse;

18. Reiterates the importance of information and communications technology indicators as a monitoring and evaluation tool for measuring the digital divide between countries and within societies and in informing decision makers when formulating policies and strategies for social, cultural and economic development, and emphasizes that the standardization and harmonization of reliable and regularly updated information and communications technology indicators that capture the performance, efficiency, affordability and quality of goods and services is essential for implementing information and communications technology policies;

Internet governance

19. Reaffirms the principles enunciated at the World Summit that the Internet has evolved into a global facility available to the public, that its governance should constitute a core issue of the information society agenda and that the international management of the Internet should be multilateral, transparent and democratic, with the full involvement of Governments, the private sector, civil society and international organizations and should ensure an equitable distribution of resources, facilitate access for all and ensure a stable and secure functioning of the Internet, taking into account multilingualism;

20. Reaffirms also paragraph 35 of the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society, which states that the management of the Internet encompasses both technical and public policy issues and should involve all stakeholders and relevant intergovernmental and international organizations and that:

(a) Policy authority for Internet-related public policy issues is the sovereign right of States, which have rights and responsibilities for international Internet-related public policy issues;

(b) The private sector has had, and should continue to have, an important role in the development of the Internet, in both the technical and the economic fields;

(c) Civil society has played an important role in Internet matters, especially at the community level, and should continue to play such a role;

(d) Intergovernmental organizations have had, and should continue to have, a facilitating role in the coordination of Internet-related public policy issues;

(e) International organizations have had, and should continue to have, an important role in the development of Internet-related technical standards and relevant policies;

21. Recognizes that the Internet governance-related outcomes of the World Summit, namely the process towards enhanced cooperation and the convening of the Internet Governance Forum, are to be pursued by the Secretary-General of the United Nations through two distinct processes, and also recognizes that the two processes may be complementary;

Enhanced cooperation

22. Recalls paragraphs 68 to 71 of the Tunis Agenda;

23. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on enhanced cooperation on public policy issues pertaining to the Internet, which summarizes the responses of international organizations to the request to provide an annual report on efforts made towards enhanced cooperation, and notes the interactive deliberations of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, at its thirteenth session, regarding enhanced cooperation;

24. Invites the Secretary-General to convene open and inclusive consultations involving all Member States and all other stakeholders with a view to assisting the process towards enhanced cooperation in order to enable Governments on an equal footing to carry out their roles and responsibilities in respect of international public policy issues pertaining to the Internet but not in respect of the day-to-day technical and operational matters that do not impact upon those issues, through a balanced participation of all stakeholders, in their respective roles and responsibilities, as stated in paragraph 35 of the Tunis Agenda, and requests that the consultations be held before the end of 2010 and their outcome reported to the General Assembly for consideration at its sixty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

Internet Governance Forum

25. Notes the deliberations of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development on the outcome of the fourth meeting of the Internet Governance Forum, held in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, from 15 to 18 November 2009;

26. Expresses its appreciation for the work done by the Chair, the secretariat and the host Governments of the meetings of the Internet Governance Forum, and looks forward to the results of the fifth meeting, to be held in Vilnius from 14 to 17 September 2010;

27. Notes the recent emergence of several forums on Internet governance at the regional and national levels;

28. Notes also the deliberations of the Internet Governance Forum at its meetings, in which all stakeholders engage in a multi-stakeholder policy dialogue on a wide range of Internet governance issues, as mandated in paragraph 72 of the Tunis Agenda;

29. Notes further the interactive discussions of the Internet Governance Forum at its fourth meeting, including those held during the stocktaking session chaired by the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs in response to paragraph 76 of the Tunis Agenda, in which the Secretary-General of the United Nations was requested to examine the desirability of the continuation of the Forum, in consultation with Forum participants, within five years of its creation, and to make recommendations to the Member States in this regard, and notes the engagement of Forum participants through online contributions and through statements delivered during the stocktaking session;

30. Invites the Chair of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to establish, in an open and inclusive manner, a working group which would seek, compile and review inputs from all Member States and all other stakeholders on improvements to the Internet Governance Forum, in line with the mandate set out in the Tunis Agenda, and would make recommendations, as appropriate, to the Commission at its fourteenth session, in 2011, in a report that would constitute an input from the Commission to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, should the mandate of the Internet Governance Forum be extended;

The road ahead

31. Urges United Nations entities still not actively cooperating in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit, through the United Nations system, to take the necessary steps and commit to a people-centred, inclusive and development-oriented information society and to catalyse the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

32. Calls upon all stakeholders to keep as a priority concern the goal of bridging the digital divide, to put into effect sound strategies that contribute to the development of e-government and to continue to focus on pro-poor information and communications technology policies and applications, including with regard to broadband access at the grass-roots level, with a view to narrowing the digital divide between and within countries;

33. Urges all stakeholders to prioritize the development of innovative approaches that will stimulate the provision of universal access to affordable broadband infrastructure for developing countries and the use of relevant broadband services in order to ensure the development of a people-centred, inclusive and development-oriented information society, and to minimize the digital divide;

34. Calls upon international and regional organizations to continue to assess and report on a regular basis on the universal accessibility of nations to information and communications technologies, with the aim of creating equitable opportunities for the growth of the information and communications technology sectors of developing countries;

35. Urges all countries to make concrete efforts to fulfil their commitments under the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development;

36. Calls upon United Nations organizations and other relevant organizations and forums, in accordance with the outcomes of the World Summit, to periodically review and modify the methodologies for information and communications technology indicators, taking into account different levels of development and national circumstances;

37. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the special trust fund established by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to support the review and assessment work of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development regarding follow-up to the World Summit;

38. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, on a yearly basis, a report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolutions on the assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit.

Economic and social trends

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2011 [Sales No.E.11.II.C.2], jointly issued by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) and UNCTAD and the five UN regional commissions, stated that after a year of fragile and uneven recovery, global economic growth had started to decelerate in mid-2010. Weaknesses in major developed economies hindered the global recovery and posed risks for world economic stability. The unprecedented scale of the policy measures taken by Governments during the early stage of the crisis had helped stabilize financial markets and jump-start recovery. The policy response weakened during 2010, however, as widening fiscal deficits and rising public debt undermined support for further fiscal stimuli. Many Governments, particularly those in developed countries, were shifting towards fiscal austerity. Weaker global growth was expected due to remaining multiple risks to global recovery. The recovery had been dragged down by the developed economies, and developing country growth was also moderating. The crisis caused significant setbacks in progress towards the Millennium Development Goals. Between 2007 and the end of 2009, at least 30 million jobs were lost worldwide, and long-term unemployment was rising.

As more Governments embarked on fiscal tightening, the prospects for a quick recovery of employment looked gloomy. Inflation rates remained at low levels despite the massive monetary expansion. World trade had seen a 10.5 per cent rebound in 2010, but was expected to grow by only about 6.5 per cent in both 2011 and 2012. Financial factors were exacerbating the volatility in food and other commodity prices. Net transfers from developing to developed countries had increased again in 2010, amounting to an estimated $557 billion—a slight increase compared to the previous year. Net private capital flows to developing countries had increased significantly. The crisis had heightened the need for official development assistance, yet aid delivery was falling short of commitments by the donor community. The debt situation in many developing countries had improved, but problems remained. The total external debt (public and private) of developing countries as a share of gross domestic product had risen to 24.8 per cent in 2009.

Five challenges had to be addressed, according to the report. Additional fiscal stimulus, in tandem with appropriate monetary policies, was needed in the short run to boost the global recovery. Fiscal policy needed to be redesigned to strengthen its impact on employment and aid in the transition towards promoting structural change for more sustainable economic growth. Fiscal and monetary stimulus required more synergy, while counteracting damaging international spillover effects in the form of increased currency tensions and volatile short-term capital flows. Developing countries needed more predictable access to development finance. Finally, major economies had to find ways to arrive at credible and effective policy coordination.

A report issued in May [E/2010/73] provided an update, as at mid-2010, of the World Economic Situation and Prospects 2010 report [YUN 2009, p. 916].

Retooling global development was the main theme of the World Economic and Social Survey 2010 [Sales No. E.10.II.C1; overview E/2010/50], issued in April. The global economic crisis, coming on top of the food, fuel and climate change crises, had exposed systemic weaknesses which the international community had to find ways to overcome. Those weaknesses derived from the incoherence between the current set of institutions and rules established more than 60 years prior, together with the founding of the United Nations and related institutions, and the much more extensive economic interdependence and complexity induced by decades of globalization. Reshaping global mechanisms and strengthening national capabilities in support of the shared goal of poverty reduction and development offered a feasible path towards overcoming those weaknesses and achieving policy coherence within the global economy. A central concern of the new thinking would be the need for a focus on sustainable development entailing an approach that would balance material wealth improvements with protection of the natural environment and ensure social equity and justice—rather than a focus narrowly concentrated on economic growth and private wealth generation based on market incentives. The complexity of global challenges required a new kind of thinking and the striking of a new balance between national and global decision-making.

Development policy and public administration

Committee for Development Policy

The Committee for Development Policy (CDP), at its twelfth session (New York, 22–26 March) [E/2010/33], addressed three themes: the impact of global crises on gender equality and the empowerment of women; the international support measures specifically available for least developed countries (LDCs); UN system support for small island developing States, and coherence of the climate change agenda in relation not only to its own financial architecture, but also with respect to other development policies. It also monitored the development progress of countries graduating from the LDC category: Equatorial Guinea, Maldives and Samoa. Women were likely to be disproportionately affected by crises because of their weaker position in the economic, legal, political and sociocultural spheres, which prevailed owing to deeply ingrained structural inequalities. If not tackled immediately, the ongoing crises—the financial crisis, the food security crisis under the looming shadow of climate change, and the crisis of human rights and security—threatened and might reverse some of the advances made since the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1168]. With regard to the effectiveness of the international support measures under the Programmes of Action for LDCs, the Committee called attention to the fact that those measures had achieved limited results. It considered that there was a need to review the existing international support measures so as to indicate how they could be improved and possibly complemented by additional national and international measures.

In reviewing UN system support for small island developing States, the Committee took note of shortcomings in the way the international strategy for the sustainable development of those countries had been designed, which made it more difficult to monitor and compromised its effectiveness. The Committee also noted that reporting on implementation needed to be enhanced and made more comprehensive and systematic. Finally, the Committee considered issues of coherence in climate change in the post-Copenhagen context, in particular with respect to its financing architecture. It warned that the postponement of mitigation measures would result in costlier adaptation. It noted that funding for adaptation and mitigation was far from adequate, despite a proliferation of financing mechanisms. The Committee proposed that the regime of the financial architecture for climate change should come under the aegis of the UN Climate Change Conference, and that policies involving climate should facilitate economic development in a sustainable way.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/9 [draft: E/2010/L.30] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy on its twelfth session

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 59/209 of 20 December 2004 on a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries, and resolution 63/227 of 19 December 2008 on the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010,

Recalling also its resolutions 2007/34 of 27 July 2007, 2009/17 of 29 July 2009 and 2009/35 of 31 July 2009,

Expressing its conviction that countries graduating from the least developed country category should be able to continue and sustain their progress and development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its twelfth session;

2. Decides to forward the chapter of the report on international support measures for the least developed countries to the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries for further consideration with regard to the preparations for that Conference;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Policy, at its thirteenth session, to examine and make recommendations on the themes chosen by the Economic and Social Council for the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2011;

4. Takes note of the proposals made by the Committee regarding its future programme of work;

5. Reiterates the importance for development partners to implement concrete measures in support of the transition strategy for ensuring durable graduation;

6. Requests the Committee to continue to monitor the development progress of countries graduating from the list of least developed countries and to include its findings in its annual report to the Council;

7. Invites the Chair and, as necessary, other members of the Committee to continue the practice of reporting orally on the work of the Committee.

Appointment. By a May note [E/2010/9/Add.14], the Secretary-General nominated Victor Polterovich (Russian Federation) to replace Vladimir Popov on the Committee, following his resignation. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2010/201 C of 20 July, appointed Mr. Polterovich for a term expiring on 31 December 2012.

Public administration

Committee of Experts. The Committee of Experts on Public Administration, at its ninth session (New York, 19–23 April) [E/2010/44], had before it Secretariat notes on challenges to and opportunities for public administration in the context of the financial and economic crisis [E/C.16/2010/2]; a review of the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance [E/C.16/2010/3]; and the public administration perspective on the internationally agreed development goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and empowerment of women [E/C.16/2010/4]. The Committee recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of a draft resolution on the Committee's report.

In considering the challenges to and opportunities for public administration in the context of the financial and economic crisis, the Committee, having examined a case study of Singapore, made recommendations for enhanced public governance for speedy and coordinated policy response; leadership capacity-building in the public sector in the context of the financial and economic crisis; citizen-centred public service delivery; and transparency and accountability. Reviewing the United Nations Programme of Public Administration and Finance, the Committee welcomed the positive changes presented by the Division for Public Administration and Development Management in its new strategy. It urged the Division to pay due attention to the differences among developing countries and recognize the meagre information on countries in the South. Specifically, the Committee recommended that the Division focus on accurate, authentic and relevant data and the creation of databases with indicators of significance to public administration, given current matters of concern to Member States, such as local governments and the resources they received from the central government; the ratio of public sector employees to the overall population and within public sector budget allocations per services area; indicators that reflected the new model of open government; processes and actions of repositioning the public sector in development; and trends of public administration development per country and according to relevant criteria, such as transparency, accountability and citizen-centric service delivery. The Committee recognized that other international organizations, such as OECD, the World Bank and the World Economic Forum, were using the indicators of the UN e-government survey, one of the Division's products, in their own reports. The Committee also welcomed the public administration knowledge space initiative currently being constructed. In three working groups, the Committee discussed innovative ways to enrich collaboration with the Division. The groups focused on development management and citizen engagement; E-mobile governmental development; and institutional and human resources development in the public sector development.

Following a discussion of the public administration perspective on the theme of the annual ministerial review of the Economic and Social Council: implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and empowerment of women, the Committee recommended, among others, that gender equality remain an important goal, with ICT providing a potent tool for advancing women's empowerment, and that greater attention be paid to women's underrepresentation in public administration, especially high civil service positions. Recognizing the monetary value of domestic labour and care work performed mainly by women, the Committee recommended that the Secretariat develop a methodology to consider inclusion of such values in official national accounts. The Committee adopted a multi-year programme for 2011–2013, on the theme "Public governance for results to improve the quality of human life", with different subthemes for each of the three years. For its 2011 session, the subthemes were: a conceptual framework; public governance for results in post-conflict and post-crisis countries; social protection for vulnerable populations; and performance management in governance. Papers on the themes would be prepared by selected Committee experts.

The Council, by decision 2010/239 of 21 July, decided that the tenth session of the Committee would be held at UN Headquarters from 4 to 8 April 2011, and approved the provisional agenda for the session. By decision 2010/256 of 23 July, the Council deferred consideration of the Committee's report until a later stage, but before its 2011 substantive session.

Groups of countries in special situations

On 17 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included in the agenda of its sixty-fifth session the item entitled "Groups of countries in special situations", covering the Fourth United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries and the landlocked and transit developing countries, and allocated it to the Second Committee. On 20 December, by decision 65/527, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/65/439] on its consideration of the item.

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated least developed countries (LDCs) were considered in several UN forums in 2010, particularly through the implementation of the Brussels Declaration and Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2001–2010, adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 770] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 55/279 in July of that year [ibid., p. 771]. In addition to the Office of the High Representative for LDCs, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States (OHRLLS), the Committee for Development Policy (CDP) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) also dealt with LDC-related issues. The Least Developed Countries Report 2010 [Sales No. E.10.II.D.5], published by UNCTAD, called for improved international support mechanisms (ISMS) specifically targeted at LDCs, as well as for a new international development architecture (NIDA) for LDCs. The Report proposed five major pillars for NIDA: finance, trade, commodities, technology, and climate change adaptation and mitigation. The new generation of special ISMs should be located and contextualized as part of a larger agenda that included reforming global governance and enhancing the effectiveness of the international development architecture for all developing countries.

LDC list

The number of countries officially designated as LDCs remained at 49: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Comoros, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, the Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, the Sudan, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zambia.

CDP, at its 2010 session (see p. 840), reviewed the development progress of Equatorial Guinea, Maldives and Samoa. The Committee found that the economic crisis did not appear to have derailed Equatorial Guinea and Maldives from their transition to non-least developed country status. Samoa, however, had suffered human and economic losses from the Pacific Ocean tsunami of 29 September 2009, and its economic outlook would continue to be subject to considerable uncertainty, if not adequately supported by the international community.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 September [meeting 115], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/295 [draft: A/64/L.55/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 42].

Extension of the transition period preceding the graduation of Samoa from least developed country status

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 59/209 of 20 December 2004 and 62/97 of 17 December 2007,

Reaffirming its commitment to the process of graduation from least developed country status and to encouraging smooth transition measures for graduating countries,

Giving due consideration to the unprecedented human and material losses which Samoa suffered as a result of the Pacific Ocean tsunami of 29 September 2009, and to the severe disruption this natural disaster caused to the socio-economic progress the nation had for several years been demonstrating,

Inviting the international community to further support the rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction efforts undertaken by the Government of Samoa,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the consequences for Samoa of the Pacific Ocean tsunami of 29 September 2009;

2. Decides to extend by a period of three years, until 1 January 2014, the transition period Samoa is presently benefiting from, until 16 December 2010, before graduation from least developed country status takes place;

3. Underlines the exceptional nature of this decision, taken in the context of the unique disruption caused to Samoa by the tsunami.

Programme of Action

In compliance with General Assembly resolution 64/213 [YUN 2009, p. 835] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2009/31 [ibid., p. 833], the Secretary-General in May submitted a report [A/65/80-E/2010/77] on the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for LDCs. The report included the state of the preparations for the Fourth United Nations Conference on LDCs in 2011 (LDC-IV) and reviewed the progress made towards the international goals and targets contained in the Brussels Programme of Action.

The report concluded that one indicator for the limited success of the Brussels Programme of Action was the low number of graduating countries; only one country (Cape Verde) had graduated from the group of LDCs since 2001. Two more were scheduled to graduate before the 2011 Conference. The UN system and other international development partners supported graduating countries in aiming to secure a "smooth transition" from LDC to post-LDC status. Maldives, which was expected to exit the LDC category in January 2011, was expected to benefit from the smooth transition-related policy of the EU and was negotiating similar concessions with other partners. However, progress was threatened by slow economic growth, diminished resources, fewer trade opportunities and possible reductions in aid flows from donor nations. At the same time, the effects of climate change were becoming increasingly apparent, with a potentially devastating effect on LDCs. In that context, the commitments to building a global partnership for development embodied in the Brussels Programme of Action needed to be reaffirmed and strengthened.

As timely and reliable data were a precondition for both policy planning and monitoring of results, more attention of Governments and donors should focus on the development of sustainable statistical systems. As the Gorée Island Declaration on the development of statistics of November 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 973] reaffirmed, all countries had to be encouraged and supported to define their own priorities, integrating user needs, and set out their own pathways for statistics, from collection to dissemination. Gender needed to be further mainstreamed in a future development partnership between LDCs and their development partners. Positive action to improve the numbers and influence of women in all political decision-making should be introduced and women's work burden had to be reduced. Investments for gender equality had to be scaled up, including by institutionalizing "gender-responsive budgeting".

LDCs needed to be able to protect infant industries, use subsidies, especially in agriculture, use countervailing duties for subsidized imports, give preferential treatment to sectors with a competitive potential, and improve fiscal space to deal with external shocks. The growing heterogeneity among LDCs made it evident that policies needed to be tailored to country circumstances. The 2011 Conference needed to focus on specific vulnerabilities of LDCs. That included adequate capacities to design and implement a long-term development strategy as well as concrete measures to address country-specific vulnerabilities from the high concentration of production and exports, dependency on external resources, low human capital and high risks from external shocks, including from climate change. During Conference preparations, the concerns of LDCs needed to be given greater attention in international forums, in particular at the High-level Plenary Meeting on the MDGs in September.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/27 [draft: E/2010/L.20 & E/2010/SR.46] without vote [agenda item 6 (b)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010,

Recalling also the declaration adopted by the Heads of State and Government and heads of delegations participating in the high-level meeting of the sixty-first session of the General Assembly on the midterm comprehensive global review of the implementation of the Programme of Action, in which they recommitted themselves to addressing the special needs of the least developed countries by making progress towards the goals of poverty eradication, peace and development,

Reaffirming the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2010 on the theme "Implementing the internationally agreed goals and commitments in regard to gender equality and empowerment of women",

Recalling its resolution 2009/31 of 31 July 2009 on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 63/227 of 19 December 2008 and 64/213 of 21 December 2009, in which the Assembly decided to convene, at a high level in 2011, the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Welcoming the progress made in the preparatory process for the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at the country, regional and global levels, and taking note of the outcomes of the Africa regional preparatory meeting and the High-level Asia-Pacific Policy Dialogue, Emphasizing that the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries should strengthen concerted global actions in support of the least developed countries,

1. Takes note of the annual progress report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes the economic and social progress of many of the least developed countries in recent years, which has led to a number of them proceeding towards graduation from the list of the least developed countries and some of them being on track to achieving the growth and universal primary enrolment targets of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 by 2010;

3. Remains concerned, however, about the uneven and insufficient progress achieved in the implementation of the Programme of Action at a time when the international community has embarked on the preparations for the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, which will undertake a comprehensive appraisal of such implementation, and stresses the urgent need to address areas of weakness in the implementation of the Programme of Action and the continued precarious socio-economic situation in many least developed countries through a strong commitment to the objectives, goals and targets of the Programme of Action;

4. Underlines the fact that, for the further implementation of the Programme of Action, the least developed countries and their development partners must be guided by an integral approach, a broader genuine partnership, country ownership, market considerations and results-oriented actions aimed, inter alia, at:

- (a) Fostering a people-centred policy framework;
- (b) Ensuring good governance at both the national and the international levels as essential for the implementation of the commitments embodied in the Programme of Action;
- (c) Building human and institutional capacities;
- (d) Building productive capacities to make globalization work for the least developed countries;
- (e) Enhancing the role of trade in development;
- (f) Reducing vulnerability and protecting the environment;
- (g) Mobilizing financial resources;

5. Urges the least developed countries to strengthen country ownership in the implementation of the Programme of Action by, inter alia, translating its goals and targets into specific measures within their national development frameworks and poverty eradication strategies, including, where they exist, poverty reduction strategy papers, by promoting broad-based and inclusive dialogue on development with relevant stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, and by enhancing domestic resource mobilization and aid management;

6. Urges development partners to fully implement, in a timely and effective manner, commitments made in the Programme of Action and to make individual best efforts to continue, in line with their commitments, to increase their financial and technical support for its effective implementation, taking into account the need for increased resources to address the structural handicaps and constraints being faced by least developed countries in their development efforts, including through capacity-building;

7. Expresses concern that, despite efforts to reduce poverty during the decade 2001–2010, the severity and persistence of poverty remains a serious challenge for the least developed countries, and emphasizes that the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries should strengthen global partnership for development and concerted global actions in support of the least developed countries to accelerate sustained economic growth, sustainable development and poverty eradication;

8. Also expresses concern that the economic and social progress made so far by the least developed countries towards the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, is now threatened by the continuing severe impact of multiple global crises, such as the financial and economic crisis, concerns regarding food security, the energy crisis and the adverse impacts of climate change, and resolves to take appropriate policy measures at all levels, both in the short and long term, and actions in support of the policies and measures of the least developed countries to enable them to overcome the negative impacts created by these crises;

9. Recognizes the important role that foreign direct investment can play in the augmentation of domestic savings, generation of employment and transfer of technology, and encourages appropriate measures to support the least developed countries in attracting inflows of foreign direct investment;

10. Notes with appreciation the efforts made to address the debt problem of the least developed countries, including through the Heavily Indebted Poor Country Initiative and the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative, expresses concern that debt sustainability and indebtedness remain serious challenges for the least developed countries, and in this regard stresses the need to continue to take effective measures, preferably within the existing frameworks, to address the debt problems of the least developed countries;

11. Calls for an effective implementation of the outcome of the 2005 Hong Kong Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization concerning least developed countries, welcomes the actions taken by some individual countries since Monterrey towards the goal of full duty-free and quota-free market access for all least developed countries, and calls upon other developed and developing countries declaring themselves in a position to do so to take steps towards this objective;

12. Also calls for an early, ambitious, successful, balanced and development-oriented conclusion of the Doha Round of trade negotiations;

13. Acknowledges the important nexus between international migration and development and the need to deal with the challenges and opportunities that migration presents to countries of origin, transit and destination, recognizes that migration brings benefits as well as challenges to the global community, and commits to allowing labour migration to meet labour market needs, while complying with relevant national legislation and applicable international instruments;

14. Strongly encourages all development partners and other stakeholders, including relevant organizations of the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions, to make concerted efforts and adopt appropriate policies and strategies in support of national strategies and programmes with a view to enabling the least developed countries to meet all the Millennium Development Goals targets by 2015;

15. Emphasizes the critical importance of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be convened in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2011, in line with paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 63/227;

16. Invites all development partners and other relevant stakeholders, including Member States, the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and other relevant international and regional organizations, within their respective mandates, parliaments, civil society, non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to continue to remain fully engaged in the preparatory process, including through the organization of thematic pre-conference and parallel events, in order to ensure a successful outcome of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in line with previous resolutions of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in this regard;

17. Expresses its concern about the insufficient resources in the trust fund for the least developed countries, and, while expressing its appreciation to those countries that have made voluntary contributions, invites Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, major groups and other donors to contribute to the trust fund in a timely manner to support the substantive preparations for the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries as well as to support the participation of representatives of the least developed countries in both the preparatory process and the Conference itself;

18. Welcomes with appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Turkey to host the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in Istanbul from 30 May to 3 June 2011;

19. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to include the issues of concern to the least developed countries in all relevant reports in the economic, social, environmental and related fields in order to ensure follow-up to the development of those countries in the broader context of the world economy and contribute to preventing their marginalization while promoting their further integration into the world economy;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a ten-year comprehensive report on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, identifying, inter alia, lessons learned and best practices as well as structural constraints and handicaps encountered, resource requirements and resource gaps in achieving the set objectives of the Programme of Action.

Preparatory process for Fourth UN Conference on LDCs

By resolution 63/227 [YUN 2008, p. 944], the General Assembly decided to convene LDC-IV at a high level in 2011, with the mandate to comprehensively assess the implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2001–2010 [YUN 2001, p. 770]. By the same resolution, the Assembly decided to convene, towards the end of 2010, and/or early in 2011, no more than two meetings of the intergovernmental preparatory committee, to be preceded by two regional-level preparatory meetings, supported by broad-based and inclusive country-level preparations. By resolution 64/213 [YUN 2009, p. 835], the Assembly welcomed and accepted Turkey's offer to host the Conference. The meeting of the intergovernmental preparatory committee would be held in New York in two parts, from 10 to 14 January 2011 and from 18 to 25 April. The Assembly mandated that OHRLS be the focal point for the Conference preparations. In July, the Secretary-General appointed Cheick Sidi Diarra (Mali), Special Adviser on Africa and High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, as the Secretary-General of LDC-IV.

The first regional review meeting [A/CONF.219/IPC/4], the High-level Asia-Pacific Policy Dialogue on the Brussels Programme of Action for LDCs (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 18–20 January), adopted the Dhaka Outcome Document, which was taken note of by ESCAP at its sixty-sixth annual session (Incheon, Republic of Korea, May). The outcome of the second regional meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 8–9 March) [A/CONF.219/IPC/3] was endorsed by the Third Annual Joint African Union Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance and the ECA Conference of Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development (Lilongwe, Malawi, March).

The Secretary-General appointed a Group of Eminent Persons, co-chaired by Alpha Oumar Konaré, former President of Mali, and James Wolfensohn, former President of the World Bank, to advise on the international support measures needed to accelerate development in LDCs. The Group held its first meeting in New York on 13 October. The Ministerial Meeting of LDCs held on 27 September on the margins of the general debate of the General Assembly adopted a Ministerial Declaration identifying priority actions and expectations of concrete deliverables at the Conference and highlighting the need for greater visibility of LDCs on the international agenda. In cooperation with the UN Department of Public Information, OHRLS formulated a communication strategy, which included a conference-specific website. It also prepared a project document to mobilize resources in support of the preparations for the Conference.

Trade and Development Board action. At its fifty-first executive session (Geneva, 29–30 November, 2 December) [A/66/15 (Part I)], the Trade and Development Board had before it three reports as contributions to the preparatory process of and to LDC-IV: on UNCTAD's contribution to LDC-IV [TD/B/EX(51)/3]; and on proposals [TD/B/EX(51)/4] stemming from the International High-level Meeting of Experts on Sustainable Tourism for Development in the Least Developed Countries (Caen, France, 12–14 October) [UNCTAD/ALDC/2010/3]. In agreed conclusions adopted on 2 December, the Board called for an effective monitoring and review of the implementation of the outcome of LDC-IV, with a view to identifying remaining challenges, evaluating progress and proposing further policy actions. It urged UNCTAD to contribute to the substantive and technical implementation of the LDC-IV outcome and requested its Secretary-General to ensure that adequate provisions were made to carry out mandated UNCTAD activities in follow-up to the LDC-IV outcomes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/439/Add.1], adopted resolution 65/171 without vote [agenda item 23 (a)].

Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Brussels Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, adopted at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Brussels from 14 to 20 May 2001,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome of 16 September 2005,

Recalling its resolution 63/227 of 19 December 2008, in which it decided to convene the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in 2011,

Recalling also its resolution 64/213 of 21 December 2009 on the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in which it decided to convene the Conference in the first half of 2011 for a duration of five days,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 2010/27 of 23 July 2010 on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010,

Taking note of the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the Ministerial Meeting of the Least Developed Countries, held in New York on 27 September 2010,

Recalling the Cotonou Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010, as an initiative owned and led by the least developed countries,

Recalling also its resolutions 46/206 of 20 December 1991 and 59/209 of 20 December 2004, in which it stressed and reiterated the importance of a smooth transition for countries graduating from least developed country status, in order to avoid disruption to their development progress,

Recalling further the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, in which Heads of State and Government acknowledged the significant constraints and structural impediments faced by the least developed countries in their development efforts, expressed grave concern that such countries are lagging behind in meeting internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in that context, inter alia, looked forward to the Conference, which would further invigorate the international partnership to address the special needs of these countries,

Emphasizing that the Conference should strengthen concerted global actions in support of the least developed countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010;

2. Decides to convene the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in Istanbul, Turkey, from 9 to 13 May 2011 at the highest possible level, in line with the mandate specified by the General Assembly in resolution 63/227, in view of the critical importance of the Conference;

3. Also decides to reschedule the second session of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee and to hold it in New York from 4 to 8 April 2011, for five working days;

4. Welcomes the progress being made in the preparatory process of the Conference, and takes note of the outcome of the Asia-Pacific regional preparatory meeting, held in Dhaka from 18 to 20 January 2010, and the outcome of the Africa regional preparatory meeting, held in Addis Ababa on 8 and 9 March 2010;

5. Notes with appreciation the Ministerial Meeting on the theme “Enhancing the mobilization of financial resources for the development of the least developed countries”, held in Lisbon on 2 and 3 October 2010;

6. Looks forward to the Ministerial Meeting on the theme “Harnessing the positive contribution of South-South cooperation for the development of the least developed countries”, to be hosted by the Government of India in New Delhi early in 2011;

7. Welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of the Group of Eminent Persons for the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

8. Also welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States as the Secretary-General of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

9. Requests the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, as the focal point for the preparations for the Conference, to ensure effective, efficient and timely preparations for the Conference and to further mobilize and coordinate the active involvement of the organizations of the United Nations system;

10. Recognizes the importance of the contribution of civil society actors at the Conference and during its preparatory process, and in this regard stresses the need for their active participation in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

11. Requests the President of the General Assembly to organize, within existing resources, a day of informal interactive hearings with civil society actors in due time before the second session of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, in consultation with Member States, in particular the least developed countries, the Bureau of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, the Civil Society Steering Committee and the representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, as appropriate;

12. Invites the President of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General of the Conference to preside jointly over the informal interactive hearings, and requests the President of the Assembly to prepare a summary of the hearings, to be issued as an Assembly document prior to the Conference;

13. Invites the President of the General Assembly to consult with the Bureau of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, the Civil Society Steering Committee, the representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and Member States, in particular the least developed countries, as appropriate, concerning the list of representatives of non-governmental organizations and civil society organizations that may participate in the informal interactive hearings with civil society, in the meetings of the Civil Society Forum of the Conference and in the Conference itself;

14. Invites all development partners and other relevant stakeholders, including Member States, the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and other relevant international and regional organizations, within their respective mandates, parliaments, civil society, non-governmental organizations, philanthropic organizations and the private sector, to continue to remain fully engaged in the preparatory process of the Conference, including through the organization of thematic pre-conference and parallel events, in order to ensure a successful outcome of the Conference, in line with its previous resolutions in this regard;

15. Reiterates the critical importance of the effective participation of Government representatives from the least developed countries in the meetings of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee and in the Conference itself;

16. Expresses its concern about the insufficiency of resources in the Trust Fund for the Least Developed Countries, and, while expressing its appreciation to those countries that have made voluntary contributions, urges Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, major groups and other donors to contribute to the Trust Fund in a timely manner in order to support the substantive preparations for the Conference and the participation of representatives of each least developed country in the preparatory process of the Conference and to defray the cost of the participation of two representatives from each least developed country in the meetings of the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee and in the Conference itself;

17. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference and the Office of the High Representative to intensify mobilization efforts to ensure sufficient extrabudgetary funding from all possible sources for the preparatory process of the Conference and for the Conference itself and to provide information on the status of the Trust Fund;

18. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the assistance of concerned organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in collaboration with the Office of the High Representative, to take the measures necessary to intensify their public information efforts and other appropriate initiatives to enhance advocacy and public awareness in favour of the Conference, including by highlighting its objectives and significance;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Conference a ten-year comprehensive report on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 identifying, inter alia, lessons learned and best practices as well as structural constraints and handicaps encountered, resource requirements and resource gaps in achieving the set objectives of the Programme of Action;

20. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the outcome of the Conference;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session on the national transition strategies prepared by Governments of graduating countries and the support measures provided by development and trading partners for the States that have graduated or are graduating from least developed country status, in line with resolution 59/209, including on the possible need and likely ways to reinforce the smooth transition;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled “Groups of countries in special situations”, a sub-item entitled “Follow-up to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries”.

Small island developing States

During 2010, UN bodies continued to review progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Barbados Programme of Action), adopted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 783]. The Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD) reviewed the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation (MSI) of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the 2005 International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action [YUN 2005, p. 946]. MSI set forth actions and strategies in 19 priority areas for the period 2005 to 2015, including the original themes of the Barbados Programme of Action. It was the only global strategy to address specifically and exclusively the problems of island States. By resolution 62/191 [YUN 2007, p. 868], the General Assembly decided to review at its 2010 session the progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of MSI. Resolutions 63/213 [YUN 2008, p. 946] and 64/199 [YUN 2009, p. 838] further clarified the expectations of Member States and the processes involved in the review. The UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), through its Small Island Developing States Unit, OHRLS, the regional commissions and other UN entities provided support for preparations of the review process. A series of national assessment reports formed the substantive basis of the review. The regional review meetings (Port Vila, Vanuatu, 8–9 February; Male, Maldives, 9–10 March; St. George’s, Grenada, 16–18 March) resulted in regional outcome statements [CSD18/2010/BP8, CSD18/2010/BP9, CSD18/2010/BP10] and in-depth regional synthesis reports. An interregional meeting of small island developing States (New York, 8 May) was followed by the observance of Small Island Developing States Day (New York, 10 May), during the eighteenth session of CSD. The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, in its resolution 66/2 of 19 May, invited member States to support the Port Vila outcome statement.

By decision 64/555 of 15 April, the General Assembly decided to hold a two-day high-level review, from 24 to 25 September, to assess progress made on MSI, pursuant to resolution 64/199 [YUN 2009, p. 838].

Committee for Development Policy. In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2009/17 [YUN 2009, p. 837], CDP, at its twelfth session in March [E/2010/33], considered the findings in the Secretary-General’s 2009 report [YUN 2009, p. 837] on the follow-up to and implementation of MSI. The Committee reviewed the specific development challenges faced by small island developing States as a result of their size, location, geographical characteristics, environmental and economic vulnerabilities, and external dependency. Climate change, including rising sea levels, had serious implications for small island developing States, and some low-lying island States faced existential threats. The Committee noted that on the whole, small island developing States had consistently maintained good levels of social, economic and infrastructural development, above the average of other developing countries. Yet it was clear that small island developing States were not a homogenous group—some had small populations, were archipelagic, low-lying, had no permanent streams or rivers and were particularly remote. Others did not share those extreme features, and 10 small island developing States lagged behind and were classified as LDCs.

Commission on Sustainable Development. CSD in 2010 [E/2010/29] served as the Preparatory Committee for the High-Level Event on a Five-Year Review of the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy. In accordance with Commission resolution 17/2 [YUN 2009, p. 837] and Council decision 2009/236 [ibid., p. 801], CSD, acting as the Preparatory Committee, reviewed progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of MSI.

In accordance with the Commission's May 2009 decision [ibid., p. 837] and Assembly resolution 64/199 [ibid., p. 838], the Preparatory Committee was convened during the eighteenth session of the Commission. The Committee held two meetings on 10 May [A/CONF.218/PC/1]. It had before it an April report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2010/9] on a review of MSI implementation, providing an initial global synthesis of the national and regional five-year review. The Director of the DESA Division for Sustainable Development introduced a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.17/2010/14] on the integrated review of the thematic cluster of mining, chemicals, waste management, transport, and sustainable consumption and production in small island developing States. On the same date, the Commission recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a decision on the organization of the high-level review to assess progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of MSI.

On 9 July, by decision 64/561, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee, requested its President to conduct further consultations with Member States with a view to resolving the pending procedural aspects of the high-level review to be held on 24–25 September.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/34 [draft: E/2010/L.33] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Review of United Nations support for small island developing States

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Declaration of Barbados, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2009/17 of 29 July 2009 on the review of United Nations support for small island developing States,

Taking note of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its twelfth session containing the independent views and perspectives of the Committee on United Nations support for small island developing States,

Recalling that the Council, by its resolution 2009/17, decided to make available a summary of the debate held during its substantive session of 2010 together with the independent views and perspectives of the Committee as a contribution to the two-day high-level review, to be conducted during the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly, of progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States,

Recognizing that, although they are afflicted by economic difficulties and confronted by development imperatives similar to those of developing countries generally, small island developing States also have their own particular vulnerabilities and characteristics, which render the difficulties that they face in the pursuit of sustainable development particularly severe and complex,

1. Decides to make available the independent views and perspectives of the Committee for Development Policy, together with a summary of the debate held during the present substantive session, as a contribution to the two-day high-level review, to be conducted during the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly, of progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Inter-agency Consultative Group on Small Island Developing States, and taking into account the views and perspectives contained in chapter V of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on how to improve monitoring of United Nations support for the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and the views of Member States, to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council, for consideration at its substantive session of 2011, on concrete recommendations on how United Nations support for small island developing States could be more targeted, cost-efficient, measurable and effective.

Reports of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/65/115], the Secretary-General provided a global synthesis of the preparatory national and regional five-year reviews of MSI, updating his April report [E/CN.17/2010/9] by taking into account material that had since become available, in particular the final outcomes of the preparatory meetings and national assessment reports, UN documents and newer data.

The report summarized the overall progress of small island developing States in terms of macroeconomic development, progress made towards achieving the MDGs and vulnerability trends. In general, the report concluded, substantial progress had been made in terms of MSI implementation and progress towards achievements of the MDGs, but renewed efforts were needed. While small island developing States shared many of the characteristics of other developing countries, they faced unique challenges. They continued to be highly vulnerable to external shocks, and many of the hard-earned gains appeared threatened by the adverse impact of climate change, natural disasters and the global food, fuel and financial crises which, according to anecdotal evidence, had overstretched the limited coping capacities of those States.

In the light of the progress made, lessons learned and continuing challenges and constraints in implementing MSI, the Secretary-General suggested that Member States might wish to consider strengthening support for national development planning, focused on building resilience to external shocks; vulnerability-resilience profiling; further focus on key thematic areas; support of partnership initiatives for further implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action; strengthening access to and provision of financial resources; and institutionalizing special support measures.

In August, the Secretary-General presented a report [A/65/301] entitled "Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations".

Communications. By a letter of 31 August [A/65/352], the Vice-President of the Economic and Social Council transmitted to the General Assembly President the summary of the Council debate on the review of UN support for small island developing States, held on 20 and 21 July, during the general segment of the substantive session of the Council. By a letter of 9 September [A/65/361], the Council President transmitted to the Assembly President the independent views and perspectives of CDP on UN support for small island developing States, as contained in the Committee's report [E/2010/33].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 September [meeting 121], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/300 [draft: A/64/L.68] without vote [agenda item 53 (b)].

Draft outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 63/213 of 19 December 2008 and 64/199 of 21 December 2009,

Recalling also its decision 64/555 of 15 April 2010,

Decides to refer the annexed draft outcome document to the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, to be held on 24 and 25 September 2010, for its consideration.

ANNEX

Draft outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

On the same date, by decision 64/566, the Assembly, on the proposal of its President, decided on the modalities for the high-level review.

High-level review. Heads of State and Government, Ministers and Member States representatives gathered at a high-level meeting at UN Headquarters (New York, 24–25 September) to undertake a five-year review of MSI and to assess the progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 September [meeting 18], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/2 [draft: A/65/L.2] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly

Adopts the following outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States:

Outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

We, Heads of State and Government, Ministers and representatives of Member States, gathered at a high-level meeting at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 24 and 25 September 2010 to undertake a five-year review of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States to assess the progress made in addressing the vulnerabilities of small island developing States through the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy,

1. Recall that the unique and particular vulnerabilities of small island developing States have been acknowledged by the international community since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1992, the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held in Barbados in 1994, the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, in 2002, and the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held in Mauritius in 2005;

2. Reaffirm our commitment to support the efforts of small island developing States, in view of their unique and particular vulnerabilities, towards their sustainable development through the further full and effective implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy, including through the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

3. Acknowledge that small island developing States have demonstrated their commitment to promoting sustainable development, and will continue to do so, in mainstreaming sustainable development principles into national development strategies, in enhancing political commitments and public awareness of the importance of sustainable development issues, in establishing protected areas, including marine, coastal and terrestrial, through the demonstration of strong leadership in protecting biodiversity, in adopting strategies for promoting renewable energy and in mitigating the negative effects of the global financial and economic crisis on their economies. To that effect, small island developing States have mobilized resources at the national and regional levels despite their limited resource base, and in this regard additional resources should be mobilized to support their efforts;

4. Note with concern that notwithstanding these efforts, small island developing States continue to face sustainable development challenges. The long-standing co-operation and support provided by the international community has played an important role and should play an even more critical role in helping small island developing States to make progress in addressing their vulnerabilities and in supporting their sustainable development efforts;

5. Also note with concern that, while small island developing States have progressed in the areas of gender, health, education and the environment, their overall progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals has been uneven. Small island developing States have made less progress than most other groupings, or even regressed, in economic terms, especially in terms of poverty reduction and debt sustainability. Small island developing States have not achieved sustained high levels of economic growth owing in part to the ongoing negative impacts of the financial and economic crisis. The small size, remoteness, narrow resource and export base, and exposure to global environmental challenges of most small island developing States have worked against efforts towards sustainable development;

6. Acknowledge that climate change and sea-level rise continue to pose a significant risk to small island developing States and their efforts to achieve sustainable development and, for some, represent the gravest of threats to their survival and viability;

7. Recall resolution 63/281 of 3 June 2009, and in that context emphasize the need to consider and address the issue of climate change, including its possible security implications for small island developing States;

8. Maintain that the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change is the primary international, intergovernmental forum for negotiating the global response to climate change. We also call upon States to take urgent global action to address climate change in accordance with the principles identified in the Convention, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities;

9. Call upon the international community to continue to enhance its support for the development and implementation of small island developing States national climate change mitigation and adaptation strategies and programmes, as well as to facilitate regional and interregional cooperation, in view of the urgent need to build the resilience of small island developing States to the adverse impacts of climate change;

10. Also call upon the international community to enhance support for the efforts of small island developing States to adapt to the adverse impacts of climate change, including through the provision of dedicated sources of financing, capacity-building and the transfer of appropriate technologies to address climate change;

11. Recognize that small island developing States continue to grapple with the effects of natural disasters, some with increased intensity, including those due to climate change, which impede progress towards sustainable development;

12. Also recognize the need to enhance and establish, if necessary, means and tools at the international level aimed at implementing a preventive approach for natural disasters in small island developing States, reducing risks and properly integrating risk management into development policies and programmes, including through the further implementation of the internationally agreed framework for disaster risk reduction, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015. We call upon the international community to continue to support small island developing States in enhancing their efforts to strengthen regional and national efforts in disaster risk reduction, management and coordination, including creating or strengthening insurance mechanisms, where appropriate, for natural and environmental disasters in small island developing States;

13. Reiterate that energy dependence is a major source of economic vulnerability for many small island developing States. While those States are particularly suited to renewable energy options and in spite of the fact that many are endowed with extensive renewable energy resources, these remain underdeveloped. We also reiterate the need to support small island developing States in their efforts to develop and utilize new and renewable energy as well as foster energy efficiency and conservation, inter alia, through financing from all sources, technical assistance and capacity-building aimed at developing a sustainable energy sector, to be the foundation of the development sector of small island developing States. We underscore the importance of facilitating access by small island developing States to finance, including access to investment funds for renewable energy, and are ready to assist them to this effect. In this regard, we welcome regional mechanisms and initiatives for energy cooperation and integration to build and develop energy infrastructure, direct supplies and social projects in order to achieve their energy sustainability;

14. Recognize the importance of North-South cooperation, complemented by South-South cooperation, cooperation among small island developing States and triangular cooperation, in order to promote programmes for those States for the effective implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy;

15. Also recognize that small island developing States continue to be heavily dependent on their coastal and marine resources, and that their development challenges include limited access to financing, technologies and equipment, global overfishing and destructive fishing practices, and barriers to increased participation in fisheries and related activities;

16. Reiterate the need for improved conservation of coastal and marine resources and integrated coastal management. We urge the international community to continue and enhance its support for small island developing States to strengthen their implementation of integrated coastal zone management strategies and their scientific research capacity;

17. Emphasize that small island developing States and the relevant regional and international development partners should work together to develop and implement regional initiatives to promote conservation and the sustainable management of coastal and marine resources;

18. Reiterate the need for the adoption and implementation of effective measures at the international, regional and national levels that provide for the long-term sustainable use of fisheries resources, given their vital importance to the sustainable development of small island developing States. In this regard, we agree:

(a) To reaffirm the commitment to urgently reduce the capacity of the world's fishing fleets to levels commensurate with the sustainability of fish stocks;

(b) To promote the full participation of small island developing States in regional fisheries management organizations;

(c) To assist small island developing States in developing their fisheries sector, including through building the capacity of those States, so as to facilitate a greater level of participation in high seas fisheries, including for straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, to enable them to receive greater benefits from sustainable fisheries for such stocks, to develop their own fisheries, and to improve their market access;

(d) To further strengthen, through international support, the capacities of small island developing States to carry out monitoring and implement enforcement measures to combat illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, and overfishing;

(e) To urge the mainstreaming of efforts to assist small island developing States with other relevant international development strategies, with a view to enhancing international coordination so as to enable them to develop their national capacity to exploit fishery resources, consistent with the duty to ensure the conservation and management of those fisheries resources;

19. Call upon the international community to continue enhancing the efforts of small island developing States to foster agricultural production, productivity and sustainability and to prioritize food security. This should be achieved through diversification and value-added activities, research and development, improved land use, sustainable forest management, access to and the appropriate use of modern technology and access to markets, as well as the empowerment of small-scale farmers, including women, indigenous peoples and rural communities;

20. Recall that for most small island developing States, tourism is an important contributor to employment, foreign exchange and economic growth, and that the Mauritius Strategy recognizes the need for sustainable tourism. Climate change, along with other sources of environmental degradation, can have an adverse impact on the sustainability of the tourism industry in small island developing States. We therefore call upon the World Tourism Organization, the relevant United Nations agencies and other relevant stakeholders to support the development and implementation by small island developing States of measures to promote sustainable tourism in such States;

21. Call upon the international community to further assist small island developing States in the development of appropriate systems for recycling, waste minimization and treatment, reuse and management, and mechanisms to protect the oceans and coastal areas from waste and toxic materials, including through the creation and strengthening of systems and networks for the dissemination of information on appropriate environmentally sound technologies, recycling and disposal technologies;

22. Note with concern that water quality and availability constitute serious constraints in small island developing States, and, although some small island developing States are implementing measures such as demand-side management, wastewater treatment, enhancing water-use efficiency and increasing public awareness, such efforts are hampered by financial and capacity constraints, and request the international community to provide assistance to small island developing States for capacity-building for the development and further implementation of freshwater and sanitation programmes;

23. Call upon the international community to assist the efforts of small island developing States to strengthen national disaggregated data and information systems as well as analytical capabilities for decision-making, tracking progress and development of vulnerability-resilience country profiles; the efforts of small island developing States in developing databases and in institutionalizing national indicators for monitoring and evaluating sustainable development should also be supported and utilized by United Nations agencies where available;

24. Reiterate the importance of facilitating the exchange of knowledge, success stories, experiences and information among small island developing States;

25. Recognize that the objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity are vital and indispensable elements to achieving the sustainable development of small island developing States, and encourage small island developing States, with the necessary support of the international community, to make further efforts to incorporate biodiversity protection into their national development strategies; we call upon the international community to increase assistance to small island developing States to strengthen biodiversity protection and address the current and emerging threats posed by invasive alien species. We look forward to a successful outcome of the tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, to be held in Nagoya, Japan;

26. Also recognize the need to address the specific trade- and development-related needs and concerns of small island developing States so as to enable them to fully integrate into the multilateral trading system in accordance with the Doha mandate on small economies, and agree to facilitate the accession of small island developing States to the World Trade Organization, where appropriate, through enhanced technical assistance;

27. Urge development partners, in view of the current global economic situation, to further pay due attention to the unique and particular vulnerabilities of small island developing States in the context of their trade and partnership agreements and trade preference programmes, in accordance with World Trade Organization rules and provisions, to help economic recovery in those States;

28. Reiterate the importance of aid for trade as a means of delivering coordinated, effective and targeted trade-related technical assistance and capacity-building programmes, as established in the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration of 2005, and in this context call for assistance to be provided, where appropriate, to address the special constraints of small island developing States with respect to building their supply-side capacities and their competitiveness, as part of their national development strategies;

29. Acknowledge that the specific circumstances of each small island developing State should be taken into account in addressing long-term debt sustainability and that better access to international capital markets needs to be ensured for small island developing States;

30. Urge the international financial institutions to continue to take into account the specific circumstances, situations and vulnerabilities of each small island developing State to enable them to have adequate access to financial resources, including concessionary financing for investment in sustainable development;

31. Reiterate the importance for development partners of implementing concrete measures in support of the transition strategy for small island developing States that have recently graduated or are about to graduate from least developed country status so as to ensure the sustainability of the progress made, and recognize the importance of the review of the criteria used in determining graduation from least developed country status within the relevant United Nations mandates;

32. Request the Secretary-General to include a chapter in his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy on the collection, analysis and dissemination of data on the sustainable development of those States, and to make recommendations on how to address the challenges relating to these issues;

33. Also request the Secretary-General, since the present review has highlighted some shortcomings in the institutional support for small island developing States as well as other constraints to the full and effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy and the Barbados Programme of Action, to submit a report that puts forward concrete recommendations to enhance the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy and refocus efforts towards a results-oriented approach and to consider what improved and additional measures might be needed to more effectively address the unique and particular vulnerabilities and development needs of small island developing States. The report should be prepared in consultation with Member States as well as the relevant specialized agencies, funds, programmes and regional commissions, taking into account the work done by the United Nations system, and submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session. Within the scope of that report, we further request the Secretary-General to conduct a comprehensive review and examine ways to enhance the coherence and coordination of the United Nations system's support for small island developing States and to put forward concrete recommendations to Member States in this regard. This should include reviewing the work and respective mandates of all relevant United Nations entities within their areas of expertise as they relate to the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy, including with regard to paragraphs 101 and 102 of the Strategy;

34. Renew our resolve to fulfil our commitments to further implement the Mauritius Strategy and underscore the urgency of finding additional solutions to the major challenges facing small island developing States in a concerted manner. We recognize that the way forward for sustainable development requires that coordinated, balanced and integrated actions be taken at all levels, including through the strengthening of collaborative partnerships between small island developing States and the international community, with the aim of building the resilience of small island developing States in overcoming their unique and particular vulnerabilities and in reflecting their respective national priorities and needs.

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/156 without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States on 6 May 1994, and recalling its resolution 49/122 of 19 December 1994 on the Global Conference,

Reaffirming also the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States on 14 January 2005,

Recalling the outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held on 24 and 25 September 2010,

Reaffirming the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), including chapter VII on the sustainable development of small island developing States,

Recalling its resolution 64/199 of 21 December 2009 and all its other previous resolutions on the subject,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, held from 20 to 22 September 2010, and its outcome document,

Reaffirming that the Commission on Sustainable Development is the primary intergovernmental forum for monitoring the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy,

Recalling that the unique and particular vulnerabilities of small island developing States have been acknowledged by the international community since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1992, the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held in Barbados in 1994, the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, in 2002, and the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held in Mauritius in 2005,

Acknowledging the importance of the upcoming United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development,

Reaffirming that the adverse effects of climate change and sea-level rise present significant and specific risks to the sustainable development of small island developing States, that the effects of climate change may threaten the very existence of some small island developing States and that, given their vulnerability, adaptation to the adverse effects of climate change and sea-level rise therefore remains a major priority for small island developing States,

Recognizing the need to promote the development of regional and national capacities for disaster risk reduction, including through early warning systems, as well as the reconstruction and rehabilitation of areas affected by natural disasters, including through the further implementation of the internationally agreed framework for disaster risk reduction, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters,

Acknowledging that small island developing States have demonstrated, and will continue to demonstrate, their commitment to promoting sustainable development and, to that effect, have mobilized resources at the national and regional levels despite their limited resource base,

Recognizing, in this regard, the urgent need to increase the level of resources provided to small island developing States for the effective implementation of the Mauritius Strategy,

Acknowledging the particular relationship of small island developing States with the oceans and the need for sustainable development and management of their ocean and marine resources,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the five-year review of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

1. Urges the full and effective implementation of the outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the General Assembly on 25 September 2010;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the outcome document to all relevant international and regional organizations, United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, international financial institutions and the Global Environment Facility, as well as other intergovernmental organizations and major groups;

3. Urges Governments and all relevant international and regional organizations, United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, international financial institutions and the Global Environment Facility, as well as other intergovernmental organizations and major groups, to take timely action for the effective implementation of and follow-up to the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, including the further development and operationalization of concrete projects and programmes;

4. Invites the United Nations funds and programmes to mainstream and integrate the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the Mauritius Strategy into their respective processes and within their respective mandates, in order to promote coherence and coordination in support of their implementation;

5. Recognizes the progress made and the continuing challenges faced in the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy, while noting the importance of paragraphs 87, 88 and 101 of the Strategy and taking into account cross-cutting implementation issues;

6. Calls upon the international community to enhance support for the efforts of small island developing States to adapt to the adverse effects of climate change, including through the provision of dedicated sources of financing, capacity-building and the transfer of appropriate technologies to address climate change;

7. Calls upon all relevant regional and inter-governmental organizations to enhance cooperation, coherence and coordination through, inter alia, the Inter-agency Consultative Group on Small Island Developing States in strengthening support to small island developing States in further advancing the Mauritius Strategy;

8. Underlines the importance of providing the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat with adequate, stable and predictable funding and staffing to facilitate the full and effective implementation of its mandates in accordance with the priority accorded to the Unit and in view of the demand for its services, in particular with respect to the provision of assistance, technical cooperation services and support to small island developing States;

9. Acknowledges with appreciation the contribution of Member States and other international donors to support activities related to small island developing States, including through the voluntary trust fund ("Small Island Developing States Trust Fund"), and invites donor countries to make further voluntary contributions in this regard;

10. Recognizes the importance of North-South cooperation, complemented by South-South cooperation, cooperation among small island developing States and triangular cooperation, in order to promote programmes for small island developing States for the effective implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy;

11. Invites all relevant organizations, funds, programmes and bodies within the United Nations system, in consultation with interested States, to coordinate relevant activities with regional and national marine scientific and technological centres in small island developing States, as appropriate, to ensure the more effective achievement of their objectives in accordance with relevant United Nations development programmes and strategies relating to small island developing States;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy, taking into account paragraph 32 of the outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Strategy, and in preparing that report to consult with Member States as well as the relevant United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, taking into account the work done by the United Nations system, as well as all relevant national, regional and subregional organizations;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States".

On the same date, the Assembly also adopted resolution 65/155 on the topic "Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations" (see p. 1035).

Landlocked developing countries

Communication. By a letter of 25 June [A/64/856], Paraguay, as chair of the Group of Landlocked Developing Countries, transmitted the Declaration adopted at the Meeting of Trade Ministers of Landlocked Developing Countries (Ezulwini, Swaziland, 21–22 October 2009), dealing with the global economic crisis, multilateral trade negotiations, trade facilitation, accession to the World Trade Organization (WTO), resource mobilization, new and emerging challenges, and multilateral cooperation arrangements.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 64/214 [YUN 2009, p. 841], the Secretary-General in August reported [A/65/215] on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, adopted in 2003 by the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation [YUN 2003, p. 875], and the 2008 declaration on the midterm review of the Programme in Assembly resolution 63/2 [YUN 2008, p. 949]. Both the Almaty Programme and the outcome document of the midterm review underscored the need to strengthen global partnerships in recognition of the special needs and challenges confronted by the landlocked developing countries (LLDCs) in their efforts to eradicate poverty, sustain economic growth and integrate better into the world economy.

Ten years after the adoption of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 49], the report also reviewed the progress made by LLDCs towards their attainment and highlighted some of the challenges experienced, including climate change. Given their inherent geographical difficulties depriving them of direct access to seaborne trade, LLDCs found themselves on a disadvantaged development path, compounded by the long distance from major international markets, cumbersome transit procedures, inadequate transport infrastructure and dependence on the political stability, infrastructure and institutional quality of coastal transit countries. The Almaty Programme, with its overarching goal to forge partnerships to overcome the special problems of landlocked developing countries, contributed to the achievement of the MDGs by that vulnerable group. The report concluded that smooth and reliable transport systems, which lay at the very core of the global framework for transit cooperation embodied in the Almaty Programme, played a key role for the overall economic and social progress of LLDCs, for their cooperation with transit neighbours and the achievement of their development goals.

The Secretary-General recommended that the international community address the special development concerns and needs of LLDCs through increased financial support to help them accelerate progress towards the achievement of the MDGs and strengthen their capacity to mitigate and adapt to climate change. Critical transport solutions included the re-engineering of the transit system to simplify and harmonize documentation requirements, the creation of one-stop border posts to avoid duplication of procedures, the automation of customs to reduce direct contact with officials, the reform of tracking regulation to promote competition, and the establishment of island clearance centres or dry ports to anticipate clearance procedures.

Private sector involvement was crucial for the success of transit transport and trade policy reform projects. UNCTAD, the regional commissions and regional organizations should strengthen their support and capacity-building activities in that regard. ECA, the AU Commission, the World Bank, the African Development Bank and OHRLS should strengthen their support to elaborate and conclude an intergovernmental agreement on the Trans-African Highway. Corridor-monitoring indicators should be developed to measure the performance of trade corridors linking LLDCs to seaports and their progress on changes in logistics and trade facilitation practices. The Office of the High Representative, the regional commissions, the World Bank and other organizations should cooperate to develop an international agreement on use of a common corridor monitoring framework.

The international community should provide greater market access for goods originating in LLDCs to mitigate high trade transaction costs stemming from their geographical disadvantages. That should be coupled by the broad application of preferential rules of origin to increase the utilization rate of current schemes and serve as an incentive for foreign direct investments in LLDCs. Increased technical assistance should be extended to LLDCs to ensure their effective participation in WTO negotiations, particularly concerning trade facilitation and the implementation of agreements. LLDCs stood to gain by highlighting the linkages between aid for trade and the implementation of the Almaty Programme priorities, particularly developing trade and transport infrastructure and implementing trade facilitation measures. In order to do so, LLDCs should increase their ownership of the aid for trade initiative by mainstreaming trade into their development strategies. Donor countries and financial and development institutions should provide increased financial resources to transit transport infrastructure and trade facilitation projects, so as to enhance intraregional connectivity, complete missing links and ensure the proper functioning of strategic sea corridors. While the recent scale-up of aid for trade flows was welcome, coverage and predictability remained problematic. Donor countries and the international financial and development institutions were invited to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established to facilitate implementation of the outcome of and follow-up to the Almaty International Ministerial Conference.

Ninth Annual Ministerial Meeting. Under the theme “Further implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action to support acceleration of the progress towards the achievement of the MDGs by the LLDCs”, the Foreign Ministers of LLDCs met on the sidelines of the General Assembly for their Ninth Annual Ministerial Meeting (New York, 24 September). In a communiqué issued on that day, the Ministers reaffirmed their commitment towards the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action through partnerships between landlocked and transit countries and their development partners, as well as between the public and private sectors—partnerships that were essential to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals including the MDGs, and the full integration of LLDCs into the global economy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/439/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/172 without vote [agenda item 23 (b)].

Groups of countries in special situations: specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/201 of 23 December 2003, 60/208 of 22 December 2005, 61/212 of 20 December 2006, 62/204 of 19 December 2007, 63/228 of 19 December 2008 and 64/214 of 21 December 2009,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling the Almaty Declaration and the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries,

Recalling also its resolution 63/2 of 3 October 2008, by which it adopted the Declaration of the high-level meeting of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action,

Taking note of the Ezulwini Declaration, adopted at the Third Meeting of Trade Ministers of Landlocked Developing Countries, held in Ezulwini, Swaziland, on 21 and 22 October 2009,

Taking note also of the communiqué of the Ninth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries, held at United Nations Headquarters on 24 September 2010,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness from world markets, and prohibitive transit costs and risks continue to impose serious constraints on the export earnings, private capital inflow and domestic resource mobilization of landlocked developing countries and therefore adversely affect their overall growth and socio-economic development,

Expressing concern that inadequate transport, telecommunications and energy infrastructure remains a major obstacle to trade and inhibits growth in landlocked developing countries,

Expressing support to those landlocked developing countries that are emerging from conflict, with a view to enabling them to rehabilitate and reconstruct, as appropriate, political, social and economic infrastructure and to assisting them in achieving their development priorities in accordance with the goals and targets of the Almaty Programme of Action,

Recognizing that the primary responsibility for establishing effective transit systems rests with landlocked and transit developing countries,

Reaffirming that the Almaty Programme of Action constitutes a fundamental framework for genuine partnerships between landlocked and transit developing countries and their development partners at the national, bilateral, sub-regional, regional and global levels,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit

Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries;

2. Reaffirms the right of access of landlocked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit countries by all means of transport, in accordance with the applicable rules of international law;

3. Also reaffirms that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests;

4. Calls upon landlocked and transit developing countries to take all appropriate measures, as set out in the Declaration of the high-level meeting of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action, to speed up the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, and calls upon landlocked developing countries to take greater ownership of the Almaty Programme of Action by further mainstreaming it into their national development strategies;

5. Calls upon development partners and multilateral and regional financial and development institutions to provide landlocked and transit developing countries with appropriate, substantial and better-coordinated technical and financial assistance, particularly in the form of grants or concessionary loans, for the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

6. Reaffirms its full commitment to urgently address the special development needs of and the challenges faced by landlocked developing countries through the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, as contained in the Declaration on the midterm review;

7. Acknowledges that landlocked and transit developing countries in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America have strengthened their policy and governance reform efforts and that development partners, including international financial and development institutions, have paid greater attention to the establishment of efficient transit systems;

8. Notes with concern that, despite the progress made in implementing the priorities of the Almaty Programme of Action, landlocked developing countries continue to be marginalized in international trade and face challenges in their efforts to establish efficient transit transport systems which prevent them from fully harnessing the potential of trade as an engine of sustained economic growth and development to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

9. Invites Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, multilateral financial and development institutions and bilateral partners to speed up further the implementation of the specific actions in the five priorities agreed upon in the Almaty Programme of Action and those contained in the Declaration on the midterm review in order to support landlocked developing countries in achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in a better-coordinated manner, in particular for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities, including alternative routes, completion of missing links and improved communications and energy infrastructure, so as to promote subregional, regional and interregional projects and programmes;

10. Expresses concern that the economic growth and social well-being of landlocked developing countries remain highly vulnerable to external shocks and to the multiple challenges faced by the international community, and invites the international community to assist landlocked developing countries in strengthening their resilience and in protecting the advances made towards the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and the priorities of the Almaty Programme of Action;

11. Recognizes the challenges presented by land degradation, desertification, deforestation and climate change, the negative impact that these problems have on one another and the potential benefits of mutually addressing these problems and their impact on the availability of food and water, and calls upon the international community to continue to enhance support for the efforts of landlocked developing countries to address these challenges in an integrated manner, as appropriate;

12. Encourages the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, the secretariat of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the secretariat of the United Nations Environment Programme, the secretariat of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the regional commissions, as well as relevant research institutions and pertinent international organizations, to assist landlocked developing countries, as appropriate, in conducting studies in order to provide a better understanding of the implications of climate change for landlocked developing countries and in making recommendations in that regard;

13. Underlines the importance of international trade and trade facilitation as one of the priorities of the Almaty Programme of Action, notes that the ongoing negotiations of the World Trade Organization on trade facilitation are particularly important for landlocked developing countries to gain a more efficient flow of goods and services as well as improved international competitiveness resulting from lower transaction costs, and calls upon the international community to ensure that the agreement on trade facilitation in the final outcome of the Doha Round fulfils the objective of lowering transaction costs by, inter alia, reducing transport time and enhancing certainty in transborder trade;

14. Calls upon development partners to effectively implement the Aid for Trade initiative, giving adequate consideration to the special needs and requirements of landlocked developing countries, including capacity-building for the formulation of trade policies, participation in trade negotiations and implementation of trade facilitation measures, as well as the diversification of export products through private-sector involvement, including the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, with a view to increasing the competitiveness of the products of landlocked developing countries in export markets;

15. Recognizes that the economies of many landlocked developing countries are still reliant on a few export commodities, which often have low value addition, and encourages the international community to enhance efforts to support landlocked developing countries in diversifying their economic base, to encourage, on mutually agreed terms, the transfer of technologies related to transit transport systems, including information and communications technology, and to enhance value addition to their exports through the development of their productive capacities;

16. Encourages the further strengthening of South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, as well as cooperation among subregional and regional organizations, in support of the efforts of landlocked and transit developing countries towards achieving the full and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action;

17. Recognizes that broader and more effective cooperation among landlocked developing countries and between landlocked and transit developing countries is necessary to ensure a harmonized approach to the design, implementation and monitoring of trade and transport facilitation policy reforms across borders;

18. Underlines the prominent role that foreign direct investment plays in accelerating development and poverty reduction through employment, the transfer of managerial and technological know-how and non-debt-creating flows of capital, and recognizes the considerable role and potential of private-sector involvement in infrastructure development for transport, telecommunications and utilities for landlocked developing countries;

19. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, and invites other international organizations, including the World Bank, the regional development banks, the World Customs Organization, the World Trade Organization, regional economic integration organizations and other relevant regional and subregional organizations, to further integrate the Almaty Programme of Action into their relevant programmes of work, taking full account of the Declaration on the midterm review, and encourages them to continue, as appropriate, within their respective mandates, their support to landlocked and transit developing countries, through, inter alia, well-coordinated and coherent technical assistance programmes in transit transport and trade facilitation;

20. Welcomes the efforts made by development partners and the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, in providing infrastructure development and connectivity and the integration of regional rail and road networks and in strengthening the legal frameworks of landlocked and transit developing countries;

21. Encourages the Office of the High Representative to continue to ensure coordinated follow-up to and effective monitoring of and reporting on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, in line with General Assembly resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, and to step up its advocacy efforts directed towards raising international awareness and mobilizing resources, as well as to further develop cooperation and coordination with organizations within the United Nations system in order to ensure the timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and the Declaration on the midterm review;

22. Welcomes the progress made since the establishment of the international think tank for landlocked developing countries in Ulaanbaatar to enhance analytical capability within landlocked developing countries and to promote the exchange of experiences and best practices needed to maximize their coordinated efforts for the full and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and the Millennium Development Goals, notes in that regard the endorsement of the multilateral agreement on the establishment of the international think tank for landlocked developing countries by the Ninth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries, held at United Nations Headquarters on 24 September 2010, and invites the Office of the High Representative and relevant organizations of the United Nations system, Member States and relevant international and regional organizations to assist landlocked developing countries in implementing the activities of the international think tank;

23. Encourages development partners, including international financial and development institutions, as well as private entities, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General to support the activities related to the follow-up to the implementation of the outcome of the Almaty International Ministerial Conference;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session an analytical report on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action and the Declaration on the midterm review;

25. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Groups of countries in special situations", the sub-item entitled "Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: outcome of the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation".

Operational activities for development

The year 2010 was an important one for all development actors, as it marked the beginning of the countdown to the 2015 deadline to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). The UN system continued to deliver development assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—the central UN body for technical assistance, in its dual role as the lead development agency and coordinator of the UN development system—saw its income increase to $5.95 billion, and overall expenditures to $5.99 billion. Development assistance was also provided through the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, which funded technical cooperation projects worth some $71.8 million; the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, with cumulative allocations to projects reaching $1.17 billion; the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS), which implemented projects valued at $1.27 billion on behalf of its partners; and the United Nations Capital Development Fund, whose total income increased to $42.3 million, despite a difficult external environment, allowing it to develop new interventions in response to country-level demand.

The Secretary-General found long-term funding trends for operational activities for development to be favourable, total funding having more than doubled in real terms between 1995 and 2010. There was concern, however, that the growth in contributions could stagnate, or possibly reverse, owing to the negative impact of the global economic crisis. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General noted an improved functioning of the UN development system, with strengthened inter-agency coordination and progress in the simplification and harmonization of business practices.

The High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation met in February to consider implementation of the Nairobi outcome document of the 2009 High-level Conference on South-South Cooperation. It requested the Secretary-General, with the support of the UNDP Special Unit for South-South Cooperation, to prepare operational guidelines for UN organizations and agencies for the implementation of the Nairobi outcome document.

The UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, with 7,765 volunteers, carried out 7,960 assignments in 132 countries. It served as the focal point for the tenth anniversary of the International Year of Volunteers in 2011.

In December, the General Assembly renamed the Executive Board of UNDP/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, during its 2010 substantive session [A/65/3/Rev.1], considered the question of operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation at meetings on 9, 12, 13 and 23 July. The Council decided, on 9 February (decision 2010/206), to devote the work of the operational activities segment to progress on and implementation of General Assembly resolutions 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877], 63/232 [YUN 2008, p. 962] and 64/220 [YUN 2009, p. 852], and Council resolution 2009/1 [ibid., p. 847] concerning operational activities for development.

It also considered follow-up to policy recommendations of the Assembly and the Council; and the reports of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) [YUN 2009, p. 855], the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) [ibid., p. 1173] and the World Food Programme (WFP) [ibid., p. 1230].

Among the documents before the Council were the Secretary-General's reports on the analysis of the funding of operational activities for development for 2008 [A/65/79-E/2010/76] (see p. 860); actions taken by the executive boards and governing bodies of the UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies in the area of simplification and harmonization of the UN development system [E/2010/52] (see p. 865); the functioning of the resident coordinator system, including costs and benefits [E/2010/53] (see p. 861); and the results achieved and measures and processes implemented in follow-up to Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development [E/2010/70] (see p. 860). The Council also had before it a 3 December 2009 letter from Rwanda to the Secretary-General [A/64/578-E/2010/3] (see p. 866).

On 9 July, the Council held two panel discussions on the themes: “National ownership and leadership, and capacity development: have they become a reality?”; and “Country-level capacity: is the United Nations system equipped to respond to the needs and priorities of the programme countries?”. On the same date, a special presentation was made on the theme “Outcome of the High-level Tripartite Conference on Delivering as One: lessons learned from country-led evaluations and the way forward”. On 12 July, the Council held a panel discussion on the theme “Funding of United Nations operational activities for development: challenges and best practices at the country level”.

By decision 2010/251 of 23 July, the Council took note of the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation on its sixteenth session [A/65/39] (see p. 891); the report of the Administrator of UNDP and the Executive Director of UNFPA [YUN 2009, p. 855]; the annual UNICEF report [ibid., p. 1173]; the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the annual WFP report for 2009 [E/2010/14]; the report of the UNICEF Executive Board on the work of its first and second regular sessions and annual session of 2010 [E/2010/34/Rev.1] (see p. 1184); the report of the Executive Board of WFP on its first and second regular sessions and annual session of 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1230]; and the report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board of on its work in 2009 [ibid., p. 854].

Implementation of resolution 62/208

Reports of Secretary-General. In May [A/65/79-E/2010/76], the Secretary-General issued a report on the analysis of the funding of UN system operational activities for development for 2008, which built on information provided by 36 UN entities that received such funding in 2008 and the analytical work undertaken in preparation of an informal funding note, submitted by the Secretary-General in March 2010, to facilitate the General Assembly’s intergovernmental dialogue on system-wide coherence. It included ‘actionable proposals’ to further improve the governance of operational activities for development, as requested by the Assembly in resolution 63/311 [YUN 2009, p. 1368]; provided an overview of the key characteristics of the funding system; and outlined trends in contributions, including long-term trends from 1993 to 2008.

During that period, total contributions for operational activities for development grew at a faster pace than overall official development assistance flows from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/Development Assistance Committee (DAC) countries (excluding debt relief). The funding base also broadened, resulting in a decline in direct contributions by OECD/DAC countries to

UN system operational activities, from 80 to 62 per cent. The imbalance between core (regular) and non-core funding increased, with non-core funding almost tripling in real terms against a very modest 5 per cent increase in core resources. The core component of funding for development-related activities declined from 70 per cent in 1993 to 34 per cent in 2008. The average core ratio for OECD/DAC countries as a group was 47 per cent in 2008, compared with 74 per cent in 1993.

The report put forward proposals for strengthening the funding architecture of operational activities for development.

Also in May [E/2010/70], the Secretary-General presented the second progress report on results achieved and measures and processes implemented in follow-up to Assembly resolution 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877] on the triennial comprehensive policy review of the UN system’s operational activities for development. It was based on his 2008 report [YUN 2008, p. 958] on the management process for the implementation of the resolution, and the first progress report submitted in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 845], which served as the baseline for assessing progress made over the previous year.

The report, which highlighted achievements and challenges, provided an overall assessment of the role and functioning of UN development cooperation and an overview of progress achieved; information on funding; contributions of UN operational activities to national capacity development and development effectiveness; improved functioning of the UN development system; and action taken by the UN system to implement the resolution. An annex to the report contained a matrix providing information on progress vis-à-vis benchmarks and targets, as well as measures taken to implement the resolution between March 2009 and March 2010.

Overall, since the Assembly’s High-level event on MDGs in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 926], the UN development system had supported more than 110 programme countries in achieving the internationally agreed development goals, through analysis and policy advice, advocacy, monitoring and reporting on country progress, and operational activities. Two thirds of the UN country teams (UNCTs) assisted Governments in integrating the MDGs into national development plans and/or poverty reduction strategies.

UNCTs in 115 programme countries, in 2009, indicated that their respective United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks (UNDAFs) supported the achievement of specific MDGs, with most of them addressing poverty and hunger, gender equality and HIV/AIDS. They also provided policy advice on poverty and on assessing the social impact of policy options, costing economic stimulus packages and carrying out operational activities involving employment creation and social protection/safety nets. During the previous year, UNCTs continued to implement reforms to enhance the coherence, effectiveness, efficiency and impact of their operational activities.

In response to convergent crises, the UN development system during the previous two years had mobilized system-wide capacities to respond to national needs. Under the UN System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) Joint Crisis Initiatives [YUN 2008, p. 1527], that response included the Global Jobs Pact, which aimed to support a job-led recovery through support for the development of small- and medium-size enterprises, microfinance, cash-for-work, public works and employment guarantee schemes, green jobs and rural employment.

The United Nations Development Group (UNDG) was working to strengthen the capacity of country teams and regional UNDG teams, including by providing improved guidance on how to prepare a Development Assistance Framework, covering such areas as facilitating national ownership and leadership, ensuring focus on the comparative advantage of the United Nations, as well as monitoring and evaluation and results-based management.

In 2010, UNDG agreed on strategic priorities to respond to the triennial comprehensive policy review and to drive increased coherence, effectiveness and efficiency in the UN development system. The management and accountability system for the UN development and resident coordinator system was being implemented. Progress in implementing the “Delivering as one” initiative in eight programme country pilots since 2007 was continuing. Innovative measures were developed under national ownership and leadership, including harmonizing business practices to ensure that the UN development system improved its support of national development priorities.

Among the remaining challenges were the need to develop the UN system’s capacities to help countries adjust their policies in the light of internationally agreed goals and standards, and place greater emphasis on learning processes in UN system organizations to enhance the effectiveness of capacity development; and intensify information sharing across the UN development system, with the growing number of initiatives in South-South cooperation, and review how organizations could better complement each other’s efforts with clear policies and operational strategies, rather than ad hoc approaches. The UN system also needed to make the best use of the guidance on gender mainstreaming as the new generation of UNDAFs was being developed; continue efforts to support national ownership and capacity development in the transition from relief to development; ensure that operational coherence was maintained throughout the implementation of the UNDAF, including through strengthening joint monitoring and reviews; review the capacities of some UN organizations to respond to emerging demand for their services; and address the obstacles to inter-agency mobility and rapid redeployment of qualified staff in crisis and post-crisis situations.

Also in response to resolution 62/208, the Secretary-General presented an April report [E/2010/53] on the functioning of the resident coordinator system, including costs and benefits, which built on his 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 958] and 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 845] reports.

The report found that the UN development system had further advanced system-wide coherence and more fully put into operation the core principles of the resident coordinator system. Major achievements included the implementation of a management and accountability framework for the UN development and resident coordinator system, including the functional firewall in relation to the latter; improvement in coherence in country programming and strengthened national ownership and leadership through enhancements in UNDAF mechanisms and related programming instruments; and mobilization of increased non-earmarked pooled funds supporting the “One Fund” at the country level, as well as through the expanded “Delivering as one” funding window, in addition to the Millennium Development Goal Achievements Fund. Commitment by UN organizations to support the resident coordinator system was manifest in the steps taken by specialized and non-resident organizations to work more effectively with the resident coordinator system, including setting aside dedicated funding, reviewing organizational structures and capacities, and decentralizing their capacities.

The report recommended that the Council encourage UN organizations, especially those with limited field presence, to assess their capacities to meet emerging country-level demands, as well as those emanating from the management and accountability system, and determine measures for strengthening them; encourage their governing bodies to do likewise, with the aim of achieving greater readiness and more effective support for joint programming in response to programme countries’ priorities, including increased policy, strategic and normative services; encourage UNDG to consider setting up a revolving and reimbursable funding facility to provide seed funding to enable timely support and contribution of non-resident organizations for joint programming initiatives, while those organizations mobilized resources to support their full commitment; and, with other UN organizations, ensure that UNCTs had full information on and understanding of the management and accountability system.

The Council should be updated on the implementation of the management and accountability system at its 2011 substantive session, encourage non-resident UN organizations in programme countries to exchange experiences in decentralization and country hosting, and explore cluster approaches in country cooperation arrangements to maximize field presence and share operational costs. It should encourage UNDG, through UNCTs, to support programme countries in strengthening their oversight, coordination and management, including monitoring and evaluation of UNDAF implementation.

The UNDG/Development Operations Coordination Office should improve the timeliness and availability of information from resident coordinators and UNCTs for reporting to the Council on the resident coordinator system. UNDG should propose ways for responding to the Council's request in resolution 2009/1 [YUN 2009, p. 847] to develop approaches and tools for measuring and reporting on the costs and benefits of coordination, and the Secretary-General should report on progress in that regard to the Council's 2011 substantive session.

The Assembly, in resolution 64/289 of 2 July (see p. 1396), requested the Secretary-General, under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council, and in cooperation with UN resident coordinators, to prepare and put in place a periodic survey directed to Governments on the effectiveness, efficiency and relevance of UN system support in order to provide feedback on the strengths and main challenges encountered in their interactions with the UN development system, with a view to enabling intergovernmental bodies to address them. The results of such surveys should be published and made available to Member States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/22 [E/2010/L.32] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, resolution 63/232 of 19 December 2008 on operational activities for development and resolution 64/289 of 2 July 2010 on system-wide coherence and Economic and Social Council resolutions 2008/2 of 18 July 2008 and 2009/1 of 22 July 2009 on progress in the implementation of Assembly resolution 62/208,

Reaffirming the importance of the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, through which the General Assembly establishes key system-wide policy orientations for the development cooperation and country-level modalities of the United Nations system,

Acknowledging the importance of delivering assistance in order to overcome the challenges to improving human life by implementing General Assembly resolution 62/208,

Recalling the role of the Economic and Social Council in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations system so as to ensure that policy orientations established by the General Assembly are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 61/16 of 20 November 2006, 62/208 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General submitted to the Council at the operational activities segment of its substantive session of 2010,

Funding of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the funding of operational activities for development of the United Nations system for 2008, and recalls the section of General Assembly resolution 64/289 on improving the funding system of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and looks forward to its implementation;

Results achieved and measures and processes implemented in follow-up to General Assembly resolution 62/208

2. Takes note of the initiative by the United Nations development system to draw lessons learned and identify approaches that can be scaled up to accelerate progress in achieving the Millennium Development Goals at the country level, and invites the United Nations development system to disseminate this information widely;

3. Invites the United Nations development system to improve the way in which capacity development results and their sustainability are assessed in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, with realistic measurable indicators;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2011 information on further progress on an inter-agency collaborative framework on South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, and on progress in the preparation of the operational guidelines to support the implementation of the Nairobi outcome document of the High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, to be prepared as mandated by the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation at its sixteenth session;

5. Encourages further support for a wide use of performance indicators for gender equality and the empowerment of women among United Nations country teams in the context of their review of United Nations Development Assistance Framework implementation and preparations for the roll-out of subsequent United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks;

6. Invites the United Nations development system to assess the extent to which national expertise, systems and capacity are used in operational activities for development, with a view to strengthening them and supporting them in reaching the highest quality standards;

7. Welcomes the intergovernmental meetings of programme pilot countries, held in Kigali from 19 to 21 October 2009, and in Hanoi from 14 to 16 June 2010, takes note with appreciation of the Kigali and Hanoi declarations, and in this regard also takes note of the progress made by “delivering as one” countries in their own country-led evaluations, with the participation of relevant stakeholders and with the technical support of the United Nations Evaluation Group, to be completed by 1 July 2010, taking into account the principles of national ownership and “no one size fits all”;

Functioning of the resident coordinator system, including costs and benefits

8. Encourages the United Nations Development Group to continue working to improve the quality of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and its regular monitoring in order to support programme countries by enhancing the capacities of the United Nations country teams, and in that context reiterates that national ownership and leadership should be the principal guidance in that area, including the participation of programme country Governments;

9. Recalls that the General Assembly, in paragraph 96 of its resolution 62/208, underscored that resident coordinators, supported by the United Nations country teams, should report to national authorities on progress made against results agreed in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, acknowledges the development of a standard operational format on reporting, and encourages the inclusion of information on its implementation in future reports;

10. Encourages the organizations of the United Nations development system and the United Nations Development Group to continue to streamline and eliminate duplication in reporting requirements for their various stakeholders in order to reduce the administrative and procedural burden on United Nations country teams;

11. Encourages the organizations of the United Nations development system to continue to support the work of the United Nations Development Group for improving the process through which the resident coordinators/humanitarian coordinators are selected and trained, as well as for attracting and retaining suitable and high-performing resident coordinators, and to include information in that regard in their reports to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

Simplification and harmonization of the United Nations development system

12. Recalls the section on harmonization of business practices of General Assembly resolution 64/289, and in that regard encourages the United Nations Development Group to support the United Nations country teams in preparing and implementing, in consultation with the national authorities of programme countries, workplans for the simplification and harmonization of business practices at the country level, with results and timelines;

13. Reiterates its request to the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to explore sources of financing to support the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Harmonization of Business Practices in the United Nations System, including through discussions with their respective governing bodies on the allocation of funds;

14. Encourages the organizations of the United Nations development system to overcome obstacles to inter-agency mobility in general, including the rapid redeployment of qualified national and international staff in crisis and post-crisis situations.

Operational activities

Role of Special Representatives of Secretary-General and Resident Coordinators

JIU report. By a September note [A/65/394], the Secretary-General submitted the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) entitled “The role of the special representatives of the Secretary-General and resident coordinators”, which examined barriers to the achievement of coherence and integration of the UN system and proposed, with a flexible model, benchmarks that could be adopted to a variety of situations within which the United Nations operated.

The report stated that, while there should be only one process, “One United Nations” was currently being worked out within different parallel processes at the country level: within the Resident Coordinator system in the eight pilot projects, and within the Special Representative of the Secretary-General system in the 18 integrated peace missions/offices. To a lesser extent, the Humanitarian Coordinator system in 27 countries also represented a model of coherence/integration that associated non-UN actors.

The report further noted that no definition of coherence within the United Nations had been adopted. The 2006 “Delivering as one” report [YUN 2006, p. 1584] proposed defining the process as the consolidation of most UN country activities under one strategic programme, one budget, one leader and one office. The validity and applicability of that definition had been questioned and the General Assembly did not make a pronouncement on the issue. In general, the JIU Inspector said, coherence was a term applicable to developing countries not involved in peace operations, whereas integration was related to countries where peace operations were in place. While the definitions of coherence and integration applied at the country level, the Inspector was of the view that in order to achieve both in the field, coherence and integration at the Headquarters level were imperative; for them to be effective, they should occur at all levels across the UN system and with outside stakeholders and partners. Across the UN system, coherence should be realized between Member States at the national and legislative level, and within and among the Secretariat, the funds and programmes and the specialized agencies. The greatest challenge to coherence and integration was the UN structure itself—a highly fragmented and complex bureaucracy comprising 17 departments and offices, 14 funds and programmes, and 16 specialized agencies, all with different mandates, governing structures and procedures. The Inspector suggested defining coherence as the overall strategic process for UN system operations to achieve pre-defined objectives, and integration as the operational modality to make that coherence functional. Integrated missions and “Delivering as one” were, therefore, means not only to meet country needs but also to achieve coherence.

The cornerstone to bringing coherence and integration into the UN system in support of peace and development efforts was for all concerned to accept that the process had to be driven by the Member States concerned. Ultimately, achieving coherence and integration was the shared responsibility of Member States and UN system organizations, both individually and collectively.

The Inspector stressed that the proposed model for coherence and integration entailed a high degree of flexibility to adapt it to the peculiarities of a case-by-case approach. For example, the needs of post-conflict countries differed from those of developing countries that were not involved in peace operations and should, therefore, be tailored accordingly. While noting that the Assembly in resolution 62/277 [YUN 2008, p. 1516] had decided that system-wide coherence would focus exclusively, and in an integrated manner, on “Delivering as one”, the Inspector was of the opinion that the architecture, as defined and expressed in his benchmarking framework, superseded the two main current exercises, namely, “Delivering as one” and integrated peace operations.

The Inspector invited the legislative organs to adopt the benchmarking framework as a yardstick to guide and measure efforts towards a more efficient and effective organization, which would better serve the needs of countries. The 18 benchmarks were as follows: the coherence and integration process was effectively guided by Member States; Security Council mandates were specific, measurable, attainable, relevant and time-bound, with sufficient resources to match; a binding institutional framework for the UN system defined the operational doctrine, division of labour, rules of engagement, guidelines and procedures, agreed by CEB and approved by the relevant legislative organs; effective Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO)/Department of Political Affairs concerted efforts and coordination mechanisms were in place; inter-agency coordination mechanisms were effectively promoting integration and coherence throughout the system; the UN system interacted with its external partners from civil society, Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), regional organizations and the private sector in a coherent manner; Regional Coordination Mechanisms and Regional Directors’ Teams were effectively promoting coherence and integration at the regional, subregional and country level; the coherence process within the UN system upheld the sovereign rule of each country in defining its needs and wants and setting priorities; a common mindset, conceptualization, understanding, shared vision, approach and sense of ownership existed among the UN organizations represented in the country; there was a flexible integration model to respond to the specific and changing needs of each country, determined through a needs assessment carried out by, or in full consultation with, the UNCT and the host country; a selection process of mission leaders through CEB was in place to ensure the appointment of highly qualified managers with full authority over representatives of all UN system organizations in the country; leaders received the necessary training/induction to perform their functions effectively; the “One leader” at the country level was empowered with the necessary authority and held accountable to the CEB machinery for implementing the “One plan”; UN system representatives were given the resources to exercise the coordination responsibilities entrusted to them effectively; a results-based approach was applied to ensure a coherent and integrated planning, programming, budgeting, implementation, monitoring, evaluation and reporting process from the outset of the preparation of the “One plan”; a funding mechanism existed that included all UN system organizations present in the field, the host country, the Bretton Woods institutions, bilateral and multilateral donors, international and national non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other members of civil society, to ensure coherence, integration and correlation between needs assessments and available resources; a “One United Nations house” was set up for UN system organizations in the country to share common premises and services while related savings were reinvested in development activities within the country; and civil society representatives, Bretton Woods institutions, group donors and the private sector participated in the “One United Nations” process at country level.

In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly his comments [A/65/394/Add.1] and those of CEB on the JIU report. While the organizations largely accepted the general thrust of the benchmarks, the Secretary-General said, their comments indicated a desire for additional detail and analysis on the mechanisms proposed to implement each benchmark, many of which required an integration of the development system that was impractical. They noted that benchmarks were based on the JIU Inspector’s reconceptualization of coherence as “the overall strategic process for the UN system operations to achieve predefined objectives” and of integration as “the operational modality to make that coherence functional”, and suggested that, although such an approach was valid, it could further complicate those two endeavours.

The agencies also noted that the JIU report proposed separating the functions of the resident coordinator or UN special representative from those of the resident representative, which would likely deprive the resident coordinator of a substantive portfolio, and the lack of a distinctive institutional platform would weaken his or her ability to engage with Governments. The proposals risked isolating the resident coordinator and weakening his or her coordination capacity and leverage within the UNCT, thereby undermining the team’s ability to deliver a strategic, coordinated and coherent development programme. In their view, the report often pointed to Member States’ responsibility in bringing about an enhanced level of integration and coherence; however, the actions needed to advance that process were directed at the secretariats of the various entities rather than at Member States themselves. The agencies also noted that, with its focus on establishing a benchmarking framework for coherence and integration within the UN system, the JIU report differed in scope and focus from the original plan. They supported the need to review the coherence and integration of the UN system, but suggested that their responses might have been different if questions had been posed in the context of coherence and integration within the common system rather than with a focus on the role of the SRSGs and the resident coordinators.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/65/441], adopted resolution 65/177 without vote [agenda item 25].

Operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 62/208 of 19 December 2007 on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, its resolution 63/232 of 19 December 2008 on operational activities for development, its resolution 64/220 of 21 December 2009 on operational activities for development of the United Nations system and its resolution 64/289 of 2 July 2010 on system-wide coherence, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 2008/2 of 18 July 2008, 2009/1 of 22 July 2009 and 2010/22 of 23 July 2010,

Recalling also the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Reaffirming the importance of the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, through which the General Assembly establishes key system-wide policy orientations for development cooperation and country-level modalities of the United Nations system,

Acknowledging the importance of delivering assistance in order to overcome the challenges to improving human life by implementing resolution 62/208,

Recalling the role of the Economic and Social Council in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations system so as to ensure that policy orientations established by the General Assembly are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 61/16 of 20 November 2006 and 62/208 of 19 December 2007 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the funding of operational activities for development of the United Nations system for 2008, recalls the section of resolution 64/289 on improving the funding system of operational activities for development of the United Nations system for enhanced system-wide coherence and looks forward to its implementation, and notes the progress made in broadening and improving reporting, in line with paragraph 28 of resolution 62/208;

2. Also takes note of the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation on its sixteenth session;

3. Further takes note of the report on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

4. Recognizes the importance of strengthening strategies for operational activities for development of the United Nations system, in order to contribute to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals by 2015, especially in the least developed countries and other developing countries that are lagging behind in meeting the targets;

5. Takes note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled “The role of the special representatives of the Secretary-General and resident coordinators” and of the comments of the Secretary-General and the member organizations of the United Nations system thereon;

6. Recalls Economic and Social Council decision 2009/214 of 22 July 2009 on operational activities for development and Council resolution 2010/22 of 23 July 2010 on progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 62/208, and expresses appreciation for the guidance provided by the Council on the further implementation of Assembly resolution 62/208 as contained in Council resolution 2010/22;

7. Also recalls that, in its resolution 63/232, the General Assembly decided to hold its next comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system in 2012 and subsequent reviews on a quadrennial basis, and reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to postpone to its sixty-seventh session the submission, through the Economic and Social Council, of the comprehensive analysis of the implementation of resolution 62/208, to be prepared in accordance with the guidance contained in paragraph 143 of that resolution.

Simplification and harmonization of UN development system

Report of Secretary-General. In April [E/2010/52], the Secretary-General reported on progress achieved in simplification and harmonization of business practices in the UN development system. The report provided a snapshot of progress made by the UN development system, as well as individual UN system organizations, focusing on actions taken by the executive boards and governing bodies of UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies. UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP provided detailed information through their annual reports to the Council, but the Secretary-General's report did not cover actions by those organizations.

The report noted that, following the endorsement of the Plan of Action for the Harmonization of Business Practices in the United Nations System [YUN 2009, p. 852], significant efforts were invested in fine tuning the initiatives, taking into consideration the changing financial context, as well as work already undertaken. Agreements had emerged over the previous year within UNDG in areas with direct impact on country-level operations, notably on clarifying and harmonizing guidelines on joint funding, common procurement and common information and communications technology (ICT) services.

Interface between UN system organizations and intergovernmental bodies had improved, resulting in growing political and financial support for a number of system-wide initiatives, such as the International Public Sector Accounting Standards, adopted by the General Assembly in section IV of resolution 60/283 [YUN 2006, p. 1583]. In view of the challenges ahead, more comprehensive, multifaceted and forward-looking guidance was needed from the executive boards and governing bodies.

The Secretary-General concluded that many UN system organizations had taken advantage of the management reforms as an opportunity to shift the way in which programmatic services were delivered. That was particularly apparent in the ICT area. The gradual shift towards a bottom-up approach was another hallmark of recent efforts towards simplification and harmonization. Removing the bottlenecks that hindered coherent business operations at the country level had become a priority of CEB/High-level Committee on Management and UNDG. A welcome development over the previous year was the increased interaction between UN inter-agency mechanisms and the central intergovernmental processes. There was, however, scope to deepen that interface.

The UN development system was confronted with significant challenges, arising from, among others, the insufficiency of financial and human resources, the diversity of UN system organizations, and the difficulty in achieving progress across the board. Many organizations had fallen short of progress. The linkages between change-management initiatives required progress on all fronts, which had not been the case.

The Secretary-General recommended that UN system organizations consider more regular and reporting to solicit broad guidance; make forward resources planning for the simplification and harmonization of business practices to avoid delay of implementation as a result of funding constraints; and, under UNDG, develop a plan for promoting simplification and harmonization at the country level. UNCTs should prepare country-level workplans with results and timelines for their achievement. Resources should be made available for UNCTs to implement a comprehensive plan for the harmonization of business practices and development of common services at the country level.

Communication. At its 2010 operational activities segment, the Economic and Social Council had before it a 3 December 2009 letter [A/64/578-E/2010/3] from Rwanda transmitting a statement of outcome and the way forward, adopted at the Intergovernmental Meeting (Kigali, 19–21 October 2009) of the eight “Delivering as one” programme pilot countries (Albania, Cape Verde, Mozambique, Pakistan, Rwanda, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Viet Nam), as well as representatives of countries that had voluntarily adopted it (Benin, Bhutan, Comoros, Kiribati, Malawi, Papua New Guinea). Participants welcomed the initiative of seven of the eight programme pilot countries (Albania, Cape Verde, Mozambique, Rwanda, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Viet Nam) to conduct country-led evaluations of their “Delivering as one” initiatives, and agreed that, while the evaluations were country-specific, a set of common parameters should be considered in all of them. They also agreed on institutional arrangements to ensure the independence, quality and credibility of the evaluations, and recommendations for accelerating the implementation of resolution 62/208.

Financing and expenditures

UN system expenditures on operational activities totalled $22.1 billion in 2009 [A/66/79-E/2011/107], compared with $18.6 billion in 2008. Ten UN entities accounted for some 90 per cent of that total: UNDP, 25 per cent; WFP, 18 per cent; UNICEF, 15 per cent; WHO and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, 8 per cent each; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and UNFPA, 4 per cent each; the International Labour Organization, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, 2 per cent each; and other organization together, 11 per cent.

Some $13.6 billion, or 65 per cent, of funding was directed to longer-term development activities, against 35 per cent to activities with a humanitarian assistance focus. Of the 13.6 billion, $7.7 billion, or 57 per cent, was in the form of country-programmable resources, while the remaining 43 per cent related to global and regional programme activities (19 per cent), programme support and management (17 per cent) and various other “non-attributed” activities. Low-income countries received some 71 per cent of total country programmable resources, with the top 10 recipients accounting for about 38 per cent.

By region, Africa received 47 per cent of humanitarian assistance expenditures and 25 per cent of development-related expenditures; Asia/Pacific, 18 and 19 per cent, respectively; Americas, 4 and 10 per cent, respectively; Western Asia, 17 and 4 per cent, respectively; and Europe, 2 and 2 per cent, respectively. Regional and global received 4 and 14 per cent, respectively, programme support and management 8 and 15 per cent, respectively, and 10 per cent of expenditures were non-attributed.

Some 73 per cent of the $21.9 billion in total contributions in 2009 were by Governments, both DAC countries and non-DAC countries, with the European Commission and other multilateral institutions, NGOs and public-private partnerships accounting for the remaining 27 per cent. Contributions from developing countries (excluding local resources) totalled $679 million. Between 2005 and 2009, their contribution grew by some 75 per cent. Twenty-seven per cent of total funding was in the form of core resources, and 73 per cent in non-core contributions. Core funding declined by 4.3 per cent in real terms, while non-core funding increased by 1.7 per cent.

In December [E/2011/5], the UNDP Administrator reported total contributions to UNDP and its associated funds and programmes of $5.34 billion in 2009, with contributions to regular (core) resources amounting to $1.01 billion in nominal terms, a decrease of 8 per cent from the $1.10 billion in 2008, and 19 per cent below the annual target for regular resources set out in the UNDP 2008–2013 strategic plan. Projections suggested that contributions to regular resources would remain below $1 billion, at $960 million in 2010, subject to exchange rate fluctuations, widening the gap between actual contributions and the annual targets of the strategic plan.

Other (non-core) contributions to UNDP in 2009 remained almost unchanged, reaching $4.13 billion, compared with $4.16 billion in 2008. Non-core contributions from bilateral donors amounted to $1.56 billion in 2009, an increase of 8 per cent over 2008. Non-core resources entrusted to UNDP by non-bilateral partners and multilateral funds reached $1.55 billion, a 15 per cent increase over 2008. Resources channelled through UNDP by programme country Governments and local partners in support of their own national development fell to $0.72 billion in 2009, a decrease of 25 per cent compared with 2008 and a sharper reduction than projected in the strategic plan.

Other resources represented an important complement to the regular (non-earmarked) UNDP resource base. The ratio of regular to other contributions, however, remained at approximately 1:4 in 2009. As outlined in the integrated resources framework of its strategic plan, UNDP sought to balance the ratio of regular to other resources and secure an adequate, stable and predictable base of regular resources.

Overall, multi-donor trust funds, which provided flexible, coordinated and predictable funding, had become one of the important financing tools available to the UN system to help channel funds towards a strategic vision that supported the achievement of national and global agreed goals and priorities. In 2009, UNDP received $1.2 billion in new donor contributions on behalf of the UN system, which brought the total cumulative deposited funds to $4.2 billion as at 31 December 2009. As at the end of 2009, $3.1 billion was transferred to 42 UN organizations participating in 32 multi-donor trust funds and 20 joint programmes operating in 74 countries.

The 2010 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York on 8 November [A/CONF.208/2010/3]. In August [A/CONF.208/2010/2], the Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions pledged or paid at the 2009 Pledging Conference to 25 funds and programmes, as well as to 5 trust funds, amounting to some $1.2 billion as at 30 June 2010.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 2010, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held two regular sessions in New York (19–22 January and 30 August–2 September), and an annual session in Geneva (21 June–2 July) [E/2010/35].

The Board adopted 34 decisions, including those providing an overview of actions taken at its January [E/2010/35 (dec. 2010/12)], June/July [dec. 2010/27] and August/September [dec. 2010/34] sessions. Other decisions dealt with the work of UNDP and UNFPA, the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) (see p. 891), the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) (see p. 887) and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (see p. 1182).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2010/251 of 23 July, took note of the UNDP/UNFPA Board's report on its work in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 854].

Renaming of Executive Board

On 22 January [dec. 2010/7], the Executive Board recalled its 2008 decision [YUN 2008, p. 984] on UNOPS governance structure and noted the subsequent desire of Member States to establish during Board sessions a separate segment for UNOPS, and to change the name of the Board to include UNOPS in its title. It also noted the communications received from the UNOPS Executive Director and the UN Office of Legal Affairs on procedural and substantive aspects of a potential name change. It requested the Executive Director to obtain the views and approval of the Secretary-General with respect to the matter, and provide that information to the Board by mid-February, together with information on the scope and content of UNOPS governance structure. The Board decided to hold an informal meeting two weeks after that information had been transmitted to its members, and decided that if, within two weeks of the informal meeting, no member had expressed any objection, the name of the Executive Board should be changed to include UNOPS in its title; that references to UNOPS should be included with references to “fund or programme” in the Board functions; and that a recommendation for the change in name be transmitted by the Board to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council.

(For information on UNOPS, see p. 887.)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/23 [draft: E/2010/L.17] without vote [agenda item 3 (b)].

Renaming of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund to include the United Nations Office for Project Services

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For the text, see General Assembly resolution 65/176.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/441], adopted resolution 65/176 without vote [agenda item 25].

Renaming of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund to include the United Nations Office for Project Services

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993, in which it decided that the governing bodies of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund should be transformed into Executive Boards,

Recalling also its decision 48/501 of 19 September 1994, in which it decided that the United Nations Office for Project Services should become a separate and identifiable entity,

Recalling further decisions 2008/35 of 12 September 2008 and 2010/7 of 22 January 2010 of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund,

Reaffirming the mandate of the United Nations Office for Project Services as contained in Executive Board decision 2009/25 of 11 September 2009, and further recalling the relevant provisions of Executive Board decision 2010/21 of 29 June 2010,

Reaffirming also the role of the United Nations Office for Project Services as a central resource for the United Nations system in procurement and contracts management as well as in civil works and physical infrastructure development, including the related capacity development activities,

Recognizing the potential for value-adding contributions that the United Nations Office for Project Services can make in providing efficient, cost-effective services to partners in the areas of project management, human resources, financial management and common/shared services,

1. Welcomes the current practice of holding a separate segment for the United Nations Office for Project Services during sessions of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund, and notes the desire of Member States to rename the Executive Board to include the United Nations Office for Project Services;

2. Decides that the name of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund shall be changed to “Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund/United Nations Office for Project Services”;

3. Also decides that the functions of the Executive Board as set forth in resolution 48/162 shall apply mutatis mutandis to the United Nations Office for Project Services.

UNDP/UNFPA activities

On 22 January [dec. 2010/8], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the 2009 joint report of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Economic and Social Council [YUN 2009, p. 855] and commended the progress made by both entities in contributing to the implementation of the triennial comprehensive policy review (see p. 860). It welcomed inclusion in the report of a more qualitative assessment and analysis of results achieved, progress made and difficulties encountered, as well as lessons learned, and requested further such progress in future reports. It requested them to continue to improve their results-oriented reporting in other reports to the Executive Board, and to include in future reports recommendations to further improve the implementation of the triennial comprehensive policy review. The Board also requested the UNDP Administrator and UNFPA Executive Director, in consultation with the UNICEF Executive Director, to consider ways of further improving and rationalizing their reporting, taking into account relevant Council resolutions, including resolution 2008/2 [YUN 2008, p. 959], and to prepare a paper in 2010, containing options on the matter, for the Board's consideration.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2010/251 of 23 July, took note of the 2009 joint report to the Council.

In December [E/2011/5], in compliance with General Assembly resolutions 56/201 [YUN 2001, p. 783], 59/250 [YUN 2004, p. 868], and 62/208 [YUN 2007, p. 877] the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director submitted a joint report containing information on funding for operational activities of the UN development system, the contribution of UN operational activities to national capacity development and development effectiveness, improved functioning of the UN development system, and follow-up to the triennial comprehensive policy review.

UNDP and UNFPA support for capacity development was tailored to the particular needs and contexts of each country, with initiatives often delivered in partnership with other UN organizations, bilateral partners, civil society and private sector partners. To measure capacity development results, UNDP and UNFPA developed a framework focusing on outcomes and outputs, which helped them to capture and communicate the results of capacity development efforts, making it easier to measure the impact and relevance of investment. An MDG Acceleration Framework (MAF) was developed in 2010 to invigorate collective UN responses to specific MDGs on which performance had been lagging in individual countries. UNDP helped develop assessment and costing methodologies, which were key to integrating the MDGs into national planning.

UNDP and UNFPA worked with Governments to support lead institutions that were scaling up their capacities to achieve the MDGs. Support to develop inter-agency capacity was enhanced through the millennium trust fund. UNDP and UNFPA worked with Governments in building national and local partnerships. Of key importance to UNDP and partners was the strengthening of the United Nations Collaborative Programme on Reducing Emissions from Deforestation and Forest Degradation in Developing Countries, one of the outcomes of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change in Copenhagen, Denmark [YUN 2009, p. 1015]. UNDP and UNFPA focused efforts on developing capacity to address HIV/AIDS. Lessons drawn from the complex and vast UNDP and UNFPA capacity development support efforts in 2010 pointed to the need for inclusive stakeholder participation, deep-rooted political will, country-specific solutions, relevant monitoring mechanisms, leveraging of constituencies, and the provision of innovative instruments, tools and expertise.

South-South cooperation activities supported by UNDP and UNFPA country offices was aimed at facilitating exchange of knowledge, formulating regional and subregional projects, developing human resources and institutions, and promoting policy dialogue in sectoral programmes in governance, population, environment and energy, gender, disaster prevention, crisis management and public administration. As recommended by the 2009 High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation [YUN 2009, p. 874], UNDP and UNFPA played a primary role in South-South cooperation as providers of technical and strategic guidance, as brokers and facilitators and as funders. UNDP developed a global network of aid effectiveness practitioners, which supported South-South cooperation globally.

UNDP and UNFPA advanced gender equality and women's empowerment in each of their thematic areas and in line with the priorities of their respective strategic plans. In 2009, more than 69 UNDP country offices supported national partners' efforts to integrate gender equality into national development policies and budget frameworks. UNDP developed tools and guidance to support advocacy and capacity-building for integrating gender issues into national plans and policies, and focused on strengthening women's legal rights and access to justice, while promoting land, property and inheritance rights. Both UNDP and UNFPA supported the Secretary-General's campaign "UNITE to End Violence against Women". Nearly one third of all UNDP programme countries had ongoing initiatives against gender-based violence.

As the designated global lead for crisis prevention and recovery, UNDP, in collaboration with DPKO and the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), was responsible for developing and establishing the team of experts mandated under Security Council resolution 1888(2009) [YUN 2009, p. 1137] on sexual violence and conflict. As a member of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Women, Peace and Security, UNDP helped to develop global indicators to track the implementation of Council resolution 1325 (2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113]. As a partner in the Global Gender and Climate Alliance, UNDP helped build the capacity of more than 500 government and civil society representatives from all regions to address the gender dimensions of climate change.

Both UNDP and UNFPA recognized the need to strengthen the links between humanitarian responses and early recovery efforts, and worked with OHCHR to advocate for the integration of human rights considerations into humanitarian responses. Their support also addressed chronic vulnerability, linking emergency action with transition and development programmes. UNDP supported national partners in formulating and implementing comprehensive disaster risk reduction programmes and addressed all five Hyogo Framework for Action priorities, which emanated from the 2005 World Conference on Disaster Reduction [YUN 2005, p. 1015].

UNDP, through dialogue and inclusive consensus-building, supported the resolution of conflicts over land, natural resources and governance reform issues in 10 countries. National and international partners enhanced women's security and access to justice by setting up formal and informal legal aid mechanisms for survivors of sexual and gender-based violence in Somalia. In Sierra Leone, more than 500 survivors received legal support services. UNDP rendered general legal aid services to 47 communities in 10 districts, with 6,679 direct beneficiaries and 917 cases referred to institutions of redress. As part of broader UN peacebuilding efforts, UNDP launched joint programmes with DPKO to support the rule of law and security in Haiti, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and southern Sudan, and expanded a similar joint programme in Timor-Leste. The focus on developing capacities in post-conflict settings was a shared responsibility between UNDP and UNFPA. The UNDP capacity-development response for peacebuilding, economic recovery and conflict resolution, piloted in northern Uganda, was duplicated in Chad and the DRC. Gender profile templates established by UNFPA and UNDP in the early recovery cluster were initially rolled out in Bangladesh and Kenya in 2009 and led to the integration of gender information into national systems for statistics, advocacy for women's NGOs and preparation of national profiles.

To improve the functioning of the UN development system and to foster coherence, effectiveness and relevance, UNDG developed a set of strategic priorities and a workplan for 2010–2011, which aimed to respond to the triennial comprehensive policy review and the UN imperative of providing support for national efforts to support the MDGs and other internationally agreed development goals. UNFPA and UNDP worked, as part of a broader effort within UNDG, to support UNDAF roll-out countries in 2010. Through MAF, UNDP worked to ensure increased support for the achievement of the MDGs, including through enhanced support for high-quality UNDAFs. UNDP and UNFPA worked together to respond to the Assembly's call for the voluntary submission by Governments of a common country programme document, in an effort to enhance country-level coherence.

In 2010, seven out of the eight "Delivering as one" pilot programme countries undertook a country-led evaluation, the results of which were shared at the High-level Tripartite Conference (Hanoi, Viet Nam, June) (see p. 1395). In accordance with Assembly resolution 64/289 on system-wide coherence (see p. 1396), actions were being taken to complete the independent evaluation by mid-2011. UNFPA and UNDP contributed to the improved functioning of the UN development system through their participation in regional UN development groups, which assessed the performance of resident coordinators and other members of the UNCTs, and provided close supervision and quality assurance of the joint programming processes of UN organizations at the country level, particularly the common country assessment UNDAF processes. Priorities in 2010 included providing strategic guidance to countries in crisis, preparation of a comprehensive guidance document on social protection, providing guidance on addressing climate change, joint support for achieving the MDGs and the development of UN system-wide approaches to engagement with middle-income countries. A key result in 2010 was the production of joint regional MDG reports for the July annual ministerial review by the Economic and Social Council (see p. 1135) and the Assembly's High-level Plenary Meeting on the MDGs in September (see p. 813). The findings of those reports helped develop joint strategies to bridge development gaps.

UNDP and UNFPA continued to support the harmonization of business practices in procurement, finance and budget, and ICT. In that regard, a joint UNDG/High-level Committee on Management (HLCM) high-level mission (March–July) identified areas for the further harmonization of business practices to improve the efficiency of the UN system on the ground. The implementation plan recommended by the mission was approved at the UNDG/HLCM joint meeting in September.

During the reporting period, the UNDP Evaluation Office emphasized increased coverage and enhanced methodological rigour of independent evaluation. In 2010, UNFPA also embarked on improving its evaluation facilities, in line with its new evaluation policy approved in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1053].

Human Development Report

The Human Development Report 2010 [Sales No. 10.III.B.1], prepared by UNDP, had as its theme human development concepts and measurement. Critically important to the Millennium Agenda, the twentieth anniversary edition provided a systematic assessment of trends in key components of human development over the previous 40 years and celebrated the contributions of the human development approach, which was as relevant as ever.

An update [DP/2010/24] on the Human Development Report consultations was submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 57/264 [YUN 2002, p. 841]. The Human Development Office, charged with preparing the Report, held informal consultations with the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in January and March. A series of informal expert reviews were held in April with the OECD development centre in Paris and UN partners in Geneva and Bangkok.

On 1 July [dec. 2010/27], the Board took note of the update on the Human Development Report consultations.

UNDP operational activities

Country and regional programmes

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 22 January [dec. 2010/12], approved the country programmes for Argentina, Guatemala, Romania and Uganda, as well as the regional programme for the Arab States.

On 23 June [dec. 2010/25], the Board, acting on a request by the United Republic of Tanzania to present, in 2011, a draft common country programme document to the respective Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP, decided to consider the document on an exceptional basis and to post the revised common country programme on the websites of the respective organizations no later than six weeks after the discussion, with a hard copy provided to Board members upon request. It stressed that the agency component of the programme would be approved on a no-objection basis, without presentation or discussion, unless at least five members informed the secretariat in writing before the meeting of their wish to bring the document before the Board.

Based upon an April note [DP/2010/25] by the UNDP Administrator, the Board on 1 July [dec. 2010/27] took note of the first one-year extensions of the country programmes for Albania, Bangladesh, Cape Verde, Chad, Ghana, Guyana, Kyrgyzstan, Mauritania, Seychelles, South Africa, Ukraine and Viet Nam, and the six-month extension for Tanzania. It approved the second one-year extension of the country programme for Zimbabwe, and the first two-year extensions of the country programmes for Namibia, Nepal and Sierra Leone. The Board also took note of draft country programmes and comments thereon for 10 countries and a regional programme document for the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS).

In July, the Administrator submitted a note on the second-year extension of the country programme for Iran [DP/2010/37] and another on assistance to Myanmar [DP/2010/36] containing the conclusions, recommendations and challenges of the 2010 international independent mission (May–June) to assess the Human Development Initiative, phase 4, 2009–2010.

On 2 September [dec. 2010/34], the Board approved the final country programme documents on a no-objection basis, without presentation or discussion, for Azerbaijan, Belarus, Cambodia, China, Georgia, Iraq, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Pakistan, Serbia, Swaziland and Turkey, as well as the regional programme document for Europe and CIS. It also approved the second one-year extension of the country programme for Iran, and took note of the draft country programmes and comments made thereon for Burkina Faso, Chile, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Indonesia, Maldives, Somalia, Uruguay and Zambia.

Also on 2 September [dec. 2010/30], the Board took note of the report of the independent assessment mission to Myanmar, in particular the strategic challenges and recommendations. It requested that the Administrator take account of and implement the mission's findings under the Human Development Initiative. The Board recommended that UNDP initiate the design of programming activities from 2012 onwards, taking into account the mission's recommendations.

Field visits

At its annual session, the Executive Board considered a May report [DP/FPA/2010/CRP.1-E/ICEF/2010/CRP.32] on the joint field visit to Rwanda by a delegation representing the Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP (20–30 March), and a June report [DP/2010/CRP.2-DP/FPA/2010/CRP.1] on a field visit by UNDP/UNFPA Board members to the Syrian Arab Republic (17–22 May).

On 1 July [dec. 2010/27], the Executive Board took note of the reports on the two field visits.

Evaluation of regional programme for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States

At its annual session, the Executive Board considered an evaluation [DP/2010/22] of the 2006–2010 regional programme for Europe and CIS, which assessed overall performance and outcomes, and evaluated the UNDP contribution through the programme to development results in the region, with regard to relevance, responsiveness, partnerships, effectiveness, efficiency and sustainability. The findings were intended to contribute to the formulation of the next regional programme and its alignment with the UNDP strategic plan for 2008–2013.

The evaluation found that the Regional Bureau for Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (RBEC) regional programme focused on meeting three key challenges: poverty reduction and economic development; democratic governance; and sustainable energy and environmental practices. In addressing each of those challenges, the programme made linkages to gender, HIV/AIDS, conflict prevention and recovery, and human security, including trafficking in human beings, narcotics and weapons. The quality of the description of the results framework in the regional programme document was found to be low. Management and staff of UNDP country offices were not fully aware of the regional programme concept and their perceptions of it were contradictory, reflecting a lack of consistency in how the programme was described and presented.

The evaluation concluded that the regional programme in general and the RBEC Bratislava Regional Centre (BRC) in particular, which managed the programme, were extremely important for fulfilling the RBEC mission in the region. BRC had a strong capacity and in-depth expertise in most UNDP priority areas and was a unique source of knowledge and advice for the country offices. The programme was being implemented in a fast-changing region and in the complex environment of implementing the UNDP regionalization policy.

The evaluation put forward five recommendations: develop and implement a more relevant approach to programming at the regional level, recognizing the distinctiveness of regional programming within UNDP; focus on the development of issue-oriented regional projects, with an emphasis on the subregional level, and ensure participation of the respective country offices in the design of the intervention; keep knowledge products and knowledge management services as a top priority and ensure adequate investment in that area; reconsider the strategic position of the regional programme and its contribution to development results through high-quality development services in Governments and other UNDP partners in cooperation with the country offices, rather than as a link between headquarters and country offices or an internal consulting unit focused primarily on supporting country offices and managing projects; and strengthen investment in the professional development of staff, specifically in the skills related to consulting activities, and carefully plan staff workload.

In its response [DP/2010/23], UNDP management stated that the evaluation, which was intended to feed directly into the development of the new RBEC regional programme to start in 2011, would contribute to the independent evaluation of regionalization in UNDP being conducted by the Evaluation Office. It set out in tabular form key actions taken or contemplated with defined time frames, and identified units responsible.

On 1 July [dec. 2010/27], the Board took note of the evaluation of the regional programme for Europe and the CIS, 2006–2010, and the related management response.

UNDP programme results

UNDP activities under the 2008–2013 strategic plan, endorsed by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 898], updated in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 975], and extended in 2009 to 2013 [YUN 2009, p. 862], were conducted in four focus areas: poverty reduction and MDG achievement; democratic governance; crisis prevention and recovery; and environment and sustainable development. The midterm review of the strategic plan and annual report of the Administrator [DP/2011/22] presented an analysis of UNDP performance from 2008 to 2010, and focused on delivery within the plan for 2010. Development results in 2010 focused on eight outcomes: MDG-based national development strategies; enhanced national capacities; AIDS responses integrated into poverty reduction strategies; civil society; national, regional and local levels of governance; strengthened capacities at all levels to implement anti-corruption activities; and post-disaster and post-conflict governance capacities.

Poverty reduction and MDG achievement

In 2010, 34 UNDP country offices supported partner countries in completing their national MDG reports, including deepened analysis of proven interventions and lessons learned. Of those, six were conflict-affected countries. Fifteen African countries produced addenda to their MDG reports focusing on the impact of the global, financial, economic and food-price crises to the achievement of the MDGs. Those reports provided valuable evidence to inform policy decisions within each country, and were summarized in the MDG Synthesis Report. UNDP supported a number of countries in preparing MDG-based national poverty reduction and development strategies and plans, leading to the preparation and endorsement of local economic strategies, currently integrated into regional and district development plans. As a result, regional and district authorities were providing more efficiently financing for private sector development and employment creation, especially for poor women and youth; addressing local constraints to economic growth; and establishing investment profiles and incentives to attract both internal and external funding to stimulate economic growth. In Viet Nam, for the first time, and with UNDP support, a draft comprehensive national strategy on social protection was formulated, focusing on chronic poverty among ethnic minorities. In Syria, UNDP advocacy efforts and support to several policy studies were crucial in bringing development issues to the forefront of the nation's five-year plan. To support countries in planning and prioritizing to address lagging MDGs, UNDP formulated an MDG Breakthrough Strategy, at the heart of which was MAF (see p. 869). For MDGs that were lagging in specific countries, MAF offered a systematic way to identify barriers to MDG achievement, as well as prioritized solutions to address them, and create or refine a country-level MDG action plan. MAF was piloted in 10 countries, and action plans were developed for a range of MDGs at both national and subnational levels, several of which addressed gender equality concerns in education and food security. Lessons from the pilots were included in a consolidated report, and a summary of preliminary findings from the pilot countries was presented at the 2010 MDG Summit (see p. 813).

Policy support was provided to many Governments to ensure gender equity and responsiveness at all levels of national, regional and local planning. UNDP supported trade capacity development interventions in 40 least developed countries (LDCs) through the Enhanced Integrated Framework programme, a $250 million fund to address trade-related constraints to MDG sustainability and inclusive growth. Diagnostic work was finalized with UNDP support, and 25 LDCs gained information and developed proposals to access policy and financial support from that initiative.

HIV, tuberculosis and malaria

UNDP supported programmes that built synergies between HIV and MDG action, with results focusing on strengthening planning and financing of multi-sector action on HIV and the MDGs; enhancing HIV-sensitive social protection; and promoting synergistic action on gender equality, poverty reduction and HIV responses. UNDP worked with country partners to integrate HIV priorities in poverty reduction strategies, national development plans, MDG processes and domestic resource allocations. Through a joint programme with the World Bank, UNDP supported 28 countries to integrate HIV responses into national development plans and poverty reduction strategies. Among other results, the programme was credited with facilitating successful mainstreaming of HIV into multiple poverty reduction strategy papers, creation of HIV budget lines in medium-term expenditure frameworks and sector budgets, and greater involvement of people living with HIV and vulnerable groups in development planning processes. UNDP also supported the integration of HIV into social protection programmes to help create and sustain initiatives that advanced HIV prevention, treatment, care and support. It worked with partners to address gender, poverty and HIV linkages through development policies and plans, and to promote synergies between action on HIV and action on maternal health. UNDP implemented the “Universal Access for Women and Girls Now” initiative in 10 countries to ensure that national HIV programmes addressed the needs of women and girls, and facilitated the legal and economic empowerment of women.

Democratic governance

In 2010, UNDP supported the engagement of civil society in national planning strategies and policies in all regions. Responding to demand, it used its goodwill with partners to engage civil society organizations and helped to create dialogue space, particularly in support of governance and institutional reform efforts. In some contexts, that involved facilitating an enabling environment for civil society, including support to legal and regulatory reform. Support was also provided to ensure civil society participation in national planning and policies across a range of thematic areas. Through the global Platform HD 2010 initiative, national projects in several countries focused on strengthening civic engagement in aspects of MDG policy and practice. Multi-stakeholder dialogues, including strong civil society and political party involvement on a range of social and political issues, were supported across Latin America through the innovative Political Analysis and Prospective Scenarios Project (PAPEP). Following UNDP-supported reform processes, laws enacted in Iraq and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia in 2010 were some of the most progressive in the Arab States and Balkans, respectively.

Other initiatives also sought to enhance constrained space for civic engagement. Engaging civil society at the local level resulted in improvements in public-service delivery in Colombia, the Dominican Republic and El Salvador, where UNDP supported innovative participatory and capacity-building mechanisms focusing on women and youth. The PROLOGO initiative in Latin America promoted increased participation of vulnerable populations and new political leadership at the community level through the strengthening of capacities in dialogue, leadership development, networking and concrete development proposals. As part of its work on strengthening governing institutions, UNDP supported public administrations in Governments and local authorities, focusing on efficiency, effectiveness and public accountability to address the concerns and interests of poor people, women and other vulnerable or excluded groups. With 2010 expenditures of nearly $420 million, that outcome represented over 35 per cent of all expenditures in the democratic governance focus area, and nearly 9 per cent of 2010 UNDP expenditures globally. That outcome primarily addressed support for four areas: economic and democratic transitions; service delivery and MDG achievements; State-building and peacebuilding in post-conflict countries; and capacity development of institutions at central and local levels, including e-government solutions.

UNDP assisted countries in developing a legitimate, transparent and accountable public service to help political and economic transitions deliver on their promises, building bridges between the State and the people. It supported initiatives to strengthen national, regional and local capacity to implement anti-corruption measures across all regions, including direct support to 12 anti-corruption institutions to monitor services of government institutions, conduct anti-corruption gap analyses, investigate cases of corruption and increase coordination with government institutions, media and civil society on the fight against corruption. UNDP developed tools and methodologies to mainstream anti-corruption strategies in the health, education and water sectors, which were used in 18 countries to collect and share good practices in reducing corruption bottlenecks. It supported four pilots on civil society monitoring of service delivery and promoted a more constructive engagement among the public, private and non-profit sectors. In India, a UNDP project on ensuring transparency in the payment of wages and efficiency in administration by introducing technologies like smart cards, biometric devices and ATMs, and by digitizing information, helped to prevent fraud in public resources and implement the Rural Employment Guarantee Act. UNDP explored the dynamics between corruption and post-conflict situations and looked at the effectiveness of anti-corruption programming based on empirical research in five countries, significantly contributing to anti-corruption programmes in post-conflict countries, particularly in Afghanistan, the DRC, Iraq, Nepal and Timor-Leste.

Crisis prevention and recovery

UNDP support for effective disaster preparedness was a critical part of its contribution to building national institutions and systems that were resilient to external shocks. In a context where the practice was largely one of externally supported response to natural hazard events after they occurred, UNDP support shifted the focus towards assisting national authorities, local governments and local communities to develop capacities to identify and analyse disaster risks, and to plan and lead disaster recovery processes through tools and guidelines that enabled credible recovery plans. UNDP assisted Benin, the Dominican Republic, Indonesia, Mexico, Moldova, Pakistan, and Tajikistan to deal with floods, and was a major contributor to Haiti in the 12 months following the 2010 earthquake (see p. 320). Under its cash-for-work and food-for-work programmes, UNDP provided a much-needed injection of cash into Haiti's economy, benefiting an estimated 1.2 million people.

Evaluations in 2009 and 2010 found significant UNDP contributions to post-conflict governance capacities in countries recovering from prolonged periods of political deadlock, instability, turbulent transition and conflict, helping them rebuild and reform crucial post-conflict governance institutions. Reflecting its conflict prevention and post-crisis governance mandates, UNDP support to programme countries included support to elections in post-conflict transitions, helping to build local "infrastructures for peace", and strengthening capacity for peacebuilding and conflict prevention. Three countries—Kenya, Solomon Islands and Togo—where previous elections had seen extensive violence, held peaceful votes in 2010, with assistance from UNDP.

At a UNDP seminar (Naivasha, Kenya, 2–4 February), government, political party and civil society representatives from 14 African countries agreed on an "infrastructures for peace" approach to their national peacebuilding goals. They defined such infrastructures as "dynamic networks of interdependent structures, mechanisms, resources, values, and skills which, through dialogue and consultation, contribute to conflict prevention and peacebuilding in a society." UNDP assisted countries in developing and implementing concrete national plans in that regard.

Environment and sustainable development

UNDP was a critical proponent of environmental sustainability since the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670], and with support from the Global Environment Facility (GEF) (see p. 1017), it had become a major supporter and implementer of environment programmes and projects in developing countries. The first three years of the strategic plan had seen a steady increase in the demand of UNDP services, representing 11 per cent of all programme expenditures in 2010 and encompassing 90 per cent of work in all programme countries. UNDP supported the implementation of climate change projects in 160 countries, including support to 101 countries to develop their national communications under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and 31 countries to develop their national adaptation programmes of action. UNDP operated as a leading implementer of programming for GEF and for the Least Developed Countries Fund, the Special Climate Change Fund and the Adaptation Fund. UNDP was an important actor in key international initiatives on forestry, desertification and land management, biodiversity conservation and ecosystem management, poverty and the environment, climate change adaptation, chemical management, disaster risk reduction, water resources management, and energy access for the poor. From 2006 to 2010, UNDP assisted partner Governments to secure $1.146 billion in funding from GEF. Achievements reported in 2010 included the establishment of 112 new protected areas covering 8.6 million hectares; avoiding 24.5 million tonnes of carbon dioxide emissions, disposal of 1,295 metric tonnes of dangerous chemicals and safeguarding of another 220 metric tonnes; developing approaches to climate change adaptation in 29 countries; and promoting governance and management reform in 93 countries.

On the ground, UNDP played an important role in strengthening national capacities in environmental management and in responding to the threat of climate change. In most LDCs, the UNDP focus was on sustainable management of the natural resource base on which many of the world's poorest—nomadic herders susceptible to dryland degradation, farmers faced with increasing water scarcity, foresters at risk due to deforestation and fishers most vulnerable to the depletion of fish stocks—depended for their livelihoods. Small island developing States in particular benefited from UNDP assistance in climate change adaptation. Middle-income countries suffered as well, due to increasing consumption and related environmental degradation. The UNDP role in those countries was to help effect market transformation that promoted energy efficiency, improved solid waste management, safer handling of chemicals and persistent organic pollutants, and more cooperative and cost-effective schemes for water management.

The UNDP programmatic outlook in the area was evolving in response to changing needs and demands. Proposed improvements included scaling up support to develop and implement low-emission, climate-resilient development strategies; ensuring that environmental finance, particularly in climate change and biodiversity, was pro-poor and pro-development; and fostering ecosystem management and energy access to reduce poverty and promote sustainable development.

Gender equality

At its January session, the Executive Board heard an oral report of the Assistant Administrator and Director of the Bureau for Development Policy on the implementation of the UNDP gender strategy and action plan, and was briefed on UNDP achievements in gender in 2009.

On 22 January [dec. 2010/4], the Board recognized the importance of mainstreaming gender equality as reflected in the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system and in the UNDP strategic plan for 2008–2013. It welcomed UNDP efforts in research, the generation of knowledge and training on the impacts of climate change and the economic and financial crisis on women and men, and encouraged it to contribute to similar stocktaking efforts of the MDGs in the lead-up to the General Assembly's High-level Plenary Meeting (see p. 813). The Board also welcomed recent investments in gender advisory capacities and requested the Administrator to ensure that the gender equality strategy was translated by the regional and thematic bureaux into multi-year gender action plans for their respective regions or thematic areas. It welcomed the development and implementation of the UNDP "gender marker" tool to better assess the gender equality impact of programme resource allocations and expenditure, and requested UNDP to keep the Board informed on the implementation of the gender equality strategy. It welcomed the work of the Gender Steering and Implementation Committee in reviewing results in gender mainstreaming and in the achievement of gender equality.

The Board requested the Administrator to maintain senior management's commitment to ensuring that UNDP maximized its achievement of gender equality results, and to identify further measures to raise the profile of the UNDP gender policy and increase the attention given to its implementation. The Board reiterated its request to the Administrator to provide at its first regular session each year an oral report on the implementation of the gender equality strategy for the remainder of the strategic plan.

Programming arrangements

At its January session, the Executive Board had before it a report [DP/2010/5] on the midterm review of programming arrangements for 2008–2011, submitted in response to a 2007 Board decision [YUN 2007, p. 895]. The review focused on increasing flexibility and responsiveness to programme country needs, and further rationalization within the context of the integrated resources plan. It identified several areas that could benefit from further strengthening: availability of a critical mass of programme resources for middle-income countries; alternatives to the use of gross national income per capita as the primary criterion to support the methodology for calculating the target for resources assignment from the core (TRAC); scaling up support to countries affected by crisis to ensure the availability of a critical mass of programme resources; and establishment of a specific allocation of programme resources for UNCDF activities. UNDP proposed to develop those issues into proposals for consideration by the Executive Board in 2011.

The review identified several proposals for the Board's consideration at its first regular session in 2010 with respect to aligning the current programming arrangements framework with the UNDP strategic plan 2008–2011 through a two-year extension to cover the period 2008–2013; and several intra-programming arrangements reclassifications covering the fixed programme lines and global policy advisors.

On 22 January [dec. 2010/3], the Board approved the extension of the programming arrangements framework by two years (2012–2013) to cover the period 2008–2013, with the objective of aligning it to the extended strategic plan programming cycle and the joint UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF road map towards an integrated budget in 2014 and onwards. It also approved the classification of activities and the proposed associated costs. It requested UNDP to submit in 2011 a second review of the programming arrangements framework, and to include, with the option to implement in 2012 and based on the midterm review, actionable proposals to improve the operational results of the 2008–2013 strategic plan, with respect to possible improvement of the criteria to support the TRAC-1 calculation methodology; improved support to LDCs/low-income countries; a strategy for improved support to middle-income countries; scaling up support to countries affected by conflict and natural disasters; and integrating UNCDF programme activities through the establishment of a specific allocation. The Board decided that, in cases of emergency, the Administrator might, in agreement with the Government concerned, divert funds from approved activities and uncommitted funds for emergency relief and rehabilitation, in line with the UNDP 2008–2013 strategic plan. The Board looked forward to a management proposal on an integrated resource framework.

Monitoring and evaluation

In April, the UNDP Evaluation Office submitted its fourth annual evaluation report [DP/2010/19] assessing progress made in fulfilling the evaluation functions outlined in the UNDP evaluation policy approved in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1040]; the evaluation capacity in the organization; evaluative evidence available for managing development results; and compliance in decentralized evaluations.

According to the report, in 2009–2010, the Evaluation Office significantly expanded its programme of work to inform UNDP programme and management decisions. The number of assessments of development results (ADRs) increased from 4 in 2007 to 14 in 2009. During the reporting period, ADRs were conducted in 14 countries, covering all regions of the UNDP programme. The ADRs examined the UNDP strategic positioning in a given political, socio-economic and development context and assessed whether it had leveraged its corporate strengths and comparative advantages to respond effectively to national demands and contribute to development results. The Office also evaluated the regional cooperation framework for Europe and CIS (see p. 871), as well as the five-year (2004–2009) cooperation agreement between UNDP and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, jointly with that organization's Evaluation Office.

While some UNDP offices made important shifts, others faced limitations in adapting their programmes to the specific requirements of a country's developmental context. UNDP needed to reorient programming towards higher-level policy change and strategic upstream work, and to be more proactive and systematic in engaging in and initiating policy debates. To realize strategic shifts to upstream work, the capacity of UNDP country offices should be further strengthened with experts on substantive issues, and/or access to such expertise from headquarters and regional centres. The evaluation of the regional programme for Europe and CIS revealed a high level of satisfaction of users of the regional centre's advisory services, although utilization varied considerably across country offices. In contrast, during the conduct of some ADRs, questions were raised about the relevance of expertise and generic knowledge UNDP could provide from headquarters and regional centres, especially in countries where the Government could directly obtain high-level expertise from global sources. In terms of coherence and synergy in programming, the contribution to results and programme efficiency could have been improved with a more holistic approach in programming and by exploiting the potential synergies among UNDP programme areas. UNDP programme areas largely followed a project-oriented approach and often failed to build among linkages within and across practice areas. Lack of a holistic approach was more evident in responding to crisis situations and programming related to sustainable development, disaster risk reduction and poverty reduction. In post-conflict support, there was limited synergy with poverty reduction and governance efforts. The ADRs pointed out the importance of a more integrated approach to reducing vulnerability to disasters related to climate change. Lack of synergies between projects within a practice area was particularly evident in environment management in countries with GEF-funded projects, which were often substantively and operationally disconnected from the rest of the environment programme. To improve coherence and synergies in programming, the ADRs recommended, among other measures, that all potential synergies and complementarities among different practice areas be exploited to the fullest; UNDP should integrate environment and climate change adaptation as a cross-cutting issue in its programmes, and develop a resource mobilization strategy to support programmes in critical areas.

The ADRs emphasized commitment to furthering gender equality and the empowerment of women. In some countries, UNDP contributed to strengthening government systems for mainstreaming gender-related issues. In Cambodia, UNDP, along with other UN agencies, helped develop an institutional structure for mainstreaming gender in government departments and ministries. UNDP was also instrumental in promoting the concept of gender mainstreaming in Turkey, where projects focusing on women contributed to increasing their participation in politics. While specific interventions were largely successful, gender equality as a cross-cutting programme theme could have received better attention in China. There were limitations in the allocation of adequate resources for working on gender mainstreaming issues, which was particularly manifest in countries dealing with crisis situations, such as Guyana, Indonesia, Maldives and Uganda. Across the ADR countries, measurable indicators to gauge progress towards gender equality would have yielded better results. The UNDP contribution in furthering gender equality could be enhanced in coordination with other agencies, such as UNICEF and the United Nations Development Fund for Women.

UNDP support to the coordination efforts of UN organizations and through the resident coordinator's office was generally effective, but further efforts were needed to ensure that UNDAF adequately captured the UN system's strategic approach. It was recommended that UNDP take the initiative to increase integration and coordination within UNCT. The uneven application of results-based management (RBM) principles in programming, monitoring and evaluation was a common theme in most ADRs. The most frequent concerns included lack of adequate documentation and financial information on programmes and projects; criteria and indicators; baseline for monitoring and reporting on performance; vague distinctions among outcomes, outputs and indicators; and poor formulation, testing and use of indicators in regular monitoring. Despite the use of the Atlas enterprise resource planning system [YUN 2004, p. 1082], inconsistencies and unavailability of reliable financial information continued to pose challenges to evaluations. It was recommended that UNDP strengthen its capacity in developing evaluable results frameworks, as well as in monitoring and evaluating development results within an outcome-based approach; and exit strategies and sustainability plans be made an essential element of all projects. It was further pointed out that adequate planning of outcome evaluations would strengthen the practice of RBM, facilitate performance monitoring and contribute to strategy formulation. With regard to procedural issues, evaluations found that complex and/or inflexible procedures could hinder results if they did not respond to the needs of the national context, and that in crisis situations the administrative procedures for procurement and project approval contributed to substantial delays and missed opportunities. It was suggested that UNDP administrative procedures be adapted to suit requirements at the implementation level, without compromising quality, transparency and accountability in procurement and project approvals.

The report also put forward a programme of work for the Evaluation Office for 2010–2011, aligned with the UNDP strategic plan and approved by the Executive Board.

An independent review [DP/2010/20] looked at the impact of the UNDP evaluation policy on the associated funds and programmes, the relevance of its evaluation policy, and independent and decentralized evaluation in UNDP. The review found that the UNDP evaluation policy remained relevant but the challenge lay in its implementation. Changes in operational procedures for budget preparation and human resources were required to institutionalize the independence of the Evaluation Office. Senior management needed to increase use of the independent evaluation in programming and planning decision-making processes. Country ownership and its implication for evaluations, such as the assessments of development results, should be addressed, as well as how UNDP should build evaluation capacity at the country level. Questions also remained as to whether UNDP senior leadership had given enough attention to ensuring development of the decentralized evaluation system and building a culture of results.

The independent review recommended that UNDP senior management should decide whether decentralized evaluation was of a high enough priority to commit the focus and resources needed to implement the approaches envisaged in the new Handbook on Planning, Monitoring and Evaluation for Development Results. Management should do that by revising the UNDP programme and operations policies and procedures to ensure alignment between the Handbook and policies and procedures; defining the means, capacities and timeline required to implement the changes needed; and ensuring that resources were allocated, implementation monitored and corrective action taken. The recommendation would require changes in systems and practices across the whole planning and project cycle, with evaluation being integrated into all new initiatives, as well as into staff appraisal systems. UNDP senior management should increase opportunities to build national leadership and ownership in evaluation. It should revise the Handbook, UNDP programme and operations policies and procedures, and other tools and guidelines to respond to changes introduced by UNDG on country-level results-reporting and frameworks. Those revisions should recognize an ongoing need for the Evaluation Office to draw on that data for the assessment of development results and corporate-level evaluations. The Office should reassess its methodological guidance in the light of those changes and work within the United Nations Evaluation Group (UNEG) to craft a common response on how to balance corporate- and national-level needs for evaluative evidence. The Executive Board should amend the evaluation policy to institutionalize the independence of the Evaluation Office, which would include strengthening the Executive Board's role in appointing the Director of the Evaluation Office, removing the practice of the oversight committee to overrule the Director, and approval of the budget by the Executive Board as part of the workplan approval process. The Evaluation Office should consider the degree to which the current approach to development and implementation of assessment of development results truly contributed to country ownership. Issues that should be considered were participation of government partners in deciding the scope and focus of the assessment of development results; and consideration of the recommendations of, and management results to, the evaluation. The Evaluation Office should work through UNEG to clarify the UNDP comparative advantage in building country-level capacity for evaluation, as well as steps that should be taken to build on that advantage. The Executive Board should request that a review be presented to the Board in 2012 covering the degree to which the roles and responsibilities laid out in the 2007 programme and operations policies and procedures [YUN 2007, p. 895] and the Handbook had been implemented; the degree to which the adoption of approaches in the Handbook had strengthened RBM and decentralized evaluation at the country level; the degree to which the independence of the Evaluation Office had been institutionalized; the degree to which the policy had been implemented and had made a positive contribution in UNDP associated funds and programmes; and whether an effective approach to strengthening country ownership and capacity-building had been identified and was being implemented.

In its management response to the independent review [DP/2010/21], UNDP concurred with the main findings regarding the relevance of its evaluation policy and acknowledged that the findings confirmed a number of issues with respect to the implementation of that policy. UNDP senior management was fully committed to addressing those challenges and strengthening the culture of RBM across the organization.

The response outlined actions already taken or ongoing to strengthen RBM and evaluation performance, such as the launch of the revised Handbook, which complemented the Programme and Policies Operations and Procedures Guide.

The Executive Board, on 30 June [dec. 2010/15], requested UNDP to address the issues raised by the independent evaluations and ensure implementation and monitoring of the management responses. It noted the continuing and serious challenge of the coverage, compliance, quality and use of decentralized evaluations, and requested UNDP to strengthen decentralized evaluation capacity and increase its use. The Board welcomed the timely completion of the assessments of development results so as to improve their value in the planning of new country programmes, the enhanced national participation and the use of national expertise in those assessments. It requested UNDP to support national evaluation capacity development, and address the issues raised by the assessments of development results concerning cross-cutting issues, such as capacity development and gender mainstreaming; lack of integration of gender-specific aspects in development activities; adequate allocation of resources; and weak coordination with other UN agencies dealing with gender. The Board approved the programme of work for 2010–2011 proposed by the Evaluation Office and welcomed its linkages with the UNDP strategic plan.

On the same date [dec. 2010/16], the Executive Board welcomed the independent review of the UNDP evaluation policy and the management's response. It requested UNDP to intensify efforts to strengthen oversight and support for decentralized evaluation and emphasized the importance of senior management's commitment and accountability in that regard. It emphasized the importance of embedding the effort to improve decentralized evaluation in the overall efforts of UNDP to enhance RBM. UNDP should ensure that all country, regional and global programme documents came with costed and budgeted evaluation plans covering the full range of intended contributions to development outcomes, and were designed to inform programme adjustments and the development of new programmes. In the case of country programmes, evaluation plans should be budgeted no later than at the time of adoption of the country programme action plan, and UNDP should ensure that the Evaluation Office's work plan was costed and that cost incorporated into the biennial support budget function related to evaluation. The Board underlined the need to enhance the ownership and leadership of programme countries in evaluation and requested UNDP to clarify its roles in national evaluation capacity development. The Board requested UNDP to further decrease the number of country offices with no or insufficient monitoring and evaluation capacities, and enhance participation in joint evaluations of UNDAF outcomes by government and contributing UN organizations, while retaining an assessment of the distinctive UNDP contribution to the shared outcomes. UNDP should further improve the submission and tracking of management responses to improve learning, accountability and transparency on evaluation follow-up and to share management responses with partner Governments and other programme partners; and submit for approval at its first regular session in 2011 a revised UNDP evaluation policy. The Evaluation Office should commission a further independent review of the UNDP evaluation policy, to be presented to the Board in 2013, covering the degree to which the roles and responsibilities laid out in the 2007 programme and operations policies and procedures and the new Handbook on Planning, Monitoring and Evaluation for Development Results had been implemented; the adoption of approaches advocated in the new Handbook had strengthened RBM and decentralized evaluation at the country level; the Evaluation Office's independence had been institutionalized; the policy had been implemented and made a positive contribution in the UNDP associated funds and programmes; and whether an effective approach to strengthening national ownership and capacity-building had been identified and was being implemented.

Strategic plan, 2008–2011

At its June/July session, the Executive Board considered the Administrator's annual report on the strategic plan for 2008–2011 [DP/2010/17], with a statistical annex [DP/2010/17/Add.2] issued in May. The report provided an overall account of the UNDP contribution to outcome results across all regions and practices, and an in-depth analysis of six outcomes in the MDG/poverty, climate change and crisis prevention and recovery focus areas. Collectively, the six outcomes covered priority initiatives, as well as high-demand programme areas, all in direct support of achieving the MDGs. The report demonstrated how UNDP work in those areas was integrated across practices, was underpinned by efforts in democratic governance, and contributed to national results in capacity development and gender equality. The remaining 28 corporate outcomes were covered more generally in the report, and would be addressed in greater depth in subsequent annual reports.

On 1 July [dec. 2010/13], the Executive Board took note of the report and welcomed its enhanced focus and analytical information on challenges, opportunities and remedial action, and requested UNDP to strengthen its efforts in that regard in future reports. The Board requested UNDP management to make further efforts in building the Programme's capacity to deliver on its results and improve its results management, evaluation and reporting on capacity-development efforts; to continue improving performance on the cross-cutting issues of gender equality and capacity development; and to strengthen its support to conflict and crisis prevention, as well as its strategic partnerships in climate change. It welcomed the UNDP business action plan and looked forward to regular updates. It welcomed the inclusion of challenges and lessons learned for future directions in the Administrator's annual report and requested the inclusion of concrete steps, starting in 2011, to address the challenges and build on lessons learned. The Board endorsed the decision for a combined midterm review, including the annual UNDP strategic plan report for 2010, to be submitted to the Board in 2011, and welcomed that opportunity to sharpen the strategic direction and undertake a thorough review of the results framework with the aim of making improvements in 2011 and defining further improvement to be made during the remaining years of the plan. The UNDP Administrator should provide informal briefings on the four thematic areas of the strategic plan before the first regular session in 2011; ensure that programme activities were designed, implemented and adequately resourced to address the challenges of developing countries, particularly the specific needs and challenges of Africa; intensify efforts to accelerate progress towards MDG achievement by 2015, particularly in programme countries; and continue providing support to South-South and triangular cooperation with a view to deepening it towards improved development results. The Board welcomed the intergovernmental meetings of programme country pilots in Kigali, Rwanda, in October 2009 and in Hanoi, Viet Nam, in June 2010, and took note of the Kigali and Hanoi declarations.

Also before the Board was an April report [DP/2010/17/Add.1] containing a synopsis of UNDP management responses to the recommendations of the 2009 JIU reports that were relevant to UNDP: Towards a more coherent United Nations system support to Africa; Offshoring in United Nations system organizations; Selection and conditions of service of executive heads in the United Nations system organizations; Corporate sponsoring in the United Nations system; and Internships in the United Nations system [YUN 2009, p. 1426]. The report also gave an update of the implementation status of recommendations contained in 2007 and 2008 JIU reports.

On 1 July [dec. 2010/27], the Board took note of the UNDP report on the JIU recommendations in 2009 and the statistical annex.

Financial and administrative matters

The UNDP Administrator, in the annual review of the financial situation [DP/2011/33 & Add.1], reported that total income—which comprised contributions, interest and other income—rose by 3 per cent to $5.95 billion, from $5.79 billion in 2009. Total contributions increased by 3 per cent to $5.49 billion, up from $5.34 billion the previous year. Total expenditures increased significantly, by 8 per cent to $5.99 billion, compared with $5.53 billion in 2009. Contributions to regular (core) resources decreased in 2010 to $967 million, 5 per cent below the 2009 level of $1.01 billion, requiring UNDP to institute a corresponding reduction in planned core expenditures to avoid drawing on the operational reserve.

Non-core resources contributions increased by 4 per cent to $4.31 billion, from the previous year's $4.13 billion. Contributions from bilateral partners increased by 13 per cent, from $1.56 billion in 2009 to $1.76 billion. Multilateral contributions also increased by 12 per cent, to $1.74 billion, from $1.55 billion in 2009. Local resources provided by programme countries decreased by 4 per cent, from $0.72 billion in 2009 to $0.69 billion.

Overall UNDP expenditures increased by 8 per cent to $5.99 billion, from $5.53 billion in 2009. Total regular resources expenditures decreased to $1.08 billion, from $1.17 billion in 2009, while other resources expenditures amounted to $4.67 billion, a 12 per cent increase compared with $4.18 billion in 2009. Of the total expenditure, $4.94 billion (82 per cent) was spent on development activities, $518 million (9 per cent) on management activities, $125 million (2 per cent) on UN development coordination activities, $220 million (4 per cent) on special purpose activities, and $190 million (3 per cent) on activities other than those falling under the four broad classifications. Expenditures from regular resources included $627 million on development activities, $93 million on UN development coordination, $224 million for management activities, $43 million for special purposes activities and $88 million on other expenditures.

At the end of the year, the balance of unexpended regular resources, excluding the operational reserve, fell to $283 million, compared with $354 million in 2009, representing 6 per cent of the overall balance. The balance of unexpended other resources, which represented 89 per cent of the overall balance of unexpended resources, decreased by 1 per cent to $4.49 billion, compared with $4.55 billion at the end of 2009.

For the first time, in accordance with a 2009 Executive Board decision [YUN 2009, p. 863], expenditures were reported in four broad cost-classification areas: development, management, UN development coordination, and special purpose. In addition, other expenditures not falling under any of the four broad cost classifications were reported as part of overall expenditures.

On 2 September [dec. 2010/29], the Executive Board noted the decrease in regular resources, and recalled the importance of funding predictability, since the timeliness of payments of contributions was essential to avoid liquidity constraints in regular resources. The Board urged Member States to support UNDP in reaching resource targets set out in the strategic plan and to commit, as early as possible, contributions to UNDP regular resources for 2010 and onwards, if possible through multi-year pledges. It urged UNDP to prioritize and ensure efficiency gains and savings, and requested its management to adjust expenditure plans in line with income forecasts and to allocate savings to programmes, and to update the Board regularly on such savings on travel and other costs. The Board also requested that future reports on the annual review of the financial situation present the effects of exchange rate fluctuations on UNDP regular resources and provide an overview of the steps taken to diminish their impact on the financial results.

Regular funding commitments to UNDP

In May, UNDP submitted a report [DP/2010/18] on the status of regular funding commitments to the Programme and its associated funds and programmes for 2010 and onward. Contributions to UNDP regular (core) resources in 2009 decreased by 9 per cent, from $1.1 billion in 2008 to $1.0 billion in 2010, some 20 per cent below the 2009 funding target for regular resources set out in the strategic plan for 2008–2013. Projections for 2010 suggested a continued downward trend and contributions were likely to remain below the $1 billion level, thereby further widening the gap between actual contributions and the annual targets set out in the UNDP strategic plan. Overall contributions to UNDP amounted to $4.7 billion in 2009, with other (non-core) contributions reaching $3.7 billion. Earmarked contributions from bilateral donors increased slightly, from $1.36 billion to $1.4 billion. Earmarked contributions from multilateral partners and the European Commission increased from $1.24 billion to $1.48 billion. Local resources provided by programme countries decreased further, from $1.03 billion to $0.78 billion in 2009. Many donors pledged to maintain their contributions in 2010. Indications were, however, that four members of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/Development Assistance Committee (DAC) would decrease their contributions to regular resources, while others had not indicated their intention. The political commitment of Member States to enhancing the regular resource base was reflected in the fact that 53 countries made contributions to regular resources in 2009, including 23 countries that increased or resumed contributions. Eight OECD/DAC members increased their contributions to regular resources; one increased its contribution by 38 per cent and two by 10 per cent or more, while six decreased their contributions. Twenty-five Member States contributed $1 billion or more to regular resources, including 22 of the 23 OECD/DAC members, as well as China, India and Saudi Arabia.

The Executive Board, on 30 June [dec. 2010/14], noted with concern the decrease in the UNDP regular resources contributions from $1.1 billion in 2008 to $1.0 billion in 2009, its inability to meet its 2009 funding target for regular resources, projections of further decreases in 2010, and the unpredictability of contributions for 2011. The Board welcomed the Administrator's efforts to mobilize regular resources and urged UNDP to further mobilize those resources and continue to broaden the number of contributing countries. It reiterated that regular resources formed the bedrock of UNDP finances, and while acknowledging the role of other (non-core or earmarked) resources as a supplement to the UNDP regular resource base, and that those resources had been increasing and exceeded regular resources, emphasized that other resources should always support coherence and national ownership of programme countries. The Board requested countries that had not done so to make contributions to regular resources for 2010, and encouraged Member States to announce pledges, on a multi-year basis if feasible, and payment schedules, and to adhere to such pledges and payment schedules thereafter.

Biennial support budget, 2010–2011

The Executive Board, at its January session, considered a report [DP/2010/3] on UNDP budget estimates and related proposals for the 2010–2011 biennium in the results-based format. The report underpinned and formed an integral part of the UNDP strategic plan. The estimates were formulated in line with the Executive Board's 2009 decision [YUN 2009, p. 863] on the methodology and approach to the UNDP 2010–2011 support budget [ibid.].

UNDP budget estimates for 2010–2011, in net terms, were $828.3 million, which in nominal terms represented $49.6 million more than the approved 2008–2009 net budget [YUN 2008, p. 976], and balanced the need to contain management costs and increase efficiency with the need to ensure accountability for the resources placed at the disposal of UNDP and the results outlined in the strategic plan. UNDP would thus achieve an unprecedented volume reduction of $69.7 million, largely offsetting $91.5 million in non-discretionary cost increases, resulting in a net increase of $21.6 million. Strategic investments were proposed totalling $28 million, and incorporated an increase of $0.2 million to projected income that offset the gross budget estimates, amounting to $75.1 million in 2010–2011.

The estimates included $77.5 million in special-purpose activities for funding from regular resources, consisting of $72.4 million in General Assembly-mandated activities and $5.1 million in capital investments. In addition, the Administrator requested exceptional authority to disburse, if needed, up to $17.4 million in regular resources for security measures, the use of which would be limited to new and emerging security mandates as defined in the UN Department of Safety and Security directives.

ACABQ report. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [DP/2010/4] welcomed the progress made in presenting the UNDP budget in a results-based format, and encouraged UNDP to continue its collaboration with UNFPA and UNICEF and to further develop and harmonize the elements of the results-based framework. The Committee encouraged UNDP to intensify its fund-raising and welcomed its efforts to contain costs, especially through efficiency gains. It supported the proactive initiatives of UNDP on talent management, including succession planning and career development, and encouraged it to intensify their implementation. It expected a further update on third-party cost-sharing and trust fund agreements in the context of the 2012–2013 budget estimates. While welcoming the progressive growth of the share from other resources in the biennial support budget, the Committee noted that regular resources still contributed 60 per cent of the budget, while accounting for only some 22 per cent of the total planned use of resources; it believed that the formula for sharing the support budget by regular and other resources should be examined.

On 22 January [dec. 2010/1], the Executive Board took note of the functions, management results, indicators and resource requirements in the 2010–2011 budget estimates. It approved the activities and associated costs; gross regular resources in the amount of $903.4 million, representing the total biennial support budget; and regular resources in the amount of $77.5 million to cover the costs of special purpose activities, including $72.4 million of Assembly-mandated activities and $5.1 million for capital investments. The Board welcomed the proposed strategic investments in the biennial support budget and requested UNDP to provide updates on the implementation of those investments. It endorsed the Administrator's proposal for exceptional authority, during 2010–2011, to access up to an additional 30 per cent ($17.4 million) of the $58 million in net regular resources earmarked for United Nations-mandated security costs, and decided that UNDP would limit the use of those funds to new and emerging security costs, as defined in the Department of Safety and Security directives, and report on their use in its annual review of the financial situation. The Board requested UNDP to include, in its middle-income countries strategy, an assessment of the base capacity for country offices in middle-income and in net contributor countries. It noted efforts to strengthen the budget's results framework and encouraged UNDP to continue to improve the indicators, and to more explicitly link inputs and expected results. The Board welcomed the reductions in management costs for 2010–2011, and requested information on achieving further efficiency gains and that cost increases to regular resources be offset in future budgets. In that regard, it welcomed the Administrator's initiative to make UNDP an ever more responsive, relevant and efficient organization and leader of the UN development system, as well as her intention to undertake an in-depth review of several critical organization-wide initiatives, including human resources management. The Board took note of the Advisory Committee's recommendation regarding a consolidated overview of regular and other resources, and requested UNDP to give a better overview of the total amount of the budget, in particular with regard to the harmonized functions. The Board welcomed the increase in cost recovery and encouraged UNDP to seek further improvements in transparency and increases in the proportion of the biennial support budget covered by cost-recovery income. UNDP should include in future budgets information on the actual utilization of funds during the previous biennium, in a format similar to that of the resource plan, and continue increasing budget transparency and accountability. The Board noted that UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF, as set out in the road map (see below), would jointly review cost definitions and classifications of activities and associated costs, including cost recovery, and emphasized the need to explore cost-recovery benefit broadly, including fixed and variable indirect costs. It requested UNDP to continue to assess and provide adequate funding and personnel for its oversight functions, and looked forward to receiving a proposed integrated budget for the period commencing in 2014.

On the same date [dec. 2010/12], the Board took note of the ACABQ report.

Integrated budget for UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF

In July, the UNDP Controller presented the joint UNDP/UNFPA/UNICEF information note on the road map to an integrated budget, in response to 2009 decisions by the Executive Boards of UNDP [YUN 2009, p. 863], UNFPA [ibid., p. 1052] and UNICEF [ibid., p. 1181] that the three organizations seek greater harmonization and improvement in the presentation of the 2012–2013 biennial support budget, and together present a single, integrated budget for each organization beginning in 2014.

Welcoming the presentation of the joint information note, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on 22 January [dec. 2010/2] urged UNDP and UNFPA to adhere to the proposed time frames of the joint road map and to keep the Board informed of progress.

By a July note [DP/FPA/2010/1-E/ICEF/2010/AB/L.10], the three organizations presented to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a joint report that included harmonized cost definitions and classifications of activities and associated costs for review and approval. The three organizations had identified key principles to guide the development of harmonized cost classification categories and definitions, and determined that the new cost classification model endorsed by the Board in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 864] reflected those principles and provided a good basis for further harmonization, although the definitions required adjustment to broaden applicability to all organizations and ensure reasonable comparability. The report also contained results of a review of results-based budgeting models and methodologies and the implications for improved linkages between the institutional and management results in the strategic plans, as well as the resources required to achieve the results. A proposal was included regarding results-based budgeting for the 2012–2013 budget, which would also serve as an interim step towards a fully integrated budget, beginning in 2014. Annexed to the report was a summary of actions required to apply harmonized cost classifications.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 2 September [dec. 2010/32], took note of the analysis contained in the report and endorsed the cost definitions and classification of activities and the associated costs, effective in the 2012–2013 biennium, with amendments related to development activities: programmes, development effectiveness; UN development coordination; management: recurring costs; non-recurring costs; and special purpose: capital investments and services for other UN organizations. The Board requested additional information, prior to its first regular 2011 session, on the differences in cost classifications. It requested UNDP and UNFPA to use those cost definitions and classifications in their 2012–2013 budget documents and, with UNICEF, reflect the new classifications in their financial statements and annual financial reviews in 2013 and onwards to allow for a comparison between actual expenditures and budget. They should continue working to present a single, integrated budget for each organization, starting in 2014, aligned with the results in the strategic plans of the organizations; and prepare an informal mock-up document to illustrate the format for the 2012–2013 budget that would ensure comprehensive, transparent linkages to the institutional and management results frameworks of the respective strategic plans, for discussion at the Board's first regular session in 2011. It emphasized the need for regular consultations with the Board, including on cost classification and results-based budgeting, prior to that session.

Audit reports

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, at its January session, considered the Administrator's report [DP/2010/11] on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the 2006–2007 biennium [YUN 2008, p. 1559]. As at 31 October 2009, UNDP had implemented 90 per cent of the 82 audit recommendations targeted for completion by the third quarter of 2009, while the remaining 10 per cent should be completed before finalization of the financial statements in the second quarter of 2010 or earlier. Many of the good practices identified by the Board of Auditors in managing audit recommendations were already in place, including identifying and monitoring priority audit issues; identifying the causes of recurring audit observations and developing management initiatives; reviewing progress made by independent bodies, such as the Audit Advisory Committee; and establishing time frames and completion standards for the implementation of recommendations. The report also reviewed progress made since the last update in January 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 864] to address the top 11 audit priorities in UNDP in 2008–2009. The priorities, reduced to 11 from the list of 15 established in 2007, reflected improvements noted by the Board of Auditors, as well as residual or emerging risks raised by the Board and the UNDP Office of Audit and Investigations (OAI). Preliminary internal assessments revealed encouraging results in that regard, but there were still risks to be managed and monitored. Progress made in addressing the top 11 audit priorities included improvements in audit report submissions and the management of advances; the implementation of a harmonized approach among UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and the World Food Programme for cash transfers to government and non-government implementing partners; the launch of the UNDP project planning, monitoring and evaluation handbook; procurement strategy and monitoring; improved financial and resource management; promulgation of the UNDP recruitment and selection framework; and measured progress in preparing for the implementation of the international public service accounting standards. In view of the Executive Board's 2009 decision [YUN 2009, p. 866] deferring the implementation of those standards until 2012, the recommended reassessment of field accommodation reserves and the full disclosure of actual leave accruals and repatriation grants liability in the financial statements would also be deferred. The report stated that preliminary results of the status, as at June 2009, indicated that country offices were monitoring and following up on some 64 unresolved, long-outstanding recommendations, the number of which UNDP expected to be reduced at the end of the next review in December 2009.

On 22 January [dec. 2010/9], the Executive Board recognized the progress made by UNDP in addressing the top 11 audit priorities in 2008–2009, and noted the progress in addressing the Board of Auditor's recommendations. It encouraged UNDP to continue investing in the strategic recruitment and professional training of staff and sustaining the improvements made in recent years to address underlying audit risks.

In March [DP/2010/31] OAI submitted its report on internal audit and investigations activities for the year ended 31 December 2009. As requested by the Executive Board in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 866], the report contained comprehensive information on the disclosure of internal audit reports to Member States and a multi-year comparison of trends in audit issues. The annual report of the Audit Advisory Committee was appended to the report, while management's response was presented separately.

In 2009, OAI issued 71 audit reports on UNDP operations and activities during 2008, of which 8 were headquarters audits and 63 country offices audits. The latter accounted for about $1.94 billion (45 per cent) of the $4.34 billion in UNDP field expenditures. Audits of country offices and headquarters thus represented a solid supplement to the other oversight mechanisms. With regard to the disclosure of internal audit reports to Member States, OAI established internal standard operating procedures for handling disclosure requests to ensure that any action taken was in compliance with the UNDP oversight policy, which provided a set of minimum conditions.

In 2009, the 63 country office audit reports issued contained 633 recommendations, 343 of which were ranked high priority. The majority of audit issues—63 per cent—were in the areas of project management, procurement, finance, and programme management. Three consolidated reports were issued, one each on procurement, safety and security, and advances to NGO/National Implementation by the Government (NIM) projects, based on audits of 35 country offices.

Projects financed by the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria and managed by UNDP received increased audit attention. OAI issued four reports for two project audits each in Africa and in the Arab States. A total of 11 audit reports were issued dealing with direct implementation modality projects managed by country offices in Asia and the Pacific, the Arab States, and Latin America and the Caribbean; of the 173 recommendations resulting from those audits, 64 per cent related to project management, finance, and programme management.

As to follow-up on audit recommendations, 56 (0.98 per cent) of all recommendations made during 2004–2009 remained unresolved for 18 months or more, 13 of which pertained to headquarters units and 43 to 21 country offices. Of the 56 recommendations, 30 (54 per cent) were ranked high priority, and 44 (or 78 per cent) related to audit reports issued in 2007 and early 2008. The implementation delays were mainly due to factors external to the offices concerned, or lack of financial or human resources. One important issue was recovery of outstanding government contributions to local office costs (GLOC); OAI had brought to the attention of senior management the need for a corporate policy regarding long-outstanding GLOC contributions where collection was unlikely.

Regarding investigation activities, complaints received by OAI increased by 47 per cent, from 135 in 2008 to 199 in 2009. The majority of complaints related to some type of financial irregularity (37 per cent), and workplace harassment and abuse of authority (27 per cent), followed by improper recruitment and other staffing decisions. Allegations of retaliation against whistleblowers constituted 3 per cent of the cases received. The remaining 22 per cent of cases were related to areas such as misrepresentation, forgery and false certification; failure to comply with financial disclosure policy or local laws; abuse of privileges and immunities; and assaults and threats. In addition, 83 cases were carried over from 2008. A total of 172 cases were closed. As at 31 December 2009, 89 cases were undergoing preliminary assessment, while in 21 cases an investigation was ongoing. Thirteen cases were referred to the Legal Support Office for appropriate action. In 2009, OAI issued new investigation guidelines and strengthened internal processes through standard operating procedures. It also explored other alternatives for using better the limited investigation resources, considering an ever-increasing caseload.

In 2010, OAI faced various challenges due to the overall budget reduction for the biennium, as well as increasing requests from donors for assurance on their projects, the tight timeframe for completing reviews of NGO/NIM projects audit reports, increasing demands from the Global Fund for mandatory annual audits of “additional safeguard” countries, more stringent requirements for investigative processes due to the new system of administration of justice [YUN 2009, p. 1474], increases in incoming complaints, and the number of serious fraud cases. OAI would review more cross-cutting themes in its country office audits and increase its focus on donor relations.

On 1 July [dec. 2010/22], the Executive Board took note of the report and the corresponding management response, presented orally by the Associate Administrator, and the annual report of the Audit Advisory Committee. It welcomed the focus on key and recurrent management issues and risk-based audit planning, and welcomed the information in the report and the variety of strategic subjects covered by the Audit Advisory Committee, which contributed to stronger accountability and oversight in UNDP. It also welcomed the multi-year trend analysis over the 2005–2009 period, and requested continuing reporting in that regard. The Board noted the significant increase in complaints requiring investigation and requested UNDP to ensure appropriate and timely capacity for investigation. It also noted that the number of audit recommendations outstanding after more than 18 months remained relatively stable, and requested UNDP to maintain efforts for implementing those recommendations. The Board was concerned about the increasing proportion of findings in project management, particularly in country offices, and noted efforts to address systemic weaknesses at all levels. It requested management to continue to address those issues with a view to demonstrating improvements in the next report. The Board welcomed the continuing trend of declining financial exposure in audits for projects executed by NGOs and/or Governments, and urged UNDP to sustain its efforts, as well as to ensure the timely submission of audit reports. It requested OAI to include in its next annual report information on the adequacy of resources available for audit and investigations.

UNDP Ethics Office

In March [DP/2010/26], the UNDP Ethics Office, in response to the Secretary-General's 2007 bulletin [ST/SGB/2007/11] on UN system-wide application of ethics and a 2008 Executive Board decision [YUN 2008, p. 980], submitted a report on its activities in 2009. The Office responded to more than double the number of requests that it had received in the previous reporting period (392 requests, compared with 186 in 2008). The bulk of the requests (225) related to ethics advice, while 61 related to general information, 68 to training, 8 to protection and 30 to standard-setting. Of the 225 requests, 86 (38 per cent) were for outside activities, 63 (28 per cent) for employment-related concerns, 48 (21 per cent) for conflicts of interest, 26 (12 per cent) for gifts, hospitality and honours, and 2 (1 per cent) to post-employment restrictions. In 2009, the Office received eight complaints of retaliation for reporting misconduct and for cooperating with duly authorized audits or investigations, one of which fell outside the Office's mandate and was referred to the appropriate unit. In two cases, the Office assessed that there was a threat of retaliation and recommended action to be taken by the appropriate office. Of the remaining four cases that warranted preliminary review, a prima facie case of retaliation was determined, and the three others were forwarded to the Office of Audit and Investigation.

The Office conducted the annual financial disclosure exercise for 2008 from 9 March to 13 April 2009, which resulted in all of the 1,774 staff members filing, though not all on time. The Office was in various stages of reviewing 5,089 filed statements of financial disclosure for the 2006, 2007 and 2008 transaction years and was following up on 11 cases of non-compliance with filing requirements in 2006 and 2007.

As to the need for clarification on UNDP standards of conduct relating to outside activities and the receipt of honours, gifts or remuneration, highlighted in its 2009 report [YUN 2009, p. 867], the Office proposed new procedures involving vetting by the Ethics Office for potential conflicts of interest, and by the substantive office for any programmatic concerns prior to approval by the Office of Human Resources. The proposal, which was reviewed by the UNDP management group, was incorporated into the overall UNDP publications policy. The Office also consulted other departments on clarifying procedures for the receipt, registration, storage and proper disposal of gifts to the organization or to staff that might cause embarrassment if returned, and with the staff council regarding potential disposal mechanisms, including raffling at events for the benefit of staff, or for donation to charities. Those procedures would be reviewed for harmonization with the UN Secretariat's administrative issuance on the topic. In that regard, the Office adapted two intake forms from the UN Ethics Office for use by UNDP staff: the outside activity form and the gift declaration and registration form. It planned to review the policy on protection against retaliation when the UN review of its protection policy was completed, and make any appropriate changes.

Taking note of the report, the Executive Board, on 30 June [dec. 2010/17], recognized the progress made in establishing the respective Ethics Offices and their valuable contributions to the operations of UNDP, UNFPA (see p. 868) and UNOPS (see p. 887), and encouraged their management to include the respective heads of Ethics Offices in appropriate senior management meetings as observers to encourage high standards of conduct and prevent institutional conflicts of interest. The three organizations should keep the Board informed of progress in achieving their action plans, including evidence of impact and achievement. Their Ethics Offices should ensure that training interventions continued to be effective and appropriate and represented a good investment of resources; and continue enhancing their briefings, training and counselling for management and staff.

The Board recalled its 2008 decision [YUN 2008, p. 980] with regard to avoiding conflicts of interest in the appointment of key oversight officers, and requested that the respective Ethics Offices be designated as the responsible units within each organization to review potential conflicts of interest for senior appointees performing control functions not covered by the Secretary-General's appointment vetting processes. It requested the management of the three organizations to provide the human and financial resources to support their respective Ethics Offices, with priority given to building staff capacity.

The Board further requested the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA and UNOPS Executive Directors to appoint the heads of their respective Ethics Offices based on demonstrated abilities and experience; ensure that pre-appointment review of conflicts of interest be conducted by an independent entity; limit the term of office to five full years, exceptionally renewable once, for a maximum of five years; and bar re-entry into their respective organization. The UNFPA and UNOPS Ethics Offices should submit reports to the Board at future annual sessions.

Other technical cooperation

UN activities

Department of Economic and Social Affairs

During 2010, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) had approximately 448 technical cooperation projects under execution in a dozen substantive sectors, with total project expenditures of $71.8 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $3 million, and those by trust funds, $68.8 million.

On a geographical basis, the DESA technical cooperation programme included expenditures of $40.8 million for interregional and global programmes; $23.8 million in Asia and the Pacific; $4.6 million in Africa; $1.9 million in the Middle East; and $0.7 million in the Americas.

Distribution of expenditures by substantive sectors was as follows: associate expert programme, $30 million; programme support, $23.9 million; public administration capacity, $4.1 million; regional development, $3.6 million; water and energy, $2.7 million; statistics, $2.4 million; e-government, $2 million; development management, $1.9 million; United Nations Forum on Forests, $0.6 million; small island developing States, $0.4 million; and advancement of women, $0.2 million. Of the total delivery of $71.8 million, the associate expert programme comprised 42 per cent; programme support, 33 per cent; public administration capacity, 6 per cent; and regional development, 5 per cent.

On a component basis, the Department's delivery in 2010 included $61.4 million for project personnel; $4.2 million for training; $3.3 million for subcontracts; $1.9 million for equipment; and $1 million for miscellaneous expenses.

Total expenditure for DESA against the UN regular programme of technical cooperation was $4.7 million: public administration and development management, $2.2 million; statistics, $0.8 million; sustainable development, $0.6 million; administrative support, $0.5 million; social policy and development, $0.3 million; and advancement of women, $0.3 million. On a component basis, expenditures in 2010 included $2.7 million for advisory services; $1.0 million for meetings; $0.6 million for travel; $0.3 million for consultants' fees and travel; and $0.1 million for fellowships.

Total expenditure for DESA in 2010 against the United Nations Development Account was $1.7 million. Distribution of expenditures by Divisions was as follows: statistics, $0.7 million; development policy and analysis, $0.6 million; sustainable development, $0.2 million; public administration and development management, $0.1 million; and office for Economic and Social Council support and coordination, $0.1 million. On a component basis, expenditures included $0.7 million for meetings; $0.4 million for consultants' fees and travel; $0.1 million for contractual services; and $0.1 million for advisory services.

UN Office for Partnerships

The United Nations Office for Partnerships, formed in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1046], served as the gateway for public-private partnerships with the UN system in furtherance of the MDGs. It oversaw the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships, the United Nations Democracy Fund, and Partnership Advisory Services and Outreach. The Office served on several tasks forces, ranging from regionally focused groups to coordination mechanisms. In 2010, the Office provided advisory services to private sector companies, foundations, civil society organizations, academic institutions and philanthropists. The majority of requests from non-State actors focused on poverty reduction, education, health, disaster relief, and humanitarian assistance in the LDCs. Several agreements and memorandums of understanding (MOUs) were established with external actors to formalize some of those partnerships in support of the MDGs.

According to a September report of the Secretary-General [A/65/347], 2009 was another successful year for UN partnerships. Despite continued economic challenges, there was no decline in the number of entities from both the private sector and civil society seeking UN system involvement. The Office continued to facilitate innovative and rewarding partnerships and engage in initiatives supporting the international development agenda. The earthquake in Haiti at the beginning of 2010 (see p. 320) reaffirmed the importance of public-private partnerships in addressing such crises, as the Office facilitated commitments in support of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, connecting corporations, umbrella organizations, civil society, academia and many other entities with valuable outlets for humanitarian relief.

The General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 65/542 of 24 December.

UN Fund for International Partnerships

The United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP) was established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1297] to serve as an interface between the UN system and the United Nations Foundation, the public charity responsible for administering Robert E. Turner's $1 billion contribution in support of UN causes. As at 31 December 2010, allocations to UNFIP projects totalled over $1.17 billion, $0.4 billion of which represented core Turner funds, and $0.7 billion (62 per cent) contributions from other partners, for 507 projects implemented by 43 UN entities in 124 countries. The projects of the children's health programme area were valued at $72.2 million for six projects; the population and women's programme area, $3.4 million for nine projects; and the environment area, $2.4 million for six projects. Seven other projects were valued at $1.1 million.

UN Democracy Fund

The United Nations Democracy Fund (UNDEF), established in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 655] during the World Summit to support democratization throughout the world, aimed at strengthening the voice of civil society, promoting human rights and encouraging the participation of all groups in democratic processes. Working closely with the other arms of the United Nations Office for Partnerships, the Fund facilitated partnerships with civil society actors to advance democratic principles and the MDGs. Through UNDEF, in its fourth round of funding starting in 2010, 59 projects were funded at a cost of nearly $14.7 million in community development (28 per cent), women's empowerment (20 per cent), rule of law and human rights (17 per cent), tools for democratization (14 per cent), youth (8 per cent), media (8 per cent), and strengthening the instrumentalities of government (5 per cent).

During the year, the Fund expanded its donor base to 39 Member States. A special UNDEF donor meeting was held to mark the International Day of Democracy on 15 September. The cumulative amount of contributions received from 2005 through 2010 exceeded $120 million.

The Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) in 2010 conducted an audit of UNDEF and concluded that its operations promoted democracy as a global value; had implemented projects that helped Member States build capacity in upholding democratic institutions; and that its governance mechanisms—the Programme Consultative Group and the Advisory Board—functioned effectively. The audit recommended the development of a more structured fund-raising strategy to ensure the Fund's financial sustainability; submission of a separate report of the Secretary-General on UNDEF to the General Assembly to enhance visibility; identification of key performance indicators to reflect strategic and operational targets; a review of the UNDEF operational budget to ensure that cost estimates reflected market prices; and a review of the Fund's general practice of evaluating all projects. In the opinion of OIOS, UNDEF did not need to evaluate every project to demonstrate its effectiveness and impact.

UNDEF launched its fifth round for project proposals in November; as at 31 December, it had received a record high of 3,754 project proposals from organizations in 149 countries.

Partnership Advisory Services and Outreach

Through Partnership Advisory Services and Outreach, the United Nations Office for Partnerships provided advice to academic institutions, private sector companies, foundations, government agencies, media groups, civil society organizations and philanthropists. The majority of requests from non-State actors focused on poverty reduction, education, health, disaster relief, and humanitarian assistance in LDCs. Several agreements and memoranda of understanding were established with external actors to formalize some of those partnerships in support of the MDGs.

The advisory services provided by the Office were grouped into four broad categories: operational partnerships, to encourage corporate partners to support UN programmes and advocacy campaigns; policy and advocacy partnerships, engaging global associations to raise awareness and wider understanding of the MDGs; sharing resources and expertise; and networks and alliances.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) was established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 900], in accordance with General Assembly decision 48/501 [YUN 1994, p. 806], as a separate, self-financing entity of the UN system to act as a service provider to UN organizations. It offered a broad range of services, from overall project management to the provision of single inputs.

2010 activities

The UNOPS Executive Director, in his annual report on UNOPS activities [DP/OPS/2011/1], informed the Executive Board of progress made in implementation of the 2010–2013 strategic plan by ensuring that UNOPS provided its partners with management services that met world-class standards of quality, speed and cost-effectiveness. In 2010, the Office implemented 925 projects valued at $1.27 billion on behalf of its partners, up 16 per cent from a year earlier. Administrative support costs reached $64.2 million, $200,000 less than in 2009, resulting in a net surplus of $26.3 million. At the end of the year, the operational reserve was $56.8 million, up $14 million compared with the previous year, and 18 per cent above the target of $48.1 million set by the Board. Of UNOPS project delivery, 62.1 per cent was on behalf of the UN system, down from 65.4 per cent in 2009. The volume of work done for UNDP, UNOPS' most important partner, increased to $463 million, from $435 million, but as a percentage of total UNOPS implementation expenditures was 36.5 per cent, less than the 39.9 per cent in 2009. Of that,

5.2 percentage points came from core funds, 9.8 percentage points from trust funds (excluding UNDG multi-donor trust funds), and 21.5 percentage points from management service agreements. DPKO was the second largest partner, accounting for 13.5 per cent of implementation compared to 12 per cent a year earlier. Four high-level goals, called "contribution goals", defined UNOPS work in the 2010–2013 period: rebuilding peace and stability after conflict; early recovery from natural disaster; the ability of people to develop local economies and obtain social services; and environmental sustainability and adaptation to climate change. UNOPS also dealt with a number of cross-cutting concerns across the four goals, such as national capacity development, gender equality and the empowerment of women, and environmental sustainability. Key results in 2010 included the construction or rehabilitation of 88 schools and 11 training centres, 8 hospitals, 44 health clinics and 20 other medical facilities. Twenty-eight police stations, 9 police training facilities, 3 prisons and 8 detention centres were constructed or renovated, as were 18 courthouses, 3 customs buildings and 69 other government administration buildings. In addition, 36 waste facilities were constructed or renovated, as were 3 power stations and 48 water treatment plants. In post-conflict and post-disaster settings, UNOPS helped partners construct more than 5,100 emergency buildings. It constructed or rehabilitated 5 harbours, 32 bridges and 2,243 kilometres of roads. More than 794 small neighbourhood improvements were implemented around the world. UNOPS helped the United Nations Mine Action Service clear over 300 million square metres of land and 16,000 kilometres of road. Almost 910 million doses of medicine were procured or distributed; around a quarter of those were to treat HIV/AIDS. Nearly 670,000 people were assessed or treated for disease, while more than 820,000 were reached with disease-prevention initiatives.

UNOPS also organized 245 high-level events and meetings, provided support to 141 government entities and 4,139 local organizations, worked on 78 policies or laws, and supported 36 countries with environmental management. UNOPS administered or monitored more than 760 grants funding a range of projects, in addition to about 4,000 UNDP/GEF small grants in over 120 countries. It provided a range of common services for other UN agencies. It procured $67 million worth of goods for other UN organizations, including 2,029 vehicles, and supported 24 UN organizations by hosting and improving the United Nations Global Marketplace online procurement facility. In collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme, the International Trade Centre and the International Labour Organization, UNOPS developed sustainable procurement product guidelines for common goods and services.

UNOPS improved its services to Governments. The largest partnership was with the Government of Argentina, closely followed by the Government of Peru. Total direct support to Governments, excluding management services, was $433 million, up from $346 million in 2009, or 34.1 per cent of total project delivery. UNOPS appointed representatives in Argentina and Haiti and signed new host country agreements with the Maldives, Paraguay and South Africa. It worked with the World Bank to implement more than $146 million worth in project delivery. It strengthened its partnerships with the European Union, implementing around $34 million in projects, and signed contracts worth €73 million with the European Commission in 2010, up from €35 million in 2009. It signed a new MOU with UNFPA, and continued to review agreements with other partners. UNOPS finalized new agreements worth a record $1.81 billion, up 26 per cent from 2009, reflecting increased demand, as well as record new funding for the UNDP-implemented Global Environment Facility Small Grants Programme, which was executed by UNOPS.

During the year, UNOPS strengthened its internal policy framework through the promulgation of 14 new or revised corporate policies. To strengthen operational guidance and as part of the drive to achieve International Organization for Standardization 9001 certification for its quality management system, UNOPS documented 32 core business processes. It conducted its first internal risk maturity assessment and launched a comprehensive business continuity and disaster recovery planning process.

On 29 June [dec. 2010/21], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's annual report on UNOPS activities in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 869] and welcomed its improved financial position, the increased professionalism of its services and personnel, and the full replenishment of operational reserves and accrual for all end-of-service liabilities. The Board also welcomed the strengthening of strategic partnerships and contribution to results, and encouraged the Executive Director to further enhance engagement as a service provider to various actors in the development, humanitarian and peacekeeping arena, and to continue to integrate national capacity development in its operations. It welcomed efforts towards attaining a greater degree of transparency and accountability, in particular the complete public disclosure of project data, including information on all contracts awarded and payments made.

Financial, administrative and operational matters

Budget

The Executive Board, at its January session, had before it a report [DP/2010/9] on UNOPS budget estimates for the 2010–2011 biennium, totalling $135.2

million, with a net revenue target of $5 million to be contributed to the operational reserve. The budget proposals underpinned the objectives of the UNOPS strategic plan, 2010–2013 [YUN 2009, p. 870]. The budget also prioritized certain strategic investments aimed at increasing UNOPS efficiency and effectiveness, including continued improvement of business practices, learning and certification of staff preparations to implement the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS), and strengthened internal oversight. Compared with the previous budget, resources were directed at project management as a new practice area offering policy leadership, tools and training to personnel worldwide. Format and framework of the UNOPS budget were in line with the harmonized results-based budget approach of UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF.

Estimated total revenue for the 2010–2011 biennium amounted to $140.2 million, a 2.6 per cent increase compared with the 2008–2009 estimate of $136.6 million, and included $125.3 million from project delivery, $6.3 million from service delivery, and $8.5 million from miscellaneous sources. The 2010–2011 budget represented an overall increase of $15.2 million in appropriations, or a 13 per cent increase compared with the previous budget. The proposed increase included an anticipated adjustment of UN salary scales, reclassification of posts, within-grade salary increments and inflation, as well as UNOPS efforts to reduce costs through increased efficiency, offsetting the full increase otherwise required. In line with those efforts, the number of approved posts was reduced from 391 to 345.

ACABQ, in a January report [DP/2010/10] on UNOPS estimates for the 2010–2011 biennial support budget, commented on the budget format and presentation, the budget proposals, the post reclassification exercise, and the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for the biennium ended 31 December 2007 [YUN 2008, p. 985].

The Executive Board, on 22 January [dec. 2010/7], noted the UNOPS budget estimates and the use of the harmonized approach to results-based budgeting, and endorsed the targeting of resources towards the strategic objectives and results identified in the UNOPS strategic plan, 2010–2013. It approved the $5 million net revenue target for 2010–2011, and agreed to suspend until 31 December 2011 financial rules 109.01, 109.02, 109.03, 109.05, 121.01 (c), 121.01 (d) and 121.01 (f), as well as financial regulations 21.01, 21.06 and 21.07, and agreed to automatically reinstate the above-mentioned regulations and rules on 1 January 2012. On the same date [dec. 2010/12], the Board took note of the ACABQ report.

On 30 June [dec. 2010/17] (see p. 885), the Board recognized progress in establishing the UNOPS Ethics Office and requested the Office to submit a report to the Board at future annual sessions.

Audit reports

Internal audit. In April, the UNOPS Internal Audit and Investigations Group Director submitted an activity report [DP/2010/32] on services for the year ended 31 December 2009. During 2009, the Group released 61 reports, compared with 38 in 2008, while the number of internal audit recommendations decreased significantly from 359 in 2008 to 178 in 2009. Of the 178 audit recommendations, 56 (31 per cent) were considered to be of high importance, 112 (63 per cent) of medium and 10 (6 per cent) of low importance. While the reduction in high-importance audit recommendations suggested progress by management in addressing pertinent risks, compliance with UNOPS policies and procedures remained an area for improvement as its share of the causes of audit issues increased from 16 per cent in 2008 to 33 per cent in 2009. The other causes of audit issues were inadequate supervision (27 per cent), human error (3 per cent), and insufficient resources (2 per cent). The top three functional areas on which audit recommendations were made in 2009 were similar to those in 2008, reflecting the nature of UNOPS operations: human resources, project management and finance. Both procurement and business development increased as areas of audit cause, reflecting the additional focus of the Group on them.

The report also provided a summary of follow-up to audit recommendations made during previous years, from 2005 to 2009. It noted that, in response to the internal audit report on the implementation of the individual contractor agreement policy, a dedicated task force was established and management revised that policy, whose effectiveness would be assessed during 2010. The Group noted similar action, revisions or new policies during 2009 and early 2010 that addressed various audit recommendations.

Executive Board action. The Executive Board, on 1 July [dec. 2010/22], welcomed UNOPS compliance with the Board's 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 984] and 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 872] decisions on the disclosure of internal audit reports as well as the increased internal coverage, the broadening of the focus of work beyond compliance to include performance-based auditing, and the improvements made in tracking the implementation of recommendations. The Board noted the recurrent audit findings in the areas of human resources, project and programme management, procurement and finance, and that the lack of written procedures and compliance with UNOPS policies and procedures were the most common causes of findings. It noted also that UNOPS management had revised or adopted new policies to address various audit recommendations, including the individual contractor agreement policy. It urged continued effort to address audit findings and looked forward to improvements in future reports. The Board further noted the continuing decrease of qualified audit opinions for project audits in 2009, compared with 2008 and 2007, and requested that information on the financial impact of audit findings be incorporated in future reports.

Board of Auditors report. In June, the Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly the UNOPS financial report and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 2009 and its report [A/65/5/Add.10]. Key financial ratios reflected steady improvements as compared with the previous biennium, and the Board, for the first time in several successive bienniums, issued an unmodified audit opinion. Of the 95 recommendations for the 2006–2007 biennium, 67 (71 per cent) were fully implemented, 10 (10 per cent) were under implementation, and 18 (19 per cent) were overtaken by events. Total income for the period under review was $158.6 million, while expenditures amounted to $126.1 million, an increase of 41 per cent, resulting in an excess of $36.3 million. Write-offs of receivables of $22.1 million accounted for 68 per cent of that excess. Contingent liabilities amounted to $41.2 million, which was almost equivalent to the level of the operational reserve. UNOPS was scheduled to implement IPSAS in preparing its financial statements from 1 January 2012.

In response to the Board of Auditors' recommendations, UNOPS, in November [DP/2011/15], summarized the current status relevant to the audit recommendations and the UNOPS management plan, including actions yet to be fully implemented. UNOPS noted that in previous bienniums, it had received modified audit opinions containing matters of emphasis and that management had focused its strategic initiatives on addressing audit concerns. The Board's unqualified audit opinion for the 2008–2009 biennium represented the achievement of a significant milestone. UNOPS said that it had implemented 11 of the 59 recommendations of the Board of Auditors, 40 of which were classified as high priority and 19 as medium priority; it was confident that the remaining issues would be addressed in a satisfactory manner during the 2010–2011 biennium. UNOPS also pointed out that its financial situation had improved significantly over the last three bienniums; as at December 2009, its reserves were fully replenished at $42.7 million, representing an addition of some $38.4 million since December 2005.

Procurement

In response to a 2007 Executive Board decision [YUN 2007, p. 905], the UNOPS Executive Director submitted, in July, the annual statistical report [DP/2010/38 & Corr.1] on UN system procurement activities in 2009, which compiled information from 33 UN organizations, and provided details on UN system procurement by country of supply.

Total procurement under all sources of funding during 2009 was $13.8 billion, a $203 million increase over the previous year. Total procurement of goods decreased by $360 million, or 5.3 per cent, while procurement of services grew by $563 million, or 8.2 per cent. Between 2005 and 2009, UN procurement volume increased from $8.3 billion to $13.8 billion, primarily attributable to a $3.6 billion growth in procurement services. The share of procurement from developing countries and countries with economies in transition increased by 3.6 per cent, to 54.9 per cent of total UN procurement volume, while procurement from industrialized countries increased from 37.9 per cent in 2008 to 43.9 per cent in 2009.

On 2 September [dec. 2010/31], the Executive Board noted the annual statistical report on UN procurement activities. It welcomed the data presentation and analysis contained therein, as well as the relevance of the thematic supplement, and the trend of increasing procurement by UN organizations from suppliers supporting the Global Compact.

UN Volunteers

In 2010, 7,765 volunteers worked for the UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, compared with 7,545 in 2009. The volunteers, representing 158 nationalities, carried out 7,960 assignments in 132 countries. Volunteers from developing countries represented 80 per cent of the total number, and women accounted for 37 per cent. Forty per cent of all volunteers worked on crisis prevention and recovery, 30 per cent on poverty eradication and MDG achievement, and 26 per cent on democratic governance. By region, 47 per cent of assignments were carried out in sub-Saharan Africa; 22 per cent in the Arab States; 14 per cent in Asia and the Pacific; 13 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean; and 4 per cent in Europe and CIS. Total contributions to UNV amounted to $225.2 million; other income totalled $12 million. The total expenditure for the year was $235.1 million.

Report of Administrator. In April, the Administrator presented a report [DP/2010/28] reviewing results achieved by the UNV programme during the 2008–2009 biennium, in support of programme countries and UN organizations in their efforts towards peace and development, including achievement of the MDGs. The structure of the report followed the UNV business model as approved by the Executive Board in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1049]. A statistical annex on volunteers, financial overview, and UNV results framework were posted on the Executive Board website.

Programme results in three areas of the UNV business model—advocacy, integration and mobilization—were outlined. In 2008, definitions of the related results framework were refined: the three organizational result areas were global recognition of volunteerism for peace and development; integration of volunteerism into peace and development programmes; and mobilization of increasing numbers and diversity of volunteers for peace and development. The key results were also redefined, though not changed in substance. A fourth organizational result area, strategic guidance, organizational oversight and accountability, was added to capture organizational support functions.

The financial crisis led to a decrease in total biennial donor funding from $41.8 million in 2006–2007 to $34.7 million for 2008–2009, including the Special Voluntary Fund, which decreased from $12.3 million to $10.4 million. Nevertheless, as a result of volunteer mobilization for UN organizations, the total financial size of UNV increased to $427 million in 2008–2009, compared with $367 million in the previous biennium. Climate change challenges opened up new programming areas, like community-based adaptation. The food and financial crises highlighted large gaps in achieving the MDGs and the essential role of volunteerism in providing participatory, sustainable, capacity-enhancing and cost-effective solutions.

The Administrator concluded that UNV had made significant contributions to the peace and development activities of UNDP and the United Nations and, by providing technical assistance on volunteerism to Governments, UN organizations and civil society, had enhanced countries' capacity to harness the volunteer sector as a resource for peace, development and achieving the MDGs. The change management process improved the organizational efficiency of UNV in managing volunteers; those efficiency gains allowed UNV to absorb a 15 per cent decrease in administrative support from the biennial support budget. The streamlined organizational structure and work processes would enable UNV to become more focused and responsive to client needs, and capitalize on emerging opportunities. The tenth anniversary of the International Year of Volunteers in 2011, for which UNV was the focal point, represented a major opportunity for UNV advocacy and impact. The celebration of the fortieth anniversary of UNV, also in 2011, would make it a year for consolidating partnerships between institutional and individual actors, promoting peace and development, and recognizing the contribution of volunteerism by the international community.

Executive Board action. On 30 June [dec. 2010/19], the Board acknowledged the UNV achievements in support of programme countries and UN organizations, especially the growth in the scale and scope of the UNV Online Volunteer service. It encouraged UNV to continue to innovate and diversify volunteer modalities, and increase gender balance in its assignments. The Board welcomed the UNV engagement with programme countries to build their capacity to manage national volunteer systems, including policy development, legislation and support for implementation. It encouraged UNV to continue working through UNCTs to integrate volunteerism into programming. It recognized that the Special Voluntary Fund for UNV was supporting research and piloting innovations that demonstrated the impact of volunteerism on peace and development, and reiterated the UNV role as the focal point to mark the tenth anniversary of the International Year of Volunteers in 2011, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 63/153 [YUN 2008, p. 987]. The Board requested a presentation in 2011 on planning for the tenth anniversary of the International Year, and on the fortieth anniversary of UNV.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

South-South cooperation

High-level Committee. The High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation, at its sixteenth session (New York, 4 February) [A/65/39], considered the report of the 2009 High-level Conference on South-South Cooperation [YUN 2009, p. 876], which was approved by the General Assembly in resolution 64/222 [ibid., p. 877]. The Committee reviewed the state of South-South cooperation with a view to implementing the provisions of the Nairobi outcome document of the Conference.

In a decision adopted during the session [A/65/39 (dec. 16/1)], the Committee noted the report of the High-level Conference and initiatives by various UN agencies, funds and programmes to establish, within their respective mandates, new units and work programmes to support and promote South-South cooperation. It requested the Secretary-General, with the support of the UNDP Special Unit for South-South Cooperation and in consultation with Member States, to prepare a specific framework of operational guidelines for relevant UN organizations and agencies for the implementation of the Nairobi outcome document, for consideration and approval by the Committee at its intersessional meeting in 2011. The meeting was to be held at least three months after circulation of the draft framework to be prepared by the Secretary-General on the basis of a report by JIU. The Committee requested JIU to review the UN institutional arrangements in support of South-South and triangular cooperation and to make recommendations for facilitating the preparation of the specific framework. It requested the Administrator to report on the implementation of its decision at the Committee's seventeenth (2012) session, and approved the provisional agenda for that session [dec. 16/2].

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2010/251 of 23 July, took note of the High-level Committee's report on its sixteenth session.

In resolution 65/177 of 20 December (see p. 865), the General Assembly also took note of the High-level Committee's report.

UN Capital Development Fund

The United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) worked to reduce poverty in the least developed countries (LDCs) by strengthening local services and increased access to microfinance. The MDGs were at the core of the Fund's mission and were the foundation of its programmatic work.

As stated in a report on results achieved by UNCDF in 2010 [DP/2011/28], the Fund provided support to 37 of 48 LDCs, with a particular focus on post-crisis countries. Local development programmes accounted for 66 per cent of programme delivery, while microfinance programmes made up 34 per cent. The majority of programme delivery (58 per cent) was in Africa, followed by the Asia-Pacific region (35 per cent) and the Arab States and Haiti (7 per cent).

The 2010 programme targets were largely met in both practice areas. An enhanced programme of evaluations confirmed the overall effectiveness of UNCDF work and pointed to areas in need of strengthening. Project 2010, an internal strengthening process started in 2008, was completed, with 82 per cent of the recommendations of a 2009 audit fully implemented. A follow-up audit conducted in October 2010 found that the Fund had made substantial progress, achieving an overall implementation rate of 82 per cent.

In spite of continued pressures on development budgets globally, total contributions to UNCDF increased by 14 per cent, from $36.2 million in 2009 to $42.3 million in 2010. The number of donors and their diversity continued to improve, reaching 29 in 2010, up from 27 in 2009 and 20 in 2007. Among the five largest donors in 2010, two were from the private sector (the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and the Master Card Foundation); the remaining top donors were Sweden, Australia and Belgium. Although a healthy sign of continued and more diverse donor support, much of the recent growth was in earmarked resources, which totalled $23.8 million in 2010. There was a decrease in core funding and an increase in other resources. Programme expenditures totalled $43.9 million, up from $41.5 million in 2009.

The annual report on results achieved by UNCDF in 2009, submitted in April [DP/2010/27], analysed performance against established programme, management and financial results targets. The 2009 programme targets in both local development programmes and microfinance were achieved and in some cases exceeded. While management targets were largely met, strengthening UNCDF operational effectiveness remained a priority. A process of internal reflection, begun late in 2008, led to refined priorities for UNCDF for the 2012–2013 period; they included increasing operational effectiveness, responding to the demands of LDCs for new kinds of support, and strengthening strategic partnerships. Total contributions in 2009 amounted to $36.5 million, reflecting a slight increase in regular resources and an anticipated decline in other resources. The overall resource outlook remained positive, especially in terms of volume and diversification of other resources. The 2009 programme expenditure amounted to $41.5 million, an increase of 12.2 per cent from 2008 and more than double the 2005 figure.

Taking note of the report, the Executive Board, on 1 July [dec. 2010/18], expressed its appreciation of the strong programmatic and operational results achieved by UNCDF in 2009. It welcomed the Fund's contributions towards localizing the MDGs in the LDCs, which the Fund achieved by providing investment capital and technical assistance to promote local development and inclusive microfinance services that benefited poor households and small and micro enterprises. The Board again called on the Fund to include in future annual reports more in-depth analysis on how its activities contributed to local-level MDG achievement, including lessons learned and challenges faced. It encouraged UNCDF to continue mobilizing contributions to its regular resources or multi-year thematic contributions for implementing the UNCDF 2008–2011 investment plan, which would allow the Fund to sustain its services and investment support and expand to more LDCs. It also encouraged UNCDF to further efforts to increase and expand contributions to its regular and other resources, and welcomed the Fund's efforts to improve its management practices and maintain strong programmatic quality.

Implementation of UNCDF cost recovery policy

In response to a 2008 Executive Board decision [YUN 2008, p. 990], UNCDF submitted, in January 2010, a report [DP/2010/6] on the implementation of its cost recovery policy. The Fund noted that it fully recovered its costs, in accordance with the cost recovery policy adopted by the Board in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 990]. It had applied the general management support rate of 7 per cent used by UNDP and other UN agencies in all third-party contributions. The newly approved UNDP cost classification categories approved by the Board in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 863], which UNCDF wished to adopt, would increase transparency and accountability, including by showing the volume of any regular resources necessary to finance support costs that were not covered by the UNCDF allocation from the UNDP biennial support budget.

The Board, on 22 January [dec. 2010/5], took note of the report and recommended that UNCDF adopt the cost classification categories it had approved for UNDP in 2009. It noted the Fund's continued focus on the LDCs, and encouraged UNCDF management to intensify its efforts to address new and emerging challenges facing the LDCs.

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 2010, devastating natural disasters, the crippling impact of the world financial and economic crisis on the most vulnerable countries, and continuing conflict situations in many parts of the world resulted in large-scale humanitarian crises. Some 385 disasters took the lives of over 297,000 people and affected 217 million others, causing an estimated $124 billion in economic damages. The United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), mobilized and coordinated humanitarian assistance to respond to those international emergencies, launching consolidated and flash appeals for Afghanistan, the Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Guatemala, Haiti, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Pakistan, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, West Africa, Yemen and Zimbabwe. OCHA received contributions for natural disaster assistance totalling $6.4 billion. The Central Emergency Response Fund continued to ensure the rapid provision of assistance to populations affected by sudden-onset disasters and underfunded emergencies.

In Haiti, where the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti was already working to promote long-term post-disaster socio-economic recovery, stability and reconstruction, a severe earthquake in January caused hundreds of thousands of deaths and injuries and widespread damage. The United Nations, through OCHA, mobilized the international humanitarian response. Two international conferences were held on Haiti—the international donors’ conference in March and the World Summit for the Future of Haiti in June. In other development activities, the Joint Inspection Unit issued a report on UN system support to Africa containing 17 recommendations on enhancing coordination, cooperation and coherence of that support.

Efforts continued to implement the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015—the 10-year plan for reducing disaster risks adopted at the World Conference on Disaster Reduction in 2005. A midterm review of the Framework for Action began, which was intended to inform its continued implementation and post-2015 international cooperation in disaster risk reduction.

During the year, the Economic and Social Council worked to strengthen UN humanitarian assistance coordination, especially those humanitarian operations conducted in highly hazardous or insecure and unsafe environments, and to improve preparedness for humanitarian emergencies. The “cluster leadership approach”—a mechanism for improving humanitarian response effectiveness and strengthening partnerships—was evaluated and recommendations were made to improve its implementation.

The new OCHA strategic framework 2010–2013 focused on providing a more enabling environment for humanitarian action, creating a more effective humanitarian coordination system and strengthening OCHA management and administration.

Humanitarian assistance

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

The humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council (13–15 July) [A/65/3/Rev.1] considered, in accordance with Council decision 2010/208, the theme “Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian assistance”. It convened two panels: conducting humanitarian operations in highly hazardous or insecure and unsafe environments; and strengthening preparedness for humanitarian emergencies and the coordinated provision of humanitarian assistance, in particular addressing the needs of affected populations and the factors that increase susceptibility to humanitarian emergencies. On 28 April, the Council decided to hold an informal event on 13 July to discuss transition from relief to development, focusing on the experience of Haiti (decision 2010/209).

The Council considered the Secretary-General’s May report [A/65/82-E/2010/88] on strengthening the coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance, submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421], 63/147 [YUN 2008, p. 1000] and 64/76 [YUN 2009, p. 886], and Council resolution 2009/3 [ibid., p. 883]. The report summarized humanitarian trends and challenges, especially disasters associated with natural hazards and complex emergencies; examined progress in the coordination of humanitarian assistance; and analysed the themes of the Council’s humanitarian affairs segment (see above).

In 2009, the Centre for Research on the Epidemiology of Disasters reported 328 disasters associated with natural hazards, spread across 111 countries, and affecting 113 million people. That marked a significant divergence from the annual average of 392 disasters recorded for the period 2000–2008, which experts attributed to climate cycle variations and drought in South Asia. Tropical storms in Asia and the Caribbean affected some 10.9 million people, while erratic rain patterns affected some 800,000 people in West Africa and poor rainfall 10.3 million people in Chad and the Niger. More than 3 million people struggled to meet basic food needs in Southern Africa as a result of the poor 2008/2009 agricultural season and low purchasing power. In the Horn of Africa, climatic variability, insecurity and limited access to humanitarian assistance affected some 23 million people. Complex emergencies such as prolonged conflict and food insecurity in Afghanistan, the Palestinian territory of Gaza, Somalia and Yemen and the humanitarian situation in the Central African Republic, Chad, the Democratic Republic of Congo and Sudan's Darfur region affected tens of millions of people. Some situations saw an improvement between June 2009 and May 2010—Zimbabwe moved from a humanitarian crisis towards gradual recovery, and Iraq saw reduced levels of violence and improved Government capacity; however, high numbers of internally displaced people remained a concern. Globally, an estimated 27 million persons were internally displaced by armed conflict. By the end of 2009, 10.4 million refugees had received assistance from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), almost as many as in 2008.

The first half of 2010 was marked by massive earthquakes: in Haiti on 12 January, killing over 220,000 people, injuring another 300,000 and leaving 1.5 million displaced, with economic damage estimated at $7.8 billion; in Chile on 27 February, affecting over 2 million people and causing 486 deaths, with damage estimated at $30 billion; and in Qinghai province in China on 14 April, resulting in 2,200 people dead, 12,135 injured and another 70 missing. In March, a tropical cyclone affected some 370,000 people in Southern Africa, particularly in Madagascar.

At the time of the report, the consolidated appeals process had requested $7.1 billion for 2010 to provide 48 million people with humanitarian assistance, compared with 43 million people in 2009.

Regarding progress in the coordination of humanitarian assistance, the cluster approach [YUN 2006, p. 1057] was used in almost all countries with humanitarian coordinators. An independent evaluation assessing its operational effectiveness and main outcomes, completed in early 2010, concluded that the cluster approach was a worthwhile investment, but improved implementation by humanitarian organizations was needed. Recommendations included ensuring that clusters at the field level were adequately coordinated with community and national structures and capacities; better incorporating multidimensional and cross-cutting issues in humanitarian responses; and improving inter-cluster coordination. Efforts continued to harmonize and consolidate needs assessments and strengthen information management capacities and collection. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee Task Force on Needs Assessment produced a guidance package with key indicators for assessments; a web-based toolbox consolidating needs assessment tools and guidance documents to facilitate easy access for practitioners in the field; and a multisectoral tool consolidating core humanitarian information for country teams, referred to as the "humanitarian dashboard". Funding mechanisms continued to focus on further improving their effectiveness and accountability. A draft performance and accountability framework and piloting reporting outcomes by cluster were developed for the Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF) and the consolidated appeals process. To better administer those funds, OCHA established a dedicated unit in Geneva.

The third meeting of the Global Humanitarian Platform (Geneva, February) provided an opportunity for the humanitarian community to take stock of progress in terms of partnership. Among the topics discussed was the need for a "new humanitarian business model" that would reduce the international footprint and invest more in national and local capacity development. To address the issue of Secretariat emergency rules and procedures for rapid humanitarian response, as an interim measure, the Secretariat piloted a roster for OCHA to facilitate field recruitment, and adopted special measures allowing the rapid recruitment of additional external candidates on fixed-term appointments. As to the need to equip staff in field operations, OCHA established a small, centralized rapid deployment stock; however, it was seeking further delegation of authority for procurement and was working to establish more systematic cooperation with the Department of Field Support. The Secretary-General concluded with recommendations for the consideration of Member States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/1 [draft: E/2010/L.15] without vote [agenda item 5].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, and recalling other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and relevant resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming also the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance and the need for all actors engaged in the provision of such assistance in situations of complex emergencies and natural disasters to promote and fully respect these principles,

Recalling its decision to consider the theme “Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian assistance” at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 2010,

Recalling also its decision to convene two panels, on the themes “Humanitarian assistance operations in highly hazardous or insecure and unsafe environments” and “Strengthening preparedness for humanitarian emergencies and the coordinated provision of humanitarian assistance, in particular addressing the humanitarian needs of the affected populations and the factors that increase susceptibility to humanitarian emergencies”, and its decision to hold an informal event on the theme “From relief to recovery: lessons learned from the experience of Haiti”,

Expressing grave concern at the increase in the number of people affected by humanitarian emergencies, including those associated with natural hazards and complex emergencies, at the increased impact of natural disasters and at the displacement resulting from humanitarian emergencies,

Reiterating the need to mainstream a gender perspective into humanitarian assistance in a comprehensive and consistent manner,

Expressing deep concern at the increasing challenges posed to Member States and the United Nations humanitarian response capacity by the consequences of natural disasters, including those related to the continuing impact of climate change, and by the global food crisis and continuing food insecurity,

Acknowledging that the current financial and economic crisis has the potential to increase the need for resources for humanitarian assistance in developing countries,

Condemning the increasing number of attacks and other acts of violence against humanitarian personnel, facilities, assets and supplies, and expressing deep concern about the negative implications of such acts for the provision of humanitarian assistance to affected populations,

Noting with grave concern that violence, including gender-based violence, particularly sexual violence, and violence against children, continues to be deliberately directed against civilian populations in many emergency situations,

Recognizing that building and strengthening national and local preparedness, prevention, resilience, mitigation and response capacity is critical to a more predictable and effective response,

Recognizing also the clear relationship between emergency relief, rehabilitation and development, and reaffirming that, in order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development, emergency assistance must be provided in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development and that emergency measures should be seen as a step towards sustainable development,

Noting the contribution, as appropriate, of relevant regional and subregional organizations in the provision of humanitarian assistance within their region at the request of the affected State,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Stresses that the United Nations system should make efforts to enhance existing humanitarian capacities, knowledge and institutions, including, as appropriate, through the transfer of technology and expertise to developing countries, and encourages the international community to support efforts of Member States aimed at strengthening their capacity to prepare for and respond to disasters;
3. Urges Member States to develop, update and strengthen disaster preparedness and risk reduction measures at all levels, in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action, in particular priority 5 thereof, taking into account their own circumstances and capacities and in coordination with relevant actors, as appropriate, and encourages the international community and relevant United Nations entities, including the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, to give increased priority to supporting national and local efforts in this regard;
4. Encourages Member States to create and strengthen an enabling environment for the capacity-building of national and local authorities, national societies of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, and national and local non-governmental and community-based organizations in providing timely humanitarian assistance, and encourages the international community, the relevant entities of the United Nations system and other relevant institutions and organizations to support national authorities in their capacity-building programmes, including through technical cooperation and long-term partnerships, based on recognition of their important role in providing humanitarian assistance;
5. Welcomes the initiatives undertaken at the regional and national levels in relation to the implementation of the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance adopted at the thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 November 2007, and encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to take further steps to strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account, as appropriate, these Guidelines;
6. Encourages efforts to enhance cooperation and coordination between United Nations humanitarian entities, other relevant humanitarian organizations and donor countries and the affected State, with a view to planning and delivering emergency humanitarian assistance in ways that are supportive of early recovery as well as sustainable rehabilitation, reconstruction and development efforts;
7. Also encourages efforts to provide education in humanitarian emergencies, including in order to contribute to a smooth transition from relief to development;
8. Requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue his/her efforts to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance, and urges relevant United Nations organizations and other relevant intergovernmental organizations, as well as other humanitarian and development actors, including civil society, to continue to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to enhance the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian assistance;
9. Encourages United Nations humanitarian organizations and other relevant organizations, while strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance in the field, to continue to work in close coordination with national Governments, taking into account the primary role of the affected State in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of such assistance within its territory;

10. Welcomes the continued efforts to strengthen the humanitarian response capacity in order to provide a timely, predictable, coordinated and accountable response to humanitarian needs, and requests the Secretary-General to continue efforts in this regard, in consultation with Member States, including by strengthening the support provided to and improving the identification, selection and training of United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators and by improving coordination mechanisms for the provision of humanitarian assistance at the field level;

11. Encourages the United Nations to strengthen further its ability to recruit and deploy staff quickly and flexibly and to procure emergency relief material rapidly and cost-effectively in order to support Governments and United Nations country teams in the coordination and provision of international humanitarian assistance;

12. Urges all actors engaged in the provision of humanitarian assistance to fully commit to and duly respect the guiding principles contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/182, including the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality, as well as the guiding principle of independence, as recognized by the Assembly in its resolution 58/114 of 17 December 2003;

13. Calls upon all States and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflict and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel, as well as delivery of supplies and equipment, in order to allow such personnel to efficiently perform their task of assisting affected civilian populations, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

14. Calls upon all parties to armed conflicts to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law;

15. Calls upon all States and parties to comply fully with the provisions of international humanitarian law, including all the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, in order to protect and assist civilians in occupied territories, and in this regard urges the international community and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen humanitarian assistance to civilians in such situations;

16. Recognizes the benefits of the engagement of and coordination with relevant humanitarian actors to the effectiveness of humanitarian response, and encourages the United Nations to continue to pursue efforts to strengthen partnerships at the global level with the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, relevant humanitarian non-governmental organizations and other participants in the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

17. Urges Member States to continue to take the steps necessary to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, premises, facilities, equipment, vehicles and supplies located within their borders and in other territories under their effective control, recognizes the need for appropriate collaboration between humanitarian actors and the relevant authorities of the affected State in matters related to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, requests the Secretary-General to expedite his efforts to enhance the safety and security of personnel involved in United Nations humanitarian operations, and urges Member States to ensure that perpetrators of crimes committed against humanitarian personnel in their territory or in other territories under their effective control do not operate with impunity and are brought to justice as provided for by national laws and by obligations under international law;

18. Encourages Member States, as well as relevant regional and international organizations, in accordance with their specific mandates, to support adaptation to the effects of climate change and to strengthen disaster risk reduction and early warning systems in order to minimize the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters, including those related to the continuing impact of climate change, takes note of the 2009 Global Assessment Report on Disaster Risk Reduction: Risk and poverty in a changing climate—Invest today for a safer tomorrow, and encourages relevant entities to continue their research on the humanitarian implications of natural disasters;

19. Emphasizes the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance and, in situations in which military capacity and assets are used to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, reaffirms the need for their use to be undertaken with the consent of the affected State and in conformity with international law, including international humanitarian law, as well as humanitarian principles;

20. Requests Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and other relevant actors to ensure that all aspects of humanitarian response address the specific needs of women, girls, men and boys, taking into consideration age and disability, including through improved collection, analysis and reporting of sex- and age-disaggregated data, taking into account, inter alia, the information provided by States;

21. Urges Member States to continue to prevent, investigate and prosecute acts of gender-based violence, including sexual violence, in humanitarian emergencies, calls upon Member States and relevant organizations to strengthen support services to victims of such violence, and calls for a more effective response in this regard;

22. Notes that the current global financial and economic crisis has the potential to affect the ability of developing countries to respond to humanitarian emergencies, and stresses the need to take measures to ensure adequate resources for international cooperation in the provision of humanitarian assistance;

23. Encourages Member States, the private sector, civil society and other relevant entities to make contributions and to consider increasing and diversifying their contributions to humanitarian funding mechanisms, including consolidated and flash appeals, the Central Emergency Response Fund and other funds, based on and in proportion to assessed needs, as a means of ensuring flexible, predictable, timely, needs-based and, where possible, multi-year, non-earmarked and additional resources to meet global humanitarian challenges, encourages donors to adhere to the Principles and Good Practice of Humanitarian Donor-ship, and reiterates that contributions for humanitarian assistance should be provided in a way that is not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

24. Calls upon United Nations humanitarian organizations, in consultation with Member States, as appropriate, to strengthen the evidence base for humanitarian assistance by further developing common mechanisms to improve the quality, transparency and reliability of, and make further progress towards, common humanitarian needs assessments, to assess their performance in assistance and to ensure the most effective use of humanitarian resources by these organizations;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution in his next report to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

Humanitarian reform agenda

In 2010, OCHA worked to respond quickly and effectively to humanitarian emergencies and to develop stronger, more decisive humanitarian leadership. The new OCHA strategic framework 2010–2013 focused on providing a more enabling environment for humanitarian action, creating a more effective humanitarian coordination system and strengthening OCHA management and administration. To support implementation of the strategic framework, the Senior Management Team established cross-OCHA Management Task Teams (MTTs) for each strategic objective. The MTTs developed a mid-year performance report to assess progress in the first half of 2010, and re-evaluate priorities for the second half of the year and for 2011. OCHA also reviewed its Emergency Services Branch, established the Performance and Accountability Framework for the CERF, and used the recommendations from the Cluster Evaluation Phase 2 to draft Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) operational guidance on inter-cluster coordination, identifying Colombia, Nepal and Pakistan as priority countries in which to launch inter-cluster support missions. It also adopted a new response-preparedness policy, strengthening its capacity to respond to crisis situations, as well as its central role in supporting other partners in emergency response.

In other developments, OCHA enhanced its Roster Management System, keeping a pool of qualified, pre-screened candidates available for rapid field deployment. Over 600 people were placed on the Roster in 2010, and 120 field posts filled. OCHA was developing a comprehensive human resources strategy for 2011 and beyond, focusing on training and developing a flexible team. OCHA worked with the Departments of Peacekeeping Operations and of Political Affairs to finalize guidelines for field-level integrated planning, and by the end of the year, 15 countries had developed or were developing an integrated strategic framework. The organization also led the IASC review of protection from sexual exploitation and abuse, and planned to support an IASC task force to ensure guidance on community-based complaint mechanisms and victim assistance. Two policy briefs were produced by the Policy and Development Studies Branch on the impact of water scarcity and energy, demonstrating how interconnected global challenges could drive humanitarian vulnerabilities. OCHA approved a new internal evaluation policy along with a four-year implementation plan to measure performance and impact. It also developed new procedures for implementing evaluation recommendations.

Global Cluster Approach Evaluation. Following the 2005 Humanitarian Response Review [YUN 2005, p. 991], IASC established the “cluster approach” as a mechanism to improve humanitarian response effectiveness and to strengthen partnerships between all humanitarian actors [YUN 2006, p. 1057]. The first of a two-phase evaluation of the approach took place in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 915], and the second, based on a 2008 framework [YUN 2008, p. 996], was completed in early 2010 [A/65/82-E/2010/88]. The evaluation concluded that the cluster approach coordination mechanisms had contributed to better identification of response gaps, reduced duplications, more effective coverage of needs, predictable leadership in sectoral response, and stronger and more inclusive partnerships between the United Nations and non-UN actors.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/133 [draft: A/65/L.45 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 69 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Noting the reports of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations and on the Central Emergency Response Fund,

Reaffirming the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance, and reaffirming also the need for all actors engaged in the provision of humanitarian assistance in situations of complex emergencies and natural disasters to promote and fully respect these principles,

Deeply concerned about the humanitarian impact of such global challenges as the global financial and economic crisis, the food crisis and continuing food insecurity, including their effect on the increasing vulnerability of populations and their negative impact on the effective delivery of humanitarian assistance,

Emphasizing the need to mobilize adequate, predictable, timely and flexible resources for humanitarian assistance based on and in proportion to assessed needs, with a view to ensuring fuller coverage of the needs in all sectors and across humanitarian emergencies, and recognizing, in this regard, the achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund,

Reiterating the need for Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and other relevant actors to mainstream a gender perspective into humanitarian assistance, including by addressing the specific needs of women, girls, boys and men in a comprehensive and consistent manner,

Expressing its deep concern at the increasing challenges faced by Member States and the United Nations humanitarian response capacity as a result of the consequences of natural disasters, including those related to the continuing impact of climate change, and reaffirming the importance of implementing the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, inter alia, by providing adequate resources for disaster risk reduction, including investment in disaster preparedness, and by working towards building back better in all phases from relief to development,

Concerned about the challenges posed by the magnitude of some humanitarian emergencies, including some of the most recent natural disasters, in particular to the capacity and coordination of the humanitarian response system,

Recognizing that building national and local preparedness and response capacity is critical to a more predictable and effective response,

Emphasizing that enhancing international cooperation on emergency humanitarian assistance is essential, and reaffirming its resolution 64/251 of 22 January 2010 on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development,

Emphasizing also the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance, and reaffirming the need in situations in which military capacity and assets are used to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, for their use to be undertaken with the consent of the affected State and in conformity with international law, including international humanitarian law, as well as humanitarian principles,

Condemning the increasing number of deliberate threats and violent attacks against humanitarian personnel and facilities and the negative implications for the provision of humanitarian assistance to populations in need,

Recognizing the high numbers of persons affected by humanitarian emergencies, including internally displaced persons, bearing in mind their particular needs, and welcoming in this regard the adoption and ongoing ratification process of the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, which marks a significant step towards strengthening the national and regional normative framework for the protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons in Africa,

Recognizing also the importance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, which include a vital legal framework for the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, including the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Noting with grave concern that violence, including gender-based violence, particularly sexual violence, and violence against children, continues to be deliberately directed against civilian populations in many emergency situations,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by the United Nations to improve humanitarian response, including by strengthening humanitarian response capacities, improving humanitarian coordination, enhancing predictable and adequate funding and strengthening the accountability of all stakeholders, and recognizing the importance of strengthening emergency administrative procedures and funding to allow for an effective response to emergencies,

Recognizing that in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance in the field, United Nations organizations should continue to work in close coordination with national Governments,

1. Welcomes the outcome of the thirteenth humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2010;

2. Requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue her efforts to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance, and calls upon relevant United Nations organizations and other relevant intergovernmental organizations, as well as other humanitarian and development actors, to continue to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to enhance the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian assistance;

3. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and, as appropriate, other relevant humanitarian actors to continue efforts to improve the humanitarian response to natural and man-made disasters and complex emergencies by further strengthening humanitarian response capacities at all levels, by continuing to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian assistance at the field level, including in support of national authorities of the affected State, as appropriate, and by further enhancing transparency, performance and accountability;

4. Recognizes the benefits of engagement and coordination with relevant humanitarian actors to the effectiveness of humanitarian response, and encourages the United Nations to continue to pursue efforts to strengthen partnerships at the global level with the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, relevant humanitarian non-governmental organizations and other participants in the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the support provided to United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators and to United Nations country teams, including by providing necessary training, identifying resources and improving the identification of and the selection process for United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators, and enhancing their performance accountability;

6. Reaffirms the importance of implementing the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, and looks forward to the midterm review of the Hyogo Framework for Action, the third session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Geneva from 8 to 13 May 2011, and the 2011 Global Assessment Report on Disaster Risk Reduction;

7. Calls upon Member States and the international community to increase resources for disaster risk reduction measures, including in the areas of prevention, mitigation and preparedness for effective response and contingency planning, in order to, inter alia, further strengthen national and local capacities to prepare for and respond to humanitarian emergencies, and encourages closer cooperation between national stakeholders and humanitarian and development actors in this regard;

8. Urges Member States, the United Nations and other relevant organizations to take further steps to provide a co-ordinated emergency response to the food and nutrition needs of affected populations, while aiming to ensure that such steps are supportive of national strategies and programmes aimed at improving food security;

9. Expresses concern at the challenges related to, inter alia, safe access to and use of fuel, firewood, alternative energy, water and sanitation, shelter and food and health-care services in humanitarian emergencies, and takes note with appreciation of initiatives at the national and international levels that promote effective cooperation in this regard;

10. Encourages the international community, including relevant United Nations organizations and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, to support efforts of Member States aimed at strengthening their capacity to prepare for and respond to disasters and to support efforts, as appropriate, to strengthen systems for identifying and monitoring disaster risk, including vulnerability and natural hazards;

11. Welcomes the initiatives at the regional and national levels related to the implementation of the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance, adopted at the Thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 November 2007, and encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations, to take further steps to strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account the Guidelines, as appropriate;

12. Encourages States to create an enabling environment for the capacity building of local authorities and of national and local non-governmental and community-based organizations in order to ensure better preparedness in providing timely, effective and predictable humanitarian assistance, and encourages the United Nations and humanitarian organizations to provide support to such efforts, including, as appropriate, through the transfer of technology and expertise to developing countries and through support to programmes aimed at enhancing the coordination capacities of affected States;

13. Calls upon United Nations humanitarian entities, other relevant humanitarian organizations, development partners, the private sector, donor countries and the affected State to enhance cooperation and coordination, with a view to planning and delivering humanitarian assistance in ways that are supportive of early recovery as well as of sustainable rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the affected countries and relevant humanitarian and development actors, to carry out an assessment of steps taken by the United Nations and relevant partners to support efforts to strengthen local, national and regional humanitarian response capacity and to include his findings as well as recommendations for enhancing United Nations support in this regard in his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session;

15. Encourages efforts to provide education in humanitarian emergencies, including in order to contribute to a smooth transition from relief to development;

16. Calls upon relevant United Nations organizations to support the improvement of the consolidated appeals process, inter alia, by engaging in the preparation of needs analyses and common humanitarian action plans, including through a better analysis of gender-related allocations, in order to further the development of the process as an instrument for United Nations strategic planning and prioritization, and by involving other relevant humanitarian organizations in the process, while reiterating that consolidated appeals should be prepared in consultation with affected States;

17. Requests Member States, relevant humanitarian organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian actors to ensure that all aspects of humanitarian response, including disaster preparedness and needs assessment, take into account the specific needs of the affected population, recognizing that giving appropriate consideration to, inter alia, gender, age and disability is part of a comprehensive and effective humanitarian response, and in this regard encourages efforts to ensure gender mainstreaming in the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

18. Calls upon United Nations humanitarian organizations, in consultation with Member States, as appropriate, to strengthen the evidence base for humanitarian assistance by further developing common mechanisms to improve the quality, transparency and reliability of, and make further progress towards, common humanitarian needs assessments, including through improved collection, analysis and reporting of sex-, age- and disability-disaggregated data, to assess their performance in assistance and to ensure the most effective use of humanitarian resources by these organizations;

19. Calls upon donors to provide adequate, timely, predictable and flexible resources based on and in proportion to assessed needs, including for underfunded emergencies, and to continue to support diverse humanitarian funding channels, and encourages efforts to adhere to the Principles and Good Practice of Humanitarian Donorship;

20. Welcomes the important achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund in ensuring a more timely and predictable response to humanitarian emergencies, stresses the importance of continuing to improve the functioning of the Fund in order to ensure that resources are used in the most efficient, effective, accountable and transparent manner possible, and looks forward to reviewing the five-year evaluation of the Fund in 2011;

21. Calls upon all Member States and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider increasing their voluntary contributions to the Central Emergency Response Fund, and emphasizes that contributions should be additional to current commitments to humanitarian programming and should not be to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

22. Reiterates that the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs should benefit from adequate and more predictable funding, and calls upon all Member States to consider increasing voluntary contributions;

23. Reaffirms the obligation of all States and parties to an armed conflict to protect civilians in armed conflicts in accordance with international humanitarian law, and invites States to promote a culture of protection, taking into account the particular needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

24. Calls upon States to adopt preventive measures and effective responses to acts of violence committed against civilian populations in armed conflicts and to ensure that those responsible are promptly brought to justice, in accordance with national law and their obligations under international law;

25. Urges all Member States to address gender-based violence in humanitarian emergencies and to ensure that their laws and institutions are adequate to prevent, promptly investigate and prosecute acts of gender-based violence, and calls upon States, the United Nations and all relevant humanitarian organizations to improve coordination, harmonize response and strengthen capacity, with a view to reducing such violence, and in support services to victims of such violence;

26. Recognizes the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, encourages Member States and humanitarian agencies to continue to work together, in collaboration with host communities, in endeavours to provide a more predictable response to the needs of internally displaced persons, and in this regard calls for continued and enhanced international support, upon request, for capacity-building efforts of States;

27. Calls upon all States and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflict and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel, as well as delivery of supplies and equipment, in order to allow such personnel to efficiently perform their task of assisting affected civilian populations, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

28. Welcomes the progress made towards further enhancing the United Nations security management system, and supports the approach taken by the Secretary-General to focus the security management system on enabling the United Nations system to deliver on its mandates, programmes and activities by effectively managing the risks to which personnel are exposed, including in the provision of humanitarian assistance;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to report on action taken to further the efforts of the United Nations to strengthen its ability to recruit and deploy staff quickly and flexibly, procure emergency relief materials and services rapidly, cost-effectively and locally, where applicable, and quickly disburse funds in order to support Governments and United Nations country teams in the coordination of international humanitarian assistance;

30. Reaffirms the importance of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, and welcomes the upcoming twentieth anniversary, at its sixty-sixth session, of its resolution 46/182;

31. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2011, on progress made in strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations and to submit a report to the Assembly on the detailed use of the Central Emergency Response Fund.

UN and other humanitarian personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 64/77 [YUN 2009, p. 1459], the Secretary-General, in September [A/65/344 & Corr.1], provided updates on the safety and security of UN and other humanitarian personnel over the preceding year and on the efforts by the UN Department of Safety and Security to implement that resolution. He expressed concern over the number of UN and associated personnel affected by security incidents, especially the continuing trend of politically and criminally motivated targeting of humanitarian relief workers. He reiterated his call to Member States to support the Saving Lives Together framework, and requested that Member States ratify or accede to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 60/42 [YUN 2005, p. 1420].

The Assembly, in resolution 65/132 of 15 December, called on Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel (see p. 1474).

To address the increased risk to UN staff resulting from malicious acts, natural disasters and other emergencies, the Secretary-General, in February [A/64/662], proposed the establishment of a dedicated emergency preparedness and support unit in the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources Management. The unit would address the coordination of medical, psychological, welfare and administrative issues faced by surviving staff and affected families; and assist duty stations, country offices and security management teams to develop, implement, maintain and test emergency medical and mass casualty management plans and to develop, implement, coordinate and facilitate a comprehensive support system consisting of risk-based preparedness, emergency response and post-emergency response. Resource requirements for the proposed unit amounted to an additional $3,145,100 gross for the 2010–2011 biennium.

In March [A/64/7/Add.22], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended against the establishment of the unit, citing concern at adding another layer of bureaucracy. ACABQ supported a limited strengthening of certain functions within the Office of Human Resources Management, and recommended accordingly the appropriation of $1,571,800 for the 2010–2011 biennium.

By section II of its resolution 64/260 of 29 March, the Assembly endorsed ACABQ conclusions and approved an additional $2,745,000 for the 2010–2011 biennium, representing a charge against the contingency fund (see p. 1437).

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Response Fund

In 2010, the Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF), a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 584], continued to allow for the rapid provision of assistance to populations affected by sudden-onset disasters and underfunded emergencies. The Fund was upgraded by General Assembly resolution 60/124 [YUN 2005, p. 991] as a $500 million standby fund, with $450 million for grants and $50 million for loans to ensure that all involved in emergencies received support as quickly as possible. The CERF Advisory Group, established to provide the Secretary-General with policy guidance and advice on the use and impact of the Fund, met in July and November. In 2010, donors raised $428.7 million for the Fund, and over $415 million was distributed to 469 projects in 45 countries and territories.

Report of Secretary-General. In his August report on CERF [A/65/290], covering the period from 1 July 2009 to 30 June 2010, the Secretary-General indicated that $448.3 million was allocated from the Fund to implement life-saving activities in 52 countries and territories, comprising $294.6 million through the rapid response window and $153.7 million through the underfunded window. Fifteen humanitarian agencies received funds to address emergency needs, with many projects being carried out in partnership with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). A breakdown of the rapid response grants showed that projects in response to conflict-related emergencies received the highest allocations at $294 million, followed by natural disaster-related allocations of $121.6 million, and floods and storms, $23.5 million. Africa received the highest percentage of funding with 57 per cent, followed by Asia and the Caucasus with 25 per cent, Latin America and the Caribbean with 15 per cent, and the Middle East with 3 per cent. The largest allocation for any natural disaster in the Fund's history, $38.5 million, was allocated to the Haiti earthquake response. The Fund's loan mechanism, a cash-flow instrument available when funds expected from donors were not received, made a $2.6 million loan to OCHA in October 2009 to bridge a funding gap for field emergency coordination activities in Chad, Colombia, Somalia, West Africa and Zimbabwe. Following the transfer of outstanding pledges, the loan was fully reimbursed in January 2010.

The majority of the recommendations issued in the two-year independent evaluation of CERF [YUN 2008, p. 998] were implemented, with the most significant improvements to the Fund's operational framework reflected in an April Secretary-General bulletin

[ST/SGB/2010/5] on refining the operational guidance on the use, management and administration of the Fund. The IASC Working Group established the Inter-Agency Standing Committee Humanitarian Financing Working Group in late 2009, consolidating the CERF Inter-Agency Group, the CERF Partnership Task Force and the IASC Good Humanitarian Donorship Contact Group into one entity. The Secretary-General concluded that the Fund continued to prove its value as a versatile collective emergency response tool whose ability to adapt and improve was demonstrated by the changes implemented since the two-year evaluation.

Advisory Group meetings. At its July meeting [A/65/584], the CERF Advisory Group welcomed the issuance on 23 April of the revised Secretary-General's bulletin on the Fund (see above), which included an increase in the implementation period for rapid-response projects from three to six months, and took note of the approval by the Controller of an umbrella letter of understanding between the Fund, UN agencies and the International Organization for Migration. The Group welcomed the findings of the single country pilot using the CERF draft performance and accountability framework undertaken in Kenya and encouraged the Fund secretariat to undertake three more country reviews in 2010. The Group also endorsed the approach for a five-year evaluation, which would provide actionable recommendations through a Secretary-General's report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth (2011) session).

In November [A/65/693], the Group discussed the lack of utility of the Fund's $50 million loan facility, the balance of which stood at $75 million, having accrued some $25 million in interest, and requested the Fund's secretariat to review the use of the loan facility for its next meeting. The Group endorsed the final version of the performance and accountability framework, and looked forward to reviewing the results of reviews in Chad, Mauritania and Sri Lanka. It noted that, since its last discussion of the management response matrix of the two-year evaluation of the Fund in November 2009, 26 of the 33 operational recommendations had been implemented, and one rejected. The Group endorsed the closure of the matrix and requested the secretariat to continue to update it on progress made on outstanding recommendations. The Group also requested the secretariat to continue to promote a uniform understanding of the life-saving criteria by all recipients of the Fund and provide an update at the next meeting; analyse the Fund's use in protracted crises; provide feedback to the Group on actions to take in response to a Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) evaluation; and prepare an analysis on the timeliness of the Fund's disbursements to UN agencies and then to NGOs.

Consolidated appeals

The consolidated appeals process (CAP), an inclusive and coordinated programme cycle for analysing context, assessing needs and planning prioritized humanitarian response, was the humanitarian sector's main strategic planning and programming tool. In 2010, the United Nations and its humanitarian partners issued consolidated and flash appeals seeking $11.3 billion in assistance to Afghanistan, the Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Guatemala, Haiti, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Pakistan, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, West Africa, Yemen and Zimbabwe.

The latest available data indicated that 64 per cent ($7.2 billion) of requirements had been met.

United Nations Trust Fund for Human Security

The United Nations Trust Fund for Human Security, established in March 1999, continued to support projects involving transition to peace and sustainable development in fragile and conflict-affected communities; refugees, internally displaced persons and migrants; climate-related threats; urban violence; poverty reduction and social inclusion; and economic, environmental and social components of health-related insecurities. In response to General Assembly resolution 60/1 [YUN 2005, p. 48], the Secretary-General, in March [A/64/701], provided updates on developments related to the advancement of human security since the General Assembly 2005 World Summit [YUN 2005, p. 48], including the activities of the Trust Fund.

The Trust Fund played a critical role in channeling financial resources to field-based projects on the application of the human security concept in the UN system. At December 2009, it had allocated approximately $323 million to 187 projects in over 60 countries. The highest percentage of funding went to Africa (32.3 per cent), followed by Eastern Europe and Central Asia (29 per cent), Asia and the Pacific (23.3 per cent), Latin America and the Caribbean (7.7 per cent), the Middle East and Arab States (2.9 per cent) and global projects (4.8 per cent). Examples of Trust Fund projects included a project in the Ituri region of the DRC addressing post-conflict recovery; a project in the highlands of Shan State in Myanmar focusing on improving livelihoods and strengthening food security of former poppy farmers and poor and vulnerable families; and multi-agency projects in areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine affected by the Chernobyl nuclear accident aimed at improving living standards and safety for affected populations.

The Assembly, in resolution 64/291 of 16 July, requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the notion of human security, and to submit a report at its sixty-sixth (2011) session (see p. 806).

Humanitarian Activities

Africa

Central African Republic

The UN Consolidated Appeal for the Central African Republic in 2010 sought $149.9 million, of which 48 per cent ($72.5 million) was received.

While progress was made over the previous year, the humanitarian situation in the country remained fragile. In 2010, rebel groups both within and outside the peace process—in particular the Convention des patriotes pour la justice et la paix—carried out attacks which resulted in new displacements, primarily in the north-eastern areas of the country. Increased and expanded attacks by the Lord's Resistance Army severely constrained humanitarian access in the east, where humanitarian operations were scaled down due to security concerns. Farmers missed out on the agricultural season in June and July due to displacement and security concerns, which led to significant food security issues in the north-east. An initial appeal had sought $113.6 million for 135 projects. In July, humanitarian partners issued revised requirements, adapted to better respond to the deteriorating humanitarian situation in the country.

Chad

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Chad in 2010 sought $544.1 million, of which 60 per cent ($326.3 million) was received.

In 2010, Chad saw significant changes after the signing of a peace agreement with the Sudan in January, leading to the deployment of the Chado-Sudanese mixed security force along the border and the opening of the border for trade. Security incidents significantly decreased, although armed banditry and organized criminality remained a threat to the stability of eastern Chad. While incidents affecting the humanitarian community significantly decreased as well, kidnappings of humanitarian workers and foreign nationals remained a concern. In addition to the continued protection and assistance needs in eastern Chad related to refugees, internally displaced persons (IDPs), returnees and vulnerable host populations, the country experienced a critical food and nutrition crisis caused by the 2009 drought in the Sahelian belt. The number of vulnerable people increased to more than 2.5 million, with some 320,000 refugees and 180,000 IDPs and returnees lacking access to basic social services and experiencing scarcity of natural resources, including water and land access. Over the previous two years, about 43,000 IDPs had returned to their villages of origin, and the Government estimated that another 30,000 would return home soon. A joint effort by Chadian authorities, UN agencies and the humanitarian community was launched through the Early Recovery Cluster, resulting in a common strategy for durable solutions for IDPs.

Congo

The UN Consolidated Appeal for the Republic of the Congo, which sought $59.2 million in 2010, received 61 per cent ($36.3 million) of the requirement.

Following armed clashes in Equateur Province of the neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) in October 2009, an influx of refugees fleeing that country compounded an existing humanitarian crisis in the Congo. Despite the limited means, some 35,000 refugees received non-food items; infrastructure and housing were constructed; 16 new health centres were built; 17,000 refugee students enrolled at primary schools; and more than 70,000 food rations were distributed. Potable water was delivered, and steps were taken to give the refugees a degree of self-sufficiency through the provision of supplies, seeds, agricultural equipment and fishing gear; but the situation remained challenging.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The UN Consolidated Appeal for the DRC, which sought $827.6 million in 2010, received 63 per cent ($521 million) of the requirement.

The country continued to face a widespread humanitarian crisis in 2010, as armed conflict and violence persisted in the east and north-east regions, with the radicalization and fragmentation of certain groups and a new crisis that erupted in Equateur province in 2009, following a dispute over natural resources. Hundreds of thousands of civilians were forced to flee due to abuses by the warring parties, including rape, murder, looting, destruction of property and forced recruitment of children. As at September, more than 1.7 million people were displaced. The country as a whole continued to be affected by food insecurity, high malnutrition rates, lack of access to adequate health care, the persistence of diseases, and problems of access to safe drinking water, as well as natural disasters and unresolved refugee problems such as the expulsion of Congolese migrants from Angola. The humanitarian community increased its efforts, and achieved some positive results, such as 2.2 million people gaining access to safe drinking water, 550,000 persons benefiting from emergency shelter, and some 850,000 persons receiving non-food aid.

Kenya

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Kenya's Emergency Humanitarian Response Plan (EHRP), which sought $603.5 million in 2010, received 66 per cent ($399.3 million) of the requirement.

Kenya's 2010 EHRP focused on preparedness for El Niño floods, recovery from climate change-induced drought, food insecurity and assistance to refugees. Food security improved following the 2009 short rains and 2010 long rains, leading to gradual improvement in pasture and water availability, livestock and crop production. The food-insecure caseload for food aid decreased from 3.8 million to 1.2 million in October; however, the recovery was uneven, and malnutrition in women and children remained a serious public health concern. Climate change increased the frequency of hazards such as drought, floods and livestock diseases, forcing pastoralists out of their main production system, and creating resource-based conflicts and related displacements. Kenya's refugee population continued to increase, reaching 412,193 people by September—an additional 80,000 people—while the sizes of refugee camps remained the same. The country's IDP situation improved with the resettlement of 789 households, leaving around 30,000 IDPs from the country's post-election violence yet to be resettled.

Somalia

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Somalia, which sought $596.1 million in 2010, received 67 per cent ($399.9 million) of the requirement.

Somalia started the year with an estimated 2.65 million people in crisis, but the combination of two good rainy seasons and the easing of the 2009 economic crisis, as well as a new methodology for counting people in crisis, reduced that number in the second half of the year to 2 million people. The nutrition situation improved slightly as well, from a 16.6 per cent global acute malnutrition rate at the beginning of the year to 15.2 per cent in August, although the number remained alarmingly high and above the World Health Organization's emergency threshold. Displacement figures remained relatively constant through the year, with approximately 1.4 million IDPs midway through 2010. Humanitarian access was extremely challenging, especially in southern Somalia, as eight agencies were expelled and 23 humanitarian facilities or assets attacked between January and August. The World Food Programme (WFP) stopped its general food distributions, hospital feeding and other programmes, which left the Nutrition Cluster to partially maintain the delivery of supplementary feeding programmes in the south. At mid-year, the humanitarian strategy for Somalia shifted due to reduced access to the highest-need areas, reduced humanitarian funding, and increased scrutiny and expectation for humanitarian operations. As a consequence, most clusters prioritized life-saving actions and livelihood support.

Sudan

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Sudan, which sought $1.84 billion in 2010, received 66 per cent ($1.22 billion) of the requirement.

In 2010, the humanitarian operation in the Sudan was the largest in the world, with the bulk of humanitarian needs concentrated in Darfur and southern Sudan, where volatile operating environments at times prevented the delivery of critical assistance. The combination of persistent insecurity, weak to non-existent basic services, and, in many areas, a harsh physical environment meant that the country continued to rank among the most serious humanitarian situations in the world. With regard to implementing the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301], benchmarks such as border demarcation, agreements on wealth-sharing arrangements and citizenship issues saw little progress, although positive steps were made toward establishing coherent coordination structures, developing and synchronizing contingency plans across the country, and pre-positioning humanitarian supplies—such as food and non-food items—before the rainy season. Over the year, humanitarian partners provided food aid to 8.9 million people and emergency non-food items to 2.4 million people. Constraints in humanitarian access in Darfur and incidents concerning humanitarian workers remained a concern. Aid dependence became an issue requiring attention by the humanitarian community, especially for IDPs living in camps. Key elements of focus included improved vulnerability targeting and greater investment in areas such as agriculture, environment, education, governance and livelihoods.

Uganda

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Uganda, which sought $184.4 million in 2010, received 54 per cent ($99.1 million) of the requirement.

Confidence in the sustainability of the country's peace resulted in significant homeward movements by IDPs, and by November, some 92 per cent of the formerly 1.8 million displaced people in the Acholi and Teso regions had returned home or identified new villages to settle. Natural disasters continued to pose a serious threat, as eastern and western Uganda experienced landslides and floods at the beginning of March that left an estimated 300 people dead and several thousand displaced. Vulnerability to disease outbreaks remained a concern, as a cholera epidemic hit four Karamoja districts in April, infecting 1,419 people and killing 34. In October, the country experienced its second polio outbreak in two years. In August, the Humanitarian Country Team decided that the situation in Uganda no longer warranted a consolidated appeals process for 2011, and instead recommended that an inter-agency working group, with the participation of the Office of the Prime Minister, should develop a humanitarian profile of the country as a tool to guide humanitarian decision-making in 2011, and to support the Government's Peace, Recovery and Development Plan.

West Africa

The UN Consolidated Appeal for West Africa, which sought $774.9 million in 2010 to assist Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Togo, received 54 per cent ($421.5 million) of requirements.

In 2010, the West African region remained confronted with a wide range of threats to livelihoods and protection, ranging from food insecurity to political volatility, bad governance, transnational crime activities—including human trafficking—chronic poverty, and long-term impacts of climate change, often exceeding the populations' coping capacities and deepening their vulnerability. In terms of food security, over 10 million people were affected by the food crisis in the Sahel, the result of a devastatingly poor 2009–2010 agropastoral season and insufficient rainfall the previous year. The Niger was the hardest-hit, with over 7 million food-insecure people, requiring the launch of an emergency humanitarian action plan. Natural disasters increased in both frequency and impact, as droughts affected over 10 million people in the Sahel and floods affected 1.45 million others. Moreover, cholera outbreaks and dengue fever epidemics hit several countries in the region, affecting thousands of people. Governments and partners in the sub-region struggled to minimize the impact on vulnerable populations caused by a succession of events, including a coup d'état (Niger), pre-election violence (Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Nigeria) and inter-ethnic conflict (northern Ghana, Togo). The region continued to witness protracted refugee situations and IDPs due to past conflicts and continued instability. Durable solutions were being sought for some 149,810 refugees in the region. In response, the humanitarian community pursued the strengthening of its capacity for early warning, emergency response, disaster preparedness and coordination, and reviewed its funding requirements.

Zimbabwe

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Zimbabwe, which sought $478.4 million in 2010, received 47 per cent ($226.2 million) of the requirement.

The humanitarian situation in Zimbabwe remained fragile due to the degradation of infrastructure in the health, water and sanitation, and food security sectors, in addition to the country's underlying economic and political challenges. Food insecurity was still significant in rural and urban areas. By mid-year, rates of chronic and acute malnutrition stood at 35 and 2.4 per cent, respectively. Malaria was the latest disease outbreak to afflict the country. On the positive side, partners in the health, water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) clusters played a key role in curbing disease outbreaks through initiatives such as the Health and WASH Emergency Response Units and a nationwide measles vaccination campaign that reached 95 per cent of targeted children by June. Humanitarian access improved, as did the capacity of civil society organizations and national and local government structures. A prolonged dry spell and uneven distribution of rainfall affected crop production, with only 1.5 of the required 2 million metric tonnes of cereal production recorded. Government programmes, food aid and private imports covered a substantial portion of the cereal deficit, and a newly liberalised market shifted the challenge from access to foods to affordability.

Asia

Afghanistan

The UN Consolidated Appeal for the Afghanistan Humanitarian Action Plan, which sought $774.5 million in 2010, received 65 per cent ($505.3 million) of the requirement.

During the first half of 2010, the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan continued to deteriorate. The average number of security incidents in the first four months was 52 per cent higher than the same period in 2009, resulting from a combination of factors, including increased international military troop presence, security force operations in the south, and significant armed opposition activities in the south-east and east. Between January and June, civilian casualties increased by 31 per cent compared to 2009, and the number of civilians assassinated and executed surged by more than 95 per cent. The spread of the conflict from the south and the east to more stable provinces in the north-west and west shrank humanitarian space and resulted in loss of livelihood, destruction of property and personal assets. As at May, IDPs numbered 328,588; however, 65,673 Afghans were able to voluntarily return to Afghanistan from Pakistan with UNHCR assistance in March. Natural disasters compounded the coping difficulties of an already fragile population, as increased precipitation resulted in floods and avalanches in February and March. From July and August, more than 220,000 individuals were affected by flash floods alone.

An April earthquake measuring 5.3 on the Richter scale caused damage in the north.

Iraq

The Iraq Humanitarian Action Plan, which sought $187.7 million in 2010, received 27.2 per cent ($51.1 million) of the requirement. The Appeal for the Regional Response Plan for Iraqi Refugees sought $367.3 million, of which it received 48.8 per cent ($179.4 million) of the requirement.

In 2010, the country's significant humanitarian needs remained, but many of the humanitarian activities planned for the year did not begin, including in the food, shelter and education sectors. While gradual stabilization continued, Iraq faced uncertainty due to ongoing political negotiations and the Government formation process that followed the general elections in March (see p. 364). Bomb attacks and other forms of violence continued, with a 16 per cent increase in civilian casualties in the first four months of the year, compared to the final four months of 2009. Of particular concern were the continued attacks targeting religious sites, ceremonies and the general public. Local integration was not possible for the vast majority of Iraqi refugees, and resettlement to third countries remained the most durable solution for a large number of them.

The 2010 Humanitarian Action Plan employed a three-track approach: targeting humanitarian and protection assistance to most vulnerable groups; increasing access to create a more effective humanitarian response; and advocating with the Government and other State and non-State actors to meet humanitarian commitments and tackle underlying causes of humanitarian needs.

Kyrgyzstan

The UN Flash Appeal for Kyrgyzstan, which sought $94.2 million, received 73 per cent ($68.6 million) of the requirement.

On 10 June, a rise in tension between the ethnic Uzbek and Kyrgyz communities in the multi-ethnic city of Osh in southern Kyrgyzstan culminated in armed confrontation of several thousand youth in the city centre. Over the course of several days, the violence continued in the city and spread to the surrounding district of Kara Suu and neighbouring Jalal-Abad province. By 16 June, 187 deaths and 1,966 injuries had been recorded. An estimated 375,000 people fled the conflict in Osh and Jalal-Abad, of which some 75,000 sought refuge in Uzbekistan, and an estimated 40,000 IDPs were in acute need of shelter, food, water and protection. A further estimated 260,000 IDPs living with host families required support to facilitate their stay, and several thousand people injured in the violence were in need of health care and psycho-social support. Five months after the initial outbreak of violence, the humanitarian needs of the affected population still required a coordinated response by the international community, and the Humanitarian Country Team requested a six-month extension of its initial Flash Appeal.

Nepal

The Nepal Humanitarian Transition Appeal, which sought $125 million in 2010, received 56.2 per cent ($70.3 million) of the requirement.

The peace process in Nepal continued to face challenges, as over three years after the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 449], the political stalemate among the three main political parties remained unresolved. Criminal activity flourished in a climate of political instability and weak law and order. Political uncertainty, frequent droughts and floods and high food price inflation contributed to increased food insecurity, causing hunger and malnutrition, affecting 3.5 million people. Some 770,000 beneficiaries received food, or cash for assets; 85,000 children aged 6–59 months received micronutrient supplements; and 3.6 million received vitamin A and de-worming medicine. WFP distributed 21,140 metric tonnes of food in food-insecure districts and FAO provided 103,111 farming households with essential seeds and fertilizers for the summer crop season. The Emergency Response Fund supported WASH activities in five diarrhoea- and flood-prone districts, and an additional 190,000 households in 18 disaster-prone districts were identified for WASH campaigns. The humanitarian strategy for Nepal was designed to respond to current and predictable humanitarian needs, and remained valid as at the mid-year review.

Occupied Palestinian Territory

The UN Consolidated Appeal for the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which sought $603.4 million in 2010, received 55 per cent ($329.7 million) of the requirement.

Developments in the overall political and security environment, which remained volatile, had not fundamentally altered the humanitarian situation, and the response was constrained by various obstacles and deteriorating funding levels. After months of proximity talks between the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Government of Israel, efforts to achieve political progress were challenged by the expiration, on 26 September, of the partial freeze on settlement construction and the increased risk of violence by groups opposed to the peace process and attacks on civilians, or clashes between Israeli and the Palestinian Authority security forces. On the positive side, the Palestinian economy showed signs of improvement, with reduced deficits, positive growth and stable inflation as a result of ongoing reforms and significant external assistance, but the severe restrictions placed on the movement of goods and persons between the West Bank and Gaza affected Palestinians' ability to contribute more significantly to their recovery. The year also marked a slight improvement in the quantity and diversity of goods being allowed into Gaza to support humanitarian reconstruction, due in part to sustained advocacy by humanitarian partners. On 20 June, following the flotilla incident (see p. 439), Israel announced a series of measures designed to ease the flow of goods and humanitarian staff into Gaza, but did not change the fundamental parameters of the blockade. At the time of the mid-year review of the appeal, 61 per cent of Gaza's households and 25 per cent of households in the West Bank remained food insecure, with at least 300,000 Palestinian refugees in Gaza living in conditions of abject poverty.

Pakistan

The Pakistan Humanitarian Response Plan sought $661.2 million in 2010 and received 50.2 per cent ($332.2 million) of the requirement.

In 2010, the situation in north-west Pakistan continued to be characterized by small to medium-scale population movements, including new displacements, as well as steady return. Fresh hostilities in different Federal Administered Tribal Areas ("agencies") resulted in new population outflows, and since December 2009, more than 300,000 IDPs from Orakzai and Kurram agencies had fled to the neighbouring districts of Kohat and Hangu. In two districts of the south, a further 230,000 people remained displaced, and hundreds of thousands of IDPs remained in the Peshawar Valley, where the humanitarian community was carrying out an extensive vulnerability assessment.

The Pakistan Humanitarian Response Plan was extended an additional five months through December. Its strategic objectives included delivery of life-saving assistance to the people displaced or affected by the insecurity in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, in the north-west, and in the Federally Administered Tribal Area; improved protection of civilians affected by the crisis in those areas; support to returnees and vulnerable families unable to leave their areas of origin and early recovery action; and stronger coordination, monitoring and reporting structures within the humanitarian community and with Government partners.

Sri Lanka

The Sri Lanka Common Humanitarian Action Plan sought $289.6 million in 2010 and received 53.1 per cent ($153.8 million) of the requirement.

In 2010, significant progress was made on releases and returns from IDP camps, with over 246,000 people released from camps by the end of May, while during the first five months of the year, an estimated 1,000 refugees and 10,000 IDPs from previous caseloads returned to the Northern Province. Large-scale efforts were under way to re-establish essential services and livelihoods throughout the former conflict-affected areas, but 60,000 IDPs still remained in camps, while 68,000 were accommodated with host families. A food security assessment conducted in March highlighted that six months after the first significant returns, communities faced continued food insecurity, particularly in northern districts where the previous two harvests had been minimal or lost. A three-month extension of food assistance was provided in those areas, with future emphasis placed on supporting self-sufficiency and income generation for the October planting season. Adequate provision of water supply and sanitation facilities was another significant need, with thousands of wells in disrepair in the north and toilets damaged or destroyed. Widespread damage to health facilities and schools, combined with a shortage of health workers and teachers, severely hampered the provision of basic health and educational services.

Syrian Arab Republic

The year 2010 marked the third consecutive year of drought in the north-eastern region of the Syrian Arab Republic. According to Government and UN estimates, 1.3 million inhabitants were affected and 800,000 severely affected, over 95 per cent of whom lived in three governorates in the north and west. The effects of the drought were exacerbated by the impact of high food and fuel prices, as well as the global financial crisis. Direct consequences of the drought included decreased food intake, reduced capacity to restore livelihoods, massive internal displacement towards cities and alarming school dropout rates in some areas. Following the Government's request, the United Nations country team prepared in August 2009 the UN/Syria Drought Response Plan [YUN 2009, p. 899]. The plan was linked to the agricultural calendar, aiming to address emergency humanitarian needs and reduce the drought's impact on the most vulnerable people until the crops were harvested in May and June of 2010. In February, the UN and its partners sought a revised amount of $43.7 million in donor funding for continued humanitarian activities for the period from December 2009 through June/July 2010.

Yemen

The UN Consolidated Appeal for the Yemen Humanitarian Response Plan, which sought $186.1 million in 2010, received 65 per cent ($121.3 million) of the requirement.

During the year, the conflict in the northern governorate of Sa'ada subsided, although it did not completely stabilize. The year saw a ceasefire agreement in February and a signed timeline for enforcing its truce points in August, although implementation was slow, with continued clashes. At the time of the mid-year review of the Plan, the number of IDPs had risen to an estimated 342,000, far above the 150,000 figure that many agencies had previously used for planning purposes. In addition to IDPs, hundreds of thousands of people across northern Yemen were also suffering from the effects of the conflict through lack of access to basic services and relief. Some 2.7 million people or 12 per cent of the country's population, were identified as severely food insecure. WFP targeted 1.7 million of them for assistance, along with an additional 242,000 children and pregnant and lactating women suffering from moderate to acute malnutrition. Due to the overall levels of insecurity, humanitarian organizations had only limited sustained access to many of those people, particularly in northern governorates, although many IDPs received assistance through local NGOs. Despite operational constraints and limited funds, 342,019 IDPs received humanitarian assistance in all conflict-affected governorates at the time of the mid-year review.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Haiti

The UN Flash Appeal for Haiti, which sought $1.5 billion in 2010, received 73 per cent ($1.1 billion) of the requirement.

During 2010, humanitarian actors focused their efforts on responding to the massive emergency situation caused by the earthquake which struck the country on 12 January, killing some 222,000 people and injuring some 300,000 others, while eroding the capacity of the local government. The earthquake displaced around 2.1 million people, of whom 1.3 million went to spontaneous settlements in the affected areas, and 600,000 to host families outside the affected areas. It damaged an estimated 250,000 homes and 30,000 commercial buildings, and completely destroyed 105,000 homes, as well as numerous Government and other public buildings. The total damage and loss were estimated at $7.8 billion. In November, more than 1.3 million people remained displaced, spread across 1,354 settlement sites. At the time of the mid-year review of the Appeal, an estimated 1.5 million children and youth under 18 were directly and indirectly affected by the earthquake, and 3,978 schools damaged or destroyed. Approximately 52 per cent of households and 69 per cent of families living in large camps suffered from food insecurity, and the migration of over 600,000 people from earthquake-affected areas to host families and communities increased the strain on rural households. Malnutrition remained at pre-existing levels, and chronic malnutrition remained a significant challenge. The humanitarian response, however, was effective at providing emergency aid to the displaced and vulnerable in the earthquake-affected areas. Water was made available daily to 1.1 million people; 4.3 million people received food rations; 1.5 million people received emergency shelter; 2.1 million people received non-food items; 11,000 latrines were installed and maintained; 116,000 people benefited from short-term employment; and 11,000 children received treatment for severe acute malnutrition.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

The General Assembly in 2002, by resolution 57/7 [YUN 2002, p. 910], endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation [ibid., p. 909] that the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD), adopted in 2001 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity [YUN 2001, p. 900], should be the framework within which the international community should concentrate its efforts for Africa's development. During 2010, efforts continued to focus on UN and international support for NEPAD and its implementation.

Implementation and support for NEPAD

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to a request of the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [YUN 2005, p. 1004], the Secretary-General in March submitted a report [E/AC.51/2010/3] on UN system support for NEPAD, which detailed work undertaken by various UN system entities since May 2009. The report was organized around clusters corresponding to the Partnership's priorities and strategies: infrastructure development; governance; peace and security; agriculture, food security and rural development; industry, trade and market access; environment, population and urbanization; social and human development; science and technology; and communication, advocacy and outreach. In addition, four selected policy issues in the implementation of NEPAD were examined: strengthening of the cluster system and enhancement of United Nations/African Union (AU) cooperation; support for mobilization of financial resources for NEPAD implementation; cross-cutting issues, such as the global economic and financial crisis and gender; and institutional support. The report also identified challenges and constraints faced by the UN system in supporting the NEPAD programme.

The Secretary-General observed that the UN system had demonstrated greater commitment in support of the priority areas of the AU/NEPAD programme through the nine clusters established under the Regional Coordination Mechanism (RCM) of the UN agencies working in Africa, and that development actors were increasingly present at the country level, providing multifaceted assistance to African countries. He made recommendations for the continued alignment and harmonization of cluster activities and priorities with AU and NEPAD strategic plans; support by UN agencies for national leadership and ownership; a monitoring and evaluation framework on the impact of UN support to NEPAD projects; and the transformation of the secretariat of the Regional Coordination Mechanism into a joint secretariat of the AU Commission/NEPAD and UN system organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 March [meeting 75], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/258 [draft: A/64/L.38, Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 63 (a)].

New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/2 of 16 September 2002 on the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development,

Recalling also its resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development and resolutions 58/233 of 23 December 2003, 59/254 of 23 December 2004, 60/222 of 23 December 2005, 61/229 of 22 December 2006, 62/179 of 19 December 2007 and 63/267 of 31 March 2009 entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support",

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome, including the recognition of the need to meet the special needs of Africa, and recalling also its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006,

Recalling the political declaration on Africa's development needs, adopted at the high-level meeting on Africa's development needs on 22 September 2008,

Bearing in mind that African countries have primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and bearing in mind also the need for their development efforts to be supported by an enabling international economic environment, and in this regard recalling the support given by the International Conference on Financing for Development to the New Partnership,

Emphasizing that a favourable national and international environment for Africa's growth and development is important for progress in the implementation of the New Partnership,

Stressing the need to implement all commitments by the international community regarding the economic and social development of Africa,

1. Welcomes the seventh consolidated report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms its full support for the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

3. Reaffirms its commitment to the full implementation of the political declaration on Africa's development needs, as reaffirmed in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development, adopted as the outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008;

4. Recognizes the progress made in the implementation of the New Partnership as well as regional and international support for the New Partnership, while acknowledging that much needs to be done in its implementation;

5. Reaffirms the resolve to provide assistance for prevention and care, with the aim of ensuring an HIV/AIDS-, malaria- and tuberculosis-free Africa, by addressing the needs of all, in particular the needs of women, children and young people, and by achieving as closely as possible the goal of universal access by 2010 to comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention programmes, treatment, care and support in African countries, to accelerate and intensify efforts to expand access to affordable and quality medicines in Africa, including antiretroviral drugs, inter alia, by encouraging pharmaceutical companies to make drugs available, and to ensure strengthened global partnership and increased bilateral and multilateral assistance, where possible on a grant basis, to combat HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases in Africa through the strengthening of health systems;

6. Expresses concern over the multiple, interrelated and mutually exacerbating current global crises, and expresses concern, in particular, that the global financial and economic crisis, climate change, the food crisis and volatile energy prices pose serious challenges to the fight against poverty and hunger, which could further undermine the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, particularly in Africa;

7. Expresses grave concern that Africa is among the hardest hit by the impact of the world financial and economic crisis, and therefore reaffirms that it will continue to support the special needs of Africa and take action to mitigate the multidimensional impacts of the crisis on the continent;

8. Expresses concern at Africa's disproportionately low share in the volume of international trade, which stands at only 2 per cent, its low share of official development assistance, the increased debt burden of some African countries, rising unemployment rates and the falls in capital inflows, and the significant fall in remittances to the continent as a result of the world financial and economic crisis, which negatively impact the hard-earned socio-economic and political gains that Africa has achieved in recent years;

9. Reaffirms the need to enhance the voice and participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, including African countries, and notes recent steps being taken in this regard, and emphasizes in this context that the current world economic and financial crisis and efforts to address it should not lead to further marginalization of the African continent;

10. Also reaffirms the commitment by all States to establish a monitoring mechanism to follow up on all commitments related to the development of Africa, as contained in the political declaration on Africa's development needs, and in this context requests the President of the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session to initiate informal consultations, led by Member States, with the participation of relevant stakeholders, taking into account the report of the Secretary-General, with a view to reaching an agreement on this issue, building on existing mechanisms;

11. Reaffirms its full support for the implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS, adopted at the twenty-sixth special session of the General Assembly on 27 June 2001, and the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS, adopted by the Assembly on 2 June 2006;

I

Actions by African countries and organizations

12. Welcomes the progress made by the African countries in fulfilling their commitments in the implementation of the New Partnership to deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management, and encourages African countries, with the participation of stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to continue their efforts in this regard by developing and strengthening institutions for governance, creating an environment conducive to involving the private sector, including small and medium-sized enterprises, in the New Partnership implementation process and to attracting foreign direct investment for the development of the region;

13. Notes with appreciation the efforts exerted by the African Union and the regional economic communities in the area of economic integration, as well as ongoing efforts by the African Union in the operationalization of the provision contained in General Assembly resolutions 59/213 of 20 December 2004, 61/296 of 17 September 2007 and 63/310 of 14 September 2009, and stresses the key role of the United Nations system in supporting the African Union, in the social, economic and political fields and in the area of peace and security;

14. Welcomes the commendable progress that has been achieved in implementing the African Peer Review Mechanism, in particular the completion of the peer review process in twelve countries, and welcomes the progress in implementing the national programmes of action resulting from these reviews, and in this regard urges African States that have not yet done so to consider joining the Mechanism process and to strengthen the Mechanism process for its efficient performance;

15. Welcomes and appreciates the continuing and increasing efforts of African countries in mainstreaming a gender perspective and the empowerment of women in the implementation of the New Partnership;

16. Recognizes the need for African countries to continue to coordinate, in accordance with their respective national strategies and priorities, all types of external support in order to integrate effectively such assistance into their development processes;

17. Encourages African countries to accelerate the achievement of the objective of food security in Africa, and welcomes the commitment made by African leaders to raise the share of agriculture and rural development in their budget expenditures, and in this regard reaffirms its support for, inter alia, the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme and the outcome of the post-Abuja meeting of the International Technical Committee of the Food Security Summit, held in Addis Ababa in May 2007;

18. Recognizes the important role that African regional economic communities can play in the implementation of the New Partnership, and in this regard encourages African countries and the international community to give regional economic communities the support necessary to strengthen their capacity;

19. Welcomes the progress made and the decisions taken towards the integration of the New Partnership into the African Union structures and processes;

20. Also welcomes the collaboration between the African Private Sector Forum and the United Nations Global Compact, and encourages the strengthening of this partnership in conjunction with the African Union Commission in support of the development of the African private sector and the promotion of public-private partnership projects and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in line with the relevant executive decisions of the African Union;

21. Encourages African countries to further enhance public awareness of the objectives and goals of the New Partnership and its programmes through, inter alia, effective and comprehensive continent-wide communication and outreach strategies;

22. Also encourages African countries to strengthen and expand local and transit infrastructure and to continue sharing best practices with a view to strengthening regional integration;

II

Response of the international community

23. Welcomes the efforts by development partners to strengthen cooperation with the New Partnership;

24. Recognizes the important role that South-South and triangular cooperation can play in supporting Africa's development efforts, including implementation of the New Partnership;

25. Welcomes the various important initiatives established between African countries and their development partners in recent years, such as the Africa Partnership Forum, the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership, the Forum on China-Africa Cooperation, the European Union-Africa Strategic Partnership, the Group of Eight-Africa Partnership, the Millennium Challenge Account, the Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief of the President of the United States of America, the Africa-Turkey Cooperation Summit, the Africa-South America Summit, the Tokyo International Conference on African Development, the comprehensive health-care initiative sponsored by the Government of Cuba, the Republic of Korea-Africa Forum, the special technical assistance programme for Africa of Pakistan, the Viet Nam-Africa cooperation partnership, the India-Africa Forum, the programme for cooperation in agriculture between Chile and Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania, Ethiopia and Uganda, and the Singapore Cooperation Programme for African countries, and emphasizes in this regard the importance of coordination in such initiatives on Africa and the need for their effective implementation;

26. Urges continued support of measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa including, as appropriate, debt relief, improved market access, support for the private sector and entrepreneurship, fulfilment of commitments on official development assistance and increased flows of foreign direct investment, and transfer of technology;

27. Recognizes that Africa, which contributes the least to climate change, is one of the regions most vulnerable and most exposed to its adverse impact, and in this regard calls upon the international community, in particular developed countries, to support Africa in its adaptation and sustainable development efforts through, inter alia, the transfer and deployment of technology, capacity-building and the provision of adequate and predictable new resources;

28. Reiterates the need for all countries and relevant multilateral institutions to continue efforts to enhance coherence in their trade policies towards African countries, and acknowledges the importance of efforts to fully integrate African countries into the international trading system and to build their capacity to compete through initiatives such as aid for trade and, given the global economic and financial crisis, the provision of assistance to address the adjustment challenges of trade liberalization;

29. Calls for a comprehensive and sustainable solution to the external debt problems of African countries, including cancellation or restructuring, as appropriate, and on a case-by-case basis, for heavily indebted African countries not part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative that have unsustainable debt burdens, and emphasizes the importance of debt sustainability;

30. Recognizes that the negative impact of the world financial and economic crisis on development is still unfolding and entails the possibility of undoing the progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals and that it may threaten debt sustainability in some developing countries, inter alia, through its impact on the real economy and through the increase in borrowing undertaken in order to mitigate the negative impacts of the crisis;

31. Calls for the fulfilment of pledges by the Group of Eight countries to double by 2010 official development assistance to Africa, and in this regard calls upon the international community to honour its commitments;

32. Acknowledges efforts by developed countries to increase resources for development, including commitments by some developed countries to increase official development assistance, and calls for the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015 and to reach the level of at least 0.5 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance by 2010, as well as the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to least developed countries, and urges those developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts in this regard in accordance with their reiterated commitments;

33. Welcomes the efforts of some developed countries, which are on target to meet the commitments made in terms of increased official development assistance;

34. Also welcomes recent efforts and initiatives to enhance the quality of aid and to increase its impact, including the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness and the Accra Agenda for Action, and the resolve to take concrete, effective and timely action in implementing all agreed commitments on aid effectiveness, with clear monitoring and deadlines, including by further aligning assistance with countries' strategies, by building institutional capacities, by reducing transaction costs and eliminating bureaucratic procedures, by making progress on untying aid, by enhancing the absorptive capacity and financial management of recipient countries and by strengthening the focus on development results;

35. Recognizes the need for the international community to align its efforts more specifically towards supporting the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, and in this regard takes note of the Rome Declaration on World Food Security;

36. Also recognizes the need for the international community to make continued efforts to increase the flow of new and additional resources for financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and foreign, to support the development of African countries;

37. Invites all of Africa's development partners, in particular developed countries, to support African countries in promoting and maintaining macroeconomic stability, to help African countries to attract investments and promote policies conducive to attracting domestic and foreign investment, for example by encouraging private financial flows, to promote investment by their private sectors in Africa, to encourage and facilitate the transfer of the technology needed to African countries on favourable terms, including on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, and to assist in strengthening human and institutional capacities for the implementation of the New Partnership, consistent with its priorities and objectives and with a view to furthering Africa's development at all levels;

38. Stresses that conflict prevention, management and resolution and post-conflict consolidation are essential for the achievement of the objectives of the New Partnership, and welcomes in this regard the cooperation and support granted by the United Nations and development partners to the African regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of the New Partnership;

39. Welcomes the continued efforts of the United Nations Peacebuilding Commission in assisting post-conflict countries in Africa and the strengthening of the relationship between the Peacebuilding Commission and the African Union, and appreciates in this regard the visit by the Chair of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Chairs of the country-specific configurations to African Union headquarters on 9 November 2009;

40. Requests the United Nations system to continue to provide assistance to the African Union and the New Partnership secretariat and to African countries in developing projects and programmes within the scope of the priorities of the New Partnership and to place greater emphasis on monitoring, evaluation and dissemination of the effectiveness of its activities in support of the New Partnership;

41. Welcomes the Basic Education in Africa Programme of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which seeks to prioritize education and which supports holistic and comprehensive reform;

42. Invites the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the 2005 World Summit, to urge the United Nations development system to assist African countries in implementing quick-impact initiatives through, inter alia, the Millennium Villages Project, and requests the Secretary-General to include in his report an assessment of those quick-impact initiatives;

43. Requests the Secretary-General to promote greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, on the basis of the agreed clusters, and in this regard calls upon the United Nations system to continue to mainstream the special needs of Africa in all its normative and operational activities;

44. Also requests the Secretary-General to take measures to strengthen the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa in order to enable it to effectively fulfil its mandate, including monitoring and reporting on progress related to meeting the special needs of Africa;

45. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the basis of inputs from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other stakeholders in the New Partnership.

CPC action. CPC, at its fiftieth session (7 June–2 July) [A/65/16], welcomed the Secretary-General's report on NEPAD (see p. 908). The Committee recommended that the Assembly request UN system organizations to coordinate closely with the AU Commission and its NEPAD structures, including the RCM, and stressed the lead role of the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa in promoting regional cooperation for the development of Africa. It also welcomed the political declaration on South-South cooperation adopted by the 2009 High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation [YUN 2009, p. 876], and reiterated the need for the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa to pursue the principles underpinning South-South cooperation in addressing the challenges faced by African countries.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In response to Assembly resolution 64/258 (see p. 908), the Secretary-General submitted, in July, his comprehensive report [A/65/167] assessing the progress achieved to implement and support NEPAD, which highlighted the policy measures taken by African countries and organizations in that regard, the response of the international community and the support provided by the UN system during the previous year. Efforts continued to implement various infrastructure programmes, in particular the short-term action plan and the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa, in close collaboration with the African Development Bank. In the area of transport infrastructure, the NEPAD Planning and Coordinating Agency (NPCA) developed the NEPAD East-West corridor, and a feasibility study was conducted to provide an integrated transport infrastructure solution from Senegal to Nigeria. In the energy sector, NEPAD prepared a regional programme for energy poverty alleviation based on the off-grid electrification concept that was successfully implemented in China and India. Substantial progress was also made in implementing the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme (CAADP), and at the time of the report, eight countries had allocated more than 10 per cent of their budgets to agriculture. Other achievements included coordinating a consortium to strengthen the harmonization of drug registration with partner organizations; the graduation of 11 master's students in community health nursing and psychiatric nursing through the human resource development initiative; setting up 100 NEPAD e-Schools in 16 countries; and piloting a two-year business incubation project for African women entrepreneurs.

The report also discussed the activities of the Regional Coordination Mechanism of UN entities and organizations working in Africa in support of the AU and NEPAD, as well as progress achieved with the Millennium Villages Project and the peer review process. In that regard, 12 countries were peer-reviewed by the African Peer Review Forum by June. The Secretary-General concluded that progress had been achieved in implementing NEPAD projects, in moving forward the African Peer Review mechanism, and in increasing official development assistance to Africa. He recommended that development partners scale up their financial and technical assistance and that the international community ensure that multilateral trade agreements prioritized Africa's needs and incorporated development provisions. African countries were encouraged to provide the AU Commission and NPCA with adequate human and financial resources; enhance the capacity of the regional economic communities as vehicles for implementing NEPAD regional projects; implement the CAADP compacts, prioritizing investment in agriculture; increase spending on agriculture and rural development to 10 per cent of public expenditure; and improve women's access to education, farming land, fertilizers, credit and markets, and increase their participation in decision-making processes. The Secretary-General called on developed countries and multilateral development agencies to assist the NPCA and African countries in the formulation of country-specific strategies for improving investment climates, and on donors to mobilize additional resources for climate change.

JIU report. In February, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report [A/65/62] entitled "Towards a more coherent United Nations system support to Africa". The review evaluated the system-wide cooperation framework, drawing on and sharing lessons learned, as well as identifying best coordination practices and collaboration methods, with regard to UN system support to Africa. JIU made 17 recommendations, 14 addressed to the executive heads of the UN system organizations and 3 for consideration by their governing bodies, aimed at enhancing coordination, cooperation and coherence of UN system support to Africa.

JIU concluded that, since the proliferation of mandates and programmes generated structural overlaps and dispersion of effort and resources, the mandates regarding UN system support to Africa should be reviewed. There was a need for better communication and information-sharing among the various organizations, entities, departments and offices having a stake in support of Africa, and for better system-wide coordination and cooperation. In that context, the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) should include in its agenda support to the AU and its NEPAD programme as a regular standing item. The RCM and its cluster system faced constraints and challenges with respect to commitment and leadership; coordination; accountability; monitoring and evaluation; resource mobilization and capacity-building; communication, outreach and advocacy; and alignment with AU and NEPAD priorities, including regional integration. Given the proactive strategic coordinator role expected from the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), its capacities and those of the RCM should be strengthened.

JIU also recommended the establishment of a high-level steering committee for overseeing the activities of the RCM and its clusters; better aligning the RCM and its clusters with the needs and priorities of the AU and its NEPAD programme; aligning the planning, programming and budget cycles of the programmes of UN system organizations in support of the AU and its NEPAD programme; fully implementing and operationalizing the "Umbrella Agreement" between the regional commissions and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to facilitate and enhance communication, coordination and cooperation between ECA and RCM on one side and UNDP and the Regional Directors Teams (RDTs) in Africa on the other; participation of all UN system organizations in the RCM; enhancing coherence at the subregional level by leveraging the capacities of ECA and its five subregional offices in Africa; establishing a system-wide subregional coordination mechanism; and ensuring that the regional economic communities in Africa were closely involved in the work of the RCM.

African Governments should be more involved in the development, implementation and monitoring of the United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks. The capacities and resources of the two RDTs in Africa should be strengthened to ensure their effective functioning. UN system organizations should better align the planning, programming and budget cycles of their country programmes in Africa to facilitate joint programming, the establishment of joint monitoring and evaluation frameworks, and simplified reporting arrangements at the country level. The Secretary-General should review resource mobilization, funding mechanisms and modalities within the UN system for ensuring the financial sustainability of UN system support to Africa.

In August [A/65/62/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly his comments and those of CEB on the JIU report. He reported that UN system entities generally supported the report's main recommendations. They noted the observation that the growing number of agencies operating in Africa and the multiplicity of coordinating, steering and working committees and groups were posing challenges to the UN system's ability to carry out its work with efficiency and clarity.

Economic Commission for Africa. In February, the Economic Commission for Africa and the AU Commission issued a report [E/ECA/COE/29/16] on UN system-wide support to the AU and its NEPAD programme in the context of the RCM. The report noted that finalizing the integration of NEPAD into the AU Commission's structures and processes would ensure continuity and better coordination in the implementation of RCM activities.

Follow-up to high-level meeting on Africa's development needs

In response to General Assembly resolutions 63/1 [YUN 2008, p. 1009] and 64/258 (see p. 908), the Secretary-General in July submitted a report [A/65/165] on a monitoring mechanism to review commitments towards Africa's development needs. The report showed that while monitoring mechanisms or processes provided extensive coverage of commitments made by African Governments and agencies and their development partners, there were a number of limitations to those mechanisms, including their focus on a limited number of commitments; inadequate coverage of other development partners; limited coverage of non-State agencies, such as NGOs; and inadequate involvement of African Governments and stakeholders in those mechanisms, thus undermining their ownership and legitimacy. The report outlined the nature, scope, priorities and institutional arrangements for an improved monitoring mechanism that would involve periodic reviews, either under the aegis of the Assembly in the context of its agenda item on NEPAD, or as a subsegment of the Development Cooperation Forum (DCF) [YUN 2007, p. 833] dedicated exclusively to issues on Africa.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly consider establishing a review process wherein commitments to Africa's development by both African Governments and their development partners and their implementation would be reviewed every two years at formal review meetings of the Assembly beginning at its sixty-eighth (2013) session, or at the DCF, beginning in 2014; deciding that the objective of each review meeting would be to assess the extent to which commitments to promote Africa's development had been implemented and were generating results; and ensuring participation by major regional and subregional institutions in organizing components of the review meetings.

On 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on "NEPAD: progress in implementation and international support" would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-fifth (2011) session (decision 65/544).

Social dimensions of NEPAD

The Commission for Social Development, at its forty-eighth session (New York, 13 February 2009 and 3–12 and 19 February 2010) [E/2010/26-E/CN.5/2010/9], recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption a resolution on the social dimensions of NEPAD. In resolution 2010/11 (see below), the Council decided that the Commission for Social Development should continue to give prominence to and raise awareness of the social dimensions of NEPAD during its forty-ninth (2011) session. It requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the subject to the aforementioned session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2010/26], adopted resolution 2010/11 without vote [agenda item 14 (b)].

Social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa's Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly entitled "World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world", held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000, the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development of 16 September 2002 and General Assembly resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development,

Taking note of the conclusions of the African Union Extraordinary Summit on Employment and Poverty Alleviation in Africa, held in Ouagadougou on 8 and 9 September 2004,

Recognizing the commitments made with regard to meeting the special needs of Africa at the 2005 World Summit and reaffirmed in the political declaration on Africa's development needs adopted at the high-level meeting held at United Nations Headquarters on 22 September 2008,

Remaining concerned that Africa is the only continent currently not on track to achieve any of the goals set out in the Millennium Declaration by 2015, and in this regard emphasizing that concerted efforts and continued support are required to fulfil the commitments to address the special needs of Africa,

Expressing deep concern that attainment of the social development objectives may be hindered by the financial and economic crisis, as well as by challenges brought about by the food and energy crises and climate change,

Recognizing that capacity-building, knowledge-sharing and best practices are essential for the successful implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development, and recognizing also the need for continued support from the international community, New Partnership for Africa's Development partners and United Nations agencies,

Bearing in mind that African countries have primary responsibility for their own economic and social development, that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized and that the development efforts of such countries need to be supported by an enabling international economic environment, and in this regard recalling the support given by the International Conference on Financing for Development to the New Partnership,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the progress made by African countries in fulfilling their commitments in the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development to deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management, and encourages African countries, with the participation of stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to intensify their efforts in this regard by developing and strengthening institutions for governance and by creating an environment conducive to attracting foreign direct investment for the development of the region;

3. Also welcomes the progress that has been made in implementing the African Peer Review Mechanism, as reflected, in particular, by the number of countries that have signed up to participate in the Mechanism, the completion of the peer review process and the progress in implementing the recommendations of those reviews in some countries and the completion of the self-assessment process, the hosting of country support missions and the launching of the national preparatory process for the peer review in others, and urges African States that have not yet done so to join the Mechanism, as a matter of priority, and to strengthen the peer review process so as to ensure its efficient performance;

4. Welcomes in particular the organization of the first session of the African Union Conference of Ministers in charge of Social Development, held in Windhoek from 27 to 31 October 2008, and recalls in this regard the African Common Position on Social Integration and the Social Policy Framework for Africa, both of which have been endorsed by Africa's Heads of State;

5. Welcomes the efforts made by African countries and regional and subregional organizations, including the African Union, to mainstream a gender perspective and the empowerment of women in the implementation of the New Partnership, including through the implementation of the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa;

6. Emphasizes that the African Union and the regional economic communities have a critical role to play in the implementation of the New Partnership, and in this regard encourages African countries, with the assistance of their development partners, to increase and coordinate effectively their support for enhancing the capacities of those institutions and to promote regional cooperation and social and economic integration in Africa;

7. Also emphasizes that progress in the implementation of the New Partnership depends also on a national and international environment favourable to Africa's growth and development, including measures to promote a policy environment conducive to private sector development and entrepreneurship;

8. Further emphasizes that democracy, respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, and effective participation by civil society, including non-governmental and community-based organizations, and by the private sector are among the indispensable foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development;

9. Emphasizes that the increasing unacceptably high levels of poverty and social exclusion faced by most African countries require a comprehensive approach to the development and implementation of social and economic policies, inter alia, to reduce poverty, to promote economic activity, growth and sustainable development, to ensure employment creation and decent work for all, to promote education, health and social protection and to enhance social inclusion, political stability, democracy and good governance and the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, so as to ensure the achievement of Africa's social and economic objectives;

10. Recognizes that, while social development is primarily the responsibility of Governments, international cooperation and assistance are essential for the full achievement of that goal;

11. Also recognizes the contribution made by Member States to the implementation of the New Partnership in the context of South-South cooperation, and encourages the international community, including the international financial institutions, to support the efforts of African countries, including through trilateral cooperation;

12. Welcomes the various important initiatives undertaken by Africa's development partners in recent years, and in this regard emphasizes the importance of coordination in such initiatives on Africa by ensuring the effective implementation of existing commitments, including through the African Union/New Partnership for Africa's Development African Action Plan 2010–2015: Advancing Regional and Continental Integration in Africa;

13. Recognizes the Regional Coordination Mechanism of United Nations agencies and organizations working in Africa in support of the African Union and its New Partnership for Africa's Development Programme of Action, which aims to ensure coordination and coherence in the delivery of support for greater effectiveness and impact through increased joint programming and joint implementation of activities;

14. Urges continuous support for measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, with special emphasis on the Millennium Development Goals related to poverty and hunger, health, education, empowerment of women and gender equality, including, as appropriate, debt relief, improved market access, support for the private sector and entrepreneurship, enhanced official development assistance, increased foreign direct investment and transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms, empowerment of women in all aspects, including economic and political aspects, the promotion of social protection systems and the conclusion of the current round of negotiations of the World Trade Organization;

15. Recognizes that the implementation of the commitments made by Governments during the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006) has fallen short of expectations, and welcomes the proclamation of the Second Decade (2008–2017) by the General Assembly in its resolution 62/205 of 19 December 2007 in order to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, the internationally agreed development goals related to poverty eradication, including the Millennium Development Goals;

16. Encourages all development partners to implement the principles of aid effectiveness, as recalled in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development adopted on 2 December 2008 by the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus;

17. Recognizes the need for national Governments and the international community to make continued efforts to increase the flow of new and additional resources for financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and foreign, to support the development of African countries;

18. Acknowledges the activities of the Bretton Woods institutions and the African Development Bank in African countries, and invites those institutions to continue their support for the implementation of the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership;

19. Encourages Africa's development partners to continue to integrate the priorities, values and principles of the New Partnership into their development assistance programmes;

20. Encourages African countries and their development partners to place people at the centre of government development action and to secure core investment spending in health, education and social safety nets;

21. Notes the growing collaboration among the entities of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, and requests the Secretary-General to promote greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, on the basis of the agreed clusters;

22. Emphasizes the importance for the communication, advocacy and outreach cluster to continue to muster international support for the New Partnership and to urge the United Nations system to demonstrate more evidence of cross-sectoral synergies in order to promote a comprehensive approach regarding successive phases of planning and implementation of social development programmes in Africa;

23. Invites the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the 2005 World Summit, to urge the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to assist African countries in implementing quick-impact initiatives, based on their national development priorities and strategies, to enable them to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and, in this respect, acknowledges commitments made by development partners;

24. Encourages the international community to support African countries in addressing the challenges of climate change by providing the financial and technological resources and capacity-building needed to support adaptation and mitigation action;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take measures to strengthen the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa, and requests the Office to collaborate with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and to include the social dimensions of the New Partnership in its comprehensive reports to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session;

26. Requests the Commission for Social Development to discuss in its annual programme of work those regional programmes that promote social development so as to enable all regions to share experiences and best practices, with the agreement of the countries concerned, and in this regard requests that the programmes of work of the Commission include the priority areas of the New Partnership, as appropriate;

27. Decides that the Commission for Social Development should continue to give prominence to and raise awareness of the social dimensions of the New Partnership at its forty-ninth session;

28. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa, taking into consideration General Assembly resolution 62/179 of 19 December 2007 entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support", to submit to the Commission for Social Development at its forty-ninth session, under agenda item 3, a report on the social dimensions of the New Partnership.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Council resolution 2010/11 (see p. 913), the Secretary-General in November submitted a report [E/CN.5/2011/4] on the social dimensions of NEPAD, which presented initiatives and activities being undertaken. The report assessed progress in the areas of sustainable growth, eradicating poverty and hunger, education and health, gender and the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, along with infrastructure development, trade and regional integration. The Secretary-General noted that the global financial and economic crisis affected the implementation and attainment of NEPAD priorities in several ways, including reduced fiscal space of countries and poor Government revenues due to the decline in commodity prices; slowed lending and investment in African countries due to the increased cost of finance; a significant decline in foreign direct investment; an expansion of the ranks of the working poor and informal employment due to a lower demand for African commodities and products; and reductions in purchasing power. Overcoming those challenges would require that African Governments double efforts to mobilize domestic resources and reverse the flow of resources to developed countries; that regional and national development institutions were adequately resourced; and that donor countries delivered on their aid commitments.

Liberia

In response to General Assembly resolution 63/136 [YUN 2008, p. 1018], the Secretary-General in September submitted a report [A/65/357] on humanitarian assistance and reconstruction of Liberia, covering the period from September 2008 to August 2010. The report provided a status update and an analysis of the challenges to the delivery of humanitarian relief and rehabilitation assistance by the United Nations and its partners to Liberia. The Secretary-General noted that immediate humanitarian needs were decreasing, and the main challenges facing the country were reconstruction and stability. UNHCR continued to assist 11,000 people; over 64,000 refugees remained in countries of asylum, while more than 169,000 had returned to Liberia.

African countries emerging from conflict

On 19 July [E/2010/SR.40], the Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission addressed the Economic and Social Council on the question of African countries emerging from conflict. In the four countries on its agenda, namely Burundi (see p. 146), the Central African Republic (see p. 154), Guinea-Bissau (see p. 229) and Sierra Leone (see p. 217), the Commission's engagement was based on the principles of national ownership of the peacebuilding process, partnerships in support of national efforts, and mutual accountability for results. The Chair briefed the Council on post-conflict recovery in those countries and said that, since June 2009, seven African post-conflict countries had benefited from the newly introduced Peacebuilding Recovery Facility.

On 19 July, the Council decided to consider the matter at its 2011 substantive session and invited the Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission to continue to inform it of the economic and social challenges of peacebuilding in the African countries on the Commission's agenda (decision 2010/231).

Other economic assistance

Haiti

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2009/4 [YUN 2009, p. 904], the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti reported in July [E/2010/102 & Corr.1] on its findings during its visit in June. The aim of the visit was to see, after the 12 January earthquake (see p. 320), how the economic and social situation had evolved on the ground and how international assistance had permitted a transition from recovery to reconstruction, in line with the aid efficiency principles adopted at the ministerial preparatory conference on Haiti (Montreal, Canada, 25 January) and endorsed at the international donors' conference "Towards a New Future for Haiti" (New York, 31 March) (see below). The Group adjusted its working methods after the earthquake, following the March conference and the World Summit for the Future of Haiti in June (see p. 917).

As at late May, there were some 1.6 million IDPs in the country, at 1,342 sites, most of them in the area of the capital, Port-au-Prince. Preferring to be near water, health-care services and cash-for-work or food-for-work programmes in the camps, some people had chosen not to return to their neighbourhoods. As a result, widespread humanitarian assistance was needed. Efforts had been made to improve the situation in the camps and to provide transitional shelters. Also vital was large-scale rubble removal, for which there was little expertise and capacity. Enhanced recovery measures to that end were needed. While noting that the holding of the first meeting of the Interim Haiti Recovery Commission, co-chaired by Prime Minister Jean-Max Bellerive and former United States President William Jefferson Clinton, demonstrated the common willingness of many stakeholders to move forward in a coordinated and transparent way, the Advisory Group recognized that the high number of NGOs in the country at times led to counterproductive initiatives, and emphasized the importance of working within the framework of the Government's Action Plan for National Recovery and Development of Haiti. The Group also recommended the use of the aid-tracking portal established by the Government and UNDP by all partners, including NGOs. A Haiti Reconstruction Fund was established and 12 projects were submitted to the Fund by the UN country team, with a budget of over $200 million. The Group stressed the need for all countries that had pledged funds to disburse them fully and rapidly, and reiterated its appeal to international stakeholders to work with the Government and to consider increasing their support.

International conferences. At the international donors' conference on the theme "Towards a New Future for Haiti" (New York, 31 March), 55 Governments and multilateral institutions pledged $5.6 billion for Haiti's recovery and development, comprising $4.6 billion for aid programmes and $1 billion for debt relief. Sectors receiving the most support were social and territorial rebuilding. The Secretary-General urged "full and generous support” for the Government’s Action Plan for National Recovery and Development. Of the funds pledged, $5.26 billion was for the financing of specific projects of the Plan, a figure exceeding the estimated $4 billion needed over the following 18 months. The funds would be managed by the Haiti Reconstruction Fund through the Interim Haiti Recovery Commission. In 2010, donors disbursed 36.1 per cent ($1.66 billion) for the combined 2010–2011 time-frame, leaving 63.9 per cent ($2.93 billion) to be disbursed in 2011.

The World Summit for the Future of Haiti (Punta Cana, Dominican Republic, 2 June) followed up on the action taken by the international community at the March donors’ conference. It was organized around the four pillars of the Action Plan—ending the emergency response and moving towards reconstruction; providing urgent humanitarian aid; reconstruction and rebuilding; and social development reconstruction—and discussed the list of related investment projects. Representatives of Governments and international agencies stated their support for private investment, the role of civil society organizations in achieving the objectives of the Action Plan, and the strengthening of institutional capacities of the central administration and local governments. Participants recommended that special effort be made to provide budgetary support to the Government, which faced an $80 million deficit for 2010.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/28 [draft: E/2010/L.27], without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2004/52 of 23 July 2004, 2005/46 of 27 July 2005, 2006/10 of 26 July 2006, 2007/13 of 25 July 2007, 2008/10 of 23 July 2008 and 2009/4 of 23 July 2009 and its decisions 2004/322 of 11 November 2004, 2009/211 of 20 April 2009 and 2009/267 of 15 December 2009,

1. Welcomes the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti and the recommendations contained therein;
2. Also welcomes the special event on Haiti held by the Economic and Social Council on 24 June 2010 and the relevant follow-up at its substantive session;
3. Expresses its deepest sympathy and solidarity to all those affected by the devastating earthquake of 12 January 2010 in Haiti and to their families;
4. Expresses its concern over the exceptionally devastating impact of the earthquake on Haiti, welcomes the pledges for support made at the International Donors’ Conference entitled “Towards a New Future for Haiti”, held in New York on 31 March 2010, and at the World Summit for the Future of Haiti, held in Punta Cana, Dominican Republic, on 2 June 2010, and encourages the international community to continue providing support for the short- and long-term needs for the recovery and reconstruction of Haiti;

5. Affirms the leading role of the Government of Haiti in all aspects of the recovery, reconstruction and development plans for the country;

6. Recognizes that political stability and socio-economic recovery are essential to the long-term development of Haiti, and welcomes the efforts and support provided by the United Nations and the international community in both fields, in line with Haitian national priorities, the recent Government decrees on the presidential and legislative elections scheduled for 28 November 2010 and the Government’s Action Plan for National Recovery and Development of Haiti;

7. Commends the creation of the Interim Haiti Recovery Commission, co-chaired by the Prime Minister of Haiti, Mr. Jean-Max Bellerive, and the former President of the United States of America, Mr. William Jefferson Clinton, aimed at conducting strategic planning and co-ordination and implementing resources from bilateral and multilateral donors, non-governmental organizations and the business sector, with all necessary transparency and accountability, and looks forward to continued support from donors and other national, regional and international organizations, partners and stakeholders in connection with the implementation of the mandate of the Commission;

8. Welcomes the creation of the Haiti Reconstruction Fund, calls for support from donors and other partners, and urges them to fulfil, without delay, their pledges made earlier in the year at the International Donors’ Conference entitled “Towards a New Future for Haiti” in New York and at the World Summit for the Future of Haiti in Punta Cana;

9. Also welcomes the joint establishment by the Government of Haiti and the United Nations Development Programme of an aid tracking portal as a tool to ensure transparency in the provision of support for development in Haiti, and invites all development partners, including non-governmental organizations, to use it;

10. Stresses the need for renewed efforts and commitment at the local, national, regional and international levels to assist the Government of Haiti to rebuild the institutional and infrastructural capacity of the State, at both the central and the decentralized levels, to deliver services and coordinate donor assistance;

11. Recognizes the need to promote effectiveness, solidarity, efficiency, coherence and coordination among the Government of Haiti and donors, the United Nations system, the international financial institutions, including the World Bank and regional and subregional development banks, other regional and subregional organizations and institutions and relevant civil society organizations, including non-governmental organizations active in Haiti and other partners participating in the recovery, reconstruction and development efforts;

12. Also recognizes the support provided by various regional and subregional cooperative initiatives, including those undertaken by the Andean Development Corporation, the Association of Caribbean States, the Bank of the South, the Bolivarian Alliance for the Peoples of Our America, the Caribbean Community, the Central American Integration System, the European Union, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Inter-American Institute for Co-operation on Agriculture, the International Organization of la Francophonie, the Organization of American States, the Pan American Health Organization, PetroCaribe and the Union of South American Nations, based, inter alia, on solidarity, complementarity, cooperation, development, friendly relations and effectiveness, aimed at supporting Haiti's efforts towards reconstruction in accordance with its national development priorities;

13. Decides to extend the mandate of the Advisory Group until the substantive session of 2012 of the Council, with the purpose of closely following and providing advice on Haiti's long-term development strategy to promote post-disaster socio-economic recovery, stability and reconstruction, with particular attention to the need to ensure coherence and sustainability in international support for Haiti, based on the long-term national development priorities, as contained in the Government's Action Plan for National Recovery and Development of Haiti, and stresses the need to avoid overlap and duplication with respect to existing mechanisms;

14. Expresses its satisfaction to the Secretary-General for the support provided to the Advisory Group, requests that he continue to strengthen the support for the activities of the Group adequately, from within existing resources, and invites Member States to enhance their support for the work of the Group, including through voluntary contributions;

15. Recommends that full use continue to be made of the United Nations capacity to mobilize international efforts and aid and that the leadership role of the United Nations in this respect be recognized and promoted on the ground;

16. Requests the Advisory Group, in accomplishing its mandate, to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative and Head of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Special Envoy for Haiti, the United Nations Development Group, the Interim Haiti Recovery Commission, the Haiti Reconstruction Fund, relevant United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies, the Bretton Woods institutions, regional organizations and institutions, including the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the Organization of American States, the Caribbean Community and the Inter-American Development Bank, and other major stakeholders;

17. Invites additional members to participate in the work of the Advisory Group, taking into account the need to include those that can make a positive contribution to its objectives;

18. Requests the Advisory Group to report on its activities in support of the recovery, reconstruction and development of the country, with recommendations, as appropriate, to the Council for its consideration at its organizational and substantive sessions of 2011.

Communication. On 20 December [E/2011/8], the Bahamas informed the Council of its wish to become a member of the Advisory Group.

Recovery and reconstruction

Report of Secretary-General. In his August report [A/65/335] on humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for selected countries and regions, the Secretary-General highlighted that from the outset of the humanitarian response in Haiti, as well as during the recovery and reconstruction phases, the UN country team had integrated and implemented early recovery activities in consultation with the Government. Given the challenges Haiti faced before the disaster, recovery efforts addressed wider needs and aimed at "building back better". The Organization's vision was to help the Government build a more decentralized and deconcentrated Haiti so as to withstand natural disasters and protect lives. The post-disaster needs assessment, led by the Government and supported by the United Nations and the World Bank, determined the extent of the damages, losses and recovery and reconstruction needs, as well as medium- to long-term recovery and reconstruction needs across a range of sectors. The cash-for-work programme, introduced eight days after the earthquake to provide short-term employment and inject money into the local economy had, as at 1 July, provided employment for more than 116,000 workers, 40 per cent of whom were women. Support for the recovery of the private sector was also planned. Efforts to support disaster risk management focused on strengthening the national risk and disaster management system and the Direction de la Protection Civile. Together with other agencies, the United Nations initiated a rapid multi-hazard analysis to support humanitarian activities and long-term recovery efforts. The information produced was integrated into national centres for data management and the Geographic Information System. The United Nations also contributed technical expertise to the debris removal and recycling strategies. In the light of the brain drain that occurred since the earthquake, UNDP proposed a three-year programme for expatriates to return home for periods ranging from two weeks to three months to lend their skills and services. In response to the destruction of the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, the United Nations identified immediate needs and provided basic equipment to the justice, prison and police sectors, and training and capacity-building to the police and judiciary.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/135 [draft: A/65/L.47 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 69 (a)].

Humanitarian assistance, emergency relief, rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction in response to the humanitarian emergency in Haiti, including the devastating effects of the earthquake

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Recalling its resolution 64/250 of 22 January 2010,

Taking note with appreciation of the informal meetings on Haiti convened by the President of the General Assembly since January 2010,

Conscious of the huge loss of human life and the large number of people wounded and people affected by the severe impacts of the disaster on, inter alia, food security and the education, shelter and health sectors, as well as of the continued needs arising from the vulnerability of the affected populations,

Conscious also of the huge material losses sustained in respect of homes, schools, hospitals, Government facilities and basic infrastructures in the capital, Port-au-Prince, and elsewhere in the country, and expressing concern over the medium- and long-term social, economic and development impacts of the disaster on the affected country,

Concerned about the vulnerable situation of internally displaced persons in Haiti, in particular women, children, the elderly and persons with disabilities, and conscious of the need to find a durable and sustainable solution to their situation, by supporting efforts of the Government of Haiti to establish conditions, as well as provide the necessary means, which allow internally displaced persons to return voluntarily, in safety and with dignity, to their homes or places of habitual residence, or to resettle voluntarily in another part of the country,

Welcoming the efforts undertaken by the United Nations to address the issue of sexual and gender-based violence, including in camps of internally displaced persons,

Recognizing the continued need for support from the international community to address the humanitarian emergency in Haiti, especially the cholera epidemic, as well as the importance of contributing to stability and enhancing recovery and reconstruction efforts, including through an early recovery approach, in order to permit the transition from relief and recovery to development in Haiti,

Acknowledging the efforts of the people and Government of Haiti, the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti and the United Nations system, as well as of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and civil society organizations, including faith-based organizations, in providing humanitarian assistance and supporting early recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Welcoming the leadership of the Secretary-General in ensuring a speedy response by the United Nations system to the tragic events, and commending the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat for its coordinating role in supporting the Government of Haiti in ensuring a coherent international response to the humanitarian emergency,

Welcoming also the efforts of the United Nations Special Envoy for Haiti to mobilize international support for emergency relief operations, rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction, as well as of the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Resident/Humanitarian Coordinator for Haiti,

Underlining the importance of continued humanitarian leadership and coordination of all humanitarian actors, including civil society organizations, in support of the Government of Haiti,

Reiterating the need for a continued high level of support for and commitment to the humanitarian relief, early recovery, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development efforts, including in the medium and long term, that reflect the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation in addressing the disaster,

Noting the enormous effort and the solidarity of the international community, reflecting the importance of the fullest coordinated response and taking into account the national development priorities of Haiti, including the Action Plan for National Recovery and Development of Haiti, that will be required to rebuild the affected areas in order to alleviate the grave situation arising from this natural disaster,

Welcoming the pledges for support made at the International Donors' Conference entitled "Towards a New Future for Haiti", held in New York on 31 March 2010, and at the World Summit for the Future of Haiti, held in Punta Cana, Dominican Republic, on 2 June 2010, and encouraging the international community to continue providing support for the short- and long-term needs for the recovery and reconstruction of Haiti,

Welcoming also the establishment of the Interim Haiti Recovery Commission and the Haiti Reconstruction Fund, which play a significant role in the reconstruction efforts in Haiti,

Reiterating the need for the United Nations system to ensure that the humanitarian, early recovery and reconstruction assistance provided is timely, adequate, effective and coherent and coordinated among all humanitarian and development actors, in coordination with and in support of the Government of Haiti, and in accordance with the principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 64/250;

2. Affirms the leading role of the Government of Haiti in all aspects of the humanitarian response and in the rehabilitation, recovery, reconstruction and development plans for the country;

3. Underlines the overall coordinating role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in assisting the Government of Haiti in ensuring a coherent international response to the humanitarian emergency in Haiti;

4. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and relevant humanitarian organizations, including the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, to continue to cooperate with the Government of Haiti for the provision of humanitarian assistance to the affected population, and emphasizes the importance of improved coordination in this regard, including with civil society organizations, which include faith-based organizations;

5. Urges the international community to provide increased and prompt support to the efforts of the Government of Haiti, led by the Ministry of Public Health and Population and supported by humanitarian actors, to respond to the cholera epidemic, and in this context stresses the importance of addressing the continuing challenges posed to the health system and to the water and sanitation sectors, including in the reconstruction process;

6. Stresses the need to enhance efforts towards reconstruction and social, environmental and economic recovery, including as a means to address the humanitarian situation in Haiti;

7. Underlines the urgency of taking actions that lead to a durable and sustainable solution to the situation of internally displaced persons in Haiti, in particular women, children and persons with disabilities, and bearing in mind their particular needs, and in this regard urges humanitarian and development actors to support the Government of Haiti, upon request, in addressing, inter alia, the issues of land rights, rubble removal and the promotion of livelihoods for the affected population;

8. Recognizes the important role of the United Nations system in supporting efforts to address the issue of sexual and gender-based violence in Haiti, including with regard to internally displaced persons, and encourages the United Nations system and invites humanitarian and development actors to promote gender mainstreaming in all assistance and recovery processes for Haiti;

9. Reiterates its appeal to all Member States and all relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as the international financial institutions and development agencies, to provide speedy, sustainable and adequate support for the relief, early recovery, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development efforts of Haiti;

10. Calls for support for the Haiti Reconstruction Fund from donors and other partners, and urges them to fulfil, without delay, their pledges made earlier in 2010 at the International Donors' Conference entitled "Towards a New Future for Haiti", held in New York, and at the World Summit for the Future of Haiti, held in Punta Cana;

11. Commends the creation of the Interim Haiti Recovery Commission, co-chaired by the Prime Minister of Haiti, Mr. Jean-Max Bellerive, and the former President of the United States of America, Mr. William Jefferson Clinton, aimed at conducting strategic planning and coordination and implementing resources from bilateral and multilateral donors, civil society organizations and the private sector, with all necessary transparency and accountability, and looks forward to continued support from donors and other national, regional and international organizations, partners and stakeholders in connection with the implementation of the mandate of the Commission;

12. Requests the Secretary-General and all relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as the international financial institutions and development agencies, to assist Haiti, whenever possible, through continued effective humanitarian, technical and financial assistance that contributes to overcoming the humanitarian emergency and to the rehabilitation and recovery of the economy and the affected population, as well as to the reconstruction, in conformity with the priorities identified at the national level, including through projects that promote capacity-building and facilitate the transition from relief to development;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in this regard, to consult with Member States, including through the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, relevant United Nations organs and bodies, including the Peacebuilding Commission and the Economic and Social Council, regarding ways to achieve enhanced coordination of reconstruction and development efforts in Haiti;

14. Requests the relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant international organizations to increase their support and assistance in strengthening the capacity of Haiti for cholera response and disaster preparedness, as well as in reducing its vulnerability to natural disasters and in integrating disaster risk reduction and management in its development strategies and programmes, in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States regularly informed on the humanitarian assistance efforts in Haiti and to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the progress made in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the affected country, under the sub-item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations".

Third States affected by sanctions

In response to General Assembly resolution 64/115 [YUN 2009, p. 1322], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/217] that highlighted developments concerning General Assembly and Economic and Social Council activities in the area of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions; arrangements in the Secretariat related to assistance to those States; and operational changes as a result of the shift in focus towards targeted sanctions in the Security Council and its sanctions committees.

The Assembly took action with regard to the Secretary-General's report in resolution 65/31 of 6 December (see p. 1350).

Disaster response

In 2010, an increased number of disasters associated with natural hazards—such as earthquakes, floods, cyclones and droughts—were recorded, with some 385 disasters that took the lives of over 297,000 people, affected 217 million others, and caused an estimated $124 billion in economic damages. The number of people affected increased significantly from 2009, owing to several large-scale disasters. The year was the deadliest in at least two decades and was further testimony to the growing intensity of extreme events. Moreover, natural disasters had continued to occur in countries that were already suffering from conflict, compounding the humanitarian situation for the concerned populations. Donor contributions for natural disasters totalled over $6.4 billion—100 per cent of funds requested.

The first half of the year was marked by several massive earthquakes. In Haiti, 3 million people were affected by a 7.0 magnitude earthquake in January, that killed over 220,000 people, injured 300,000 and displaced 1.5 million. In February, an 8.8 magnitude earthquake hit Chile, affecting over 2 million people and causing 486 deaths. In April, a 7.1 magnitude earthquake in China caused 2,200 deaths and injured 12,135 people. An October earthquake in the Mentawai islands in Indonesia was followed by a tsunami that killed 460 people and displaced 15,353 more. Erratic rain patterns affected millions of people in several regions of the world. In March, tropical cyclone Hubert affected some 370,000 people in Southern Africa, particularly in Madagascar; and the 2010 monsoon season caused the worst floods in Pakistan's history, affecting more than 20.5 million people, destroying more than 1.8 million homes and devastating over 2.4 million hectares of crops. In October, some 2 million people were affected by Typhoon Megi, which struck the Philippines, and Cyclone Giri, which struck Myanmar, affecting 260,000 people and leaving 100,000 homeless. Heavy rains and floods in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea contributed to the country's deteriorating food security situation. The Niger, already beset by a prolonged drought and associated acute food shortages, suffered further from flash floods in July, and Benin experienced the worst flooding in 50 years from torrential rains. The rise in global surface temperatures became evident as well, as the Russian Federation experienced a devastating summer heat wave that affected millions and triggered massive forest and peat fires.

On 9 July, in resolution 64/290 (see p. 745), the General Assembly urged Member States to provide quality education in emergency situations and to ensure that disaster risk and safety considerations were factored into all phases of planning, design, construction and reconstruction of educational facilities.

International cooperation

In January, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's 2009 report on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development [YUN 2009, p. 907].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 January [meeting 69], the General Assembly, adopted resolution 64/251 [draft: A/64/L.43 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 70 (a)].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, the annex to which contains the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, as well as all its resolutions on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development, and recalling the resolutions of the humanitarian segments of the substantive sessions of the Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the importance of the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Reaffirming the Hyogo Declaration, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters and the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005,

Noting with appreciation the holding of the second session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, in Geneva from 16 to 19 June 2009, taking note of the “2009 Global Assessment Report on Disaster Risk Reduction”, and looking forward to the forthcoming Hyogo Framework for Action midterm review,

Emphasizing that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing also the responsibility of all States to undertake disaster preparedness, response and early recovery efforts in order to minimize the impact of natural disasters, while recognizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of affected countries which may have limited capacities in this regard,

Expressing its deep concern at the increasing challenges to Member States and to the United Nations humanitarian response capacity to deal with the consequences of natural disasters, given the effects of global challenges, including the impact of climate change, the global financial and economic crisis, and the humanitarian implications of the global food crisis,

Also expressing its deep concern that rural and urban poor communities in the developing world are the hardest hit by the effects of increased disaster risk,

Acknowledging the impacts of rapid urbanization in the context of natural disasters and that urban disaster preparedness and responses require appropriate disaster risk reduction strategies, including in urban planning, early recovery strategies implemented from the initial stage of relief operations, as well as rehabilitation and development strategies,

Noting that local communities are the first responders in most disasters, underlining the critical role played by in-country capacities in disaster risk reduction, including preparedness, response and recovery, and acknowledging the need to support efforts of Member States to develop and enhance national and local capacities which are fundamental to improving the overall delivery of humanitarian assistance,

Recognizing the high numbers of persons affected by natural disasters, including in this respect internally displaced persons, and the need to address the humanitarian needs arising from internal displacement throughout the world owing to sudden-onset natural disasters,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all their phases, in particular in preparedness, response and the early recovery phase, and of strengthening the response capacity of countries affected by disaster,

Recognizing the progress made by the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER) in its mission, encouraging Member States to provide all support necessary, on a voluntary basis, to UN-SPIDER, including financial support, to enable it to carry out its workplan for 2010–2011, and reiterating the importance of enhancing international coordination and cooperation at the global level in disaster management and emergency response through greater access to and use of space-based services for all countries and by facilitating capacity-building and institutional strengthening for disaster management, in particular in developing countries,

Noting with appreciation the important role played by Member States, including developing countries, that have granted necessary and continued generous assistance to countries and peoples stricken by natural disasters,

Recognizing the significant role played by national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies, as part of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, in disaster preparedness and risk reduction, disaster response, rehabilitation and development,

Emphasizing the importance of addressing vulnerability and integrating risk reduction into all phases of natural disaster management, post-natural disaster recovery and development planning,

Recognizing that efforts to achieve economic growth, sustainable development and internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, can be adversely affected by natural disasters, and noting the positive contribution that those efforts can make in strengthening the resilience of populations to such disasters,

Emphasizing, in this context, the important role of development organizations in supporting national efforts to mitigate the consequences of natural disasters,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively the long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disasters;

3. Calls upon States to fully implement the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, in particular those commitments related to assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and for disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable physical, social and economic recovery, for risk-reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes;

4. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian and development actors to accelerate the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action, emphasizes the promotion and strengthening of disaster preparedness activities at all levels, in particular in hazard-prone areas, and encourages them to increase funding and cooperation for disaster risk reduction activities, including disaster preparedness;

5. Calls upon all States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively, necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters and integrate disaster risk reduction strategies into development planning, and in this regard requests the international community to continue to assist developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition, as appropriate;

6. Acknowledges that global climate change, among other factors, contributes to the increase in intensity and frequency of natural disasters, which amplify natural disaster risk, and in this regard encourages Member States, as well as relevant regional and international organizations, in accordance with their specific mandates, to support adaptation to the adverse effects of climate change and to strengthen disaster risk reduction and early warning systems in order to minimize the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters, including through the provision of technology and support for capacity-building in developing countries;

7. Welcomes the initiatives at the regional and national levels related to the implementation of the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance adopted at the Thirtieth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 November 2007, and encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to take further steps to strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account the Guidelines, as appropriate;

8. Also welcomes the effective cooperation among the affected States, relevant bodies of the United Nations system, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions and, as appropriate, other relevant organizations, such as the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, and civil society, in the coordination and delivery of emergency relief, and stresses the need to continue such cooperation and delivery throughout relief operations and medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in a manner that reduces vulnerability to future natural hazards;

9. Reiterates the commitment to support, as a matter of priority, the efforts of countries, in particular developing countries, to strengthen their capacities at all levels in order to prepare for and respond rapidly to natural disasters and mitigate their impact;

10. Urges Member States to develop, update and strengthen disaster preparedness and risk reduction measures at all levels, in accordance with priority five of the Hyogo Framework for Action, taking into account their own circumstances and capacities and in coordination with relevant actors, as appropriate, and encourages the international community and relevant United Nations entities to continue to support national efforts in this regard;

11. Encourages Member States to consider elaborating and presenting to the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction secretariat their national platforms for disaster reduction in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action, and also encourages States to cooperate with each other to reach this objective;

12. Stresses that to increase further the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance, particular international cooperation efforts should be undertaken to enhance and broaden further the utilization of national and local capacities and, where appropriate, of regional and subregional capacities for disaster preparedness and response, which may be made available in closer proximity to the site of a disaster, and more efficiently and at lower cost;

13. Also stresses, in this context, the importance of strengthening international cooperation, particularly through the effective use of multilateral mechanisms, in the timely provision of humanitarian assistance through all phases of a disaster, from relief and recovery to development, including the provision of adequate resources;

14. Encourages all Member States to facilitate, to the extent possible, the transit of emergency humanitarian assistance and development assistance, provided in the context of international efforts, including in the phase from relief to development, in full accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 46/182 and the annex therein, and in full respect of the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence, and their obligations under international law, including international humanitarian law;

15. Recognizes the goals and purposes for which the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities was established following the adoption of resolution 46/182, takes note with concern of the findings of the independent review of the Register carried out in 2009, and requests the Secretary-General to provide recommendations on possible measures to address those findings, including on the structure and format of the Register;

16. Reaffirms the role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as the focal point within the overall United Nations system for advocacy for and coordination of humanitarian assistance among United Nations humanitarian organizations and other humanitarian partners;

17. Welcomes, so as to increase further the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance, the incorporation of experts from developing countries that are prone to natural disasters into the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination system, and the work of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group in assisting such countries in strengthening urban search and rescue capacities and establishing mechanisms for improving their coordination of national and international response in the field, and recalls in this regard its resolution 57/150 of 16 December 2002 entitled "Strengthening the effectiveness and coordination of international urban search and rescue assistance";

18. Urges Member States, the United Nations system and other humanitarian actors to consider the specific and differentiated consequences of natural disasters both in rural and urban areas, when designing and implementing disaster risk reduction, preparedness, humanitarian assistance and early recovery strategies, giving special emphasis to addressing the needs of those living in rural and urban poor areas prone to natural disasters;

19. Recognizes that information and telecommunication technology can play an important role in disaster response, encourages Member States to develop emergency response telecommunication capacities, and encourages the international community to assist the efforts of developing countries in this area, where needed, including in the recovery phase;

20. Encourages States that have not acceded to or ratified the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, to consider doing so;

21. Encourages the further use of space-based and ground-based remote-sensing technologies, including as provided by UN-SPIDER, as well as the sharing of geographical data, for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, where appropriate, and invites Member States to continue to provide their support to the consolidation of the United Nations capability in the area of satellite-derived geographical information for early warning, preparedness, response and early recovery;

22. Encourages Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and international financial institutions to enhance the global capacity for sustainable post-disaster recovery in areas such as coordination with traditional and non-traditional partners, identification and dissemination of lessons learned, development of common tools and mechanisms for recovery needs assessment, strategy development and programming, and incorporation of risk reduction into all recovery processes, and welcomes the ongoing efforts to this end;

23. Encourages Member States and the United Nations system to support national initiatives that address the possible differentiated impacts of natural disasters on the affected population, including through the collection and analysis of data disaggregated, inter alia, by sex, age and disability, using, inter alia, the existing information provided by States;

24. Stresses the importance of the full and equal participation of women in decision-making and of gender mainstreaming in developing and implementing disaster risk reduction, preparedness, response and recovery strategies, and in this regard notes the recommendations of the International Conference on Gender and Disaster Risk Reduction, held in Beijing from 20 to 22 April 2009;

25. Encourages Member States and relevant regional and international organizations to identify and improve the dissemination of best practices for improving disaster preparedness, response and early recovery and to scale up successful local initiatives, as appropriate;

26. Requests the United Nations system to improve its coordination of disaster recovery efforts, from relief to development, inter alia, by strengthening institutional, coordination and strategic planning efforts in disaster recovery, in support of national authorities;

27. Calls upon relevant United Nations humanitarian and development organizations to continue efforts to ensure continuity and predictability in their response and to further improve coordination in recovery processes in support of the efforts of national authorities;

28. Calls upon the United Nations system and other humanitarian actors to improve the dissemination of tools and services to support enhanced disaster risk reduction;

29. Calls upon relevant United Nations humanitarian and development organizations, in consultation with Member States, to strengthen tools and mechanisms to ensure that early recovery needs and support are integrated into the planning and implementation of disaster preparedness, humanitarian response and development cooperation activities, as appropriate;

30. Acknowledges that early recovery should receive further funding, and encourages the provision of timely, flexible and predictable funding for early recovery, including through established humanitarian instruments;

31. Encourages the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian and development actors to support humanitarian coordinators and resident coordinators, in order to strengthen their capacity, inter alia, to support the host Government in implementing preparedness measures and to coordinate preparedness activities of country teams in support of national efforts, and also encourages the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian actors to further strengthen the ability to quickly and flexibly deploy humanitarian professionals to support Governments and country teams in the immediate aftermath of a disaster;

32. Emphasizes the need to mobilize adequate, flexible and sustainable resources for recovery, preparedness and disaster risk reduction activities in order to ensure predictable and timely access to resources for humanitarian assistance in emergencies resulting from disasters associated with natural hazards;

33. Welcomes the achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund and its contribution to the promotion and enhancement of early humanitarian response, calls upon all Member States and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider increasing voluntary contributions to the Fund, including, when possible, through multi-year and early commitments, and emphasizes that contributions should be additional to current commitments to humanitarian programming and not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

34. Invites Member States, the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider voluntary contributions to other humanitarian funding mechanisms;

35. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve the international response to natural disasters and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session, and to include in his report recommendations on how to improve actions for identifying and addressing the gaps from relief to development, within the United Nations system and at the national level, including in the area of durable and sustainable solutions, particularly in rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 64/251 (see p. 921), the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/65/356] on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, provided an overview of disasters associated with natural hazards and highlighted emerging trends, their humanitarian implications and key challenges during the period from 1 June 2009 to 31 May 2010. The report noted an increasing trend in the number of recorded disasters, owing to more frequent and intense weather-related hazards and greater numbers of people living in exposed coastal and urban areas. Climate change was increasingly acknowledged as a major driver of disaster risk by increasing the frequency and/or severity of weather- and climate-related hazards and by simultaneously increasing the vulnerability of communities to natural hazards. Rapid urbanization exacerbated the vulnerability of city dwellers, particularly the urban poor, to the impact of disasters, as more than half of the world's population was living in urban areas. Key challenges in addressing disaster risk included strengthening the transition from relief to development; increasing the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance through improved use of information and analysis; strengthening the use of vulnerability and climate information in humanitarian action; preparedness in information management; strengthening evidence-based decision-making in humanitarian operations; and the effective use of information in disaster response.

The Secretary-General encouraged Member States to emphasize the importance of early and multi-year commitments to CERF and other humanitarian financing mechanisms; to support implementation of the Global Framework for Climate Services; and to consider the Inter-Agency Standing Committee operational guidelines on human rights and natural disasters in the implementation of contingency planning, disaster preparedness and response, as well as early recovery and durable solutions. Member States, the UN system and other humanitarian actors should accelerate the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters [YUN 2005, p. 1015] to integrate early recovery into their work across all sectors and thematic areas and to improve the dissemination and application of tools and services for early recovery activities. The Secretary-General further recommended that the Central Register of Disaster Management Capacities be discontinued, in the light of the findings of the independent and external review requested by the Assembly in resolution 62/92 [YUN 2007, p. 945].

INSARAG Hyogo Declaration. The International Search and Rescue Advisory Group (INSARAG), a network of countries and organizations established in 1991, convened its first global meeting (Kobe, Japan, 14–16 September 2010). The meeting, hosted by the Government of Japan and co-organized with OCHA, produced the ISARAG Hyogo Declaration on the recognition and strengthening of international urban search and rescue operational standards.

UN-SPIDER programme. The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (see p. 612) submitted a report [A/AC.105/981] on the 2010 activities of the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER). Major accomplishments included the provision of technical advisory support to 17 Member States; the formalization of cooperation agreements for the establishment of five additional regional support offices; support for responding to 29 disasters and for the organization of international and regional workshops and expert meetings; and the improvement of the UN-SPIDER knowledge portal. On 10 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 65/97 (see p. 614), noted the progress made in the implementation of the 2010–2011 UN-SPIDER work plan.

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on strengthening the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-fifth (2011) session (decision 65/544).

Disaster reduction

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

In response to General Assembly resolution 63/216 [YUN 2008, p. 1027], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/65/388] reviewing progress in the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR), adopted by the programme forum of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990–1999) in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 859] and endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 54/219 [ibid., p. 861]. It also presented preliminary findings of the midterm review of the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015, the 10-year plan for reducing disaster risks, adopted at the 2005 World Conference on Disaster Reduction [YUN 2005, p. 1015]. The report revealed that risk reduction was still not hardwired into the “business process” of the development sectors, planning ministries and financial institutions; if the Framework’s goals were to be reached by 2015, strengthened political resolve would be needed. Additionally, the coincidence between the review of the Framework and that of the Millennium Development Goals (see p. 813) provided the opportunity for strengthening the linkages between the two agendas.

Preliminary results of the midterm review pointed to a broadly held view that the Hyogo Framework for Action was useful in guiding global efforts towards disaster risk reduction, especially in raising awareness and supporting the establishment of policies at all levels, as well as legislation. The need for stronger national governance mechanisms was evident, however, and UN system implementation of the Framework was uneven. There was a greater focus on implementation of the five priorities for action than on the three broader strategic goals. Major challenges in implementing the Framework included reaching vulnerable communities, framing risk reduction as an issue of accountability, and investing in disaster risk reduction.

The Secretary-General urged Member States to accelerate implementation of the Framework by strengthening their national disaster risk reduction capacities and integrating disaster risk reduction into development agendas; join the global initiative “Making cities resilient 2010–2011: My city is getting ready” (see p. 928); consider adopting investment benchmarks as suggested at the 2009 Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction [YUN 2009, p. 909]; and with ISDR stakeholders, augment their financial contributions to the UN Trust Fund for Disaster Reduction to ensure adequate and flexible support for the Framework’s implementation.

Ministerial conferences. At the second Ministerial Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction in Africa (Nairobi, 10 April), ministers adopted the extended Africa Programme of Action for the Implementation of the Africa Regional Strategy for Disaster Risk Reduction. At the fourth Asian Ministerial Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction (Incheon, Republic of Korea, 25–28 October), the Incheon Declaration of 2010 and the Incheon Regional Road Map were adopted, identifying the integration of disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation as priority focus areas in the region until 2015.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/65/436/Add.3], adopted resolution 65/157 without vote [agenda item 20 (c)].

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 57/547 of 20 December 2002 and its resolutions 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/22 B of 20 December 1994, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/219 of 22 December 1999, 56/195 of 21 December 2001, 57/256 of 20 December 2002, 58/214 and 58/215 of 23 December 2003, 59/231 and 59/233 of 22 December 2004, 60/195 and 60/196 of 22 December 2005, 61/198 and 61/200 of 20 December 2006, 62/192 of 19 December 2007, 63/216 and 63/217 of 19 December 2008 and 64/200 of 21 December 2009, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2001/35 of 26 July 2001, and taking into consideration its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Reaffirming the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”),

Reaffirming also the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Reaffirming the role of the Hyogo Framework for Action in providing policy guidance on the implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits,

Recalling the “2009 Global Assessment Report on Disaster Risk Reduction”, launched in Manama in May 2009,

Recognizing that 2010 marks the tenth anniversary of the creation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction as well as the midpoint of the Hyogo Framework for Action,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and their increasing impact in recent years, which have resulted in massive loss of life and long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences for vulnerable societies throughout the world and which hamper the achievement of their sustainable development, in particular in developing countries,

Expressing its deep concern also at the increasing challenges facing the disaster response and preparedness capacity of Member States and the United Nations system as a result of the combined impacts of current global challenges, including the global financial and economic crisis, climate change and the food crisis,

Recognizing the clear relationship between sustainable development, poverty eradication, climate change, disaster risk reduction, disaster response and disaster recovery and the need to continue to deploy efforts in all these areas,

Recognizing also the urgent need to further develop and make use of the existing scientific and technical knowledge to build resilience to natural disasters, and emphasizing the need for developing countries to have access to appropriate, advanced, environmentally sound, cost-effective and easy-to-use technologies so as to seek more comprehensive solutions to disaster risk reduction and to effectively and efficiently strengthen their capabilities to cope with disaster risks,

Recognizing further the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, socio-economic activities that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural disasters and to build and further strengthen local authorities and community capabilities to reduce vulnerability to disasters,

Recognizing the need to continue to develop an understanding of, and to address, the underlying risk factors, as identified in the Hyogo Framework for Action, including socio-economic factors, that exacerbate the vulnerability of societies to natural hazards, to build and further strengthen the capacity at all levels to cope with disaster risks and to enhance resilience against hazards associated with disasters, while also recognizing the negative impact of disasters on economic growth and sustainable development, in particular in developing countries and disaster-prone countries,

Recognizing also the need to integrate a gender perspective into the design and implementation of all phases of disaster risk management, with a view to reducing vulnerability,

Taking into account the various ways and forms in which all countries, in particular the more vulnerable countries, are affected by severe natural hazards such as earthquakes, tsunamis, landslides and volcanic eruptions and extreme weather events such as heat waves, severe droughts, floods, storms and the El Niño/La Niña events, which have global reach,

Taking into account also that geological and hydrometeorological hazards, vulnerabilities and resilience to their associated natural disasters and the reduction of such disasters must be addressed in a coherent and effective manner,

Bearing in mind the importance of addressing disaster risks related to changing social, economic and environmental conditions and land use, and the impact of hazards associated with geological events, weather, water, climate variability and climate change, in sector development planning and programmes as well as in post-disaster situations,

Noting that disaster risk is an increasing problem in urban areas where risk, population and economic assets are concentrated,

Noting also that reaching the most vulnerable and the poorest communities remains a major challenge in the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action and that, while much progress has been made at the policy level globally, regionally and nationally, the benefits of this are yet to be felt locally,

Stressing that the impacts of natural disasters are severely hampering efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and emphasizing the importance of reducing vulnerabilities to natural disasters,

Noting with appreciation the important role of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action, according to the mandate, in strengthening the Strategy system, enhancing the system-wide high-level leadership and coordinating disaster risk reduction,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolutions 63/217 and 64/200;

2. Welcomes the progress made in the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, and stresses the need for a more effective integration of disaster risk reduction into sustainable development policies, planning and programming, for the development and strengthening of institutions, mechanisms and capacities at the regional, national and local levels to build resilience to hazards, and for systematic incorporation of risk reduction approaches into the implementation of emergency preparedness, response and recovery programmes and long-term development plans, as a means to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Encourages Member States, the United Nations system, international financial institutions, regional bodies and other international organizations, including the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, as well as civil society, including non-governmental organizations and volunteers, the private sector and the scientific community, to increase efforts to support, implement and follow up the Hyogo Framework for Action, and stresses the importance in this regard of the continued cooperation and coordination of stakeholders at all levels with respect to addressing effectively the impact of natural disasters;

4. Calls upon the United Nations system, and invites international financial institutions and regional and international organizations, to integrate the goals of, and take into full account, the Hyogo Framework for Action in their strategies and programmes, making use of existing coordination mechanisms, and to assist developing countries with those mechanisms to design and implement, as appropriate, disaster risk reduction measures with a sense of urgency;

5. Recognizes that each State has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and for taking effective measures to reduce disaster risk, including for the protection of people on its territory, infrastructure and other national assets from the impact of disasters, including the implementation of and follow-up to the Hyogo Framework for Action, and stresses the importance of international cooperation and partnerships to support those national efforts;

6. Also recognizes the importance of coordinating adaptation to climate change with relevant disaster risk reduction measures, invites Governments and relevant international organizations to integrate these considerations in a comprehensive manner into, inter alia, development plans and poverty eradication programmes and, in the least developed countries, into the preparation and implementation of national adaptation programmes of action, and invites the international community to support the ongoing efforts of developing countries in this regard;

7. Welcomes the national, subregional and regional initiatives undertaken by Member States, in particular developing countries, to achieve disaster risk reduction, and reiterates the need to further develop regional initiatives and risk reduction capacities of regional mechanisms where they exist, to strengthen them and to encourage the use and sharing of all existing tools, and requests the regional commissions, within their mandates, to support the efforts of Member States in this regard, in close coordination with implementing entities of the United Nations system;

8. Encourages the Global Facility for Disaster Reduction and Recovery, a partnership of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction system managed by the World Bank, to continue to support the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action;

9. Welcomes the upcoming third session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Geneva from 8 to 13 May 2011, which serves as an important forum for Member States and other stakeholders to assess progress made in the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action, to enhance awareness of disaster risk reduction, to share experiences and to learn from good practices;

10. Recognizes the importance of integrating a gender perspective and empowering and engaging women in the design and implementation of all phases of disaster risk management, as well as in risk reduction strategies and programmes, and encourages the secretariat of the Strategy to continue to increase the promotion of gender mainstreaming and empowerment of women;

11. Encourages the international community to support the active participation of developing countries in the Strategy system, the Hyogo Framework for Action midterm review process and the third session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction;

12. Encourages the United Nations system to make every effort to accelerate the full integration and mainstreaming of risk reduction into all its programmes and activities to ensure that it contributes to the achievement of the Hyogo Framework for Action as well as to the Millennium Development Goals;

13. Expresses its appreciation to those countries that have provided financial support for the activities of the Strategy by making voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Disaster Reduction;

14. Encourages Governments, multilateral organizations, international and regional organizations, international and regional financial institutions, the private sector and civil society to systematically invest in disaster risk reduction with a view to implementing the objectives of the Strategy;

15. Acknowledges the importance of the work of the United Nations in disaster risk reduction, the growing demands on the secretariat of the Strategy and the need for increased, timely, stable and predictable resources for the implementation of the Strategy, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to consider how best to support the implementation of the natural disaster reduction strategy, taking into account the important role played by the secretariat of the Strategy, with a view to ensuring adequate resources for the operation of the secretariat of the Strategy;

16. Emphasizes the importance of early warning systems as part of effective disaster risk reduction at the local, national and regional levels, in order to reduce economic and social damages, including the loss of human life, and in this regard encourages Member States to integrate such systems into their national disaster risk reduction strategies and plans and encourages donors and the international community to enhance international cooperation in support of such initiatives, as appropriate, through technical assistance, technology transfer on mutually agreed terms, capacity-building and training programmes;

17. Stresses the need to foster better understanding and knowledge of the causes of disasters, as well as to build and strengthen coping capacities through, inter alia, the transfer and exchange of experiences and technical knowledge, educational and training programmes for disaster risk reduction, access to relevant data and information, the strengthening of institutional arrangements and the promotion of community participation and ownership through community-based disaster risk management approaches;

18. Emphasizes the need for the international community to maintain its focus beyond emergency relief and to support medium- and long-term rehabilitation, reconstruction and risk reduction, and stresses the importance of implementing and adapting long-term programmes related to the eradication of poverty, sustainable development and disaster risk reduction in the most vulnerable regions, particularly in developing countries prone to natural disasters;

19. Urges the international community to continue to address ways and means, including through development cooperation and technical assistance, to reduce the adverse effects of natural disasters, including those caused by extreme weather events, in particular in vulnerable developing countries, including the least developed countries and countries in Africa, through the implementation of the Strategy, including the Hyogo Framework for Action, and encourages the institutional arrangement for the Strategy to continue its work in this regard;

20. Stresses the importance of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action and the priorities for action that States, regional and international organizations, international financial institutions and other concerned actors, in their approach to disaster risk reduction, should take into consideration and implement, as appropriate, according to their own circumstances and capacities, bearing in mind the vital importance of promoting a culture of prevention in the area of natural disasters, including through the mobilization of adequate resources for disaster risk reduction, and addressing disaster risk reduction, including disaster preparedness at the community level, and the adverse effects of natural disasters on efforts to implement national development plans and poverty reduction strategies with a view to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

21. Acknowledges that disaster risk reduction and increasing resilience to all types of natural hazard, including geological and hydrometeorological hazards, in developing countries, in line with the Hyogo Framework for Action, can promote the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and that reducing vulnerabilities to these hazards is therefore a high priority for developing countries;

22. Expresses its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters and the increasing challenges posed by the consequences of such disasters, as well as the impact of climate change, which impede progress towards the sustainable development of all countries, in particular developing countries, especially small island developing States, the least developed countries and landlocked developing countries, as well as other particularly vulnerable countries;

23. Stresses the need to strengthen the mainstreaming of disaster risk reduction into national development strategies and as a practice in the policies and programmes of the humanitarian and environmental sectors, planning ministries, financial institutions and other relevant bodies;

24. Also stresses that, in order to reduce vulnerability to natural hazards, risk assessments should be integrated into disaster risk reduction programmes at the national and local levels;

25. Encourages the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to continue to address the adverse effects of climate change, especially in developing countries that are particularly vulnerable, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention, and also encourages the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to continue to assess the adverse effects of climate change on the socio-economic and natural disaster reduction systems of developing countries;

26. Notes with appreciation the launching of the Strategy campaign for 2010–2011, “Making Cities Resilient: My city is getting ready”, which aims to increase the resilience of cities and urban areas by raising the awareness of citizens and local governments of risk reduction options and by mobilizing political commitment and support among local governments to include risk reduction aspects in urban development planning and critical infrastructure investments;

27. Welcomes the informal thematic debate of the General Assembly on disaster risk reduction to be held in New York on 9 February 2011;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session, under the sub-item entitled “International Strategy for Disaster Reduction” of the item entitled “Sustainable development”, a report on the implementation of the present resolution including his recommendations on the midterm review of the Hyogo Framework for Action.

Natural disasters and vulnerability

In response to General Assembly resolution 63/217 [YUN 2008, p. 1029], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/65/388] on ISDR implementation providing information on measures taken to reduce vulnerability to severe climate-related hazards. As part of its ongoing advocacy with the Parties to the Framework Convention on Climate Change, the ISDR secretariat enabled the participation of disaster risk reduction experts from 10 developing countries to assist their national delegations in climate change negotiations. In May 2010, the global launch of the “Making cities resilient: My city is getting ready” campaign took place in Bonn, Germany, in collaboration with the Local Governments for Sustainability and World Mayors Council on Climate Change, in the framework of the Mayors Adaptation Forum at the Resilient Cities 2010 Congress. Meanwhile, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) was establishing regional climate centres worldwide that would create regional climate products, including long-range forecasts; that would strengthen the capacity of WMO members in a given region to deliver better climate services to national users.

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolution 63/215 [YUN 2008, p. 1031], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/65/388] on ISDR implementation providing information on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon. The report indicated that the International Research Centre on El Niño in Guayaquil, Ecuador [YUN 1998, p. 873] had contributed in the area of climate research, supporting applied studies with data collection for the periodic El Niño/La Niña Updates, coordinated by WMO. The Centre developed a number of tools, including a new climate database for the Western coast of South America (El Niño/Southern Oscillation-sensitive countries) and a regional climate information system for risk management in the agriculture sector.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.3], adopted resolution 65/158 without vote [agenda item 20 (d)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/220 of 22 December 1999, 55/197 of 20 December 2000, 56/194 of 21 December 2001, 57/255 of 20 December 2002, 59/232 of 22 December 2004, 61/199 of 20 December 2006 and 63/215 of 19 December 2008 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999, 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2000/33 of 28 July 2000,

Noting that the El Niño phenomenon has a recurring character and can lead to extensive natural hazards with the potential to seriously affect humankind,

Reaffirming the importance of developing strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels that aim to prevent, mitigate and repair the damage caused by natural disasters resulting from the El Niño phenomenon,

Noting that technological developments and international cooperation have enhanced the capabilities for the prediction of the El Niño phenomenon and thereby the potential for the preventive actions that may be taken to reduce its negative impacts,

Taking into account the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), in particular paragraph 37 (i) thereof,

Reaffirming the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, in particular annex III to the report, entitled "International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon", and calls upon the international community to make further efforts to assist countries affected by this phenomenon;

2. Recognizes the efforts made by the Governments of Ecuador and Spain, the World Meteorological Organization and the inter-agency secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction to support the International Research Centre on El Niño at Guayaquil, Ecuador, and encourages them and other members of the international community to continue such contributions for the advancement of the Centre;

3. Welcomes the activities undertaken so far to strengthen the International Research Centre on El Niño, through collaboration with international monitoring centres, including the national oceanographic institutions, and efforts to enhance regional and international recognition of and support for the Centre and to develop tools for decision makers and Government authorities for reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon;

4. Notes the contribution of the International Research Centre on El Niño as a reference centre on climate services and climate-related disaster risk reduction, as well as in the area of climate research, including through the development of a new climatic database for El Niño/Southern Oscillation-sensitive countries, and encourages the sharing of best practices with climate centres located in other El Niño-affected regions;

5. Recognizes the technical and scientific support of the World Meteorological Organization in producing regionally coordinated monthly and seasonal forecasts, in particular its establishment of a consensus mechanism for the development of updates on El Niño/La Niña conditions, which receives contributions from several climate centres, including the International Research Centre on El Niño;

6. Encourages, in this regard, the World Meteorological Organization to continue to strengthen collaboration and the exchange of data and information with relevant institutions;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the relevant United Nations organs, funds and programmes, in particular those taking part in the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and the international community to adopt, as appropriate, the measures necessary to further strengthen the International Research Centre on El Niño, and invites the international community to provide scientific, technical and financial assistance and cooperation for this purpose, as well as to strengthen, as appropriate, other centres devoted to the study of the El Niño phenomenon;

8. Underlines the importance of maintaining the El Niño/Southern Oscillation observation system, continuing research into extreme weather events, improving forecasting skills and developing appropriate policies for reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon and other extreme weather events, and emphasizes the need to further develop and strengthen these institutional capacities in all countries, in particular developing countries;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction a section on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disaster assistance

Djibouti

The UN Drought Appeal for Djibouti, which sought $33.3 million to address the humanitarian needs of 120,000 people, received 58 per cent ($19.4 million) of the requirement.

In 2010, Djibouti experienced a fourth consecutive year of failed rainfall in terms of its quantity and regularity, leading to the depletion of water reserves, massive loss of livestock and the resulting destruction of livelihoods and sources of income, increased malnutrition, especially among children under five, and associated health problems. The global acute malnutrition rate among children under five was 20 per cent. In addition, increasing violence and instability in south-central Somalia resulted in rising numbers of asylum seekers entering Djibouti. Consistently high food prices harmed the health of the population and increased the level of malnutrition, with reports of outbreaks of diseases, including cholera. The UN Drought Appeal for Djibouti sought funding for the following areas over 12 months: distribution of food assistance; improved potable water access; rebuilding of animal husbandry and agricultural activities; access to basic health services; and strengthened capacities of national institutions in the implementation and coordination of emergency humanitarian relief.

El Salvador

Following the damages and losses in El Salvador resulting from Hurricane Ida and the low-pressure system off the Pacific in November 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 912], a flash appeal was launched, with initial efforts focusing on emergency aid to the affected population, especially the 15,000 people living in emergency collective centres following the disaster. The appealing agencies focused on coordinating the response of the humanitarian community through the activation of clusters, and despite a shortage of funding, some projects were successfully implemented and assistance provided to the affected population. Some needs, however, still needed to be addressed. Priorities included: the provision of emergency and temporary shelter to the approximately 1,700 displaced people still living in collective centres and informal settlements; the provision of food assistance, health and WASH services and the restoration of livelihoods of the displaced population, as well as decent living conditions to the affected population before the start of the rainy season in May. The Humanitarian Country Team was seeking housing solutions for the 20,674 people whose houses were damaged or destroyed.

The revised appeal for El Salvador sought $14.4 million to continue to support the Government of El Salvador through May 2010.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to resolution 64/74 [ibid.], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/335] on humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for selected countries, which contained an update on assistance delivered to El Salvador as a result of Hurricane Ida. As at July 2010, the UN system had invested $16 million to provide assistance to more than 120,000 people in the aftermath of the disaster and to support the Government's response in key areas: food assistance, education, temporary shelter, agriculture, health care, water and sanitation, coordination and early recovery.

Guatemala

The UN Flash Appeal for Guatemala, which sought $17 million, received 49 per cent ($8.1 million) of the requirement.

In 2010, Guatemala experienced a protracted food insecurity crisis, which partially affected the approximately 2.7 million people living in the country's so-called dry corridor. Global acute malnutrition among children under five in the dry corridor and two neighbouring provinces was 11 per cent, and 13 per cent among women of childbearing age. The crisis stemmed from a combination of changes in global markets and climate-related events, namely, atypical rainfall patterns brought about by El Niño in 2009, which caused high losses in hillside and subsistence agriculture production. The UN Food Insecurity and Acute Malnutrition Appeal for Guatemala, which sought $34.2 million, received 24 per cent ($8.2 million) of the requirement.

On 29 May, tropical storm Agatha struck Guatemala, resulting in more than 426 millimetres of rain in a short period of time and affecting 21 of the country's 22 departments. Two days earlier, on 27 May, the Pacaya volcano had erupted, which limited and delayed search-and-rescue operations as well as the provision of humanitarian relief. The Government declared a state of national calamity on 29 May, and a flash appeal was launched on 11 June to address the needs of 390,000 people affected by the emergency. Initial efforts focused on the provision of emergency aid (food and non-food items, safe water and health assistance) to the affected population.

Haiti

The UN Flash Appeal for the 12 January Haiti earthquake, which sought $1.5 billion, received 73 per cent ($1.1 billion) of the requirement.

At the time of the Flash Appeal on 15 January, thousands were feared dead, many more injured, and unknown numbers still buried under the rubble. The level of casualties sustained by civil servants and the damage to public buildings and services significantly reduced the capacity of national authorities to lead and coordinate the response. Damage to buildings and infrastructure was widespread and severe. Port-au-Prince's critical infrastructure, such as electricity and water was disabled, and roads to and within the capital were partially blocked. Communication was disrupted, making it difficult to obtain a full picture of the situation which affected the speed and scale of the relief effort (see also p. 907).

MINUSTAH support. The Security Council, in resolution 1908(2010) of 19 January, endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendations to increase the overall force levels of the UN Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) to support the immediate recovery, reconstruction and stability efforts in Haiti (see p. 321).

Communication. On 19 January, Spain forwarded to the Secretary-General the conclusions [A/64/852-E/2010/101] adopted by the Council of the European Union (Foreign Affairs) on the earthquake in Haiti, welcoming the global response to the crisis, supporting the UN's role in the international relief effort, and requesting an EU-wide response to the post-emergency rehabilitation, recovery and reconstruction for the long-term development needs of Haiti.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 January [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/250 [draft: A/64/L.42 & Add.1, as orally revised] without vote [agenda item 70 (a)].

Humanitarian assistance, emergency relief and rehabilitation in response to the devastating effects of the earthquake in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council, including Council resolution 2008/36 of 25 July 2008,

Expressing sincere condolences and deep sympathy to the victims, their families and the Government and people of Haiti who suffered huge losses of life and socio-economic damage from the earthquake that struck Haiti on 12 January 2010,

Conscious of the huge loss of human life and the large number of people wounded and people whose suffering from the health impact of the disaster is severe,

Conscious also of the huge material losses sustained in respect of homes and basic infrastructures in the capital, Port-au-Prince, and elsewhere in the country, and expressing concern over the medium- and long-term social, economic and development impacts of the disaster on the affected country,

Acknowledging the efforts of the Government of Haiti, despite the losses it has suffered, to protect the lives of its nationals and to rapidly assist the affected population, and recognizing with deep appreciation the immediate emergency relief assistance and rescue operations provided on the ground by the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti and the United Nations system, as well as by the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and civil society,

Welcoming the leadership of the Secretary-General in ensuring a speedy response by the United Nations system to the tragic events, and commending the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat for its coordinating role in supporting the Government of Haiti in ensuring a coherent international response to the emergency,

Welcoming also the efforts of the United Nations Special Envoy for Haiti to mobilize international support for emergency relief operations, as well as of the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Resident/Humanitarian Coordinator for Haiti,

Commending the prompt response, support, generous contributions and assistance provided by Member States, the international community, civil society, the private sector and individuals to the emergency relief and response to the impacts of the disaster,

Reiterating the need for a continued high level of support for and commitment to the immediate humanitarian relief phase, early recovery, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development efforts, including in the medium and long terms, that reflect the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation in addressing the disaster,

Noting the enormous effort and solidarity of the international community, reflecting the importance of the fullest coordinated response and taking into account the national development priorities of Haiti, that will be required to rebuild the affected areas in order to alleviate the grave situation arising from this natural disaster,

Reiterating the need for the United Nations system to respond swiftly to requests for assistance by the affected country and to ensure that the humanitarian assistance provided is timely, adequate, effective and coherent and coordinated among all humanitarian actors, in particular the Government of Haiti, and in accordance with the principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of Haiti, as well as to all Member States that have lost nationals in this catastrophe;

2. Pays special tribute to all the staff members of the United Nations and international peacekeepers who have given their lives in the line of duty, and encourages continued search-and-rescue operations for all people still unaccounted for;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the members of the international community that have offered their prompt and generous support to the rescue efforts and emergency assistance for the affected population;

4. Appeals to all Member States and all relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as the international financial institutions and development agencies, to provide speedy, sustainable and adequate support for the relief, early recovery, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development efforts of Haiti;

5. Calls upon the international community to provide assistance, as soon as possible, in response to the United Nations flash appeal for Haiti launched on 15 January 2010, and supports the overall coordinating role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in assisting the Government of Haiti in ensuring a coherent international response to the humanitarian emergency in Haiti;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and all relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as the international financial institutions and development agencies, to assist Haiti, whenever possible, through continued effective humanitarian, technical and financial assistance that contributes to overcoming the emergency and to the rehabilitation and recovery of the economy and the affected population, in conformity with the priorities identified at the national level;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in this regard, to consult with Member States, relevant United Nations organs and bodies, including the Peacebuilding Commission and the Economic and Social Council, regarding ways to achieve enhanced coordination of reconstruction and development efforts in Haiti;

8. Requests the relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system and other relevant international organizations to increase their support and assistance in strengthening the disaster-preparedness capacity of Haiti as well as reducing its vulnerability to natural disasters, and in integrating disaster risk reduction in its development strategies and programmes, in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States regularly informed on the humanitarian assistance

efforts in Haiti and to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the progress made in the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the affected country, under the sub-item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations".

In response to Assembly resolution 64/250 (see p. 931), the Secretary-General reported on relief and reconstruction efforts in Haiti in August (see p. 918) and in December, the Assembly adopted resolution 65/135 (ibid.).

EU extraordinary meeting. On 19 January [A/64/852-E/2010/101], Spain transmitted to the Secretary-General the conclusions adopted by the Council of the European Union (EU) (Foreign Affairs) at an extraordinary meeting on the humanitarian crisis in Haiti. The Council welcomed the European Commission's preliminary commitment of 30 million euros in humanitarian assistance and 92 million euros by its member States. Following the launch of the Flash Appeal, the EU signalled its intention to provide further humanitarian assistance. It called for an international conference on post-emergency needs, and welcomed the launching of a coordinated post-disaster needs assessment with the United Nations and the World Bank.

Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and other Caribbean countries

From 29 October to early November, the Caribbean (Bahamas, Barbados, Dominica, Grenada, Haiti, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Trinidad and Tobago, Turks and Caicos Islands) was hit by Hurricane Tomas, which brought strong winds, more than 10 inches of rain and surges of 1 to 3 feet above normal tide levels, severely affecting more than 2,000 homes, causing landslides, interrupting water services in Saint Lucia, and causing infrastructure damages, as well as electricity and communications disruption. The agriculture sector in Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines suffered major losses, especially to banana crops; in Barbados some 1,500 houses were damaged. An emergency appeal was issued by the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies on 22 November requesting 1,045,054 Swiss francs to assist up to 2,050 families in Barbados, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines for six months, of which 63 per cent was covered at the time of the request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/136 [draft: A/65/L.48 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 69 (a)].

Emergency and reconstruction assistance to Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other countries affected by Hurricane Tomas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 54/219 of 22 December 1999, 61/200 of 20 December 2006, 62/192 of 19 December 2007, 63/216 and 63/217 of 19 December 2008 and 64/200 of 21 December 2009,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations",

Deeply regretting the number of persons killed, missing and negatively affected as a result of Hurricane Tomas, which struck Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on 30 and 31 October and Haiti on 5 and 6 November 2010,

Deeply concerned at the tremendous damage caused by Hurricane Tomas to crops, homes, basic infrastructure and tourist and other areas and the economies of Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other affected countries, which could adversely affect the economic and social development plans of those countries,

Deeply concerned also about the vulnerability of Haitians who are still living in camps for internally displaced persons and informal settlements in the wake of the earthquake of January 2010 and as a result of increased cholera infections in the aftermath of the flooding caused by Hurricane Tomas,

Disturbed by the devastation to the agricultural sectors of Haiti, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, in particular to the banana, tree crop and vegetable sectors and to livestock, caused by Hurricane Tomas, the short-term impact of the hurricane on the livelihoods of farmers and the medium-term impact on national economies resulting from the loss of revenue from agricultural exports,

Conscious that the Caribbean countries are vulnerable to cyclical weather patterns and prone to natural hazards because of their geographical location, features and small size, which impose additional challenges on their ability to achieve the Millennium Development Goals,

Noting with concern the loss of life, infrastructural damage and adverse developmental impacts caused by tropical storms and hurricanes, active and longer Atlantic hurricane seasons and the extreme vulnerability of the Caribbean region to such events,

Aware of the efforts of the Governments and peoples of Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other affected countries to save lives and alleviate the suffering of the victims of Hurricane Tomas,

Bearing in mind the enormous effort that will be required to ameliorate the serious situation caused by this natural disaster,

Welcoming the prompt response of the international community, the United Nations system, regional organizations, international agencies, the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and non-governmental organizations in providing relief to the affected populations,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its medium- and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts already being made by the Governments and peoples of Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other affected countries, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure more broad-based and adequate multilateral cooperation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and initiate the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Governments and peoples of Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other affected countries;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the international community, the United Nations system, regional organizations, international agencies, the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and non-governmental organizations that have provided emergency relief to the affected countries;

3. Appeals to all Member States and all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions and development agencies, to provide speedy support for the relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and assistance effort for Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other affected countries;

4. Encourages the Governments of Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other affected countries, in conjunction with relevant partners, to develop further strategies aimed at preventing and mitigating natural disasters, in accordance with the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions and development agencies, to assist Haiti, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and other affected countries, to the extent possible, through continued effective humanitarian, technical and financial assistance that contributes to overcoming the emergency and achieving the rehabilitation and recovery of the economies and the affected populations and through reconstruction and disaster risk reduction efforts that take into consideration the impact of climate change, in conformity with the priorities identified at the national level.

Mongolia

The UN Consolidated Dzud Appeal for Mongolia, which sought $18.1 million, received 19 per cent ($3.4 million) of the requirement.

An extremely harsh 2009–2010 winter in Mongolia resulted in increased maternal and child mortality, an unprecedented loss of livestock, and the collapse of thousands of people's livelihoods and basic services. The disaster, known locally as "dzud" (a complex, long-lasting natural disaster in which a summer drought was followed by heavy snowfalls and unusually low temperatures in winter, and then by a dangerous spring thaw), resulted in 15 of Mongolia's 21 provinces being declared disaster zones, and another four being seriously affected. The affected population suffered from lack of access to health care, widespread food insecurity, loss of livelihoods, risk of a mass exodus of people from rural areas to the cities in search of alternative employment and psychological trauma for affected herders and their families. The thick snow cover also meant that livestock were unable to graze, and by the end of April, more than 7.8 million head of livestock (some 17 per cent of all Mongolia's livestock) had perished. In May, almost 9,000 households (45,000 people) were left without animals.

Pakistan

The UN Flash Appeal for Pakistan Floods Relief and Early Recovery Response Plan, which sought $1.96 billion, received 70 per cent ($1.37 billion) of the requirement.

During the 2010 monsoon season, Pakistan experienced the worst floods in its history. Heavy rainfall, flash floods and riverine floods combined to create a moving body of water equal in dimension to the land mass of the United Kingdom. The floods affected 78 of the 141 districts in Pakistan, covering one third of its geographical area and affecting more than 18 million people, with 1,980 confirmed deaths, 1.7 million homes and over 10,000 schools damaged or destroyed, 2.2 million hectares of standing crops damaged and half a million livestock lost. An initial response plan was launched on 11 August to address the immediate needs of flood-affected people, and a revised response plan in November, to address the residual relief and early recovery needs of flood-affected families for the following twelve months. The goal of the plan was to prevent excess morbidity and mortality and to enable flood-affected communities to return to their normal lives. Its strategic objectives were to ensure adequate public health through an integrated approach; provide food assistance and other social protection measures; support sustainable solutions through the provision of shelter assistance; restore on- and off-farm livelihoods; and restore basic community services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 August [meeting 110], the General Assembly adopted resolution 64/294 [draft: A/64/L.66] without vote [agenda item 70].

Strengthening emergency relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and prevention in the wake of devastating floods in Pakistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions,

Cognizant of the substantial loss of life as well as enormous socio-economic, infrastructure and environmental damage caused by the recent devastating floods in Pakistan,

Noting that the massive scale of destruction and loss of life caused by unprecedented floods, triggered by torrential rains, in an otherwise arid region reflects the adverse impact of climate change and the growing vulnerability of countries to climate change,

Recognizing the urgency of undertaking a massive rescue and relief operation, and supporting the efforts for rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Welcoming the assistance and contributions of the international community, including Governments, international organizations, civil society and the private sector, in the relief and rehabilitation efforts, which reflect the spirit of international solidarity and cooperation, to address and meet the challenges of the disaster, and in this context also appreciating the role of the people and Government of Pakistan,

Welcoming also the launch by the United Nations on 11 August 2010 of the Pakistan Initial Floods Emergency Response Plan and the continuous engagement of the Secretary-General in the intensification of global relief efforts to meet the urgent and immediate needs of the affected people,

1. Expresses full solidarity and sympathy with the people of Pakistan affected by the floods;

2. Urges the international community, in particular donor countries, international financial institutions and relevant international organizations, as well as the private sector and civil society, to extend full support and assistance to the Government of Pakistan in its efforts to mitigate the adverse impacts of the floods and to meet the medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction needs;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations system agencies to further intensify their efforts to sensitize the international community to the humanitarian, recovery and reconstruction needs of Pakistan and to mobilize effective, immediate and adequate international support and assistance to Pakistan;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled “Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance”.

Communications. On 15 September [A/65/375], Turkmenistan transmitted a letter to the Secretary-General detailing the humanitarian assistance it had provided to Pakistan and Afghanistan.

Chernobyl aftermath

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/9 [YUN 2007, p. 963], the Secretary-General in September submitted a report [A/65/341] on optimizing the international effort to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster [YUN 1986, p. 584]. The report presented a midterm review of the UN action plan for Chernobyl recovery up to 2016 and recorded the activities undertaken by UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies to promote recovery from the disaster. It emphasized the importance of the ongoing inter-agency cooperation, including the framework of the International Chernobyl Research and Information Network, and outlined the role of UNDP in coordinating inter-agency efforts for implementing the Decade of Recovery and Sustainable Development of the Affected Regions (2006–2016) [YUN 2007, p. 964].

The Secretary-General noted that Chernobyl-affected communities still required assistance in the form of community-based projects, information on living safe and productive lives in the affected territories, and new opportunities and partnerships to help meet recovery and development needs. He recommended that coordination and cooperation among UN system organizations and bodies be guided by the developmental approach to Chernobyl, the UN action plan on Chernobyl to 2016 and the goal of bringing life in the affected communities back to normal. The Secretary-General noted that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear accident would be marked in 2011 by a conference in April, in Ukraine, providing an opportunity for the international community to remind people of the disaster and reinforce donor interest. Annexed to the report were updates on activities by the three most affected countries, Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, to facilitate recovery of the affected region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/131 [draft: A/65/L.25 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 69 (e)].

Strengthening of international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 45/190 of 21 December 1990, 46/150 of 18 December 1991, 47/165 of 18 December 1992, 48/206 of 21 December 1993, 50/134 of 20 December 1995, 52/172 of 16 December 1997, 54/97 of 8 December 1999, 56/109 of 14 December 2001, 58/119 of 17 December 2003, 60/14 of 14 November 2005 and 62/9 of 20 November 2007, as well as its resolution 55/171 of 14 December 2000, on closure of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, and taking note of the decisions adopted by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system in the implementation of those resolutions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1990/50 of 13 July 1990, 1991/51 of 26 July 1991 and 1992/38 of 30 July 1992 and Council decision 1993/232 of 22 July 1993,

Conscious of the long-term nature of the consequences of the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which was a major technological catastrophe in terms of its scope and complexity and created humanitarian, environmental, social, economic and health consequences and problems of common concern, requiring for their solution wide and active international cooperation and coordination of efforts in this field at the international and national levels,

Expressing profound concern at the ongoing effects of the consequences of the accident on the lives and health of people, in particular children, in the affected areas of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine, as well as in other affected countries,

Noting the consensus reached among members of the Chernobyl Forum on the environmental, health and socio-economic effects of the Chernobyl disaster, in particular, in providing a message of reassurance and practical advice to communities living in territories affected by the Chernobyl disaster,

Acknowledging the importance of the national efforts being undertaken by the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Recognizing the contribution of civil society organizations, including the national Red Cross Societies of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, in response to the Chernobyl disaster and in support of the efforts of the affected countries,

Welcoming with appreciation the developmental approach to tackling the problems caused by the Chernobyl disaster aimed at normalizing the situation of the individuals and communities concerned in the medium and long term,

Stressing the exceptional Chernobyl-related needs, in particular in the areas of health, environment and research, in the context of the transition from the emergency to the recovery phase of mitigation of the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Noting the coordinating role for Chernobyl issues of the United Nations Development Programme,

Welcoming with appreciation the progress of engineering projects in transforming the damaged reactor site into a stable and environmentally safe condition, noting in particular that the design and construction of a new, safe confinement for the reactor have entered their final phase but will require significant funds to complete,

Stressing the need for further coordination by the United Nations Development Programme and improved resource mobilization by the United Nations system to support the activities aimed at the recovery of Chernobyl-affected territories, inter alia, community-based development projects, support to investment promotion and the creation of new jobs and small businesses, advocacy work and the provision of relevant policy advice as requested, and the widest possible dissemination of the findings of the Chernobyl Forum through the International Chernobyl Research and Information Network,

Stressing also the significance of the upcoming twenty-fifth anniversary of the accident for the further strengthening of international cooperation to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of resolution 62/9, as well as relevant parts of the reports of the agencies and organizations of the United Nations system,

1. Welcomes the contribution made by States and by organizations of the United Nations system to the development of cooperation to mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, the activities of regional and other organizations and those of non-governmental organizations, as well as bilateral activities;

2. Notes with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the agencies of the United Nations system and other international organizations that are members of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Chernobyl to continue implementing a developmental approach to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, in particular through the development of specific projects, and stresses the need for the Inter-Agency Task Force to continue its activities to that end, including through coordinating efforts in the field of resource mobilization;

3. Acknowledges the difficulties faced by the most affected countries in minimizing the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, and invites States, in particular donor States and all relevant agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations, to continue to provide support to the ongoing efforts of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, including through the allocation of adequate funds to support medical, social, economic and environmental programmes related to the disaster;

4. Reaffirms that the United Nations should continue to play an important catalytic and coordinating role in the strengthening of international cooperation to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, in the capacity of Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and as Chair of the United Nations Development Group, to continue to take appropriate practical measures to strengthen coordination of the international efforts in that area;

6. Welcomes the efforts of the Government of Ukraine and the international donor community to complete construction of the Shelter facility and related nuclear safety projects at Chernobyl, in accordance with international standards, so as to transform the site into a stable and environmentally safe state, and urges all parties to ensure that a strong, long-standing, high-level commitment remains in place to ensure the successful completion of this vital work;

7. Also welcomes the activities of the United Nations Development Programme Goodwill Ambassador, star tennis player, Ms. Maria Sharapova, who serves as an advocate for post-Chernobyl recovery efforts, and praises her personal commitment in supporting a number of recovery projects that aid local communities in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine;

8. Notes with satisfaction the completion of the Cooperation for Rehabilitation Programme in Belarus and the realization of the ongoing Chernobyl Recovery and Development Programme in Ukraine, aimed at promoting better living conditions in and the sustainable development of the affected territories;

9. Welcomes the initiation in Belarus of a three-year project by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Population Fund aimed at enhancing human well-being and safety in the Chernobyl-affected areas and the area-based development project in the Chernobyl-affected areas in Belarus, as well as the nationwide extension of the area-based development approach that was piloted in the Chernobyl-affected region of Ukraine;

10. Notes with satisfaction assistance rendered by the International Atomic Energy Agency to Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine on remediation of agricultural and urban environments, cost-effective agricultural countermeasures and the monitoring of human exposure in areas affected by the Chernobyl disaster;

11. Takes note with satisfaction of the progress made by the Governments of the affected countries in implementing national strategies to mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, calls upon United Nations agencies and multilateral and bilateral donors to continue to align their assistance with the priorities of the national strategies of the affected States, and stresses the importance of working together on their implementation in a common effort in the spirit of cooperation;

12. Welcomes the implementation of the International Chernobyl Research and Information Network, aimed at providing scientific information on the consequences of the accident, with practical advice for local communities in the affected territories of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine through dissemination of the findings of the Chernobyl Forum, including by providing accurate information on the impact of radiation in accessible, non-technical language in the form of practical messages on healthy and productive lifestyles, to the populations affected by the accident in order to empower them to maximize social and economic recovery and sustainable development in all its aspects;

13. Stresses the importance of the full implementation of the third decade after the Chernobyl disaster, 2006–2016, the Decade of Recovery and Sustainable Development of the Affected Regions, proclaimed in its resolution 62/9, which is focused on achieving the goal of a return to normal life for the affected communities as far as is possible within this time frame, and notes the ongoing midterm comprehensive review of the Decade;

14. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to coordinate, within existing resources, the efforts of the United Nations system and with other relevant actors on the implementation of the Decade;

15. Welcomes the initiative of Ukraine, co-sponsored by Belarus and the Russian Federation, to convene the international conference entitled “Twenty-five Years after the Chernobyl Disaster: Safety for the Future” in April 2011 in Kyiv;

16. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to actively engage in and fund, within existing resources, the preparations for the conference;

17. Encourages Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, major groups, the private sector and other donors to contribute to the preparatory process and the conference itself;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, as appropriate, the full involvement of resident coordinators and country teams in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine in preparations for the conference;

19. Requests the President of the General Assembly to convene, on 26 April 2011, a special commemorative meeting of the Assembly in observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Chernobyl catastrophe;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in the implementation of the relevant General Assembly resolutions and, through existing coordination mechanisms, in particular the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl, to continue to maintain close cooperation with the agencies of the United Nations system, as well as with regional and other relevant organizations, while implementing specific Chernobyl-related programmes and projects;

21. Requests the United Nations Coordinator of International Cooperation on Chernobyl to continue her work to realize the United Nations action plan on Chernobyl to 2016, aimed at implementation of the Decade, with the full involvement of the relevant United Nations agencies in collaboration with the Governments of Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-eighth session, under a separate sub-item, a report containing a comprehensive assessment of the implementation of all aspects of the present resolution and, in particular, of the action plan on Chernobyl to 2016.

International trade, finance and transport

In 2010, the work of the United Nations system on international trade, finance and transport dealt mainly with the global economic and financial crisis that began in 2008. The system, mainly through the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), sought to address what the General Assembly in December termed “the enormity and the multidimensional nature” of the crisis.

After a year of fragile and uneven recovery, global economic growth started to decelerate on a broad front in mid-2010. World trade continued to rise in 2010, but the momentum of the strong growth observed in the first half of the year started to peter out in the second. While the volume of exports of many emerging economies achieved, or even went beyond, pre-crisis peaks, exports of developed economies did not fully recover and, in the third quarter of 2010, were 8 per cent below pre-crisis highs. Reflecting the recovery in world trade, international shipping experienced an upswing in 2010, after contracting in 2009. Net private capital inflows to emerging economies recovered from their precipitous decline in late 2008 and early 2009; they were estimated to be above $800 billion in 2010, a more than 30 per cent increase from 2009. After negative net flows in 2009, international bank lending to emerging economies resumed in 2010, even though it remained far below pre-crisis levels.

In March, the high-level meeting between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), the World Trade Organization and UNCTAD discussed the topic “Building on Monterrey and Doha: achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals”. In June, the General Assembly held an informal event on innovative sources of development finance, which provided inputs to the Assembly’s High-level Plenary Meeting on the Millennium Development Goals in September.

Also in June, the United Nations Cocoa Conference for the Negotiation of a Successor Agreement to the International Cocoa Agreement, 2001, concluded a new International Cocoa Agreement to replace that of 2001. The Agreement aimed to strengthen international cooperation between cocoa producers and consumers.

At the Sixth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (the Set) in November, heads of competition authorities and representatives of Governments, the private sector and civil society assessed the application of the Set on competition and discussed proposals for its improvement.

At its annual session in September, the Trade and Development Board, UNCTAD governing body, took action on Africa and new forms of development partnerships. It also undertook an evaluation and review of UNCTAD implementation of the 2008 Accra Accord, adopted at UNCTAD XII, and reviewed UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing.

International trade

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 2011 [Sales No. E.11.II.D.3] stated that international trade in both goods and services rebounded sharply in 2010, after having registered its steepest fall since the Second World War. Global trade volume recorded a 14 per cent year-on-year increase, which roughly offset its decline in 2009. In the second half of 2010, the upturn lost some traction as inventory cycles entered a new phase and economic activity slowed in several developed countries.

The revival of trade was uneven among countries and income groups of countries. Developed countries’ trade volume had yet to recover its pre-crisis level, as had that of the transition economies. The situation was worse in South-Eastern Europe, where imports contracted even further in 2010. In sharp contrast, the volume of both imports and exports in most groups of developing countries already exceeded their 2008 peak, with East Asia leading the upturn.

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2011 [Sales No. E.11.II.C.2], jointly issued by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) and UNCTAD, stated that, from mid-2010, world trade growth lost steam along with the slowdown in the recovery of the world economy. It noted that, during the recovery, the rebound in commodity prices was not initially accompanied by renewed dollar depreciation. However, from mid-2010, when upward pressure on commodity prices weakened, the rates of growth in the volume and value of trade converged. That pattern was expected to continue.

Multilateral trading system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 64/188 [YUN 2009, p. 918], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/211] on international trade and development, prepared in collaboration with UNCTAD. The report stated that the global economy was recovering from the deep and widespread downturn. Strong and sustained global recovery was indispensable for employment creation, poverty alleviation and sustainable development, which enhanced the prospects for achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). A resurgence in trade had contributed to the recovery, which was driven by emerging developing countries, reflecting the multipolarity of the global economy and the emerging economic powers. The multilateral trading system—a global public good—faced challenges of redressing asymmetries and imbalances affecting the developing countries. The interdependence of economies required coherence in addressing the development dimension at all levels of global economic governance. The United Nations played a critical role in that regard.

Communication. On 27 September [A/65/395], Singapore, on behalf of the informal Global Governance Group (3G), comprising 27 Member States, transmitted to the Secretary-General a document containing 3G's inputs to the G-20 Working Group on Development established at the G-20 Summit (Toronto, Canada, 26–27 June). Subjects addressed included facilitating open markets and trade.

UNCTAD consideration. At its fifty-seventh annual session (Geneva, 15–28 September) [A/65/15 (Part IV) & Corr.1], the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) discussed an UNCTAD secretariat note on evolution of the international trading system and of international trade from a development perspective: the impact of the crisis-mitigation measures and prospects for recovery [TD/B/57/3]. TDB members welcomed the recovery in the world economy from the global economic crisis, driven especially by dynamic demand growth in emerging economies in Asia and a resurgence of international trade. It was noted that, while the crisis had resulted in the largest decline in trade in over 70 years, the turnaround had been rapid. Emerging developing countries played a fundamental role in that revival and in the recovery in developed countries. There was consensus that international trade remained a key driver of growth and development and of the achievement of the MDGs, particularly for trade-dependent economies with small domestic markets—a category that included most developing countries. There was a need to strengthen the linkage between trade and poverty reduction. In that regard, constraints faced by developing countries in expanding trade should be effectively addressed, for instance by improving access to trade finance, further reducing tariff and non-tariff barriers, strengthening connectivity through trade facilitation, promoting technology transfer, addressing high volatility of commodity prices, facilitating movement of persons to provide services, enhancing the contribution of migrants and remittances for poverty reduction and strengthening productive capacity development.

Negotiating frameworks

Doha Development Round negotiations

The Secretary-General, in his August report on international trade and development [A/65/211], said that the inability of the multilateral trading system to conclude the Doha Development Round launched in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 1432]—the longest of all General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)/World Trade Organization (WTO) negotiations—and deliver on a substantive development dimension had underlined the need to improve the WTO function as a negotiating forum. The Seventh WTO Ministerial Conference [YUN 2009, p. 918] had reaffirmed members' resolve to conclude the Round in 2010. Major barriers to the negotiations remained the lack of engagement and leadership to move from entrenched positions by recognizing the asymmetrical capacities and needs of developing countries. Negotiations hinged on the question of whether to proceed on the basis of modalities for agriculture and non-agricultural market access. Developing countries were concerned over an erosion of the Round towards a singular focus on market access. They were also concerned at repeated attempts to divert attention from the original Doha mandate, which prioritized development issues, by setting new approaches and targets such as a quantitative benchmark or formula for the liberalization in services and skipping negotiations on the modalities for agriculture and non-agricultural market access. There was a need to conduct negotiations on the basis of the existing Doha Development Round. Further prolongation risked increased loss of interest in the Round, leaving a greater role in global economic governance for other forums such as the G-20, regional and bilateral arrangements and increased trade litigation.

WTO report. According to the WTO Annual Report 2011, detailed talks in 2010, hosted by WTO, failed to bridge the few, but important, outstanding issues to conclude the Doha Development Agenda negotiations. Nevertheless, at the stocktaking meeting in March, every member expressed strong commitment to the mandate of the Doha Round and its conclusion. The Chairs of all the negotiating bodies provided factual reports, identifying areas of progress and remaining gaps. Members agreed that, where the gaps were clear, political decisions would be needed as part of the final package. Where the extent of the gaps was less clear, further technical work would be required before political decisions could be taken. Three core principles would guide members' future work: maintaining and strengthening the multilateral dimension of the negotiations without discouraging other avenues for progress; building on what was already on the table in the shape of the Chairs' texts; and ensuring that the development dimension remained central to the outcome of the Round.

TDB action. At its forty-ninth executive session (Geneva, 8–9 June) [A/65/15 (Part II)], TDB, in its discussion of the key development challenges facing the least developed countries (LDCs), stated that the Doha Round of WTO trade negotiations should be concluded as soon as possible and should address the development concerns of LDCs. An interim outcome addressing the trade interests of those countries needed to be delivered.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/65/434/Add.1], adopted resolution 65/142 by recorded vote (119-47-7) [agenda item 18 (a)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/178 of 21 December 2001, 57/235 of 20 December 2002, 58/197 of 23 December 2003, 59/221 of 22 December 2004, 60/184 of 22 December 2005, 61/186 of 20 December 2006, 62/184 of 19 December 2007, 63/203 of 19 December 2008 and 64/188 of 21 December 2009 on international trade and development,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, as well as the outcomes of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling further the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development,

Recalling the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Noting the Seventh Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Geneva from 30 November to 2 December 2009 under the general theme "The World Trade Organization, the Multilateral Trading System and the Current Global Economic Environment",

Reaffirming the value of multilateralism to the global trading system and the commitment to achieving a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system that contributes to growth, sustainable development and employment generation in all sectors, and emphasizing that bilateral and regional trading arrangements should contribute to the goals of the multilateral trading system,

Reiterating that development concerns form an integral part of the Doha Development Agenda, which places the needs and interests of developing and least developed countries at the heart of the Doha Work Programme,

Noting that agriculture lags behind the manufacturing sector in the process of the establishment of multilateral disciplines and in the reduction of tariff and non-tariff barriers and that, since most of the world's poor make their living from agriculture, the livelihood and standards of living of many of them are seriously jeopardized by the serious distortions in production and trade in agricultural products caused by the high levels of export subsidies, trade-distorting domestic support and protectionism by many developed countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Trade and Development Board and the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms that international trade can be an engine for development and sustained economic growth, underlines the need to fully harness its potential in that regard, and stresses the importance of upholding a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system that contributes to growth, sustainable development and employment, particularly in developing countries;

3. Notes with deep concern that the ongoing world financial and economic crisis is still severely impacting international trade, affecting developing countries in particular, and expresses concern about the fragile and uneven state of the recovery of trade flows;

4. Stresses the need to resist all protectionist measures and tendencies, especially those affecting developing countries, including tariff, non-tariff and other barriers to trade, in particular agricultural subsidies, and to rectify any such measures already taken, recognizes the right of countries to fully utilize their policy space, consistent with World Trade Organization commitments, and calls upon the World Trade Organization and other relevant bodies, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to continue monitoring protectionist measures and to assess their impact on developing countries;

5. Encourages Member States to refrain from adopting any measures or restrictions related to trade and transit that affect the access by developing countries to medicines, especially generic medicines, and medical equipment;

6. Expresses serious concern at the lack of progress in the Doha Round of World Trade Organization negotiations, reiterates the call on all members of the World Trade Organization, in particular developed country members, to demonstrate the flexibility and political will necessary to break the current impasse in the negotiations, and calls for an early, balanced, ambitious and development-oriented outcome of the Doha Development Agenda multilateral trade negotiations, in keeping with the development mandate of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization and the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration, which places development at the heart of the multilateral trading system;

7. Stresses that, in order for the Doha Round to be concluded satisfactorily, the negotiations should strengthen the rules and disciplines in the area of agriculture, eliminate agricultural export subsidies, substantially reduce the domestic measures of support by developed countries and promote enhanced market access to developed country markets, in a balanced and development-oriented outcome, while adhering to the development mandate of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization and the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration;

8. Also stresses the need to make substantial progress in the negotiations of the World Trade Organization complying with the mandate of the Doha Development Agenda, covering all areas under the single undertaking, such as agriculture, non-agricultural market access, services, rules and trade facilitation, as well as in the negotiations on the Dispute Settlement Understanding, to ensure that the development concerns of developing countries are fully reflected in any outcome, consistent with the development mandate of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization and the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration;

9. Reiterates its call for the review work on special and differential treatment provisions to be completed, with a view to strengthening those provisions and making them more precise, effective and operational, in accordance with paragraph 44 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration and paragraph 35 of the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration;

10. Calls for solutions to be found to the implementation-related issues and concerns as set out in the relevant decisions contained in the Doha Ministerial Declaration;

11. Reiterates its call for work to be accelerated on the development-related mandate concerning the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS Agreement) in the Doha Ministerial Declaration, especially the issue of making intellectual property rules fully support the objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity and issues related to the full implementation of the Doha Declaration on the TRIPS Agreement and Public Health affecting many developing countries, including the least developed countries, especially those issues arising from HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and other diseases;

12. Reaffirms the necessity of promoting the transfer and dissemination of technology and access to knowledge for the benefit of developing countries, taking fully into account the priorities and special needs of developing countries, as well as the World Intellectual Property Organization development agenda;

13. Also reaffirms the commitments made at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization relating to the least developed countries, calls upon developed countries that have not already done so to provide immediate, predictable, duty-free and quota-free market access on a lasting basis for all products originating from all least developed countries, and welcomes the convening of the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2011;

14. Calls for the full implementation of the Marrakesh Ministerial Decision on Measures Concerning the Possible Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-importing Developing Countries by providing such countries with technical and financial assistance in order to meet their food needs;

15. Reaffirms the commitment to actively pursue the work programme of the World Trade Organization with respect to addressing the trade-related issues and concerns affecting the fuller integration of countries with small, vulnerable economies into the multilateral trading system in a manner commensurate with their special circumstances and in support of their efforts towards sustainable development, in accordance with paragraph 35 of the Doha Ministerial Declaration and paragraph 41 of the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration;

16. Also reaffirms its full commitment to urgently addressing the special development needs of and the challenges faced by landlocked developing countries, and calls for the full, timely and effective implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, in accordance with the Declaration of the high-level meeting of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action;

17. Expresses deep concern at the imposition of laws and other forms of coercive economic measures, including unilateral sanctions, against developing countries, which undermine international law and the rules of the World Trade Organization and also severely threaten freedom of trade and investment;

18. Calls for the accession of all developing countries that apply for membership in the World Trade Organization, in particular the least developed countries, including countries emerging from conflict that are least developed countries, to be facilitated, bearing in mind paragraph 21 of its resolution 55/182 of 20 December 2000 and subsequent developments, and also calls for the effective and faithful application of the World Trade Organization guidelines on accession by the least developed countries;

19. Recognizes the urgent need to mobilize additional, non-conditional and predictable funding for Aid for Trade, including through the Enhanced Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries, to help to strengthen and enhance the trade capacity and international competitiveness of developing countries so as to ensure equitable benefits for them from increased trading opportunities and to foster their economic growth, and notes that the third Global Review on Aid for Trade is to be held in Geneva in July 2011;

20. Also recognizes that South-South trade should be further strengthened, including through market access between developing countries, and in this regard takes note of the Ministerial Decision on Modalities of the São Paulo Round of negotiations on the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries, adopted in Geneva on 2 December 2009, and looks forward to an early conclusion of the São Paulo Round of negotiations;

21. Reiterates the important role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the focal point within the United Nations system for the integrated treatment of trade and development and interrelated issues in the areas of finance, technology, investment and sustainable development, and calls upon the international community to work towards the strengthening of the Conference, to enable it to enhance its contribution in its three major pillars, namely, consensus-building, research and policy analysis, and technical assistance, especially through increased core resources;

22. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in accordance with its mandate, to monitor and assess the evolution of the international trading system, to undertake policy analysis with a view to fostering greater coherence between the multilateral trading system and the international financial system, from a development perspective, and to support developing countries in building national capacities, including through technical assistance activities;

23. Reaffirms the fundamental role that competition law and policy can play for sound economic development, in accordance with national legislation, welcomes the convening of the sixth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, held in Geneva from 8 to 12 November 2010, and takes note of the final report of the Conference;

24. Urges donors to provide the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development with the increased resources necessary to deliver effective and demand-driven assistance to developing countries, as well as to enhance their contributions to the trust funds of the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance to Least Developed Countries and the Joint Integrated Technical Assistance Programme;

25. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and developments in the multilateral trading system, under the sub-item entitled "International trade and development" of the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions";

26. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the Director-General of the World Trade Organization for circulation as a document of the World Trade Organization.

On 20 December (decision 65/525), the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/65/434] on its discussion of macroeconomic policy questions, including those related to international trade and development.

Trade policy

Trade and development

The Trade and Development Commission, at its second session (Geneva, 3–7 May) [TD/B/C.I/13], addressed successful trade and development strategies for mitigating the impact of the global economic and financial crisis; the contribution of tourism to trade and development; and promoting and strengthening synergies among the three pillars of the work of UNCTAD (consensus building, research and analysis, and technical cooperation).

The Commission had before it UNCTAD secretariat notes on successful trade and development strategies for mitigating the impact of the global economic and financial crisis [TD/B/C.I/7 & Corr.1]; the contribution of tourism to trade and development [TD/B/C.I/8]; and progress reports on the implementation of the provisions of the 2008 Accra Accord [YUN 2008, p. 1042] related to key trade and development issues [TD/B/C.I/9], to commodities [TD/B/C.I/10], to transport and trade facilitation [TD/B/C.I/11], and to cross-divisional capacity building [TD/B/C.I/12].

In agreed conclusions, the Commission highlighted the importance of social safety nets; structural transformation; upgrading infrastructure; productive capacity development linked with trade; commodity sector development, especially in agriculture; support for small and medium-sized enterprises; human capital and technological development; climate-friendly trade and investment measures; South-South trade; and market-opening trade policies to create growth and jobs and alleviate poverty. It recognized the importance of an open, fair, equitable and rules-based multilateral trading system and the avoidance of protectionism. The Commission stressed that tourism stimulated broad-based economic growth, attracted investment and fostered development. UNCTAD was asked to pursue its mandate on trade and development issues as contained in the Accra Accord, and to reinforce assistance to developing countries, in particular LDCs.

In agreed conclusions on the outcomes of expert meetings, the Commission took note of the reports of the following meetings: the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Commodities and Development on its second session (Geneva, 24–25 March) [TD/B/C.I/MEM.2/11]; the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Services, Development and Trade: the Regulatory and Institutional Dimension on its second session (Geneva, 17–19 March) [TD/B/C.I/MEM.3/6]; the Multi-year Expert Meeting on International Cooperation: South-South Cooperation and Regional Integration on its second session (Geneva, 14–16 December 2009) [TD/B/C.II/MEM.2/6]; the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Transport and Trade Facilitation on its second session (Geneva, 8–10 December 2009) [TD/B/C.I/MEM.1/6]; the Expert Meeting on Green and Renewable Technologies as Energy Solutions for Rural Development (Geneva, 9–11 February 2010) [TD/B/C.I/EM.3/3]; the Expert Meeting on the Contribution and Effective Use of External Resources for Development, in Particular for Productive Capacity-building (Geneva, 22–24 February) [TD/B/C.II/EM.1/3]; and the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy on its tenth session [YUN 2009, p. 958]. The last meeting served as a preparatory body for the Sixth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (see p. 961).

TDB, at its fiftieth executive session [A/65/15 (Part III)], took note of the Commission's report and endorsed the agreed conclusions contained therein.

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 2010, UN bodies continued to assist developing countries and transition economies in promoting their exports and facilitating their integration into the multilateral trading system. The main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area was the International Trade Centre, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and WTO.

International Trade Centre

In its Annual Report 2010 [ITC/AG(XLV)/239], the UNCTAD/WTO International Trade Centre (ITC) said that it continued to support small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) and entrepreneurs in developing and transition countries in the areas of market demand; improving the quality of goods and services; diversification; and developing networks of institutions to provide innovative business services to exporters. Thus, ITC's focus was on expanding countries' capacities to trade, and on the growth of export-oriented private-sector enterprises, strong local institutions and sound, development-focused trade-related policies. In 2010, ITC carried out 196 projects and conducted 176 workshops, seminars, forums and trainings with 6,568 participants, of which 2,235 were women. It spent 58 per cent of its programme resources ($20.3 million) in LDCs, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and sub-Saharan Africa. ITC continued to contribute to the Aid for Trade agenda, launched at the Sixth WTO Ministerial Conference [YUN 2005, p. 1593], which connected private and public sectors, large and small, to regional, national and global players.

ITC provided support to the African cotton sector to make it a stronger player in international cotton trade. Through market linkages, it identified an opportunity for African companies to obtain direct feedback on quality and technical requirements from Asian spinning factories, which would make it possible to bring African ginners into closer contact with the market and result in higher prices for them and for farmers, while increasing South-South trade.

Demand for ITC web-based trade analysis tools grew dramatically, with exporters eager for trade intelligence on emerging product and market opportunities. Users from 221 countries and territories included sole traders, SMEs and multinational corporations. The number of users had increased by 86 per cent since 2009.

ITC's flagship event—the eleventh World Export Development Forum (Chongqing, China, 9–12 September)—attracted more than 300 participants from 48 countries and saw increased private-sector attendance. Within the event, the Chongqing Platform for Action on Sourcing from Women Vendors was launched to increase women's share of corporate, government and institutional procurement.

At the eighth World Conference of Trade Promotion Organizations (TPOs) (Mexico City, 14–15 October), co-hosted by ITC, participants from 75 TPOs and 17 private enterprises explored solutions for TPOs to meet the increasing pressure to demonstrate impact to their stakeholders. Participants discussed how to design services to improve competitiveness and increase exports, along with good practice methodologies and mechanisms to report on impact.

Regarding WTO accession, ITC continued working with WTO on the joint Programme on Trade Capacity for Acceding Least Developed Countries. The programme engaged the private sector in a dialogue with policymakers, thereby building the confidence of the business community in their country's bid for WTO membership.

More than 7,000 people were employed by enterprises linked to the ITC Ethical Fashion Programme, connecting large fashion houses with marginalized communities. Most of the employees were women who could now cater for their basic needs, and were gaining skills as artisans and contributing to sophisticated fashion supply chains.

ITC's 2010 budget totalled to $122.53 million. The opening balance, including re-phased and unallocated resources from 2009, amounted to $44.47 million. Net income received came to $78.06 million and overall cumulative expenditure was $75.36 million. Extrabudgetary expenditures, with funds provided by donors through voluntary donations, amounted to $40.17 million.

Joint Advisory Group

TDB consideration. At its fifty-seventh session (Geneva, 15–28 September) [A/65/15 (Part IV) & Corr.1], TDB took note of the report of the ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on its forty-third session [YUN 2009, p. 924].

JAG session. JAG, at its forty-fourth session (Geneva, 16–17 December) [ITC/AG(XLIV)/238], discussed ITC activities and made recommendations to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board and the WTO General Council. JAG had before it the ITC Annual Report 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 923], the ITC 2011 consolidated programme document and the draft 2011 operational plan. Statements were made by the UNCTAD Secretary-General, the WTO Director-General and the ITC Executive Director. The WTO Director-General noted progress made in implementing the joint programme providing capacity-building support to LDCs in the process of WTO accession. Delegates expressed satisfaction at ITC progress in incorporating gender in its work, although some felt that more could be done. Several delegates suggested that young people should be given the same sort of attention, along with the continued emphasis on poverty reduction, the environment and global partnerships. Many delegations expressed satisfaction with the focus on the MDGs in ITC work and the shift towards larger, multi-year programmes. Pledges of donor contributions to ITC for 2011 were made by Canada, China, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Norway and Switzerland.

ITC administrative and budgetary arrangements

In March, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the financial report and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 2009 and the report of the Board of Auditors regarding ITC [A/65/5 (Vol. III & Corr.1)]. The Board noted that of the four recommendations made for the biennium 2006–2007, one was fully implemented and three were under implementation. For the 2008–2009 biennium, total income was $141.6 million and total expenditure was $129.5 million, resulting in an excess of income over expenditure of $12.1 million. The Board made 10 recommendations based on its audit.

In November, in his first performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 2010–2011 [A/65/589], the Secretary-General proposed a $1,251,900 increase in the ITC budget. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in December [A/65/604], recommended approval of the revised estimates.

In December, by resolution 65/260 A (see p. 1425), the Assembly increased the appropriation for ITC for the biennium 2010–2011 by $1,251,900, to a total of $31,793,300.

Investment, enterprise and development

The Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission, at its second session (Geneva, 26–30 April) [TD/B/C.II/10], addressed two main themes: investment in the agricultural sector with a view to building productive capacities; and the role of States: efficiency in public investment for development—sharing best practices [TD/B/C.II/8]. It also reviewed the investment policy of Belarus [UNCTAD/DIAE/PCB/2009/10] and El Salvador [UNCTAD/DIAE/PCB/2009/20].

In agreed conclusions, the Commission stressed the importance of investment in agriculture; emphasized the need for promoting an enabling and predictable environment conducive to direct investment in agriculture; and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue its work on the proposed Principles for Responsible International Investment in Agriculture for Sustainable Development. The Commission recognized the relevance of administrative efficiency in facilitating business, especially for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs); stressed the need for transparency, which contributed to fighting corruption; noted that UNCTAD support in building the technical and managerial capabilities of SMEs through Empretec (the UNCTAD programme to promote the creation of sustainable SMEs) played an important role in instilling entrepreneurial skills that enabled some SMEs to participate in global value chains; and welcomed the expansion of Empretec to more developing countries, especially LDCs.

In agreed conclusions on the outcomes of expert meetings, the Commission took note of the reports of: the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Enterprise

Development Policies and Capacity-building in Science, Technology and Innovation on its second session (Geneva, 20–22 January) [TD/B/C.II/MEM.1/7]; the Multi-year Expert Meeting on International Cooperation: South-South Cooperation and Regional Integration on its second session (Geneva, 14–16 December 2009) [TD/B/C.II/MEM.2/6]; the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Investment for Development on its second session (Geneva, 3–5 February 2010) [TD/B/C.II/MEM.3/6]; the Expert Meeting on Green and Renewable Technologies as Energy Solutions for Rural Development (Geneva, 9–11 February) [TD/B/C.II/EM.3/3]; and the Expert Meeting on the Contribution and Effective Use of External Resources for Development, in Particular for Productive Capacity-building (Geneva, 22–24 February) [TD/B/C.II/EM.1/3]. The Commission also took note of the report of the twenty-sixth session of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting [YUN 2009, p. 958], and of the agreed conclusions therein, and approved the provisional agenda for the Group's twenty-seventh session (see p. 962).

TDB, at its fiftieth executive session in July [A/65/15 (Part III)], took note of the Commission's report and endorsed the agreed conclusions contained therein.

Commodities

The joint UNCTAD/DESA report World Economic Situation and Prospects 2011 [Sales No. E.11.II.C.2] and its related report [E/2010/73] stated that primary commodity prices in 2010 fluctuated strongly compared with prices of manufactures. As a result, countries specializing in exports of primary commodities and those with high shares of imports of energy, food and industrial raw materials had large swings in their terms of trade. During 2010, the terms of trade of fuel exporters and exporters of minerals and mining products improved significantly along with rebounding commodity prices, but stayed below the peaks reached in 2008 and 2007. During 2009 and until the third quarter of 2010, the price of agricultural commodities fluctuated around an upward trend. The trend reflected rising global demand, while the volatility around the trend resulted from commodity-specific supply shortfalls caused by adverse climatic conditions, policy measures in some countries to restrict exports of commodities in short supply, and speculative behaviour. The non-oil commodity sector was still reeling from the sharp slide of primary commodity prices that started in 2008. Prices progressively recovered during 2009, but receded, in dollar terms, during the second quarter of 2010 owing to the financial turmoil in Europe. In the second half of 2010, prices surged again as a result of rising demand for commodities in emerging Asian economies, replenishment of industrial inventories in advanced countries, the depreciation of the United States dollar amidst greater exchange-rate volatility, and increasing interest from financial investors in commodity markets. As primary commodities were increasingly seen as alternative financial assets, short-term capital moved deeper into commodity markets, risking higher volatility in commodity prices and raising economic insecurity for many developing countries.

TDB action. TDB, in September [A/65/15 (Part IV) & Corr.1], adopted agreed conclusions [502(LVII)] on economic development in Africa, in which it encouraged UNCTAD to continue its technical assistance to build productive capacity, and in particular to assist African countries, including with the process of transforming commodities into final goods. In an agreed outcome on evaluation and review of UNCTAD implementation of the Accra Accord [503(LVII)], TDB encouraged UNCTAD to enhance the development impact of its commodities work, including by making further improvements in the operation of the Special Unit on Commodities.

United Nations Cocoa Conference

The United Nations Cocoa Conference for the Negotiation of a Successor Agreement to the International Cocoa Agreement, 2001 (Geneva, 19 April and 21–25 June) [TD/COCOA.10/5], held under the auspices of UNCTAD and attended by 53 countries, concluded the new International Cocoa Agreement, 2010 [TD/COCOA.10/3] to replace the 2001 Agreement [YUN 2001, p. 880], which was due to expire in 2012. The Agreement aimed to develop and strengthen international cooperation between producers and consumers in the cocoa sector. It was adopted on 25 June and opened for signature at UN Headquarters on 1 October.

Individual commodities

Cocoa. As at 31 December, there were 18 parties to the International Cocoa Agreement, 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 880]. Cyprus and Sierra Leone became parties during the year.

The International Cocoa Agreement, 2010 (see above) had one signatory (Switzerland).

Sugar. As at 31 December, the International Sugar Agreement, 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 625] had 58 parties. Nicaragua became a party during the year.

Timber. As at 31 December, there were 53 parties to the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1124]. During the year, Austria, Congo, Cyprus, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Fiji, France, Latvia, Luxembourg, Mali, Malta, Papua New Guinea, Peru and Poland became parties.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping finance buffer stocks of specific commodities, as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989, and the Fund became operational later that year. As at 31 December, the Agreement had 116 parties.

Finance

Financial policy

The DESA/UNCTAD World Economic Situation and Prospects 2011 [Sales No. E.11.II.C.2] and its related report [E/2010/73] stated that most countries in 2010 had kept in place, or even intensified, policies of cheap money (low interest rates and quantitative easing) in an effort to help financial sectors return to normalcy and stimulate economic activity. That had, however, added new risks, including greater exchange-rate volatility among major currencies and a surge of volatile capital flows to emerging markets. Such tensions had weakened the commitment to coordinate policies at the international level, which in turn had made dealing with the global imbalances and other structural problems that led to the crisis, as well as those that were created by it, all the more challenging.

A new capital and liquidity reform package, Basel III, was agreed upon and issued by the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision (global standard-setter for the regulation of banks) between July and September. That important step forward required banks to hold larger amounts of capital and reserves against outstanding loans so as to increase their resilience; however, those new capital and liquidity standards applied only to banks. More needed to be done to address risks outside the traditional banking system, which represented a major factor in generating the global crisis in 2008.

Five major policy issues should be addressed: continued and coordinated fiscal stimulus; redesigned fiscal policy to strengthen its impact on employment and structural change; more effective monetary policy to address international spillover effects in the form of increased currency tensions and volatile short-term capital flows; more predictable access to development finance for achieving the MDGs; and more concrete and enforceable targets for international policy coordination.

Financial flows

The DESA/UNCTAD World Economic Situation and Prospects 2011 [Sales No. E.11.II.C.2] and its related report [E/2010/73] stated that net transfers from developing to developed countries amounted to some $557 billion in 2010, a slight increase from the 2009 level. While net private capital inflows to developing economies recovered strongly from their slump in 2008 and early 2009, reaching some $500 billion, they remained well below the pre-crisis levels of 2007. Investors were searching for higher returns, and economic growth in emerging and other developing economies was much stronger than in advanced economies; also, extensive monetary easing had kept interest rates very low in the latter. With continued fragility and the substantial excess liquidity in developed financial markets, investors had shifted parts of their portfolios to emerging markets. Much of the surge in private capital flows to developing countries had taken the form of short-term equity investments, although foreign direct investment (FDI), especially in the extractive industries of commodity-exporting economies, also increased. The surge in capital inflows to emerging economies, fuelled by the quantitative easing in developed countries and portfolio reallocation by international investors, as well as by the weakening of the dollar, led to upward pressure on the exchange rates of some emerging economies. Developing countries responded by intervening in currency markets and imposing capital controls to avoid soaring exchange rates, loss of competitiveness and inflating asset bubbles. The report stressed the need for reform of financial regulation for managing cross-border capital flows.

Economic development in Africa

UNCTAD activities in support of Africa

The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB), at its fiftieth executive session (Geneva, 8 July) [A/65/15 (Part III)], considered and took note of an UNCTAD secretariat report on activities undertaken in favour of Africa [TD/B/EX(50)/2 & Corr.1], which reviewed UNCTAD activities within its three pillars—research and analysis, consensus-building and technical co-operation. UNCTAD supported African countries through partnerships with regional institutions and multilateral organizations. Those collaborations brought synergies to UNCTAD work in Africa and enhanced the impact of its activities.

UNCTAD had strengthened its support to African countries in areas such as trade; information and communications technology; finance and debt management; FDI; science, technology and innovation; tourism; and the environment. UNCTAD research and policy analysis work continued to draw the attention of the international community to Africa's development challenges. Most of the African LDCs were not on target to meet the MDGs, in part due to a lack of adequate national and international policies to meet the challenge of development and poverty reduction in LDCs. Consequently, there was a need to pursue alternative policy responses.

UNCTAD technical cooperation support had strengthened African countries' human and institutional capacities, and there was a growing demand for technical assistance and advisory services. UNCTAD had also contributed to forming an African consensus on global issues. The capacity-building activities provided on multilateral trade and climate change had increased the ability of African countries to protect their interests in the Doha Round and climate change negotiations.

Africa and new forms of development partnership

TDB, at its fifty-seventh session in September [A/65/15 (Part IV) & Corr.1], had before it the UNCTAD Economic Development in Africa Report 2010 [Sales No: E.10.II.D.13], which focused on South-South cooperation: Africa and the new forms of development partnership. The report examined recent trends in the economic relationships between Africa and other developing countries; the new forms of partnership that were animating those relationships; and the variety of institutional arrangements that were guiding and encouraging those new economic relationships. It provided information on African trade with developing countries outside Africa, as well as on official financial flows and FDI into Africa from those countries. Finally, it assessed policy issues arising from the new relationships in each of those areas.

Welcoming the report on 28 September [agreed conclusions 502(LVII)], TDB encouraged African countries to ensure that new loans from developing-country partners were used to finance projects that enhanced domestic capacity to avoid accumulation of unsustainable debt; and better integrate South-South cooperation in their national development strategies and plans. It encouraged the African Union Commission and the regional economic communities to play a more active role in coordinating Africa's relations with other developing countries, focus attention on regional priorities, and ensure a wider spread of the benefits of those partnerships, particularly to the poor and most vulnerable.

International financial system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 64/190 [YUN 2009, p. 933], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on the international financial system and development [A/65/189]. The report reviewed trends in the net transfer of financial resources to developing countries and efforts to reform the international monetary and financial system and architecture. It highlighted the challenges arising from the world financial and economic crisis and its impact on development, in particular in the key areas of financial regulation and supervision, multilateral surveillance, macroeconomic policy coordination, a global financial safety net, the international reserve system and governance reform of the Bretton Woods institutions.

Developing countries as a group continued to provide net financial resources to developed countries, totalling $513 billion in 2009, a sum that was projected to rise to an estimated $641.2 million in 2010. That amount was notably lower than the record high of $883 billion reached in 2008, reflecting the transitory narrowing of global imbalances as a consequence of the global crisis. While official development assistance (ODA) grew slightly in real terms from 2008 to 2009, it was projected to fall short of internationally agreed aid commitments for 2010. Total net ODA from Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) Development Assistance Committee (DAC) member countries rose slightly, by 0.7 per cent in real terms from 2008 to 2009, to reach $119.6 billion, constituting 0.31 per cent of their combined gross national income in 2009.

The international community continued its efforts to overhaul financial regulation and supervision and to review the mandate and responsibilities of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) over surveillance, financing and stability of the international monetary system, including the international reserve system. The evolving regulatory framework needed to take due account of systemic risk and the overall stability of the financial system. Financial regulation should be both flexible enough to take into account domestic circumstances and internationally consistent, moving away from regulatory fragmentation. Multilateral surveillance remained at the centre of crisis-prevention efforts. Along with country-level analysis, it should provide greater coverage of macrofinancial issues, capital flows and systemic risks, including closer examination of members and institutions that were critical for global stability. Assessing international coherence and promoting coordination among national macroeconomic policies should become a chief objective of multilateral cooperation. There was also a need for close coordination of macroeconomic policy decisions with other areas of global governance. In terms of global financial stability, it was vital to strengthen the global financial safety net. A critical issue was to find an appropriate balance and develop effective coordinating mechanisms between multilateral, regional and bilateral arrangements and self-insurance. It was important to continue deliberations on the merits and feasibility of moving to a more balanced and stable global reserve system, including an enhanced role for special drawing rights.

Communication. On 11 March [A/64/706], Singapore, on behalf of the 23-member informal Global Governance Group (3G), transmitted the document “Strengthening the Framework for G-20 Engagement of Non-Members”.

Bretton Woods institutions action. On 25 April, the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the Bank and the Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries (Development Committee) endorsed a 3.13 percentage point increase in the voting power of developing and transition countries at the World Bank, bringing them to 47.19 per cent. That realignment included a selective capital increase of $27.8 billion, including paid-in capital of $1.6 billion.

The IMF Board of Governors, on 15 December, approved a package of far-reaching reforms of the Fund’s quotas and governance. The fourteenth General Review of Quotas was completed with a doubling of quotas to approximately 476.8 billion in special drawing rights (about $734 billion) and a major realignment of quota shares among members.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/434/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/143 without vote [agenda item 18 (b)].

International financial system and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/186 of 20 December 2000 and 56/181 of 21 December 2001, both entitled “Towards a strengthened and stable international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity”, as well as its resolutions 57/241 of 20 December 2002, 58/202 of 23 December 2003, 59/222 of 22 December 2004, 60/186 of 22 December 2005, 61/187 of 20 December 2006, 62/185 of 19 December 2007, 63/205 of 19 December 2008 and 64/190 of 21 December 2009,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration and its resolution 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, in which it endorsed the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”),

Recalling further the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008,

Recalling the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and its outcome document,

Recalling also the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recognizing the work undertaken by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly to follow up on the issues contained in the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development, and taking note of its progress report,

Taking note of the decisions taken at the 2010 spring and annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank,

Expressing deep concern about the ongoing adverse impacts, particularly on development, of the world financial and economic crisis, the worst since the Great Depression, and recognizing that, while global growth is returning, there is a need to sustain the recovery, which is fragile and uneven,

Stressing, in this regard, the need to address the longstanding systemic fragilities and imbalances highlighted by the global crisis and the need for continuing efforts to reform and strengthen the international financial system,

Reaffirming the purposes of the United Nations, as set forth in its Charter, including to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of common ends, and reiterating the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting development,

Reiterating that the international financial system should support sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, sustainable development, and hunger and poverty eradication efforts in developing countries, while allowing for the coherent mobilization of all sources of financing for development,

Stressing the importance of commitment to ensuring sound domestic financial sectors, which make a vital contribution to national development efforts, as an important component of an international financial architecture that is supportive of development,

Recognizing the continued importance of good governance along with national ownership of policies and strategies, and recalling the commitment to promoting effective and efficient economic and financial institutions at all levels, which are key determinants of long-term, sustainable and inclusive economic growth and development, as well as to accelerating the collective recovery from the crisis, including through improved transparency, eradication of corruption and strengthened governance,

Stressing that good governance at the international level is fundamental for achieving sustainable development, reiterating in this regard the importance of promoting global economic governance by addressing the international finance, trade, technology and investment patterns that have an impact on the development prospects of developing countries in order to ensure a dynamic and enabling international economic environment, and reiterating also that, to this effect, the international community should take all necessary and appropriate measures, including ensuring support for structural and macroeconomic reform, finding a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem and increasing the market access of developing countries,

Taking note of the report of the Commission of Experts on Reform of the International Monetary and Financial System convened by the President of the General Assembly at its sixty-third session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recognizes the urgent need to enhance the coherence, governance and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems and the importance of ensuring their openness, fairness and inclusiveness in order to complement national development efforts to ensure sustained economic growth and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Notes the important efforts undertaken nationally, regionally and internationally to respond to the challenges posed by the financial and economic crisis, in order to ensure a full return to growth with quality jobs, to reform and strengthen financial systems and to create strong, sustainable and balanced global growth;

4. Reaffirms that global economic growth and a stable international financial system, inter alia, can support the capacity of developing countries to achieve their national policy objectives and internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and stresses the importance of cooperative and coordinated efforts by all countries and institutions to cope with the risks of financial instability;

5. Notes that the United Nations, on the basis of its universal membership and legitimacy, provides a unique and key forum for discussing international economic issues and their impact on development, and reaffirms that the United Nations is well positioned to participate in various reform processes aimed at improving and strengthening the effective functioning of the international financial system and architecture, while recognizing that the United Nations and the international financial institutions have complementary mandates which make the coordination of their actions crucial;

6. Recalls, in this regard, the resolve to strengthen the coordination of the United Nations system and multilateral financial, trade and development institutions so as to support economic growth, poverty eradication and sustainable development worldwide, on the basis of a clear understanding of and respect for their mandates and governance structures;

7. Stresses that the financial and economic crisis has highlighted the need for reform as well as added new impetus to ongoing international discussions on the reform of the international financial system and architecture, including on issues related to mandate, scope, governance, responsiveness and development orientation, as appropriate, and in this regard encourages continued open, inclusive and transparent dialogue;

8. Recalls that countries must have the flexibility necessary to implement countercyclical measures and to pursue tailored and targeted responses to the crisis, and calls for conditionalities to be streamlined to ensure that they are timely, tailored and targeted and that they support developing countries in the face of financial, economic and development challenges;

9. Notes, in this regard, the recent improvement of the lending framework of the International Monetary Fund through, inter alia, streamlined conditions and the creation of more flexible instruments, such as a flexible credit line, while also noting that new and ongoing programmes should not contain unwarranted procyclical conditionalities;

10. Reaffirms the need to address the often expressed concern regarding the extent of the representation of developing countries in the major standard-setting bodies, therefore welcomes, as a step in the right direction, the expansion of the membership of the Financial Stability Forum, re-established in 2009 as the Financial Stability Board, and of the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision, as well as their increased outreach to non-members, and encourages the major standard-setting bodies to further review their membership while enhancing their effectiveness, with a view to expanding the representation of developing countries as appropriate;

11. Recognizes the role of private capital flows in mobilizing financing for development, stresses the challenges posed by excessive short-term capital inflows to many developing countries, encourages further review of the benefits and disadvantages of macroprudential measures available to mitigate the impact of volatile capital flows, and requests the Secretary-General to take this into account in preparing his report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Notes that developing countries can seek to negotiate, as a last resort, on a case-by-case basis and through existing frameworks, agreements on temporary debt standstills between debtors and creditors in order to help to mitigate the adverse impacts of the crisis and to stabilize macroeconomic developments;

13. Reaffirms the need to continue to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, takes note of recent important decisions on reform of the governance structures, quotas and voting rights of the Bretton Woods institutions, better reflecting current realities and enhancing the voice and participation of developing countries, and reaffirms the need to continue the reform of the governance of those institutions in order to deliver more effective, credible, accountable and legitimate institutions;

14. Calls, in this regard, for the swift implementation of the reform of the voting power of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the World Bank, as endorsed by the Development Committee in its communiqué of 25 April 2010, and of the decision taken by the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund on 5 November 2010 on quotas, voting shares and governance;

15. Notes that allocations of special drawing rights have contributed to increased global liquidity and that there are discussions on policy options to promote long-term stability and the proper functioning of the international monetary system, including the potential role of special drawing rights and the complementary role of various regional arrangements therein, and requests the Secretary-General to take this into account in preparing his report on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Recognizes that effective, inclusive multilateral surveillance should be at the centre of crisis prevention efforts, and stresses the need to strengthen surveillance of economic policies of countries with major financial centres and their impact, inter alia, on international interest rates, exchange rates and capital flows, including private and public financing in developing countries;

17. Stresses the critical need to make regulation and supervision more effective, especially with respect to all major financial centres, instruments and actors, including systemically important financial institutions, credit-rating agencies and hedge funds, notes the efforts under way in this regard, including those of the Basel Committee on Banking Supervision and the Financial Stability Board, and stresses, while recognizing different national starting points and circumstances, the importance of global regulatory convergence, to prevent regulatory arbitrage, and the global implementation of standards;

18. Invites the international financial and banking institutions to enhance the transparency of risk-rating mechanisms, noting that sovereign risk assessments made by the private sector should maximize the use of strict, objective and transparent parameters, which can be facilitated by high-quality data and analysis, and encourages relevant development institutions, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to continue their work on the issue, including its potential impact on the development prospects of developing countries;

19. Calls upon the multilateral, regional and subregional development banks and development funds to continue to play a vital role in serving the development needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including through coordinated action, as appropriate, stresses that strengthened regional development banks and subregional financial institutions can add flexible financial support to national and regional development efforts, thus enhancing their ownership and overall efficiency, and in this regard welcomes recent capital increases at multilateral and regional development banks and, in addition, encourages efforts to ensure that subregional development banks are adequately funded;

20. Encourages enhanced regional and subregional cooperation, including through regional and subregional development banks, commercial and reserve currency arrangements and other regional and subregional initiatives;

21. Stresses the need to continuously improve standards of corporate and public sector governance, including those related to accounting, auditing and measures to ensure transparency, noting the disruptive effects of inadequate policies;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, to be prepared in cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions and other relevant stakeholders;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "International financial system and development".

Also on 20 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/65/434] on macroeconomic policy questions, including those related to the international financial system and development and external debt sustainability and development (decision 65/525).

Debt problems of developing countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 64/191 [YUN 2009, p. 936], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/65/155] that reviewed developments regarding the external debt of developing countries, with a special focus on the impact of the global financial and economic crisis on external debt sustainability. The report discussed policies and institutions aimed at reducing the prevalence and costs of debt crises. It described progress on debt relief and ODA and analysed new trends and modalities in multilateral financing.

Although several developing countries had demonstrated resilience vis-à-vis the crisis, they faced the risk of exhausting their limited policy space, in particular fiscal space. The LDCs and small, vulnerable low- and middle-income economies were at particular risk. The international community should continue to support those countries with grants, increased access to concessional financing and, when necessary, debt relief. Budgetary problems in the advanced economies should not be used as an excuse for cutting foreign aid, which absorbed a minuscule portion of the total fiscal outlay of most donor countries. Policies aimed at mitigating the prevalence and cost of the debt crisis involved the promotion of newer and safer debt instruments; regulation aimed at reducing destabilizing capital flows; the creation of an effective international lender of last resort; the design of guidelines aimed at limiting solvency crises by promoting responsible sovereign borrowing and lending to sovereigns; and the design of a mechanism for dealing with sovereign debt crises. A review of policies and frameworks was also needed. In particular, a review of the use and role of the Debt Sustainability Framework—the joint World Bank-IMF programme to support low-income countries in their efforts to achieve their development goals without creating future debt problems—was warranted in the light of its central role in determining the availability and the terms on which resources were delivered to developing countries. While reforming the financial architecture was a challenging task, there were several easy-to-implement actions that could have a positive impact on systemic stability, such as data collection and reporting. While having timely and comprehensive data on the level and composition of debt was a necessary condition for building early warning systems, cross-country data on the level of external debt of developing countries were available only with a one-year lag; there was no comprehensive cross-country data set covering the level and composition, by currency and maturity, of domestic debt, and information on subnational debt was often impossible to find. The official sector should intensify its efforts to collect and disseminate those data, and donors should support technical cooperation programmes aimed at increasing the capacity of debt management offices to report timely, comprehensive and accurate debt statistics.

In a later report [A/66/164], the Secretary-General estimated that debt grew by approximately 10 per cent during 2010, bringing total external debt to nearly $3.9 trillion. That large increase in the dollar value of external debt was partly due to movements in the value of the United States dollar in 2010, which depreciated by approximately 6 per cent in effective terms. The average debt service to export ratio of developing countries decreased from 12 per cent in 2009 to an estimated 9.2 per cent in 2010, and their average external debt to gross national income ratio decreased from 21.8 per cent in 2009 to an estimated 20.2 per cent in 2010.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/434/Add.3], adopted resolution 65/144 without vote [agenda item 18 (c)].

External debt sustainability and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/203 of 23 December 2003, 59/223 of 22 December 2004, 60/187 of 22 December 2005, 61/188 of 20 December 2006, 62/186 of 19 December 2007, 63/206 of 19 December 2008 and 64/191 of 21 December 2009,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted on 8 September 2000,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome, Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development and its outcome document and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling also the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and its outcome document,

Recalling further the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003,

Recalling also its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Emphasizing that debt sustainability is essential for underpinning growth, underlining the importance of debt sustainability and effective debt management to the efforts to achieve national development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and acknowledging that sovereign debt crises tend to be costly and disruptive, including for employment and productive investment, and tend to be followed by cuts in public spending, including on health and education, affecting in particular the poor and vulnerable,

Reaffirming that each country has primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies, including in the area of debt management, cannot be overemphasized for the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizing that national efforts, including to achieve development goals and to maintain debt sustainability, should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty,

Reaffirming also that multilateral institutions, including entities within the United Nations system and other relevant organizations, should continue to play an important role, given their respective mandates, in assisting countries in achieving and maintaining debt sustainability,

Reiterating that debt sustainability depends on a confluence of many factors at the international and national levels, and emphasizing that country-specific circumstances and the impact of external shocks, such as those derived from the world financial and economic crisis, should continue to be taken into account in debt sustainability analyses,

Recognizing the importance of efforts undertaken at the national, regional and international levels in response to the challenges posed by the world financial and economic crisis and faced by many developing countries, and acknowledging that the impacts on development of the crisis are still being felt, entail the possibility of undoing the progress made towards achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and threaten debt sustainability in some developing countries through, inter alia, the consequences on the real economy and the increase in borrowing to mitigate the negative impacts of the crisis,

Recognizing also the important role, on a case-by-case basis, of debt relief, including debt cancellation, as appropriate, and debt restructuring as debt crisis prevention and management tools for mitigating the impact of the world financial and economic crisis in developing countries,

Recognizing further the role of private capital flows in mobilizing financing for development, stressing the challenges posed by excessive short-term capital inflows to many developing countries, including to their debt sustainability, and encouraging further review of the benefits and disadvantages of the macroprudential measures available to mitigate the impact of volatile capital flows,

Expressing concern that some low-income countries may face increased challenges in servicing their debt,

Noting with appreciation that the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative and bilateral donors have provided substantial debt relief to thirty countries that have reached the completion point under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, which has considerably reduced their debt vulnerability and enabled them to increase their investments in social services, while acknowledging with concern that some post-completion point countries remain classified as being at high risk of debt distress and need to avoid rebuilding unsustainable debt burdens,

Noting that six additional countries have reached the decision point under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and that four out of forty eligible heavily indebted poor countries still have to reach the decision point, expressing concern that nearly all of these ten eligible countries, which are facing difficulties in reaching the decision or completion point under the Initiative, are classified as fragile economies by the World Bank, and stressing the importance of assisting these countries, as appropriate, in addressing their challenges to complete the heavily indebted poor countries process,

Convinced that enhanced market access for goods and services of export interest to developing countries contributes significantly to debt sustainability in those countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Emphasizes the special importance of a timely, effective, comprehensive and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries in order to promote their economic growth and development;

3. Stresses the importance of responsible lending and borrowing, emphasizes that creditors and debtors must share responsibility for preventing unsustainable debt situations, and encourages Member States, the Bretton Woods institutions, the regional development banks and other relevant multilateral financial institutions and stakeholders to pursue the ongoing discussions within the framework of the initiative of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to promote responsible sovereign lending and borrowing, taking into account the work on this issue carried out by other organizations and forums;

4. Urges all lenders and borrowers to integrate debt sustainability analyses into their decisions in order to help maintain sustainable levels of debt through a coordinated and cooperative approach between borrowers and lenders, underlines the role played by the Debt Sustainability Framework for low-income countries, jointly developed by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in helping to guide borrowing and lending decisions, notes the recent review of the flexibility of the Framework, and encourages continued review of the Framework, with the full engagement of borrower Governments, in an open and transparent manner;

5. Reiterates that no single indicator should be used to make definitive judgements about debt sustainability, and in this regard, while acknowledging the need to use transparent and comparable indicators, invites the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in their assessment of debt sustainability, to continue to take into account the fundamental changes caused by, inter alia, natural disasters, conflicts and changes in global growth prospects or in the terms of trade, especially for commodity-dependent developing countries, as well as by the impact of developments in financial markets, and to provide information on this issue using the appropriate cooperation forums, including those involving Member States;

6. Recognizes that the long-term sustainability of debt depends on, inter alia, the economic growth, mobilization of domestic resources and export prospects of debtor countries and hence on the creation of an enabling international environment conducive to development, progress in following sound macroeconomic policies, transparent and effective regulatory frameworks and success in overcoming structural development problems;

7. Also recognizes the enormity and the multidimensional nature of the world financial and economic crisis, which caused a sharp deterioration of the debt ratios in several developing countries, stresses the need to continue to assist developing countries in avoiding a build-up of unsustainable debt so as to reduce the risk of relapsing into another debt crisis, takes note in this regard of the additional resources made available during and since the crisis through the International Monetary Fund and the multilateral development banks, and calls for the continued provision of concessional and grant-based financing to low-income countries to enable them to respond to the consequences of the crisis;

8. Further recognizes the roles of the United Nations and the international financial institutions in accordance with their respective mandates, and encourages them to continue to support global efforts towards sustained, inclusive and equitable growth, sustainable development and the external debt sustainability of developing countries, including through continued monitoring of global financial flows and their implications in this regard;

9. Emphasizes the need for coordinated policies aimed at fostering debt financing, debt relief and debt restructuring, notes the recent improvement of the lending framework of the International Monetary Fund, through, inter alia, streamlined conditions and the creation of more flexible instruments, while noting that new and ongoing programmes should not contain unwarranted procyclical conditionalities, calls for the continued review of the new lending facilities, and urges the multilateral development banks to move forward on flexible, concessional, fast-disbursing and front-loaded assistance that will substantially and quickly assist developing countries facing financing gaps in their efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, bearing in mind that new lending facilities will have to consider the individual absorptive capacities and debt sustainability of those countries;

10. Notes the provision by the International Monetary Fund of interest relief to low-income countries in the form of zero-interest payments on financing from concessional lending facilities until the end of 2011, and invites the Fund to consider reviewing its concessional loan facilities for low-income countries for the post-2011 period;

11. Also notes that developing countries can seek to negotiate, as a last resort, on a case-by-case basis and through existing frameworks, agreements on temporary debt standstills between debtors and creditors in order to help mitigate the adverse impacts of the crisis and stabilize macroeconomic developments;

12. Further notes the progress made under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative, while expressing concern that some countries have yet to reach decision or completion points, calls for the full and timely implementation of those Initiatives and for continued support to the remaining eligible countries in completing the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative process, and encourages all parties, both creditors and debtors, to fulfil their commitments as rapidly as possible in order to complete the debt relief process;

13. Welcomes and encourages the efforts of the heavily indebted poor countries, calls upon them to continue to strengthen their domestic policies to promote economic growth and poverty eradication through, inter alia, the creation of a domestic environment conducive to private-sector development, a stable macroeconomic framework and transparent and accountable systems of public finance, and in this regard invites creditors, both private and public, that are not yet fully participating in debt relief initiatives to substantially increase their participation, including by providing comparable treatment to the extent possible to debtor countries that have concluded sustainable debt relief agreements with creditors, and invites the international financing institutions and the donor community to continue to provide adequate and sufficiently concessional financing;

14. Underlines the fact that heavily indebted poor countries eligible for debt relief will not be able to enjoy its full benefits unless all creditors, both public and private, contribute their fair share and become involved in the international debt resolution mechanisms to ensure the debt sustainability of those countries;

15. Encourages donor countries to take steps to ensure that resources provided for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative do not detract from official development assistance resources intended to be available for developing countries;

16. Notes with concern that some low- and middle-income developing countries that are not included in existing debt relief initiatives may have large debt burdens that may create constraints on mobilizing the resources needed to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, indicating a possible need to consider debt relief initiatives for those countries on a case-by-case basis;

17. Encourages the Paris Club, in dealing with the debt of low- and middle-income debtor countries that are not part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, to take into account their medium-term debt sustainability in addition to their financing gaps, and notes with appreciation the Evian approach of the Paris Club in providing different terms of debt relief in order to respond to the specific needs of debtor countries while preserving debt cancellation for heavily indebted poor countries;

18. Stresses the need to significantly address the debt problems of middle-income developing countries, and in this regard stresses the importance of the Evian approach of the Paris Club as a practical means of addressing this issue, and notes that the current debt sustainability framework used to analyse the debt situation of middle-income countries focuses mostly on medium-term debt dynamics;

19. Also stresses the need for the international community to remain vigilant in monitoring the debt situation of the least developed countries and to continue to take effective measures, preferably within existing frameworks, to address the debt problem of those countries, including through the cancellation of the multilateral and bilateral debt owed by least developed countries to creditors, both public and private;

20. Welcomes the efforts of and calls upon the international community to provide flexibility, and stresses the need to continue those efforts in helping post-conflict developing countries, especially those that are heavily indebted and poor, to achieve initial reconstruction for economic and social development;

21. Also welcomes the efforts of and invites creditors to provide flexibility to developing countries affected by natural disasters so as to allow them to address their debt concerns, while taking into account their specific situations and needs;

22. Stresses that debt relief can play a key role in liberating resources that should be directed towards activities consistent with poverty eradication, sustained economic growth, economic development and the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard urges countries to direct the resources freed through debt relief, in particular through debt cancellation and reduction, towards those objectives;

23. Calls for the consideration of additional measures and initiatives aimed at ensuring long-term debt sustainability through increased grant-based and other forms of concessional financing, the cancellation of 100 per cent of the eligible official multilateral and bilateral debt of heavily indebted poor countries and, where appropriate and on a case-by-case basis, significant debt relief or restructuring for developing countries with an unsustainable debt burden that are not part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative;

24. Invites donor countries, taking into account country-specific debt sustainability analyses, to continue their efforts to increase bilateral grants to developing countries, which could contribute to debt sustainability in the medium to long term, and recognizes the need for countries to be able to promote employment and productive investment and to invest in, inter alia, health and education while maintaining debt sustainability;

25. Calls for the intensification of efforts to prevent and mitigate the prevalence and cost of debt crises by enhancing international financial mechanisms for crisis prevention and resolution, encourages the private sector to cooperate in this regard, and invites creditors and debtors to further explore, where appropriate and on a mutually agreed, transparent and case-by-case basis, the use of new and improved debt instruments and innovative mechanisms such as debt swaps, including debt for equity in Millennium Development Goal projects, as well as debt-indexation instruments;

26. Also calls for the consideration of enhanced approaches to sovereign debt restructuring and debt resolution mechanisms, based on existing frameworks and principles, with the broad participation of creditors and debtors, the comparable treatment of all creditors and an important role for the Bretton Woods institutions and other relevant organizations within the United Nations system, and, in this regard, calls upon all countries to promote and contribute to the discussions, including within the United Nations and other appropriate forums, on the need for and feasibility of a more structured framework for international cooperation in this area;

27. Notes the changing composition of the sovereign debt of some countries, which has shifted increasingly from official to commercial borrowing and from external to domestic public debt, although for most low-income countries external finance is still largely official, also notes that the levels of domestic debt and the significantly increased number of creditors, both official and private, could create other challenges for macroeconomic management and public debt sustainability, and stresses the need to address the implications of these changes, including through improved data collection and analysis;

28. Recognizes concerns about increasing vulture fund litigation, and in this regard also recognizes that Paris Club agreements represent useful instruments for international cooperation and that debtor countries experience difficulties in obtaining comparable treatment from other creditors, as required by the standard clause included in those agreements;

29. Stresses the need to increase information-sharing, transparency and the use of objective criteria in the construction and evaluation of debt scenarios, including an assessment of domestic public and private debt, in order to ensure the achievement of development goals, recognizes that credit-rating agencies play a significant role in the provision of information, including the assessment of corporate and sovereign risks, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to include an update on the oversight of credit-rating agencies when preparing his report on the implementation of the present resolution;

30. Invites the international community to continue efforts to increase support, including financial and technical assistance, for institutional capacity-building in developing countries to enhance sustainable debt management as an integral part of national development strategies, including by promoting transparent and accountable debt management systems and negotiation and renegotiation capacities and through supporting legal advice in relation to tackling external debt litigation and debt data reconciliation between creditors and debtors so that debt sustainability may be achieved and maintained;

31. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, in cooperation with the regional commissions, development banks and other relevant multilateral financial institutions and stakeholders, to continue and intensify cooperation in respect of capacity-building activities in developing countries in the area of debt management and debt sustainability;

32. Encourages further improvement of the mutual exchange of information, on a voluntary basis, on borrowing and lending among all creditors and borrowers;

33. Acknowledges that timely and comprehensive data on the level and composition of debt are a condition necessary for, inter alia, building early warning systems aimed at limiting the impact of debt crises, calls for debtor and creditor countries to intensify their efforts to collect data, and calls for donors to consider increasing their support for technical cooperation programmes aimed at increasing the statistical capacity of developing countries in that regard;

34. Calls upon all Member States and the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions and the private sector, to take appropriate measures and actions for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits, in particular those related to the question of the external debt sustainability of developing countries;

35. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to include in that report a comprehensive and substantive analysis of the external debt situation of developing countries;

36. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "External debt sustainability and development".

Financing for development

Follow-up to International Conference on Financing for Development and 2008 Review Conference

In 2010, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and other bodies followed up on the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico [YUN 2002, p. 953] and the 2008 Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha, Qatar [YUN 2008, p. 1076].

High-level meeting of Economic and Social Council, Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD. The Economic and Social Council, in accordance with resolution 2009/30 [YUN 2009, p. 941] and decision 2010/202 of 9 February, held a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions, WTO and UNCTAD (New York, 18–19 March) under the theme "Building on Monterrey and Doha: achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the MDGs". The meeting's discussions focused on three sub-themes: "Mobilizing domestic and international resources to fund existing and emerging MDG implementation gaps"; "Supporting the rehabilitation, recovery and development efforts of developing countries with special needs and those facing humanitarian emergency situations"; and "Enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development". The meeting had before it a note by the Secretary-General [E/2010/11] that provided background information and suggested discussion points under the three sub-themes.

In his summary of the meeting [A/65/81-E/2010/83], the President of the Economic and Social Council stated that many participants agreed that the implementation of the global commitments enshrined in the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953] and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development [YUN 2008, p. 1069] was urgent and necessary in supporting the achievement of the MDGs. Many speakers viewed the mobilization of domestic resources, along with improved public financial management and an enabling environment, as the primary drivers for development and noted that all official development assistance (ODA) commitments needed more than ever to be fulfilled. Innovative sources of financing would be an important complement to ODA but should not be viewed as an alternative. Several participants emphasized that efforts to spur rehabilitation, recovery and development in countries with special needs should focus on increasing the productive capacity of the economy to overcome supply-side constraints and generate employment opportunities based on decent work, which would in turn help to reduce poverty, and highlighted the need to focus IMF surveillance activities on systemically important countries, financial markets and the spillover effects of domestic actions. Some speakers noted the importance of strengthening regulatory mechanisms for financial flows, the need for an international sovereign debt restructuring mechanism and the need to consider setting up regional monetary funds. A number of participants raised the problem of financial speculation and possible ways of addressing it, including the imposition of a financial transaction tax and domestic capital controls.

Fourth High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development. On 23 February (decision 64/551), the General Assembly, recalling its resolution 64/194 [YUN 2009, p. 945], in which it decided to hold its fourth High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development on 16 and 17 March, decided, instead, to convene the Dialogue on 23 and 24 March in New York. The theme of the Dialogue was “The Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: status of implementation and tasks ahead”. In his summary of the meeting [A/65/130], the Assembly President said that three round tables and an informal interactive dialogue addressed the reform of the international monetary and financial system and its implications for development; the impact of the financial and economic crisis on foreign direct investment and other private flows, external debt and international trade; the role of financial and technical development cooperation, including innovative sources of development finance, in leveraging the mobilization of domestic and international financial resources for development; and the link between financing for development and achieving the MDGs.

Most speakers in the plenary meeting of the Dialogue addressed the reform of global economic governance with a view to increasing the voice and participation of developing and transition economies to reflect the changing world economy. Some speakers called for expanding the participation of African countries in those institutions, in groups such as the G-20 and in the norm-setting bodies. While there was general agreement that mobilization of domestic resources was the primary source of finance for development, many speakers noted that it was necessary to mobilize a full range of international financing to supplement domestic resources. Almost all speakers called for the outcome of the Doha Round of multilateral trade negotiations to deliver on its development agenda and for the use of trade as a tool to promote sustainable development. A number of speakers emphasized that developing countries needed an enabling policy environment and appropriate regulatory mechanisms for attracting foreign investment to develop productive capacities. The importance of innovative sources of financing in supplementing traditional development assistance was noted. Many speakers called for a just, lasting and development-oriented solution to the external indebtedness of developing countries to free up resources for development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2010/26 [draft: E/2010/L.12/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 6 (a)].

Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development and the 2008 Review Conference

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002 and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008,

Recalling also the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 64/193 of 21 December 2009 on the follow-up to and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the outcome of the 2008 Review Conference (Doha Declaration on Financing for Development), Economic and Social Council resolution 2009/30 of 31 July 2009 on a strengthened and more effective intergovernmental inclusive process to carry out the financing for development follow-up, and all other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Council,

Taking note of the summary by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in New York on 18 and 19 March 2010,

Taking note also of the note by the Secretary-General entitled “Building on Monterrey and Doha: towards achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals”,

Noting the deliberations held in the context of the preparatory process for the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, to be held from 20 to 22 September 2010,

Reaffirming the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development in its entirety, its integrity and its holistic approach, recalling the resolve to take concrete action to implement the Monterrey Consensus and address the challenges of financing for development in the spirit of global partnership and solidarity in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Mindful that Member States and other stakeholders have put forward concrete proposals on the subject of strengthening the financing for development follow-up process,

Reaffirms that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized for the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizing that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty,

Deeply concerned by the adverse impacts of the global financial and economic crisis on development, including on the capacity of developing countries to mobilize resources for development, and recognizing that an effective response to the current crisis requires the timely implementation of existing aid commitments,

1. Reaffirms the importance of staying fully engaged, nationally, regionally and internationally, in ensuring proper and effective follow-up to the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, as reaffirmed in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development, and of continuing unrelenting efforts to build bridges between all relevant stakeholders within the holistic agenda of the financing for development process;

2. Reiterates the role played by the United Nations as a focal point for the financing for development follow-up process and the need to maintain this role to ensure the continuity and dynamism of the process, while reaffirming the need to further intensify the engagement of all stakeholders, including the United Nations system, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization, in the follow-up to and implementation of the commitments made at Monterrey and at Doha;

3. Reaffirms the role of the Economic and Social Council in promoting coherence, coordination and cooperation in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration and as a forum for multi-stakeholder involvement;

4. Emphasizes that the financing for development follow-up process should constitute a continuum of events, each contributing to and feeding into the next, ensuring the holistic nature of the process and making better and more effective use of existing mechanisms and resources;

5. Welcomes the new modalities of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and notes the consultations held with those stakeholders prior to that meeting;

6. Also welcomes the substantive discussions undertaken during the special high-level meeting of the Council, and emphasizes that those discussions are an integral part of the financing for development follow-up process;

7. Further welcomes the increased interaction and coordination at the staff level with the institutions involved prior to the special high-level meeting of the Council;

8. Encourages the President of the Council, in consultation with Member States, to continue to work with the appropriate representatives of the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to improve the agenda and the format of the special high-level meeting of the Council, considering innovative approaches that are conducive, inter alia, to the high-level participation of those institutions;

9. Welcomes the efforts undertaken to give more prominence to the consideration of the agenda item on financing for development during the annual substantive session of the Council, including the allocation of the item to its coordination segment, and stresses its resolve to continue to improve those modalities;

10. Encourages all relevant stakeholders to consider organizing seminars, panel discussions and briefings as part of the preparations for and contribution to the above-mentioned events in order to raise visibility, attract interest and participation and promote substantive discussions on a continuing basis;

11. Reiterates the importance of further improving cooperation between the United Nations, the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration, based on a clear understanding and respect for their respective mandates and governance structures;

12. Welcomes, in this regard, the participation of the President of the Council in the meeting of the Development Committee of the Bretton Woods institutions on 25 April 2010 as a useful practice;

13. Encourages the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, especially the Financing for Development Office, to maintain regular interaction at the staff level with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in the interest of greater coherence, coordination and cooperation, each acting in accordance with its respective intergovernmental mandate;

14. Acknowledges the efforts already undertaken to strengthen the financing for development follow-up process, underscores the fact that the modalities of the process should be reviewed, as appropriate, within a time frame to be determined by the General Assembly, and notes that the Secretary-General will present concrete proposals on the further strengthening of the financing for development follow-up process for consideration by Member States at the sixty-fifth session of the Assembly;

15. Reiterates its appeal to Member States and other potential donors to consider contributing generously to the Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, which would facilitate the implementation of a strengthened and more effective intergovernmental inclusive process to carry out the financing for development follow-up.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 64/193 [YUN 2009, p. 942], the Secretary-General in August submitted his annual assessment [A/65/293] of the state of implementation of the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953] and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development [YUN 2008, p. 1069]. He described recent developments within the six thematic areas: mobilizing domestic financial resources for development; mobilizing international resources for development; foreign direct investment (FDI) and other private flows; international trade as an engine for development; increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development; external debt; and addressing systemic issues. Other developments related to strengthening the financing for development inter-governmental follow-up process.

Communication. On 29 September [A/65/486], Yemen, as Chairman of the Group of 77 developing countries and China, transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the thirty-fourth annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group (New York, 28 September), which addressed, among other issues, the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development and the 2008 Review Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/435], adopted resolution 65/145 without vote [agenda item 19].

Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008, and its resolutions 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, 57/250, 57/272 and 57/273 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 58/230 of 23 December 2003, 59/225 of 22 December 2004, 60/188 of 22 December 2005, 61/191 of 20 December 2006, 62/187 of 19 December 2007, 63/239 of 24 December 2008 and 64/193 of 21 December 2009, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 2002/34 of 26 July 2002, 2003/47 of 24 July 2003, 2004/64 of 16 September 2004, 2006/45 of 28 July 2006, 2007/30 of 27 July 2007, 2008/14 of 24 July 2008, 2009/30 of 31 July 2009 and 2010/26 of 23 July 2010,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and its outcome document,

Recalling the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document, Taking note of the summary by the President of the General Assembly of the fourth High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development, held in New York on 23 and 24 March 2010,

Taking note also of the summary by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in New York on 18 and 19 March 2010,

Taking note further of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development",

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General entitled "Building on Monterrey and Doha: towards achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals",

Taking note also of the progress report of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly to follow up on the issues contained in the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development,

Noting the informal event on innovative sources of development finance organized by the Secretary-General on 3 June 2010,

1. Reaffirms the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development in its entirety, its integrity and its holistic approach, and recalls the resolve to take concrete action to implement the Monterrey Consensus and to address the challenges of financing for development in the spirit of global partnership and solidarity in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

2. Also reaffirms that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized for the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizes that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty;

3. Expresses deep concern about the ongoing adverse impacts of the global financial and economic crisis on development, including on the capacity of developing countries to mobilize resources for development, recognizes that, while global growth is returning, there is a need to sustain the recovery, which is fragile and uneven, and acknowledges that an effective response to the impacts of the crisis requires timely implementation of all development commitments, including existing aid commitments;

4. Recalls the importance of the overall commitment to just and democratic societies for development as spelled out in the Monterrey Consensus;

5. Reaffirms its determination to advance and strengthen the global partnership for development as the centrepiece of cooperation in the years ahead, as reaffirmed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, entitled "Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals”;

6. Recognizes that the mobilization of financial resources for development and the effective use of all those resources are central to the global partnership for development, including in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

7. Also recognizes that the mobilization of domestic and international resources and an enabling domestic and international environment are key drivers for development;

8. Reaffirms the importance of the implementation of the commitment to sound policies, good governance at all levels and the rule of law;

9. Recognizes that a dynamic, inclusive, well-functioning and socially responsible private sector is a valuable instrument for generating economic growth and reducing poverty, emphasizes the need to pursue, at the national level and in a manner consistent with national laws, appropriate policy and regulatory frameworks through which to encourage public and private initiatives, including at the local level, and to foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector, while improving income growth and distribution, raising productivity, empowering women and protecting labour rights and the environment, and reiterates the importance of ensuring that the benefits of growth reach all people by empowering individuals and communities;

10. Emphasizes that the financial and economic crisis has demonstrated the need for more effective government involvement so as to ensure an appropriate balance between the market and the public interest, and recognizes the need to better regulate financial markets;

11. Reiterates the importance of investment in human capital, inter alia, in health and education, through inclusive social policies, in accordance with national strategies and priorities;

12. Recalls that the ongoing fight against corruption at all levels is a priority, reaffirms the need to take urgent and decisive steps to continue to combat corruption in all its manifestations in order to reduce obstacles to effective resource mobilization and allocation and to prevent the diversion of resources away from activities that are vital for development, recalls that this requires strong institutions at all levels, including, in particular, effective legal and judicial systems, and enhanced transparency, recognizes the efforts and achievements of developing countries in this regard, notes the increased commitment of States that have already ratified or acceded to the United Nations Convention against Corruption, and in this regard urges all States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention;

13. Also recalls the resolve of Member States to enhance and strengthen domestic resource mobilization and fiscal space, including, where appropriate, through modernized tax systems, more efficient tax collection, the broadening of the tax base and the effective combating of tax evasion and capital flight, and reiterates that, while each country is responsible for its tax system, it is important to support national efforts in these areas by strengthening technical assistance and enhancing international cooperation and participation in addressing international tax matters;

14. Reaffirms the importance of implementing measures to curtail illicit financial flows at all levels, enhancing disclosure practices and promoting transparency in financial information, and in this regard notes that strengthening national and multinational efforts to address this issue is crucial, including through support and technical assistance to developing countries to enhance their capacities;

15. Notes that foreign direct investment is a major source of financing for development, and in this regard calls upon developed countries to continue to devise source-country measures to encourage and facilitate the flow of foreign direct investment, inter alia, through the provision of export credits and other lending instruments, risk guarantees and business development services; calls upon developing countries and countries with economies in transition to continue their efforts to create a domestic environment conducive to attracting investments by, inter alia, achieving a transparent, stable and predictable investment climate with proper contract enforcement and respect for property rights; and stresses the importance of enhancing efforts to mobilize investment from all sources in human resources and physical, environmental, institutional and social infrastructure;

16. Reaffirms that international trade is an engine for development and sustained economic growth, and also reaffirms the critical role that a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can play in stimulating economic growth and development worldwide, thereby benefiting all countries at all stages of development;

17. Emphasizes the need to resist protectionist tendencies and to rectify any trade-distorting measures already taken that are inconsistent with World Trade Organization rules, recognizing the right of countries, in particular developing countries, to fully utilize their flexibilities consistent with their World Trade Organization commitments and obligations, and that the early and successful conclusion of the Doha Round with a balanced, ambitious, comprehensive and development-oriented outcome would provide much-needed impetus to international trade and contribute to economic growth and development;

18. Stresses the essential role that official development assistance plays in complementing, leveraging and sustaining financing for development in developing countries and in facilitating the achievement of development objectives, including the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the Millennium Development Goals, reiterates that official development assistance can play a catalytic role in assisting developing countries in removing constraints on sustained, inclusive and equitable growth by, inter alia, enhancing social, institutional and physical infrastructure, promoting foreign direct investment, trade and technological innovations, improving health and education, fostering gender equality, preserving the environment and eradicating poverty, and welcomes steps to improve the effectiveness and quality of aid based on the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization, managing for results and mutual accountability;

19. Underlines the fact that the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015 and to reach a level of at least 0.5 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance by 2010, as well as a target of 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to least developed countries, and urges developed countries that have not yet done so to fulfil their commitments for official development assistance to developing countries;

20. Reaffirms that the United Nations funds, programmes and regional commissions, and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, in accordance with their respective mandates, have an important role to play in advancing development and protecting development gains, in accordance with national strategies and priorities, including progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, and reaffirms its determination to continue to take steps for a strong, well-coordinated, coherent, effective and efficient United Nations system in support of the Goals;

21. Considers that innovative mechanisms of financing can make a positive contribution in assisting developing countries in mobilizing additional resources for financing for development on a voluntary basis and that such financing should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of financing, and, while recognizing the considerable progress in innovative sources of financing for development, calls for the scaling-up of current initiatives, where appropriate;

22. Welcomes the ongoing efforts to strengthen and support South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, stresses that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation, and calls for the effective implementation of the Nairobi outcome document of the High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, held in Nairobi from 1 to 3 December 2009;

23. Emphasizes the great importance of a timely, effective, comprehensive and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries, since debt financing and relief can be an important source of capital for economic growth and development, and also emphasizes that creditors and debtors must share responsibility for preventing unsustainable debt situations;

24. Also emphasizes that debt sustainability is essential for underpinning growth, and underlines the importance of debt sustainability and effective debt management for efforts to achieve national development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

25. Stresses that the financial and economic crisis has highlighted the need for reform as well as added new impetus to ongoing international discussions on the reform of the international financial system and architecture, including on issues related to mandate, scope, governance, responsiveness and development orientation, as appropriate, and in this regard encourages continued open, inclusive and transparent dialogue;

26. Notes the important efforts undertaken nationally, regionally and internationally to respond to the challenges posed by the financial and economic crisis, in order to ensure a full return to growth with quality jobs, to reform and strengthen financial systems and to create strong, sustainable and balanced global growth;

27. Calls for increased efforts at all levels to enhance policy coherence for development, and affirms that the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals requires mutually supportive and integrated policies for sustainable development;

28. Recognizes that recent special drawing rights allocations helped to increase global liquidity in response to the global financial and economic crisis;

29. Reaffirms the need to continue to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, takes note of recent important decisions on the reform of the governance structures, quotas and voting rights of the Bretton Woods institutions, better reflecting current realities and enhancing the voice and participation of developing countries, and reaffirms the need to continue the reform of the governance of those institutions in order to deliver more effective, credible, accountable and legitimate institutions;

30. Recalls the provisions of its resolution 64/193 and of Economic and Social Council resolutions 2009/30 and 2010/26, relevant to the financing for development follow-up process, and in this regard:

(a) Notes with appreciation the efforts already undertaken to strengthen the financing for development follow-up process;

(b) Acknowledges that the modalities of the financing for development follow-up process should be reviewed, as appropriate, within a time frame to be determined by the General Assembly;

(c) Requests the Secretary-General to submit in August 2012 a report providing elements for an assessment of the existing modalities of the financing for development follow-up process and, on this basis, exploring detailed options regarding possible arrangements for strengthening the process, following his report entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development" and his note entitled "Coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development", taking into account the views and proposals of Member States and all relevant stakeholders and the need to ensure the coherence of United Nations processes in the field of financing for development;

31. Also recalls the decision to consider the need to hold a follow-up conference on financing for development by 2013, as appropriate;

32. Decides to hold its fifth High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development on 7 and 8 December 2011 at United Nations Headquarters, and requests the Secretary-General to prepare a note on the organization of work of that event, based on the organizational modalities of the fourth High-level Dialogue, to be submitted to the General Assembly before the end of its sixty-fifth session;

33. Invites the regional commissions to provide inputs for and to actively participate in the fifth High-level Dialogue, to be held in 2011, and in this context calls upon the regional commissions, with the support of regional development banks and other relevant entities, to hold regional consultations, as appropriate, as part of their inputs to the High-level Dialogue;

34. Reiterates its appeal to Member States and other potential donors to consider contributing generously to the

Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, which would facilitate the implementation of a strengthened and more effective and inclusive intergovernmental process to carry out the financing for development follow-up;

35. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session the item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development and the 2008 Review Conference", and requests the Secretary-General to submit, under that item, an annual analytical assessment of the status of implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development and of the present resolution, to be prepared in full collaboration with the major institutional stakeholders.

Innovative mechanisms of financing for development

General Assembly informal event. In response to a General Assembly request contained in resolution 64/193 [YUN 2009, p. 942], the Assembly held an informal event on innovative sources of development finance (New York, 3 June). On 16 August, France, Japan, Norway and Spain transmitted to the Secretary-General the Chair's summary of the event [A/65/339]. In his closing remarks, the Chair—the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Innovative Financing for Development—said that innovative financing was not just about new taxes, but was based on voluntary solidarity contributions as a complement to ODA. He highlighted the role of the private sector, referring to the advance market commitments initiative on the development of new vaccines and the launch, in March, of the MassiveGood initiative, which allowed travellers to make a small contribution to major global health causes when buying an airline ticket. He also underscored the need to combat illicit capital flows from developing countries and the role of civil society in enhancing accountability and transparency in that area. Other proposals that could be explored included financial transactions and environmental taxes in support of the MDGs.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his August report on the follow-up to and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development [A/65/293] (see p. 955), noted that innovative mechanisms of development finance provided increasingly important contributions to complement ODA. Innovative fund-raising had generated an estimated $57.1 billion in official flows between 2000 and 2008. While a range of schemes had developed, the most successful ones focused on addressing the health-related development agenda. Other proposals under discussion included an international financial/currency transaction tax, carbon taxes, special drawing rights allocations for development, illicit capital flow repatriation and facilitation of remittances. Expectations for identifying innovative financing mechanisms to tackle climate change were particularly high.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/435], adopted resolution 65/146 without vote [agenda item 19].

Innovative mechanisms of financing for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling also the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling further the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development,

Noting the informal event on innovative sources of development finance organized by the Secretary-General on 3 June 2010,

Recognizing the potential of innovative mechanisms of financing to contribute to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Noting the ongoing work on innovative sources of financing for development, including in various forums such as the Leading Group on Innovative Financing for Development,

1. Reaffirms the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus in their entirety, their integrity and their holistic approach, and recognizes that the mobilization of financial resources for development and the effective use of those resources are central to the global partnership for development, including in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

2. Also reaffirms that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized for the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizes that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty;

3. Stresses the essential role that official development assistance plays in complementing, leveraging and sustaining financing for development in developing countries and in facilitating the achievement of development objectives, including the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the Millennium Development Goals, reiterates that official development assistance can play a catalytic role in assisting developing countries in removing constraints on sustained, inclusive and equitable growth by, inter alia, enhancing social, institutional and physical infrastructure, promoting foreign direct investment, trade and technological innovations, improving health and education, fostering gender equality, preserving the environment and eradicating poverty, and welcomes steps to improve the effectiveness and quality of aid based on the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization, managing for results and mutual accountability;

4. Also stresses that innovative mechanisms of financing can make a positive contribution in assisting developing countries in mobilizing additional resources for development on a stable, predictable and voluntary basis;

5. Reiterates that such voluntary mechanisms should be effective, should aim to mobilize resources that are stable and predictable, should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of financing, should be disbursed in accordance with the priorities of developing countries and should not unduly burden such countries;

6. Highlights the considerable progress in innovative sources of financing for development achieved to date, and stresses the importance of scaling up present initiatives and developing new mechanisms, as appropriate;

7. Decides to convene at its sixty-sixth session a separate meeting of the Second Committee under the item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development and the 2008 Review Conference" to consider the question of innovative mechanisms of financing for development;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report examining the contribution and the potential of innovative mechanisms of financing for development in respect of achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, as well as their effectiveness and their implications, taking into account that such mechanisms should be voluntary in nature and should not unduly burden developing countries.

Follow-up to conference on world financial and economic crisis

Report of working group. By resolution 63/305 [YUN 2009, p. 956], the General Assembly established the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group to follow up on the issues contained in the outcome of the 2009 Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development [ibid., p. 947]. The Assembly President appointed Norway and Zambia to serve as co-facilitators. The Working Group held seven meetings between April and June, and in August submitted to the Assembly its progress report [A/64/884].

The Working Group examined the continued impact of the crisis and institutional policy responses to it. It also identified key issues and made proposals for further consideration, including: timetables for further scaling up of ODA; making ODA more effective by full implementation of the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness [YUN 2005, p. 957], the Accra Agenda for Action [YUN 2008, p. 942] and the principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization and managing for results; enhanced accountability in the follow-up of G-20 commitments made at the London Summit [YUN 2009, p. 947] to make available an additional $1.1 trillion programme aimed at revitalizing the world economy; substantial recapitalization of the multilateral development banks to allow them to fulfil their mandate; increased access to concessionary finance for vulnerable middle-income countries; reducing transaction costs for remittances; reduction of conditionalities to enhance the fiscal space of developing countries to pursue countercyclical policies; and an assessment of the new conditionality frameworks of the Bretton Woods institutions before any further changes were considered.

The Assembly took note of the report on 13 September (decision 64/565).

Communication. On 28 July [A/64/886], Yemen transmitted a position paper containing the views and proposals of the Group of 77 and China as a contribution to the deliberations of the Working Group.

Response to global financial and economic crisis

CEB consideration. The High-level Committee on Programmes of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) at its nineteenth session (Geneva, 3–4 March) [CEB/2010/4] considered the state of play of the global financial and economic crisis. Committee members stressed that for the most vulnerable populations, the crisis was far from over. Such indicators as increases in malnutrition, child poverty, decline in household income and the closing of schools were particularly worrisome. Aid flows for development had not been commensurate with the levels of bailout packages for financial institutions. The UN system needed to advocate increasing investment in children, maintaining aid flows and ensuring the availability and monitoring of data. It was also important to use the international normative framework of human rights to develop integrated responses to the crisis and to build the capacities of States to fulfil their obligations. Committee members said that the joint crisis initiatives of the UN system had filled a need and allowed for a common outlook, permitting the UN system to move forward in maintaining the global macroeconomic perspective while paying attention to the human face of the recovery.

UNCTAD symposium. UNCTAD second Public Symposium (Geneva, 10–11 May) [TD/B/57/5 & Corr.1,2 & Add.1] discussed the subject of responding to global crises: new development paths. The event brought together over 300 representatives from around the world, including from civil society, the private sector, parliaments, UN agencies and other international organizations. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board took note of the report on 20 September.

Economic and Social Council action. On 23 July, by resolution 2010/25 on “Recovering from the world financial and economic crisis: a Global Jobs Pact” (see p. 1071), the Economic and Social Council welcomed the Global Jobs Pact adopted by the International Labour Conference in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 947]. The Council said that countries that lacked the fiscal space to adopt appropriate response and recovery policies required particular support, and donor countries, multilateral organizations and other development partners should consider providing funding to implement the Pact’s recommendations and policy options.

Also on 23 July, the Council deferred consideration of the draft resolution entitled “Establishment of an ad hoc panel of experts on the world financial and economic crisis and its impact on development” until its resumed (2010) substantive session (decision 2010/260).

On 15 December, the Council decided to continue its consideration of the draft resolution during its substantive (2011) session, with a view to making final recommendations to the General Assembly (decision 2010/264).

Communication. On 3 February [A/64/649-E/2010/8], the Assembly President transmitted the summary report of the 2009 Parliamentary Hearing (New York, 19–20 November 2009) entitled “The way forward: building political support and implementing effective responses to the global economic crisis”. The annual event, organized by the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the United Nations, was attended by over 160 parliamentarians from some 50 countries and two regional parliaments.

Other issues

Competition law and policy

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy did not meet in 2010. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Commission, in May [TD/B/C.I/13], took note of the report of the tenth (2009) session of the Group of Experts [YUN 2009, p. 958], which served as a preparatory meeting for the Sixth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (see below).

Sixth Review Conference

The Sixth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set) (Geneva, 8–12 November) [TD/RBP/CONF.7/11] marked the thirtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Set [YUN 1980, p. 626], which was a multilateral agreement on competition policy that provided equitable rules for the control of anti-competitive practices; recognized the development dimension of competition law and policy; and provided a framework for international operation and exchange of best practices.

The Conference took note of UNCTAD secretariat documents on assessment of the application and implementation of the Set [TD/RBP/CONF.7/2]; the role of competition policy in promoting economic development: the appropriate design and effectiveness of competition law and policy [TD/RBP/CONF.7/3]; the use of leniency programmes as a tool for the enforcement of competition law against hard-core cartels in developing countries [TD/RBP/CONF.7/4]; appropriate sanctions and remedies [TD/RBP/CONF.7/5]; the role of competition advocacy, merger control and the effective enforcement of law in times of economic trouble [TD/RBP/CONF.7/6]; review of capacity-building and technical assistance on competition law and policy [TD/RBP/CONF.7/7]; Model Law on Competition: substantive possible elements for a competition law, commentaries and alternative approaches in existing legislation [TD/RBP/CONF.7/8]; and voluntary peer review of competition policy: Armenia [UNCTAD/DITC/CLP/2010/1].

Three sessions addressed the implementation of competition law and policy; reviewed the experience gained in implementing the Set, including voluntary peer reviews; and discussed the role of competition policy in economic development. A voluntary peer review examined competition law and policy in Armenia, and a round table discussed the foundations of agency effectiveness. Consultations were held on the revised version of the Model Law on Competition.

By a 12 November resolution, the Conference decided that future sessions of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy should cover at least four clusters of issues: appropriate design and enforcement of competition law and policy; international cooperation and networking; cost-effectiveness, complementarity and collaboration in the provision of capacity-building and technical assistance to interested countries; and consultations on the Model Law. The Group of Experts should undertake an exchange of views and experiences of several developed and other interested countries on issues relating to cases concerning anticompetitive practices and other issues relevant to competition that had been raised by member States. The Conference also decided that, in the light of the worldwide trend towards the adoption or reform of competition laws and the development of national competition laws and policies since the Set was adopted, the Group of Experts should embark on an exercise to map out and strengthen common ground among States in identifying anticompetitive practices affecting the economic development of countries. Governments were invited, during future meetings of the Group of Experts, to clarify the scope or application of their competition laws and policies with a view to improving mutual understanding about substantive principles and procedures.

The Conference was attended by representatives of 102 countries, 11 intergovernmental organizations, three UN system organizations and three non-governmental organizations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 65/142 (see p. 939), welcomed the convening of the Conference and took note of its report.

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (ISAR), at its twenty-seventh session (Geneva, 13–15 October) [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/57], had before it an UNCTAD secretariat document on developing a capacity-building framework for high-quality corporate reporting [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/56 & Add.1]. In agreed conclusions, the Working Group stated that the document provided useful guidance, and requested the UNCTAD secretariat to finalize it based on the discussions at the session and present it to its twenty-eighth (2011) session. The Group of Experts also asked the UNCTAD secretariat to develop further the measurement methodology to assess progress in capacity-building, as well as priorities for the capacity-building process, and to start creating a database of good practices on capacity-building in the area of accounting and reporting.

With regard to climate change-related corporate reporting, ISAR requested UNCTAD to continue its contribution to the field of environmental reporting frameworks, particularly those related to climate change issues, in order to promote a harmonized approach among member States. UNCTAD was also asked to coordinate that work with other international initiatives and with private- and public-sector stakeholders, and to report back on progress to the Group in 2011. As to corporate governance disclosure, ISAR requested UNCTAD to continue to focus on providing information to policymakers, investors and other stakeholders, and to continue to conduct country case studies in partnership with local institutions.

Taxation

Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters

On 23 July, the Economic and Social Council Council, by decision 2010/257, decided to convene the sixth session of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters in Geneva from 18 to 22 October and approved the provisional agenda for the session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Also on 23 July [meeting 46], the Council and adopted resolution 2010/33 [draft: E/2010/L.39] without vote [agenda item 13 (b)].

Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2004/69 of 11 November 2004, by which it decided that the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters would be renamed the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters,

Recognizing the call made in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development for the strengthening of international tax cooperation through enhanced dialogue among national tax authorities and greater coordination of the work of the concerned multilateral bodies and relevant regional organizations, giving special attention to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

Welcoming the request to the Economic and Social Council made in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development and the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development to examine the strengthening of the institutional arrangements to promote international cooperation in tax matters, including the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters,

Recognizing that, while each country is responsible for its tax system, it is important to support efforts in these areas by strengthening technical assistance and enhancing international cooperation and participation in addressing international tax matters, including in the area of double taxation,

Recognizing also the need for an inclusive, participatory and broad-based dialogue on international cooperation in tax matters,

Noting the activities developing within the concerned multilateral bodies and relevant subregional and regional organizations,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on its fifth session,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the views of Member States and taking into consideration the work done on tax matters in other international forums, to submit to the Economic and Social Council by March 2011 a report examining the strengthening of institutional arrangements to promote international cooperation in tax matters, including the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters;

2. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene a discussion within the Council on international cooperation in tax matters by early 2011;

3. Reiterates its appeal to Member States and relevant organizations to consider contributing generously to the Trust Fund for International Cooperation in Tax Matters established by the Secretary-General in order to supplement regular budgetary resources, and invites the Secretary-General to intensify efforts in this regard, which will facilitate adequate representation from developing countries in the meetings of the subcommittees and working groups of the Committee;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the proposed United Nations Code of Conduct on Cooperation in Combating International Tax Evasion adopted by the Committee, and encourages Member States to further discuss the issue within the United Nations, as a practical means of enhancing international tax cooperation.

Committee session. The main task of the sixth session of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters (Geneva, 18–22 October) [E/2010/45-E/C.18/2010/7] was the revision of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, which the Committee was planning to complete by 2011. The session addressed: the United Nations Model Tax Convention update [E/C.18/2010/CRP.1]; dispute resolution [E/C.18/2010/CRP.2 & Add.1]; issues related to attribution of profits under article 7 of the United Nations Model Convention; transfer pricing; practical manual for developing countries [E/C.18/2010/CRP.4]; article 13: capital gains [E/C.18/2010/3]; taxation of development projects; exchange of information; tax treatment of services [E/C.18/2010/CRP.7 & Add.1]; article 14 of the United Nations Model Convention [E/C.18/2010/4 & E/C.18/2010/CRP.8]; the definition of permanent establishment: proposed revised article 5 commentary [E/C.18/2010/5 & E/C.18/2010/6]; the concept of beneficial ownership [E/C.18/2010/CRP.9]; revision of the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries [E/C.18/2010/CRP.10]; capacity-building in national tax systems [E/C.18/2010/CRP.11 & Add.1]; tax cooperation and its relevance to major environmental issues, particularly climate change [E/C.18/2010/CRP.12]; and tax competition in corporate tax: use of tax incentives in attracting FDI [E/C.18/2010/CRP.13]. Regarding exchange of information, the Committee noted the importance of taking up the proposed United Nations Code of Conduct on Cooperation in Combating International Tax Evasion at the country level and renewed its invitation to the Economic and Social Council to take action on the proposed Code of Conduct.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport, 2011 [Sales No. E.11.II.D.4], prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, reported that, after contracting in 2009, international shipping experienced an upswing in demand in 2010 and recorded a positive turnaround in volumes, especially in the dry bulk and container trade segments. Total seaborne trade reached an estimated 8.4 billion tons in 2010. The year saw record deliveries of new tonnage, 28 per cent higher than in 2009, resulting in an 8.6 per cent growth in the world merchant fleet. World container port throughput increased by an estimated 13.3 per cent to 531 million 20-foot equivalent units in 2010, after stumbling briefly in 2009. China maintained its lead as the single most connected country, followed by Hong Kong (China), Singapore and Germany. Important discussions continued at the International Maritime Organization (IMO) regarding the scope and content of a possible international regime to control greenhouse gas emissions from international shipping. Developing countries expanded their participation in a range of maritime businesses: they held strong positions in ship scrapping, ship registration and the supply of seafarers, and had growing market shares in more capital-intensive or technologically advanced maritime sectors such as ship construction and shipowning. China and the Republic of Korea between them built 72.4 per cent of world ship capacity in 2010.

Transport of dangerous goods

Economic and Social Council action. The Economic and Social Council on 28 April (decision 2010/201 B) endorsed the Secretary-General's decision to approve an application from Switzerland for membership in the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and an application from the Russian Federation for membership in the Subcommittee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals.

The Council, on 25 October (decision 2010/201 E), endorsed the Secretary-General's decision to approve an application from the Republic of Korea for membership in the Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, bringing the membership of the Subcommittee to 30.

Committee session. The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, at its fifth session (Geneva, 10 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/38 & Add.1 & Corr.1 &

Add.2,3], noted that the secretariat had issued the sixteenth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, Model Regulations [ST/SG/AC.10/1/Rev.16]; the fifth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, Manual of Tests and Criteria [ST/SG/AC.10/11/Rev.5]; and the third revised edition of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals [ST/SG/AC.10/30/Rev.3]. The three publications were available in the six official languages of the United Nations and in electronic format.

The Committee took note of the reports of the Sub-Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on its thirty-fifth (22–26 June 2009) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/70], thirty-sixth (30 November–9 December 2009) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/72], thirty-seventh (21–30 June 2010) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/74 & Add.1] and thirty-eighth (29 November–7 December 2010) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/76] sessions, all held in Geneva. The Committee endorsed the reports, including the amendments to the recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods and the new recommendations made.

The Committee had before it the reports of the Sub-Committee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals on its seventeenth (29–30 June 2009) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/34], eighteenth (9–11 December 2009) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/36], nineteenth (30 June–2 July 2010) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/38] and twentieth (7–9 December 2010) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/40 & Corr.1] sessions, all held in Geneva. The Committee endorsed the reports of the Sub-Committee, including the amendments to the text of the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals and the new provisions adopted. It also approved the programme of work of its two sub-committees.

The Committee recommended a draft resolution on its work for adoption by the Economic and Social Council at its 2011 substantive session.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

In 2010, the Trade and Development Board (TDB)—the governing body of UNCTAD—held the following sessions, all in Geneva: fifty-seventh annual session (15–28 September) [A/65/15 (Part IV) & Corr.1], forty-ninth (8–9 June) [A/65/15 (Part II)], fiftieth (8 July) [A/65/15 (Part III)] and fifty-first (29–30 November and 2 December) [A/66/15 (Part I)] executive sessions.

In June, TDB addressed the follow-up to the Third (2001) United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries [YUN 2001, p. 770]; preparations for the Fourth (2011) United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries: key development challenges facing the LDCs; and follow-up to the Millennium Summit and preparations for the September 2010 high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals: new development paths. Participants made recommendations on a number of issues including: new development approaches to agriculture and food security; reconsidering the macroeconomic framework; trade diversification and market access; reducing commodity dependence; investment promotion; infrastructure development; science and technology; development finance; and LDCs.

In July, TDB addressed UNCTAD activities in support of Africa; and matters requiring action by the Board arising from or related to reports and activities of its subsidiary bodies. It took note of the reports and endorsed the agreed conclusions of the Trade and Development Commission (second session) [TD/B/C.I/13]; the Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission (second session) [TD/B/C.II/10]; and the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget (fifty-fifth session) [TD/B/WP/220]. It also approved topics for upcoming single-year and multi-year expert meetings.

In September [A/65/15 (Part IV) & Corr.1], TDB took action on economic development in Africa: South-South cooperation: Africa and the new forms of development partnerships [agreed conclusions 502(LVII)]; evaluation and review of UNCTAD's implementation of the Accra Accord [YUN 2008, p. 1042] [agreed outcome 503(LVII)] (see p. 966); and the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing [decision 504(LVII)] (see p. 965). It took note of the following: report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on its forty-third session [A/65/17] (see p. 1339); report of the ITC Joint Advisory Group on its forty-third session [YUN 2009, p. 924]; report on the second UNCTAD Public Symposium (see p. 961); report by the UNCTAD secretariat on assistance to the Palestinian people [TD/B/57/4] (see p. 471); and report by the UNCTAD secretariat on progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, and the UNCTAD contribution [TD/B/57/6]. TDB took note of the report of the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget on its fifty-sixth session (Geneva, 6–8 September) [TD/B/WP/225], and endorsed the agreed conclusions and adopted the draft decision on the review of the technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD and their financing contained therein (see p. 965).

In November–December, TDB adopted agreed conclusions on the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2001–2010 (see p. 843) and held a panel session entitled “From global crisis to sustainable development: the scope for a New International Development Architecture for the least developed countries”.

Technical cooperation

A report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General [TD/B/WP/232 & Add.1,2 & Corr.1], which reviewed UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing in 2010, said that overall expenditures for such activities increased slightly to $39.2 million. Contributions to trust funds totalled $30.7 million, an increase of about 3 per cent over the previous year. Contributions by developing countries amounted to 31 per cent of total contributions to trust funds, about the same as in 2009. Expenditures on interregional projects accounted for 46.5 per cent of total delivery, while expenditures on country projects accounted for 39 per cent. Total delivery in support of LDCs decreased to 34 per cent from 41 per cent in 2009. The Automated System for Customs Data continued to be the largest UNCTAD technical assistance activity, followed by the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System. Those two programmes accounted for 47 per cent of total UNCTAD technical cooperation delivery. Actions in support of implementation of the Accra Accord and TDB decisions continued with a view to enhancing the impact of UNCTAD operational activities; activities in support of system-wide coherence continued to increase. In 2010, UNCTAD received about $0.9 million from funding mechanisms (multi-donor trust funds and One United Nations Funds) at the country level. UNCTAD continued its coordination of the United Nations Chief Executives Board Inter-agency Cluster on Trade and Productive Capacity, which was active in 28 countries.

TDB, in September [A/65/15 (Part IV) & Corr.1], adopted the draft decision on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing contained in the report of the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget on its fifty-sixth session [TD/B/WP/225]. TDB took note of the reports prepared by the secretariat for the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget; expressed appreciation for the increased contribution from the developing countries to the UNCTAD trust funds; and called for more coherence in the planning and implementation of technical cooperation programmes.

Strategic framework and programme budget

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Strategic Framework and Programme Budget held three sessions in 2010, all in Geneva.

At its fifty-fifth session (15–17 February) [TD/B/WP/220], the Working Party considered reports on UNCTAD communications strategy [TD/B/56/9/Rev.1] and publications policy [TD/B/56/10/Rev.1] as well as their implementation [TD/B/WP/219]. In agreed conclusions, the Working Party requested that, in implementing the communications strategy, particular attention be devoted to enhancing outreach to government policymakers. In implementing the publications policy, particular attention should be devoted to the implementation of the Accra Accord; to enhancing the quality, timeliness and relevance of UNCTAD publications; and to ensuring the timely translation of those publications.

At its fifty-sixth session (6–8 September) [TD/B/WP/225], the Working Party adopted a draft decision for consideration by TDB on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing (see above). It adopted agreed conclusions on the in-depth evaluation of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities dedicated to LDCs, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and other structurally weak, vulnerable and small economies [TD/B/WP/223 & Add.1, TD/B/WP/224]. It also adopted agreed conclusions on the progress report [TD/B/EX(50)/4] on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the 2009 evaluation of UNCTAD commodities programme [YUN 2009, p. 964] (see below).

At its fifty-seventh session (22–24 November and 2 December) [TD/B/WP/227], the Working Party adopted agreed conclusions on the review of the programme narrative component of the draft proposed programme budget for the biennium 2012–2013. It concurred with the proposed programme narrative for UNCTAD for the biennium 2012–2013 [TD/B/WP(57)/CRP.1/Rev.1]; recommended to the UNCTAD Secretary-General that he take full account of that document for his submission of the UNCTAD 2012–2013 proposed programme narrative to the UN Secretary-General; and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to intensify UNCTAD technical cooperation activities.

Evaluation

At the fiftieth TDB executive session in July [A/65/15 (Part III)], the UNCTAD secretariat presented a progress report [TD/B/EX(50)/4] on the implementation of recommendations from the 2009 independent external evaluation of UNCTAD commodities programme [YUN 2009, p. 964]. Several TDB participants reaffirmed the importance of UNCTAD work on commodities, noted with concern that the head of the Special Unit on Commodities had not been appointed and asked the UNCTAD Secretary-General to make every effort to make that appointment. TDB asked the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget to carry out a detailed consideration of the progress report.

Implementation of Accra Accord

The Accra Accord, adopted at the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD XII) [YUN 2008, p. 1042], highlighted the role of UNCTAD as the focal point in the UN system for the integrated treatment of trade and development and interrelated issues in the areas of finance, technology, investment and sustainable development. The UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Trade and Development Commission progress reports on the implementation of the provisions of the Accra Accord related to key trade and development issues [TD/B/C.I/9]; commodities [TD/B/C.I/10]; transport and trade facilitation [TD/B/C.I/11]; and cross-divisional capacity-building [TD/B/C.I/12].

In a July report on the evaluation and review of UNCTAD implementation of the Accord [TD/B/57/7 &

Add.1& Corr.1], the UNCTAD secretariat stated that the global economic crisis had featured prominently in UNCTAD work since Accra, as policymakers tried to understand what had gone wrong, mitigate the damage from the crisis, and seek a way forward onto new and more sustainable development paths. UNCTAD had put in place various measures to strengthen its institutional effectiveness and enhance its development role and impact, in accordance with the Accra Accord. In that regard, specific actions had been taken concerning outreach, technical cooperation and the intergovernmental machinery.

On 28 September, in agreed outcome 503(LVII) on the evaluation and review of UNCTAD implementation of the Accra Accord, TDB expressed general satisfaction with UNCTAD implementation of the Accord, while encouraging the secretariat to continue its implementation and highlighting areas that needed special attention.

Regional economic and social activities

In 2010, the five UN regional commissions continued to provide technical cooperation, including advisory services, to their member States, promote programmes and projects, and provide training to enhance national capacity-building in various sectors. Four of them held regular sessions during the year—the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA). The Economic Commission for Europe did not meet in 2010. The Executive Secretaries of the commissions continued to hold periodic meetings to exchange views and coordinate activities and positions on major development issues.

ECA organized its annual session as part of the joint meetings of the African Union Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance and the ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development. The session met in March and adopted a ministerial statement by which Ministers committed to implement plans for economic transformation, job creation and poverty eradication by ensuring a food-secure Africa within five years.

In May, ESCAP adopted the Incheon Declaration emphasizing the need for stronger regional cooperation for more resilience in future crises and to bolster the capacity of countries in reaching the Millennium Development Goals. The Sixth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Astana, Kazakhstan, 27 September–2 October) adopted the Ministerial Declaration on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific, 2010; the Regional Implementation Plan for Sustainable Development, 2011–2015; and the Astana “Green Bridge” Initiative: Europe-Asia-Pacific Partnership for the Implementation of “Green Growth”.

ECLAC, during its thirty-third session, adopted the Brasilia resolution, in which it asked the Executive Secretary to conduct studies and formulate policy proposals to build national economic and social development capacities. The Commission also asked the Executive Secretary to develop indicators for measuring the social and economic impact of South-South cooperation.

At its May session, ESCWA held two round tables: the first on national youth policies within the framework of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond and the second on human and institutional capacity-building. It called for the holding of an Arab Internet Governance Forum and adopted a statute establishing the ESCWA Technology Centre, which was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in July.

Regional cooperation

In 2010, the United Nations continued to strengthen cooperation among its regional commissions, between them and other UN entities, and with regional and international organizations.

On 28 April (decision 2010/207), the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme for the regional cooperation item of its 2010 substantive session would be “Gender equality and empowerment of women in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs): regional perspectives”. The Council held an interactive dialogue with the Executive Secretaries of the regional commissions on that subject on 2 July.

Meetings of Executive Secretaries. The Executive Secretaries held three regular meetings during the year: in January (Beirut); and at the margins of both the Economic and Social Council session in July and of their dialogue with the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee of the General Assembly in November (New York) [E/2010/15, E/2011/15]. They focused on the regional commissions’ support to UN system-wide coherence at the regional and global levels; regional perspectives and contributions towards achieving the MDGs; promotion of policies leading to greater inclusion and equity; regional contributions to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20 process) (see p. 802), and regional cooperation as a tool for development. In addition, two joint side events were organized: one at the Assembly’s High-level Plenary Meeting on the MDGs (New York, 20–22 September) (see p. 813), during which the Executive Secretaries highlighted the regional perspectives on the achievement of the MDGs, and the role of regional cooperation in addressing key challenges in that regard and the other at the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change Conference (Cancún, Mexico, 29 November–10 December) (see p. 1019).

Review and reform of regional commissions

In a June report [E/2010/15], the Secretary-General updated actions taken by the regional commissions to implement the guidance given by Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/46 [YUN 1998, p. 1262] on mainstreaming regional dimensions into the work of the United Nations and enhancing the coherence of UN activities at the regional level. The report examined the progress by different regions in achieving the MDGs and the lessons learned from the global economic and financial crisis to address fallbacks and accelerate achievement of the MDGs. It also highlighted how South-South cooperation, strongly supported by the regional commissions, was being used to advance the development agenda and the efforts and progress in promoting the agenda of gender equality and empowerment of women. The report also covered developments in selected areas of regional and interregional cooperation, including other policy matters addressed during the regional commission ministerial sessions, further efforts to promote coherence at the regional level, including through the Regional Coordination Mechanism convened by the regional commissions, as well as interregional cooperation among the commissions.

An addendum to the report [E/2010/15/Add.1] contained the texts of resolutions and decisions adopted at recent meetings of the regional commissions calling for the Council's action.

In July, the Council adopted resolutions on the venue for the thirty-fourth session of ECLAC (see p. 993), and on the establishment of the ESCWA Technology Centre (see p. 995). It also adopted decisions on upgrading the ESCWA Section for Emerging and Conflict-Related Issues and the ESCWA Centre for Women to a division (see p. 998).

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) organized its 2010 annual session as part of the joint meetings of the African Union (AU) Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance and the ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/4 [YUN 2007, p. 1014]. ECA held its forty-third session/Third Joint Annual Meetings of the AU and ECA Conference of Ministers (Lilongwe, Malawi, 29–30 March) [E/ECA/CM/43/4] under the theme “Promoting high-level sustainable growth to reduce unemployment and poverty”. It had before it an issues paper prepared by the ECA secretariat on the theme [E/ECA/COE/29/3] and the report of the twenty-ninth meeting of the Committee of Experts of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development (Lilongwe, 25–28 March) [E/ECA/COE/29/7].

The session adopted a ministerial statement [E/ECA/CM/43/4], in which Ministers noted the progress in Africa towards the achievement of the MDGs and recognized the need for strengthening their policy responses, including those aimed at achieving food security and reducing unemployment. Ministers committed to implement plans for economic transformation, job creation and poverty eradication by ensuring a food-secure Africa within five years; support African least developed countries (LDCs) and those emerging from conflict to reduce unemployment, build capacity and provide policy support; accelerate regional integration as a strategy for achieving sustainable socio-economic development; address the impact of climate change through its integration in growth, employment and poverty eradication strategies; combat illicit financial flows by addressing its impact on the development process and request further analytical work on the subject and the preparation of a declaration for consideration at the next ministerial conference; establish pan-African financial institutions: the African Investment Bank, the African Central Bank and the African Monetary Fund; leverage support of key partners for Africa's development agenda; and mobilise additional support among African member States, the UN system, and international development partners for the further enhancement of the role of the African Institute of Economic Planning in building and renewing capacities for economic management and development planning.

Economic trends

In 2010, African economies continued to recover from the financial and economic crisis with a growth in gross domestic product (GDP) of 4.7 per cent, up from to 2.3 per cent in 2009 [E/2011/17]. Key growth factors included rising commodity prices and exports, sustained by countercyclical fiscal and monetary policies and increasing domestic demand, and more diversified exports. While most economies recovered from the loss in 2009, the pace of the recovery varied across countries and subregions. Oil-exporting countries expanded by 5.4 per cent, while oil-importing countries expanded by 3.9 per cent. East Africa, with a growth rate of 6.8 per cent and West Africa, with a growth rate of 6 per cent were the best performing of the five subregions, followed by North Africa, the main oil-producing subregion at 4.7 per cent, Central Africa at 4.3 per cent and Southern Africa at 3.3 per cent. The recovery was also helped by a notable increase in private capital. Foreign direct investment rebounded through growing interest in the mineral, services and manufacturing sectors, amounting to about 7 per cent of Africa's GDP. Aid flows also grew by 4 per cent, despite economic difficulties faced by many donor countries, while some African countries continued to benefit from debt relief. Growth was largely jobless, however, and progress towards reducing poverty and achieving other MDGs remained slow, especially in sub-Saharan Africa.

The Economic Report on Africa [Sales No. E.10.II.K.I], a joint publication of ECA and the AU, devoted its 2010 edition to the theme “Promoting high-level sustainable growth to reduce unemployment in Africa”, and advised that in the aftermath of the global economic crisis African countries should pursue policies that countered the effects of the recession and laid the foundation for long-term, high-level, sustainable and employment-focused growth.

Activities

ECA activities in 2010 were organized under ten subprogrammes: macroeconomic analysis, finance and economic development; food security and sustainable development; governance and public administration; information and science and technology for development; trade, economic cooperation and regional integration; gender and women in development; supporting subregional activities for development; development planning and administration; statistics; and social development [E/ECA/COE/30/17]. ECA also continued to support the AU and the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) [YUN 2001, p. 900].

Trade, economic cooperation and regional integration

ECA continued to strengthen regional integration in Africa through enhanced intra-African trade and physical integration, with particular emphasis on infrastructure and natural resources development. A key accomplishment in support of policy development and harmonization was the publication in May of Assessing Regional Integration in Africa, which focused on the theme “Enhancing intra-African trade”, providing policy recommendations to reverse the low level of intra-African trade. Three regional workshops and study tours were organized in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, Accra, Ghana, and Mombasa, Kenya, which enabled stakeholders to share and learn from experiences and best practices in trade facilitation, port operations and corridor management across Africa. On international trade, activities were undertaken to strengthen the capacity of African countries for effective participation in international trade negotiations and arrangements, particularly the Economic Partnership Agreements (EPAs), Aid for Trade and the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA). ECA, in partnership with the African Union Commission (AUC), developed proposals and policy options for consideration by African countries when existing AGOA preferences ended in 2015. The options were endorsed by the sixth ordinary session of the AU Ministers of Trade (Kigali, Rwanda, November), and led to the adoption of the Declaration on a Strategic Framework for Strengthening US-African Trade Relations 2010 and Beyond. ECA also provided technical inputs to two coordination meetings regarding EPAs, which resulted in a position paper on the subject. On the Aid for Trade initiative, the Commission carried out a number of activities designed to enhance the awareness, knowledge and capacity of member States and regional economic communities (RECs) to take advantage of its opportunities. In that regard, the study “Surmounting Africa's Trade Capacity Constraints: An Assessment of the Effectiveness of Aid for Trade” was prepared to help member States and RECs participate effectively in the third Global Review of Aid for Trade.

In the area of transport, ECA continued to work with other partners in the sub-Saharan Africa Transport Policy Programme, which aimed to build policy development and implementation capacity in the transport sector. With regard to natural resources, ECA and AUC completed the draft Framework Report of the International Study Group on Africa's mineral regimes, which formed part of the African Mining Vision 2050 [YUN 2009, p. 971]. An Action Plan was being developed to implement the Vision.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

As the coordinator of UN agencies and organizations working in Africa in support of NEPAD, a programme for the continent's development initiated by African leaders in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 899], ECA, together with the AU, undertook joint activities to deepen the nature and scope of support for its implementation in the context of the Regional Coordination Mechanism. The activities encompassed technical assistance and capacity-building for institutional development, project development, resource mobilization and advocacy. ECA provided analytical work and technical assistance, with particular focus on socio-economic development and political governance issues.

In February [E/ECA/COE/29/16], ECA submitted a report on UN system-wide support to the AU and NEPAD in the context of the Regional Coordination Mechanism.

(For information on NEPAD, see p. 908).

Food security and sustainable development

ECA continued to strengthen the capacity of States to formulate and implement policies, strategies and programmes for achieving food security and sustainable development in Africa. It participated in the eighteenth session of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development (New York, May) (see p. 801), providing technical support to African States through facilitation of the African regional discussions and effective participation in the thematic discussions. In collaboration with other partners, ECA organized a High-level Conference on African Agribusiness and Agro-Industries (Abuja, Nigeria, March). The Conference Declaration called for concerted efforts to accelerate agribusiness development. As a follow-up, ECA and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations developed an analytical framework to assess the national development context, trends and policies influencing the need for public-private partnership in agribusiness, and to draw lessons from the challenges and specific issues that needed to be considered. In the area of water resources development and management, ECA responded to several requests for assistance from States for urgent policy-related advice by servicing the Regional Forum on "Agricultural Water" (Accra, Ghana, May); the Zambezi coordination meeting and the twenty-first Southern African Development Community (SADC) Water Sector Regional Group Meeting (Gaborone, Botswana, June); and the Joint Eastern and Southern Africa Regional Climate Change Workshop (Nairobi, March).

Climate change

A March ECA secretariat report [E/ECA/COE/29/5] on climate change and development updated progress made by AUC and ECA, in collaboration with other partners, in support of Africa's climate change and development agenda. Among the recommendations contained in the paper were for Africa to take advantage of the opportunities for green growth and green jobs provided by the international climate change regime; continue pushing for more reforms in the governance system for climate change financing, and for quick operationalization of the Copenhagen Green Climate Fund to ensure ready access to much-needed funds; and make concerted efforts to better integrate Africa into global carbon markets. It also recommended that the Climdev-Africa Programme and its entities should be fully operationalized to ensure that African negotiators and policymakers at all levels could articulate and defend the continent's concerns and interests; and that a subprogramme on climate change and development be established at ECA to ensure sustainability of ongoing interventions aimed at addressing the issue in Africa.

The seventh African Development Forum (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 10–15 October), had as its theme "Acting on Climate Change for Sustainable Development in Africa". The Forum adopted a Consensus Statement intended to help strengthen Africa's participation in international climate change negotiations and inform the continent's common position at the sixteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (Cancún, 29 November–10 December) (see p. 1019). It would also help raise awareness and build consensus among stakeholders on Africa's concerns and priorities in a post-2012 international climate change regime, and form the basis for the preparation of an African Action Plan on Climate Change.

Governance and public administration

ECA's objective under the governance and public administration subprogramme was to enhance the capacity of States to promote good governance practices to achieve major development objectives, including the MDGs and NEPAD priorities. Activities were undertaken to support the promotion of good governance in Africa, with particular focus on strengthening public administration and public sector management for effective service delivery, promote private sector development, enhance the role and capacity of civil society and support the African Peer Review Mechanism process to strengthen governance practices in Africa. The Commission worked with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on the third edition of the African Governance Report, which would have as its theme "Elections and the Management of Diversity in Africa", enhancing the capacity of States to manage elections more effectively as instruments for managing diversity, while retaining the democratic ideals of credibility, transparency and fairness. The Report on Mutual Review of Development Effectiveness, jointly prepared by ECA and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), was presented to the NEPAD Heads of State and Government Orientation Committee at their twenty-third summit (Kampala, Uganda, July). The Summit called on ECA and OECD to continue the Mutual Review process, which should serve as the main mutual accountability mechanism for monitoring and assessing the delivery of commitments made by both the African countries and their development partners relative to the African economic development agenda. A publication entitled The Role of Parliaments in Promoting Best Practices in Governance assessed the capacity and efficiency of national parliaments in Africa, their operational modalities, the level of autonomy they enjoyed, their funding, and their relationship with the executive arm of government and the judiciary. A study to help improve public financial management and domestic resource mobilization was presented to an ad hoc expert group meeting (Banjul, Gambia, November). ECA also organized a side event at the Joint Annual Meetings of the AU and ECA Conference of Ministers (Lilongwe, March), that drew the attention of policy makers to critical issues of illicit financial flows from Africa and their effect on the continent's development. An expert group meeting on strengthening popular participation and good governance took place (Addis Ababa, March) in preparation for the Fourth UN Conference on LDCs to be held in 2011 (see p. 846). Also in preparation for that Conference, ECA submitted, in March, the Outcome of the Africa Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Fourth United Nations Conference on LDCs (Addis Ababa, 8–9 March) [E/ECA/COE/29/21]. The meeting noted the progress made in the implementation of the Brussels Programme of Action for the LDCs for the Decade 2001–2010 [YUN 2001, p. 770] and proposed a new programme of action.

Information, science and technology for development

ECA continued to focus on improving the capacity to formulate, implement and evaluate strategies and policies in the area of information for development. It assisted Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Mali and the Niger to complete implementation of their national and sectoral information and communication technology (ICT) infrastructure plans and policies in the health, agriculture, education, commerce and government sectors. Benin, Ghana, Nigeria and Rwanda finalized their national and sectoral ICT policies and plans. ECA support to States in the implementation of the African Cyber Security Strategy programme harmonizing cyber legislation in Africa resulted in the development of a draft regional convention on cyber legislation. Another major initiative was the establishment of the Knowledge Network of African Community Telecentres to empower poor and disadvantaged communities through the transformation of existing ICT access points. Through the Information Technology Centre for Africa, ECA delivered training on "ICT Essentials for Government Leaders" to Parliamentarians in Swaziland and SADC. Also, in collaboration with AUC and other partners, ECA organized the second Science with Africa Conference (Addis Ababa, 22–25 June) on the theme "Science, Innovation and Entrepreneurship", which enabled the launch of the African Science, Technology and Innovation Endowment Fund, designed to support individuals, as well as research and development institutions in bringing their research outputs to markets, and the first African Technology Development and Transfer Network for generating economic and social value from research and development outputs by facilitating technology adaptation and commercialization.

Macroeconomic analysis, finance and economic development

ECA continued to strengthen the capacity of member States to design and implement policies to achieve sustained economic growth for poverty reduction, in line with the priorities of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 49] and NEPAD. Its work under the subprogramme was aimed at achieving higher and sustained economic growth through enhanced capacity for macroeconomic and sectoral policy analysis, international trade and finance. In the area of macroeconomic policy analysis, the secretariat undertook policy research and analysis, and prepared a number of reports, including the Economic Report on Africa, and the Overview of Economic and Social Conditions in Africa, 2010, which reviewed Africa's economic performance and assessed significant macroeconomic trends at all levels. ECA, the African Development Bank (AfDB), UNDP and the Development Bank of South Africa jointly organized the fifth African Economic Conference (Tunis, Tunisia, 27–29 October) on the theme "Setting the Agenda for Africa's Economic Recovery and Long-term Growth". The Conference, which brought together finance ministers, central bank governors, researchers, economists and development experts, shared views on key challenges facing Africa, underscoring the importance of good governance, infrastructure and private sector development and domestic resource mobilization in addressing them.

In February, ECA submitted a report [E/ECA/COE/29/11] entitled "Financing for development: a progress report on the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus", adopted at the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2002, p. 953]. The report stated that progress was limited in realizing the objectives of the Monterrey Consensus. Whereas substantial progress was made in international resources mobilization and debt relief, domestic resource mobilization, foreign aid and international trade were disappointing. Accordingly, there was an urgent need for a more proactive role in implementing the Monterrey Consensus by, among other actions, strengthening the institutional framework; increasing Africa's voice and representation in global financial and economic governance; and harmonizing national, regional and international efforts and initiatives to ensure policy coherence.

Transport and communications

ECA continued to work with other partners in the context of the sub-Saharan African Transport Policy Programme (SSATP), an international partnership for building policy development and implementation capacity in the transport sector. The SSATP annual meeting was held in Kampala, Uganda, in October and the Regional Economic Community–Transport Coordination Committee meeting in Nairobi, in May. Together with SSATP and AUC, ECA also organized a training workshop on “Legal Instruments on Transport and Trade Facilitation” (Addis Ababa, November), which agreed to prepare a compendium of all such instruments.

Gender and women in development

ECA continued to support member States to achieve gender equality through gender mainstreaming and the empowerment of women. ECA developed a Beijing+15 Follow-up Strategy, on the recommendation of the Eighth Africa Regional Conference on Women (Beijing+15) [YUN 2009, p. 972], to assist States and other stakeholders to implement the Banjul Declaration [ibid.] and the Africa-relevant outcomes of the fifty-fourth session of the Commission on the Status of Women (see p. 1177). The Strategy provided indicators for helping member States and stakeholders measure performance on the agreed priority areas over the next five years. ECA played a key role in strengthening the capacity of member States for collecting and analysing gender-aggregated data on emerging issues, such as unpaid work, violence against women and women’s political participation. In that regard, a training manual was developed and tested in Ghana and would be replicated in other countries. A Compendium of Emerging Good Practices in Gender Mainstreaming was prepared, addressing gender issues in peacebuilding and post-conflict reconstruction initiatives.

Significant results were achieved in capacity-building for gender mainstreaming in national development policies and programmes. Advisory services and technical assistance were provided to member States and regional organizations, particularly to the Gender Unit of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC), which enabled the adoption of a strategy to mainstream gender in CEMAC policies and programmes.

Subregional development activities

The five ECA subregional offices (SROs), located in Central Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon), East Africa (Kigali, Rwanda), North Africa (Rabat, Morocco), Southern Africa (Lusaka, Zambia) and West Africa (Niamey, Niger), continued to promote and accelerate the process of regional integration by spearheading the delivery of operational activities targeted at the specific priorities of each subregion. SROs continued to enhance their support to States and regional economic communities (RECs) in strengthening their capacity to formulate and implement harmonised macro-economic and sectoral policies and programmes in trade, infrastructure, human capacity development, gender mainstreaming, agriculture and food security.

In March [E/ECA/COE/29/12], the Independent External Evaluation of ECA subregional offices reported that substantial progress had been made in the strengthening of SROs, initiated in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1151], yet a number of issues needed further attention in order to sustain their operationality and impact. Recommendations were made to deepen the process of strengthening the SROs, including that ECA should deploy at least half of the regional advisory resources to enable them to leverage more regional and international resources to support the development of RECs. Each SRO should also be provided with a rapid response fund under ECA regional advisory and extrabudgetary resources, and UN Headquarters should, under the regular budget, provide SROs with additional staff posts and non-staff resources.

Development, planning and administration

In 2010, the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning completed its repositioning, which was outlined in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 973], resulting in a complete overhaul of its capacity-development and training programmes, enhancement of its allied policy research and dissemination work, re-design of the content of courses offered, and attention paid to the urgent need to scale-up training activities and tap all opportunities for decentralizing the delivery of services. The Institute expanded its training courses, as well as the number of participants and beneficiaries. It also decentralized the implementation of activities for enhancing its presence beyond its headquarters in Dakar, Senegal; organized a series of policy dialogues; and re-launched its policy research activities and its online programmes. The Institute also registered major success both in growth of its regular budget and in its extrabudgetary resources; contributions from member States reached a new peak and the number of countries contributing funds and countries without arrears were the highest ever recorded.

ECA submitted a report [E/ECA/COE/29/15] on assessing progress in Africa towards the MDGs, 2010, in preparation for the high-level meeting at UN Headquarters in September (see p. 813) to evaluate progress made by countries worldwide towards the MDG targets.

Statistics

The objective of ECA work under the statistics sub-programme was to improve the production, dissemination and use of key demographic, social, economic and environmental statistics, including MDG indicators, in accordance with internationally agreed standards and best practices. Priority activities included promoting, coordinating and advocating for statistical activities in Africa; building a data hub at ECA for the provision of development data on Africa; implementing the 1993 System of National Accounts [YUN 1993, p. 1112] in Africa; supporting statistical training programmes; establishing a regional programme for population and housing censuses; improving the status of civil registration and vital statistics (CRVS) in Africa; and providing technical assistance.

ECA organized the sixth Africa Symposium on Statistical Development (Cairo, Egypt, 31 October–2 November) on the theme “Data Analysis and Use in the 2010 Round of Population and Housing Censuses”. The Symposium addressed a number of key issues, including the need to strengthen CRVS systems; the role of statistical training institutions in enhancing the capacity of stakeholders in census data analysis; revival of the African Statistical Association; implementation of the International Comparison Programme; capacity reinforcement of countries in post-enumeration surveys, sharing household survey data of African countries; and harmonization of population projections in inter-census periods.

The fifth meeting of the African Statistical Coordination Committee (Lilongwe, March) discussed the mechanisms for achieving greater synergy among regional institutions, and coordinating statistical programmes with a view to enhancing and sustaining the effectiveness of statistical support to African countries. The Ministerial Conference endorsed the report on implementation of the African Charter on Statistics and the Strategy for the Harmonization of Statistics in Africa. To facilitate the production and use of the harmonized data series, a repository of data from African countries was established under the aegis of the African Statistical Coordination Committee, with data aggregated at the continental, subregional and national levels. Based on joint data collection mechanisms established by ECA, AfDB and AUC, the second edition of the joint African Statistical Yearbook was produced, as well as the first joint Statistical Pocketbook containing the main indicators on social, economic and environmental conditions in Africa.

Social development

ECA work enhanced national and regional capacity to design, implement and monitor social policies and programmes. States were assisted in monitoring and tracking progress in implementing international and regional social development commitments. Results were achieved on a wide range of social development issues, including youth development, ageing, disability, maternal health, social protection, and international migration.

ECA produced the African Youth Report 2010: Addressing the Youth, Education and Employment Nexus in the New Global Economy to support member States in education and youth development, draw attention to challenges faced by African youth, and contribute to the knowledge base on youth issues and guide the formulation and implementation of youth policies. To promote awareness and understanding of issues relating to social protection systems, ECA began preparation of nine country reports and case studies to examine the range of social protection regimes in Africa and their impact on reducing gender disparities in selected areas. ECA also provided technical assistance on international migration issues to help identify gaps in mainstreaming disability and increasing awareness of disability issues in international development and the poverty reduction agenda. It assisted AUC to draft the modalities and terms of reference for establishing the Advisory Council on Ageing in Africa.

Programme and organizational questions

Programme performance, 2008–2009

The twenty-ninth meeting of the Committee of Experts (Lilongwe, 25–28 March) had before it the first ECA programme performance report for 2008–2009 [E/ECA/COE/29/9], which showed that the Commission achieved significant results in its main service lines of knowledge generation, sharing and networking, advocacy and consensus-building, and advisory services and technical cooperation. Knowledge generation made up 43 per cent of ECA outputs, with 37 per cent and 20 per cent for advisory services and technical cooperation, and advocacy and consensus-building, respectively. A total of 538 outputs were programmed compared with 444 in the 2006–2007 biennium, due to the creation of new subprogrammes on statistics and social development, which increased the number of programmes from 8 to 10. It also reflected new project initiatives and increased operational involvement in implementing the agendas of AUC, NEPAD and RECS. The total implementation rate for 2008–2009 was 92 per cent. The report concluded that ECA needed to continue to build its capacity to report performance targets comprehensively to ensure that essential information was available and complete for evidence-based planning.

Strategic Framework for 2012–2013

The Conference of Ministers had before it the ECA proposed strategic framework for the 2012–2013 biennium [E/ECA/COE/29/10], which stated that the overall strategy of the ECA programme would continue to be organized around two main pillars: promoting regional integration in support of the AU vision and priorities; and meeting Africa’s special needs and emerging global challenges.

Organizational changes

In a March note [E/ECA/COE/29/14], the Executive Secretary reported on a review of the ECA reform programme, initiated in 2006, to allow the Commission to reposition itself to serve Africa better. The review found that several challenges remained, including fragmentation of responsibility for some key areas of work, such as trade and the environment, as well as for important development frameworks such as NEPAD, the MDGs and the Brussels Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries. The knowledge management initiative had not lived up to its potential, while the functioning of management support processes was patchy. Bottlenecks were identified in many parts of the system, such as planning, budgeting, using resources and recruiting staff, all of which impacted negatively on programme delivery. In the light of the recommendations, some organizational changes were effected.

Construction of ECA office facilities

In April, an Ethiopian construction firm was awarded the contract to build the ECA new office facilities on the land granted by the Government of Ethiopia and another local company was confirmed as project consultant. The work, which would provide accommodation for 600 staff from various UN Agencies, was scheduled for completion in February 2012.

(For information on the construction of ECA office facilities, see p. 1465.)

Regional cooperation

Cooperation with regional organizations

The Secretary-General, in his consolidated report on UN cooperation with regional and other organizations [A/65/382], described cooperation activities between the UN system and the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) and the Southern African Development Community (SADC).

On 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the items on cooperation between the United Nations and ECCAS and SADC would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-fifth (2011) session (decision 65/544).

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its sixty-sixth session (Incheon, Republic of Korea) [E/2010/39], in two parts:

the senior officials segment from 13 to 15 May; and the ministerial segment from 17 to 19 May, under the topic “Addressing challenges in the achievement of the MDGs: promoting a stable and supportive financial system; and green growth or environmentally sustainable economic growth, including through technology and financing”.

In the Incheon Declaration, adopted on 19 May [E/2010/39 (res. 66/1)], the Commission emphasized the need for stronger regional cooperation to make the region more resilient to future crises and bolster the capacity of countries in reaching the MDGs. ESCAP requested the Executive Secretary to assist members to achieve the MDGs; facilitate the reinforcement of regional partnerships; coordinate with multilateral funding agencies with a view to enhancing financial and technological flows for the development and deployment of clean technologies in developing countries; facilitate the exchange of information among members and associate members regarding national strategies and best practices in support of green growth, and further assist in developing national strategies in that regard; and report to the Commission on implementation of the resolution at its sixty-eight (2012) session.

The Commission also discussed issues pertinent to the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries; the Commission’s subsidiary structure; management issues; activities of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission [E/ESCAP/66/23 & Corr.1]; and the dates, venue and theme of the Commission’s sixty-seventh session.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2011 [E/2011/18], in 2010, the region witnessed a dramatic “V-shaped” recovery in growth. For the economies most affected, following the initial critical support to growth through massive fiscal stimulus packages, the key driver of private-sector recovery was renewed strength in exports. Exporting economies began their recoveries in part through intraregional sales to the large robust economies in the region, and eventually to the developed economies that saw improved demand. The region achieved a growth rate of 8.8 per cent, however, that number was projected to fall back to 7.3 per cent in 2011, as the region faced fresh challenges, including the return of food and fuel crises, sluggish recovery in advanced economies and a large number of short-term capital flows, a build-up of asset bubbles, and appreciation of exchange rates. The region’s LDCs were not able to enjoy the emerging opportunities offered by expanding markets and strengthened connectivity owing to their lack of productive capacity.

Policy issues

Over and above the immediate risk in the recovery process, a complex set of policy challenges lay ahead. A key threat to the sustainability of regional growth was the return of inflationary pressures as the recovery gathered steam. Countries had to balance the risk of setting off an inflationary spiral with long-term negative growth against the risk of halting the short-term growth recovery trend. A critical decision for each economy was when and how to turn off fiscal stimulus and tighten monetary policy. Other than increases in demand-side inflationary pressures, a key factor behind rising prices was the return of supply-side pressure from commodity price volatility. A return to high food prices could follow and required close monitoring, as it would seriously affect the poorest people of the region, impacting poverty, exacerbating inequality and worsening health conditions. Asset bubbles were another source of concern for the recovery process. Abundant foreign capital, provided via the fiscal stimulus packages and buoyed by liquidity support to financial institutions in developed countries, had been attracted to the region because of its relatively strong growth prospects. Governments might consider moderating the inflows of short-term capital flows through various types of controls in order to maintain financial stability. Consensus was growing on the relevance of such measures as a part of the policy tool kit, especially in the context of the huge expansion of liquidity in the world economy that was finding an outlet in the Asia-Pacific region.

At its 2010 session, the Commission considered the Economic and Social Survey, 2010 [Sales No. E.10.II.F.2], and Financing an Inclusive and Green Future: A Supportive Financial System and Green Growth for Achieving the Millennium Development Goals in Asia and the Pacific [Sales No. E.10.II.F.4].

Activities

Macroeconomic policy, poverty reduction and development

The Commission had before it documents on recent macroeconomic developments and other issues to be raised at the first session of the Committee on Macroeconomic Policy, Poverty Reduction and Inclusive Development [E/ESCAP/66/5]; the Asia-Pacific regional review of the Brussels Programme of Action for the LDCs for the Decade 2001–2010: Dhaka Outcome Document [E/ESCAP/66/6]; and the report of the Governing Council of the Centre for Alleviation of Poverty through Secondary Crops Development in Asia and the Pacific (CAPSA) [E/ESCAP/66/7].

The Commission, while noting a request to donor countries to deliver official development assistance commitments in a timely manner, encouraged all countries to take primary responsibility and ownership of their development and to explore options for mobilizing financial resources. It noted the work of the Centre for Alleviation of Poverty through Secondary Crops Development in Asia and Pacific. Given the Centre's central role in promoting agricultural development and poverty alleviation, the Commission encouraged member countries to contribute to its funding. It also supported the recommendation of the Centre's Governing Council to change its name to the Centre for Alleviation of Poverty through Sustainable Agriculture, retaining the same acronym.

Trade and investment

The Commission considered the reports of the Committee on Trade and Investment on its first session [E/ESCAP/66/8]; the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology [E/ESCAP/66/9]; and the United Nations Asian and Pacific Centre for Agricultural Engineering and Machinery [E/ESCAP/66/10]. The Commission noted the need to adhere to market access commitments and refrain from protectionism, which would delay rather than help the recovery from the global economic crisis. It expressed its commitment to the primacy of a rule-based, equitable and transparent multilateral trading system in promoting global trade and development, and noted the importance of concluding multilateral trade negotiations under the Doha Development Agenda [YUN 2001, p. 1432]. The Commission called for needs-based technical assistance activities to strengthen the private sector, with a focus on capacity-building for small and medium-sized enterprises. It also called for stronger synergies between domestic and foreign investment, in particular through the coordination of national development and investment policies and strategies, and noted a request that the secretariat further study the design of effective public-private partnerships for the promotion of large-scale investments to meet local development needs.

Transport

The Commission endorsed the report of the Forum of Asian Ministers of Transport on its first session [YUN 2009, p. 976]. It adopted a resolution [E/2010/39 (res. 66/4)] inviting members and associate members to develop and implement transport policies at the national, subregional and regional levels. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to continue to accord priority to the implementation of the Busan Declaration on Transport Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2006, p. 1161] and the Regional Action Programme for Transport Development in Asia and the Pacific, phase I (2007–2011), especially to develop the Asian Highway Network, the Trans-Asian Railway Network and intermodal transport infrastructure; and to bring about connectivity and the integration of those networks and other transport modes by developing an intergovernmental agreement on dry ports. The Executive Secretary should convene a ministerial conference on transport in 2011 to assess and evaluate the implementation of the Bangkok Declaration on Transport Development in Asia [YUN 2009, p. 977] and the Regional Action Programme for Transport Development in Asia and the Pacific, phase I (2007–2011), and to consider a regional action programme for phase II (2012–2016).

The Commission, in a resolution on improving road safety in Asia and the Pacific [res. 66/6], requested the Executive Secretary, in cooperation with the World Health Organization and other UN commissions, to prepare an implementation plan for the Asia-Pacific region, as an input to the Decade of Action for Road Safety [YUN 2009, p. 1230]; to develop regional goals, targets and indicators to be achieved by 2020 in order to assess and evaluate road safety progress, and to submit a progress report at its sixty-eighth (2012) session.

The Commission also noted the successful conclusion of the Asia-Pacific Ministerial Conference on Public-Private Partnerships for Infrastructure Development (Jakarta, Indonesia, 14–17 April), and the Jakarta Declaration on Public-Private Partnerships for Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/66/CRP.17]. On 19 May [res.66/5], the Commission asked the Executive Secretary to assist members and associate members with their capacity-building programmes, including public-private partnership policy framework formulation, legislative and regulatory reform, and administrative arrangements for public-private partnerships; provide technical support to help increase their public-private partnership readiness; establish a task force to elaborate the elements of a regional financial architecture to assist the region with increased capital availability for infrastructure development, as well as an Asia-Pacific network of public-private partnership units and programmes; undertake a periodic review of the progress made in infrastructure development through public-private partnerships; and report to the Commission at its seventy-first (2015) session.

The second session of the Committee of Transport (Bangkok, Thailand, 1–3 November) [E/ESCAP/67/7] reviewed major issues and challenges in transport related to promoting regional connectivity, namely, transport policy, infrastructure, facilitation and logistics, and discussed measures needed to address them. The Committee also reiterated the importance of the Busan Declaration on Transport Development in Asia and the Pacific and phase I of the Regional Action Programme for Transport Development (2007–2011), and endorsed the thematic areas and actions at the regional and national levels for planning future activities under phase II (2012–2016) of the Regional Action Programme. It also requested the secretariat to proceed with the development of a draft intergovernmental agreement on dry ports, for consideration by further subregional and regional meetings; and preparations for the ministerial Conference on Transport in 2011.

Environment and development

The Commission considered the report of the Committee on Environment and Development on its first session [YUN 2009, p. 977]; the report of the Coordinating Committee for Geoscience Programmes in East and Southeast Asia [E/ESCAP/66/INF/3]; and the report of the Mekong River Commission [E/ESCAP/66/INF/4]. The Commission recognized the relevance of the work of the Mekong River Commission at its first summit (Hua Hin, Thailand, April), and its role as a regional platform for dialogue and information exchange on transboundary water resources management. The Commission called for increased collaboration among various subregional mechanisms and frameworks for increased efficiency.

The Commission [res. 66/7] requested the Executive Secretary, in cooperation with UN-Habitat and other UN entities, to continue to support Pacific members and associate members in implementing the Pacific Urban Agenda and Regional Action Framework; and in assessing progress in that regard, to convene a subregional workshop in the 2010–2011 biennium, and to report to the Commission at its sixty-eighth (2012) session.

The Sixth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Astana, Kazakhstan, 27 September–2 October) [E/ESCAP/67/8] adopted three major outcome documents: the Ministerial Declaration on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific, 2010; the Regional Implementation Plan for Sustainable Development, 2011–2015; and the Astana “Green Bridge” Initiative: Europe-Asia-Pacific Partnership for the Implementation of “Green Growth”.

Information and communication technology

The Commission had before it the report of the Asian and Pacific Training Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development (APCICT) [E/ESCAP/66/13]. At the fourth session of its Governing Council, members praised the range of valuable and innovative services that it had delivered in terms of ICT human capacity-building and bridging the digital divide in ESCAP members and associate members. The Council unanimously recommended to the Commission that APCICT continue beyond 2011. The Commission also considered reports on the evaluation of APCICT [E/ESCAP/66/18 & Add.1].

Regarding Pacific connectivity, the Commission was informed that the Pacific Islands Forum Leaders had requested a review of the Pacific Plan Digital Strategy and an update of the ICT development framework for the Pacific subregion. The Meeting of Pacific ICT Officials and Ministers (Tonga, 16–18 June) considered a new five-year ICT Strategy for the Pacific.

On 19 May [res. 66/14], the Commission noted the reports on APCICT and decided that the Centre should continue to operate beyond 2011. It requested the Executive Secretary to report on the implementation of the resolution at its sixty-eighth (2012) session.

Disaster risk reduction

The Commission had before it two information documents: the report of the Typhoon Committee [E/ESCAP/66/INF/5]; and the report of the Panel on Tropical Cyclones [E/ESCAP/66/INF/6]. The Commission noted the work of the secretariat in facilitating the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015, and its initiatives, such as the development of the Asia-Pacific gateway for disaster risk reduction and the Asia-Pacific disaster report. The Commission was informed that the Asia-Pacific Regional Space Agency Forum, at its sixteenth session (Bangkok, January), expressed the desire to see Sentinel Asia—a collaborative initiative between space and disaster management agencies—increasingly used by disaster management organizations supported by ESCAP and other relevant organizations in the region. ESCAP should work closely with the World Meteorological Organization towards disaster risk reduction. The Commission stressed the need to promote space-based applications for disaster risk management.

On 19 May [res. 66/8], the Commission adopted a resolution on the review of the proposal for the establishment of the Asian and Pacific centre for information, communication and space technology-enabled disaster management in the Islamic Republic of Iran inviting that country to provide the supplementary information requested in Commission resolution 64/10 [YUN 2008, p. 1111], and to take into account the outcome of the review requested in that resolution for submission in 2011.

Social development

The Commission had before it the report of the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting to Review Regional Implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and its Regional and Global Outcomes [E/ESCAP/66/14 & Corr.1]. The Commission, in resolution [res. 66/9], endorsed the report of the Bangkok Declaration on Beijing+15 [YUN 2009, p. 978]; commended the Executive Secretary for re-establishing the Thematic Working Group on Gender Equality and Empowerment of Women, which contributed to enhanced coordination and coherence among regional UN partners in the advancement of women and gender equality, and asked him to: strengthen the Commission's role in supporting members and associate members in implementing the Beijing Platform for Action, as well as the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly; take the actions set out in the Bangkok Declaration on Beijing+15; and ensure that gender dimensions were mainstreamed into the Commission's programme of work.

In resolution [res. 66/10] on a regional call for action to achieve universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support in Asia and the Pacific, the Commission asked the Executive Secretary to convene a high-level intergovernmental review for the region to assess progress against commitments in the Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS and the MDGs and efforts to ensure universal access; identify areas for regional cooperation, in particular in identifying and removing policy and legal barriers to universal access and promoting dialogue between health and other sectors, including justice, law and order and drug control; and bring the resolution to the attention of the General Assembly AIDS Review (see p. 1219), with a view to presenting issues of concern to the Asian and Pacific region.

The Commission decided [res. 66/11] that the High-level Intergovernmental Meeting on the Final Review of the Implementation of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 2003–2012 [YUN 2003, p. 1014], should be held in the Republic of Korea in 2012.

The Commission noted [res. 66/12] the Declaration on Population and Development: Fifteen Years after Cairo, adopted at the Asia-Pacific High-level Forum on the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) at 15: Accelerating Progress towards the ICPD and MDGs [YUN 2009, p. 976], in which the delegates reaffirmed their commitment to fully implement the ICPD Programme of Action [YUN 1994, p. 955] by 2014. It requested the Executive Secretary, in cooperation with the United Nations Population Fund and other UN system organizations, to convene the sixth Asian and Pacific Population Conference in Bangkok in 2012; and to report to the Commission's sixty-ninth (2013) session.

Statistics

The Commission, having considered the report of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (SIAP) [E/ESCAP/66/15], emphasized the importance of statistics development in the region through methodological work and technical cooperation on increasing capacity for collecting data, and producing, analysing and disseminating statistics and indicators in support of evidence based policy formulation, the analysis of development trends, and the monitoring of progress in achieving development goals. It expressed support for the new directions incorporated into the Institute's work programme for the academic years 2010–2014, endorsed by the Governing Council at its fifth session [YUN 2009, p. 978] emphasizing skills-based training and the further development of the e-learning mode for the delivery of training. The Commission also noted that some States had increased their cash contributions to SIAP.

In other developments, the second session of the Committee on Statistics (Bangkok, 15–17 December) [E/ESCAP/67/12] agreed on a strategic plan to develop national capacities in the region by 2020, to generate a basic range of population, economic, social and environmental statistics, and create a more adaptive and cost-effective information management environment for national statistical offices. The Committee established steering and advisory groups to direct and guide further work on its decisions and recommendations.

Least developed, landlocked and small island developing countries

The Commission had before it the Port Vila Outcome Statement [E/ESCAP/66/1], adopted at the Pacific High-level Dialogue on the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation (Port Vila, Vanuatu, 8–9 February), and an information note "Outcome of the Pacific Conference on the Human Face of the Global Economic Crisis" [E/ESCAP/66/INF/7]. The Commission endorsed the Port Vila Outcome Statement as the Asia-Pacific regional input for the global review of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN, 2005, p. 946] (see p. 850), and supported renaming the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre as the ESCAP Subregional Office for the Pacific. The Commission [res. 66/2] invited members and associate members to support the Port Vila Outcome Statement, and requested the Executive Secretary to submit it to the General Assembly and the Pacific Islands Forum. In other action, the Commission noted that, in accordance with resolution 64/1 [YUN 2008, p. 1114] on the restructuring of the Commission, the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries met for the first time.

On 19 May [res. 66/3], the Commission noted the Dhaka Outcome Document on the Brussels Programme of Action for the LDCs [YUN 2001, p. 770], adopted at the High-level Asia-Pacific Policy Dialogue on the Brussels Programme of Action for the LDCs (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 18–20 January) [E/ESCAP/66/6], and asked the Executive Secretary to assist in forwarding it as the regional input to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the LDCs in Turkey in 2011, and to assist them in its implementation and in building capacity to make policy responses to mitigate the effects of the economic crisis, restore growth and achieve the MDGs.

Economic and technical cooperation

The Commission had before it an overview of ESCAP technical cooperation activities and extrabudgetary contributions in 2009 [E/ESCAP/66/22]. Total contributions received by the secretariat for technical cooperation activities in 2009, from the regular budget, as well as voluntary sources, amounted to $15.8 million, a 30 per cent increase over 2008. Of that amount, $4.3 million (27.3 per cent) was received from the UN system and $8.3 million (53 per cent) from donors and participating developing countries. Other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) provided $3.1 million (20 per cent). In addition to cash contributions, one NGO also provided, on a non-reimbursable loan basis, a total of 116 work-months of the services of experts in various disciplines.

Programme and organizational questions Programme performance, 2008–2009

In a February note [E/ESCAP/66/4], the secretariat submitted the ESCAP programme performance for the 2008–2009 biennium. At the end of 2009, 91 per cent of the planned outputs had been delivered. Regular budget delivery (above 100 per cent) was also on target. The major challenge faced during the period was the urgent and continuous need for timely, effective and coherent responses by the region to multiple development crises related to food, fuel, finance and climate change. In March [E/ESCAP/66/3], the secretariat provided a summary of progress in the implementation of Commission resolutions, and in April [E/ESCAP/66/2], in a subprogramme overview, it presented the issues and challenges related to inclusive and sustainable economic and social developments in Asia and the Pacific in the eight subprogrammes and highlighted support to member countries.

Monitoring and evaluation

The Commission had before it the report on ESCAP evaluation activities during the 2008–2009 biennium [E/ESCAP/66/17 & Corr.1], the report on the evaluation of APCICT [E/ESCAP/66/18], the management response to that evaluation [E/ESCAP/66/18/Add.1], and the report on the evaluation of SIAP [E/ESCAP/66/19 & Add.1].

On 19 May [E/2010/39 (res. 66/15)], the Commission noted the reports on ESCAP evaluation activities and those of its regional institutions, and requested the Executive Secretary to submit a plan of evaluations to its sixty-seventh (2011) session.

Proposed programme of work, 2010–2011

The Commission had before it a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/66/20] containing the proposed changes to the programme of work for the 2010–2011 biennium. The proposed changes addressed new mandates adopted after the Commission had endorsed the programme of work [YUN 2009, p. 980]; further consolidated the ESCAP publications programme; and strengthened the programmatic approach in ESCAP capacity-building activities.

The Commission endorsed the proposed changes to the 2010–2011 programme of work.

Draft Strategic Framework, 2012–2013

In a March note [E/ESCAP/66/21], the secretariat presented the draft strategic framework for the 2012–2013 biennium, which comprised the overall programme orientation and the objectives, expected accomplishments, indicators of achievement and strategies for each of the eight subprogrammes: macroeconomic policy and inclusive development; trade and investment; transport; environment and development; information and communication technology and disaster risk reduction; social development; statistics; and subregional activities for development.

The Commission endorsed the draft strategic framework for the 2012–2013 biennium, as modified.

ESCAP subregional offices

The Commission had before it the report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on the New ESCAP Subregional Offices for East and North-East Asia, North and Central Asia, and the South and South-West Asia (Bangkok, 2–4 March) [E/ESCAP/66/16].

In a 19 May resolution [E/2010/39 (res. 66/13)], the Commission welcomed the outcomes of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on the New ESCAP Subregional Offices, and requested the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to endorse it and encourage global support for its implementation. It asked the Executive Secretary to ensure that the subregional offices were fully supported through the proposed budget for the 2012–2013 biennium.

ESCAP sixty-seventh session

The Commission, having considered the secretariat note on the proposed dates, venue and theme for its sixty-seventh (2011) session [E/ESCAP/66/24], decided that the next session would be held in Bangkok, in April/May 2011, and that the theme topic for the session would be “Beyond the crises: long-term perspectives on social protection and development”.

Cooperation with regional bodies

In a consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/65/382-S/2010/490], the Secretary-General described the modalities of cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization, the Association of South East Asian Nations, and the Pacific Islands Forum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/129 [draft: A/65/L.40 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 122 (j)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/2 of 13 October 1993, by which it granted observer status to the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization, in which it invited various specialized agencies as well as other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and relevant financial institutions to join in the efforts towards realizing the goals and objectives of the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Welcoming the efforts of the Economic Cooperation Organization to strengthen its relations with the United Nations system and with relevant international and regional organizations for the development and implementation of projects and programmes in all priority areas,

Expressing its satisfaction at the efforts of the United Nations system and the relevant international and regional organizations to extend technical and financial assistance to the Economic Cooperation Organization for its economic programmes and projects, and encouraging them to continue their support,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 63/144 of 15 December 2008, and expresses satisfaction at the growing cooperation between the two organizations;

2. Takes note of the Tehran Declaration, issued at the tenth Economic Cooperation Organization summit meeting of Heads of State and/or Government of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held on 11 March 2009 in Tehran, following the eighteenth meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization on 9 March 2009, in which the Heads of State and/or Government, inter alia, reaffirmed their commitment to the goals and objectives of the Economic Cooperation Organization envisaged in the Treaty of Izmir, “ECO Vision 2015” and other basic documents, as well as the declarations of the previous summit meetings;

3. Appreciates the continued cooperation between the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the Economic Cooperation Organization, especially in the field of trade capacity-building of member States, and expresses satisfaction at the successful conclusion of the second phase of their joint programmes aimed at enhancing the capacity of member States in strengthening their Standards, Metrology, Testing and Quality infrastructure;

4. Encourages cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in streamlining rules and regulations and strengthening institutions of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization to meet the requirements pertaining to the Technical Barriers to Trade, in the adoption of appropriate sanitary and phytosanitary measures and in strengthening private sector cooperation, in line with the plans of the Economic Cooperation Organization to establish trade associations at the regional level and encouraging women entrepreneurs, professionals/resource persons/consultants, marketing advisory firms, and others;

5. Takes note of the possibilities for cooperation between the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in the field of investment, especially to assist member States in designing their investment policies, identifying potential sectors, attracting foreign direct investment and in the establishment of a database to monitor the impact of investment;

6. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the World Trade Organization and the International Trade Centre to develop strategies for Economic Cooperation Organization member States in their trade liberalization processes that could lead to the regional and global integration of their economies, as appropriate;

7. Welcomes the signing, during the tenth Economic Cooperation Organization summit meeting, of a trilateral memorandum of understanding between the Economic Cooperation Organization, the Islamic Development Bank and the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific on the development of a transport network in the region, appreciates the efforts of the Economic Cooperation Organization to sign a similar memorandum of understanding with the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe and the Islamic Development Bank, and encourages a quadrilateral arrangement among these institutions for the development and facilitation of transit transport in the region;

8. Also welcomes the initiatives of the Economic Cooperation Organization for implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries through the promotion of cooperation among landlocked and transit countries in the region, and invites the United Nations agencies, in particular the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, to assist in securing technical and financial assistance of international funding agencies and donors to initiate a regional study on the possibility of providing concessional services for landlocked countries in selected ports of transit countries of the region;

9. Notes the importance of the Green Card as an international third-party liability insurance system in facilitation of transit transport by road, and requests the Economic Commission for Europe to assist in expanding the system to the Economic Cooperation Organization region;

10. Recognizes the need for a unified railway law on international freight and passenger traffic by rail, appreciates the readiness of the Economic Cooperation Organization to promote such legal systems in the region, and requests the relevant United Nations agencies and institutions, particularly the Economic Commission for Europe, to enhance cooperation with the Economic Cooperation Organization in this regard;

11. Takes note with appreciation of the initiatives of the Economic Cooperation Organization to launch regular train operations along such important corridors in the region as Almaty-Istanbul, Almaty-Bandar Abbas and Islamabad-Tehran-Istanbul, especially in regard to developing transit corridors for landlocked developing countries;

33. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization".

On 22 December [meeting 72], the Assembly adopted resolution 65/235 [draft: A/65/L.55 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 122 (c)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the aims and purposes of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, as enshrined in the Bangkok Declaration of 8 August 1967, in particular the maintenance of close and beneficial cooperation with existing international and regional organizations with similar aims and purposes,

Recalling all previous resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations,

Noting with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with satisfaction that the activities of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Welcoming efforts to strengthen partnership between the United Nations and regional organizations, and in this context welcoming also efforts to strengthen cooperation between the United Nations system and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations,

Welcoming also the participation of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in the high-level meetings between the United Nations and regional organizations, as well as the collaboration between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to promote dialogue and cooperation among regional organizations in Asia and the Pacific,

Welcoming further the Association of Southeast Asian Nations as an observer in the General Assembly,

Recalling the First and Second Association of Southeast Asian Nations-United Nations Summits, held in Bangkok on 12 February 2000 and at United Nations Headquarters on 13 September 2005, respectively, and the commitment of leaders of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to further broaden cooperation between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the entry into force on 15 December 2008 of the Charter of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, which represents a historic milestone for the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, reflecting a common vision and commitment to the development of an Association of Southeast Asian Nations community so as to ensure lasting peace, stability, sustained economic growth, shared prosperity and social progress in the region;

2. Continues to encourage both the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to further strengthen and expand their areas of cooperation, and in this context welcomes the signing on 27 September 2007 of the Memorandum of Understanding between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the United Nations on Association of Southeast Asian Nations-United Nations cooperation at United Nations Headquarters, which aims at establishing a partnership between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the United Nations that will encompass the full range of cooperation based on mutual benefits;

3. Encourages the United Nations to support the Association of Southeast Asian Nations undertakings in all three of its community-building pillars through appropriate and concrete steps, as outlined in the Cha-Am Hua Hin Declaration on the Road Map for an Association of Southeast Asian Nations Community (2009–2015);

4. Commends the President of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member States of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations for their efforts to hold regular meetings, on an annual basis, with the presence of the Secretary-General of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, during the regular session of the Assembly, with a view to further strengthening the cooperation between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations;

5. Continues to encourage the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to convene Association of Southeast Asian Nations-United Nations Summits regularly, and underlines the importance of the presence thereof of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and heads of relevant United Nations departments, funds and programmes, and specialized agencies, and in this context welcomes the holding of the Third Association of Southeast Asian Nations-United Nations Summit, in Hanoi on 29 October 2010;

6. Recognizes the value of partnership between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in providing timely and effective responses to global issues of mutual concern, in the context of partnership between the United Nations and regional organizations, and thus encourages the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to explore concrete measures for closer cooperation, particularly in the areas of food and energy security, the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, peace and security, peacekeeping, post-conflict peacebuilding, climate change and disaster management, as reflected in the statement of the Co-Chairs of the Third Association of Southeast Asian Nations-United Nations Summit and the Joint Declaration on Association of Southeast Asian Nations-United Nations Collaboration in Disaster Management adopted at the Summit;

7. Commends the successful completion of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations-led coordinating mechanism for post-Nargis relief and recovery efforts in Myanmar, and acknowledges the outcome achieved in assisting the post-Nargis relief work by the Tripartite Core Group comprising the Government of Myanmar, the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, and the assistance provided by the international community to those in need;

8. Encourages cooperation between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, particularly through the Association of Southeast Asian Nations Intergovernmental Commission on Human Rights and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations Commission on the Promotion and Protection of the Rights of Women and Children, which are aimed at enhancing the promotion and protection of human rights through exchanges of best practices and capacity-building;

9. Encourages effective cooperation between member States of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and the appropriate United Nations organizations in the delivery of operational activities in the area of development at the country level, particularly efforts to close the development gaps, including cooperation to support implementation of the Initiative for Association of Southeast Asian Nations Integration workplan II and the master plan on Association of Southeast Asian Nations connectivity;

10. Takes note of the efforts of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to hold meetings with other regional organizations at the fringes of the sessions of the General Assembly to promote cooperation in support of multilateralism;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations".

On 24 December, the Assembly decided that the item "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum" would remain for consideration until the resumed sixty-fifth (2011) session (decision 65/544).

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) did not meet in 2010. Its sixty-fourth session was scheduled for 2011. The state of the European region and the activities of ECE subsidiary bodies during 2010 are discussed below.

Economic trends

A report [E/2011/16] on the economic situation in the ECE region: Europe, North America and the Commonwealth of Independent States indicated that of the five UN regions as defined by the regional commissions, the ECE region was the most negatively impacted by the 2008 financial and economic crisis, with real growth declining from 3.2 per cent in 2007 to 0.9 per cent in 2008, to -3.7 per cent in 2009. Growth recovered to 2.6 per cent in 2010, and was expected to reach 2.8 per cent in 2011 and 2012. Sovereign debt levels increased significantly in a number of the region's economies and had become problematic, leading to premature fiscal consolidation that delayed and weakened the recovery. In many economies (except North America), gross domestic product remained below pre-crisis levels.

Activities

Trade

The Committee on Trade did not meet in 2010. At its third session in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 981], it considered a number of reports and took related action. Although its fourth session was to have been held 25–26 February 2010, it was postponed to 14–15 June 2011.

Timber

The Timber Committee, at its sixty-eighth session (Geneva, 11–14 October) [ECE/TIM/2010/7], was briefed on international developments related to the forest sector [ECE/TIM/2010/2]; the International Year of Forests; the Ninth Session of the UN Forum on Forests; the Sixth Ministerial Conference on the Protection of Forests in Europe; and the joint session of the Timber Committee and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/European Forestry Commission. The Committee reviewed the cooperation activities and supported further efforts to strengthen partnerships with key organizations, particularly in the context of the International Year of Forests (2011) [YUN 2006, p. 1240]. The Committee also had before it secretariat notes on developments relevant to the UNECE/FAO joint timber and forestry programme of work and related matters that arose from the most recent UNECE session [ECE/TIM/2010/3], and on market developments in 2010 and prospects for 2011: joint session of the annual Timber Committee Market and the Society of Wood Science and Technology [ECE/TIM/2010/4].

The Committee also held a joint policy forum on "Building codes and standards: Influence on material use and construction practices" [ECE/TIM/2010/5], in collaboration with the Society of Wood Science and Technology. It took note of the forum's recommendation that the Executive Secretary form a task force on green building to address the issue in a neutral and scientific way.

The Committee reviewed and approved the planned outputs from October 2010 to December 2011 [ECE/TIM/2010/6], with additions as proposed by the secretariat. It also reviewed the outcome of the UNECE 2008–2009 biennial evaluation, and approved a proposal for the 2010–2011 biennial evaluation and the proposed cluster-level framework. The Committee agreed to further elaborate a proposal to create a joint UNECE/FAO working party on forests policy and management as a subsidiary body.

Transport

The seventy-second session of the Inland Transport Committee (Geneva, 23–25 February) [ECE/

TRANS/208 & Add.1] reviewed, among other topics: ECE reform in the field of transport; assistance to countries with economies in transition; the Transport, Health and Environment Pan-European Programme and environmental aspects of transport; and the review of the transport situation in ECE countries. It also discussed the inland water transport in the UNECE region, under the theme “Sustainable transport development: the case of inland water transport”.

Energy

The Committee on Sustainable Energy, at its nineteenth session (Geneva, 24–26 November) [ECE/ENERGY/84], focused its energy security dialogue on “Energy Security and Gas Infrastructure”, which examined the prospects of gas resources and infrastructure, including unconventional gas resources. It recommended that Government delegations and international organizations continue jointly to organize the Energy Security Dialogue; the secretariat should strengthen cooperation with other UN regional commissions and the UN system; and it should convene an informal intergovernmental group of experts to study the need for the elaboration of new international legal mechanisms aimed at ensuring energy security and report any findings at its twentieth (2011) session.

The Committee requested the secretariat to recommend to the UNECE Executive Committee to change the names of its ad hoc group of experts to the Group of Experts on Global Energy Efficiency 21; the Group of Experts on Coal Mine Methane; the Group of Experts on Cleaner Electricity Production from Coal and Other Fossil Fuels; and the Group of Experts on the Supply and Use of Gas. It also endorsed the requests by the Group of Experts on Coal Mine Methane and the Group of Experts on Cleaner Electricity Production from Coal and other Fossil Fuels for the renewal of their mandates for a further two years.

On the activities of its subsidiary bodies, the Committee took note of the status of implementation of the studies carried out by the Working Party on Gas, requested the secretariat to accelerate the preparation of the liquefied natural gas study, with the view to presenting it to the next session of the Working Party on Gas, and approved the programme of work for 2010–2013. It approved the programme of work of the Gas Centre, and emphasized the importance of broadening its outreach. The Committee also took note of the status and progress achieved by the Energy Efficiency 21 Programme; and directed the Expert Group on Resource Classification to further encourage testing and application of the United Nations Framework Classification for Fossil Energy and Mineral Reserves and Resources.

Environment

The Committee on Environmental Policy, at its seventeenth session (Geneva, 2–5 November) [ECE/CEP/161 & Corr.1], considered the environmental performance reviews (EPR) of Azerbaijan and Bosnia and Herzegovina, and presented the background document on the third cycle. The main outcomes of the Sixth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and Pacific (see p. 976) were presented, including the “Green Bridge” Initiative, designed to facilitate the establishment of a Europe-Asia-Pacific partnership for outlining the blueprint for a shift from the conventional development patterns to green growth. The Committee requested that a detailed proposal for a “Green Bridge” Partnership Programme be prepared for consideration at its special session in 2011.

The Committee considered the report of the Working Group on Environmental Monitoring and Assessment at its eleventh session (Geneva, 2–3 September) [ECE/CEP/AC.10/2010/2], and agreed to extend the mandate of the Group’s Joint Task Force on Environmental Indicators until the end of 2012. With regard to the preparation of the Seventh “Environment for Europe” Ministerial Conference (Astana Ministerial Conference), the Committee agreed on the agenda and approved the organizational and communication plans.

The Joint Task Force on Environmental Indicators [ECE/CEP-CES/GE.1/2010/2], at its second session (Geneva, 3–4 May), revised the five indicators discussed at its first session [YUN 2009, p. 983]; reviewed in detail six further indicators from the Guidelines for the Application of Environmental Indicators in Eastern Europe, Caucasus and Central Asia; and had an initial discussion on three sets of indicators that were not included in the Guidelines but were important in the international context.

Housing and land management

The Committee on Housing and Land Management, at its seventy-first session (Geneva, 20–21 September) [ECE/HBP/162], discussed various issues, including country profiles on the housing sector; affordable, healthy and ecological housing; improvement of urban environmental performance; land registration and land markets; housing modernization and management; building and construction safety; and cross-sectoral activities. The Committee also reviewed its 2010–2011 work programme [ECE/HBP/2010/1] and the 2011–2012 draft programme of work, annexed to its report. It decided to set up a Working Group on a legally binding instrument on affordable, healthy and ecological housing in the UNECE region and agreed on its terms of reference.

It recommended that the paper on the subject [ECE/HBP/2010/6] be used as a background document for discussion in the Working Group. The Committee endorsed the 2008–2009 biennial performance evaluation report and the 2010–2011 biennial evaluation plan. It also agreed that the group HUMAN would present proposals for consideration on the development of a “cluster structure” for the housing sector and an implementation strategy for a limited-profit housing industry.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians, at its fifty-eighth session (Paris, 8–10 June) [ECE/CES/79], considered the implications of the meetings of its parent body—the February session of the UN Statistical Commission (see p. 1262). Two seminars were convened during the session on spatial statistics and the impact of global crises on statistical systems. The Conference discussed the outcomes of in-depth reviews by the Conference Bureau on statistical dissemination, communication and publications [ECE/CES/2010/1 & Add.1]; and government finance, fiscal and public sector statistics [ECE/CES/2010/2 & Add.1]; as well as the in-depth reviews of time-use surveys [ECE/CES/2010/25] and measuring the information society and statistics on science, technology and innovation [ECE/CES/2010/4].

The Conference considered a secretariat note [ECE/CES/2010/8] on the measurement of different emerging forms of households and families, which presented a framework and concepts and indicators for measuring new forms of family and household arrangements in the ECE region, including reconstituted families, commuters between households, living apart together, same-sex couples, and persons living apart but within a network. The Conference also considered a secretariat note [ECE/CES/2010/9] on the potential indicators for measurement of quality of employment, which grouped the indicators under seven dimensions that broadly outlined quality of employment: safety and ethics of employment, income and benefits from employment, working hours and balancing work and non-working life, security of employment and social protection, social dialogue, skills development and training, and workplace relationships and work motivation.

Economic cooperation and integration

The Committee on Economic Cooperation and Integration, at its fifth session (Geneva, 1–3 December) [ECE/CECI/2010/2], noted the conclusions and recommendations of the innovation performance review of Belarus, and asked the secretariat to consider joint follow-up steps to facilitate their implementation. The Committee discussed issues, such as creating a supportive environment for innovative development and knowledge-based competitiveness; regulatory protection of intellectual property rights and strengthening their role in innovative development; entrepreneurship and small- and medium-sized enterprises development; financial intermediation in support of innovative development; best practices in public-private partnerships; and capacity-building activities.

The Committee also noted the 2011 programme of work and beyond [ECE/CECI/2010/4] and the 2010–2011 biennial evaluation plan. It recommended the renewal of the mandates of the Teams of Specialists on Innovation and Competitiveness Policies, on Intellectual Property and on Public-Private Partnerships until 2013.

Cooperation with regional bodies

In a consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/65/382-S/2010/490], the Secretary-General described the modalities of cooperation between the United Nations and the Eurasian Economic Community and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/125 [draft: A/65/L.32] without vote [agenda item 122 (k)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Eurasian Economic Community

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/84 of 9 December 2003, in which it granted the Eurasian Economic Community observer status in the General Assembly, and 63/15 of 3 November 2008,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural and humanitarian nature,

Recalling further the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations that encourage activities through regional cooperation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Taking note of the fact that the membership of the Eurasian Economic Community includes countries with economies in transition, and recalling in this regard its resolution 61/210 of 20 December 2006, in which it invited the United Nations system to enhance dialogue with and increase support to the regional and subregional cooperation organizations whose membership includes countries with economies in transition and whose efforts include assisting their members to fully integrate into the world economy,

Recalling its resolution 64/208 of 21 December 2009 in which it invited the United Nations development system, in particular the funds and programmes, and at the regional level, in accordance with their respective mandates, to improve support, as appropriate, to middle-income countries,

Noting that the Treaty on the Establishment of the Eurasian Economic Community reaffirms the commitment of the States members of the Community to the principles of the Charter and also to the generally accepted principles and norms of international law,

Convinced that the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Eurasian Economic Community contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Expressing concern over the persistent natural disasters in countries of the region,

Recognizing that the issues of water and energy resources management, as well as the development, dissemination and transfer of technologies, have particular importance for the sustainable development of the countries members of the Eurasian Economic Community,

Recognizing also that the Eurasian Economic Community includes some landlocked countries, and in this regard underlining the key role of regional integration institutions such as the Eurasian Economic Community in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries,

Recognizing further the value of regional and subregional cooperation efforts in meeting the challenges of the global economic and financial crisis, and in this regard noting the creation within the Eurasian Economic Community of the Anti-crisis Fund as a useful contribution to the multilateral response to the current crisis,

Noting the progress achieved in the area of regional economic integration through the establishment of a customs union by Belarus, Kazakhstan and the Russian Federation,

Noting with appreciation the activities of the Eurasian Development Bank in support of development and integration of the States members of the Eurasian Economic Community,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 63/15, and expresses satisfaction with regard to the mutually beneficial interaction between the United Nations and the Eurasian Economic Community;

2. Also takes note of the activities of the Eurasian Economic Community in support of United Nations goals through the strengthening of regional cooperation in such areas as trade and economic development, the establishment of a customs union, energy, transport, agriculture and agro-industry, the regulation of migration, banking and finance, communications, education, health care and pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, environmental protection and natural disaster risk reduction;

3. Commends the commitment of the States members of the Eurasian Economic Community to scaling up regional economic integration by establishing a customs union and free-trade zone, consistent with the multilateral trading system, as well as the formation of a common energy market;

4. Notes with appreciation the progress achieved in cooperation between the Eurasian Economic Community and the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the United Nations Development Programme, as well as the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including in the fields of water and energy resources management, energy efficiency, the development, dissemination and transfer of technologies, trade facilitation, transport, the environment, capacity-building, education, science and innovation, biotechnology and nanotechnology and investment promotion;

5. Welcomes the promotion of effective interaction within the framework of the United Nations Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia;

6. Underlines the importance of further strengthening dialogue, cooperation and coordination between the United Nations system and the Eurasian Economic Community, and invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue conducting, to this end, regular consultations with the Secretary-General of the Eurasian Economic Community, within existing resources, using for this purpose the relevant inter-institutional forums and formats, including the annual consultations between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and heads of regional organizations;

7. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations, programmes and funds of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions, to further enhance cooperation and direct contacts with the Eurasian Economic Community for the purpose of undertaking joint implementation of programmes to achieve their goals;

8. Invites in particular the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and other related organizations of the United Nations system to further contribute to the development by the Eurasian Economic Community of a concept for the effective use of water and energy resources in States members of the Community as well as to the resolution of water-related disaster risk reduction issues in the region;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-seventh session the subitem entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Eurasian Economic Community".

On the same date [meeting 64], the Assembly adopted resolution 65/128 [draft: A/65/L.35 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 122 (d)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 54/5 of 8 October 1999, by which it granted observer status to the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, as well as its resolutions 55/211 of 20 December 2000, 57/34 of 21 November 2002, 59/259 of 23 December 2004, 61/4 of 20 October 2006 and 63/11 of 3 November 2008 on cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social or humanitarian nature,

Recalling further the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations that encourage activities through regional cooperation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling its Declaration on the Enhancement of Cooperation between the United Nations and Regional Arrangements or Agencies in the Maintenance of International Peace and Security of 9 December 1994,

Recognizing that any dispute or conflict in the region impedes cooperation, and stressing the need to solve such a dispute or conflict on the basis of the norms and principles of international law,

Convinced that the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and other organizations contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 63/11,

1. Takes note of the Declaration adopted by the Heads of State and Government of the States members of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization on the occasion of the Fifteenth Anniversary Summit of the Organization, held in Istanbul, Turkey, on 25 June 2007;

2. Reiterates the conviction that multilateral economic cooperation contributes to enhancing peace, stability and security to the benefit of the Black Sea region;

3. Welcomes the efforts towards the completion of the process of reforms in the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization envisaged in the Bucharest statement of 26 April 2006, issued by the Council of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Organization, thus contributing to the enhancement of the efficiency and effectiveness of the Organization, as well as its role in the economic and social development of its member States;

4. Acknowledges the commitment of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization to contributing to the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals at national, regional and global levels;

5. Takes note of the resolve of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization to foster a pragmatic and project- and results-oriented approach in the spheres of common interest for its member States, where improved regional cooperation could create synergies and increase the efficiency of resources used;

6. Welcomes the activities of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization aimed at strengthening regional cooperation in fields such as energy, focusing on renewable sources of energy and energy efficiency, transport, institutional reform and good governance, trade and economic development, banking and finance, with a new approach involving environmental protection, sustainable development and entrepreneurship, communications, agriculture and agro-industry, health care and pharmaceuticals, tourism, science and technology, the exchange of statistical data and economic information, collaboration among Customs services, and combating organized crime and illicit trafficking in drugs, weapons and radioactive material, acts of terrorism and illegal migration, and in other related areas;

7. Also welcomes the efforts of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization to elaborate and realize concrete joint regional projects, particularly in the fields of energy and transport, which will contribute to the development of the Euro-Asian transport links;

8. Takes note, within this framework, of the signing in Belgrade on 19 April 2007 of the memorandum of understanding for the coordinated development of the Black Sea Ring Highway and the memorandum of understanding on the development of the Motorways of the Sea at the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization region;

9. Welcomes the financing of projects by the Project Development Fund of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, as well as by the Hellenic Development Fund, which was established within the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, taking into account the guidelines of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development for sustainable development and for achieving the Millennium Development Goals in the Black Sea region;

10. Appeals for greater cooperation between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and international financial institutions in co-financing feasibility and pre-feasibility studies of the projects in the wider Black Sea area;

11. Takes note of the positive contributions of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization, the Business Council, the Black Sea Trade and Development Bank and the International Centre for Black Sea Studies to the strengthening of multifaceted regional cooperation in the wider Black Sea area;

12. Also takes note of the enhanced cooperation between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the Economic Commission for Europe, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the working contacts of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization with the World Bank, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization, aimed at promoting the sustainable development of the region of the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization;

13. Welcomes the multifaceted and fruitful cooperation between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the Economic Commission for Europe, especially in the area of transport, within the framework of the Cooperation Agreement signed between the two organizations on 2 July 2001;

14. Also welcomes the implementation of the Black Sea Trade and Investment Promotion Programme, the first partnership project between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Development Programme, launched on 1 December 2006, and the signing of the cooperation agreement between the two organizations in Istanbul on 28 June 2007;

15. Takes note of the establishment of cooperation between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the International Centre for Hydrogen Energy Technologies of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, with emphasis placed on energy and the environment;

16. Also takes note of the increased cooperation between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and, within this framework, welcomes the launching on 1 September 2007 of the joint Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization-United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime project on strengthening the criminal justice response to trafficking in persons in the Black Sea region;

17. Further takes note of the intensified cooperation between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and the European Union, and supports the efforts of the Organization to take concrete steps for the establishment of mutually beneficial partnerships;

18. Takes note of the cooperation established between the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization and other regional organizations and initiatives;

19. Invites the Secretary-General to strengthen dialogue with the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization with a view to promoting cooperation and coordination between the two secretariats;

20. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to cooperate with the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization in order to continue programmes with the Organization and its associated institutions for the achievement of their objectives;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-seventh session the sub-item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization".

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), at its thirty-third session (Brasilia, Brazil, 30 May–1 June) [E/2010/40], considered the document entitled "Time for equality: closing gaps, opening trails" [LC/G.2432(SES.33/3)]. It held a high-level seminar on the subject with four panels: macroeconomics policies for development; structural heterogeneity and productivity gaps; social and labour institutions; and state, political actions, fiscal policy and social covenants. In the Brasilia resolution [E/2010/40 res. 650(XXXIII)], the Commission requested the Executive Secretary to disseminate the document and foster more in-depth comparative analysis with countries outside the region, and to conduct studies and formulate public policy proposals for building national economic and social development capacities. The Commission also heard a presentation on energy for a sustainable future: the vision of the UN Secretary-General's Special Advisory Group on Energy, and considered the biennial report on ECLAC's 2010 and 2011 activities [LC/G.2528(SES.34/7)], the draft programme of work of the ECLAC system for 2012–2013 and the report of the Committee on South-South Cooperation.

The Commission adopted other resolutions on South-South cooperation [res. 647(XXXIII)], which requested the secretariat to analyse new alternatives for generating the volume of resources necessary for financing the development of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean, and develop indicators to reflect the particular realities in the countries and for measuring the social and economic impact of South-South cooperation; support for the work of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning [res. 652(XXXIII)]; follow-up to the Plan of Action for the Information Society in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 653(XXXIII)]; ECLAC activities in relation to follow-up to the MDGs and implementation of the outcomes of major UN conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields [res. 654(XXXIII)]; the report of the twenty-third session of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee and the fourteenth meeting of the Monitoring Committee [res. 655(XXXIII)]; the agreements on population and development: priority issues for 2010–2012, adopted at the 2010 meeting of the ECLAC Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development [res. 657(XXXIII)]; and the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 658(XXXIII)], which urged active participation in the eleventh session of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Commission adopted the ECLAC programme of work for 2012–2013, including the creation of a new subprogramme on financing for development [res. 648(XXXIII)], approved the calendar of conferences for 2010–2012 [res. 651(XXXIII)]; and recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve the invitation of El Salvador to host the Committee's next meeting [res. 656(XXXIII)].

The General Assembly adopted resolution 65/242 (see p. 335) on Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community.

Economic trends

A report on the economic situation in and outlook for Latin America and the Caribbean, 2010–2011 [E/2011/19] indicated that gross domestic product returned to growth in 2010, increasing by 6.1 per cent. While growth was seen throughout the region, reaching 6.8 per cent in South America and 4.9 per cent in Mexico and Central America, the English and Dutch-speaking Caribbean only saw growth of 0.5 per cent. That growth pushed the regional unemployment rate down to 7.5 per cent. The second half of the year saw the exhaustion of idle production capacity, public spending cuts and strong appreciation of the currencies of some countries in the region; as a result, growth in 2011 was projected to reach 4.2 per cent.

Activities

An ECLAC report on the Commission's work in 2010 and 2011 [LC/G.2528(SES.34/7)], addressed activities undertaken and progress made under its 12 subprogrammes: linkages with the global economy, regional integration and cooperation; production and innovation; macroeconomic policies and growth; social development and equality; mainstreaming the gender perspective in regional development; population and development; planning of public administration; environment and human settlements; natural resources and infrastructure; statistics and economic projections; subregional activities in Mexico and Central America; and subregional activities in the Caribbean.

Regional integration and cooperation

During the 2010–2011 biennium, the work of the subprogramme was conducted through the ECLAC International Trade and Integration Division, which continued to contribute to the improvement of the region's linkages with the global economy through the development of trade, integration and cooperation schemes; and the strengthening of ECLAC's role as a partner for assistance and technical advice. The subprogrammes's work was organized around three main areas: economic and commercial trends in Latin American international relations; internationalization strategies for Latin America and Caribbean countries, with an emphasis on competitiveness, and negotiation and administration of trade agreements; and regional integration and cooperation, trade and climate change, and the promotion of position linkages between trade and poverty reduction efforts and gender equality. A report on the regional debate on integration and the region's role in the global economy "Opportunities for Convergence and Regional Cooperation" was presented at the Unity Summit of Latin America and the Caribbean (Cancún, Mexico, February). A workshop with the various subregional integration schemes on areas of convergence and regional cooperation in Latin America, held at ECLAC headquarters in July, discussed the proposals contained in the report.

Production and innovation

The ECLAC Production, Productivity and Management Division provided research and technical assistance and a forum for regional dialogue on production activities. It studied the processes of structural change, innovation and technological development, with a special focus on information and communication technology (ICT). ECLAC participated in the Regional Plan of Action for the Information Society in Latin American and the Caribbean and published a book entitled ICTs for growth and equality: renewing strategies for the information society, which highlighted the potential benefits of ICTs and suggested policy options for Governments. Technical assistance was provided for the implementation and monitoring of the Regional Plan of Action, including the definition of progress indicators, and capacity-building through training and advisory services, which benefited 260 policymakers and technical staff from 16 Latin American and 12 Caribbean countries in the areas of design and implementation of strategies, policies and measures to foster innovation, and science and technology. The Division also provided a consistent message on the need to strengthen policies to promote industrial and agricultural development and reduce disparities in productivity among industries and enterprises.

Macroeconomic policies and growth

While the region saw a vigorous recovery in 2010, the performance of the economies was uneven, creating new challenges for the analytical work and the technical support provided by the ECLAC Economic Development Division. The 2009–2010 edition of the Division's Economic Survey focused on the distributive impact of public policies, which was also debated at two high-level meetings held in April and August. The April expert meeting, held at ECLAC headquarters, aimed to stimulate policy discussions. The follow-up event in August consisted of six conferences with the participation of ECLAC officials and consultants, scholars and policymakers. The Division's Preliminary Overview of Economics of Latin America and Caribbean provided analysis of the region's economic performance and outlook at the end of the year.

The Division contributed to the debate on the role of fiscal policy in the region and beyond, in the context of the global economic crisis, through several workshops, including on fiscal policy for the strengthening of democracy in Latin America (27–28 April); macroeconomic volatility and fiscal space (3–4 August); and after the bicentennial: institutions and economic development in Latin America (30 September). At those events, the Division disseminated technical and policy documents on stimulus measures, fostering of sustainable development, protection of the most vulnerable sectors of the population and efforts to achieve greater social cohesion. The Division also ran several extrabudgetary projects related to fiscal policy and labour markets.

Equity and social cohesion

In 2010, the ECLAC Social Development Division focused on strengthening social protection and care provision with a redistributive emphasis, improving social expenditure and child poverty analysis, studying and promoting the positive impact of ICTs on health and education, and disseminating innovative social development projects.

ECLAC launched a study on The Economy of Child Care in Haiti, which proposed that social policies for women and children should be the pillar of reconstruction in that country, and addressed the issue of public policymaking in support of child care. The Division also organized an international seminar (Mexico, 17 February) that discussed proposals for measuring poverty apart from income levels, including through access to basic rights and the loss of freedoms. International and national experts also examined proposals and methodologies for measuring poverty in the region from a multidimensional perspective during a seminar on multidimensional poverty measurement in Latin America (Santiago, Chile, 10–12 November). Experts warned that over 50 per cent of the region's rural population was poor and almost a third lived in extreme poverty.

Mainstreaming gender in regional development

The ECLAC Division for Gender Affairs continued to generate knowledge and support the development and monitoring of public policies for gender equality in the region, and to incorporate the knowledge into capacity-building for national mechanisms for the advancement of women and national statistical institutes. The Division also supported the collection of data on the situation of women and men through the Gender Equality Observatory for Latin America and the Caribbean, and strengthened relations between producers and users of those gender indicators. The Observatory, established in response to the Quito Consensus [YUN 2007, p. 1031], was consolidated as an important strategic tool through a web portal in four languages. The biennium saw the number of users almost quadruple in comparison with 2008–2009, reaching over 209,000.

The eleventh session of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean (Brasília, 13–16 July) [LC/L.3309] brought together some 1,000 people from 31 ECLAC States, 16 UN agencies and funds, and 10 intergovernmental and governmental organizations. The Conference adopted the Brasília Consensus, which highlighted new commitments for attaining greater economic autonomy and equality in the workplace, enhancing the citizenship of women, broadening their participation in decision-making, addressing all forms of violence against them, and carrying out training and activities for exchanging and disseminating experiences.

Population and development

The ECLAC Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre–Population Division engaged in intensive technical support to enhance national census capacities, and provided workshops and reference publications on a variety of census topics, such as living conditions, household equipment, environment, demographic and socio-economic characteristics, as well as the training of enumerators, use of new technologies, data coherence and demographic analysis. As its technical secretariat, the Division prepared the meeting of the ECLAC Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development (Santiago, 12–14 May), which dealt mainly with population and health matters and agreed on population and development priorities for 2010–2012.

A workshop (Santiago, 7–9 June) focused on strengthening the capacities of national statistical offices for formulating the census questionnaire for the 2010 round of census. Four more workshops were organized on sharing experiences on classifications and nomenclatures; experiences in training of census supervisors and enumerators; analysis of census data, coherence, quality and coverage; and potential uses and applications of census data. The Division decided on four areas of focus during the next biennium: analysis of demographic trends; generation of data; inclusion of socio-demographic inputs in social programming at the national and local levels for decision-making in the design and implementation of public policies; and regional cooperation in population and development through South-South cooperation.

Public administration

The Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) provided policy advice and proposals in development strategies and public-sector economics to foster improved performance of public policies, programmes and projects, and strengthen and capitalize knowledge networks in those areas. It promoted and supported the creation of new instruments for budgetary policymaking and evaluation, and disseminated results-based management practices for incorporation into the public-policy cycle. It organized new international courses on planning, government and development; electronic government; and MDGs at the municipal level. It also provided strategic advisory services to the Governments of Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador and Paraguay, in areas related to development planning, prospective analysis and institutional strengthening. ILPES also expanded its training services within and outside the region through e-learning courses.

Technical cooperation was provided to 12 countries in planning, results-based management, fiscal policy, regional and local development strategies and policies, and e-government. In the field of research and analysis, ten documents were published and widely disseminated on diverse topics, such as public management, budgeting, project and programme evaluation, local and regional development, and e-government issues. The twenty-second version of the regional seminar on fiscal policy, organized by ILPES and co-sponsored by the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, OECD and the Inter-American Development Bank, with the support of the German Agency for International Cooperation (Santiago, January), discussed fiscal policy responses and options for coping with the financial crisis.

Sustainable development and human settlements

The ECLAC Sustainable Development and Human Settlements Division continued to work on interrelationships among economic growth, environmental protection, urban development and social equity, as well as consolidating work on the economics of climate change. The subprogramme focused on two areas for strengthening the capacities of the countries in the region: evaluating the advances, gaps and strategic opportunities for sustainable development, the integration of sustainable criteria in public policies and institution-building for environmental management, including urban development, land use and metropolitan areas; and climate change impacts, mitigation and adaptation, including disaster and risk assessment and management. Efforts were devoted to capacity-building through courses, workshops and seminars, with officials from all countries in the region benefiting from numerous courses on urban projects, urban responses to climate change, impacts of sea level rise in coastal zones, the clean development mechanism, adaptation to climate change, projects on Reducing Emission from Deforestation and Forest Degradation, social impacts of climate change, green tax reforms and risk management.

During the nineteenth General Assembly of Ministers and High-level Authorities of Housing and Urban Development in Latin America and the Caribbean (Argentina, September), it was emphasized that responses were urgently needed for poverty and precarious urban and rural habitats, social housing programmes and urban development and climate change. ECLAC organized an international conference and a meeting on risk, habitat and megacities, with the Helmholtz Association of Germany (Santiago, March), at which experts examined the dynamics of growth of human settlements in relation to urban and rural land markets.

The Division produced Economics of Climate Change in Latin America and the Caribbean (2010), which detailed the main economic effects of global warming in different potential scenarios and suggested options for action to avoid greater damage to the region. The Division also organized, in conjunction with ILPES, the third session of the twenty-second regional seminar on fiscal policy (Santiago, January), and an international seminar on planning and sustainable management of natural and sustainable resources (Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, August).

ECLAC conducted several missions to estimate the socio-economic and environmental impacts of disasters, including earthquakes in Haiti and Chile, the El Niño phenomenon in Bolivia, the influenza A (H1N1) epidemic in Mexico, and Tropical Storm Agatha in Guatemala and El Salvador.

Natural resources and infrastructure

The ECLAC Natural Resources and Infrastructure Division contributed to strengthening the region's capacities to formulate and implement policies for promoting and moving simultaneously toward economic growth, social equity and environmental sustainability. The Division provided substantial technical assistance to the countries of the region to strengthen their institutional capacities and skills for enhancing their regulatory frameworks. It also organized the first policy dialogue on energy efficiency in the region: "Towards sustainable institutionalities" (Santiago, November), which created a database of performance indicators to serve in evaluating the results of policies and programmes applied.

In the field of mining, the Division organized, jointly with the Sustainable Development and Human Settlements Divisions, the Senior Expert Group Meeting on Sustainable Development of Lithium Resources (Santiago, November). The Division also organized a high-level seminar (Montevideo, Uruguay, October) that discussed the role of transport and ports in sustainable development. It was also active in infrastructure, transport and logistics policies. Ten countries (Belize, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Mexico, Nicaragua, Honduras, Panama) signed the Tuxtla Declaration, which recognized the support given by ECLAC and requested that joint work be carried out in multimodal transport policies, logistics chain security and infrastructure projects.

Statistics and economic projections

The ECLAC Statistics and Economic Projections Division continued to help the region's countries build, strengthen and harmonize statistical information and decision-making systems. It supported countries in enhancing national accounts quality and coverage, with 24 of them making progress in implementing the System of National Accounts 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1112], including satellite accounts. Several countries were also assisted in updating the base year for their consumer price indices and improving international harmonization.

ECLAC organized a regional seminar on national accounts (Lima, Peru, November), which discussed the strategy for implementing the 2008 recommendations on national accounts, as well as how to coordinate the worldwide efforts of several international agencies. Two regional seminars were held on the Millennium indicators: the first on health matters, jointly with the Pan American Health Organization (April); and the second on ICT (September). They provided a forum for analysing discrepancies between national and international data and complementary indicators for specific goals. Progress was made towards the development of a multidimensional poverty measurement, with ECLAC organizing two events on the issue (Santiago, May and November). The report ECLAC: Development of Official Statistics in the Region stated that significant progress had been made in developing statistics, and described the main trends and challenges in the development of official statistics.

Subregional activities

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, continued to strengthen the capacity of policymakers and other ECLAC stakeholders to formulate and implement economic and social development measures and improve opportunities for integration in the Caribbean, as well as between the Caribbean and the wider Latin America region. Six countries were at various stages of formulating or adopting policies and measures in line with ECLAC recommendations, among which were the establishment of gender policies, the development of databases to disseminate statistical results, the adoption of sophisticated measures for conducting country poverty assessments, and the use of the methodology for developing environmental indicators to address other areas of the MDGs. A number of countries adopted policies or programmes that enhanced their capacity and technical expertise to follow up on the major international programmes of action in the economic, social and environmental fields.

At its twenty-third session (St. George's, Grenada, 17 March), the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee reviewed the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 2005, p. 946], and considered progress in the Caribbean toward the achievement of the MDGs, in preparation for the high-level meeting at the General Assembly's sixty-fifth session (see p. 813). The subregional headquarters convened a number of workshops contributing to the development of the subregion's statistical capacity, including one in response to a request for technical assistance from the Government of Grenada to improve its statistical capacity in the use of the REDATAM software.

In the area of social development, the subprogramme hosted an experts group meeting in collaboration with UN-Women on good practices in national action plans on violence against women (13–15 September); a regional seminar, in collaboration with the ECLAC Division for Gender Affairs, on the use of administration records to measure violence against women in the Caribbean (30 November–1 December); and a regional workshop on the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities [YUN 2006, p. 785] in the Caribbean (9–10 November). The Caribbean Millennium Development Goals Report 2010 assessed achievements and constraints in countries' efforts to accomplish the Goals.

Mexico and Central America

In 2010, the subregional economy started growing again after the 2008 financial crisis, though at a slower pace than before the crisis. Due to the strain on the economy, efforts under the subprogramme were aimed at assisting Governments and stakeholders of the countries served by the office in Mexico to strengthen their capacities to address economic and social issues, as well as to design or evaluate policies and measures in the areas of trade, integration and sustainable development. The assistance was directed towards different economic and social agents, resulting in four countries adopting ECLAC analysis and recommendations in key issues for development, and six countries in fundamental aspects of sectoral policies.

ECLAC organized a seminar on equality and development (June) and a workshop on tools for assessing the effects of climate change on agriculture (San Jose, November), attended by government officials and academics from Costa Rica. A study was also completed under the subprogramme on energy and climate change in Central America, whose findings were presented to meetings held in Guatemala City (August) and San Jose (August). Technical assistance was provided to: the infrastructure, energy, transportation, housing and human settlements sectors in Haiti, as well as for other post-disaster needs; the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Food of Guatemala; the Governments of El Salvador and Guatemala, following the eruption of Pacaya Volcano and the passage of Hurricane Agatha; and to the Government of Colombia to evaluate the impacts of the flooding in the country.

Programme and organizational questions

During its thirty-third session (Brasilia, Brazil, 30 May–1 June) [E/2010/40], the Commission adopted a number of resolutions on programme and organizational matters.

ECLAC Calendar of conferences

The Commission [res. 651(XXXIII)] reaffirmed its decision to maintain the current intergovernmental structure and pattern of meetings and approved the ECLAC calendar of conferences for 2010–2012 annexed to the resolution.

Proposed strategic framework, 2012–2013

The Commission [res. 648(XXXIII)] adopted the ECLAC programme of work for the 2012–2013 biennium, including the creation of a new subprogramme on financing for development. The priorities of the programme of work were increasing macroeconomic stability and enhancing policies for reducing vulnerability and mitigating the effects of economic and financial crises; strengthening the region's access to financing for development and enhancing the financial architecture; increasing the region's productivity potential and reducing productivity gaps to achieve convergence, with particular emphasis on innovation and new technologies; improving the region's position in the international economy through trade, cooperation and regional integration; promoting a social covenant by improving social security, reducing social risks and reinforcing gender mainstreaming in public policies; enhancing sustainable development policies and energy efficiency and addressing the impacts of climate change; and improving institution-building for the management of global and transboundary issues and the provision of public goods at the regional level. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to examine the challenges faced by the region in connection with the 2008–2009 economic and financial crisis and related issues.

Venue of ECLAC thirty-fourth session

The Commission [res. 656(XXXIII)] recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve the holding of the Commission's thirty-fourth session in El Salvador in 2012.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2010/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2010/4 without vote [agenda item 10].

Venue of the thirty-fourth session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind paragraph 15 of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, as well as rules 1 and 2 of the rules of procedure of the Commission,

Considering the invitation of the Government of El Salvador to host the thirty-fourth session of the Commission,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of El Salvador for its generous invitation;

2. Notes the acceptance by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean of this invitation with pleasure;

3. Endorses the decision of the Commission to hold its thirty-fourth session in El Salvador in the first half of 2012.

Cooperation with regional bodies

The Secretary-General, in his September consolidated report on cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations [A/65/382], outlined UN relations with the Latin American Economic System (SELA). The formulation of the UNDP-United Nations Conference on Trade and Development-SELA Joint Regional Programme for Trade, Investment and Development Issues in Latin America and the Caribbean (2010–2012) was finalized. The Programme aimed to enhance the capacity of Latin American and Caribbean countries in formulating policy responses in trade, investment and human development.

On 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System" would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-fifth (2011) session (decision 65/544).

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), at its twenty-sixth session (Beirut, Lebanon, 17–20 May) [E/2010/41], considered during the senior officials segment management issues, the Executive Secretary's report on the Commission's activities [E/ESCWA/26/5], the draft 2012–2013 strategic framework [E/ESCWA/26/7], and progress made in the establishment of the ESCWA Technology Centre [E/ESCWA/26/9]. The ministerial segment held two round tables: the first on national youth policies within the framework of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond [YUN 1995, p. 1211]; and the second on human and institutional capacity-building [E/ESCWA/26/4]. The theme of youth policies was considered by delegates in view of its relevance to the countries in the region, particularly in the light of the proclamation by the United Nations, in Assembly resolution 64/134 [YUN 2009, p. 1187], of 2010 as the International Year of Youth: Dialogue and Mutual Understanding. Discussion centred on youth and education, employment, health, participation in decision-making and public life; globalization and exceptional issues. At the end of the session, ESCWA distributed a booklet on Youth Development in the ESCWA Region: Statistical Profiles, National Strategies and Success Stories.

The Commission adopted 10 resolutions, including one on the establishment of the ESCWA Technology Centre.

Economic trends

The economic outlook of the ESCWA region improved in 2010. The economies in the region grew by 4.7 per cent, compared with 1.9 per cent in 2009. The recovery was a result of higher external and domestic demand, bolstered by active fiscal measures. That came in the wake of a strong recovery of crude oil prices since the second quarter of 2009, and the non-realization of several worst-case scenarios that could have affected the region's economic development, such as balance-of-payment crises and associated currency devaluations. The Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries grew by 4.4 per cent, while in the more diversified economies growth increased to 5.7 per cent. Inflation in the GCC countries reached 3 per cent, while in the more diversified economies it increased to 8.3 per cent.

Activities

In 2010, ESCWA activities under its 2010–2011 work programme [E/ESCWA/27/5 (Part I)] focused on seven subprogrammes: integrated management of natural resources for sustainable development; social development; economic development and integration; ICT for regional integration; statistics for evidence-based policymaking; the advancement of women; and conflict mitigation and development.

Natural resources management for sustainable development

The ESCWA Sustainable Development and Productivity Division was responsible for implementing that subprogramme, which aimed at improving the sustainable management and use of natural resources in the region, and promoting regional cooperation and harmonization in the management of water, energy and the production sectors. The Division organized a pilot project that provided support to women in adopting techniques to improve the quality of produce and increase their income, and an ad hoc group meeting on the sustainable livelihoods approach (SLA) (Beirut, 24–25 November) [E/ESCWA/SDPD/2010/WG.4/6/Report], which sought to encourage the sharing of experiences and lessons learned from local SLA initiatives, the identification of priorities for rural development and the enrichment of a draft guide on the "Application of the SLA in the ESCWA region", prepared by ESCWA. The meeting concluded with a set of recommendations supporting the implementation of SLA.

Assistance provided by ESCWA to the League of Arab States Arab Ministerial Council for Electricity contributed to the adoption of the Arab Strategy for Renewable Energy and the Arab Guiding Framework for Improving Energy Efficiency in the Electricity Sector at End Users Level, which became effective at the end of the year.

On 19 May [E/2010/41 res. 297(XXVI)], the Commission commended the secretariat in following up the realization of the MDGs, in particular progress in the ESCWA region. It requested the Executive Secretary to develop an MDG monitor for societal progress, including gender equality and youth empowerment.

Social development

The ESCWA Social Development Division aimed at strengthening national social policies that were region-specific and culturally sensitive, and encouraging community development action. During the biennium, ESCWA supported Jordan, Lebanon and Oman in consideration of their social protection schemes. ESCWA engaged with countries to better understand labour-related challenges facing Governments in the region and to increase knowledge of the characteristics and impact of labour regulations and labour market policies. ESCWA organized workshops and seminars (Iraq, Lebanon, Palestine, Yemen) on the role of civil society in the development process and in promoting a dynamic public-civic relationship. In addition, ESCWA initiatives to follow the repercussions, causes and dynamics of the Arab uprisings resulted in potential resolutions, action plans, and technical input for a dynamic civic engagement in the process of change and transition towards democratization.

ESCWA also organized, in coordination with the Arab Institute for Training and Research in Statistics, the First Coordinators' Workshop on Measuring the Well-being and Progress of Arab Societies (Beirut, 1–5 November) [E/ESCWA/SD/2010/WG.4/Report], which aimed to build the capacities of national coordinators through training and information. It developed a draft national action plan of measuring well-being and progress of society based on the regional roadmap.

On 19 May [res. 295(XXVI)], the Commission stressed the importance of the Guiding Declaration of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia on Giving Greater Attention to Youth Policies: An Opportunity for Development, annexed to the resolution.

Economic development and integration

The ESCWA Economic Development and Globalization Division aimed at strengthening macroeconomic policymaking for short-term economic growth and sustainable economic development in member countries, negotiation of trade and investment agreements, and trade facilitation. The League of Arab States-United Nations Arab MDG report “The Third Arab Report of the MDGs 2010 and the Impact of the Global Economic Crises”, presented at the twenty-sixth ESCWA Ministerial Session (May), and the thirtieth session of the Arab Ministers of Social Affairs (12–13 December), was followed by an open dialogue session between the members of the Thematic Working Group on MDGs and Arab Ministers of Development and Social Affairs.

ESCWA focused on mobilizing both domestic and international resources for development and organized ten national training workshops on negotiations of bilateral investment agreements, double taxation avoidance, and compilation of foreign direct investment abroad. The workshops contributed to upgrading the negotiation skills of some 245 government officials in Jordan, Lebanon, Oman, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates.

During the eleventh session of its Committee on Transport (Beirut, 22–24 March), ESCWA prepared the terms of reference for the working group on the harmonization of institutional frameworks and legislation in the transport sector in the region. The Committee also agreed on a set of recommendations that called on countries to adopt the ESCWA international agreements on transport, in addition to other recommendations related to transport and trade facilitation in the region.

ICT and related development issues

The ESCWA Information and Communication Technology Division aimed at narrowing the digital divide to build an inclusive development-oriented information society and knowledge-based economy. ESCWA assisted countries in accelerating ICT development by advocating for and supporting improvements in the production and service sectors, and implementing strategies and action plans. The regional ESCWA Technology Centre (Amman, Jordan) was fully operational and ESCWA continued the maintenance and updating of the Information Society Portal for the ESCWA region. The two expert group meetings on promotion of South-South cooperation in technology transfer discussed the priority areas of cooperation in such transfer, shared best practices and successful case studies in the areas of water, energy, agriculture and ICT, and produced a collaboration framework with multi-owners for critical technology development, management, maintenance, and service.

The Division, in partnership with the League of Arab States, organized an Expert Group Meeting on the Regional Roadmap for Internet Governance (Beirut, 25–26 October) [E/ESCWA/ICTD/2010/WG.7/Report], which gathered private and public Internet experts to discuss Internet governance; a proposal for an Arab Internet Governance Forum (IGF); and public consultations on proposed registry policies for the Arab top-level domains “.arab”. Participants endorsed the Arab Regional Roadmap for Internet Governance: Framework, Principles and Objectives, and called for the holding of an Arab IGF, as well as collaboration in Internet governance and the enhancement of the Arab role in that regard.

On 19 May [res. 294(XXVI)], the Commission adopted the statute of the ESCWA Technology Centre, which was annexed to the resolution, and requested the Executive Secretary to take steps for its implementation, including the conclusion of a headquarters agreement, and to establish the board of governors and to report in 2012.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/2010/15/Add.1], adopted resolution 2010/5 without vote [agenda item 10].

Establishment of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia at its twenty-sixth session, held in Beirut from 17 to 20 May 2010, adopted resolution 294(XXVI) on the establishment of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre and the statute of the Centre,

Endorses the resolution on the establishment of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre and the statute of the Centre, as set out in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

294(XXVI) Establishment of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome, Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/68 of 5 November 2004 and the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which the promotion of science and technology was identified as a United Nations priority,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 64/222 of 21 December 2009 adopting the Nairobi outcome document of the High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, in which the Assembly emphasized the need to promote, including through South-South cooperation, access to and the transfer of technology,

Recalling further its resolution 284(XXV) of 29 May 2008, by which it approved the establishment of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Jordan for its offer to host the Centre, and noting that resources for the Centre should come from the following sources:

- (a) Support from the host country,
- (b) Support from the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,
- (c) Income received by the Centre for services provided to beneficiaries,
- (d) Any other funding sources approved by the Board of Governors,

1. Adopts the statute of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre, in accordance with the present resolution, as the basis for its operations;

2. Requests the Executive Secretary to take all steps necessary for the prompt establishment of the Centre, including the conclusion of a headquarters agreement between the host country and the United Nations;

3. Also requests the Executive Secretary to establish the founding Board of Governors by soliciting nominations from member countries;

4. Further requests the Executive Secretary to report to the Commission at its twenty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution, including the initial operating phase of the Centre, and the achievements of the Commission in that regard.

7th plenary meeting
19 May 2010

ANNEX TO RESOLUTION 294(XXVI)

Statute of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre

Establishment

1. The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia Technology Centre shall be established in accordance with the following terms and conditions.

Mission

2. The mission of the Centre is to assist members of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and public and private organizations to acquire the tools and capabilities necessary to accelerate socio-economic development in order to attain technological parity with other nations and regions of the world and to contribute to the conversion of the economies of member countries into economies based on scientific and technological knowledge.

Objectives

3. The objectives of the Centre are to assist the members of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia by strengthening their capabilities to develop and manage national systems; develop, transfer, adapt and apply technology; determine the suitable technology for the region and facilitate its development and improve the legal and commercial framework for the transfer of technology. The Centre also aims at enhancing the technological and scientific knowledge content of major economic sectors in member countries.

Functions

4. The Centre will achieve the above objectives by undertaking such functions as:

- (a) Conducting research and analysis of trends, conditions and opportunities;
- (b) Providing advisory services;
- (c) Disseminating information and promoting good practices;
- (d) Developing partnerships and other networks with regional and international organizations and key stakeholders;
- (e) Training national personnel, particularly scientists and policy analysts;
- (f) Assessing the scientific and technological level and content of production and service sectors and measuring performance indicators of those sectors in the localization of scientific and technological knowledge.

Status and organization

5. The Centre shall have a Board of Governors (hereinafter referred to as "the Board"), an Executive Director and staff, and a Technical Committee.

6. The Centre shall be located in Amman. A host country agreement shall be concluded between the Government of Jordan and the United Nations.

7. The activities of the Centre shall be in line with relevant resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission. The Centre shall be subject to the financial and staff regulations and rules of the United Nations and applicable administrative instructions and issuances.

Board of Governors

8. The Centre shall have a Board of Governors consisting of a standing representative designated by the Government of Jordan and no fewer than six additional representatives nominated by the other members of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and elected by the Commission. The representatives who are elected by the Commission shall be elected for a period of three years and shall be eligible for re-election one more time only. If a representative is unable to serve for the full term, the vacancy shall be filled by the Government of that representative. The Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia or his/her representative shall attend meetings of the Board but shall not have the right to vote.

9. During the two-year establishment period, a Board of Governors will be constituted comprising representatives of all member countries who so wish.

10. The Executive Director of the Centre shall serve as secretary of the Board of Governors and, in such capacity, shall keep and circulate minutes of Board meetings to its members.

11. Representatives of (a) any State Member of the United Nations, (b) United Nations bodies and specialized and related agencies, and (c) such other organizations as the Board may deem appropriate, as well as experts in fields of interest to the Board, may, at the Board's discretion, be invited to attend Board meetings.

12. The Board shall meet at least once a year and shall adopt its own rules of procedure. Sessions of the Board shall be convened by the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, who may propose special sessions of the Board at his/her own initiative and shall convene such special sessions at the request of a majority of Board members.

13. A quorum for Board meetings shall be a majority of its members.

14. Each member of the Board shall have one vote. Decisions and recommendations of the Board shall be made by consensus or, where this is not possible, by a majority of the members present and voting. For the purposes of these rules, the phrase “members present and voting” means members casting an affirmative or negative vote. Members who abstain from voting are considered as not voting.

15. The Board shall, at each regular session, elect a Chair and a Vice-Chair. The Chair and the Vice-Chair shall hold office until the next regular session of the Board. The Chair or, in his/her absence, the Vice-Chair shall preside at Board meetings. If the Chair is unable to serve for the full session for which he/she has been elected, the Vice-Chair shall act as Chair for the remainder of that session.

16. The Board shall review the administration and financial status of the Centre and the implementation of its programme of work. The Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia shall submit an annual report as adopted by the Board to the Commission at its regular sessions.

Executive Director and staff

17. The Centre shall have an Executive Director and such additional staff as are appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with United Nations regulations, rules and administrative instructions. The Executive Director and additional staff shall have the status of Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia staff members.

18. The Executive Director shall be responsible to the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia for the administration of the Centre and the implementation of its programme of work.

Technical Committee

19. The Centre shall have a Technical Committee consisting of experts from member countries of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia and from intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Members of the Technical Committee shall be appointed by the Executive Director in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Commission.

20. The Technical Committee shall be responsible for advising the Executive Director on the formulation of the programme of work and on other technical matters concerning the Centre's operations.

21. Reports of meetings of the Technical Committee, and the Executive Director's observations thereon, shall be submitted to the Board at its next session.

22. The Chair at each meeting of the Technical Committee shall be elected by the majority vote of those members of the Technical Committee present and voting.

Resources of the Centre

23. The Centre shall be financed from the following sources:

- (a) Support from the host country;
- (b) Support from the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia;
- (c) Income received by the Centre for services provided to beneficiaries;

(d) Any other funding sources approved by the Board of Governors.

24. The Centre shall endeavour to mobilize sufficient resources to support its activities, in addition to those received from the host country pursuant to the agreement signed between the host country and the United Nations.

25. The United Nations shall maintain separate trust funds for donations for technical cooperation projects or other special contributions for activities of the Centre.

26. The financial resources of the Centre shall be administered in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations.

Amendments

27. Amendments to the present statute shall be adopted by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia.

28. In the event of any procedural matter arising that is not covered by the present statute or rules of procedure adopted by the Board of Governors, the pertinent part of the terms of reference and rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia shall apply.

Entry into force

29. The present statute shall enter into force on the date of its adoption by the Commission.

Statistics

The ESCWA Statistics Division aimed at improving the production and use of harmonized and comparable economic, social and sectoral statistics, including gender-disaggregated data, thereby allowing for informed and evidence-based decision-making. The Statistical Committee, at its ninth session (Beirut, 13–15 October) [E/ESCWA/SD/2010/IG.1/10], discussed the implications of meetings held by global and regional agencies on the Division's work programme and the activities of the Statistical Committee, strategic issues of official statistics in the region, the celebration of World Statistics Day, the MDGs, capacity-building in statistics for evidence-based policymaking, and a report on the activities of the Task Force on the 2010 Round of Population and Housing Censuses in the region. The Division also discussed the implementation of recommendations made by the Committee at its eighth (2008) session, progress made in carrying out statistics-related activities in the period between its eighth and ninth sessions, and an overview of the ESCWA programme of work for the 2010–2011 biennium.

Advancement of women

The ESCWA Centre for Women (ECW) organized two workshops for participants from national women machineries and gender focal points of Ministries of Labour to provide guidelines for formulating gender mainstreaming strategies within those Ministries. ECW assisted countries in integrating a gender perspective into conflict resolution and post-conflict reconstruction processes through the organization of a workshop on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] on women, peace and security; and the introduction of “ESCWA-United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees guidelines on the protection of women living in conflict situations”.

ECW also co-organized a workshop with the Inter-Parliamentarian Union on the role of parliamentarians in implementing the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895] and combating violence against women by introducing gender-sensitive legislation.

On 19 May [res. 293(XXVI)], the Commission called on member countries to adopt the resolution on the follow-up to the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action in the Arab countries after fifteen years: Beijing+15, and the recommendation on supporting ECW with additional resources in order to upgrade it to a division, adopted by the Committee on Women at its fourth session [YUN 2009, p. 991]. It asked the secretariat to complete the administrative procedures related to the upgrading of ECW.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2010/254 of 23 July, deferred consideration of the draft resolution recommended by ESCWA entitled “Upgrading the ESCWA Centre for Women to the level of a division and follow-up to the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action in the Arab countries after 15 years: Beijing+15” until its 2010 resumed substantive session. On 15 December, the Council, by decision 2010/265, further deferred consideration of the item to its 2011 substantive session.

Conflict mitigation and development

The ESCWA Section for Emerging and Conflict-related Issues (ECRI) aimed to increase understanding by countries of the impact of conflict and enhance their capacity to identify, assess, predict and respond to challenges posed by conflict, with a view to reducing its impact on development. ESCWA continued to focus on strengthening national capacities in assessing and mapping governance limitations and priority/focus areas, identifying policy recommendations and developing action plans for the establishment of a more efficient distribution of power, and competencies between the central and local governments to achieve equitable access to essential services.

In 2010, the Section conducted a study entitled Food Security and Conflict in the ESCWA Region [E/ESCWA/ECRI/2010/1], which argued that the nexus between conflict and food insecurity should be broken through the provision of new economic opportunities resulting from greater regional cooperation.

On 19 May [res. 292(XXVI)], the Commission decided to establish a committee on emerging issues and development in conflict settings, whose functions and mandate would be determined after further consultation with member countries. It requested the secretariat to upgrade ECRI to a division similar to other ESCWA subprogrammes, with a view to meeting the needs of member countries and intensifying activities in the areas of emerging issues, development in situations of conflict and instability, development in the least developed countries and development of public sector institutions.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2010/253 of 23 July, deferred consideration of the draft resolution recommended by ESCWA entitled “Upgrading the ESCWA section for Emerging and Conflict-related Issues to the level of a division and establishing a governmental committee on emerging issues and development in conflict settings” to its 2010 resumed substantive session. On 15 December, the Council, by decision 2010/265, further deferred consideration of the item to its 2011 substantive session.

Programme and organizational questions

On 19 May [res. 298(XXVI)], the Commission endorsed the change in the title of subprogramme 2, from “Integrated Social Policies” to “Social Development”; and adopted the amendments to the work programme for the 2010–2011 biennium [res. 299(XXVI)], the sessional reports of its subsidiary bodies [res. 300(XXVI)], and the draft strategic framework for the 2012–2013 biennium [res. 301(XXVI)] [E/ESCWA/26/7].

In an August bulletin [ST/SGB/2010/7], the Secretary-General outlined the functions and organization of the ESCWA secretariat, and abolished the 2002 bulletin on the subject [ST/SGB/2002/16].

Cooperation with LAS

On 13 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 65/126 (see p. 1416) commended the efforts of the League of Arab States to promote multilateral cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States and requested the Secretary-General to continue efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the two organizations and other UN system organizations and agencies in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural, administrative and technical fields.

Energy, natural resources and cartography

Among the several UN bodies dedicated to the conservation, development and use of energy and natural resources in 2010, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), in addition to its work on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, continued to address global issues related to nuclear technology, in particular by serving as the focal point for worldwide cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear technology and for promoting global nuclear safety and security. The IAEA Peaceful Uses Initiative, launched during the year, increased funding for technical cooperation activities.

The General Assembly designated 2012 as the International Year of Sustainable Energy for All, and 2013 as the Year of International Water Cooperation. The Assembly also recognized the right to water and sanitation, and that access to clean water and sanitation was fundamental to the achievement of all human rights. It called for greater support of capacity-building efforts, particularly for developing countries.

A high-level interactive dialogue on World Water Day (22 March) highlighted that solutions to competition over shared water resources and transboundary surface and ground water would support the achievement of many Millennium Development Goals. Meanwhile, the inter-State distribution of transboundary water continued to present a challenge, particularly in countries with arid or semi-arid climates. The midterm comprehensive review of the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, highlighted the need for further mobilization of resources during the second half of the Decade.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the recommendations of the Ninth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas and the Eighteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific, and adopted a resolution on global geographic information management.

Energy and natural resources

Energy

Nuclear energy

International Atomic Energy Agency

As set forth in its annual report [GC(55)/2], the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued in 2010 to address global issues related to nuclear technology, in particular by serving as the focal point for worldwide cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear technology, for promoting global nuclear safety and security, and for providing assurances through its verification activities that international undertakings to use nuclear facilities and materials for peaceful purposes only were being honoured (see PART ONE, Chapter VII). The fifty-fourth session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 20–24 September) adopted resolutions on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear, radiation, transport and waste safety; nuclear security; strengthening the Agency’s technical cooperation activities; strengthening the Agency’s activities related to nuclear science, technology and applications; strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system and application of the Model Additional Protocol; implementing the safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea; and applying the IAEA safeguards in the Middle East. During the year, the General Conference approved Swaziland’s membership; the Agency’s membership remained at 151 States.

In July [A/65/140], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the IAEA annual report for 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 527]. The Assembly took note of the report on 8 November (resolution 65/9) (see p. 1001).

IAEA activities

During 2010 [GC(55)/2], as IAEA reported, construction worldwide started on 15 new nuclear power reactors, the largest number since 1985. Five new reactors were connected to the power grid and one reactor was retired, resulting in a net increase of global nuclear generating capacity to 375 gigawatts of electric power. As at 31 December, there were 441 reactors in operation and 66 under construction. Expansion and growth prospects remained centred in Asia. Of the 15 construction starts, 12 were in Asia, as were two thirds of the reactors under construction at the end of the year. Four of the five new reactors connected to the grid were in Asia. Of the 441 nuclear power reactors in operation, 358 had been operating for more than 20 years. Many Member States therefore gave high priority to operating their reactors for longer than the 30 to 40 years originally envisaged.

Of the 60 countries that received Agency assistance in launching nuclear power programmes, approximately one third were studying the nuclear power option in preparation for a decision, while roughly half had expressed interest in understanding the issues, but had not taken steps toward a decision.

In December, the Board of Governors authorized the Director General to take steps towards the establishment of a low-enriched uranium bank, which would be owned and controlled by the Agency as a supply of last resort for nuclear power generation, while avoiding any disturbance of the commercial fuel market. The bank would be funded exclusively through voluntary contributions.

Uranium production increased by 16 per cent in 2009 compared with 2008. In Kazakhstan, production increased by more than 70 per cent, making it by far the world's top uranium producer in 2009, up from fifth place in 2003 and second place in 2008.

The Agency continued its work in applying nuclear and isotopic techniques in the areas of food and agriculture, health, water resources, the environment and industry. It strengthened its partnerships with health and cancer control organizations through the World Health Organization (WHO)/IAEA Joint Programme on Cancer Control, launched in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 528]. As part of its capacity-building and awareness initiatives, the Agency invited 72 policymakers from Africa and Asia and the Pacific to attend co-ordination and planning meetings on cancer control. The Programme of Action for Cancer Therapy (PACT) was leading the Agency's response to the cancer crisis. The integrated missions of PACT (impACT) were in high demand by Member States, with 16 impACT reviews conducted in 2010.

In June, the Agency formed the Regulatory Co-operation Forum to assist Member States in their legal and regulatory frameworks for nuclear safety and security. The Forum optimized regulatory support from Member States with advanced nuclear power programmes to newcomer Member States. The Agency carried out missions in Iran, Jordan, Thailand, the United Arab Emirates and Viet Nam, particularly for strengthening safety infrastructure. Regarding nuclear power, the disposal of high-level waste remained the one step in the civilian nuclear fuel cycle where there was no industrial-scale facility in operation. Finland, France and Sweden, however, had made substantial progress and were expected to bring repositories into full operation around 2020. For low and intermediate level waste, disposal facilities were operating in 23 countries.

Worldwide statistics on the decommissioning of nuclear power plants did not change significantly. As at 31 December, 124 power reactors were shut down, of which 15 reactors were dismantled, 52 were in the process of being dismantled or planning for short-term dismantling, 48 were kept in safe enclosure mode, 3 were entombed, and 6 had no specified decommissioning strategies.

The International Expert Group on Nuclear Liability (INLEX) continued to serve as the Agency's main forum for dealing with questions related to nuclear liability. At its tenth meeting in 2010, INLEX reported on the ratification status of the international nuclear liability conventions and the European Commission legal study on the harmonization of the civil nuclear liability system within the European Union. INLEX also exchanged preliminary views on a draft Explanatory Text on the Joint Protocol Relating to the Application of the Vienna Convention and the Paris Convention.

In Africa, the technical cooperation programme focused on developing technical, managerial and institutional capacities in nuclear science and technology. A second focus was the application of nuclear techniques to achieve increased food security, improved nutrition and health services, better management of groundwater resources, improved energy development planning, including the feasibility of the nuclear power option, quality control in industrial development, and a cleaner and safer environment. In Asia and the Pacific, the emphasis was on strengthening human and institutional capacity for nuclear safety and for applications of nuclear technology in health, agriculture and industry, and supporting infrastructure building for Member States embarking on nuclear power. In Europe, the focus was on safety and security in all aspects of the peaceful uses of nuclear technology and the use of radiation in health care. In Latin America, in addition to ongoing projects in radiotherapy, nuclear medicine, plant breeding, pest control and water management, strategic alliances and partnerships continued to be important means to address the development needs of Member States. Emphasis was placed on disseminating the achievements of the projects carried out in connection with the Regional Co-operation Agreement for the Promotion of Nuclear Science and Technology in Latin America and the Caribbean over the past 25 years.

As the IAEA Director General reported to the General Assembly in November [A/65/PV.46], with 60 countries considering introducing nuclear energy, IAEA had a key advisory role on matters of legal and regulatory frameworks, and safety and security. Nuclear safety and security continued to improve, reflecting better designs and operating procedures, as well as strengthened and more effective regulatory environments and strong cultures of safety. Launched during the year, the IAEA Peaceful Uses Initiative, initially supported by the United States with a $50 million contribution over a five-year period, increased funding for technical cooperation activities, particularly for countries embarking on new nuclear power programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 November [meeting 46], the General Assembly adopted resolution 65/9 [draft: A/65/L.10 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 87].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency for 2009,

Taking note of the statement by the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 2010,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency,

Recognizing also the cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency and the Agreement governing the relationship between the United Nations and the Agency as approved by the General Conference of the Agency on 23 October 1957 and by the General Assembly in the annex to its resolution 1145(XII) of 14 November 1957,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Takes note of resolutions GC(54)/RES/7 on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear, radiation, transport and waste safety; GC(54)/RES/8 on nuclear security; GC(54)/RES/9 on the strengthening of the Agency's technical cooperation activities; GC(54)/RES/10 on strengthening the Agency's activities related to nuclear science, technology and applications, comprising GC(54)/RES/10 A on non-power nuclear applications, GC(54)/RES/10 B on nuclear power applications and GC(54)/RES/10 C on nuclear knowledge, education and training; GC(54)/RES/11 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system and application of the Model Additional Protocol; GC(54)/RES/12 on the implementation of the Agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; GC(54)/RES/13 on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East; and decisions GC(54)/DEC/8 on the message to the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals in New York, and GC(54)/DEC/11 on the amendment to article XIV.A of the Statute of the Agency, adopted by the General Conference of the Agency at its fifty-fourth regular session, held from 20 to 24 September 2010;

3. Reaffirms its strong support for the indispensable role of the Agency in encouraging and assisting the development and practical application of atomic energy for peaceful uses, in technology transfer to developing countries and in nuclear safety, verification and security;

4. Appeals to Member States to continue to support the activities of the Agency;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the sixty-fifth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

International Year of Sustainable Energy for All

Subsequent to the ministerial-level Delhi International Renewable Energy Conference 2010 (27–29 October) and the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals (see p. 813), the Assembly designated 2012 as the International Year of Sustainable Energy for All.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/65/436/ & Corr.1], adopted resolution 65/151 without vote [agenda item 20].

International Year of Sustainable Energy for All

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and of Agenda 21, and recalling the recommendations and conclusions contained in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation") concerning energy for sustainable development,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries and General Assembly resolutions 53/199 of 15 December 1998 and 61/185 of 20 December 2006 on the proclamation of international years,

Recalling also its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling its resolutions 53/7 of 16 October 1998, 54/215 of 22 December 1999 and 55/205 of 20 December 2000, as well as its resolutions 56/200 of 21 December 2001, 58/210 of 23 December 2003, 60/199 of 22 December 2005, 62/197 of 19 December 2007, 63/210 of 19 December 2008 and 64/206 of 21 December 2009,

Concerned that over three billion people in developing countries rely on traditional biomass for cooking and heating, that one and a half billion people are without electricity and that, even when energy services are available, millions of poor people are unable to pay for them,

Recognizing that access to modern affordable energy services in developing countries is essential for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and sustainable development, which would help to reduce poverty and to improve the conditions and standard of living for the majority of the world's population,

Emphasizing the importance of investing in access to cleaner energy technology options and a climate-resilient future for all and the need to improve access to reliable, affordable, economically viable, socially acceptable and environmentally sound energy services and resources for sustainable development, and taking into consideration the diversity of situations, national policies and specific needs of countries, in particular developing countries,

Emphasizing also the need to take further action to mobilize the provision of adequate financial resources of sufficient quality and arriving in a timely manner,

Reaffirming support for the implementation of national policies and strategies to combine, as appropriate, the increased use of new and renewable energy sources and low-emission technologies, the more efficient use of energy, greater reliance on advanced energy technologies, including cleaner fossil fuel technologies, and the sustainable use of traditional energy resources, as well as the promotion of access to modern, reliable, affordable and sustainable energy services and the enhancement of national capacities to meet the growing energy demand, as appropriate, supported by international cooperation in this field and by the promotion of the development and dissemination of appropriate, affordable and sustainable energy technologies and the transfer of such technologies, on mutually agreed terms, to developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

1. Decides to declare 2012 the International Year of Sustainable Energy for All;

2. Notes the efforts of the United Nations system to work towards ensuring energy access for all and to protect the environment through the sustainable use of traditional energy resources, cleaner technologies and newer energy sources;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with relevant agencies within the United Nations system and UN-Energy, and mindful of the provisions of the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67, to organize and coordinate activities to be undertaken during the Year;

4. Encourages all Member States, the United Nations system and all other actors to take advantage of the Year to increase awareness of the importance of addressing energy issues, including modern energy services for all, access to affordable energy, energy efficiency and the sustainability of energy sources and use, for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, sustainable development and the protection of the global climate, and to promote action at the local, national, regional and international levels;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account, inter alia, the initiatives taken by Member States and international organizations to create at all levels an enabling environment for the promotion of access to energy and energy services and the use of new and renewable energy technologies, including measures to improve access to such technologies.

UN-Water

According to the UN-Water Annual Report 2010, priority areas for the inter-agency mechanism UN-Water [YUN 2004, p. 1034] during the year included transboundary waters, wastewater management, climate change, water supply and basic sanitation, and water quality. World Water Day (22 March) raised awareness of the urgent need to improve water quality. During World Water Week (Stockholm, Sweden, 6–9 September), UN-Water organized a dialogue session highlighting how poor water quality threatened the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). More particularly, the UN-Water Global Annual Assessment on Sanitation and Drinking-Water—the UN mechanism coordinated by WHO—noted, in its first comprehensive report, that progress towards the MDGs relating to sanitation and drinking water was significantly lower than that achieved in education and health. Despite the huge demonstrable savings in health care directly attributable to safe drinking water and sanitation, many countries were not allocating sufficient resources to achieve their targets.

International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015

On 28 July, by resolution 64/292 (see p. 743), recalling the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, the General Assembly recognized the human right to water and sanitation, and that access to clean water and sanitation was fundamental to the achievement of all human rights. The Assembly called upon States and international organizations to contribute to capacity-building efforts, particularly in developing countries, to provide safe and affordable drinking water for all.

Midterm review

In a March note [A/64/693] submitted pursuant to Assembly resolution 64/198 [YUN 2009, p. 999] on the organization of the midterm comprehensive review of the International Decade, the Secretary-General outlined the activities that had been prepared for the review. Those included intergovernmental processes as well as UN system programmes, communication strategy and partnership initiatives. The Secretary-General recommended further mobilization of resources during the second half of the Decade, and urged Member States, national and international organizations, major groups and the private sector to increase voluntary contributions to the UN-Water multi-donor trust fund and programmes. Towards achieving the Decade’s goals in Africa, special focus needed to be placed on the region’s water development and management, with the involvement of the UN-Water regional mechanism, and on gender, water and sanitation initiatives.

High-level interactive dialogue. On World Water Day (22 March), a high-level interactive dialogue on the implementation of the International Decade, having the theme “Water, peace and security: transboundary water cooperation”, was convened in New York. Corresponding to the three interactive multi-stakeholder panels included in the dialogue, Secretariat notes provided background information on water, peace and security; transboundary water cooperation [A/64/692]; water and the internationally agreed development goals [A/64/694]; and water, climate change and disasters [A/64/695]. Finding solutions to competition over shared water resources and managing transboundary surface and ground waters were considered important for the achievement of many MDGs. The inter-State distribution of transboundary water continued to present a challenge, particularly in countries with arid or semi-arid climates. Water management at the national level must first be improved, utilizing principles of integrated water resource management, as a prerequisite to effective transboundary water cooperation. During the Decade, little attention had been paid to transboundary cooperation. Although the MDG for safe drinking water appeared likely to be achieved in all of the world’s regions except sub-Saharan Africa, an estimated investment of $11.3 billion per year would be needed to achieve all of the MDGs for safe drinking water and sanitation. Given the need to adapt to climate change, the failure to improve water resource management would jeopardize the MDGs and sustainable development more broadly.

The General Assembly President, in his closing statement, said that the dialogue reaffirmed that access to water for drinking and productive activities, as well as access to sanitation services, were prerequisites for lifting people out of poverty, promoting gender equality, reducing child mortality and increasing maternal health; that managing water resources sustainably was vital to achieving economic growth and safeguarding ecosystems; that improving water resource management systems would help countries adapt to the challenges of climate change; that cooperation was essential for transboundary water management; and that the global water challenge had to be addressed through global responsibility—from local to national, regional and international levels.

High-level International Conference. The High-level International Conference on the Midterm Comprehensive Review of the Implementation of the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015 (Dushanbe, Tajikistan, 8–9 June), issued the Dushanbe Declaration on Water, transmitted to the Secretary-General by Tajikistan in a letter of 21 June [A/65/88]. The conference, which featured water cooperation as a major theme, called on Governments to consider establishing national committees to facilitate achieving the targets of “Water for Life”, and acknowledged the role UN-Water played in promoting cooperation and building capacity.

International Year of Water Cooperation, 2013

In the wake of the interactive dialogue on the implementation of the International Decade and the Dushanbe Conference on the Midterm Comprehensive Review (see above), the General Assembly declared 2013 as the International Year of Water Cooperation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.1], adopted resolution 65/154 without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

International Year of Water Cooperation, 2013

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/193 of 22 December 1992 on the observance of World Day for Water, its resolution 55/196 of 20 December 2000, by which it proclaimed 2003 the International Year of Freshwater, its resolution 58/217 of 23 December 2003, by which it proclaimed the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, to commence on World Water Day, 22 March 2005, its resolution 59/228 of 22 December 2004, its resolution 61/192 of 20 December 2006, by which it proclaimed 2008 the International Year of Sanitation, and its resolution 64/198 of 21 December 2009 on the midterm comprehensive review of the implementation of the Decade,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries and General Assembly resolutions 53/199 of 15 December 1998 and 61/185 of 20 December 2006 on the proclamation of international years,

Recalling further the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and all its principles, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”) and the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and the commitments made therein,

Emphasizing that water is critical for sustainable development, including environmental integrity and the eradication of poverty and hunger, and is indispensable for human health and well-being and central to achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Reaffirming the internationally agreed development goals on water and sanitation, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and determined to achieve the goal to halve, by 2015, the proportion of people who are unable to reach or afford safe drinking water, and the goals set out in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation to halve the proportion of people without access to basic sanitation and to develop integrated water resources management and water efficiency plans by 2005, with support to developing countries,

Recalling its resolution 64/292 of 28 July 2010 on the human right to water and sanitation,

Recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 15/9 of 30 September 2010,

Welcoming the outcome and the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development at its twelfth, thirteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth sessions on the issues of water and sanitation,

Noting the interactive dialogue of the sixty-fourth session of the General Assembly on the implementation of the Decade, convened on 22 March 2010, World Water Day,

Noting also the work of the High-level International Conference on the Midterm Comprehensive Review of the Implementation of the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, held in Dushanbe on 8 and 9 June 2010,

Noting further the holding of the fifth World Water Forum in Istanbul, Turkey, from 16 to 22 March 2009, and noting that the sixth World Water Forum will be held in Marseille, France, in March 2012,

Remaining concerned by the slow and uneven progress in achieving the goal of halving the proportion of the population without sustainable access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation, while global climate change and other challenges seriously affect water quantity and quality, and in this regard recognizing the crucial role that the International Year of Water Cooperation could play, inter alia, in strengthening dialogue and cooperation at all levels, as appropriate, and its important contribution to the Decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the midterm comprehensive review of the implementation of the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015;

2. Decides to declare 2013 the International Year of Water Cooperation;

3. Invites the Secretary-General, in cooperation with UN-Water, and mindful of the provisions of the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67, to take appropriate steps to organize the activities of the Year and to develop necessary proposals on activities at all levels to support Member States in the implementation of the Year;

4. Encourages all Member States, the United Nations system and all other actors to take advantage of the Year to promote actions at all levels, including through international cooperation, as appropriate, aimed at the achievement of the internationally agreed water-related goals contained in Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, as well as to increase awareness of their importance;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Cartography

By decision 2010/241 of 21 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the reports of the Ninth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas and of the Eighteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2009, p. 1000]. On the same day, the Council requested (decision 2010/240) the Secretary-General to submit at its substantive session of 2011 a report on global geographic information management.

Environment and human settlements

In 2010, the United Nations and the international community enhanced efforts to strengthen the protection of the environment and to address emerging environmental challenges through legally binding instruments and the activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

The eleventh special session of the UNEP Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum discussed the environment in the multilateral system as an emerging policy issue. It adopted the Nusa Dua Declaration, which addressed fundamental environmental concerns, particularly those related to climate change, sustainable development, the green economy and biodiversity. The Council established a consultative group of ministers or high-level representatives to consider the broader reform of the international environmental governance system. It adopted guidelines for the development of national legislation on access to information, public participation and access to justice in environmental matters, and for the development of domestic legislation on liability, response action and compensation for damage caused by activities dangerous to the environment. The Council also adopted decisions on UNEP support for Haiti following the devastating January earthquake in that country; enhanced coordination across the UN system, including the Environment Management Group; the intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services; the environmental situation in the Gaza Strip; oceans; and financing options for chemical wastes.

On 22 September, the General Assembly held a high-level meeting as part of the observance of the International Year of Biodiversity. The meeting discussed core strategic and political issues, including the framing the post-2010 biodiversity strategy; the benefits of biodiversity for development and poverty alleviation; and measures to meet the objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC). The tenth meeting of the Conference of Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity adopted the Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from their Utilization on Biological Diversity, and the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020, including the Aichi Biodiversity Targets. The fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity Serving as

The Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety adopted the Strategic Plan for the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety for the period 2011–2020.

The sixteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC adopted the Cancún Agreements, setting out a plan for long-term cooperative action towards a global goal to substantially reduce global emissions by 2050, and to cooperate in achieving the peak of global and national greenhouse gas emissions as soon as possible. The Agreements also established the Cancún Adaptation Framework to enhance action on adaptation, and an Adaptation Committee to promote coherent implementation of such action.

The Assembly re-elected Achim Steiner as UNEP Executive Secretary for a four-year term of office beginning on 15 June 2010 and ending on 14 June 2014.

The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) continued to support the implementation of the 1996 Habitat Agenda and the Millennium Development Goals. The fifth session of the World Urban Forum was held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in March, under the theme “The right to the city—Bridging the urban divide”. The Forum discussed emerging urban inequality, policy alternatives and effective practices in human settlements development. The World Urban Campaign, designed to advance the drive by UN-Habitat and its Habitat Agenda partners for better, smarter, greener and more equitable cities, was launched during the session.

In August, the Assembly elected Joan Clos as Executive Director of UN-Habitat for a four-year term of office beginning on 18 October 2010 and ending on 17 October 2014.

Governing Council/Ministerial Forum

The eleventh special session of the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum (GC/GMEF) of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) was held in Nusa Dua, Bali, Indonesia, from 24 to 26 February [A/65/25].

Ministerial-level consultations (24–26 February) held under the overarching theme “Environment in the multilateral system” discussed international environmental governance and sustainable development, the green economy, and biodiversity and ecosystems. The Council/Forum had before it the President’s summary [UNEP/GCSS.XI/INF/9] of the discussion by ministers and heads of delegation at the twenty-fifth (2009) GC/GMEF session [YUN 2009, p. 1002]. The UNEP Executive Director delivered a policy statement [UNEP/GCSS.XI/2], which was summarized in the report of the proceedings of the session [UNEP/GCSS.XI/11]. The Committee of the Whole, established by the Council/Forum, held four meetings to consider the agenda items assigned to it. On 26 February, the President of the Council/Forum presented a draft summary of the views expressed during the ministerial consultations on each theme, which was annexed to the report of the session. The Council/Forum also had before it a document on regional civil society statements: major groups stakeholders’ messages to GC/GMEF [UNEP/GCSS.XI/INF/5], which contained their observations and recommendations related to the theme of the special session.

On 26 February [A/65/25 (dec. SS.XI/9)], the Council/Forum adopted the Nusa Dua Declaration, which addressed the most fundamental environmental aspects and concerns, in particular, climate change, sustainable development, the green economy and biodiversity. Coming a decade after the adoption of the Malmö Ministerial Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 968], the Nusa Dua Declaration provided a future strategy for tackling environmental challenges in the short, medium and long terms.

On 21 July (decision 2010/237), the Economic and Social Council took note of the Governing Council’s report on its eleventh special session.

The General Assembly took note of the report in resolution 65/162 of 20 December (see below).

Subsidiary body

In 2010, the Committee of Permanent Representatives, which was open to representatives of all UN Member States and members of specialized agencies, held an extraordinary meeting on 4 February [UNEP/CPR/110/3] and regular meetings on 16 March [UNEP/CPR/111/2], 15 June [UNEP/CRP/112/2] and 15 December [UNEP/CPR/114/2]. The Committee discussed, among other subjects, the outcome of the eleventh (2010) GC/GMEF special session and preparations for the twenty-sixth (2011) session.

In December [UNEP/GC.26/INF/4], the Executive Director transmitted the report on the work of the Committee since the twenty-fifth (2009) GC/GMEF session [YUN 2009, p. 1002].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/65/436/Add.7], adopted resolution 65/162 without vote [agenda item 20 (g)].

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its eleventh special session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 53/242 of 28 July 1999, 55/200 of 20 December 2000, 57/251 of 20 December 2002 and 64/204 of 21 December 2009 and other previous resolutions relating to the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Taking into account Agenda 21 and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”),

Reaffirming the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and its principles,

Reaffirming its commitment to strengthening the role of the United Nations Environment Programme as the leading global environmental authority that sets the global environmental agenda, promotes the coherent implementation of the environmental dimensions of sustainable development within the United Nations system and serves as an authoritative advocate for the global environment, as set out in the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme of 7 February 1997 and in the Nusa Dua Declaration of 26 February 2010,

Noting the role played by the United Nations Environment Programme in the organization of the three ad hoc intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder meetings on an intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services,

Reiterating that capacity-building and technology support to developing countries in environment-related fields are important components of the work of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building,

Recognizing the need for heightened efforts to increase the political priority attached to the sound management of chemicals and wastes and the increased need for sustainable, predictable, adequate and accessible financing for the chemicals and wastes agenda,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its eleventh special session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Welcomes the Nusa Dua Declaration of 26 February 2010 as a contribution to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, to be held in 2012, and calls for the active and effective participation of the United Nations Environment Programme in the preparatory process of the Conference;

3. Recognizes that the ratification and implementation of relevant multilateral environmental agreements contribute to more effective international environmental governance and better protection and management of the global environment, and in this context invites Member States to ratify and implement relevant multilateral environmental agreements;

4. Welcomes the outcome of the Simultaneous Extraordinary Meetings of the Conferences of the Parties to the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal, the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade and the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 22 to 24 February 2010, also welcomes the consultative process on financing options for chemicals and wastes and supports further efforts through the United Nations Environment Programme to continue these discussions, and in this regard encourages cooperation and coordination among the secretariats of the Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm conventions and support for Governments in their efforts to implement, comply with and enforce these multilateral environmental agreements;

5. Stresses the importance of the implementation of the Strategic Approach to International Chemicals Management, particularly through its Quick Start Programme;

6. Notes with appreciation the progress achieved at the first session of the intergovernmental negotiating committee to prepare a global legally binding instrument on mercury, held in Stockholm from 7 to 11 June 2010, and encourages further efforts towards a successful conclusion to the negotiations, and invites the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to continue to ensure full support for the negotiation process with the goal of completing the instrument prior to the twenty-seventh session of the Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum with the aim of agreeing on a legally binding instrument on mercury, to include provisions, among others, aimed at reducing atmospheric emissions of mercury and to specify arrangements for capacity-building and technical and financial assistance, recognizing that the ability of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to implement some legal obligations effectively under a legally binding instrument is dependent upon the availability of capacity-building and adequate technical and financial assistance;

7. Recognizes the important role played by the regional centres of the Basel and Stockholm conventions, particularly in the implementation of international commitments and in the area of technology transfer, and in this regard encourages Member States and other stakeholders to promote the full and coordinated use of the centres to strengthen the regional delivery of assistance for the implementation of the Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm conventions;

8. Takes note of United Nations Environment Programme Governing Council decision SS.XI/1 of 26 February 2010 on international environmental governance, the set of options for improving international environmental governance identified by the consultative group of ministers or high-level representatives referred to therein and the invitation by the Governing Council to the President of the Council to transmit the set of options to the General

Assembly at its sixty-fourth session as an input to the continuing process of improving international environmental governance, and notes the ongoing work of the consultative group of ministers or high-level representatives, which will present its final report to the Governing Council at its twenty-sixth session in anticipation of the contribution of the Council;

9. Encourages the United Nations Environment Programme to support the ongoing work of the Joint Liaison Group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the Convention on Biological Diversity, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change ("the Rio Conventions") and the Liaison Group of Biodiversity-related Conventions, acknowledges the importance of improving coherence in the implementation of the Rio Conventions, recognizes the importance of enhancing synergies among the biodiversity-related conventions, without prejudice to their specific objectives, and encourages the conferences of the parties to the biodiversity-related multilateral environmental agreements to consider strengthening efforts in this regard, taking into account relevant experiences and bearing in mind the respective independent legal status and mandates of all these instruments;

10. Underlines the need to further advance and accelerate the full implementation of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building with a view to achieving its objectives in the areas of capacity-building and technology support for developing countries and countries with economies in transition, invites relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies and the secretariats of multilateral environmental agreements to consider mainstreaming the Bali Strategic Plan in their overall activities, and calls upon Governments and other stakeholders in a position to do so to provide the funding and technical assistance necessary to further advance and fully implement the Bali Strategic Plan;

11. Recognizes that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation, and in this regard requests the United Nations Environment Programme to deepen its cooperation with related United Nations agencies, regions, subregions and existing South-South cooperation initiatives to develop joint activities and synergies of capacity in advancing South-South cooperation in support of capacity-building and technology support in the context of the Bali Strategic Plan;

12. Invites the United Nations Environment Programme to contribute, notably by providing ideas and proposals reflecting its competencies, experiences and lessons learned, to the preparatory process of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development;

13. Reiterates the continuing need for the United Nations Environment Programme to conduct up-to-date, comprehensive, scientifically credible and policy-relevant global environment assessments, in close consultation with Member States, in order to support decision-making processes at all levels, and in this regard notes that the fifth report in the Global Environment Outlook series and its related summary for policymakers is currently under development, and stresses the need to enhance the policy relevance of the Outlook by, inter alia, identifying policy options to speed up the achievement of the internationally agreed goals and to inform global and regional processes and meetings where progress towards the agreed goals will be discussed, including the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development;

14. Emphasizes the need to further enhance coordination and cooperation among the relevant United Nations organizations in the promotion of the environmental dimension of sustainable development and to enhance cooperation between the United Nations Environment Programme and regional and subregional organizations, and welcomes the continued active participation of the Programme in the United Nations Development Group and the Environment Management Group, as well as in the United Nations exercises at the country level, including United Nations Development Assistance Framework processes and “Delivering as One” programmes for those countries implementing this initiative;

15. Reiterates the instrumental role of regional offices of the United Nations Environment Programme in assisting countries in mainstreaming their environmental priorities and maintaining the strategic presence of the Programme at the national and regional levels as part of the continued efforts of the Programme in shifting emphasis from delivery of outputs to achievement of results within its budget and programme of work, and calls for increased support to strengthen the human, financial and programmatic capacities of all regional offices;

16. Notes the cooperation of the Environment Management Group, including by working with the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination and its subsidiary bodies, in enhancing, inter alia, cooperation in programming environmental activities in the United Nations system in the areas of biodiversity and land degradation, including by supporting the implementation of the strategic plans of the secretariats of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification and the Convention on Biological Diversity, including the post-2010 biodiversity targets;

17. Takes note of United Nations Environment Programme Governing Council decision SS.XI/4 of 26 February 2010 entitled “Intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services”, the Busan outcome of the third ad hoc intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder meeting on an intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services, held in Busan, Republic of Korea, from 7 to 11 June 2010, the decision entitled “Science-policy interface on biodiversity, ecosystem services and human well-being and consideration of the outcome of the intergovernmental meetings” adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity at its tenth meeting, held in Nagoya, Japan, from 18 to 29 October 2010, and the decision on the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services adopted by the Executive Board of that Organization at its one hundred and eighty-fifth session, and requests the United Nations Environment Programme, without prejudice to the final institutional arrangements for the intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services and in consultation with all relevant organizations and bodies, in order to fully operationalize the platform, to convene a plenary meeting providing for the full and effective participation of all Member States, in particular representatives from developing countries, to determine modalities and institutional arrangements for the platform at the earliest opportunity;

18. Calls upon international and bilateral donors and other countries in a position to do so to support the full and effective participation of representatives from developing countries in the plenary meeting;

19. Welcomes the activities undertaken by the United Nations Environment Programme with a view to strengthening the protection and sustainable management of marine and coastal ecosystems and further mainstreaming the marine and coastal strategy of the Programme in line with the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

20. Also welcomes the efforts undertaken to date by the United Nations Environment Programme in response to the devastating impact of the earthquake of 12 January 2010 on the people, economy and environment of Haiti, and in this regard urges the Programme, in coordination with the United Nations country team, to continue to perform its key role in ensuring that environmental considerations are mainstreamed into the overall humanitarian relief and recovery programme;

21. Further welcomes the increased contributions to the Environment Fund, and reiterates its invitation to Governments that are in a position to do so to increase their contributions to the Fund;

22. Reiterates the need for stable, adequate and predictable financial resources for the United Nations Environment Programme, and, in accordance with resolution 2997(XXVII), underlines the need to consider the adequate reflection of all the administrative and management costs of the Programme in the context of the United Nations regular budget;

23. Also reiterates the importance of the Nairobi headquarters location of the United Nations Environment Programme, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the resource needs of the Programme and the United Nations Office at Nairobi under review so as to permit the delivery, in an effective manner, of necessary services to the Programme and to the other United Nations organs and organizations in Nairobi;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled “Sustainable development”, a sub-item entitled “Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its twenty-sixth session”.

International environmental governance

The eleventh GC/GMEF special session (see p. 1005) held ministerial consultations (24–26 February) on international environmental governance and sustainable development on the basis of a discussion paper submitted by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS. XI/10]. The paper addressed, among other matters, the outcomes of the 2009 consultative group meetings on international environmental governance [YUN

2009, p. 1005]; the recommendations contained in the 2009 report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the management review of environmental governance within the UN system [ibid., p. 1004]; the benefits to States Parties from the continuing synergies process between the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997] and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971]; preparations for the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, to be held in 2012; and the way forward.

In the Nusa Dua Declaration [A/65/25 (dec. SS.XI.9)], adopted by the Governing Council in February, GMEF noted that the international environmental governance architecture had become complex and fragmented, and committed to making it more effective.

In a separate decision [dec. SS.XI/1], the Governing Council noted the options for improving international environmental governance identified by the Consultative Group of Ministers or High-level Representatives on International Environmental Governance. It requested the Executive Director to identify, in consultation with Governments through the Committee of Permanent Representatives, incremental changes in the options that could be implemented during the 2010–2011 biennium and those to be integrated into the development of the 2012–2013 programme of work, and to report to GC/GMEF at its twenty-sixth (2011) session. It invited the Council President to transmit the options to the General Assembly at its resumed sixty-fourth (2010) session as an input to the continuing process of improving international environmental governance. The Council decided to establish a regionally representative, consultative group of ministers or high-level representatives, as well as high-level representatives of relevant UN agencies designated through the Environment Management Group. The Executive Director, who would participate as an adviser, would invite the UN system to provide input to the group, including by assessing gaps, needs and considerations related to how the system was achieving the objectives and functions for international environmental governance. The group would consider the broader reform of the international environmental governance system, building on the options but remaining open to new ideas. It would seek inputs from civil society groups and present a final report to the Governing Council at its twenty-sixth (2011) session in anticipation of the Council's contribution to the second meeting of the open-ended preparatory committee of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the Assembly's sixty-fifth (2010) session.

Note by Assembly President. In May [A/64/778], the General Assembly President transmitted to the Assembly a 19 April letter from the President of the eleventh GC/GMEF special session, which contained the options presented by the Consultative Group for improving international environmental governance.

Meeting of Consultative Group. The Executive Director, in a December note [UNEP/GC.26/18], reported that the Consultative Group of Ministers or High-level Representatives on International Environmental Governance met in Nairobi, from 7 to 9 July, and in Espoo, Finland, from 21 to 23 November. The Consultative Group identified potential system-wide responses to the challenges of international environmental governance, including the development of a system-wide strategy for the environment in the UN system to increase its effectiveness, efficiency and coherence, and the strengthening of the environmental pillar of sustainable development. Other responses dealt with strengthening the science-policy interface with the full participation of developing countries; encouraging synergies between compatible multilateral environmental agreements; creating a stronger link between global environmental policymaking and financing; and developing a system-wide capacity-building framework for the environment. The Consultative Group suggested that the Governing Council, at its twenty-sixth (2011) session, consider the UNEP contribution to identifying the implementation of, and actors responsible for, follow-up to functions and system-wide responses. The Group also considered institutional forms that would best implement those responses and achieve the objectives and functions identified during the Belgrade Process of international environmental governance reform [YUN 2009, p. 1005]. It recognized the need to develop all the options for improving international environmental governance, and suggested that those relating to the establishment of a new umbrella organization for sustainable development and the reform of the Economic and Social Council and the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development would best be addressed in the wider sustainable development context. The Group suggested that existing institutions be strengthened and enhanced.

Report of Executive Director. In a December report [UNEP/GC.26/3] submitted in response to the Governing Council's request [dec. SS.XI/1], the Executive Director stated that the secretariat had prepared a table identifying incremental reforms of and changes to international environmental governance to serve as a basis for consultation with the Committee of Permanent Representatives. Five consultations were held with the Committee in 2010, on 9 April, 3 June, 5 and 28 October and 9 December. Overall, the reforms were received positively and suggestions were made for implementation and follow-up action.

Requests were made for additional analysis of the financial implications of some suggested actions; such an analysis would be provided by the secretariat in a supplementary document.

UNEP activities

Monitoring and assessment

In a December report [UNEP/GC.26/4] on the state of the environment and the UNEP contribution to meeting substantive environmental challenges, the Executive Director summarized the key policy issues emanating from UNEP assessment and early warning activities. The issues were drawn from the findings of various integrated and thematic assessments conducted over the previous two years across six subprogrammes: climate change, disasters and conflicts, ecosystem management, environmental governance, harmful substances and hazardous waste, and resource efficiency. The report also discussed intergovernmental scientific assessments, technology support, capacity-building and the identification of emerging environmental issues for reviewing the world environmental situation. It concluded that, after decades of producing science-based environmental assessments, countries had developed significant capacity to engage in, and undertake, environmental assessments. The assessments generally resulted in sound recommendations for policymakers based on the best available science, using recognized and accepted assessment methodologies. Those methodologies had produced tools, training packages, methodology manuals, e-learning platforms and trainers' networks, and built capacity to undertake assessments at multiple scales across a variety of themes. The evidence indicated, however, that the process of applying the policy recommendations emanating from environment and ecosystem-based assessments was difficult and could further impede the already slow rate of progress in meeting national policy needs and achieving internationally agreed environmental goals.

The Executive Director also submitted a detailed inventory of all assessments led and supported by UNEP since 2009 [UNEP/GC.26/INF/13], which provided updated information on assessments in progress.

General Assembly action. The General Assembly, in resolution 65/173 of 20 December (see p. 808) on the promotion of ecotourism for poverty eradication and environment protection, underlined the importance of conducting an environmental impact assessment, in accordance with national legislation, for the development of ecotourism opportunities.

UNEP-Live

In a December report [UNEP/GC.26/4/Add.1], the Executive Director, in response to a 2009 Governing Council decision [YUN 2009, p. 1006], described the requirements for a migration to targeted assessments in thematic priority and, in particular, the characteristics of a supporting framework for such assessments referred to as "UNEP-Live". The goals of UNEP-Live were to provide a coordinating node for displaying and having access to a global federation of assessment and reporting systems, and ready access to tools and information supporting two-way assessment processes at a level that was meaningful to decision makers. The objectives of the framework were to increase the use and reuse of the results of existing assessment processes and products; provide a context in which national capacity-development requirements could be identified and presented as candidates for resource mobilization; and develop and document institutional mechanisms to establish and maintain a global federation of assessment producers and consumers. Migrating to a dynamic platform for developing and delivering thematic and integrated environmental assessments would require, among other things, the development of a process for UNEP to identify, beginning in 2011, future assessment requirements; assessment of the requirements of UNEP member States to be reported in 2012 at the twelfth GC/GMEF special session; a fund-raising strategy; and the establishment of a federation of partners and a secretariat. The UNEP-Live framework would be implemented in a phased approach with the goal of achieving the migration between 2012 and 2015. Phase 1: consolidation and exploration of future options (2011–2012) would broaden the use of existing inputs to, or the results of, environmental assessment processes, including data, assessments, information systems, methodologies, expertise, institutional relationships, and regional and thematic information-sharing networks. The initial phase would focus on making UNEP assessment products more accessible and useful; and characterizing UNEP assessment partners and their requirements. The main goal of phase 2: elaboration (2012–2013) would be to design an assessment support system that met defined user needs. A key task would be the refinement of the assessment and reporting needs and requirements of UNEP and its partners. The goal of phase 3: transformation (2014–2015) would be to increase the use of UNEP-Live as designed and tested during the previous two phases by UNEP and its partners. The end product would be a fully operational UNEP-Live framework that would enable migration to targeted and thematic assessments and build capacity in countries for assessment and reporting.

UNEP Year Book

The UNEP Year Book presented new developments and scientific insights of particular interest to policymakers. The Year Book 2010: New Science and

Developments in our Changing Environment reported on progress in areas corresponding to the six UNEP thematic priorities: environmental governance; the effects of continuing degradation and loss of the world's ecosystems; impacts of climate change; the effects of harmful substances and hazardous waste on human health and the environment; environmentally related disasters and conflicts; and unsustainable use of resources.

Other activities

In 2010, UNEP coordinated efforts across 49 UN entities to prepare the first generation of greenhouse gas inventories. By the end of the year, 15 UN organizations had submitted emission-reduction action plans. It also launched a UN-wide campaign on in-house sustainability, known as Greening the Blue, to highlight ways in which staff could contribute to resource efficiency. UNEP assisted the Department of Field Support in conducting the first environmental impact assessments for new base camp sites in Mogadishu, Somalia, and Mombasa, Kenya. It supported baseline studies on energy, water and waste reduction options for peacekeeping camps, recommending practical measures that could cut more than 25 per cent in energy consumption, 40 per cent in water use, and reduce the amount of solid waste reaching landfills.

Environment and sustainable development

The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its eighteenth session (New York, 3–14 May) [E/2010/29], considered its 2010–2011 thematic cluster: transportation, chemicals, waste management, and mining and a 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns. The Commission had before it, among other reports by the Secretary-General, an overview [E/CN.17/2010/3] of the implementation of Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672] and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 822], and specific implementation reports on chemicals [E/CN.17/2010/5], waste management [E/CN.17/2010/6], and the 10-year framework of programmes in support of consumption and production [E/CN.17/2010/8 & Corr.1].

The UNEP Governing Council, in the Nusa Dua Declaration [dec. SS.XI/9] (see p. 1006), welcomed the decision made by the General Assembly in resolution 64/236 [YUN 2009, p. 802] to organize the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development in 2012. It encouraged UNEP participation in the Conference's preparatory process, as called for in the resolution, and the contribution of UNEP to the programme of work outlined for the eighteenth (see above) and nineteenth (2011) sessions of the Commission on Sustainable Development.

Achieving the Millennium Development Goals

The General Assembly, at its High-level Plenary Meeting on the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) (see p. 813), adopted, in resolution 65/1 (see p. 815), the outcome document "Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals". In the section on MDG 7 (ensuring environmental sustainability), Assembly members committed to, among other actions, pursuing environmental sustainability through nationally owned comprehensive and coherent planning frameworks, adopting national legislation, and promoting the development and dissemination of affordable and sustainable technology; supporting implementation of the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944]; strengthening political commitment and action to implement the global objectives on forests and the sustainable management of all types of forests in order to reduce the loss of forest cover and improve the livelihoods of those who depend on forests; and pursuing more efficient and coherent implementation of the objectives of the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683] and addressing implementation gaps. The Assembly committed to calling on States to take action to address climate change in accordance with the principles identified in the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681], including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities; ensuring the sustainable management of marine biodiversity and ecosystems, including fish stocks, and addressing the adverse effects of climate change on the marine environment and marine biodiversity; supporting countries to preserve fragile mountain ecosystems as an important source of fresh water and as repositories of rich biological diversity; and promoting sustainable consumption and production patterns. The Assembly also committed to increasing sustainable access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation by prioritizing integrated water and sanitation; promoting integrated waste management systems; redoubling efforts to close the sanitation gap; and working towards cities without slums, beyond current targets.

Small island developing States

In a July report [A/65/115] on the five-year review of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN

2005, p. 946], the Secretary-General provided a global synthesis of the national and regional review reports of the Strategy for consideration by the General Assembly at its high-level review meeting (New York, 24–25 September). The report reviewed threats facing small island developing States, especially from climate change and natural and environmental disasters. It also addressed issues related to sustainable production and consumption, waste management and biodiversity, as well as coastal and marine, freshwater and land resources.

(For information on the five-year review of the Mauritius Strategy, see p. 848.)

South-South cooperation

In response to a 2009 Governing Council decision [YUN 2009, p. 1009], the UNEP Executive Director submitted a December report on progress made in promoting South-South cooperation to achieve sustainable development [UNEP/GC.26/9]. In implementing its 2008–2009 and 2010–2011 programmes of work, UNEP employed a range of South-South cooperation approaches in the delivery of capacity-building and technology-support activities; it initiated consultations with organizations, institutions and networks to forge new strategic partnerships and alliances. Specific activities included strengthening interaction with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Special Unit for South-South Cooperation, focusing on UNEP contribution to and participation in global South-South cooperation processes and events, and on UNEP input to meetings of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation; and participating in the UN inter-agency meeting on South-South cooperation (New York, February), and a High-level Event on South-South Cooperation and Capacity Development (Bogotá, Colombia, March). UNEP developed policy guidance and updated its operational guidelines to facilitate and enhance the systematic integration of South-South cooperation into its programme of work. The guidance provided direction for, among other things, stronger policy and programming support for South-South cooperation, specifically in determining how that cooperation was to be integrated into each thematic priority in the new UNEP matrix approach to programming; strengthening and facilitating opportunities for exchanges between countries through the regional offices and in collaboration with UN country teams; strengthening engagement in UN country team processes to enhance the integration of environmental sustainability into programming processes; strengthening coordination structures and capacities for South-South cooperation at UNEP headquarters and regional offices; and establishing strategic partnerships and participation in multilateral forums to promote South-South cooperation on environmental matters and to leverage synergies and technical expertise and resources for such cooperation. UNEP was also developing an exchange mechanism to advance South-South cooperation in its work and among key partners.

The report concluded that the UNEP South-South cooperation policy guidance and operational guidelines, which were expected to become operational in 2011, would serve as agency-wide reference tools for and substantive inputs into efforts to meet the objectives in the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building [YUN 2004, p. 1040].

In December, the Executive Director submitted a note on UNEP regional and national activities to promote South-South cooperation [UNEP/GC.26/INF/14].

(For information on South-South cooperation, see p. 891.)

International Panel for Sustainable Resource Management

In December [UNEP/GC.26/INF/16], the Executive Director submitted the report of the International Panel for Sustainable Resource Management. The Panel, comprising 26 international experts and scientists from a broad spectrum of disciplines, was tasked with preparing assessment reports on resource issues critical to the international community regarding the environment and sustainable development. A Steering Committee provided strategic guidance to the Panel's work, with UNEP hosting its secretariat. As at December, the Panel had completed assessment reports on biofuels, metal stocks in society, and the environmental impacts of consumption and production. Assessment reports were being prepared on decoupling the use of natural resources and environmental impacts from economic activity; environmental impacts; sustainable land use and soil management; further assessments on metals; water efficiency; and cities and urbanization.

Coordination and cooperation

In a February decision on enhanced coordination across the UN system, including the Environment Management Group (EMG) [dec. SS.XI/3], the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to enhance the capacity of the regional offices to participate effectively in mainstreaming environmental sustainability in common country assessments and the United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks. EMG was encouraged to continue its cooperation, including by working with the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) and its subsidiary bodies, in enhancing the promotion of sustainable UN system management practices. This included making further progress towards climate neutrality and sustainable procurement; cooperation in programming UN system environmental activities in biodiversity, land degradation and the green economy, including by supporting implementation of the strategic plans of the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944], the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683] and the post-2010 biodiversity targets; and assessing how the UN system could more coherently assist countries in transitioning to a green economy. It also encouraged EMG to enhance coherence in mainstreaming environmental considerations in UN country-level operational activities, in particular by identifying options for the development of a UN system-wide approach to environmental concerns.

In December [UNEP/GC.26/15], the Executive Director submitted a report on enhanced coordination across the UN system, including EMG. The report summarized the Group's work during the year, directions for further work, and the UNEP secretariat's contribution to environmental, inter-agency cooperation-related work under CEB.

At its sixteenth meeting (New York, 21 September), senior EMG officials reviewed the Group's work in 2010, which included the preparation of the first common greenhouse gas inventory for the UN system and a report entitled "Advancing the biodiversity agenda—a UN system-wide contribution". EMG members contributed to the July and November meetings of the Consultative Group of Ministers or High-level Representatives on International Environmental Governance (see p. 1009). The Group also participated in the consultative process on environmental and social safeguards, which assessed conceptual frameworks that could provide a balanced approach to the challenge of cross-cutting environmental and social issues. Working with CEB and its High-level Committees on Programmes and on Management, as well as the United Nations Development Group, UNEP promoted coordination of environmental activities within the UN system. UNEP was also instrumental in bringing an environmental dimension to the responses by CEB and the High-level Committee on Programmes to the financial and economic crisis through the implementation of the Board's joint crisis initiatives. UNEP was the lead agency in the joint crisis initiative on the green economy. In that capacity, it highlighted the importance of mobilizing and refocusing the global economy towards green growth and the need to safeguard the integrity of ecosystems, in the context of work by the Board and the High-level Committee on Programmes on moving towards a process of globalization that was fairer, greener and more sustainable.

Memorandums of understanding

In February [dec. SS.XI/3], the Governing Council welcomed progress in the implementation of the revised memorandum of understanding (MOU) between UNEP and UNDP [YUN 2009, p. 1009], signed in December 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 1151] to achieve deeper cooperation between the two agencies, including by joint programming. The Council encouraged the Executive Director to expedite implementation of the MOU, in particular through the immediate establishment of the joint working group provided for therein, and an annual progress report.

In response to the Council's request, the Executive Director, in December 2010 [UNEP/GC.26/INF/9/Add.1], transmitted the annual report on the implementation of the MOU. UNEP and UNDP cooperated on the Poverty and Environment Initiative, a programme with joint management, programme design and budgeting. UNEP/UNDP collaboration was expanded to address the need for a more coherent and systemic approach within the UN system in environment and climate change, and guidance notes were issued on mainstreaming environmental sustainability and integrating climate change considerations into country analyses. Global and regional projects were the main drivers of collaboration on the ground, generating new opportunities and funding options. Collaborative arrangements focused on administrative services, program management support and institutional coordination; project/programme design, technical expertise, and monitoring and evaluation services; and communications, dissemination, funding, resource mobilization, publications and training.

In a December note [UNEP/GC.26/INF/9], the Executive Director presented a summary of corporate MOUs concluded between UNEP and other UN system bodies since the last report on the subject [YUN 2008, p. 1151]. MOUs were signed in 2009 with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

Environment in the multilateral system: the green economy

Ministerial consultations on the environment in the multilateral system were held during the eleventh special session of the UNEP Governing Council on the basis of a background paper on the green economy [UNEP/GCSS.XI/10/Add.1]. The green economy was defined as a system of economic activities related to the production, distribution and consumption of goods and services that resulted in improved human well-being over the long term, while not exposing future generations to significant environmental risks or ecological scarcities.

It implied the decoupling of resource use and environmental impacts from economic growth, and was characterized by substantially increased investment in green sectors, supported by enabling policy reforms. Those investments, both public and private, provided the mechanism for the reconfiguration of businesses, infrastructure and institutions, and for the adoption of sustainable consumption and production processes. The reconfiguration would lead to, among other benefits, reduced energy and materials in production processes, less waste and pollution, and significantly reduced greenhouse gas emissions. It could also assuage food, energy and water security concerns, while supporting the achievement of sustainable development and the MDGs. The paper examined the green economy in relation to climate change, sustainable consumption and production, chemicals and waste management, and ecosystem services.

In the Nusa Dua Declaration [dec. SS.XI/9], the Governing Council acknowledged that the advancement of the concept of a green economy in the context of sustainable development and poverty eradication could significantly address current challenges and deliver economic development opportunities and benefits for all nations. It also acknowledged the leading role of UNEP in discussions to further define and promote the concept of a green economy. The Council encouraged the Executive Director to contribute that work to the preparatory committee for the Conference on Sustainable Development, which was to be held in 2012, and to convey the lessons learned by UNEP in that effort.

In a later report [UNEP/GC.26/INF/17], the Executive Director summarized international developments in relation to the green economy and described related UNEP activities in 2010. During the year, UNEP released four publications on the green economy: Green Economy Report: A Preview; Green Economy: Developing Countries Success Stories; Green Economy: A Brief for Policymakers on the Green Economy and Millennium Development Goals; and a technical working paper entitled Green Economy: Driving a Green Economy Through Public Finance and Fiscal Policy Reform.

An increasing number of countries requested support and assistance with their national green economy initiatives and strategies. UNEP was in discussion with 21 countries to provide advisory services for national and regional dialogue and consultation; macroeconomic and sector-specific assessments on green economy opportunities and challenges; and training and capacity-building activities. In Africa, UNEP initiated implementation of a regional pilot project on the green economy and social and environmental entrepreneurship. In the Asia-Pacific region, it supported the development, promotion and visibility of national initiatives to transition to a green economy. In Eastern Europe, activities included macroeconomic assessments of green economy investment opportunities, a national workshop to promote awareness of a green economy and resource efficiency in Azerbaijan, and collaboration on a green economy strategy in the Ukraine. In Latin America and the Caribbean, UNEP assisted with the development of a regional green economy initiative, building on the process for the creation of a single market in that region. In West Asia, UNEP assisted Jordan in developing its national programme for green economic development. At the regional level, its involvement included a workshop with the League of Arab States to raise awareness of the concept of a green economy, and activities to promote an understanding of a green economy, building on the process of the Regional Roundtable on Sustainable Consumption and Production in the Arab region. UNEP also developed a proposal for a Mediterranean green economy initiative.

Environmental emergencies

In 2010, UNEP continued to assist vulnerable and crisis-affected countries by providing assessments and using them to develop recovery programmes that addressed environmental needs and priorities, and to support peacebuilding strategies and long-term sustainable development.

In the Sudan, UNEP guidance and technical support to aid communities in mainstreaming environmental considerations into its operations in the country resulted in nearly half of all aid projects integrating environmental activities into their programmes. UNEP completed a comprehensive assessment of the role of the environment in conflict and peacebuilding in Sierra Leone. Community-based natural resource management was established as the de facto strategy for rural Afghanistan; UNEP established 26 community-based projects across three provinces of that country. It was instrumental in the development of a national system for parks and the conservation of nature and biodiversity in key reserves and conservation areas.

UNEP assisted the Departments of Peacekeeping Operations and of Field Support to conduct the first-ever environmental impact assessments and baseline studies for new base camps in Mogadishu, Somalia, and Mombasa, Kenya. The pilot study, which examined issues such as the placement of camps and resource efficiency in relation to energy, water and waste, would be used as a model for other UN field missions.

Oil slick in Lebanon

In response to General Assembly resolution 64/195 [YUN 2009, p. 1011], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/278] reviewing progress in implementing resolutions 61/194 [YUN 2006, p. 1215], 62/188 [YUN 2007, p. 1053], 63/211 [YUN 2008, p. 1150] and 64/195 on the oil slick on Lebanese shores that resulted from the 2006 destruction by Israel of oil storage tanks in Lebanon following the outbreak of hostilities between Israel and the paramilitary group Hizbullah [YUN 2006, p. 574]. The marine oil spill resulted in the release of some 15,000 tons of fuel oil into the Mediterranean Sea, contaminating about 150 kilometres of coastline in Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. As at June, some 500 cubic metres of liquid and 3,200 cubic metres of semi-solid and solid waste were collected during clean-up operations and stored in containers in secure temporary storage sites, with the contribution of all partners, particularly Japan. UN agencies evaluated Lebanon's mechanisms for the operation of an Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund and, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, proposed that the Trust Fund be hosted by the Lebanon Recovery Fund. The proposal was approved by the Steering Committee of the Lebanon Recovery Fund on 30 June.

The Secretary-General was concerned at the lack of acknowledgment on the part of Israel of its responsibilities with regard to reparations and compensation to the Government and people of Lebanon and Syria affected by the oil spill. He welcomed the agreement that the Lebanon Recovery Fund should host the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 65/147 by recorded vote (163-8-5) [agenda item 20].

Oil slick on Lebanese shores

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 61/194 of 20 December 2006, 62/188 of 19 December 2007, 63/211 of 19 December 2008 and 64/195 of 21 December 2009 on the oil slick on Lebanese shores,

Reaffirming the outcome of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, especially principle 7 of the Declaration of the Conference, in which States were requested to take all possible steps to prevent pollution of the seas,

Emphasizing the need to protect and preserve the marine environment in accordance with international law,

Taking into account the 1992 Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, especially principle 16, in which it was stipulated that the polluter should, in principle, bear the cost of pollution, and taking into account also chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Noting with great concern the environmental disaster caused by the destruction by the Israeli Air Force on 15 July 2006 of the oil storage tanks in the direct vicinity of Jiyeh electric power plant in Lebanon, resulting in an oil slick that covered the entirety of the Lebanese coastline and extended to the Syrian coastline,

Noting that the Secretary-General expressed grave concern at the lack of acknowledgement on the part of the Government of Israel of its responsibilities vis-à-vis reparations and compensation to the Government and people of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic affected by the oil spill,

Acknowledging that the Secretary-General concluded that this oil spill is not covered by any of the international oil spill compensation funds and thus merits special consideration, and recognizing his recommendation that further consideration be given to the option of examining the potential role of the United Nations Compensation Commission in securing the relevant compensation from the Government of Israel,

Noting again with appreciation the assistance offered by donor countries and international organizations for the clean-up operations and the early recovery and reconstruction of Lebanon through bilateral and multilateral channels, including the Athens Coordination Meeting on the response to the marine pollution incident in the Eastern Mediterranean, held on 17 August 2006, and the Stockholm Conference for Lebanon's Early Recovery, held on 31 August 2006,

Acknowledging that the Secretary-General has welcomed the agreement of the Lebanon Recovery Fund to host the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund under its existing mechanisms,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 64/195;

2. Expresses its deep concern, for the fifth consecutive year, about the adverse implications of the destruction by the Israeli Air Force of the oil storage tanks in the direct vicinity of the Lebanese Jiyeh electric power plant for the achievement of sustainable development in Lebanon;

3. Considers that the oil slick has heavily polluted the shores of Lebanon and partially polluted Syrian shores and consequently has had serious implications for livelihoods and the economy of Lebanon, owing to the adverse implications for natural resources, biodiversity, fisheries and tourism, and human health in the country;

4. Requests the Government of Israel to assume responsibility for prompt and adequate compensation to the Government of Lebanon and other countries directly affected by the oil slick, such as the Syrian Arab Republic, whose shores have been partially polluted, for the costs of repairing the environmental damage caused by the destruction, including the restoration of the marine environment, in particular in the light of the observation by the Secretary-General concerning the lack of any acknowledgement on the part of the Government of Israel of the relevant paragraphs of resolutions 61/194, 62/188, 63/211 or 64/195;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to give further consideration to the option of examining the potential role of the United Nations Compensation Commission in securing the relevant compensation from the Government of Israel;

6. Reiterates its appreciation for the efforts of the Government of Lebanon and those of Member States, regional and international organizations, regional and international financial institutions, non-governmental organizations and the private sector in the initiation of clean-up and rehabilitation operations on the polluted shores, and encourages Member States and the above-mentioned entities to continue their financial and technical support to the Government of Lebanon towards achieving the completion of clean-up and rehabilitation operations, with the aim of preserving the ecosystem of Lebanon and that of the Eastern Mediterranean Basin;

7. Welcomes the agreement of the Lebanon Recovery Fund to host the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund, based on voluntary contributions, to provide assistance and support to the States directly adversely affected in their integrated environmentally sound management, from clean-up to safe disposal of oily waste, of this environmental disaster resulting from the destruction of the oil storage tanks at Jiyeh electric power plant;

8. Invites States, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to make voluntary financial contributions to the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to mobilize international technical and financial assistance, in order to ensure that the Trust Fund has sufficient and adequate resources, since Lebanon is still engaged in the treatment of wastes and the monitoring of recovery;

9. Recognizes the multidimensionality of the adverse impact of the oil slick, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 65/147:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Tuvalu, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Canada, Israel, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Nauru, Palau, United States.

Abstaining: Cameroon, Colombia, Niger, Panama, Tonga.

Environmental response in Haiti

In a February decision [dec. SS.XI/2], the Governing Council noted the devastating impact of the earthquake that struck Haiti on 12 January (see p. 320) on the people, economy and environment of that country, and expressed concern regarding the disaster's medium- and long-term social, economic and environmental impacts. The Governing Council welcomed the response and strong commitment by Governments, the UN system, international financial institutions and the international community to support Haiti, particularly UNEP efforts to address urgent environmental and post-disaster matters. It urged UNEP to assist the people of Haiti and the UN country team during the emergency recovery phase by incorporating environmental needs into the humanitarian flash appeal and environmental considerations into the rehabilitation and reconstruction phases. It underlined the need to structure an environmental agenda for the reconstruction of affected areas in a participatory manner. The Executive Director was requested to ensure that UNEP performed its key role in addressing environmental restoration and management under the overall coordination of the UN country team and by taking part in relevant clusters, in particular with regard to human vulnerability and poverty eradication.

The earthquake in Haiti led to an explosion of waste, severe water and sanitation issues, and a wide range of environmental problems related to camps for the displaced. In south-west Haiti, UNEP and its partners designed an integrated 20-year sustainable development programme including reforestation, erosion control, fisheries management and small business development, as well as improved access to water and sanitation, health and education.

(For information on the post-earthquake humanitarian response in Haiti, see p. 918.)

Environmental situation in Gaza Strip

In February [dec. SS.XI/6], the Governing Council, having considered the report on the environmental assessment of the Gaza Strip following the escalation of hostilities between December 2008 and January 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1012], requested the Executive Director to take the necessary measures, in coordination with the relevant UN country team, to assist in implementing the recommendations contained in the report. It invited Governments, UN system entities and international financial institutions to provide financial, technical and logistical support and assistance to ensure the success of further UNEP work in the Gaza Strip.

General Assembly issues

The Executive Director, in January [UNEP/GCSS. XI/INF/3], provided information on issues arising from resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 2009 that called for action by, or were of relevance to, UNEP.

Administrative and budgetary matters

Budget execution

A February note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.XI/INF/4] contained information on the execution of the UNEP 2008–2009 biennial budget. Provisional resources for the biennium, including from the UN regular budget, the Environment Fund, trust funds, earmarked contributions and trust fund support, amounted to $570.5 million, including a balance, as at 1 January 2008, of $108.5 million. Total claims on resources were estimated at $406.3 million. The provisional year-end balance of funds as at 31 December 2009 was $159.2 million. Financial reserves stood at $22.5 million.

Trust funds

The Executive Director submitted a report on the management of trust funds and earmarked contributions [UNEP/GC.26/14/Rev.2]. As at 30 November, there were 90 active UNEP-administered trust funds. For the 2008–2009 biennium, actual expenditure amounted to $704.1 million, of which $119.3 million related to funds directly supporting the UNEP programme of work, $175.6 million to conventions, protocols and regional seas programmes, and $409.2 million to special accounts and trust funds. For the 2010–2011 biennium, total estimated expenditures of $747 million included $162.2 million for trust funds directly supporting the UNEP programme of work, $175.6 million for trust funds for conventions, protocols and regional seas, and $409.2 million for special accounts and trust funds. The projected expenditure for the 2012–2013 biennium amounted to $777.4 million, of which $157 million related to trust funds directly supporting the UNEP programme of work, $186.3 million to conventions and regional seas programmes and $434.1 million to special accounts and trust funds. Total earmarked expenditure was $99.8 million for the 2008–2009 biennium, an increase of $26.6 million over the previous biennium. Expenditures in terms of earmarked contributions for the 2010–2011 and 2012–2013 bienniums in support of the UNEP programme of work were estimated at $66 million and $104 million, respectively.

Board of Auditors report

A note by the Executive Director [UNEP/GC.26/INF/7] contained the report of the Board of Auditors and the financial report and audited financial statements of UNEP for the biennium ended 31 December 2009 [A/65/5/Add.6]. The report showed total income of $733 million and expenditure of $682.7 million, an increase of 26.7 per cent, and 26 per cent, respectively, over the previous biennium. The excess of income over expenditure was $50.3 million. As at 31 December 2009, unpaid pledges to the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer was $183.9 million, or 72 per cent of the 2008–2009 pledges of $254.5 million. More than $117 million of unpaid pledges were more than five years old. The Board recommended that UNEP formulate an accountability policy for the treatment of long-outstanding pledges. End-of-service and post-retirement liabilities amounted to $58.1 million. No decision had been made regarding the funding of the organization's employee obligations.

The Board made recommendations related to, among other issues, implementation of International Public Sector Accounting Standards; the preparation of financial statements; travel claims; accounting treatment of education grants; end-of-service and post-retirement benefits; and accounting treatment for projects implemented by external partners.

Election of Executive Director

In April [A/64/749], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of his intention to nominate Achim Steiner for re-election as Executive Director of UNEP. The Assembly, by decision 64/420 of 22 April, re-elected Mr. Steiner as Executive Director for a four-year term of office beginning on 15 June 2010 and ending on 14 June 2014.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environment Facility (GEF) united 182 member Governments, in partnership with international institutions, NGOs and the private sector, to address environmental issues. It provided grants to developing countries and countries with economies in transition for projects related to biodiversity, climate change, international waters, land degradation, the ozone layer and persistent organic pollutants (POPs). The GEF partnership comprised 10 agencies: UNEP, UNDP, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the African Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Inter-American Development Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development. GEF served as the financial mechanism for the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [ibid., p. 681], the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944], and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971].

Since its establishment in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 505], GEF had allocated $9.2 billion, supplemented by more than $40 billion in co-financing, for over 2,700 projects in more than 165 countries. During that period, GEF made more than 12,000 small grants directly to non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and community organizations through its Small Grants Programme.

During the period from 1 July 2009 to 30 June 2010, GEF financed 202 projects for a total of $3.03 billion, investing $552.37 million in GEF resources and mobilizing an additional $2.479 billion in co-financing from development partners. GEF approved 93 new projects in the climate change mitigation focal area; approximately $260 million in GEF Trust Fund resources was allocated to the projects, supplemented by an additional $1.585 billion in co-financing. It approved 67 projects in the biodiversity focal area, allocating $147 million in GEF funding, supplemented by $465 million in co-financing. GEF approved 16 new projects in the POPs focal area, allocating some $55 million for the projects, supplemented by $136 million generated in co-financing. In the international waters focal area, six new projects were approved, along with two other multi-focal projects with international waters components. Total allocations for those projects amounted to $22 million, supplemented by some $78 million generated in co-financing. GEF approved one new project in the ozone-depletion focal area, allocating some $9 million in GEF funding, supplemented by $12 million in co-financing; and one new project in the land degradation focal area, allocating approximately $3 million in GEF financing, supplemented by $5 million generated in co-financing. Fifteen multi-focal area projects were also approved by GEF; some $55 million in GEF funding was allocated for such projects, supplemented by $197 million in co-financing.

GEF, in its July report to the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [FCCC/CP/2010/5], stated that negotiations for the GEF-5 replenishment concluded on 12 May, with 35 donors pledging $4.34 billion for the period from 1 July 2010 to 30 June 2014. Total new donor funding increased by 54 per cent over GEF-4. The GEF Council approved the GEF-5 replenishment agreement at its special meeting in Punta del Este, Uruguay, in May. Its policy recommendations centred on enhancing country ownership and improving the effectiveness and efficiency of the GEF network. At its June meeting, the GEF Council approved implementation measures for key GEF-5 reforms.

The fourth GEF Assembly was convened in Punta del Este from 25 to 26 May. It discussed two areas of reform: enhancing country ownership and improving GEF effectiveness and efficiency. The Assembly approved two amendments to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility, revising the process for the appointment of the GEF Chief Executive Officer/Chairperson and lengthening the term of that official to four years; and confirming the availability of GEF to serve as a financial mechanism for UNCCD.

In December [UNEP/GC.26/12], the UNEP Executive Director reported on the amendments to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility. By a December note [UNEP/GC.26/INF/15], he submitted to the UNEP Governing Council documentation supporting the information provided in the report, including a letter from the GEF Chief Executive Officer/Chairperson requesting the Executive Director to facilitate the adoption of the amendments and report on progress.

International conventions and mechanisms

In a December note [UNEP/GC.26/INF/21 & Corr.1], the Executive Director explained the distribution and evolution of managerial and administrative authority in respect of multilateral environmental agreements (MEAs) administered by UNEP. He stated that UNEP provided treasury and other secretariat services to the Multilateral Fund of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, and administrative services to MEAs relating to the Convention on Biological Diversity, the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, and the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals and its co-located agreements, as well as the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer, and the regional seas programmes and associated conventions. Although the Executive Director had taken steps to augment UNEP administrative accountability and capacity, including through the creation of an Office of Operations, the majority of the central administrative services provided to those MEAs were through the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON). The management and administrative relationship between UNEP and MEAs, however, had experienced considerable difficulty. In 2009, the Executive Director initiated the update of the administrative and accountability arrangements governing the UNEP relationship with MEAs. In the financial report and audited financial statements for the year ended 31 December 2009 [A/65/5/Add.6], the Board of Auditors recommended that UNEP re-examine the extent of its control over MEA funds, with a view to assessing the appropriateness of their inclusion in its financial statements.

The Executive Director said that for UNEP to continue managing MEA human, financial and physical resources, those MEA conferences of parties that had qualified the Executive Director's authority—while enhancing that of the executive head of the relevant MEA, renaming and/or establishing a distinct legal identity for the immediate MEA secretariat and establishing requirements that conflicted with UN and UNEP regulations, rules and related administrative instructions—would need to amend those decisions to clearly recognize the authority of the Executive Director and of UN and UNEP regulations, rules and related administrative instructions, or else UNEP would need to establish a clear legal and administrative distinction between itself and MEA resources. In the event that did not happen, MEA secretariats would have to undertake significantly more administrative tasks and/or enter into direct administrative relationships with UN and/or other service providers. Conferences of parties would also need to approve MEA budgets that enabled a managerial and administrative separation from UNEP. MEAs would have to determine whether they were to retain UN-affiliation beyond UNEP and whether to apply and/or utilize UN regulations and administrative arrangements. The legal and administrative separation of UNEP and UNEP-administered MEAs would also entail additional costs.

Note by Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolutions 64/73 [YUN 2009, p. 1016], 64/202 [ibid., p. 1023] and 64/203 [ibid., p. 1019], the Secretary-General, in an August note [A/65/294], transmitted reports submitted by the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see below), the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (see p. 1025), and the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 1022).

Climate Change convention

As at 31 December, 193 States and the European Union (EU) were parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938].

At year's end, 191 States and the EU were parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1048], which entered into force in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1146]. San Marino and Somalia became parties during the year. There were 23 parties to the 2006 amendment to annex B of the Protocol [YUN 2006, p. 1220], which had not yet entered into force. China, Egypt, Morocco and Ukraine deposited their instruments of ratification in 2010.

The sixteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC (Cancún, Mexico, 29 November–10 December) [FCCC/CP/2010/7 & Add.1,2 & Corr.1] adopted the Cancún Agreements: Outcome of the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Long-term Cooperative Action under the Convention. The Agreements set out a shared vision for long-term cooperative action, by which parties agreed to work towards a global goal for substantially reducing global emissions by 2050, and to cooperate in achieving the peaking of global and national greenhouse gas emissions as soon as possible. The Agreements also established the Cancún Adaptation Framework to enhance action on adaptation, including through international cooperation, and an Adaptation Committee to promote coherent implementation of the enhanced action on adaptation. It also dealt with national mitigation commitments or actions by developed country parties, including the establishment of a registry to record mitigation actions seeking international support. The Agreements addressed policy approaches and positive incentives related to reducing emissions from deforestation and forest degradation in developing countries; the role of conservation, sustainable management of forests and enhancement of forest carbon stocks in developing countries; approaches to enhance the cost-effectiveness of and to promote mitigation actions; economic and social consequences and response measures; and finance, technology and capacity-building. It established a Green Climate Fund and a Standing Committee to assist the Conference of the Parties in exercising its functions with respect to the Convention's financial mechanism. Regarding technology development and transfer, a Technology Mechanism was established, comprising a Technology Executive Committee and a Climate Technology Centre and Network. The Agreements also addressed capacity-building and the periodic review of the adequacy of the long-term goal to hold the increase in global average temperature below 2 degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels.

The Conference of Parties also adopted decisions on, among other matters, the fourth review of the financial mechanism; additional guidance to the GEF assessment of the Special Climate Change Fund; further guidance for the operation of the Least Developed Countries Fund, and extension of its mandate; progress on enhancing implementation of the amended New Delhi work programme on article 6 of the Convention; national communications from parties included in annex I to the Convention; capacity-building for developing countries; and administrative and financial matters.

The sixth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the meeting of the parties to the Kyoto Protocol, held concurrently with the sixteenth session of the UNFCCC Conference of the Parties [FCCC/KP/CMP/2010/12 & Add.1,2], adopted decisions on the Cancún Agreements: land use, land-use change and forestry; the report on the Adaptation Fund Board; review of the Adaptation Fund; a proposal by Kazakhstan to amend annex B to the Protocol; the methodology for the collection of international transaction log fees in 2012–2013; supplementary information in national communications submitted in accordance with article 7 of the Protocol; capacity-building for developing countries; administrative, financial and institutional matters; the compliance committee; and further guidance relating to the clean development mechanism, as well as guidance on the implementation of article 6 of the Protocol, and carbon dioxide capture and storage in geological formations as clean development mechanism project activities.

In November [FCCC/KP/CMP/2010/10], the Executive Board of the Protocol's clean development mechanism issued its annual report covering its work from 17 October 2009 to 14 October 2010.

The Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice held its thirty-second (Bonn, Germany, 31 May–10 June) [FCCC/SBSTA/2010/6] and thirty-third (Cancún, 30 November–4 December) [FCCC/SBSTA/2010/13] sessions. The Subsidiary Body for Implementation also held its thirty-second (Bonn, 31 May–9 June) [FCCC/SBI/2010/10 & Add.1] and thirty-third (Cancún, 30 November–4 December) [FCCC/SBI/2010/27] sessions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.4], adopted resolution 65/159 without vote [agenda item 20 (d)].

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of humankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/53 of 6 December 1988, 54/222 of 22 December 1999, 62/86 of 10 December 2007, 63/32 of 26 November 2008 and 64/73 of 7 December 2009 and other resolutions and decisions relating to the protection of the global climate for present and future generations of humankind,

Recalling also the provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, including the acknowledgement that the global nature of climate change calls for the widest possible cooperation by all countries and their participation in an effective and appropriate international response, in accordance with their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities and their social and economic conditions,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Heads of State and Government resolved to make every effort to ensure the entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and to embark on the required reduction in emissions of greenhouse gases,

Recalling the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"),

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling the outcome of the thirteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and of the third session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 3 to 15 December 2007, and noting the outcomes of all previous sessions,

Reaffirming the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Remaining deeply concerned that all countries, in particular developing countries, including the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and countries in Africa, face increased risks from the adverse effects of climate change, and stressing the need to address adaptation needs relating to such effects,

Recognizing that low-lying and other small island countries, countries with low-lying coastal, arid and semi-arid areas or areas liable to floods, drought and desertification and developing countries with fragile mountainous ecosystems are particularly vulnerable to the adverse effects of climate change,

Noting that, to date, there are one hundred and ninety-four parties to the Convention, including one hundred and ninety-three States and one regional economic integration organization,

Noting also that, currently, the Kyoto Protocol has attracted one hundred and ninety-two ratifications, accessions, acceptances or approvals, including by forty-one of the parties included in annex I to the Convention,

Noting further the amendment to annex B to the Kyoto Protocol,

Noting the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the need to build and enhance scientific and technological capabilities, inter alia, through continuing support to the Panel for the exchange of scientific data and information, especially in developing countries,

Noting also the significance of the scientific findings of the fourth assessment report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, which provide an integrated scientific, technical and socio-economic perspective on relevant issues and contribute positively to the discussions under the Convention and the understanding of the phenomenon of climate change, including its impacts and risks,

Reaffirming that poverty eradication and sustainable development are global priorities,

Recognizing that deep cuts in global emissions will be required to achieve the ultimate objective of the Convention,

Reaffirming its commitment to the ultimate objective of the Convention, namely, to stabilize greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere at a level that prevents dangerous anthropogenic interference with the climate system, and also reaffirming that such a level should be achieved within a time frame sufficient to allow ecosystems to adapt naturally to climate change, to ensure that food production is not threatened and to enable economic development to proceed in a sustainable manner,

Reaffirming the financial obligations of developed country parties and other developed parties included in annex II to the Convention under the Convention and the Kyoto Protocol,

Acknowledging women as key actors in the efforts towards sustainable development, and recognizing that a gender perspective can contribute to efforts to address climate change,

Taking note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change on the United Nations Climate Change Conference, Copenhagen, 2009, and its follow-up,

1. Recognizes the urgency of addressing and the seriousness of the challenge of climate change, and calls upon States to show strong political will in working cooperatively towards achieving the ultimate objective of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change through the urgent implementation of its provisions;

2. Notes that States that have ratified the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change welcome the entry into force of the Protocol on 16 February 2005, and strongly urges States that have not yet done so to ratify the Protocol in a timely manner;

3. Takes note of the outcome of the fifteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and of the fifth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, hosted by the Government of Denmark from 7 to 19 December 2009;

4. Notes with appreciation that the Government of Mexico hosted the sixteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol in Cancun from 29 November to 10 December 2010;

5. Notes the ongoing parallel work of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Long-term Cooperative Action under the Convention and of the Ad Hoc Working Group on Further Commitments for Annex I Parties under the Kyoto Protocol, in accordance with their respective mandates, and that the respective parties to the Convention and the Protocol call for the completion of this work;

6. Encourages Member States to approach the United Nations Climate Change Conference in Cancun with optimism and determination, with a view to achieving a substantive, balanced and ambitious outcome of the sixteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and of the sixth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol;

7. Notes with appreciation, in this regard, the offer of the Government of South Africa to host the seventeenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, to be held in 2011;

8. Urges parties to the Convention, and invites parties to the Kyoto Protocol, to continue to make use of the information contained in the fourth assessment report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change in their work;

9. Recognizes that climate change poses serious risks and challenges to all countries, particularly developing countries, especially the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries, small island developing States and countries in Africa, including those that are particularly vulnerable to the adverse effects of climate change, calls upon States to take urgent global action to address climate change in accordance with the principles identified in the Convention, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities, and in this regard urges all countries to fully implement their commitments under the Convention, to take effective and concrete actions and measures at all levels and to enhance international cooperation within the framework of the Convention;

10. Reaffirms that efforts to address climate change in a manner that enhances the sustainable development and sustained economic growth of developing countries and the eradication of poverty should be carried out by promoting the integration of the three components of sustainable development, namely, economic development, social development and environmental protection, as interdependent and mutually reinforcing pillars, in an integrated, coordinated and balanced manner;

11. Recognizes the urgency of providing financial and technical resources, as well as capacity-building and access to and transfer of technology, to assist those developing countries adversely affected by climate change;

12. Notes the ongoing work of the Joint Liaison Group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the Framework Convention, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the Convention on Biological Diversity, and encourages close cooperation to promote complementarities among the three secretariats while respecting their independent legal status;

13. Invites the conferences of the parties to the multi-lateral environmental conventions, when setting the dates of their meetings, to take into consideration the schedule of meetings of the General Assembly and of the Commission on Sustainable Development so as to ensure the adequate representation of developing countries at those meetings;

14. Invites the secretariat of the Framework Convention to report, through the Secretary-General, to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the work of the Conference of the Parties;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of humankind".

Vienna Convention and Montreal Protocol

As at 31 December, 195 States and the EU were parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 810].

Parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, which was adopted in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 686], stood at 195 States and the EU. Parties to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol [YUN 1990, p. 522] numbered 194 States and the EU, with Lesotho becoming a party in 2010. Parties to the 1992 Amendment [YUN 1992, p. 684] numbered 191 States and the EU, with Lesotho becoming a party. Parties to the 1997 Amendment [YUN 1997, p. 1049] numbered 181 States and the EU, with China, Lesotho and Mozambique becoming parties. Parties to the 1999 Amendment [YUN 1999, p. 986] numbered 165 States and the EU, with Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, China, Lesotho and Mozambique becoming parties.

The twenty-second meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol (Bangkok, Thailand, 8–12 November) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.22/9] adopted 26 decisions. It approved the terms of reference for an evaluation of the Protocol's financial mechanism and for the study on the 2012–2014 replenishment of the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol; and it approved the revised 2010 budget and the 2011 budget. It also adopted decisions relating to essential-use nominations for controlled substances for 2011; essential-use exemptions for chlorofluorocarbon 113 for aerospace applications in the Russian Federation; critical-use exemptions for methyl bromide for 2011 and 2012; global laboratory and analytical use exemption; uses of controlled substances as process agents; hydrochlorofluorocarbons preblended in polyols; destruction technologies with regard to ozone-depleting substances; progress in the transition for the use of halon; and treatment of stockpiled ozone-depleting substances. Other decisions dealt with the situation in Haiti following the devastating earthquake that occurred there on 12 January and the export of ozone-depleting substances to that country; non-compliance with the Protocol; and administrative matters.

The Implementation Committee under the Non-Compliance Procedure for the Montreal Protocol held its forty-fourth (Geneva, 21–22 June) [UNEP/OzL.Pro/ImpCom/44/5] and forty-fifth (Bangkok, 4–5 November) [UNEP/OzL.Pro/ImpCom/45/5] sessions.

Convention on air pollution

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution [YUN 1979, p. 710], which entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 645], remained at 50 States and the EU. Eight protocols to the Convention dealt with the programme for monitoring and evaluation of pollutants in Europe (1984); the reduction of sulphur emissions or their transboundary fluxes by at least 30 per cent (1985); the control of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes (1988); the control of volatile organic compounds or their transboundary fluxes (1991); the further reduction of sulphur emissions (1994); heavy metals (1998); persistent organic pollutants (1998); and the abatement of acidification, eutrophication and ground-level ozone (1999). Amendments to the protocol on persistent organic pollutants were adopted in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1018].

The twenty-eighth session of the Executive Body for the Convention (Geneva, 13–17 December) [ECE/EB.AIR/106 & Corr.1 & Add.1,2] adopted 19 decisions. It revised the mandate for the Task Force on the Hemispheric Transport of Air Pollution; decided to include consideration of black carbon in the revision of the 1999 Gothenburg Protocol to Abate Acidification, Eutrophication and Ground-level Ozone, and requested the Working Group on Strategies and Review to prepare the text of a revised Protocol; established a Coordinating Group on promotion of actions towards implementation of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution in Eastern Europe, the Caucasus and Central Asia; adopted the long-term strategy for the Convention and requested the Bureau of the Executive Body to develop an action plan for its implementation; and adopted rules of procedure to aid the effective operation of the Convention and its Protocols. Other decisions dealt with compliance issues.

Convention on Biological Diversity

As at 31 December, 192 States and the EU were parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], which entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810].

At year's end, the number of parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, which was adopted in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 973] and entered into force in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1051], rose to 159 States and the EU. Guinea-Bissau and Somalia became parties during the year.

The fourteenth meeting of the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice (Nairobi, 10–21 May) [UNEP/CBD/COP/10/3] adopted 17 recommendations for consideration by the tenth (2010) meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention.

The tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity (Nagoya, Japan, 18–29 October) [UNEP/CBD/COP/10/27] adopted the Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from their Utilization on Biological Diversity. The Protocol would be opened for signature at UN Headquarters from 2 February 2011 to 1 February 2012. The Conference also adopted the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020, which included 20 headline targets for 2015 or 2020—the Aichi Biodiversity Targets—organized under five strategic goals. The Conference invited parties to appoint a resource mobilization focal point to facilitate national implementation of the resource mobilization strategy and adopted indicators for monitoring its implementation. The Conference adopted decisions on the third edition of the Global Biodiversity Outlook: implications for the future implementation of the Convention; the implementation of the Convention and Strategic Plan; integration of biodiversity into poverty eradication and development, which included the establishment of an Expert Group on Biodiversity for Poverty Eradication and Development; and examination of the outcome-oriented biodiversity goals and targets and associated indicators, and consideration of their possible adjustment for the period beyond 2010.

The Conference invited the General Assembly to declare 2011–2020 the United Nations Decade on Biodiversity. It adopted a multi-year programme of work for the Conference of the Parties for 2011–2020; guidelines for the fifth national report on Conference implementation; the mission, goals and objectives of the clearing-house mechanism for 2011–2020; and the consolidated update of the Global Strategy for Plant Conservation, including the outcome-oriented global targets for 2011–2020. The Conference endorsed the Plan of Action on Subnational Government, Cities and Other Local Authorities for Biodiversity (2011–2020), adopted at the City Biodiversity Summit 2010 (Nagoya, 24–26 October). It adopted the consolidated list of guidance to the financial mechanism, including programme priorities; additional guidance to GEF in the provision of financial resources; the terms of reference for a full assessment of the amount of funds necessary to assist developing countries and countries with economies in transition in fulfilling their commitments under the Convention for the sixth replenishment period of the GEF Trust Fund; and the terms of reference for the fourth review of the effectiveness of the financial mechanism. The Conference adopted the revised delineation of dry and sub-humid lands, and established an ad hoc technical expert group to suggest ways to develop standards to avoid spreading invasive alien species not covered by current international standards. The Conference also adopted the Tkarihwaí:ri Code of Ethical Conduct to Ensure Respect for the Cultural and Intellectual Heritage of Indigenous and Local Communities Relevant to the Conservation and Sustainable Use of Biological Diversity.

Further decisions addressed the science-policy interface on biodiversity, ecosystem services and human well-being; new and emerging issues; the International Year of Biodiversity (see p. 1030); gender mainstreaming; business engagement; the multi-year Plan of Action for South-South Cooperation on Biodiversity for Development, adopted by the Group of 77 developing countries and China on 17 October; inland waters biodiversity; marine and coastal biodiversity; mountain biological diversity; protected areas; the sustainable use of biodiversity; biodiversity and climate change; agriculture and biodiversity; forest biodiversity; biofuels and biodiversity; the Global Taxonomy Initiative; mechanisms to promote the effective participation of indigenous and local communities in the work of the Convention; elements of sui generis systems for the protection of traditional knowledge; the multi-year programme of work on the implementation of article 8(j) and related provisions of the Convention; incentive measures; and administrative and budgetary matters.

Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety

The fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity Serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biodiversity (Nagoya, 11–15 October) [UNEP/CBD/BS/COP-MOP/5/17] adopted 17 decisions. It endorsed the terms of reference for a comprehensive review of the updated Action Plan for Building Capacities for effective Implementation of the Protocol, and adopted the Nagoya-Kuala Lumpur Supplementary Protocol on Liability and Redress to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, which would be opened for signature from 7 March 2011 to 6 March 2012. The meeting adopted the programme of work on public awareness, education and participation concerning the safe transfer, handling and use of living modified organisms; the Strategic Plan for the Cartagena Protocol on Biodiversity for the 2011–2020 period and the multi-year programme of work of the Conference of the Parties serving as the meeting of the Parties to the Protocol; and the programme budget for its secretariat for the 2011–2012 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.6], adopted resolution 65/161 without vote [agenda item 20 (f)].

Convention on Biological Diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/201 of 20 December 2000 and 64/203 of 21 December 2009 and all other previous resolutions relating to the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Recalling also the outcomes of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in June 1992,

Recalling further that in its resolution 61/203 of 20 December 2006 it declared 2010 the International Year of Biodiversity,

Reiterating that the Convention is the key international instrument for the conservation and sustainable use of biological resources and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising from the utilization of genetic resources, including by appropriate access to genetic resources and appropriate transfer of relevant technologies, taking into account all rights over those resources and to those technologies, and by appropriate funding,

Recognizing the potential contribution of other multilateral environmental agreements, including the biodiversity-related conventions, and of international organizations in support of the three objectives of the Convention,

Reaffirming that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, States have the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their own environmental policies and the responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction,

Noting that one hundred and ninety-two States and one regional economic integration organization are parties to the Convention and that one hundred and fifty-nine States and one regional economic integration organization are parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Recognizing that the achievement of the three objectives of the Convention is crucial for sustainable development, poverty eradication and the improvement of human well-being and a major factor underpinning the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling the commitments of the World Summit on Sustainable Development, held in Johannesburg, South Africa, from 26 August to 4 September 2002, to pursue a balanced, efficient and coherent implementation of the three objectives of the Convention,

Recognizing the continuing need for greater progress in the implementation by parties of obligations and commitments under the Convention in order to achieve its objectives, and in this regard emphasizing the need to comprehensively address the challenges to the full implementation of the Convention at the national, regional and global levels,

Recalling the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on biodiversity, held on 22 September 2010 as a contribution to the International Year of Biodiversity,

Recalling also the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Expressing deep appreciation to the Government of Japan for hosting the tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and the fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol, and welcoming the decision by the Conference of the Parties at its tenth meeting to endorse the offer of the Government of India to host the eleventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties, to be held from 8 to 19 October 2012, and the sixth meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol, to be held from 1 to 5 October 2012,

1. Takes note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity on the work of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

2. Recognizes the important outcomes of the tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and the fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, held in Nagoya, Japan, from 18 to 29 October 2010 and from 11 to 15 October 2010, which represent a significant contribution to the comprehensive implementation of the three objectives of the Convention;

3. Notes the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting of the Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from Their Utilization to the Convention on Biological Diversity, and acknowledges the potential role of access and benefit-sharing in contributing to the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, poverty eradication and environmental sustainability and, thereby, to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

4. Notes with appreciation the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting of the updated and revised Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020 and the Aichi Biodiversity Targets;

5. Notes the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting of a decision on the strategy for resource mobilization in support of the achievement of the three objectives of the Convention, and looks forward to the adoption by the Conference of the Parties at its eleventh meeting, as mandated, of targets to ensure the effectiveness of the strategy, provided robust baselines have been identified and endorsed and an effective reporting framework has been adopted, with a view to fully meeting the commitment to substantially increase human, financial and technical resources from all sources;

6. Also notes the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its fifth meeting serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol of the Nagoya-Kuala Lumpur Supplementary Protocol on Liability and Redress to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, which provides international rules and procedures in the field of liability and redress for damage resulting from transboundary movements of living modified organisms;

7. Further notes the work of the Ad Hoc Technical Expert Group on Biodiversity and Climate Change, and encourages parties, Governments, relevant organizations and the Executive Secretary of the Convention to take the findings of the Group into consideration, where appropriate, when carrying out work on biodiversity and climate change;

8. Notes the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting of a decision on mechanisms to promote the effective participation of indigenous and local communities in the work of the Convention;

9. Encourages the Global Environment Facility to continue supporting the implementation of the three objectives of the Convention, especially its work on assisting the early entry into force of the Nagoya Protocol;

10. Welcomes the significant progress made in developing a multi-year plan of action on biodiversity for development based on the framework for South-South cooperation, and encourages parties and Governments to further contribute to its development;

11. Notes the ongoing work of the Joint Liaison Group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the Convention on Biological Diversity, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change ("the Rio Conventions") and of the Liaison Group of Biodiversity-related Conventions, acknowledges the importance of improving coherence in the implementation of the Rio Conventions, recognizes the importance of enhancing synergies among the biodiversity-related conventions, without prejudice to their specific objectives, and encourages the conferences of the parties to the biodiversity-related multilateral environmental agreements to consider strengthening efforts in this regard, taking into account relevant experiences and bearing in mind the respective independent legal status and mandates of these instruments;

12. Reaffirms the intrinsic value of biological diversity as well as the ecological, genetic, social, economic, scientific, educational, cultural, recreational and aesthetic values of biological diversity and its components, taking into account their importance for sustainable development;

13. Notes the consideration of aspects related to the economic valuation of ecosystems and biodiversity in the context of the work of the Convention on Biological Diversity, including The Economics of Ecosystems and Biodiversity reports, as referred to in relevant decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting;

14. Also notes the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting of a decision on the administration of the Convention and budget for the programme of work for the biennium 2011–2012, which included the revised administrative arrangements between the secretariat of the Convention and the United Nations Environment Programme and through which the Conference of the Parties looked forward to the rapid completion of the service-level agreement provided for in those arrangements, requested the Executive Secretary of the Convention to report to the Conference of the Parties through its Bureau on the implementation of those arrangements and invited the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to report on those arrangements to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its twenty-sixth session;

15. Invites countries that have not yet done so to ratify or accede to the Convention;

16. Invites parties to the Convention that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Cartagena Protocol to consider doing so;

17. Invites parties to the Convention to sign, ratify or accede to the Nagoya Protocol at the earliest opportunity;

18. Invites parties to the Cartagena Protocol to sign, ratify or accede to the Nagoya-Kuala Lumpur Supplementary Protocol at the earliest opportunity;

19. Decides, following the invitation by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting, to declare 2011–2020 the United Nations Decade on Biodiversity, with a view to contributing to the implementation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to lead the coordination of the activities of the Decade on behalf of the United Nations system, with the support of the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity, the secretariats of other biodiversity-related conventions and relevant United Nations funds, programmes and agencies, and invites Member States in a position to do so to contribute, on a voluntary basis, to the funding of the activities of the Decade;

20. Invites the secretariat of the Convention to report, through the Secretary-General, to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session on the work of the Conference of the Parties;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Convention on Biological Diversity".

Convention to combat desertification

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], amounted to 193 States and the EU. Iraq became a party during the year.

In an August note [A/65/294] on the implementation of UN environmental conventions, the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of resolution 64/202 [YUN 2009, p. 1023]. The secretariat of the Convention was exploring partnerships and collaboration with relevant agencies and programmes, including a joint work programme with UNDP, collaboration on drought with the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (ISDR) and an agreement with the United Nations Forum on Forests (UNFF) to work on issues related to dry forests and reducing emissions from deforestation and forest degradation. The Convention and ISDR signed a memorandum of understanding in May setting out a framework for collaborating on reducing the vulnerability of communities to drought-related risk and expanding networks to advance the prevention of drought-associated disasters. On 25 May, the UNCCD secretariat signed a memorandum of understanding with UNFF to address the institutional gap between drylands and forests, an essential step towards more effective implementation of sustainable forest and land management. The secretariat was working with the secretariat of the Framework Convention on Climate Change to advise selected least developed countries on the synergistic implementation of both Conventions, and had reviewed national adaptation programmes of action and national action plans to identify the overlapping priority projects and develop proposals addressing land degradation and sustainable land management.

An inter-agency task force was established to prepare activities for the United Nations Decade for Deserts and the Fight against Desertification (2010–2020), declared by the Assembly in resolution 64/201 [ibid., p. 1025]. The task force prepared an implementation strategy for the Decade, including a coordination mechanism. The Decade was launched on 16 August during the Second International Conference on Climate, Sustainability and Sustainable Development in Semi-arid Regions (Fortaleza, Brazil, 16–20 August). The meeting of the Bureau of the Conference of Parties (Bonn, Germany, 23–24 June) supported the principle of convening a one-day high-level event of the General Assembly in 2011 to address desertification, land degradation and drought in the context of global sustainability.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.5], adopted resolution 65/160 without vote [agenda item 20 (e)].

Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/211 of 23 December 2003, 61/202 of 20 December 2006, 62/193 of 19 December 2007, 63/218 of 19 December 2008 and 64/202 of 21 December 2009 and other resolutions relating to the implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the outcome document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling further the United Nations Decade for Deserts and the Fight against Desertification (2010–2020),

Recalling the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building,

Supporting the implementation of the Convention through joint action by the international community in addressing the causes and the poverty impacts of desertification and land degradation in arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid areas, consistent with articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention, taking into account the ten-year strategic plan and framework to enhance the implementation of the Convention (2008–2018) and supporting the exchange of best practices and lessons learned, including from regional cooperation, and the mobilization of adequate and predictable financial resources,

Reaffirming the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (“Johannesburg Plan of Implementation”), in which the Convention is recognized as one of the tools for poverty eradication, and reiterating its resolve to eradicate extreme poverty,

Acknowledging that desertification, land degradation and drought are challenges of a global dimension in that they affect all regions of the world,

Concerned that extreme desertification and land degradation processes affect also the arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid areas in Latin America and the Caribbean, Asia, the Northern Mediterranean and Central and Eastern Europe, a situation which, having been fully described in the ten-year strategic plan and framework, has not been acknowledged in all its magnitude, increasing the vulnerability of poor communities and compromising food security,

Concerned also by the increasing frequency and severity of dust storms and sandstorms affecting arid and semi-arid regions and their negative impact on the environment and the economy,

Concerned further by the negative impacts that desertification, land degradation, loss of biodiversity and climate change have on each other, recognizing the potential benefits of complementarities in addressing these problems at all levels in a mutually supportive manner, and recognizing also the interrelationship between climate change, loss of biodiversity and desertification and the need to intensify efforts to combat desertification and to promote sustainable land management,

Concerned by the negative economic impacts of desertification, land degradation and drought, and in this regard welcoming the organization in 2012 of the second United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification Scientific Conference, on the theme “Economic assessment of desertification, sustainable land management and resilience of arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid areas”,

Noting the need for enhanced cooperation among the secretariats of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity, while respecting their individual mandates,

Underlining the cross-sectoral nature of desertification, land degradation and drought mitigation, and in this regard inviting all relevant United Nations organizations to cooperate with the secretariat of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in supporting an effective response to those challenges,

Expressing concern that one billion inhabitants of drylands are among the poorest on the planet and are lagging behind in the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in particular those relating to hunger and poverty, as indicated in the joint report of the Convention and the United Nations Development Programme entitled “The Forgotten Billion: MDG Achievement in the Drylands”,

Recognizing the need for investment in sustainable land management in arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid areas, and emphasizing the need for the full implementation of the ten-year strategic plan and framework,

Noting that the ten-year strategic plan and framework highlights the importance given to the development and implementation of scientifically based and sound methods for monitoring and assessing desertification and the efforts under way to promote scientific research and to strengthen the scientific basis of the activities on desertification and drought under the Convention,

Welcoming the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its ninth session to endorse the offer of the Government of the Republic of Korea to host the tenth session of the Conference of the Parties in Changwon City, Gyeongnam Province, to be held from 10 to 21 October 2011,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 64/202 and on the implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa;

2. Invites Member States to enhance support for the implementation of the Convention, including by mainstreaming its core issues into development strategies, where appropriate and needed, to integrate desertification and land degradation into their plans and strategies for sustainable development and to integrate national action programmes related to drought and desertification into national development strategies;

3. Also invites Member States, in particular the donor community and the United Nations system, to address the needs of more than one billion inhabitants of drylands by encouraging appropriate investments to contribute to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in those areas;

4. Welcomes the outcomes of the seventeenth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development regarding desertification, land degradation and drought, and emphasizes the need to implement the policy options pertaining to the thematic cluster of issues of that session;

5. Is fully aware of the need to cooperate at the global and regional levels, with a view to preventing and managing dust storms and sandstorms, including through the sharing of related information, forecasting and early warning systems, and therefore invites Member States and relevant organizations to cooperate in the sharing of information, forecasting and early warning systems related to dust storms and sandstorms;

6. Invites all parties and all involved institutions to engage in and actively support the process of strengthening the scientific basis of the activities on desertification and drought under the Convention, in particular those required to assess the economic impacts of desertification, land degradation and drought in arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid areas and to measure the impact of the implementation of the Convention and the subsequent enhancement of the technical capabilities of national coordinating bodies and national focal points of the Convention;

7. Recommends the strengthening of the advisory role of the Committee for the Review of the Implementation of the Convention and the Committee on Science and Technology, through their recommendations, in order to monitor effectively the decisions of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

8. Requests all States parties to the Convention to promote awareness among local populations, in particular women, young people and civil society organizations, and to include them in the implementation of the ten-year strategic plan and framework to enhance the implementation of the Convention (2008–2018), and encourages affected States parties and donors to take into account the issue of participation of civil society in Convention processes when setting priorities in national development strategies, in conformity, inter alia, with the comprehensive communication strategy adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its ninth session;

9. Decides to convene a one-day high-level meeting on the theme “Addressing desertification, land degradation and drought in the context of sustainable development and poverty eradication” on Tuesday, 20 September 2011, prior to the general debate of its sixty-sixth session;

10. Also decides to hold the general debate of its sixty-sixth session from Wednesday, 21 September 2011, on the understanding that these arrangements shall in no way create a precedent for the general debate at future sessions;

11. Is convinced that the high-level meeting should contribute to raising awareness of desertification, land degradation and drought at the highest level, should reaffirm the fulfilment of all commitments to the Convention and its ten-year strategic plan and framework, ensuring a higher priority for desertification, land degradation and drought on the international agenda, and should also contribute to the preparation of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, and therefore:

(a) Decides that the meeting will be organized within existing resources and structured around an opening plenary meeting, followed by one interactive panel in the morning, on the same theme as the high-level meeting, followed by a second interactive panel in the afternoon, followed by a closing plenary meeting;

(b) Also decides that the panels will be co-chaired by Heads of State or Government, one from the North and one from the South for each panel, to be appointed by the President of the General Assembly, with due regard for geographical balance, in consultation with regional groups;

(c) Encourages the holding of the meeting at the highest possible political level, with the participation of Heads of State or Government, ministers, special representatives and other representatives, as appropriate;

(d) Decides that the preparations for the meeting will be undertaken under the authority of the President of the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session, and that the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification will serve as the focal point of the meeting;

(e) Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a background paper for the meeting, in consultation with Member States, to be made available no later than June 2011;

(f) Decides that the meeting will be chaired by the President of the General Assembly, who will present at the closing plenary meeting a summary of the discussions based on the report of the co-chairs of the panels, for transmission, under his authority, to the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification at its tenth session, to be held in Changwon City, Gyeongnam Province, Republic of Korea, from 10 to 21 October 2011, and to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development;

(g) Invites the heads of the United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, the Executive Secretaries of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity and the heads of intergovernmental organizations and entities having observer status in the General Assembly to participate, as appropriate, in the meeting, in accordance with the rules and procedures established by the Assembly;

(b) Decides that the President of the General Assembly will consult with representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations and the private sector, and with Member States, as appropriate, regarding the list of representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations and the private sector that may participate in the meeting;

(i) Also decides that the speaking order at the opening plenary meeting will be as follows: the President of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General, the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, the President of the ninth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification and the incoming President of the tenth session of the Conference of the Parties, the Group of 77 and China, the European Union, the Group of African States and other Member States, in accordance with United Nations protocol;

12. Welcomes the enhanced collaboration and cooperation between the secretariat of the Convention and United Nations programmes, funds, agencies and entities working on land degradation issues;

13. Notes the ongoing work of the Joint Liaison Group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity, and encourages continuing cooperation in order to promote complementarities in the work of the secretariats while respecting their independent legal status;

14. Also notes the outcome of the fifth replenishment of the Global Environment Facility Trust Fund, and invites donors to the Facility to ensure that it is adequately resourced during the next replenishment period, to enable it to allocate sufficient and adequate resources to its six focal areas, in particular its land degradation focal area;

15. Welcomes the amendment to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility whereby the Facility shall be available to serve as a financial mechanism of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, pursuant to article 20, paragraph 2 (b), and article 21 of the Convention;

16. Takes note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "Assessment of the Global Mechanism of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification" and of the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its ninth session requesting the Bureau of the ninth session, together with the Managing Director of the Global Mechanism and the Executive Secretary of the Convention, and taking into account the views of other interested relevant entities such as the host countries and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, to undertake and supervise an evaluation of existing and potential reporting, accountability and institutional arrangements for the Global Mechanism and their legal and financial implications, including the possibility of identifying a new institution or organization to house the Global Mechanism, taking into account the scenarios presented in the Joint Inspection Unit assessment of the Global Mechanism and the need to avoid duplication and overlap in the work of the secretariat of the Convention and the Global Mechanism, and also requesting the Bureau of the ninth session to submit to the Conference of the Parties at its tenth session a report on that evaluation for consideration and decision on the issue of reporting, accountability and institutional arrangements for the Global Mechanism;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa";

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

High-level Advisory Group. In follow-up to the commitment of developed countries in the 2009 Copenhagen Accord [YUN 2009, p. 1015] to mobilizing $100 billion a year by 2020 to address the needs of developing countries to address climate change, the Secretary-General, on 12 February, established the High-level Advisory Group on Climate Change Financing. The Group, co-chaired by the Prime Ministers of Ethiopia and Norway, focused on identifying proposals on how to significantly scale up long-term financing for mitigation and adaptation strategies in developing countries from public and private sources and how best to deliver such financing.

In its report, submitted to the Secretary-General in November, the Group concluded that it was challenging but feasible to meet the $100 billion a year goal. Funding would have to come from a variety of sources, including alternative sources of finance, the scaling up of existing sources and increased private flows. Grants and highly concessional loans were crucial for adaptation in the most vulnerable developing countries, such as the least developed countries, small island developing States and countries in Africa. Strong commitments to domestic mitigation and the introduction of public instruments based on carbon pricing were important for mobilizing climate financing, both private and public. The Group identified potential sources of finance and examined issues involved in combining instruments, including overlaps and interactions. It emphasized the importance of a carbon pricing in the range of $20 to $25 per tonne of carbon dioxide equivalent as a key element of reaching the $100 billion per year goal. Based on that amount, an estimated $30 billion could be mobilized annually; some $10 billion could be raised annually from carbon pricing international transport; and another $10 billion from other instruments, such as the redeployment of fossil fuel subsidies in developed countries or some form of financial transaction tax. The $20–$25 per tonne carbon pricing could generate some $100 to $200 billion of gross private capital flows, with net flows in the range of $10 to $20 billion. Some $30 billion to $50 billion in increased market flows could be generated annually. The net flow from multilateral banks would be $11 billion. The Advisory Group was of the view that the credibility of both developed and developing countries in raising and using resources would be greatly increased if over the next decade there was confidence that those resources would be spent wisely, be quickly accessed and produce results. Funding for adaptation should be prioritized for the most vulnerable developing countries, small island developing States and Africa.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

The thirty-second session of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) (Busan, Republic of Korea, 11–14 October), which was attended by some 300 participants, focused primarily on revising the scope of the synthesis report for the Fifth Assessment Report (AR5), and addressed the recommendations of the InterAcademy Council (IAC) review of IPCC processes and procedures. The Panel adopted decisions in response to the IAC review, including on treatment of “grey literature” and uncertainty, as well as processes to address errors in previous reports. It established task groups on processes and procedures, communications, conflict of interest policy, and management and governance to address recommendations requiring further examination. The Panel also accepted a revised outline for the AR5 synthesis report. Participants addressed the communications strategy and replacement of members on the IPCC Bureau. Progress reports were presented on the Special Report on Renewable Energy Sources and Climate Change Mitigation, the Task Force on National Greenhouse Gas Inventories and the IPCC Peace Prize Scholarship Fund.

Biodiversity and ecosystem services

The eleventh special session of the UNEP Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum (GC/GMEF) held ministerial consultations on the topic “biodiversity and ecosystems” from 24 to 26 February. A discussion paper presented by the Executive Director [UNEP/GCSS.XI/10/Add.2] provided background information on the topic.

The Governing Council, in a February decision [dec. SS.XI/4], noted the outcomes of the second ad hoc intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder meeting on an intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services [YUN 2009, p. 1019]. It invited Governments and relevant organizations to finalize, in 2010, their deliberations on improving the science-policy interface for biodiversity and ecosystem services for the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity, long-term human well-being and sustainable development. The Council requested the Executive Director to support Governments and relevant organizations to finalize those deliberations and to convene, in June, a final ad hoc intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder meeting to reach agreement on whether to establish an intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services. The Executive Director was also asked to make available to all parties the information requested at the second meeting in time for the third meeting, and transmit, on the Council’s behalf, the outcomes of and documentation from the third and final meeting to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth (2010) session for consideration during the high-level segment on biological diversity in September (see p. 1030) and thereafter. The Council invited Governments and organizations to provide extrabudgetary resources for the process, and asked the Executive Director to cooperate with the secretariats of biodiversity-related multilateral environmental agreements and other bodies to ensure the full involvement of key stakeholders in the preparation of the third meeting.

In the Nusa Dua Declaration [dec. SS.XI/9] (see p. 1006), GC/GMEF acknowledged that biodiversity was at the core of human existence and was threatened by rapid global change. It was committed to finalizing deliberations on improving the science-policy interface for biodiversity and ecosystem services in 2010, and encouraged UNEP to continue to play a leadership role in advancing understanding of the economics of biodiversity and ecosystems services and its policy implications, through a study of ecosystems and biodiversity.

Third ad hoc meeting. Participants at the third ad hoc intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder meeting on an intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystems (Busan, 7–11 June) [A/65/383] considered the establishment of an intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystems on the basis of options proposed by the secretariat for improving the interface [UNEP/IPBES/3/2 & Corr.1]. The meeting adopted the “Busan outcome”, by which it agreed to establish a platform to strengthen the science-policy interface for biodiversity and ecosystem services for the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity, long-term human well-being and sustainable development. The new platform should respond to requests from Governments; identify and prioritize key scientific information for policymakers; assess knowledge on biodiversity and ecosystems services and their interlinkages; support policy formulation and implementation; and prioritize capacity-building needs to improve the interface. The platform should be established as an independent intergovernmental body administered by one or more UN organizations, agencies, funds or programmes, with the plenary serving as its decision-making body and open to participation by all Member States and regional economic integration organizations. A core trust fund should be created to receive voluntary contributions, and the platform should be independently reviewed and evaluated periodically. The Assembly, at its sixty-fifth (2010) session should be invited to take action to establish the platform.

In a December report [UNEP/GC.26/6], the Executive Director transmitted the Busan outcome to the Governing Council and suggested further action to ensure the establishment of the intergovernmental science-policy platform.

Communication. On 15 July [A/65/191], the Republic of Korea requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's sixty-fifth (2010) session a supplementary item entitled "Intergovernmental science-policy platform on biodiversity and ecosystem services". In an explanatory memorandum, the Republic of Korea drew attention to the agreements reached in the Busan outcome and stated that, in the context of the International Year of Biodiversity and the high-level segment of the Assembly in September, it was important for the international community to establish such a platform.

International Year of Biodiversity

High-level meeting. In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 61/203 [YUN 2006, p. 1225], by which the Assembly declared 2010 the International Year of Biodiversity, and 64/203 on the Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 2009, p. 1019], the Assembly held a high-level plenary meeting on biological diversity on 22 September as a contribution to observance of the Year. In preparation for the high-level meeting, an informal meeting was held in Geneva (1–2 September), followed by a ministerial meeting (3 September) of the 11 States (Argentina, Bahamas, Brazil, Germany, India, Indonesia, Japan, Kenya, Netherlands, Malaysia, Slovakia) that had presided or would preside over the Conference of the Parties to the Convention. By decisions 64/555 of 15 April and 64/567 of 13 September, the Assembly decided on the schedule and modalities of the high-level meeting.

In a July background paper on the subject [A/64/865], the Secretary-General recalled that at the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], States committed to achieving, by 2010, a significant reduction in the rate of loss of biodiversity at the global, regional and national levels—the "2010 biodiversity target". One hundred and seventy parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity had finalized their national biodiversity strategies and action plans or equivalent instruments. The tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (see p. 1022) would establish the strategic framework and programme for the next phase of implementation, and the high-level meeting would provide an opportunity to consider the status and trends of biodiversity; the risks to human well-being, development and security posed by the continued loss of biodiversity; and strategies and measures to reduce such risks.

The high-level meeting consisted of an opening and closing plenary, and thematic panels, which discussed four core strategic and political issues: framing the post-2010 biodiversity strategy; ensuring the means for implementing the strategy; deriving benefits from biodiversity for development and poverty alleviation; and ensuring that measures to meet the objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] were mutually supportive and reinforcing.

Opening the meeting [A/65/PV.7], the Assembly President said that biodiversity was declining throughout the world and human activities were largely responsible. The deterioration of many vital ecosystem services jeopardized the progress accomplished towards the MDGs. While all were threatened by a decline in biodiversity, the consequences were more onerous for the poorest countries. Many areas rich in biodiversity were located in developing countries, whose people were particularly dependent on agriculture, fishing and forestry for their subsistence. The international community was mobilizing to deal with the threat. The Assembly President hoped that the high-level meeting would contribute to the negotiations to be undertaken at the meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity to ensure that the new strategic plan to be adopted at that meeting would be exhaustive, ambitious and feasible.

The Secretary-General, addressing the meeting, said that 2010 also was the deadline by which the international community had pledged to substantially reduce the rate of biodiversity loss. The 2010 biodiversity target, however, would not be met. The third edition of Global Biodiversity Outlook, issued by the Convention on Biological Diversity, showed that the global decline in biodiversity was, in fact, accelerating. During the Year, the United Nations needed to demonstrate the concrete benefits of investing in biodiversity and show that protecting ecosystems could help achieve the MDGs and build resilience to climate change.

The Assembly President, in his summary of the high-level meeting [A/65/PV.10], said that Member States and other participants emphasized the importance of biodiversity and healthy ecosystems for achieving the MDGs, especially in poverty eradication. They drew attention to the adverse impact that continued biodiversity loss could have on the poor and other populations that depended on such natural resources as fisheries and agriculture. They noted the importance of achieving the objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity and attached great significance to securing successful outcomes at the tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties.

While noting the progress made towards the negotiation of the draft protocol on access to and benefit sharing of genetic resources, Member States and other participants called for stronger political impetus and flexibility in the negotiations to ensure the adoption of an effective protocol at the Nagoya meeting. The meeting was also an important opportunity to develop a post-2010 strategic plan with measurable and time-bound biodiversity targets for 2020. For the plan to be translated into a concrete outcome, it would need to be integrated into national biodiversity targets and strategies. A decade for biodiversity, as well as the proposed South-South multi-year plan of action, would support the implementation of the new strategic plan. They stressed the importance of establishing an intergovernmental science-policy platform for biodiversity and ecosystem services, and welcomed the progress achieved at the intergovernmental and multi-stakeholder meeting held in June (see p. 1029).

Terrestrial ecosystems

Deforestation and forest degradation

United Nations Forum on Forests

The United Nations Forum on Forest (UNFF) did not meet in 2010. In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2009/241 [YUN 2009, p. 1027], the ninth UNFF session would be held in 2011.

In June 2010 [E/CN.18/2010/2], the UNFF secretariat issued a note on strategies to mobilize resources from all sources to support the implementation of sustainable forest management, the achievement of the global objectives on forests, and the implementation of the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests [YUN 2007, p. 1069], including strengthening and improving access to funds and establishing a global forest fund. The note was submitted to facilitate the work of the Open-ended Intergovernmental Ad Hoc Expert Group on Forest Financing, established in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1027], during its first meeting (Nairobi, 13–17 September) [E/CN.18/2011/13]. The note reviewed the history of forest financing discussions and highlighted major forest-related financing activities and developments, including national and regional activities, the United Nations Collaborative Programme on Reducing Emissions from Deforestation and Forest Degradation in Developing Countries (REDD), and REDD-plus, which took into account the role of conservation, the sustainable management of forests and enhancement of forest carbon stocks. The note also discussed UNFF progress in forest financing; and moving from a sector-centred to a people-centred approach to forest financing.

Communications. A 26 October letter [E/CN.18/2011/15] from Mexico and Switzerland transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the Oaxaca Workshop (Oaxaca, Mexico, 31 August–3 September) entitled “Forests Governance, Decentralization and REDD-plus in Latin America and the Caribbean”. By a 3 November letter [E/CN.18/2011/16], Indonesia, Mexico, South Africa and Switzerland transmitted the report on the “Forest governance and decentralization workshop series”. On 9 December [E/CN.18/2011/17], Ghana transmitted the summary report on the major groups-led initiative (Accra, Ghana, 26–30 July) in support of UNFF on the theme “Applying sustainable forest management to poverty reduction: strengthening the multi-stakeholder approach within the United Nations Forum on Forests”.

International Year of Forests (2011)

The Secretary-General, in a November report [E/CN.18/2011/7], provided information on activities organized by Governments, the Collaborative Partnership on Forests, and international, regional and subregional organizations, as well as major groups, to celebrate the International Year of Forests, 2011, which was declared by the General Assembly in resolution 61/193 [YUN 2006, p. 1240]. The report recommended, among other measures, that UNFF renew its invitation to Member States to establish coordinating committees or designate focal points to promote and coordinate national and local initiatives related to the Year, and encourage Governments, regional and international organizations and major groups to support related activities.

Marine ecosystems

Oceans and seas

The UNEP Governing Council, in a February decision [dec. SS.XI/7], welcomed the adoption of the Manado Ocean Declaration by the World Ocean Conference (Manado, Indonesia, 11–15 May 2009), which addressed threats to the oceans, the adverse effects of climate change on the oceans and the role of oceans in climate change. The Council requested the Executive Director to strengthen UNEP work on the protection and sustainable management of marine and coastal ecosystems and mainstream its marine and coastal strategy into the implementation of the 2010–2013 programme of work and medium-term strategy. He should extend

UNEP cooperation with other UN agencies to support implementation of the Manado Ocean Declaration in tackling the state of the world's oceans, and support and enhance developing countries' capacity to manage marine and coastal ecosystems sustainably in the context of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building [YUN 2004, p. 1040]. The Council urged Governments to achieve the long-term conservation, management and sustainable use of marine resources and coastal habitats through precautionary and ecosystem approaches; implement long-term strategies in meeting internationally agreed sustainable development goals related to the marine environment; and strengthen global partnerships for development. They should implement national strategies for the sustainable management of marine and coastal ecosystems, in particular for mangroves, coastal wetlands, seagrasses, estuaries and coral reefs, which served as protective and productive buffer zones that had significant potential to combat the adverse effects of climate change. The Council called on Governments to reduce the land-based and sea-based pollution of ocean and coastal areas, and promote the sustainable management of fisheries to enhance the health and resilience of marine and coastal ecosystems. It also called on Governments, international organizations and oceanographic institutions and other research and development agencies to promote research, systematic observation, knowledge management, capacity-building, information and data exchange related to vulnerability and risk assessment of climate change impacts on marine ecosystems, communities, fisheries and other marine-related industries; emergency preparedness, monitoring and forecasting climate change and ocean variability; and public awareness of early-warning system capacity. Governments and international and regional financial institutions were invited to support developing countries in implementing marine and coastal initiatives at the national, regional and global levels. The Executive Director was asked to report to the Governing Council's twenty-sixth (2011) session on UNEP activities to implement the decision.

In December [UNEP/GC.26/10], the Executive Director submitted a report on UNEP activities undertaken in 2010 to implement the Governing Council's decision. The UNEP marine and coastal strategy was embedded in the 2010–2011 and 2012–2013 programmes of work, and was built around the priority themes of land-ocean connections, ecosystems for human well-being reconciling use and conservation, and vulnerable people and places. The strategy encompassed many of the issues member States faced in managing marine and coastal environments, such as pollution, habitat destruction and climate change. UNEP activities supported member States in ensuring that water was managed appropriately, and supported countries in valuing ecosystem services and ensuring that they were managed to support sustainable development. It assisted countries in accepting trade-offs to ensure that ecosystem services contributed to development and were not degraded; and assisted communities vulnerable to change, such as small island developing States, and those with vulnerable habitats, such as coral reefs and seamounts. The strategy facilitated collaborative work through the thematic subprogrammes of the UNEP 2010–2013 medium-term strategy and its themes also overlapped with the issues and challenges set out in the Manado Ocean Declaration (see p. 1031). UNEP also supported countries, especially small island developing States, by developing ecosystem management tools and building national capacities for assessment and the integrated management of marine and coastal ecosystem services, including coupled integrated assessment and marine spatial planning. Support was provided to national planners and decision-makers in implementing an ecosystem-based management approach through a manual of marine and coastal ecosystem-based management principles and good-practice case studies. UNEP developed a flagship programme to support countries seeking to adapt to climate change through an ecosystem-based approach, including developing countries undertaking vulnerability assessments and capacity-building to maintain the resilience of those ecosystems most vulnerable to climate change and to maximize ecosystem services for adaptation. During the first phase of the programme, technical, policy and financial interventions, including adaptation projects in low-lying coastal areas, were implemented.

Coral reefs

The International Coral Reef Initiative (ICRI), an informal partnership between States and organizations to preserve coral reefs and related ecosystems around the world, held its twenty-fourth General Meeting (Monaco, 12–15 January). The meeting adopted recommendations on international trade in coral reef species and related products, and for the Caribbean region; and resolutions on coral reef-associated fisheries, the 1995 "Call to Action" for the protection of coral reefs, and the International Coral Reef Action Network (ICRAN).

The twenty-fifth ICRI general meeting (Apia, Samoa, 8–12 November) discussed progress on the implementation of the ICRI plan of action, ICRAN, the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network and issues related to the Pacific region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 65/150 without vote [agenda item 20].

Protection of coral reefs for sustainable livelihoods and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change,

Reaffirming the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which provides the overall legal framework for ocean activities, and emphasizing its fundamental character, conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole through an integrated, interdisciplinary and intersectoral approach,

Recalling the Convention on Biological Diversity as an important instrument in the conservation and sustainable use of marine biodiversity,

Recalling also biodiversity-related conventions and organizations, including the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat, the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals, the Convention for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the Eastern African Region, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Recognizing the role of national legislation in the context of the protection of coral reefs and related ecosystems within national jurisdictions,

Recalling its annual resolutions on oceans and the law of the sea and on sustainable fisheries, including resolution 61/105 of 8 December 2006, its resolution 63/214 of 19 December 2008, entitled "Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations", its resolution 64/73 of 7 December 2009 on the protection of global climate for present and future generations of humankind, its resolution 64/203 of 21 December 2009 on the Convention on Biological Diversity and its resolution 64/236 of 24 December 2009, in which it decided to organize, in 2012, the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the Manado Ocean Declaration, adopted by the World Ocean Conference on 14 May 2009, and the Jakarta Mandate on Marine and Coastal Biological Diversity of 1995,

Noting the work of the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity on marine and coastal biodiversity, in particular on coral reefs and related ecosystems, and the outcome of the tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, held in Nagoya, Japan, from 18 to 29 October 2010, including in relation to the updating and revision of the strategic plan for the post-2010 period,

Noting also the request made by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, at its tenth meeting, to the Executive Secretary of the Convention to prepare, subject to the availability of financial resources, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the specific workplan on coral bleaching adopted by the Conference of the Parties in its decision VII/5,

Recognizing that millions of the world's inhabitants depend on the health of coral reefs and related ecosystems for sustainable livelihoods and development, as they are a primary source of food and income, add to the aesthetic and cultural dimensions of communities and also provide for protection from storms, tsunamis and coastal erosion,

Expressing grave concern about the adverse impact of climate change and ocean acidification on the health and survival of coral reefs and related ecosystems around the world, including through sea-level rise, the increase in the severity and incidence of coral bleaching, rising sea surface temperature and higher storm intensity, combined with the synergistic negative effects of waste run-off, overfishing, destructive fishing practices, alien invasive species and coral mining,

Maintaining that the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change is the primary international, intergovernmental forum for negotiating the global response to climate change, and calling upon States to take urgent global action to address climate change in accordance with the principles identified in the Convention, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities,

Acknowledging that, in many countries, indigenous and local communities have a distinctive relationship with marine and coastal environments, including coral reefs and related ecosystems, and in some cases ownership thereof, in accordance with national legislation, and that such peoples have an important role to play in the protection, management and preservation of those reefs and related ecosystems,

Acknowledging also the leadership role in tropical marine ecosystem management provided by the International Coral Reef Initiative, a partnership of Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations, and its twenty-fifth general meeting, held in Samoa from 8 to 12 November 2010 under the co-chairmanship of Samoa and France,

Welcoming regional initiatives, including the Coral Triangle Initiative on Coral Reefs, Fisheries and Food Security, the Micronesia Challenge, the Caribbean Challenge, the Eastern Tropical Pacific Seascape project, the West Indian Ocean Partnership, the West African Conservation Challenge and the Regional Initiative for the Conservation and Wise Use of Mangroves and Corals for the Americas Region,

Welcoming also the efforts of the agencies, programmes and funds of the United Nations system in the field of the protection of marine biodiversity and, in particular, coral reefs and related ecosystems,

1. Urges States, within their national jurisdictions, and the competent international organizations, within their mandates, given the imperative for action, to take all practical steps at all levels to protect coral reefs and related ecosystems for sustainable livelihoods and development, including immediate and concerted global, regional and local action to respond to the challenges and to address the adverse impact of climate change, including through mitigation and adaptation, as well as of ocean acidification, on coral reefs and related ecosystems;

2. Also urges States to formulate, adopt and implement integrated and comprehensive approaches for the management of coral reefs and related ecosystems under their jurisdiction, encourages regional cooperation in accordance with international law regarding the protection and enhancement of the resilience of coral reefs, and in that respect calls upon development partners to support such efforts in developing countries, including through the provision of financial resources, capacity-building, environmentally sound technologies and know-how on mutually agreed terms, as well as the exchange of relevant scientific, technical, socio-economic and legal information, to enable developing countries to take all action necessary for the protection of their coral reefs and related ecosystems, as appropriate;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the importance of protecting coral reefs and related ecosystems for sustainable livelihoods and development, including an analysis of the economic, social and development benefits of protecting coral reefs, in the context of the themes and objectives of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development in 2012, for consideration by the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session and for the information of other forums;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, taking into consideration existing reports in preparing that report, to identify potential actions consistent with international law needed to protect coral reefs and related ecosystems, including proposals for coordinated and coherent action across the United Nations system, taking into account the views of Member States, the agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme, and relevant international organizations, including the International Coral Reef Initiative and the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, as well as the outcomes and decisions of relevant multilateral environmental agreements.

Assessment of assessments

In response to General Assembly resolution 60/30 [YUN 2005, p. 1436], UNEP submitted to the twelfth meeting of the Global Meeting of the Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans (see p. 1035) a summary for decision makers of the final report "An Assessment of Assessments: Findings of the Group of Experts" [UNEP(DEPI)/RS.12/4]. The Group of Experts recommended a framework for the Regular Process for Global Reporting and Assessment of the State of the Marine Environment, including Socio-economic Aspects, consisting of an overall objective, a description of the scope of the Regular Process, a set of principles to guide its establishment and operation, and best practices to be followed in designing the Regular Process and applying its principles. The first five-year cycle of the Process would take place from 2010 to 2014. The Group of Experts also proposed options for institutional arrangements of the Regular Process, including its relationship to the United Nations, which could consist of a UN open-ended informal consultative process on oceans and law of the sea, or ad hoc meetings. Other options dealt with the establishment of a management and review body; a panel of experts; an additional pool of experts; a secretariat; and focal points within Governments, international organizations, the private sector and civil society organizations to facilitate interaction and collaboration. The resources required for the first five-year cycle were estimated at between $20 and $28 million. Additional costs for capacity-building would have to be calculated in the light of evaluation needs.

As requested in section XII of Assembly resolution 64/71 [YUN 2009, p. 1033], the Ad Hoc Working Group of the Whole on the regular process for global reporting and assessment of the state of the marine environment, including socio-economic aspects, met at UN Headquarters from 30 August to 3 September [A/65/358]. The Working Group had before it the Secretary-General's report setting out the views of States on the fundamental building blocks of the Regular Process [A/65/69/Add.1] and the results of the "assessment of assessments" [YUN 2009, p. 1032]. The Working Group recommended that the Regular Process should be an intergovernmental process that would contribute to achieving the goal of sustainable development of the oceans, seas and their resources, as well as the MDGs. It would provide a credible, peer-reviewed assessment, based on the best science and the priorities established by the Ad Hoc Working Group. The Regular Process should aim to strengthen the science-policy interface for the sustainable use, management and conservation of the oceans and seas, as well as their resources and biodiversity. It would undertake post-assessment evaluations of outcomes and products, and the Group of Experts would undertake periodic self-evaluations of its work. The Regular Process would be overseen by a General Assembly Ad Hoc Working Group of the Whole, which would establish a management and review mechanism comprised of States members. For the first phase of the first assessment cycle (2010–2012), the Group of Experts appointed pursuant to resolution 64/71 would be requested to continue, but from the second phase of that cycle, they should be appointed by Member States, according to equitable geographic distribution. The Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs would provide secretariat support to the Regular Process.

The Assembly, in section XII of resolution 65/37 A (see p. 1373), endorsed the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group of the Whole. It requested the Group of Experts to develop options for achieving the 2014 deadline for the completion of the first cycle of the Regular Process for consideration by the Ad Hoc Working Group of the Whole at its 2011 meeting. The Assembly welcomed the establishment by the Secretary-General of the voluntary trust fund for supporting the operations of the Regular Process for the first cycle and the scholarship fund to support training programmes for developing countries.

Regional Seas Programme

The twelfth Global Meeting of the Regional Seas Conventions and Action Plans (Bergen, Norway, 20–22 September) [UNEP(DEPI)/RS.12/1] discussed marine biodiversity: coastal waters and high seas; marine and coastal invasive species and ballast water management; implementation of the Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities and the Regional Seas Programmes; the transboundary waters assessment programme; ecosystem-based management; and economic valuation of marine and coastal ecosystem services.

Sustainable development of Caribbean Sea

In response to General Assembly resolution 63/214 [YUN, 2008, p. 1168], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/65/301] on the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea. The report described national and regional activities to protect the Caribbean Sea from pollution and disasters, and to manage living and non-living coastal and marine resources. The Caribbean Sea Commission, which provided a structure for political oversight for the provision of technical resources and research support for users of the Caribbean Sea and promoted regional efforts to achieve its preservation and sustainable use, held five meetings between 30 June 2008 and 14 June 2010. It established subcommissions dealing with scientific and technical; legal; and governance, outreach and public information matters. The report also discussed the legal and financial implications of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development. The Secretary-General concluded that the concept of the designation of the Sea as such an area under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (see p. 1356) was still under development.

The Secretary General's report also included the report of the Association of Caribbean States on progress made in the implementation of resolution 63/214. The report discussed the institutionalization of and international support for the Caribbean Sea Commission; progress with regard to international agreements; programmes to halt the loss of marine biodiversity; disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation, management, relief and recovery; development of human resource capacity in the Caribbean region; and the legal and financial implications of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area within the context of sustainable development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436/Add.2], adopted resolution 65/155 without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles and commitments enshrined in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, the principles embodied in the Declaration of Barbados, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), as well as other relevant declarations and international instruments,

Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Taking into account all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 54/225 of 22 December 1999, 55/203 of 20 December 2000, 57/261 of 20 December 2002, 59/230 of 22 December 2004, 61/197 of 20 December 2006 and 63/214 of 19 December 2008,

Taking into account also the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, signed at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, on 24 March 1983, and the protocols thereto, which contain the definition of the wider Caribbean region of which the Caribbean Sea is part,

Reaffirming the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which provides the overall legal framework for ocean activities, and emphasizing its fundamental character, conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole through an integrated, interdisciplinary and intersectoral approach,

Recalling the Convention on Biological Diversity as an important instrument in the conservation and sustainable use of marine biodiversity,

Recalling also biodiversity-related conventions, including the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora and the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat,

Emphasizing the importance of national, regional and global action and cooperation in the marine sector as recognized by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Recalling the relevant work done by the International Maritime Organization,

Considering that the Caribbean Sea area includes a large number of States, countries and territories, most of which are developing countries and small island developing States that are ecologically fragile and socially and economically vulnerable and are also affected, inter alia, by their limited capacity, narrow resource base, need for financial resources, high levels of poverty and the resulting social problems, and the challenges and opportunities of globalization and trade liberalization,

Recognizing that the Caribbean Sea has unique biodiversity and highly fragile ecosystems,

Recognizing also that the Caribbean has been shown to be the most tourism-dependent region in the world relative to its size,

Noting that the Caribbean Sea, when compared to all other large marine ecosystems, is surrounded by the largest number of countries in the world,

Emphasizing that the Caribbean countries have a high degree of vulnerability occasioned by climate change, climate variability and associated phenomena, such as the rise in sea level, the El Niño phenomenon and the increase in the frequency and intensity of natural disasters caused by hurricanes, floods and droughts, and that they are also subject to natural disasters, such as those caused by volcanoes, tsunamis and earthquakes,

Bearing in mind the heavy reliance of most of the Caribbean economies on their coastal areas, as well as on the marine environment in general, to achieve their sustainable development needs and goals,

Acknowledging that the intensive use of the Caribbean Sea for maritime transport, as well as the considerable number and interlocking character of the maritime areas under national jurisdiction where Caribbean countries exercise their rights and duties under international law, present a challenge for the effective management of resources,

Noting the problem of marine pollution caused, inter alia, by land-based sources and the continuing threat of pollution from ship-generated waste and sewage, as well as from the accidental release of hazardous and noxious substances in the Caribbean Sea area,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions of the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on safety of transport of radioactive materials,

Mindful of the diversity and dynamic interaction and competition among socio-economic activities for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources,

Mindful also of the efforts of the Caribbean countries to address in a more holistic manner the sectoral issues relating to the management of the wider Caribbean Sea region and, in so doing, to promote integrated management of the wider Caribbean Sea region in the context of sustainable development, through a regional cooperative effort among Caribbean countries,

Welcoming the continued efforts of the States members of the Association of Caribbean States to develop and implement regional initiatives to promote the sustainable conservation and management of coastal and marine resources, and recognizing in this regard the firm commitment by Heads of State and Government of the Association to take the steps necessary to ensure the recognition of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, without prejudice to relevant international law,

Recalling the creation by the Association of Caribbean States of the Caribbean Sea Commission, and welcoming its ongoing work,

Cognizant of the importance of the Caribbean Sea to present and future generations and to the heritage and the continuing economic well-being and sustenance of people living in the area and of the urgent need for the countries of the region to take appropriate steps for its preservation and protection, with the support of the international community,

1. Recognizes that the Caribbean Sea is an area of unique biodiversity and a highly fragile ecosystem that requires relevant regional and international development partners to work together to develop and implement regional initiatives to promote the sustainable conservation and management of coastal and marine resources, including the consideration of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, including its designation as such without prejudice to relevant international law;

2. Notes the efforts of the Caribbean States and the work undertaken by the Caribbean Sea Commission of the Association of Caribbean States, including the development of their concept of the designation of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, and invites the international community to support such efforts;

3. Welcomes the plan of action adopted by the Caribbean Sea Commission, including its scientific and technical components and its governance and outreach components, and invites the international community and the United Nations system to support, as appropriate, Caribbean countries and their regional organizations in their efforts to implement the plan of action;

4. Also welcomes the resources provided by some donors to support the work of the Caribbean Sea Commission, and invites the international community to continue and to enhance its support, as appropriate, to the Commission, including through the provision of financial resources, capacity-building and technical support, the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms and the sharing of experience in the areas of work of the Commission;

5. Recognizes the efforts of Caribbean countries to create conditions leading to sustainable development aimed at combating poverty and inequality, and in this regard notes with interest the initiatives of the Association of Caribbean States in the focal areas of sustainable tourism, trade, transport and natural disasters;

6. Calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to assist, as appropriate, Caribbean countries and their regional organizations in their efforts to ensure the protection of the Caribbean Sea from degradation as a result of pollution from ships, in particular through the illegal release of oil and other harmful substances, and pollution from the illegal dumping or accidental release of hazardous waste, including radioactive materials, nuclear waste and dangerous chemicals, in violation of relevant international rules and standards, as well as pollution from land-based activities;

7. Invites the Association of Caribbean States to submit to the Secretary-General a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, for consideration by the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session;

8. Calls upon all States to become contracting parties to relevant international agreements to enhance maritime safety and to promote the protection of the marine environment of the Caribbean Sea from pollution, damage and degradation from ships and ship-generated waste;

9. Supports the efforts of Caribbean countries to implement sustainable fisheries management programmes and to meet the principles of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

10. Calls upon States, taking into consideration the Convention on Biological Diversity, to develop national, regional and international programmes to halt the loss of marine biodiversity in the Caribbean Sea, in particular fragile ecosystems such as coral reefs and mangroves;

11. Invites Member States and intergovernmental organizations within the United Nations system to continue their efforts to assist Caribbean countries in becoming parties to the relevant conventions and protocols concerning the management, protection and sustainable utilization of Caribbean Sea resources and in implementing those conventions and protocols effectively;

12. Calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and the multilateral financial institutions, and invites the Global Environment Facility, within its mandate, to support actively the national and regional activities of the Caribbean States towards the promotion of the sustainable management of coastal and marine resources;

13. Expresses deep concern about the severe destruction and devastation caused to several countries by heightened hurricane activity in the wider Caribbean region in recent years;

14. Urges the United Nations system and the international community to continue to provide aid and assistance to the countries of the Caribbean region in the implementation of their long-term programmes of disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation, management, relief and recovery, on the basis of their development priorities, through the integration of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction into a comprehensive approach to sustainable development;

15. Acknowledges the pivotal role of the Association of Caribbean States in regional dialogue and in the consolidation of a wider Caribbean cooperation zone in the field of disaster risk reduction, as well as the importance of the international community in deepening existing cooperation and consolidating new initiatives with that regional mechanism in the context of the outcomes of the High-level Conference on Disaster Reduction of the Association of Caribbean States, held in Saint-Marc, Haiti, from 14 to 16 November 2007, and the plan of action approved by the Ministerial Council of the Association upon the recommendation of the Conference;

16. Invites Member States, international and regional organizations and other relevant stakeholders to consider training programmes for the development of a human resources capacity at different levels and to develop research aimed at enhancing the food security of Caribbean countries, as well as the sustainable management of renewable marine and coastal resources;

17. Calls upon Member States to improve, as a matter of priority, their emergency response capabilities and the containment of environmental damage, particularly in the Caribbean Sea, in the event of natural disasters or an accident or incident relating to maritime navigation;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session, under the sub-item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States" of the item entitled "Sustainable development", on the implementation of the present resolution, including a section on the possible legal and financial implications of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, including its designation as such without prejudice to relevant international law, taking into account the views expressed by Member States and relevant regional organizations.

Waste from chemical munitions dumped at sea

The Baltic Marine Environment Protection Commission, or Helsinki Commission [YUN 2003, p. 1480], at its ministerial meeting (Moscow, 18–20 May), agreed to establish an ad hoc expert group to update and review existing information on dumped chemical munitions in the Baltic Sea.

On 20 December [A/65/PV.69], the General Assembly considered a draft resolution on cooperative measures to assess and increase awareness of the environmental effects of waste originating from chemical munitions dumped at sea.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/65/436 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 65/149 without vote [agenda item 20].

Cooperative measures to assess and increase awareness of environmental effects related to waste originating from chemical munitions dumped at sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, held in Stockholm in June 1972,

Noting relevant provisions of Agenda 21, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in June 1992 and reaffirmed in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development ("Johannesburg Plan of Implementation"), adopted in Johannesburg, South Africa, in September 2002,

Recalling relevant international and regional instruments such as the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, the Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter, the Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North-East Atlantic, the Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Baltic Sea Area, the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region and the Agreement on the Protection of the Marine Environment and the Coastal Area of the South-East Pacific,

Taking note of the final report of the ad hoc Working Group on Dumped Chemical Munitions to the Helsinki Commission at its sixteenth meeting, held in Helsinki from 14 to 17 March 1995, and noting that the Helsinki Commission, at its ministerial meeting held in Moscow from 18 to 20 May 2010, agreed to establish a Helsinki Commission expert group to update and review the existing information on dumped chemical munitions in the Baltic Sea,

Noting that Member States, international and regional organizations and civil society have undertaken activities to discuss the issues relating to waste originating from chemical munitions dumped at sea and to promote international cooperation and exchange of experience and practical knowledge,

Noting also the concerns about the potential long-term environmental effects related to waste originating from chemical munitions dumped at sea, including their potential impact on human health,

1. Notes the importance of raising awareness of the environmental effects related to waste originating from chemical munitions dumped at sea;

2. Invites Member States and international and regional organizations to keep under observation the issue of the environmental effects related to waste originating from chemical munitions dumped at sea and to cooperate and voluntarily share relevant information on this issue;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and relevant regional and international organizations on issues relating to the environmental effects related to waste originating from chemical munitions dumped at sea, as well as on possible modalities for international cooperation to assess and increase awareness of this issue, and to communicate such views to the General Assembly at its sixty-eighth session for further consideration.
