Asia and the Pacific

In 2008, the United Nations continued to face significant political and security challenges in Asia and the Pacific, as it worked to restore peace and stability and to promote economic and social development in the region.

In Afghanistan, 2008 was the most violent year since 2001, with insurgents continuing their attempts at destabilization though sophisticated asymmetric attacks. Nevertheless, the capacity of the Afghan national army increased, relations with Pakistan improved, areas under opium cultivation were reduced by 19 per cent and nearly 2 million Afghans were peacefully registered for elections.

The United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) coordinated international humanitarian and development assistance, fostered political dialogue and helped the Government build institutions. It reached out to the Afghan public, especially those who felt alienated from their Government but were not opposed to the Constitution or targeted by UN sanctions. In March, the Security Council extended UNAMA's mandate by another year.

The International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), a multinational force established by the Council in 2001, continued to assist the Government in maintaining security. In September, the Council extended ISAF's authorization until October 2009. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization maintained its role as lead command for ISAF.

In June, the Security Council adopted resolution 1817(2008) on the fight against illicit drugs in Afghanistan. In November, the General Assembly called upon the Government to continue addressing the threat posed by extremist groups and criminal violence, and urged donors to increase the proportion of assistance channelled directly to Afghanistan's core budget.

In Iraq, 2008 saw a decrease in security incidents and relative stability, even as United States troops deployed for the military surge were withdrawn. The multinational force progressively transferred security responsibilities to the Iraqi army. On 27 November, the Iraqi Council of Representatives approved a bilateral agreement placing United States forces under Iraq's authority and jurisdiction, with a timeline for their withdrawal from Iraq by December 2011. On 22 December, by resolution 1859(2008), the Council took note of the agreed expiration of the mandate of the multinational force on 31 December.

Despite a decrease in violent, high-visibility attacks by militias, insurgents and criminal gangs, indiscriminate attacks by roadside, car or suicide bombs were almost daily occurrences—often with women and occasionally children as suicide bombers. Iraq's efforts to meet internationally agreed development targets, as set forth in the International Compact for Iraq, resulted in cancellation of its debt in December by the Paris Club.

The United Nations Assistance Mission in Iraq (UNAMI) continued to advise the Government on developing civil and social services, foster human rights protection and legal reforms, and contribute to the coordination of development and reconstruction. In August, the Council extended UNAMI's mandate for another year.

The United Nations persisted in following up on issues relating to Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait—including the repatriation of the remains of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals, the return of Kuwaiti property and compensation for losses and damage.

The United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste (UNMIT) further assisted the country in reforming the security sector, strengthening the rule of law, promoting economic and social development and fostering democratic governance. On 11 February, an armed group led by the former military police commander of the armed forces, Alfredo Reinado, carried out separate attacks against President José Ramos Horta and Prime Minister Kay Rala Xanana Gusmão. The attacks resulted in the nearly fatal injury of the president and in the death of Mr. Reinado. Nonetheless, for the most part, the leaders and people of Timor-Leste made steady progress in all areas. The unresolved grievances of the 600 "petitioners" dismissed from the armed forces in 2006 were settled in August with the petitioners' acceptance of financial compensation to return to civilian life. The pace of closures of the internally displaced persons camps accelerated as a result of the Government-led National Recovery Strategy, supported by UNMIT; by December, most of the internally displaced had returned to their communities or had been resettled. UNMIT supported the rebuilding of the national police through training and institutional development. The certification process for the majority of police officers was completed in 2008, and preparations were made for a gradual resumption of responsibilities by the Timorese police. In the meantime, UNMIT continued to maintain a robust police presence across the country. The professionalism and internal stability of the national security and defence forces remained a concern, among widespread perceptions that they enjoyed impunity. That perception was further entrenched due to the 94 presidential pardons granted to convicted criminals in May, which, while legal, were considered by many as undermining efforts to promote accountability and to combat impunity.

In March, the Security Council imposed additional sanctions against Iran over its nuclear programme, including the inspection of cargo suspected of carrying prohibited goods, the tighter monitoring of financial institutions and the extension of travel bans and asset freezes. In September, the Council requested Iran to stop uranium enrichment and reprocessing activities and to cooperate with inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency.

A major accomplishment of UN peace operations in 2008 was the transition in Nepal, where a political mission, the United Nations Mission in Nepal, run by the Department of Political Affairs, helped the country hold nationwide Constituent Assembly elections, which effectively ended the civil war. After two postponements, the Nepalese people turned out in large numbers on 10 April to elect the Assembly, the most inclusive legislative body in the country's history. Following the election, the Assembly voted to abolish the 239-year-old monarchy. Nepal still faced many challenges, however, including the integration and rehabilitation of some 19,000 former combatants.

The Secretary-General's Special Adviser for Myanmar visited the country in March to encourage the authorities to promote democratization and national reconciliation. He met with senior Government ministers as well as with detained opposition leader Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and members of her party, the National League for Democracy. On 2 May, Cyclone Nargis struck Myanmar, leaving more than 130,000 people dead or missing. The United Nations appealed for $187 million to help provide humanitarian relief, and called on the authorities to grant more access for delivering humanitarian aid to the victims. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon visited Myanmar in May and met Senior General Than Shwe, who agreed to allow international aid workers into the country, regardless of their nationality. By June, some 1.3 million people had received assistance. In July, the United Nations launched an appeal for $482 million. The Special Adviser visited the country in August, holding talks with the Planning and Health ministers, the Foreign Affairs Minister and senior Government members. In September, the Secretary-General welcomed the release of political prisoners. In November, he called for all political prisoners to be released and for all citizens to be allowed to participate freely in their country's political future.

During the year, the Secretary-General encouraged progress in the six-party talks aimed at the verifiable denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. In July and October, the Secretary-General urged Cambodia and Thailand to resolve diplomatically their border dispute.

Political and security situation

In 2008, the international community continued to assist the Government of Afghanistan in laying the foundation for peace and stability and the restoration of economic and social development, through support provided by the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA), under the direction of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of Mission, and the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

The Secretary-General submitted two progress reports to the General Assembly and the Security Council, in March [A/62/722-S/2008/159] and September [A/63/372-S/2008/617], on the situation in Afghanistan and on UNAMA activities, as well as a later report covering the end of the year [A/63/751-S/2009/135], and a special report to the Council [S/2008/434] on the June 2008 Paris Conference in Support of Afghanistan. The Security Council carried out a mission to Afghanistan in November.

ISAF activities were reported to the Council by the NATO Secretary-General through the UN Secretary-General [S/2008/319, S/2008/597, S/2008/770, S/2009/283]. The Council, by resolution 1806(2008) (see p. 355), extended the UNAMA mandate until 23 March 2009; and by resolution 1833(2008) (see p. 374), it extended the ISAF authorization until 13 October 2009. In March, the Secretary-General appointed Kai Eide (Norway) as his Special Representative for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA.

Attacks in Kabul, Kandahar. In a press statement of 15 January [SC/9226], Security Council members condemned the suicide attack that occurred at the Hotel Serena in Kabul on 14 January, causing several casualties among security guards, hotel guests and bystanders. Council members noted that the Taliban claimed responsibility for the attack and underlined the need to bring perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors to justice. They reiterated their concern at the increasing threat to the population, national security forces, international military and international assistance efforts posed by the Taliban, Al-Qaida, illegal armed groups, criminals and those involved in the narcotics trade. No terrorist act could reverse the path towards peace, democracy and reconstruction, which was supported by the people and the Government of Afghanistan and the international community.

In a press statement of 17 February [SC/9251], Security Council members condemned the suicide attack that caused numerous deaths in the province of Kandahar on the same day. The attack was one of the deadliest in Afghanistan in recent years and targeted civilians—including children—and police officers.

New Special Representative. On 6 March [S/2008/165], the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council of his intention to appoint Kai Eide (Norway) as his Special Representative for Afghanistan and Head of UNAMA. The Council took note of that intention on 7 March [S/2008/166]. Mr. Eide replaced Tom Koenigs (Germany), who served from February 2006 until December 2007.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In a report issued on 6 March [A/62/722-S/2008/159], the Secretary-General said that the Taliban, related armed groups and the drug economy were fundamental threats to Afghanistan's fragile institutions. The country remained divided between the generally more stable west and north, whose problems related to factionalism and criminality, and the south and east, with an increasingly coordinated insurgency. Even within the south, conflict was concentrated in a fairly small area. A worrying trend was the emergence of insurgent activity in the far north-west, including provinces bordering Kabul. Of the country's 376 districts, 36—including most of those in the east, south-east and south—remained largely inaccessible to Afghan officials and to aid workers.

Poor governance and limited development efforts, particularly at provincial and district levels, sustained anti-Government elements by causing political alienation, but efforts to reconnect provincial administrations to central Government structures had begun to bear fruit. Relations between the legislature and the executive branch had improved, and there was a focus on holding the upcoming elections, scheduled for 2009 and 2010.

ISAF had conducted successful operations in unstable areas, but its effectiveness was hampered by insufficient troop strength and national caveats limiting the functions of some troops. The United Nations Mine Action Centre cleared 168 square kilometres of land, destroying 26,401 anti-personnel landmines, 649 anti-tank landmines and 1,659,302 items of unexploded ordnance.

Although counter-narcotics efforts had gained momentum and 12 provinces were expected to remain free of opium cultivation in 2008, Afghanistan was emerging as one of the world's largest suppliers of cannabis.

Progress on human rights remained limited. Freedom of expression faced tactics of intimidation by anti-Government elements and governmental restrictions on journalists and media outlets. Children continued to be the victims of insurgency-related violence, and violence and harmful practices against women and girls remained a concern. Public access to courts and legal aid remained elusive for most Afghans, but there had been slow improvements in the legal infrastructure, and a private corps of lawyers continued to grow.

Afghanistan's per capita gross domestic product (GDP) had nearly doubled to $289, but 34 to 42 per cent of the population lived below the poverty line and much of the economy's impressive growth was indirectly related to the illegal drug industry and the significant amounts of foreign aid. The revenue-to-GDP ratio remained one of the world's lowest, with just enough to meet some two thirds of the Government's operating budget.

Security Council consideration (March). Briefing the Council on 12 March [meeting 5851], the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, said that the Afghan insurgency was more robust and ruthless than had been imagined. Corruption had made governmental institutions even more fragile, and a massive illegal drug economy was thriving in the context of weak State authority. UNAMA was reaching out to the public, especially those who felt alienated from their Government but were not opposed to the Constitution and were not targets of UN sanctions. To be credible, such activities had to be backed up by improved governance, especially at the local level.

Afghanistan said that the Afghan National Army had reached 58,000 troops and assumed a greater role in fighting the terrorists. Afghanistan was continuing its reconstruction, and would soon finalize the Afghan National Development Strategy.

Pakistan said that the key lay in Afghanistan assuming greater ownership of its security, governance and development. Making security a prerequisite for development and assistance could be counter-productive; both should be pursued simultaneously. Pakistan was committed to Afghanistan's sustainable peace and development; their destinies were interlinked.

Council members noted that the Taliban had claimed responsibility for the attack and underlined the need to bring perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors to justice. Council members reaffirmed their commitment to further reinforcing Afghan ownership and leadership of the country's development and security.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 June [meeting 5907], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1817(2008). The draft [S/2008/376] was submitted by Afghanistan, Belgium, Croatia, France, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on Afghanistan, in particular resolutions 1659(2006) of 15 February 2006, 1776(2007) of 19 September 2007 and 1806(2008) of 20 March 2008, and the statement by its President of 17 June 2003,

Recalling also its resolutions 1267(1999) of 15 October 1999 and 1735(2006) of 22 December 2006, and reiterating its support for international efforts to combat terrorism in accordance with international law, including the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan,

Reaffirming its continued support for the Government and people of Afghanistan as they rebuild their country, strengthen the foundations of sustainable peace and constitutional democracy and assume their rightful place in the community of nations,

Noting with concern the existing links between international security, terrorism and transnational organized crime, money-laundering, trafficking in illicit drugs and illegal arms, and in this regard emphasizing the need to enhance coordination of efforts at the national, subregional, regional and international levels in order to strengthen a global response to this serious challenge,

Reiterating its concern about the security situation in Afghanistan, in particular the continued violent and terrorist activities by the Taliban, Al-Qaida, illegal armed groups, criminals and those involved in the narcotics trade, and the links between illicit drug trafficking and terrorism, and calling upon the Government of Afghanistan, with the assistance of the international community, including the International Security Assistance Force and the Operation Enduring Freedom coalition, in accordance with their respective designated responsibilities as they evolve, to continue to address the threat to the security and stability of Afghanistan posed by the Taliban, Al-Qaida, illegal armed groups, criminals and those involved in the narcotics trade, tries and precursor-producing countries, encouraging increased cooperation between those countries to strengthen anti-narcotics controls to curb the drug flow, including through border management cooperation, and expressing its support for the Paris Pact initiative, for the outcome of the Second Ministerial Conference on Drug Trafficking Routes from Afghanistan, organized in Moscow from 26 to 28 June 2006, and for the meeting organized in Kabul on 31 October and 1 November 2007 within the framework of the Paris Pact initiative; and stressing the need for Member States to take measures, with the support of relevant international actors, to combat the laundering of proceeds of criminal activity, corruption and illicit trafficking in narcotics and precursors in line with the outcome of the Moscow conference,

Stressing the importance of a comprehensive approach to address the drug problem of Afghanistan, which, to be effective, has to be integrated into the wider context of efforts carried out in the three areas of security, governance, rule of law and human rights, and economic and social development, stressing that the development of alternative-livelihood programmes is of key importance in the success of the efforts in counter-narcotics in Afghanistan, and reiterating that extensive efforts also have to be made to reduce the demand for drugs globally in order to contribute to the sustainability of the elimination of illicit cultivation in Afghanistan,

Expressing utmost concern at the increase in illegal smuggling, for illicit use, to and within Afghanistan of chemical precursors needed to produce heroin, in particular acetic anhydride, and also hydrochloric acid and acetone, linked to the high level of opium cultivation, production and trafficking, and noting that most of the opium produced in Afghanistan is now processed in the country,

Recalling the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its twentieth special session, in which Member States decided to establish the year 2008 as a target date for States to eliminate or significantly reduce, inter alia, the diversion of precursors, and recognizing that action against the world drug problem is a common and shared responsibility requiring an integrated and balanced approach in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law,

Acknowledging the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs of the Economic and Social Council as the central policymaking and coordinating body within the United Nations system on international drug control issues, and welcoming the intention of the Commission to consider the issue of precursor control as one of the central questions to be discussed during the high-level segment of its fifty-second session,

2. Calls upon all Member States to increase international and regional cooperation in order to counter the illicit production of and trafficking in drugs in Afghanistan, including by strengthening the monitoring of the international trade in chemical precursors, notably but not limited to acetic anhydride, and to prevent attempts to divert the substances from licit international trade for illicit use in Afghanistan;

4. Urges exporting States to ensure the systematic notification of all exports of relevant chemical precursors, upon request from importing States, in accordance with provisions of the 1988 Convention, and encourages importing States to request the systematic notification of such exports; and also urges the Governments that have not yet done so to register with and utilize the online system for the exchange of pre-export notifications (PEN Online);

5. Calls upon States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to, and State parties to implement fully, the multilateral treaties whose aim is to fight against the illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs, notably the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the Protocol of 25 March 1972 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, underlines the importance for all States parties to those treaties to implement them fully, and stresses that nothing in the present resolution will impose on State parties new obligations with regard to those treaties;

6. Expresses its continued support to the commitment and efforts of Afghanistan to achieve a sustained and significant reduction in the production of and trafficking in narcotics with a view to complete elimination, expresses also its support to the Afghan National Drug Control Strategy, and calls upon the Government of Afghanistan, with the assistance of the international community, to accelerate its implementation, as discussed at the seventh meeting of the Joint Coordination and Monitoring Board held in Tokyo in February 2008, and calls for additional international support for the priorities identified in the Strategy;

8. Invites the international community to provide financial and technical assistance and support in building national capacity in the fields referred to in paragraph 7 above to Afghanistan and, where appropriate and upon request, neighbouring countries, including through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime; stresses in particular the importance of training and equipping law enforcement agencies, including border police and customs officers, so as to allow them to deal efficiently with such tasks as detection, scanning, stockpiling, transportation and destruction of chemical precursors; and encourages Afghanistan and its neighbours to make full use of such assistance;

9. Reiterates its support for the Paris Pact initiative aimed at facilitating counter-narcotics cooperation and coordination among countries seriously affected by the trafficking in narcotic drugs produced in Afghanistan, for the outcome of the Second Ministerial Conference on Drug Trafficking Routes from Afghanistan, organized in Moscow from 26 to 28 June 2006 in cooperation with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, and for other international and/or regional relevant initiatives, such as Project Cohesion, and calls upon Paris Pact partners to further promote international and regional initiatives;

10. Welcomes the launch, under the guidance of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the Project Cohesion Task Force, of the Targeted Anti-Trafficking Regional Communication, Expertise and Training initiative targeting precursors used in the manufacture of heroin in Afghanistan, and urges the Paris Pact partners to cooperate closely with a view to achieving its successful implementation;

11. Recognizes the legitimate need of industry to have access to precursors and its important role in preventing the diversion of precursors, and encourages all Member States, in particular producing countries, Afghanistan and its neighbours to develop partnerships with the private sector so as to prevent the diversion of precursors;

12. Looks forward to the outcome of the international conference in support of Afghanistan, which will be held in Paris on 12 June 2008, and encourages the participants at the conference to make concrete proposals on the ways to address the problem of the diversion of chemical precursors for illicit use, within the wider framework of the discussions on the strengthening of counter-narcotics activities in the Afghanistan National Development Strategy and the National Drug Control Strategy;

13. Encourages Member States to submit to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) for inclusion on the Consolidated List names of individuals and entities participating in the financing or support of acts or activities of Al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden and the Taliban, and other individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with them, using proceeds derived from the illicit cultivation and production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs produced in Afghanistan and their precursors, in order to give full effect to the relevant provisions of resolution 1735(2006);

14. Requests the Secretary-General to include, as appropriate, in his regular reports to the Security Council and the General Assembly on the situation in Afghanistan, in close consultation with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the International Narcotics Control Board, observations and recommendations on the fight against drug production and trafficking, notably on the issue of the illicit traffic in chemical precursors to and within Afghanistan;

Paris Conference and Declaration

Special report of Secretary-General (July).

In a special report dated 3 July [S/2008/434] on the outcome of the Paris Conference in Support of Afghanistan, the Secretary-General said that the Conference, held on 12 June, resulted in pledges of international assistance totalling approximately $20 billion. With the launch of the Afghanistan National Development Strategy in Paris, some 80 international stakeholders agreed to a road map under Afghan leadership to be implemented through a strengthened partnership between the Government and the international community. The Paris Declaration identified the key elements for the security and prosperity of the Afghan people, and underlined an expanded role for the Secretary-General's Special Representative and UNAMA. The February 2006 Afghanistan Compact [YUN 2006, p. 363] remained the basis for that common effort.

The Strategy was the Government's five-year plan for joint action on security, governance, rule of law and human rights, and economic and social development. It was based on the Millennium Development Goals and the Afghanistan Compact.

Since the Secretary-General's March report, insurgent and terrorist activity had increased, particularly in the south and east. In May, there were more recorded security incidents in the country than at any time since the overthrow of the Taliban regime in 2001. The insurgents continued to rely on asymmetric attacks, resulting in high levels of civilian casualties.

For UNAMA to fulfil its mandate and achieve the Paris priorities, greater resources had to be mobilized. Addressing priorities required additional personnel for elections, support for the Afghanistan National Development Strategy, aid effectiveness, institution-building and the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The Secretary-General recommended that UNAMA further expand its field presence by opening six new provincial offices over the next 12 months, adding that any such expansion should be undertaken with staff security as the highest priority.

The Secretary-General recommended that UNAMA focus on free, fair and secure elections in 2009 and 2010; the Afghanistan National Development Strategy; implementing the economic priorities of the Strategy; governance and institution-building; aid effectiveness and increased accountability; humanitarian action; regional cooperation; and such ongoing priorities as protecting human rights, reducing the production and trafficking of narcotics and improving civil-military coordination.

Security Council statement. In a press statement of 16 June [SC/9361], Security Council members welcomed the holding of the Conference, the reaffirmation of the long-term partnership between Afghanistan and the international community, the review of progress in the implementation of the Afghanistan Compact, and the commitment of Conference participants to working more closely together under Afghan leadership to support the Afghanistan National Development Strategy. Council members welcomed the Government's commitment to pursue political and economic reform, to work with the international community and to take leadership for its development. Council members welcomed in particular the commitment by Conference participants to support the central role of the Special Representative and UNAMA in coordinating international efforts, especially with the Government.

Further developments

Attack in Kabul. On 7 July, Security Council members, by a press statement [SC/9386], condemned the terrorist suicide attack that occurred on that day at the Indian Embassy in Kabul, causing numerous deaths among Afghan civilians, Indian diplomats and security personnel, as well as numerous injuries, including at the nearby Indonesian Embassy.

Security Council consideration (July). Briefing the Council on 9 July [meeting 5930], the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Kai Eide, stressed the role of the United Nations in helping the Government implement the National Development Strategy while ensuring an adequate international response.

John Holmes, Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, said that humanitarian access had to be increased by means ranging from days or zones of tranquillity to vaccination campaigns and more lasting access agreements in conflict areas.

Afghanistan's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Rangin Dâdfar Spantâ, said that those who were behind the Taliban and Al-Qaida had enhanced their support to those groups with an elaborate system of terrorist sanctuaries, and the financing, recruiting, arming and training of suicide bombers outside Afghanistan's borders. Welcoming his country's expanded relations with Pakistan's new civilian Government, he said that a joint approach was needed to eliminate the bases of the terrorist networks that threatened both countries.

Pakistan's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Shah Mehmood Qureshi, said that in fighting the threat posed by terrorism and extremist violence, his country had lost more soldiers than any other. Afghanistan and Pakistan could achieve their common objectives by combining military containment with political reconciliation, administrative control and rapid socio-economic development. The military option should be used as the last resort, lest it create more alienation, more opposition and more enemies.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 July [meeting 5932], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/26 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the special report of the Secretary-General on the International Conference in Support of Afghanistan, held in Paris on 12 June 2008, and on the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan, as well as the briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Afghanistan, Mr. Kai Eide, on 9 July 2008.

The Council welcomes the outcome of the Conference, including the generous financial pledges made in support of the Afghanistan National Development Strategy and the commitment by the Government of Afghanistan to promote security, good governance, the rule of law, human rights and socio-economic development and to pursue political and economic reform, including by taking concrete steps to combat corruption. The Council welcomes the strengthened partnership between the Government and the international community resulting from such mutual pledges and commitments. The Council endorses the key elements identified in the Paris Declaration as essential for the security and prosperity of the Afghan people, including the importance of holding free, fair and secure elections in 2009 and 2010, the importance of ensuring respect for the human rights of all Afghans and the provision of humanitarian assistance, and the need to improve aid effectiveness in order to ensure that the benefits of development are tangible for every Afghan.

The Council also welcomes the review of the Afghanistan Compact presented at the Conference. In this regard, the Council reiterates its call upon the Government of Afghanistan and the international community to implement the Compact and the annexes thereto in full.

The Council recalls the strengthened role of the Mission and the Special Representative in leading and co-ordinating international civilian efforts in Afghanistan, through an integrated approach and guided by the principle of reinforcing Afghan ownership and leadership. The Council reaffirms in particular the priorities for the Mission and the Special Representative identified in paragraph 4 of its resolution 1806(2008) and endorses the views of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative on the areas that require greater attention. The Council calls upon all relevant actors to give their full support to the Mission's enhanced coordinating role.

The Council endorses the recommendation that, in order for the Mission to fulfil its mandate, much greater substantive, administrative and security resources will need to be expeditiously mobilized in the areas mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General, through the relevant processes and procedures within the United Nations system. The Council welcomes in particular the intention to proceed, pursuant to resolution 1806(2008), with another expansion of the field presence of the Mission through the opening of six new provincial offices over the next 12 months. The Council also welcomes plans to improve the coherence of action of the United Nations country team in support of the priorities of the Mission.

The Council reaffirms once again its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan. The Council expresses its strong concern about the security situation in Afghanistan and stresses the need to continue to address the threat to the security and stability of Afghanistan posed by the Taliban, Al-Qaida, illegal armed groups, criminals and those involved in the narcotics trade and in the diversion of chemical precursors, including through the implementation of measures introduced in its resolution 1267(1999) and other relevant resolutions of the Council. The Council notes the links between illicit drug trafficking, corruption and terrorism, and stresses the need for full implementation of its resolution 1817(2008) on international cooperation to prevent trafficking in and diversion of chemical precursors of heroin for illicit use in Afghanistan.

Report of Secretary-General (September).

In a report of 23 September [A/63/372-S/2008/617], the Secretary-General said that despite the enhanced capabilities of the Afghan army and international forces, the security situation had deteriorated markedly, with the insurgency expanding its influence beyond traditionally volatile areas to provinces neighbouring Kabul.

The insurgency's use of asymmetric tactics had led to a sharp rise in civilian casualties. Civilians were also being killed as a result of military operations by Afghan and international security forces, particularly when insurgents concealed themselves in populated areas. The most pressing humanitarian problems were drought and high global food prices, which had created food shortages affecting one sixth of the population.

On the positive side, the June Paris Conference had launched the Afghanistan National Development Strategy. The number of poppy-free provinces had increased from 13 to 18, and most cultivation was now concentrated in a few provinces; but the cost of eradication in terms of lives lost had been high, and revenues from the illegal opium economy continued to finance the insurgency.

The National Assembly adopted laws on the civil service, public health and political parties, but the lower house was unable to adopt the new electoral law. The Cabinet, however, approved a proposal by the Independent Election Commission to run voter registration in four phases, between 6 October 2008 and 3 February 2009.

Regional cooperation efforts led to an agreement by Afghanistan, India, Pakistan and Turkmenistan to begin constructing a trans-Afghanistan gas pipeline in 2010, and Iran concluded memorandums of understanding with Afghanistan on bilateral trade.

The number of security incidents increased to 983 in August—the highest since the fall of the Taliban in 2001 and a 44 per cent increase compared with August 2007. Of more than 3,800 lives lost in insurgency-related violence through the end of July, over one third were civilians.

In the first eight months of 2008, civilian deaths recorded by UNAMA had increased by 39 per cent, to a total of 1,445. Of those, 55 per cent were attributed to attacks by anti-Government elements, 40 per cent to pro-Government forces and 5 per cent to unknown agents. More than 120 attacks targeted humanitarian and development programmes, with 30 humanitarian aid workers killed and 92 abducted.

UNAMA recorded 142 summary executions by the armed opposition in 2008 and dozens of cases of threats, intimidation and harassment of doctors, teachers, students, tribal elders, Government employees, former police and military personnel, and labourers involved in public-interest construction work.

The number of security incidents in the capital, however, had decreased, reflecting the enhanced capability of Afghan intelligence and security forces. In addition, ISAF, with 55,000 troops, increased its presence in the east and the south, as well as in Kapisa, Logar and Wardak provinces around Kabul.

As for the inflow of chemical precursors for illicit heroin manufacturing, Pakistan, Iran and other neighbouring countries made significant seizures of acetic anhydride—the first such seizures since 2001. The Secretary-General urged Governments to intensify their participation in activities led by the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to prevent diversion and trafficking of precursors to Afghanistan and neighbouring States.

With respect to human rights, the atmosphere of impunity perpetuated the notion that crime and the abuse of power was acceptable. That undermined efforts to uphold the rule of law, including redress for victims of human rights violations. The Cabinet in May adopted the National Action Plan for the Women of Afghanistan, and in August, the President and the Ministry of the Interior denounced the high incidence of sexual assaults.

Since the beginning of the year, more than 200,000 Afghan refugees had been repatriated, largely from Pakistan. However, armed conflict in the south, ethnic strife in Behsud and the potential impact of the drought in the northern and western parts of the country had displaced thousands.

Following the Paris Conference, UNAMA undertook to enhance the coordination of donor efforts and to strengthen aid effectiveness. To meet priorities identified in its mandate and at the Conference, UNAMA would require significant staffing increases, some structural changes and an increase in essential security-related equipment. The specifics would be detailed in the upcoming UNAMA budget proposal to the General Assembly.

Security Council consideration (October). Briefing the Council on 14 October [meeting 5994], the Special Representative cited positive developments in Afghanistan, including improved relations with Pakistan and changes to strengthen its Interior and Agriculture Ministries and the police. UNAMA had a better working relationship with ISAF than half a year earlier, but it was still a small mission in need of qualified staff to fulfil its mandate.

Afghanistan said that real security in the country required improvement in the day-to-day lives of people, including governance and the rule of law, humanitarian and counter-narcotics efforts, the upcoming elections, strong army and police forces, and a sustainable economy. Afghanistan had found in the new President of Pakistan, Asif Ali Zardari, a friend and trusted leader with whom it could counter terrorism. An increase in international troops was essential to that task.

Pakistan said that security in Afghanistan must be addressed in all its aspects, including the Taliban insurgency, Al-Qaida, lingering warlordism, factional rivalries, criminal and other illegal armed groups, and the drug trade. Pakistan would press forward on cooperation with Afghanistan and would be hosting a meeting of a mini-jirga in Islamabad on 27 and 28 October.

Children and armed conflict

In November, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], the Secretary-General submitted a report on children and armed conflict in Afghanistan [S/2008/695], covering the period from 1 July 2007 to 15 August 2008. During that period, 81 children were killed and 332 sustained injuries due to unexploded ordnance and explosive remnants of war. Acts of violence targeted schools as representative of the Government or of perceived foreign interference; the Taliban and its proxies were reportedly responsible. The Taliban had denied nearly all girls the right to attend school while in power, a position they still brutally enforced. Arson was by far the most frequent type of incident carried out on educational facilities.

There were substantive reports of children, especially boys, being sexually abused and exploited by members of the armed forces and armed groups. Most victims did not want their experience to be reported. The report discussed certain incidents involving personnel of the national security forces that had been appropriately dealt with by the authorities.

Children had been used by all parties throughout the 30 years of armed conflict. Internally displaced families reported that the threat of recruitment by armed groups was higher "because the Taliban pay more than the police".

Visiting Afghanistan from 28 June to 3 July, the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, Radhika Coomaraswamy, expressed her concern about reports of children being used by anti-Government elements, the death and injury of children during fighting, the detention of children, sexual violence against children and continuing attacks on schools, teachers and schoolchildren. She also expressed concern about the unintentional death of children as a result of the operations of international military forces and the Afghan national security forces. She stressed that UN monitoring agents should have unimpeded access to all detention facilities where children were believed to be present. Worrisome allegations about sexual violence against boys by armed actors should be confronted despite their sensitive nature.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in January began a capacity-building initiative for local non-governmental organizations (NGOs) active in the field of human rights, aimed at developing a monitoring system to reduce the unlawful detention of children. In June, UNICEF initiated a dialogue with the National Directorate of Security to ensure due process for all juveniles, and the implementation of the juvenile protection measures in the new anti-terrorist law.

Security Council mission

On 14 November [S/2008/708], the President of the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that the Council had decided to send a mission to Afghanistan from 21 to 28 November. The Mission was to be led by Giulio Terzi di Sant'Agata (Italy). Its terms of reference included reviewing the humanitarian situation, and therewith food security; progress with respect to security, governance, the rule of law, human rights, economic and social development and counter-narcotics; efforts to address the threat posed by the Taliban, Al-Qaida, illegal armed groups and criminals, and therewith the narcotics trade; and implementation of the enhanced coordinating role assigned to UNAMA and the Special Representative by Security Council resolution 1806(2008) (see p. 355). The Mission would assess the cooperation between UNAMA and ISAF, as well as the implementation of the commitments made at the June Paris Conference. It would reaffirm the Security Council's continued support for the Government and people of Afghanistan as they rebuilt their country and the importance of regional cooperation, while underlining the central and impartial role of the United Nations in promoting peace and stability.

The head of the mission briefed the Council on 4 December [meeting 6031]. The report of the mission [S/2008/782], dated 12 December, noted a striking year-to-year increase in the numbers of security incidents since 2003 and in the number of incidents targeting the humanitarian and development community. Interlocutors identified four main reasons: the influx of militants recruited from outside Afghanistan (UNAMA estimated that 20 per cent of insurgents were from outside the country); insufficient integration and coordination of military, political, governance and development efforts; a dearth of reconstruction and employment opportunities combined with a large number of unemployed young men; and frustration with the tactics of the international forces, including civilian casualties caused by their combat operations.

As described to the mission, the overriding objective of the insurgency was to undermine the Government's capacity and legitimacy. The most immediate impediment to improved governance was governmental corruption at both the national and subnational levels. A second major problem was the lack of effective governance at the local level.

The perceived inability of Afghan and international forces to defeat the insurgents had led to calls for talks with insurgent groups. President Karzai restated his readiness to engage in talks with those who would renounce violence and accept the Constitution. According to members of the Afghan human rights community, many Afghans feared that political reconciliation efforts were a 'mask' for an alliance between the Government and Afghanistan's more fundamentalist forces, which could undermine the gains in human rights since 2002.

The mission was informed that perceived inefficiencies in the delivery of international assistance had undermined the confidence of the population in its Government and in the international community. The Secretary-General's Special Representative said that progress in implementing the Afghanistan National Development Strategy was accelerating, but the costing of projects took time, especially given the weak bureaucracy. The Finance Minister noted the reluctance of donors to work through Afghan institutions, which was essential if the Strategy was to be effective.

Report of Secretary-General. In a later report [A/63/751-S/2009/135], the Secretary-General called 2008 the most violent year in Afghanistan since 2001. Two trends had worsened—the insurgents' attempts at destabilization and their increased use of more sophisticated asymmetric attacks with disregard for civilians. Those attacks—including assassinations, intimidation and abductions—increasingly targeted civil servants, religious scholars, the aid community and road construction projects. On 4 September, the Head of the Appeals Court Division of the Central Narcotics Tribunal was assassinated in Kabul. On 26 November, Belqis Mazloomiyar, an Afghan contract worker for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), was shot to death at a meeting of local elders in Lower Sheikh Mesri.

Resumption of the death penalty was disquieting, owing to deficiencies in due process and fair trial guarantees. Women in public life were increasingly subjected to threats and intimidation; the most prominent female senior police officer in Kandahar was assassinated in September. Women—particularly those who were victims of sexual violence—still lacked access to legal, medical or psychosocial redress mechanisms.

UNAMA recorded 626 civilian casualties between September and December, and 2,118 for the year—a 40 per cent increase over 2007. Anti-Government elements remained responsible for the largest proportion of those casualties. Civilian casualties also continued to be reported as a result of operations conducted by pro-Government forces, with air strikes accounting for 68 per cent of such fatalities.

Freedom of movement of unarmed civil servants was reduced by the intensified fighting and the increased campaign of intimidation and assassination. As at December, 231 of the country's approximately 400 districts continued to report near-total accessibility, while 10 were considered completely beyond the Government's control, and access to 165 remained difficult or problematic.

Some 275 attacks against schools were reported through November, with 66 dead and 64 injured, mostly children. Children's education, particularly that of girls, was seen as anti-Islamic by the Taliban, turning children into targets. In September, insurgents burned over 100,000 textbooks being transported to Kandahar. In November, Taliban militants attacked a group of girls en route to school, throwing acid in their faces. From June to December, there were 202 incidents of extreme violence directed against the education community, with 83 killed and 164 injured.

Poor rainfall made the 2008 cereal harvest the smallest since 2002, leaving more than 5 million people in need of immediate food assistance. Some 1.2 million children under the age of five and 550,000 pregnant or lactating mothers in 22 provinces remained at high risk of severe malnutrition. Despite repeated rounds of national and subnational polio immunization days, polio remained endemic in Afghanistan because of insecurity and limited access to some communities.

In 2008, some 278,000 registered refugees had returned to Afghanistan and had been assisted by UNHCR, 98.5 per cent of them having returned from Pakistan. Some 10 per cent of returnees were unable to return to their place of origin due to insecurity, socio-economic hardships and land disputes. There were more than 230,000 internally displaced persons at the end of the year, but some 600 families had been able to return to their place of origin in 2008.

Sectoral issues

Judicial system and the rule of law

The rule of law remained insufficiently institutionalized, and respect for international humanitarian law, human rights and accounting for past abuses continued to be treated as secondary matters.

Following the establishment in March of the National Justice Sector Strategy and the National Justice Programme, the three justice institutions—the Ministry of Justice, the Supreme Court and the Office of the Attorney-General—established a programme oversight committee with World Bank assistance. In July, the first general assembly of the Independent Afghan Bar Association met in Kabul to decide on its constitution and elect officials. The number of registered lawyers in Afghanistan tripled from 200 in 2007 to almost 600 in 2008, 130 of whom were women.

The Government enacted laws on terrorism, abduction and human trafficking and on the creation of the High Office of Oversight to combat corruption. Further progress was hampered by the fact that the Supreme Court, the Office of the Attorney-General and the Ministry of Justice suffered from a lack of resources, inadequate infrastructure and a shortage of qualified judges and prosecutors. Corruption and intimidation by officials remained common. Detention centres and prisons remained in a state of neglect.

Security sector reform

The reform and rebuilding of the national police was proceeding at a slow pace. Some 70 per cent of the 82,000-strong force was estimated to be present for duty. Serious inadequacies remained with regard to training and equipment. Since the police composed the only security force that maintained a durable presence in communities across Afghanistan, its shortcomings had serious effects. Border police were almost non-existent along significant parts of the border and were unable to prevent large-scale smuggling and drug trafficking.

While the Afghan army continued to improve, reaching a strength of more than 62,000, insufficient numbers of police officers and lack of training and equipment had contributed to a very high casualty rate: as many as 720 police officers were killed between March and August. Corruption was still a problem, and there were credible reports of police positions being sold for large sums—particularly in lucrative transit and drug-trafficking corridors.

Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and disbandment of armed groups

Progress was made in disbanding illegal armed groups. Out of 51 targeted districts, 21 had complied with the corresponding programme, and 161 illegal armed groups were disbanded. Over 1,050 individuals were arrested or disarmed and 5,700 weapons confiscated. The Afghanistan New Beginnings Programme, supported by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), promoted capacity-building, in particular through the establishment of a dedicated cell for the disbandment of illegal armed groups, within the Ministry of the Interior, to support the transition to full Government control of the disarmament process.

Counter-narcotics activities

In August, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) released the Afghanistan opium survey 2008, which reported a 19 per cent decrease in opium cultivation and a 6 per cent decline in production. The decrease in cultivation was attributed to a combination of improved governance and poor climatic conditions, including cold and drought. Public awareness campaigns also played a role.

The increase in the number of poppy-free provinces meant that more than half of the country's 34 provinces were poppy-free. Thus, poppy production was no longer a country-wide phenomenon but rather concentrated in areas where insurgent and organized crime groups were particularly active: 98 per cent of the country's opium was grown in seven southern and south-western provinces. Against those achievements, UNODC reported that crop yields actually increased in 2008, and that only 5,480 of the 50,000 hectare eradication target was reached. Achieving that result proved costly: 77 members of the eradication force were killed, a six-fold increase compared with the previous year.

Implementation of the Afghan National Drug Control Strategy [YUN 2006, p. 363] remained slow. A provincial approach was agreed upon and provincial counter-narcotics plans were being prepared; however, agreement had yet to be reached on a funding mechanism for those plans.

On 4 September, Judge Alim Hanif, Head of the Appeals Court Division of the Central Narcotics Tribunal, was assassinated in Kabul. There were strong indications that his murder was related to his anti-narcotics role.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 2008/27 of 24 July (see p. 1366), called upon Afghanistan to intensify its counter-narcotic efforts and upon Member States to provide technical assistance and support to Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan in their fight against drug trafficking.

Recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction

Progress continued in several sectors: the basic package of health services covered 82 per cent of the population, and the gross enrolment in schools was estimated to have increased in 2007 to 5.7 million, with girls constituting 35 per cent of that figure.

On the other hand, 80 per cent of the population still did not have access to electricity.

There continued to be a significant underinvestment in agriculture. Of the country's total 7.9 million arable hectares, less than half was cultivated, mostly owing to a lack of irrigation. Pre-war irrigation systems were damaged, operating at about 25 per cent efficiency and covering only one third of the pre-war irrigated areas. Poor irrigation impeded the development of the country's agricultural export potential.

Social aspects

Afghanistan continued to face serious human rights deficiencies as a result of the impact of the conflict on civilians, a pervasive atmosphere of impunity, absence of official impetus for the transitional justice process, a weak judicial system and threats to the media from both State and non-State actors. Many of those deficiencies also contributed to very high levels of poverty, affecting 42 per cent of the population.

The Government's awareness of gender in policy implementation had improved, as demonstrated by several initiatives towards gender-sensitive programming. However, the status of women remained one of the lowest in the world, and the maternal mortality rate was one of the highest. In 2007, only 25.7 per cent of pupils who completed primary education were girls, and trends showed that the proportion of girls in school was declining. The participation of women in employment, especially in the civil service, declined from 25.9 per cent in 2005 to 22 per cent in 2007.

In the first half of 2008, the United Nations-managed Mine Action Centre for Afghanistan, with Government support, destroyed 38,297 anti-personnel landmines, 419 anti-tank mines and 957,362 explosive remnants of war, and provided mine-awareness education for 760,434 people. During the second half of the year, over 42,000 anti-personnel mines, 500 anti-tank mines and 1.5 million explosive remnants of war were destroyed, and hundreds of communities had their land freed from the threat of mines. Mine-risk education reached 800,000 Afghans. Advocacy for the rights of landmine survivors and other persons with disabilities continued.

UNAMA

The United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) was established by Security Council resolution 1401(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 264] to promote, among other things, national reconciliation and the responsibilities entrusted to the United Nations under the 2001 Bonn Agreement [YUN 2001, p. 263]. It comprised the Office of the Special Representative, two substantive pillars—one political in scope (Pillar I) and one for relief, recovery and reconstruction (Pillar II)—along with an administrative component. The Mission was headquartered in Kabul, with regional offices in Bamyán, Gardez, Herat, Jalalabad, Kabul, Kandahar, Kunduz and Mazar-e-Sharif, and provincial offices in Badakhshan, Badghis, Daikundi, Faryab, Ghor, Khost, Kunar, Nimroz and Zabul. UNAMA was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Kai Eide (Norway). By resolution 1806(2008) (see p. 355), the Security Council extended the UNAMA mandate until 23 March 2009.

UNAMA financing

In October [A/63/346/Add.4], the Secretary-General outlined proposed resource requirements for UNAMA from 1 January to 31 December 2009, totalling $168,156,400 net ($179,166,600 gross). In December [A/63/593], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended revised resource requirements of $163,976,500 net ($174,343,000 gross).

On 24 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 63/263, section XI (see p. 1548), approved that amount as part of the $429,497,600 budget for the 27 special political missions authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council.

International Security Assistance Force

During the year, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council, in accordance with Council resolutions 1386(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 267] and 1510(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 310], reports from the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) on its activities for the periods from 1 November 2007 to 31 January 2008 [S/2008/319]; 1 February to 30 April [S/2008/597]; and 1 May to 31 July [S/2008/770]. Activities from August to the end of the year were covered in a later report [S/2009/283].

As at 25 July, ISAF had 49,101 personnel from the 26 NATO nations and 2,215 from 14 non-NATO nations. During the quarter that ended on 31 July, ISAF continued to conduct security operations while supporting governance, reconstruction and development as the Afghan army grew in size and capability.

Dushanbe Declaration. By a 19 September letter [A/63/370-S/2008/614], China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Security Council the Dushanbe Declaration of the Heads of member States of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO), adopted by the Presidents of those countries at the SCO summit held in Dushanbe, Tajikistan, on 28 August.

Referring to ISAF, the Declaration said that external challenges and threats to security complicated the situation in the region. The situation in Afghanistan, and the expansion in drug trafficking and cross-border organized crime, called for strengthened coordination and the creation of joint mechanisms to assess, prevent and respond to such challenges and threats. ISAF must pay greater attention to countering the production and smuggling of Afghan narcotics, in cooperation with the Afghan Government, its neighbours and other interested countries. That task should be reflected in its mandate when the Security Council next met to consider the situation in Afghanistan. The SCO Heads of State underlined the need to prepare for the convening of a special conference on Afghanistan under the aegis of the organization to discuss collective action against terrorism, illicit drug trafficking and organized crime.

Communication. In a 12 September letter [S/2008/603], the Afghan Foreign Minister expressed appreciation for the role played by ISAF in his country. Afghanistan welcomed the proposal that ISAF continue to operate in Afghanistan until its national security forces were fully able to provide security for their nation.

Extension of ISAF mandate

On 22 September [meeting 5977], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1833(2008). The draft [S/2008/610] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

Sanctions

United Nations sanctions-related activities were guided by the measures adopted by Security Council resolutions 1617(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 410] and 1735(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 384] against Osama bin Laden, Al-Qaida, the Taliban, their associates and associated entities, which further refined the financial measures, travel ban and arms embargo imposed on those persons identified in the consolidated list created pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265]. The Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee, established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999), oversaw the implementation of those measures. The Committee was assisted by an Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team.

Following the Security Council's adoption of resolution 1822(2008) (see p. 377), in which it extended the Monitoring Team's mandate for a further 18 months, the Secretary-General informed the Council on 7 July [S/2008/441] that he had reappointed six experts for a period ending 31 December 2009. On 2 October [S/2008/632], he informed the Council that he had identified replacements for the two experts who resigned from the Team on 22 and 30 June, respectively, to serve on the Team through 31 December 2009.

Sanctions Committee activities

On 31 December, the Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee submitted a report [S/2008/848] covering its activities in 2008. During the year, the Committee held 3 formal meetings and 32 informal meetings. Following consultations among Security Council members, the Council elected the Bureau of the Committee, which consisted of Belgium as Chairman, with the delegations of Burkina Faso and the Russian Federation providing the two Vice-Chairmen. On 4 June, Jan Grauls (Belgium) succeeded Johan Verbeke (Belgium) as Chairman.

A central objective of the Committee was keeping the consolidated list of individuals and entities subject to sanctions measures as up to date and accurate as possible. The list was updated 25 times in 2008; by the end of the year, 507 individuals and entities were included.

The Committee conducted a last round of reviews on 38 names that had not been updated in four or more years. Within one week after a name was added to or removed from the list, the Committee notified the country or countries where the individual or entity was believed to be located and, in the case of individuals, the country of which the person was a national.

During 2008, the Committee responded to four requests from States seeking its assistance in confirming the identity of 44 individuals for the purpose of implementing the sanctions measures, in particular with regard to the assets freeze. Mindful that the Council provided for exemptions to the freeze, including for humanitarian purposes, the Committee continued to consider notifications and requests for exemptions submitted pursuant to resolution 1452(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 280], receiving 21 such communications from States in 2008.

Briefing the Council on 6 May [meeting 5886], the Chairman said that during the previous six months the Committee had discussed issues relating to the three sanctions measures—the assets freeze, travel ban and arms embargo. The Committee also focused on identifying possible cases of non-compliance with the sanctions and considered the criminal misuse of the Internet for terrorist purposes.

Briefing the Council on 12 November [meeting 6015], the Sanctions Committee Chairman said that the Committee, together with the Monitoring Team, had given attention to implementing two new mechanisms introduced by resolution 1822(2008): the review, by 30 June 2010, of all the names on the consolidated list at the time of the adoption of the resolution; and posting on the Committee's website the narrative summary of reasons for the listings.

On 8 January [S/2008/16], the Chairman transmitted to the Security Council a report containing the Committee's position on the recommendations contained in the seventh report of the Monitoring Team [YUN 2007, p. 341].

Monitoring Team

The Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team (the Monitoring Team), established by Security Council resolution 1526(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 332] and extended by resolutions 1617(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 410], 1735(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 384] and 1822(2008), had the mandate of collating, assessing, monitoring, and reporting and making recommendations on the implementation of measures imposed by that resolution.

The Monitoring Team visited 26 States. At the request of the Council, it continued to organize regional meetings with the heads and deputy heads of intelligence and security services to discuss how the sanctions could be adapted to address changes in the threat posed by Al-Qaida-related terrorism.

Report of Monitoring Team (May). In accordance with resolution 1735(2006), the Sanctions Committee Chairman on 13 May transmitted to the Security Council the Monitoring Team's eighth report [S/2008/324]. According to the report, the Al-Qaida and Taliban leadership continued to try to exert control over a movement that it inspired but did not direct. The report noted the growing problem in Afghanistan and the Afghanistan/Pakistan border area, and a continuing threat in North Africa, with no reduction in activity elsewhere. It saw the failure of many plots and attacks as confirmation of the need to prevent Al-Qaida and the Taliban from passing their skills and experience to a new generation of supporters.

The report examined the continuing problems associated with the consolidated list and concluded that they undermined its implementation; at the same time, it noted the many improvements that had been made. The report also drew attention to legal challenges by Member States to the implementation of the measures, and the likely consequences should they be successful. It examined the three sanctions measures and how they might become more effective.

The Security Council sanctions regime was at the forefront of the international operational effort, but Member States were responsible for the security of their citizens. The sanctions regime had to retain their confidence and support. The Sanctions Committee had done much to provide Member States with opportunities to express their views, and it was only through such dialogue that the Committee could develop the regime to respond to the changing threat, improve implementation of the measures, and reassure international opinion that the sanctions were appropriate to the challenge.

The Team recommended, among other things, that the arms embargo should also be enforced by prohibiting activities over the Internet that included technical advice, assistance or military training for the benefit of those on the list; that the Committee approach each of the 39 non-reporting States—7 in Asia, 23 in Africa and 9 in Latin America and the Caribbean; and that banks allow incoming payments in favour of listed parties to be credited to their frozen accounts.

An annex to the report contained litigation by or relating to individuals on the consolidated list.

On 18 June, the Sanctions Committee Chairman submitted a report [S/2008/408] containing the Committee's position on the recommendations made in the Monitoring Team's eighth report.

Communications. On 29 February [S/AC.37/2008/(1455)/1], the Comoros submitted a report on its compliance with the sanctions regime. Madagascar submitted a similar report [S/AC.37/2008/(1455)/2] on 12 May.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 June [meeting 5928], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1822(2008). The draft [S/2008/424] was submitted by Belgium, Burkina Faso, Croatia, France, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Reaffirming also the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law, including applicable international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts, stressing in this regard the important role that the United Nations plays in leading and coordinating this effort,

Urging all Member States, international bodies and regional organizations to allocate sufficient resources to meet the ongoing and direct threat posed by Al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden and the Taliban, and other individuals, groups, undertakings and entities associated with them, including by participating actively in identifying which individuals, groups, undertakings and entities should be subject to the measures referred to in paragraph 1 of the present resolution,

Iraq

Political and security situation

In 2008, the United Nations, through the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Iraq and the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI), continued to assist Iraq in its transition to democratic governance and in promoting reconstruction and reconciliation. On 7 August, by resolution 1830(2008), the Security Council extended the UNAMI mandate until 7 August 2009. On 22 December, by resolution 1859(2008), the Council took note of the agreed expiration of the mandate of the multinational force in Iraq on 31 December 2008. It also extended until 31 December 2009 the arrangements for the deposit of oil revenues into the Development Fund for Iraq, and for its monitoring by the International Advisory and Monitoring Board.

UN Assistance Mission for Iraq

UNAMI, established by Security Council resolution 1500(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 346], continued to support the Secretary-General in fulfilling his mandate under Council resolution 1483(2003) [ibid., p. 338], as extended by resolution 1546(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 348]. The Secretary-General's Special Representative and Head of UNAMI, Staffan de Mistura (Sweden) and his staff were based in Baghdad, with regional offices in Basra and Arbil.

During the year, the Secretary-General submitted four reports on UNAMI activities [S/2008/19, S/2008/266, S/2008/495, S/2008/688].

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his second report on UNAMI activities [S/2008/19], submitted in response to resolution 1770(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 346], the Secretary-General summarized developments since his October 2007 report [ibid., p. 347]. There was a welcome reduction in the overall number of attacks across Iraq in 2007, but mass casualty attacks on civilians were a reminder that those using terrorism in pursuit of political aims had no regard for human rights or human life.

The Iraqi Government had continued to move forward on issues related to national security and the administration of Government, but progress had been slow. Reasons included the refusal of ministers belonging to Tawafoq, the largest Sunni bloc in the Parliament, to resume their places in the Cabinet. The continuing stalemate over the filling of vacant Cabinet posts was symptomatic of an ongoing uncertainty about the political process.

“Awakening Councils” of concerned local citizens were still being established. As key components of the strategy of the multinational force, those units served as a proxy civil defence corps in predominantly Sunni areas. In Anbar, the Awakening Council was active in combating Al-Qaida violence and appeared to enjoy broad support. But the Government had serious long-term concerns about the implications of armed territorial Sunni tribal forces operating outside its control.

Overall violence across Iraq had declined steadily, due to the deployment of additional multinational force troops, the ceasefire declared by the Shiite Muslim cleric Moqtada al-Sadr, the role of the Awakening Councils and increased cooperation between the Government and some regional neighbours on security-related issues. The Mahdi Army ceasefire had been instrumental in reducing the level of violence in Baghdad.

Following the withdrawal of British forces from the city of Basra, Basra Province was transferred to provincial Iraqi control in December. Nevertheless, the situation on the ground was still dominated by rivalry among key parties—mainly groups affiliated with Sadrist, the Supreme Iraqi Islamic Council and Fadhila. The Governor of Basra survived a number of attacks, and the newly appointed police commander, sent by the Prime Minister to contain local violence, reportedly survived several attempts on his life.

The status of Kirkuk and of disputed internal boundaries continued to be subject to discussion, as it became clear that the timetable for a referendum could not be met for technical and logistical reasons. UNAMI was planning to re-engage in Basra, and it was considered timely for the United Nations to re-establish a small presence at Basra International Airport until the security and political situation allowed the establishment of a formal United Nations office inside the city.

UNAMI continued to work with the Independent High Electoral Commission to help ensure that it reached the appropriate state of preparedness for future electoral events. Electoral legislation needed to be revised, particularly that relating to the complex issue of the inclusion of internally displaced persons and refugees. Substantial progress had been made in developing a reliable approach for voter registration.

As at 31 December 2007, contributions to the United Nations Development Group Iraq Trust Fund, one of the two funds of the International Reconstruction Fund Facility for Iraq, totalled $1.28 billion; 134 projects and joint programmes valued at $1.08 billion were approved by the end of 2007 for financing under the Trust Fund.

Indiscriminate and targeted violence continued to claim civilian victims in 2008, even though the overall number of reported attacks and casualties had declined. The UNAMI Human Rights Office visited detention facilities and prisons in Baghdad and in the Kurdistan region at the invitation of the Ministries of Justice, Defence, Interior, and Labour and Social Affairs. UNAMI organized specialized meetings and workshops for staff of the Ministries of Human Rights and Justice, Members of Parliament, and the national non-governmental sector, focused on the rule of law and human rights. They included a seminar in the Kurdistan region aimed at integrating human rights protection into counter-terrorism strategies and practices.

Member States had not responded to a request to provide an aircraft equipped with appropriate countermeasures for the movement of UN staff into, out of and within Iraq, so UNAMI initiated a process to procure such an aircraft from a commercial provider. UNAMI had also been negotiating with coalition forces to provide an aircraft with self-defence systems for use by the Mission until such an aircraft was procured.

Security Council consideration (January). On 21 January [meeting 5823], the Security Council was briefed by the Secretary-General’s Special Representative for Iraq, Staffan de Mistura, and by the representative of the United States, Zalmay Khalilzad, on behalf of the multinational force in Iraq (MNF-I). Mr. de Mistura said that the new and enlarged team would give UNAMI the opportunity to help fulfil the agenda set by the Iraqis. Mr. Khalilzad said that continued implementation of the New Way Forward strategy, combined with the surge in force levels, had improved security considerably. Civilian casualties were below the levels of February 2006, and December 2007 had seen the second lowest coalition death toll since May 2003.

Iraq said that its Government was determined to continue its efforts to achieve national reconciliation. It was keen to reform its economy, which had been damaged as a result of wars launched by the previous regime. Iraq looked forward to the international community’s continued support for its economic and development processes through the International Compact with Iraq [YUN 2006, p. 391].

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his third report on UNAMI activities [S/2008/266], the Secretary-General summarized developments since his January report. Despite some improvements in the security situation, the Government faced formidable challenges in reaching a national consensus on the sharing of power and resources. Efforts were being made at reconciliation through legislation, effecting compromise among the interests of three parliamentary blocks—the Kurdistan Alliance, the United Iraqi Alliance and Tawafuq. Efforts to persuade Tawafuq to rejoin the Cabinet were continuing as part of a wider attempt to restructure the Government.

Following a period of improvements in security, the first quarter of 2008 witnessed a slow but steady increase in violent incidents. From over 200 recorded incidents of violence per day in the summer of 2007, the figure had dropped to averages below 80 during the last quarter of the year, but that figure now averaged around 130. More disturbing was the renewed propensity for mass-casualty attacks using suicide vests and vehicle bombs, particularly in Baghdad—believed to be the result of re-engagement by specialized insurgent groups such as the Islamic State of Iraq, which claimed affiliation with Al-Qaida in Iraq.

The growing Sahwa movement—local alliances of tribal sheikhs that were instrumental in providing neighbourhood-level security in Anbar province and other formerly restive areas—established the “Awakening Conference” at a meeting in Ramadi on 13 February. It announced its transformation from a tribal grouping to a political bloc with aspirations for participating in Governorate Councils and the next general legislative elections. Sahwa Council forces numbered over 90,000 nationwide, and slightly more than 10,000 Sahwas had been transferred into the regular security forces.

On 22 February, Moqtada al-Sadr extended the freeze on military activities by the Mahdi Army. However, on 24 March the Government announced an operation to pursue criminal elements in Basra. That led to six days of intense fighting with armed groups, including elements of the Mahdi Army, in many parts of the country until agreement was reached to stop the violence. The security situation in Basra and Baghdad subsequently eased.

Nevertheless, the March spiral of violence in southern Iraqi towns and cities, as well as in areas of Baghdad dominated by Shia, resulted in more than 700 people reported dead and 1,500 injured, many of them civilians. The United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) and MercyCorps distributed tankered water in Basra and Sadr City, while UNICEF and the International Committee of the Red Cross delivered surgical and medical supplies in the conflict-affected areas. The International Organization for Migration, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and MercyCorps also delivered food and non-food items in Basra and other locations.

UNICEF continued to deliver humanitarian assistance in the wake of attacks in Mosul and Karbala that had caused numerous casualties, dispatching emergency medical supplies for 500 people and supporting school recovery. Humanitarian water-tanking operations continued to reach 125,000 people during the crisis, mostly in Baghdad. UNICEF also distributed 745 emergency Early Childhood Development kits to kindergartens and nurseries in 15 governorates to help young children cope with psychosocial distress.

In March, the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNICEF supported the Ministry of Health in containing a measles outbreak in Anbar with a 10-day immunization drive, executed through house-to-house visits, which reached 198,075 children from 9 to 59 months of age, representing 96 per cent of the target of 206,549. The United Nations Human Settlements Programme, for its part, completed the rehabilitation of two schools in Missan, and work was ongoing in 12 schools in Missan, Samawa, Najaf, Sulaymaniyah and Kirkuk.

Meanwhile, the Government continued to strengthen ties with neighbouring countries. On 28 February, a delegation from the League of Arab States concluded a three-day visit to Baghdad to discuss national reconciliation with Iraqi officials, as well as political and tribal leaders. On 2 and 3 March, for the first time in the modern political history of Iraq and Iran, the Iranian President, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, visited Baghdad, meeting with President Jalal Talabani, Prime Minister Nuri Kamel al-Maliki and others—primarily to discuss economic and development cooperation. On 7 March, President Talabani became the first democratically elected Iraqi Head of State to visit Turkey. On 30 March, Iraq participated in the Arab League Summit in Damascus.

The Special Representative and other senior UNAMI officials continued to engage with a wide range of Iraqi political figures in Government, as well as diplomatic and military officials based in Baghdad. The Special Representative travelled to Turkey in March for discussions with senior officials on the United Nations role in facilitating national reconciliation and regional dialogue, including in the context of northern Iraq. He visited the city of Najaf and held extensive meetings with Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani, Grand Ayatollah al-Hakim, Ayatollah Muhammad al-Yacoubi, the Governor of Najaf and other religious leaders and political figures, including representatives of the Sadrist Trend. The meetings focused on provincial elections, national reconciliation, Government performance, and assistance to Iraq’s vulnerable communities, especially internally displaced persons. The Special Representative also chaired the first comprehensive anti-corruption conference for Iraq (17–18 March).

UNAMI continued working closely with the Independent High Electoral Commission to ensure that it would be able to conduct elections that would be seen as credible and be accepted by the Iraqi people. UNAMI assisted the Commission and Government in developing an election system that would better reflect the wishes of the Iraqi people and better accommodate women, internally displaced persons and minority groups.

The Iraq 2008 consolidated appeal was launched on 12 February in Baghdad and was also presented to the Kurdistan regional government Council of Ministers in Arbil on 13 February. It included appeals from 14 UN agencies and 10 NGOs for $265 million in support of targeted relief operations to deliver emergency aid in the areas of health and nutrition, education, water and sanitation, housing and shelter, food and protection. By the end of the first quarter of 2008, $43 million of the consolidated appeal process (16 per cent) had been funded and an additional $62 million had been pledged.

Although violence against women in the Kurdistan region remained a concern, the regional government had initiated protection procedures for women and was working closely with UNAMI to improve the human rights situation. In March, the Special Representative opened a conference organized by UNAMI in Baghdad on the protection of human rights in the context of counter-terrorism measures, with the participation of the Ministers of Human Rights and Interior.

Meanwhile, the UNAMI Human Rights Office continued to visit detention facilities and prisons at the invitation of the authorities in Baghdad and Arbil. It documented cases involving the denial of due process, including the deprivation of access to defence counsel and prolonged pretrial detention, as well as instances of torture and ill-treatment of detainees, including juveniles.

Security Council consideration (April).

On 28 April [meeting 5878], the Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs and by the representative of the United States on behalf of MNF-I.

The former said that Iraq had taken important steps in January, including passage of the Justice and Accountability Law replacing earlier de-Ba'athification policies, and a package of laws that included the Law on Governorates not Organized into a Region, the General Amnesty Law and the 2008 budget.

The latter observed that the overall security environment continued to improve, and there were gains on the political, economic and diplomatic fronts as well. Although many challenges remained, the Iraqi security forces were developing increased capability and proficiency; and the Ministries of Defence and Interior were improving their ability to execute their budgets.

Iraq said that the Government was determined to limit weapons to the hands of the Government, disband militias and ensure there was no army but the Iraqi army. At the political level, it was determined to bring into being a Government of national unity on a nationally agreed basis.

Communications. On 23 April [S/2008/296], the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States forwarded to the Council President the resolutions adopted by the Arab summit (Damascus, Syria, 29–30 March), including resolutions on the situation in Iraq, on the situation of Iraqi émigrés in host Arab States and on the transfer of Palestinian refugees from the Iraqi borders to the Sudan.

On 12 May [A/62/842-S/2008/320], Iraq and Kuwait transmitted the final communiqué of the third expanded meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the countries neighbouring Iraq (Kuwait, 22 April) and the recommendations of its three working groups. The communiqué said that the meeting was convened to provide “ongoing strong and effective support” to Iraq’s Government and people. In a letter dated 10 June [S/2008/380], Iraq’s Foreign Minister, Hoshyar Zebari, welcomed the continued support of the multinational force and arrangements affecting the Development Fund for Iraq and its International Advisory and Monitoring Board.

Security Council consideration (June). On 13 June [meeting 5910], the Council was briefed by Ibrahim Gambari, Special Adviser on the International Compact with Iraq and Other Political Issues, and the representative of the United States, Mr. Khalilzad, on behalf of the MNF-I.

Mr. Khalilzad said that the security environment had continued to improve, thanks to the efforts of the Iraqi security forces and MNF-I. Security incidents had fallen to their lowest level in over four years, notwithstanding a temporary increase in violence associated with recent Iraqi military operations in Basra, Sadr City and Mosul.

Mr. Gambari said that the first annual Review Conference of the International Compact with Iraq (Stockholm, Sweden, 29 May) had met with a feeling of new hope that the people and the Government of Iraq had started to overcome daunting challenges and to work together at rebuilding their country.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Zebari said that his country had recently passed the five-year milestone in its democratic transition. Iraq had stepped back from the brink of civil war, the volume of oil output was at its highest level since 2004 and annual core inflation had been reduced from 36 per cent at the end of 2006 to 16 per cent. Iraq was negotiating bilateral strategic agreements with the United States to provide the framework for security arrangements that would address Iraq’s security needs covered at present by the multinational force.

Security Council statement. Following the briefing, Security Council members, in a press statement [SC/9358], expressed their agreement with the continuation of the MNF-I mandate and other arrangements, as discussed by the Iraqi Government in its 10 June letter.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In his fourth report on UNAMI operations [S/2008/495], the Secretary-General said that a combination of political and military efforts had contributed to improvements in security across Iraq. Nevertheless, Diyala Province in north-central Iraq continued to experience daily attacks against Government, security and international elements, and in Kirkuk, targeted assassinations occurred against law enforcement and other officials. Ansar al-Sunnah and numerous affiliates were still capable of carrying out deadly attacks, and Al-Qaida maintained a presence in Anbar, where it appeared intent on attacking tribal groups that were cooperating with local or international security forces.

The Iraqi security forces commenced several major operations concurrently: Operation Peace, against renegade groups in the Sadr City area of Baghdad; Operation Promise of Peace, in the southern town of Amarah in Missan Province; and Operation Lion's Roar, against insurgent groups in Mosul and other parts of Ninawa Province. The ceasefire declared by Moqtada al-Sadr on 11 May for Sadr City remained in effect, and State authority and basic services were being restored in coordination with Sadr movement leaders.

On 19 July, Tawafuq ended a year-long boycott and rejoined Prime Minister al-Maliki's Cabinet when Parliament approved six Sunni officials. Four members of the Shiite Unified Iraqi Alliance also joined the Cabinet in the place of Sadrist and Iraqi National List members of Parliament, who had initiated a boycott in April and August 2007, respectively. On 29 April, more than 30 representatives from the main political and ethnic groups held a reconciliation meeting in Helsinki, Finland, under the auspices of a Finnish NGO, and formulated principles for joint national action, agreeing on a set of principles at a second meeting in Baghdad on 5 July.

On 5 June, UNAMI, which had been working to establish a process for addressing disputed internal boundaries, presented to the Government its initial analysis on the first four of several disputed areas in northern Iraq. Reactions reflected the sensitive nature of the issue, but the Mission was committed to promoting a political and constitutional process acceptable to the major stakeholders to resolve disputed internal boundaries—including the status of Kirkuk.

Regionally, Bahrain, Jordan, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates announced the resumption of full diplomatic representation in Iraq. Following the high-level International Compact with Iraq Annual Review Conference (Stockholm, 29 May), the United Arab Emirates announced on 6 July that it would forgive Iraqi debt. Turkey's Prime Minister visited Baghdad on 10 July—the first such visit in 18 years—and a border security pact was signed. The Special Representative continued outreach to prepare for the provincial elections and held bilateral meetings in Amman, Jordan, Baghdad and Kuwait on Iraq's further stabilization and development.

Iraq began its voter registration update as scheduled on 15 July, opening all but one of the 564 voter registration centres on the first day. The update would run for 30 days, giving some 15 million eligible Iraqis the opportunity to verify their details, and adding new eligible voters to the provisional list. On other matters, the constitutional review process remained deadlocked over the powers of the presidency, the powers of regions and governorates, and oil and gas provisions.

Despite improved security conditions in Baghdad, Amarah and Mosul after the operations against armed militias, UNAMI remained concerned about the safety and legal protection of hundreds of arrested suspects, as well as detention conditions and lack of due process. Those apparently rounded up as suspects included a number of children.

Many abductions were reported, followed by ransom demands or killings, as were assassinations of targeted individuals, including public officials. Journalists, educators, medical doctors, judges and lawyers remained prime targets for armed militias and criminal gangs. Gender-based violence, murders, suicides, so-called accidents and other suspected "honour crimes" continued to be documented in the Kurdistan region.

Violations against children were being committed on a large scale and included child recruitment, attacks on schools and hospitals, killing and maiming by indiscriminate attacks, and lack of humanitarian access due to insecure conditions. Some 1,500 children were known to be held in detention facilities for alleged association with armed groups. The Secretary-General's Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict visited Iraq from 20 to 25 April and reported that children lacked access to education, health care and clean water. She expressed concern about the use of children by armed groups as spies or messengers; even more troubling was their use as soldiers and bomb planters or carriers.

UNAMI continued to conduct field visits in the Kurdistan region, including to detention facilities. Its frequent and intensive contacts with governmental and civil society counterparts on a range of human rights issues had resulted in positive changes, including measures by the regional authorities aimed at improving the conduct of their law-enforcement officials.

During the first half of 2008, the Expanded Humanitarian Response Fund for Iraq funded 23 Iraqi and international NGO projects, with grants of up to $400,000 to deliver emergency relief assistance to the most vulnerable or most seriously affected Iraqis. The UN country team developed an assistance strategy for Iraq for 2008–2010, which was approved by an interministerial committee within the Government in June.

Major security operations in Sadr City, Mosul and Amarah prompted the UN country team to work closely on contingency plans for humanitarian response. In the most acute of the three crises, the United Nations delivered water and sanitation assistance for an estimated 120,000 families in Sadr City. Sanitation agencies supplied 10 million litres of safe water to residents and hospitals, as well as water hygiene/purification kits. UNHCR provided non-food items to internally displaced persons and supported the repair of some 300 conflict-affected houses and shops in the Sadr City and Shula districts of Baghdad. The World Food Programme (WFP) delivered 296 tons of emergency food to 38,500 residents of Sadr City, and the International Organization for Migration delivered 2,000 food baskets to hospitals in Sadr City and Shula. In addition, 1,500 food baskets were delivered to hospitals in Basra, Wassit, Babylon and Qadisiyah.

Refugees and internally displaced persons continued to return to their places of origin at a steady rate of some 10,000 persons a month, and there had been no major incidence of displacement during the quarter. WHO and UNICEF supported a vaccination drive for 239,000 children, which contained a measles outbreak. UNHCR, with its partners, rehabilitated 311 housing units in Baghdad, including in Sadr City, and another 300 were being completed or under way in Basra and Mosul. Advocacy by the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) resulted in the establishment of an emergency shelter committee and the allocation of $12 million by the Ministry of Construction and Housing for house rehabilitation in Sadr City.

In addition to 17 ongoing education projects funded by the International Reconstruction Fund Facility for Iraq, UN country team agencies started repairs on 14 of 22 damaged schools in Sadr City. UN-Habitat was also working on schools in Najaf and Samawa, while UNICEF had projects in Sadr City, Babylon, Karbala, Missan and Kirkuk. UNICEF continued to focus on accelerated learning programmes for students whose education had been interrupted.

Security Council consideration (August). The Security Council met on 6 August [meeting 5949] to consider the Secretary-General's report. It was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, B. Lynn Pascoe, and by the representative of the United States, Alejandro Wolff, on behalf of MNF-I.

Mr. Pascoe said that political and military efforts had contributed to improved security in most parts of Iraq, but civilian casualties remained high. The Independent High Electoral Commission had reached a number of milestones; it was now crucial to come to agreement on new electoral legislation.

Mr. Wolff said that security incidents were at their lowest level in over four years, even as MNF-I had drawn down its forces from surge levels. The increase in the capacity of the Iraqi security forces, with more than 580,000 personnel, had contributed substantially to the improved environment. Out of 161 Iraqi army combat battalions, 93 were rated as able to fully plan, execute and sustain operations with minimal or no assistance from coalition forces beyond enablers and adviser teams.

Iraq said that its Government's success in building its armed forces on a national, professional and neutral basis led to their determination to strike at Al-Qaida and other militias. The decline in violence led to a return to normal life in all parts of the country, and encouraged internally displaced families and Iraqi refugees to return home. Adoption of a general amnesty law had enhanced the national reconciliation efforts. The Government's top priorities were to improve economic conditions and revive trade.

Extension of UNAMI mandate

By a 4 August letter to the Council President [S/2008/523], the Iraqi Foreign Minister conveyed his Government's wish that the UNAMI mandate be extended for a 12-month period. The Government looked forward to a more effective role for UNAMI with the return to Iraq of the UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes and their valuable contribution to its reconstruction.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 August [meeting 5950], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1830(2008). The draft [S/2008/529] was submitted by Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his report on UNAMI activities [S/2008/688], submitted in response to resolution 1830(2008), the Secretary-General said that the decrease in security incidents and relative stability had continued, even though United States troops deployed for the military surge had been withdrawn. The Government had taken control of the Sons of Iraq forces, and Moqtada al-Sadr's ceasefire instruction to the Jaysh al-Mahdi militia remained in force.

The multinational force formally transferred security responsibilities to the Iraqi army in Al-Anbar Governorate in September, in Babil Governorate on 23 October, and in Wassit Governorate on 27 October, bringing the number of provinces under Iraqi control to 13. The integration of some 100,000 members of the Sons of Iraq into Government structures began on 1 October, when 54,000 fighters in the Baghdad area came under Iraqi supervision.

Armed opposition groups continued targeting Iraqi security forces and prominent individuals, and security remained particularly challenging in Mosul (Ninawa) and Khanaqin (Diyala). On 5 September, agreement was reached on a separation of forces in and around Khanaqin town, where the situation was tense but stable.

The Council of Representatives adopted the provincial election law on 24 September, and the Presidency Council ratified it on 7 October. It was amended on 3 November to include provisions for minority representation in Baghdad, Basra and Ninawa. Provincial council elections were to take place in early 2009 in 14 of Iraq's 18 governorates. UNAMI launched a nationwide project aimed at providing Iraqi citizens with balanced and reliable information on the elections.

On 26 October, United States forces in Iraq attacked a house in the village of Sukkariyah in the Syrian Arab Republic (see below). The Secretary-General expressed regret over the loss of civilian lives and called for regional cooperation to solve issues of common concern, including border security.

UNAMI continued its work on disputed internal boundaries, conducting multiple field visits to meet with provincial, district and subdistrict officials, party representatives, religious leaders, tribal elders, minority groups and members of civil society. Bahrain, Jordan, Kuwait, Syria and the United Arab Emirates resumed the functioning of their embassies in Baghdad, and Egypt indicated that it would reopen its embassy in the near future.

The United Nations Assistance Strategy for Iraq 2008–2010 was signed on 13 August. It included three $30 million cross-sectoral initiatives on private sector development, to reform Iraq's investment laws; on public sector reform, to strengthen anti-corruption and transparency initiatives; and on decentralization, to enable local governments to plan, fund and manage the delivery of social services.

With fewer children attending school and dropout rates rising, the United Nations developed a $13 million programme for the education sector. Humanitarian assistance increased during the quarter, as new funds were pledged in response to the $267 million 2008 consolidated appeal—of which 55 per cent was funded. In September, UNDP and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime launched a five-year anti-corruption programme.

In September, Parliament approved the public census bill, and United Nations Population Fund was implementing a support programme for the census. National survey data being finalized by WFP suggested that access to social services, including electricity, had improved from its lowest levels in 2005 and 2006. However, access to safe drinking water had fallen to as low as 31 per cent in the poorest subdistricts, and access to sanitation services to 35 per cent.

Communications. On 28 October [S/2008/676], the Syrian Arab Republic said that on 26 October, four United States helicopters had violated Syrian airspace from Iraq, attacking a civilian building in Sukkariyah and killing eight persons, including four children. Condemning the act as a grave infraction of its sovereignty and a violation of the UN Charter, Syria demanded that Iraq prevent any further use of its territory to launch such attacks. On 5 November [S/2008/687], Cuba, in its capacity as Chair of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Alignment Movement and the Movement's 118 members, also condemned that attack and deplored the loss of civilian lives.

Security Council consideration (November). On 14 November [meeting 6016], the Council was briefed by the Special Representative, Mr. de Mistura, and by the representative of the United States, Mr. Khalilzad, on behalf of MNF-I.

Mr. de Mistura said that the forthcoming provincial elections of 31 January 2009 were rightly viewed as an opportunity to establish a more inclusive sectarian balance and shape a new political landscape. The Electoral Commission, supported by UNAMI, had trained 42,785 local observers and was working with the Minister of Education to employ some 270,000 teachers, clerks and headmasters to assist on polling day.

Mr. Khalilzad said that there had been an 81 per cent decrease in improvised explosive device explosions and a 72 per cent decrease in suicide explosions. Nevertheless, Al-Qaida remained a significant threat, as did Iranian surrogate militants and Jaysh al-Mahdi militia forces. Countering that threat were 165 Iraqi army combat battalions conducting operations; the air force was flying more than 300 sorties a week; the navy was conducting three times as many patrols as in 2007; and the national police had over 41,000 personnel.

Iraq said that the number of officers in the Iraqi army had increased from 9,800 to 13,911 and the number of soldiers from 116,135 to 217,176. Following terrorist attacks on the Christian community in Mosul Province, the Government sent security forces to protect those civilians. More than 300 Christian families returned to their homes after security and stability were restored in their neighbourhoods.

Report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2009/102], the Secretary-General reviewed developments through the end of 2008. He said that on 27 November, the Iraqi Council of Representatives had approved the final draft of a bilateral security agreement which placed United States forces under the authority and jurisdiction of the Government of Iraq, and included a timeline for their withdrawal from Iraq by December 2011. The Council of Representatives also voted on 23 December to authorize the Government to allow non-United States forces to remain in Iraq until 31 July 2009.

The activities of the Special Representative and UNAMI had focused on supporting the Independent High Electoral Commission in preparing for the elections on 31 January 2009. Preparation of UNAMI's analytical report on disputed internal boundaries for presentation to the Government continued, and UNAMI provided support to the Government in its relations with neighbouring countries.

Following the report of the Constitutional Review Committee in July, UNAMI's Office of Constitutional Support identified federalism and hydrocarbon regulation as priority issues for resolution and for the country's long-term stability. To build on the impetus generated by the report, UNAMI hosted a round-table discussion in November in Baghdad to discuss hydrocarbon management in the context of a federal system.

In advance of the elections, UNAMI led efforts to address the issue of minority representation in the form of an amendment to the 2008 electoral law. The Independent High Electoral Commission, assisted by UNAMI, developed polling and counting procedures; formulated public and civil society outreach strategies; and procured materials, including the final voter's lists and ballots. The public outreach unit of the Independent High Electoral Commission, backed by electoral assistance and public information officers from UNAMI and the United Nations Office for Project Services, held dozens of civil and voter education events for opinion leaders throughout the country to address key election topics, including anti-fraud measures, campaign rules and regulations, and voting procedures.

Iraq's efforts to meet internationally agreed development targets, as set forth in the International Compact for Iraq, received recognition through cancellation of Iraq's debt in December by the Paris Club, an informal group of rich lender nations. As at 31 December, commitments to the United Nations Development Group Iraq Trust Fund amounted to $1.36 billion, with total deposits of $1.33 billion; 159 projects and joint programmes valued at $1.22 billion had been approved for funding as at 31 December, including $15 million for humanitarian relief through the Expanded Humanitarian Response Fund.

Despite progress on humanitarian issues throughout 2008, conditions for vulnerable and displaced Iraqis were still a concern. Security improvements had increased opportunities for UN relief programmes, but implementation had been constrained due to limited funding, with only 67 per cent of those programmes funded as at December. The 2009 consolidated appeal for Iraq and the subregion, launched on 19 November, sought to address that issue. It aimed to provide relief for the most vulnerable, including returnee families; support Iraqi refugees in safety and dignity until return was possible; and offer a platform for dialogue between Iraq and its neighbours on issues of common concern. The final appeal requested $192 million for activities inside Iraq and $355 million for activities outside Iraq—the latter to be coordinated by UNHCR. Efforts to restore essential services continued, with education and environmental issues a priority.

Although Iraq, in recent months, had witnessed gradual stabilization and further improvements in security conditions—with a decrease in violent, high-visibility, mass-casualty attacks by militias, insurgents and criminal gangs—indiscriminate attacks by roadside, car or suicide bombs were almost a daily occurrence. A troubling aspect was the frequent use of women, and occasionally even children, as suicide bombers.

The Council of Representatives, on 16 November, enacted a law establishing an Independent High Commission for Human Rights—marking the culmination of two years of advocacy work by UNAMI and its international partners. A role for UNAMI during the establishment and start-up phase of the Commission was enshrined in the law.

The General Assembly approved $5 million for work on the design of the UNAMI integrated headquarters in Baghdad, the construction of which remained essential for the continued delivery of its mandate. Further to his letter of 12 December to the Security Council President and the President's reply (see p. 391), the Secretary-General proceeded to negotiate a new agreement with the United States, setting out arrangements concerning the continued provision by the United States forces of security support for the UN presence in Iraq. Those negotiations were concluded on 31 December. The Iraqi Government was kept informed of the negotiations and was provided with the text of the signed agreement.

UNAMI financing

On 10 October [A/63/346/Add.5], the Secretary-General submitted the proposed resource requirements for UNAMI for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2009, totalling $161,760,800 net ($168,972,900 gross).

In December [A/63/593], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly approve the resources requested by the Secretary-General, subject to its observations and recommendations.

On 24 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 63/263, section XI (see p. 1548), approved that amount as part of the $429,497,600 budget for the 27 special political missions authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council.

UN integrated compound

In response to the General Assembly's request, in resolution 62/238, section V [YUN 2007, p. 1452], for a new, detailed proposal on the construction of the UN integrated compound in Baghdad, the Secretary-General, in May [A/62/828], reported that a site formerly known as the Al-Sijud Palace had been identified as more suitable. He requested that the Assembly approve in principle the proposal to build the headquarters there; note the preliminary cost estimate of $98.6 million; approve $5 million for preparatory work; and ask for a new, complete and detailed proposal to be considered by the Assembly in March 2009.

In a report on the proposed UNAMI headquarters dated 11 December [A/63/601], ACABQ noted that the Secretary-General's cost estimate of $98.6 million for the project was based on preliminary assumptions. It recommended that the Assembly await his new, detailed proposal before pronouncing itself on the cost requirements.

On 24 December, by resolution 63/263, section X (see p. 1548), the Assembly approved commitment authority for 2009 for UNAMI in the amount of $5 million to undertake design work in connection with the construction of the compound. The Secretary-General was requested to submit a new, complete and detailed proposal, with detailed financial requirements and clear timelines, to be considered by the Assembly during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Multinational force

In December 2007, Iraq had requested the extension of the mandate multinational force in Iraq (MNF-I) until 31 December 2008, and considered that request to be the final one [YUN 2007, p. 349].

In a letter to the Security Council dated 10 June [S/2008/380], Iraq's Foreign Minister Zebari welcomed the support of MNF-I and noted that Iraq was negotiating bilateral security arrangements with the United States and other friendly nations that should address its security needs currently covered by MNF-I.

In a 7 December letter to the Security Council President (see p. 393), Prime Minister al-Maliki said that in view of the fact that Iraq had signed the Agreement between the United States and Iraq on the Withdrawal of United States Forces from Iraq and the Organization of Their Activities during Their Temporary Presence in Iraq, his country looked forward to the end of the MNF-I mandate on 31 December. Iraq expressed its gratitude to the Governments of the States that had contributed to those forces, and to the forces themselves, for the services rendered during their presence.

On 12 December [S/2008/783], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that MNF-I's authorization was to expire on 31 December. With the new Iraq-United States agreement, the United States forces were expected to remain beyond that date. He would therefore seek to negotiate an agreement for the continued provision by United States forces of security support for the UN presence in Iraq. On 16 December [S/2008/784], the Council welcomed the proposed arrangements for the establishment of an integrated UN security structure for UNAMI.

On 16 July, Poland transferred to the Iraqi authorities control of the province of Al-Qadisiyah, for whose security and stabilization it had been responsible in the framework of the multinational force. The process of withdrawing Polish military personnel was concluded by the end of October. On 19 November [S/2008/722], Poland transmitted to the Security Council a letter on its decision to withdraw its military contingent from Iraq.

International Advisory and Monitoring Board

The International Advisory and Monitoring Board for Iraq (IAMB), established by Security Council resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338] to ensure that the Development Fund for Iraq was used in a transparent manner for the benefit of the Iraqi people and that Iraqi export sales of petroleum products were consistent with international market best practices, continued to oversee the auditing of the Fund.

Security Council consideration (June). On 13 June [meeting 5910], the Council was briefed by the United Nations Controller, Warren Sach, speaking as the Secretary-General's designated representative on IAMB. He said that from its inception in December 2003 to 31 December 2007, IAMB had been informed that approximately $106.3 billion had been deposited in the Development Fund for Iraq from the sale of oil and oil products. The sum of $10.4 billion had also been deposited with the Fund from the balance of the oil-for-food funds held under escrow by the United Nations, and a further $1.5 billion had been deposited as proceeds from frozen assets.

Since his previous briefing to the Council [YUN 2007, p. 353], IAMB had met twice, making a total of 23 meetings since its inception. It approved the appointment by the Government of Iraq of independent public accountants as external auditors, reviewed the periodic audit results, and requested and approved special audits. The results of its work were available on its website.

In 2007 and 2008, IAMB oversaw two audits of the Fund, covering 2006 and 2007. Those audits were conducted by the international accounting firm Ernst & Young, and covered oil export sales, the accounting for the proceeds from oil export sales, the Fund's financial statements and disbursement procedures for its resources. In a draft report covering 2007, the auditors, while highlighting some improvements, especially in access to spending ministries, also underscored weaknesses in internal controls. Those weaknesses included incomplete record-keeping at the Ministry of Finance, the lack of a comprehensive oil metering system, the sale of oil and oil products outside of the Fund, incomplete contract information associated with the United States agencies' contracts, and bartering.

IAMB welcomed the progress made in 2007 to strengthen the financial and administrative controls over the use of Fund resources in the spending ministries. However, there continued to be insufficient progress in internal control matters in Iraq. IAMB found that further measures to strengthen the internal control framework were necessary.

IAMB had recommended in 2004 the installation of a comprehensive oil metering system in Iraq in accordance with standard oil industry practices, as oil metering was a key factor in achieving financial transparency and accountability. While the Government supported oil metering, progress had been slow. Some metering had been installed at some oil terminals, but there continued to be no metering in the oil fields. A metering system would help improve overall controls and curtail smuggling. Steps were being taken to address the problem, but the matter was urgent, especially in the light of the auditors' report that showed unreconciled differences related to production, export sales and internal consumption.

IAMB was concerned that barter transactions were not accounted for in the Fund. The use of barter transactions made it difficult to determine whether fair value had been received for Iraq's oil export revenues. Moreover, as no revenues were generated from such barter or other in-kind deals and the notional value of such transactions was not recorded against the Fund, IAMB felt that they could be inconsistent with resolution 1483(2003), which required that all Iraqi oil export sales be deposited into the Development Fund and the United Nations Compensation Fund.

The results of the audits in 2007 indicated that the overall financial system of controls in place in the spending ministries, in the United States agencies' handling of outstanding commitments using Fund resources and in the Iraqi administration of Fund resources remained deficient, and financial management reforms needed to be pursued further.

The Foreign Minister of Iraq, Hoshiyar Zebari, said that his country welcomed the continuation of the arrangements regarding the Development Fund and IAMB, as extended in resolution 1790(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 349].

Following the briefing, Security Council members, in a press statement [SC/9358], agreed upon the continuation of the arrangements for the Development Fund and IAMB, as requested by the Iraqi Government in its 10 June letter [S/2008/380].

On 22 December, by resolution 1859(2008) (see below), the Security Council extended the mandate of IAMB until 31 December 2009.

ANNEX

Letter dated 7 December 2008 from Mr. Nuri Kamel al-Maliki, Prime Minister of Iraq, to the President of the Security Council

Further to our letter dated 31 December 2007 addressed to you, in which we indicated that the extension of the mandate of the Multinational Forces in Iraq (MNF-I) would be for one final time, with appreciation for the important role and efforts of those forces in assisting Iraq to achieve security and stability, and in view of the fact that Iraq has signed the Agreement between the United States of America and the Republic of Iraq on the Withdrawal of United States Forces from Iraq and the Organization of Their Activities during Their Temporary Presence in Iraq, we look forward to the ending of the mandate of MNF-I on 31 December 2008. On behalf of the Government and people of Iraq, I express my gratitude to the Governments of the States that have contributed to those forces and to the forces themselves for the services rendered during their presence in the territory, waters and airspace of Iraq.

Iraq has inherited debts and claims from the previous regime and has made great progress in settling them. However, much remains to be done, and our efforts to settle those claims and debts will require some time. Temporary support from the international community will continue to be required during the coming phase. Therefore, we hope that the international community will continue current protections and arrangements for petroleum, petroleum products and natural gas from Iraq and the proceeds thereof until such time as the Government of Iraq is able to take the measures necessary to settle those debts and claims inherited from the previous regime. Oil revenues constitute 95 per cent of Government resources, and these claims have an impact on reconstruction and the economic transformations taking place in Iraq, and consequently pose a grave threat to Iraq's stability and security and by extension to international peace and security.

The Government of Iraq recognizes the importance of the provisions of paragraph 22 of Security Council resolution 1483(2003) ensuring that Iraq's petroleum and natural gas resources and proceeds and obligations arising from sales thereof, as well as funds deposited in the Development Fund for Iraq, shall be used for reconstruction projects and other purposes benefiting the people of Iraq. Therefore, bearing in mind the exception provided for in paragraph 27 of Security Council resolution 1546(2004), Iraq requests that the Security Council continue to implement the provisions of paragraph 22 of Security Council resolution 1483(2003) until 31 December 2009, including those relating to funds or other financial assets or economic resources mentioned in paragraph 23 of that resolution.

The Government of Iraq believes that the provisions of Security Council resolution 1546(2004) relating to the deposit of proceeds into the Development Fund for Iraq will help to ensure that proceeds from Iraq's natural resources will be used for the benefit of the Iraqi people, as will the role played by the International Advisory and Monitoring Board. The Government of Iraq recognizes that the Development Fund for Iraq plays an important role in helping Iraq to reassure donors and creditors that Iraq is administering its resources and debts in a responsible manner in the service of the Iraqi people. It should be noted that Iraq is attempting, after years of isolation under the previous regime, to form a new partnership with the international community with a view to integrating its economy into those of the region and the world through the International Compact with Iraq, and its efforts were endorsed by more than 90 countries and international organizations in the Stockholm Declaration of 29 May 2008. In view of this, Iraq requests the Security Council to extend the mandates of the Development Fund for Iraq and the International Advisory and Monitoring Board for a period of 12 months, with a review of the extension to be conducted before 15 June 2009 at the request of the Government of Iraq.

The Government of Iraq affirms that it honours its obligations under Security Council resolutions and follows policies of peaceful coexistence with its neighbours conducive to the security and stability of the region. The Government of Iraq looks forward to recognition by the Security Council that major positive developments have taken place in Iraq, that the situation in Iraq is fundamentally different from that prevailing at the time of the adoption of Security Council resolution 661(1990), and that the time has come for Iraq to regain its legal and international status prevailing prior to the adoption by the Security Council of that resolution and the subsequent sanctions imposed on it under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Government of Iraq requests that the Security Council include this letter as an annex to the resolution currently being drafted on Iraq, and should be grateful if the President of the Security Council would circulate it to the members of the Security Council as soon as possible.

Following the adoption of the resolution, Iraqi Foreign Minister Zebari told the Security Council that the situation in Iraq was fundamentally different from that prevailing when resolution 661(1990) [YUN 1990, p. 192] was adopted. Iraq was no longer a rogue State flouting international law and posing a threat to international peace and regional security. His Government therefore requested a review of all Security Council resolutions pertaining to Iraq to be undertaken jointly by the Secretary-General and Iraq and reported to the Security Council as the final arbiter, to take stock of its remaining obligations and to assess the relevance and validity of all such resolutions to Iraq's current situation. Iraq looked forward to recognition by the United Nations of its positive development, so Iraq could resume its legal and international status that prevailed before the adoption of resolution 661(1990).

Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1518(2003)

On 14 February [S/2008/109], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1518(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 362] submitted to the Council President the Committee's annual report for 2007. The Committee was established to continue to identify, in accordance with paragraphs 19 and 23 of resolution 1483(2003) [ibid., p. 338], individuals and entities associated with the former Iraqi regime whose funds, other financial assets and economic resources should be frozen and transferred to the Development Fund for Iraq. During the reporting period, the Committee considered communications from countries requesting to list five individuals in its asset-freeze list and delist three, without arriving at a decision on those requests, which remained under consideration.

Subsequently, the Committee Chairman submitted to the Council President the annual report for 2008 [S/2009/79]. During that period, the Committee received requests for delisting from an individual and an entity included on the Committee's asset-freeze and transfer lists. The Committee decided to keep the individual and the entity on the lists. A number of issues brought to the Committee's attention in 2007 remained before it in 2008. By year's end, the Committee had not arrived at a decision regarding those issues, which remained under its consideration. The asset-freeze and transfer lists of individuals and entities were available on the Committee's website.

UN Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission and IAEA activities

In 2007, by resolution 1762(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 356], the Security Council terminated the mandate of the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC), as well as the related Nuclear Verification Office of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in Iraq. The Council had established UNMOVIC in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 230] to verify Iraq's compliance with its obligation to be rid of its weapons of mass destruction and to operate a monitoring and verification system to ascertain that Iraq did not reacquire those weapons.

Final report of UNMOVIC. As called for in Security Council resolution 1762(2007), UNMOVIC submitted its final report to the Council on 9 June [S/2008/372]. The report provided a final account of UNMOVIC activities since the Secretary-General's report of September 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 358], and described the work undertaken to appropriately dispose of its archives and other property. Work relating to the disposition of its archives containing paper documents and multimedia material had been completed, with more than 1,200 boxes containing some 8,500 folders transferred to the United Nations Archives and Records Management Section. Over the years, the Special Commission and UNMOVIC had developed a unique UN verification and monitoring mechanism in the area of weapons of mass destruction and long-range delivery systems that had been recognized as a valuable contribution to international efforts to eliminate and counter threats of weapons of mass destruction. The Special Commission and UNMOVIC had put into practice many innovative verification and monitoring procedures, and established a roster of inspectors comprising more than 350 experts in the biological, chemical and missile areas drawn from more than 50 countries.

On 27 June [S/2008/423], the Security Council informed the Secretary-General that its members supported the actions and recommendations contained in the report regarding the disposition and safeguarding of the records and archives, strictly controlling access to archives provided by Member States in confidence or with proliferation potential, and the disposition of non-expendable and other property.

Communication. Pursuant to resolution 1762(2007), Iraq on 29 May [S/2008/350] reported to the Council on progress made in adhering to all applicable disarmament and non-proliferation treaties and international agreements—notably the 1992 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons [YUN 1992, p. 65], an Additional Protocol to its Safeguards Agreement, and progress made by the National Monitoring Directorate and the Government with regard to dual-use controls and the harmonization of Iraq's export legislation with international standards. Iraq had declared its support for the international non-proliferation regime and its adherence to all disarmament and non-proliferation treaties. It had made arrangements for joining the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, had approved accession to the Chemical Weapons Convention, and was making preparations for signing the model Additional Protocol to the IAEA Comprehensive Safeguards Agreement [YUN 1997, p. 486]. It was making preparations for accession to the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, in addition to preparing mechanisms for dealing with the illicit trade in nuclear material. Iraq believed in the necessity of making the Middle East a region free from weapons of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weapons.

On 27 June [S/2008/423], the Security Council welcomed Iraq's May report.

Oil-for-food programme

Under the oil-for-food programme, established by Security Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], Iraq had been authorized to sell petroleum and petroleum products to finance humanitarian assistance, thereby alleviating the adverse consequences of the sanctions imposed by the Council. The programme was phased out in November 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 362].

United Nations Iraq Account

Following the termination of all activities under the oil-for-food programme [ibid., p. 366], the United Nations retained responsibility for the administration and execution of letters of credit issued under the programme by the bank holding the United Nations Iraq Account, Banque Nationale de Paris (BNP) Paribas, for purchasing humanitarian supplies for the south/centre of Iraq, until such letters were executed or expired, in accordance with Security Council resolution 1483(2003) [ibid., p. 338].

On 23 January [S/2008/41], the Secretary-General informed the Council of progress made with respect to the Working Group set up to minimize the number of unpaid letters of credit [YUN 2007, p. 361].

The Group, composed of representatives of the Iraqi Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Iraqi Central Bank and the UN Secretariat, met in Amman, Jordan, from 7 to 17 January. On 27 December 2007, the Secretary-General had transferred some $161 million of unencumbered funds to the Development Fund for Iraq. It was his intention to continue transferring unencumbered funds consistent with Council resolution 1483(2003), as the termination process continued. At the same time, the reserve of $187 million and the balance of $225 million referred to in his December 2007 note [ibid.] would be retained until all remaining issues had been resolved.

On 29 February [S/2008/140], the Council took note of the $161 million transfer to the Development Fund for Iraq. It called upon the Government of Iraq and its Central Bank to transmit by 31 March the necessary confirmations of arrival of goods for which there were no commercial disputes or for which there were commercial disputes that could be resolved in the meantime. It also requested a comprehensive report from the Secretary-General by 15 March on progress achieved in reducing the number of outstanding letters of credit and any other outstanding issues.

On 11 March [S/2008/175], the Secretary-General informed the Council that the number of outstanding letters of credit had decreased from 210 at the end of 2007 to 167, which was still high. In addition, the processing of the authentication documents by the Government of Iraq remained slow. He recommended that the Working Group meet in May to review results achieved as at 30 April. He also recommended that $100 million of the $225 million held pending resolution of certain issues be released and transferred to the Development Fund for Iraq pursuant to resolution 1483(2003), subject to no objection by the Council, while the $187 million of unencumbered funds in the United Nations Iraq Account should continue to be held as a financial reserve.

On 9 May [S/2008/318], the Secretary-General provided the Council with the Working Group's report on its meeting (Amman, 1–5 May). He said that as at 30 April, the number of outstanding letters of credit had decreased to 151, but the provision of authentication documents was slow or non-existent. The Secretary-General said that he would report to the Council following the Group's final meeting in July, when the Council might decide how to resolve outstanding issues, including the establishment of a dispute resolution mechanism. He also sought the Council's guidance on the timing of any possible release and transfer of unencumbered funds to the Development Fund for Iraq.

On 13 May [S/2008/369], Iraq suggested that the deadline for providing the confirmations of arrival and resolving the disputes between Iraq's concerned ministries and the sellers be extended to 30 June, and that the Working Group should review the situation early in July.

On 23 May [S/2008/341], the Security Council requested that the Working Group reconvene in June, so that the Council might receive an updated report in July. It would then take the necessary decisions in order to conclude all outstanding issues and end the oil-for-food programme without the possibility of any further extensions. It encouraged the Iraqi Government to do its utmost to expedite the processing of the remaining letters of credit. While recognizing that unencumbered funds were available, in principle, for transfer to the Development Fund for Iraq, the Council recommended that all such funds associated with the oil-for-food programme remain in the Iraq escrow account until such time as all outstanding issues were resolved.

On 25 July [S/2008/492], the Secretary-General informed the Council about the Working Group's meeting (Amman, 27–30 June). As at 30 June, 132 letters of credit with an approximate value of claims of $273 million remained outstanding. The Working Group held that any commercial disputes in connection with the letters of credit should be addressed through the dispute resolution mechanism established in the underlying commercial contract between the Government of Iraq and the relevant suppliers or, in the absence of such a mechanism, by a competent court.

The Working Group indicated a series of alternatives that the Security Council could consider in order to conclude all outstanding issues. Following the current approach, the Council might instruct the Working Group to continue its work. Alternatively, a dispute resolution mechanism might be used to resolve all outstanding issues relating to the unpaid letters of credit—either as proposed by the Secretary-General [YUN 2007, p. 361] or in a simplified version. Finally, responsibility for the administration of remaining activity under the programme might be transferred to the Government of Iraq. In that case, the disposition of funds in the escrow account would be determined by the Security Council and be kept until all issues were resolved. Alternatively, they could be released without delay to the Development Fund for Iraq.

In addition, the Government of Iraq would be required to indemnify the United Nations with regard to all activities of the Organization, its representatives and agents in connection with the programme since its inception and with regard to funds transferred to the Development Fund. The Government would waive the right to any and all actions against the United Nations, its representatives and agents with regard to all activities of the Organization in connection with the programme since its inception.

On 25 July [S/2008/521], Costa Rica requested that the Security Council coordinate with the Secretary-General to ensure that closure of the oil-for-food programme not expose the United Nations to questions regarding its financial management. Costa Rica suggested measures to prevent conflicts of interest, surcharges and other irregularities.

On 26 August [S/2008/588], Costa Rica's Foreign Minister requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to provide the list of all natural and legal persons with outstanding invoices from the oil-for-food programme. He noted that the reports of the International Advisory and Monitoring Board in 2004, 2006 and 2008 revealed shortcomings in the administration of the Development Fund. In view of that, he considered the proposal by the Working Group on the possibility of transferring funds corresponding to outstanding claims from the escrow account to the Development Fund to be a matter of concern.

On 15 September (decision 62/555), the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item entitled "Follow-up to the recommendations on administrative management and internal oversight of the Independent Inquiry Committee into the United Nations Oil-for-Food Programme" to its sixty-third (2008) session. On 24 December (decision 63/552), the General Assembly decided that the agenda item would remain for consideration during its sixty-third (2009) session.

Report of Board of Auditors

On 4 August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report [S/2008/510] of the Board of Auditors on the financial statements of the United Nations escrow (Iraq) accounts for the biennium ended 31 December 2007. Those financial statements reflected the transactions covering the fourth year of the phase-down operations following the termination of the oil-for-food programme in November 2003 pursuant to Council resolution 1483(2003).

Total income was $162.6 million in 2006–2007 compared with $255.8 million for the previous biennium. The 36 per cent decrease was primarily attributable to the transfers made to the Development Fund for Iraq, amounting to $371.1 million. Total expenditure amounted to $118 million, compared with $421.5 million for the previous biennium, a decrease of 72 per cent. That resulted in an excess of income over expenditure of $44.6 million, compared with a deficit of $165.7 million in the preceding biennium.

As the programme was under liquidation, 62 per cent or $100.6 million of the total income was derived from interest on cash and term deposits and the cash pool. The cash pool was maintained to cover claims for outstanding obligations and other liquidation expenses.

The total cash resources of $1 billion adequately covered the $657.5 million in current and prior period unliquidated obligations arising from approved contracts for humanitarian supplies and oil spares. Total reserves and fund balances increased by 40 per cent, or $111 million, from $277 million in 2005 to $388 million in 2007. The increase was principally brought about by the excess of income over expenditure of $44.6 million and the increase in operating reserves of $60 million.

The Board made one recommendation arising out of its audit, relating to the release of cash collaterals associated with the expired letters of credit with no claims of delivery.

Iraq–Kuwait

POWs, Kuwaiti property and missing persons

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to Security Council resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], the Secretary-General submitted reports in June [S/2008/405] and December [S/2008/761] on Iraq's compliance with its obligations regarding the repatriation or return of all Kuwaiti and third-country nationals or their remains, and on the return of all Kuwaiti property, including archives, seized by Iraq during its occupation of Kuwait, which began in August 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 189].

In June, the Secretary-General reported that Kuwait had added two new names to the list of those whose remains had been identified, bringing their total number to 235. The Kuwaiti national archives had not been found. There was guarded hope of progress owing to improvements in Iraq's security situation.

In December, the Secretary-General reported that Kuwait had added one new name to the list, bringing their number to 236. No visits to burial sites in Iraq were conducted, and no credible facts or possible leads had emerged regarding the missing Kuwaiti national archives.

High-level Coordinator. On 11 March [S/2008/205], the Secretary-General drew the Council's attention to its resolution 1284(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 230], which established the mandate of the High-level Coordinator for missing Kuwaitis and third-country citizens and missing Kuwaiti property, and suggested that the Council earmark $900,000 from the Iraq escrow account to support the Coordinator's activities for a four-year period, beginning on 1 January 2008.

On 26 March [S/2008/206], the Council earmarked $225,000 from the escrow account to finance those activities for a 12-month period from the date of the appointment of the new Coordinator.

On 8 April [S/2008/238], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that he had appointed Gennady P. Tarasov (Russian Federation) as the High-level Coordinator, replacing Yuli M. Vorontsov, who had passed away in December 2007. On 11 April [S/2008/239], the Council took note of that appointment.

Mr. Tarasov briefed the Council regularly throughout the year. Following his 25 June briefing, Council members, in a press statement [SC/9375], noted that the number of positive identifications of human remains by the Kuwaiti authorities had increased since the last report and said that they were hopeful about the possibility of further progress in the repatriation of remains. Council members noted that there had been no further progress on the fate of the Kuwaiti national archive, and called on Governments and individuals who might know what had happened to those documents, or possessed information on their whereabouts, to help clarify their fate. They noted the Iraqi Government's intention to assist in resolving the outstanding cases, and expressed their confidence that all parties, in particular Iraq and Kuwait, would enable a satisfactory solution. Council members requested the Secretary-General to report, 12 months after Mr. Tarasov's appointment, on any further progress and assess the progress that might be achieved, including the conditions that would be necessary and a time frame for completing the mandate.

On 12 May [A/62/842-S/2008/320], Iraq and Kuwait transmitted to the Secretary-General the final communiqué of the third expanded meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the countries neighbouring Iraq (Kuwait, 22 April), which invited all concerned parties to continue their cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross to uncover the fate of the rest of the missing Kuwaiti citizens and others.

Following Mr. Tarasov's briefings of 10 December, Security Council members, in a press statement [SC/9529], noted that a positive identification of human remains had been made, regretted the lack of progress on exhumation activities and expressed their appreciation for the support offered by UNAMI to the Iraqi Ministry for Human Rights to accelerate progress. Council members expressed their concern at the absence of progress on clarifying the fate of the national archives. They noted the positive stance taken by the Iraqi authorities, welcomed the first visit by the High-level Coordinator to Baghdad since 2003 to pursue dialogue on the outstanding issues, and urged collaboration among all parties to bring those long-standing issues to a resolution.

UN Compensation Commission and Fund

The United Nations Compensation Commission, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 195] for the resolution and payment of claims against Iraq for losses and damages resulting from its 1990 invasion and occupation of Kuwait, continued in 2008 to expedite the settlement of claims through the United Nations Compensation Fund, which was established at the same time as the Commission. Under Council resolution 1483(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 338], the Fund received 5 per cent of the proceeds generated by export sales of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products.

On 29 April, the Commission paid out $972.4 million to four Governments for distribution to 26 claimants; $982.3 million on 29 July to three Governments for distribution to 18 claimants; and $888.6 million on 29 October to three Governments for distribution to 16 claimants; bringing the overall amount of compensation made available by the Commission to $26.3 billion.

Governing Council. The Commission's Governing Council held two sessions in Geneva during the year—the sixty-fifth (8–9 April) [S/2008/265] and the sixty-sixth (21–22 October) [S/2008/658]—at which it considered reports on the activities of the Commission, the distribution by Governments and international organizations of payments to claimants, its follow-up programme for environmental awards, and the return of undistributed funds. The Governing Council took note of the report of the Board of Auditors on the financial statements of the Commission for the biennium ended 31 December 2007 [S/2008/509], as well as of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services to the General Assembly [A/63/302 (Part I)] (see below).

Oversight activities

The Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), in an August report on its activities for the period 1 July 2007–30 June 2008 [A/63/302 (Part I)], stated that the Compensation Commission continued to disburse award payments and monitor environmental projects being undertaken by claimant Governments with funds awarded for environmental damages, while also winding down its operations. As at May, $24 billion of the total $52 billion awarded by the Commission had been disbursed, leaving a balance of unpaid awards of $28 billion, which comprised 18 large awards that would continue to be paid out of the Compensation Fund. Payments of claims from July 2007 to May 2008 amounted to some $2 billion.

For 2008, the Commission had made available $50,000 for internal audit resources. OIOS was using that sum to continue the audit of award payments, assessing the Commission's compliance with Governing Council decisions, and Governments' compliance with Governing Council reporting requirements.

The Commission had implemented all audit recommendations issued by OIOS, including: requiring audit certificates for payment reports submitted to the Commission; obtaining full accounting from Governments on the distribution of funds received; updating its financial records; and following up on the recovery of long-outstanding receivables from Governments. The Commission also reported that Governments and other paying entities had remitted some $2.4 million as at May 2008 for overpayments to claimants.

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report of the Board of Auditors on the financial statements of the United Nations Compensation Commission for the biennium ended 31 December 2007 [S/2008/509]. According to the report, from its inception until the completion of processing in early 2005, the Commission had received more than 2.6 million claims. The Commission had now resolved all of the claims submitted, consisting of the claims of individuals for departure from Kuwait or Iraq, for serious personal injury or death, for losses up to $100,000 and for losses over $100,000; as well as the claims of corporations, other private legal entities and public sector enterprises, and the claims of Governments and international organizations. Expenses during the 2006–2007 period amounted to $3,511.9 million, comprising compensation awards of $3,497.2 million as well as administrative expenses of the Commission of $13.8 million and of the Follow-up Programme for Environmental Awards of $0.9 million. Total income was $3.450 billion.

On 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on the “Consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait” would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session (decision 63/552).

Timor-Leste

The United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste (UNMIT), established by Security Council resolution 1704(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 422], continued to carry out its mandate to assist the Government in consolidating stability, enhancing democratic governance and facilitating political dialogue. It also cooperated closely with the Government in its response to the attempted assassination of Timor-Leste’s President and Prime Minister on 11 February; provided support to the national police; helped strengthen the country’s human rights capacity; and cooperated with UN bodies and their partners in peacebuilding and capacity-building. The Mission was headed by Atul Khare (India), who also served as the Secretary-General’s Special Representative for Timor-Leste.

United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste

Report of Secretary-General (January). Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1745(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 364], the Secretary-General, on 17 January, submitted a report [S/2008/26] on major developments in Timor-Leste and on the activities of UNMIT since his previous report [ibid., p. 366]. As at 7 January, UNMIT consisted of a civilian component comprising 341 international staff (123 women), 806 national staff (135 women), 1,480 police officers (77 women) and 33 military liaison and staff officers (all men).

Prime Minister Kay Rala Xanana Gusmão continued to lead the Government formed by the Alliance for a Parliamentary Majority (AMP). However, the 21 parliamentarians from the Frente Revolucionária de Timor-Leste (Fretilin), the party with the largest number of seats, continued to consider the AMP-led Government as unconstitutional, referring to it as a “de facto Government”. Among the short-term priorities identified in the Government’s programme were improving security, addressing the internally displaced persons (IDP) situation, and resolving the cases of the nearly 600 “petitioners”—dismissed members of the Timorese armed forces whose grievances triggered the 2006 security and political crisis [YUN 2006, p. 416]—as well as prison escapee and deserted military police commander of the armed forces Alfredo Reinado.

Parliamentary discussions were generally marked by lively and constructive debate among all political parties, including Fretilin. Dialogue initiatives to bring opposing stakeholders together were assisted by the Fretilin leadership’s public rejection of violence as an expression of political discontent. With respect to Mr. Reinado, the Government’s ultimate goal continued to be his voluntary surrender and submission to judicial proceedings. Still, the political situation remained fragile, with Fretilin’s leaders calling for the Government to step down and for early elections to be held in 2009. Since the formation of the new Government, the Secretary-General’s Special Representative had held weekly meetings with the Secretary-General of Fretilin, former Prime Minister Mari Alkatiri, and monthly meetings with representatives of civil society.

Following the 2007 elections, UNMIT police strength decreased from 1,641 in July of that year to 1,480 (77 women) by 7 January 2008. The overall security situation had improved, helped by the good offices and dialogue efforts of the national leadership and UNMIT, as well as Fretilin’s rejection of violence. The need for a strong UNMIT police presence to maintain stability until the national police developed adequate capacities was evident both in the positive impact of police efforts in reducing serious crimes, and the daily occurrence of public disturbances.

Under the registration, screening and certification programme for the national police, all 3,108 registered officers (570 women) had completed the screening process as at 7 January. Of those, 186 (42 women) successfully completed both the provisional certification course and the six-month mentoring process and became fully certified officers. Another 1,503 (271 women) were provisionally certified and in the mentoring stage. However, 296 (22 women) required further investigation due to allegations of criminal acts or human rights violations, which would be adjudicated by a Timorese-led police evaluation panel. The remaining 1,123 screened officers were either undertaking, or waiting to take, the provisional certification course.

Despite resource constraints of the judicial system, notable progress was made in establishing accountability for serious criminal offences committed during the 2006 crisis. The trials held were important signals to the population that Timor-Leste was committed to applying the law in an impartial manner and to combating impunity. The new Government had accelerated the permanent deployment of judiciary staff to the districts and focused its attention on strengthening the prison system, with the support of UNMIT and UNDP.

UNMIT, the UN country team and development partners continued to foster a culture of democratic governance by supporting the four organs of sovereignty (presidency, parliament, executive and judiciary), civil society and the media. UNMIT worked closely with UNDP to promote responsible citizen involvement and understanding of governance processes through training-of-trainers sessions with 13 civic education groups throughout the country.

The Government's longer-term socio-economic priorities were: economic growth; reforming State management; qualifying youth and developing national human resources; solidarity, health and social protection; infrastructure and improving the quality of life; promoting equality and tolerance, internal security and strengthening democracy; and national defence and foreign policy. Its 2008 budget of about $348 million reflected those priorities. Meanwhile, about one tenth of the population (100,000 persons) remained displaced—30,000 in the capital, Dili, and 70,000 in the districts—living in poor conditions in camps or with host families.

By resolution 61/249 C [YUN 2007, p. 371], the General Assembly had appropriated $160.6 million for UNMIT for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008. Should the Security Council approve the Secretary-General's recommendation for a one-year extension, the cost would be limited to resources approved by the Assembly.

Attacks against President and Prime Minister.

On 11 February, the armed group led by the fugitive Alfredo Reinado carried out separate armed attacks against the President, José Ramos-Horta, and the Prime Minister, Kay Rala Xanana Gusmão. Rapid medical intervention in Dili and subsequently in Australia saved the life of the President. Mr. Reinado was killed during the attacks.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 February [meeting 5833], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/5 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns in the strongest possible terms the attempt on the life of the President of Timor-Leste, Mr. José Ramos-Horta, during an attack at his residence on 11 February 2008, and wishes him a speedy recovery. The Council also condemns the attack on the convoy of the Prime Minister of Timor-Leste, Mr. Kay Rala Xanana Gusmão. These represent an attack on the legitimate institutions of Timor-Leste.

The Council calls upon the Government of Timor-Leste to bring to justice those responsible for these heinous acts, and urges all parties in Timor-Leste to cooperate actively with the authorities in this regard.

The Council further calls upon all people in Timor-Leste to remain calm, exercise restraint and maintain stability in the country. The Council urges all parties in Timor-Leste to resolve any disputes through political and peaceful means within the framework of its democratic institutions.

The Council reaffirms its full support to the Government and people of Timor-Leste in their continued efforts to strengthen democracy and ensure public security and maintain stability in their country.

The Council expresses its full support for the work of the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste and for the continued deployment of the international security forces in response to the requests of the Government of Timor-Leste.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to report on developments in Timor-Leste, as necessary. The Council will continue to monitor closely the situation in Timor-Leste and will act, as appropriate.

Security Council consideration (February).

On 21 February [meeting 5843], the Security Council was briefed by Jean-Marie Guéhenno, Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations. He said that the Special Representative, Mr. Khare, had come to brief the Council but had returned to Timor-Leste in the wake of the tragic events of 11 February. President Ramos-Horta, though still hospitalized, was in stable condition and his doctors were hopeful of a full recovery.

A state of siege was declared on 11 February. In close cooperation with UNMIT, the Government had shown leadership in carrying out and coordinating subsequent security operations. Immediately following the attacks, Timorese leaders from all parties came together to urge calm, and the country remained peaceful—including throughout the funeral ceremonies for the fugitive Alfredo Reinado and one of his accomplices. The destabilizing crisis some feared had not happened, and the Government was intensifying outreach efforts to his followers to join discussions on resolving their grievances.

Prior to that incident, on 17 January, the President and Prime Minister engaged in constructive discussions with Fretilin President Lu-Olo Guterres and Secretary-General Alkatiri on mechanisms to promote more inclusive approaches to the country's problems. On 7 February, the President convened a meeting between the leaders of the four parties comprising the Government coalition and Fretilin to discuss mechanisms to jointly address such pressing issues as the IDPs, the petitioners and Mr. Reinado—as well as critical longer-term issues of security sector review and reform, and strengthening the justice sector and public administration—in what was seen as another step forward.

A durable solution to the IDP situation through voluntary return or relocation would require an improved security environment, a strengthened legal framework to resolve land and property disputes, and economic regeneration and livelihood activities. The President's efforts to bring Fretilin and the Government coalition together to solve pressing issues should continue, as the solution of those issues would allow the country to give its full attention to the underlying socio-economic challenges which posed a continuing threat to its political stability.

Timor-Leste expressed the country's gratitude for the convening of an emergency meeting of the Security Council immediately following the attempted assassination of its President and Prime Minister. A continued UN presence in Timor-Leste remained crucial for consolidating peace and security.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 February [meeting 5844], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1802(2008). The draft [S/2008/124] was submitted by Australia, New Zealand, Portugal and South Africa.

of a three-tier coordination mechanism to address the broader challenges in the security sector;

11. Requests the Mission, working with partners, to intensify its efforts to assist with further training, mentoring, institutional development and strengthening of the National Police of Timor-Leste with a view to enhancing its effectiveness, including with respect to addressing the special needs of women, while continuing to ensure, through the presence of the police component of the Mission, the restoration and maintenance of public security in Timor-Leste through the provision of support to the National Police, which includes interim law enforcement and public security until the National Police is reconstituted;

12. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to send an expert mission to the Mission in the first quarter of 2008 to conduct a thorough assessment of the requirements of the National Police of Timor-Leste as well as possible adjustments needed to the Mission's police skill sets, and requests him to inform the Security Council of the finding of the expert mission;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Council regularly informed of the developments on the ground and on the implementation of the present resolution, including, in particular, progress on the efforts of his Special Representative in support of dialogue and reconciliation, and to submit to the Council, no later than 1 August 2008, a report which includes possible adjustments in the mandate and strength of the Mission, and further requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Timor-Leste, to develop a medium-term strategy with appropriate benchmarks to measure and track progress, and to submit further reports as and when he considers appropriate;

17. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Expert mission to UNMIT

Report of expert mission (March). By a 16 May letter to the Security Council President [S/2008/329], the Secretary-General forwarded the report of the expert mission he had sent to UNMIT from 17 to 27 March, submitted by its Team Leader and UN Police Adviser, Andrew Hughes. The aim of the mission was to assess the requirements of the national police, as well as possible adjustments to UNMIT police skill sets.

The report said that to strengthen the fragile achievements made towards restoring and maintaining public security since the events of April/May 2006, the Security Council should call upon Member States to contribute human and financial resources to develop the national police, including through UNMIT. The General Assembly should approve additional civilian professional posts for UNMIT police, as submitted by the Secretary-General in UNMIT's 2009–2010 budget.

The mission recommended that the Timor-Leste authorities ensure that national police officers found responsible for acts of serious misconduct were immediately removed, and that they facilitate the processing of complaints from the public. It also made recommendations relating to UNMIT's police, including its support to the national police, as well as to UN agencies, funds and programmes, police-contributing countries, bilateral donors and civil society.

Report of Secretary-General (July). Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1802(2008), the Secretary-General, on 29 July, submitted a report [S/2008/501] on major developments in Timor-Leste and UNMIT's activities since 17 January. As at 8 July, UNMIT consisted of a civilian component comprising 319 international staff (117 women); 846 national staff (147 women); 1,542 police officers (76 women); and 33 military liaison and staff officers (all men).

The events of 11 February and the response to them dominated the political and security environment. The incidents presented an unexpected and serious challenge to State institutions, but they had responded in an appropriate and responsible manner, with the Prime Minister demonstrating firm and reasoned leadership, the Parliament functioning effectively, the leaders of all political parties urging their supporters to remain calm, and the population demonstrating faith in the State's ability to deal with the situation. On 17 February, the Council of Ministers approved a resolution mandating the Commander of the Falintil-Forças de Defesa de Timor-Leste (F-FDTL) to create a Joint Command integrating F-FDTL members and the national police for security operations conducted during the siege. As the security situation improved, the state of siege was gradually reduced in geographic scope and degree.

The death of Mr. Reinado, who had played a significant role in the intractability of the issues of the F-FDTL petitioners and IDPs, opened new possibilities to address those two remaining consequences of the 2006 crisis. On 4 June, the Government adopted a legislative decree offering financial compensation packages for petitioners who decided to return to civilian life—the great majority. While the underlying grievances that had sparked their original desertion, culminating in the 2006 crisis, were yet to be addressed, their agreement to the packages was a positive development. By the beginning of March, returns of IDPs had also markedly accelerated.

On 23 April, in his first major address after returning to Timor-Leste, the President called on the Government to work together with Fretilin as “the party with the most votes”. Encouragingly, Fretilin continued to play an important role as an active opposition within the Parliament, whose legitimacy it acknowledged—although it continued to describe the AMP-formed Government as an unconstitutional “de facto Government”.

The Special Representative, Mr. Khare, had used his good offices role to promote a more conciliatory atmosphere among the political leaders and to stress the value of a strong opposition and an effective Parliament.

Considerable progress was made in the registration, screening and certification programme for the national police. In June, when provisional certification ended, 3,114 officers (570 women) had been assessed as suitable to be provisionally certified. Of those, 599 (126 women) became fully certified officers. All remaining officers were in different stages of the mentoring programme, except the 242 (11 women) found with integrity issues requiring adjudication by the Timorese-led Evaluation Panel, and 117 officers (10 women) who were recruits during the crisis of 2006 and needed to return to the Academy for basic training.

Some progress was made towards holding accountable those responsible for criminal acts and human rights violations during the 2006 crisis. However, a presidential decree of 20 May providing pardons and commutations of sentence to 94 sentenced individuals, while legal, was considered by many as undermining efforts to promote accountability and justice and combat impunity. The former Minister of the Interior, Rogério Lobato, who had been sentenced to seven and a half years' imprisonment for his role in the 2006 crisis, and who in August 2007 was permitted to travel to Malaysia to receive medical treatment and had yet to return, was granted conditional release early in June after his sentence was commuted. Nine inmates serving sentences for crimes against humanity committed in 1999 also received commutations of their sentence, and four of them were released in June.

The Government continued to focus on key pieces of legislation, including the criminal code and the law against domestic violence, and on developing the capacity of judiciary personnel. However, despite the best efforts of the Government and its partners, Timor-Leste had not experienced significant progress in poverty alleviation or achievement of the Millennium Development Goals since its restoration of independence in 2002.

With respect to the medium-term strategy and appropriate benchmarks, as requested by the Security Council in its resolution 1802(2008), it was envisaged that they would cover four mandated UNMIT priority areas: review and reform of the security sector; strengthening the rule of law; economic and social development; and promotion of a culture of democratic governance, together with efforts to enhance dialogue and reconciliation.

Security Council consideration (August). On 19 August [meeting 5958], the Council was briefed by the Special Representative, who said that public confidence in the national police was essential for its long-term success. As it took on greater responsibilities, newer cases of corruption and abuse of authority would have to be pursued. Noting that long-term strategies to preclude the establishment of a culture of impunity depended on an effective judiciary, he said that the third training course for 18 additional judicial officers—judges, public prosecutors and public defenders—had begun on 29 July.

Timor-Leste's Foreign Minister, Zacarias Albano da Costa, said that his Government had established a Joint Command led by the national police and the defence force for the conduct of security operations during the state of siege. The efforts of the Joint Command, together with political mediation initiatives, resulted in the eventual surrender of the President's attackers and their associates without notable violence. The co-operation between the political authorities, defence force and police services illustrated the progress made in rebuilding the latter two institutions. With respect to the more than 14,450 internally displaced families that had expressed their desire for return or resettlement, he said that with the assistance of UNMIT, UN agencies and other international partners, the Government had facilitated the return of large numbers of IDPs. Twenty IDP camps had been closed and more than 3,650 internally displaced families had received recovery packages. The Government had concluded a dialogue with the F-FDTL petitioners and was committed to rebuilding the national police as a long-term undertaking. It was also working to strengthen the civil service, and the National Parliament had become a credible and dynamic forum for debate. The economical stabilization fund, with capital of $240 million, was an important tool the Government was using to counter the rising global cost of food and other commodities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 August [meeting 5959], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/29 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste, as well as the briefing by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Timor-Leste, Mr. Atul Khare, on 19 August 2008.

The Council commends the political leadership and State institutions of Timor-Leste for the rapid, firm and responsible manner, that respected constitutional procedures of the country, in which they responded to the deplorable events of 11 February 2008. The Council acknowledges that, while progress has been made in the overall security situation in Timor-Leste since the events of May and June 2006, the political, security, social and humanitarian situation in the country remains fragile.

The Council welcomes the continued efforts to foster dialogue and national reconciliation in Timor-Leste through various mechanisms, in particular the expanded meetings of the High-level Coordination Committee, the Trilateral Coordination Forum and the continued good offices of the Special Representative. The Council also welcomes recent progress in addressing the situation of internally displaced persons.

The Council reaffirms the continued importance of the review and reform of the security sector in Timor-Leste, in particular the need to ensure clear separation of internal and external security roles and responsibilities between the National Police of Timor-Leste and the military, Falintil-Forças de Defesa de Timor-Leste, to strengthen legal frameworks and to enhance civilian oversight and accountability mechanisms. The Council recognizes efforts made by the national authorities and the Mission for the reconstitution of the National Police and welcomes the report of the expert mission to Timor-Leste on policing of 16 May 2008 and the necessary steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in the report. The Council underlines that the building of an independent, professional and impartial national police service in Timor-Leste is a long-term process, that national ownership is a central element in this regard and that the Mission has a key role in helping to ensure that the National Police is ready and able to resume its policing responsibilities.

The Council recalls the need for sustained support of the international community to Timor-Leste to develop and strengthen its institutions and further build capacities in the justice sector.

The Council further reaffirms the importance of ongoing efforts to reach accountability and justice, and underlines the importance of the implementation by the Government of Timor-Leste of the recommendations contained in the report of the Independent Special Commission of Inquiry for Timor-Leste of 2 October 2006. It welcomes the conviction of the leaders of Timor-Leste of the need for justice and their determination to act against impunity. The Council underscores the importance of the promotion and protection of human rights.

The Council recognizes the need to address socio-economic challenges in Timor-Leste. In this regard, the Council welcomes the launching by the Government of Timor-Leste of the National Priorities for 2008, including public safety and security, social protection and solidarity, addressing the needs of youth, employment and income generation, improving social service delivery, and greater transparency and effective government. It also welcomes the signing on 8 August 2008 by Timor-Leste and the United Nations of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework 2009–2013, which can provide the country with an important instrument on its path to development.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the Mission in its work and appreciates the continued efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to ensure the full implementation of the mandate of the Mission. It encourages the Mission, in accordance with its mandate, to continue to cooperate with the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes as well as all relevant partners to support the Government of Timor-Leste. The Council recalls its requests to the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Government of Timor-Leste, to develop a medium-term strategy with appropriate benchmarks to measure and track progress, and to submit further reports as and when he considers appropriate.

Later developments

Report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2009/72], which included developments through the end of 2008, the Secretary-General said that the period had marked an important stage in the recovery from the 2006 crisis and a return to normalcy following the events of 11 February. The security situation remained calm and security arrangements had generally followed constitutional and legal parameters since the lifting of the states of exception. The Government made remarkable progress in addressing the issues relating to the F-FDTL petitioners and IDPs. Nevertheless, further efforts were needed.

Fretilin continued to play an important role within Parliament, but still refused to recognize the legitimacy of the AMP Government. UNMIT and the UN country team continued to promote a culture of democratic governance, including improved accountability mechanisms, increased citizen participation, and support for the development of important legislative frameworks. UNMIT also continued to assist in capacity-building for local journalists through radio internships, technical and on-the-job training, and the facilitation of regular press trips.

The generally calm security situation was attributable in part to proactive policing strategies adopted by the police, but also to UNMIT's engagement with key political stakeholders. The Government sponsored a six-week nationwide weapons collection campaign that ended on 31 August—a police-led effort that collected 864 homemade and other light firearms; 48 explosive devices; 7,930 homemade weapons; 9,116 rounds of ammunition; and 164 weapons of other types.

There had been further progress in the registration, screening and certification programme for the national police. Of the 3,108 provisionally certified national police officers, 2,644 officers (538 women), or 85 per cent of the force, had become fully certified. The remaining officers were in different stages of the mentoring programme, except 171 (5 women) who were found to have integrity issues. Of those cases, 99 (1 woman) required adjudication by the Timorese-led Evaluation Panel, and the balance were in other stages of investigation and inquiry.

Following the end of the states of exception and disbandment of the Joint Command, the number of allegations of ill-treatment and excessive use of force and intimidation during arrests decreased. During that period, UNMIT documented 50 alleged incidents of human rights violations and ill-treatment during arrests by the national police.

Some progress was made towards holding accountable those responsible for criminal acts and human rights violations during the crisis of 2006. Of the 11 ongoing investigations, one trial involving 16 defendants began in October. UNMIT investigations into cases of serious human rights violations in 1999 continued under the supervision of and in close collaboration with the Office of the Prosecutor-General. In addition, coordination between the police and the prosecution had improved under the auspices of a joint Prosecutor-General/UN working group.

Financing of UN operations

In 2008, the General Assembly considered the financing of the United Nations Mission in East Timor (UNAMET), the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET) and the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste (UNMIT). UNAMET was established by Security Council resolution 1246(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 283] to conduct the 1999 popular consultation on East Timor's autonomy [ibid., p. 288]. UNMISSET was established by Council resolution 1410(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 321] to assist the administrative, law enforcement and public security structures critical to Timor-Leste's viability and political stability. UNMIT was established by Council resolution 1704(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 422] to support the Government in consolidating stability, enhancing a culture of democratic governance and facilitating political dialogue; support the country in all aspects of the 2007 presidential and parliamentary elections; ensure the maintenance of public security; assist the Government in reviewing the role and needs of the security sector; strengthen capacity for promoting human rights, justice and reconciliation; and assist in implementing the Secretary-General's recommendations on justice and reconciliation.

UNAMET

On 15 September [meeting 122], by decision 62/556, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in East Timor" and to include it in the draft agenda of its sixty-third (2008) session. ## Iran

In 2008, the United Nations continued to address Iran’s nuclear programme. On 3 March, the Security Council, by resolution 1803(2008) (see below), strengthened the sanctions it had imposed by resolutions 1737(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 436] and 1747(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 374]. On 27 September, by resolution 1835(2008) (see p. 414), the Council called on Iran to comply with its previous resolutions, requesting the country to stop uranium enrichment and reprocessing activities. Iran stated once again that its nuclear programme was and would remain absolutely peaceful. Meanwhile, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1737(2006) continued overseeing implementation of the sanctions regime.

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) reported that during 2008, Iran had not implemented the Additional Protocol to Iran’s Safeguards Agreement. It had also failed to provide access to additional locations related to the manufacture of centrifuges, uranium enrichment, mining and milling, as required by the Council—giving rise to concerns about possible military dimensions of its nuclear programme.

IAEA reports

During 2008, the Council had before it a number of reports by the IAEA Board of Governors on Iran’s implementation of the Non-Proliferation Treaty Safeguards Agreement and relevant provisions of Security Council resolutions. Each one stated that the Agency had been able to continue its activities to verify the non-diversion of declared nuclear material in Iran, while elaborating on that process and the difficulties encountered.

IAEA report (February). IAEA’s report of 22 February [GOV/2008/4] on developments since 15 November 2007 stated that answers provided by Iran were in some cases consistent with the Agency’s findings, and in other cases were not inconsistent with those findings. The major remaining issue relevant to the nature of Iran’s nuclear programme concerned alleged studies on the conversion of uranium dioxide into uranium tetrafluoride (the green salt project)—which could have a military nuclear dimension. In addition, Iran had not suspended its enrichment-related activities, having continued the operation of its pilot fuel enrichment plant (PFEP) and its fuel enrichment plant. It had also begun the development of new-generation centrifuges, and continued construction of its IR-40 reactor and operation of its heavy water production plant.

Communication. By a 27 February letter [A/62/712-S/2008/138], Iran’s Foreign Minister, Manouchehr Mottaki, said that Iran had answered all the questions presented by IAEA concerning outstanding issues according to the work plan, and that those answers had been consistent with the Agency’s findings. Consequently, all the justifications and foundations for the Security Council’s action on the issue had vanished.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 3 March [meeting 5848], the Security Council adopted resolution 1803(2008) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/2008/141] was submitted by France, Germany and the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling the statement by its President of 29 March 2006 and its resolutions 1696(2006) of 31 July 2006, 1737(2006) of 23 December 2006 and 1747(2007) of 24 March 2007, and reaffirming their provisions,

Reaffirming its commitment to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the need for all States parties to the Treaty to comply fully with all their obligations, and recalling the right of States parties, in conformity with articles I and II of the Treaty, to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination,

Recalling resolution GOV/2006/14 adopted by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency on 4 February 2006, which states that a solution to the Iranian nuclear issue would contribute to global non-proliferation efforts and to realizing the objective of a Middle East free of weapons of mass destruction, including their means of delivery,

Noting with serious concern that, as confirmed in the reports of the Director General of the Agency of 23 May, 30 August and 15 November 2007 and 22 February 2008, the Islamic Republic of Iran has not established full and sustained suspension of all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities and heavy water-related projects as set out in Security Council resolutions 1696(2006), 1737(2006) and 1747(2007), nor resumed its cooperation with the Agency under the Additional Protocol, nor taken the other steps required by the Board of Governors, nor complied with the provisions of resolutions 1696(2006), 1737(2006) and 1747(2007), which are essential to build confidence, and deploring the Islamic Republic of Iran’s refusal to take these steps,

Noting with concern that the Islamic Republic of Iran has taken issue with the right of the Agency to verify design information which had been provided by the Islamic Republic of Iran pursuant to the modified Code 3.1, emphasizing that, in accordance with article 39 of the safeguards agreement between the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Agency, Code 3.1 cannot be modified nor suspended unilaterally and that the Agency's right to verify design information provided to it is a continuing right which is not dependent on the stage of construction of, or the presence of nuclear material at, a facility,

Reiterating its determination to reinforce the authority of the Agency, strongly supporting the role of the Board of Governors, commending the Agency for its efforts to resolve outstanding issues relating to the Islamic Republic of Iran's nuclear programme in the work plan between the secretariat of the Agency and the Islamic Republic of Iran, welcoming the progress in the implementation of the work plan, as reflected in the reports of the Director General of 15 November 2007 and 22 February 2008, underlining the importance of the Islamic Republic of Iran producing tangible results rapidly and effectively by completing implementation of the work plan, including by providing answers to all the questions the Agency asks so that the Agency, through the implementation of the required transparency measures, can assess the completeness and correctness of the Islamic Republic of Iran's declaration,

Expressing the conviction that the suspension set out in paragraph 2 of resolution 1737(2006) as well as full, verified Iranian compliance with the requirements set out by the Board of Governors would contribute to a diplomatic, negotiated solution that guarantees that the Islamic Republic of Iran's nuclear programme is for exclusively peaceful purposes,

Stressing that China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America are willing to take further concrete measures on exploring an overall strategy of resolving the Iranian nuclear issue through negotiation on the basis of their proposals of June 2006, and noting the confirmation by those countries that, once the confidence of the international community in the exclusively peaceful nature of the Islamic Republic of Iran's nuclear programme is restored, it will be treated in the same manner as any non-nuclear-weapon State party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Having regard to the rights and obligations of States relating to international trade,

Welcoming the guidance issued by the Financial Action Task Force to assist States in implementing their financial obligations under resolution 1737(2006),

Determined to give effect to its decisions by adopting appropriate measures to persuade the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with resolutions 1696(2006), 1737(2006) and 1747(2007) and with the requirements of the Agency, and also to constrain the Islamic Republic of Iran's development of sensitive technologies in support of its nuclear and missile programmes, until such time as the Council determines that the objectives of those resolutions have been met,

Concerned by the proliferation risks presented by the Iranian nuclear programme and, in this context, by the Islamic Republic of Iran's continuing failure to meet the requirements of the Board of Governors and to comply with the provisions of resolutions 1696(2006), 1737(2006) and 1747(2007), and mindful of its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Acting under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Reaffirms that the Islamic Republic of Iran shall without further delay take the steps required by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency in its resolution GOV/2006/14, which are essential to build confidence in the exclusively peaceful purpose of its nuclear programme and to resolve outstanding questions, and in this context affirms its decision that the Islamic Republic of Iran shall without delay take the steps required in paragraph 2 of resolution 1737(2006), and underlines that the Agency has sought confirmation that the Islamic Republic of Iran will apply the modified Code 3.1;

2. Welcomes the agreement between the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Agency to resolve all outstanding issues concerning the Islamic Republic of Iran's nuclear programme and progress made in this regard, as set out in the report of 22 February 2008 of the Director General of the Agency, encourages the Agency to continue its work to clarify all outstanding issues, stresses that this would help to re-establish international confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of the Islamic Republic of Iran's nuclear programme, and supports the Agency in strengthening its safeguards on the Islamic Republic of Iran's nuclear activities in accordance with the safeguards agreement between the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Agency;

3. Calls upon all States to exercise vigilance and restraint regarding the entry into or transit through their territories of individuals who are engaged in, directly associated with or providing support for the Islamic Republic of Iran's proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities or for the development of nuclear weapon delivery systems, and decides in this regard that all States shall notify the Security Council Committee established pursuant to paragraph 18 of resolution 1737(2006) (hereinafter "the Committee") of the entry into or transit through their territories of the persons designated in the annex to resolution 1737(2006), annex I to resolution 1747(2007) or annex I to the present resolution, as well as of additional persons designated by the Council or the Committee as being engaged in, directly associated with or providing support for the Islamic Republic of Iran's proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities or for the development of nuclear weapon delivery systems, including through the involvement in procurement of the prohibited items, goods, equipment, materials and technology specified by and under the measures in paragraphs 3 and 4 of resolution 1737(2006), except where such entry or transit is for activities directly related to the items in paragraphs 3 (b) (i) and (ii) of resolution 1737(2006);

4. Underlines that nothing in paragraph 3 above requires a State to refuse its own nationals entry into its territory, and that all States shall, in the implementation of paragraph 3 above, take into account humanitarian considerations, including religious obligations, as well as the necessity to meet the objectives of the present resolution and resolutions 1737(2006) and 1747(2007), including where article XV of the statute of the Agency is engaged;

5. Decides that all States shall take the necessary measures to prevent the entry into or transit through their territories of individuals designated in annex II to the present resolution as well as of additional persons designated by the Council or the Committee as being engaged in, directly associated with or providing support for the Islamic Republic of Iran's proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities or for the development of nuclear weapon delivery systems, including through the involvement in procurement of the prohibited items, goods, equipment, materials and technology specified by and under the measures in paragraphs 3 and 4 of resolution 1737(2006), except where such entry or transit is for activities directly related to the items in paragraphs 3 (b) (i) and (ii) of resolution 1737(2006) and provided that nothing in the present paragraph shall oblige a State to refuse its own nationals entry into its territory;

6. Decides also that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 above shall not apply where the Committee determines on a case-by-case basis that such travel is justified on the grounds of humanitarian need, including religious obligations, or where the Committee concludes that an exemption would otherwise further the objectives of the present resolution;

7. Decides further that the measures specified in paragraphs 12 to 15 of resolution 1737(2006) shall apply also to the persons and entities listed in annexes I and III to the present resolution, and any persons or entities acting on their behalf or at their direction, and to entities owned or controlled by them and to persons and entities determined by the Council or the Committee to have assisted designated persons or entities in evading sanctions of, or in violating the provisions of, the present resolution, resolution 1737(2006) or resolution 1747(2007);

8. Decides that all States shall take the necessary measures to prevent the supply, sale or transfer directly or indirectly from their territories or by their nationals or using their flag vessels or aircraft to, or for use in or the benefit of, the Islamic Republic of Iran, and whether or not originating in their territories, of:

(a) All items, materials, equipment, goods and technology set out in INFCIRC/254/Rev.7/Part 2 in document S/2006/814, except the supply, sale or transfer, in accordance with the requirements of paragraph 5 of resolution 1737(2006), of items, materials, equipment, goods and technology set out in sections 1 and 2 of the annex to that document, and sections 3 to 6 as notified in advance to the Committee, only when for exclusive use in light water reactors, and where such supply, sale or transfer is necessary for technical cooperation provided to the Islamic Republic of Iran by the Agency or under its auspices as provided for in paragraph 16 of resolution 1737(2006);

(b) All items, materials, equipment, goods and technology set out in 19.A.3 of Category II in document S/2006/815;

9. Calls upon all States to exercise vigilance in entering into new commitments for public-provided financial support for trade with the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the granting of export credits, guarantees or insurance, to their nationals or entities involved in such trade, in order to avoid such financial support contributing to the proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities, or to the development of nuclear weapon delivery systems, as referred to in resolution 1737(2006);

10. Also calls upon all States to exercise vigilance over the activities of financial institutions in their territories with all banks domiciled in the Islamic Republic of Iran, in particular with Bank Melli and Bank Saderat, and their branches and subsidiaries abroad, in order to avoid such activities contributing to the proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities, or to the development of nuclear weapon delivery systems, as referred to in resolution 1737(2006);

11. Further calls upon all States, in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation and consistent with international law, in particular the law of the sea and relevant international civil aviation agreements, to inspect the cargoes to and from the Islamic Republic of Iran of aircraft and vessels, at their airports and seaports, owned or operated by Iran Air Cargo and Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Line, provided that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the aircraft or vessel is transporting goods prohibited under the present resolution or resolution 1737(2006) or resolution 1747(2007);

12. Requires all States, in cases when inspection mentioned in paragraph 11 above is undertaken, to submit to the Council within five working days a written report on the inspection containing, in particular, an explanation of the grounds for the inspection, as well as information on its time, place, circumstances, results and other relevant details;

13. Calls upon all States to report to the Committee within sixty days of the adoption of the present resolution on the steps they have taken with a view to implementing effectively paragraphs 3, 5 and 7 to 11 above;

14. Decides that the mandate of the Committee as set out in paragraph 18 of resolution 1737(2006) shall also apply to the measures imposed in resolution 1747(2007) and the present resolution;

15. Stresses the willingness of China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America to further enhance diplomatic efforts to promote resumption of dialogue, and consultations on the basis of their offer to the Islamic Republic of Iran, with a view to seeking a comprehensive, long-term and proper solution of this issue which would allow for the development of all-round relations and wider cooperation with the Islamic Republic of Iran based on mutual respect and the establishment of international confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of the Islamic Republic of Iran's nuclear programme, and inter alia, starting direct talks and negotiation with the Islamic Republic of Iran as long as the Islamic Republic of Iran suspends all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, including research and development, as verified by the Agency;

16. Encourages the High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy of the European Union to continue communication with the Islamic Republic of Iran in support of political and diplomatic efforts to find a negotiated solution, including relevant proposals by China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, with a view to creating the necessary conditions for resuming talks;

17. Emphasizes the importance of all States, including the Islamic Republic of Iran, taking the necessary measures to ensure that no claim shall lie at the instance of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, or of any person or entity in the Islamic Republic of Iran, or of persons or entities designated pursuant to resolution 1737(2006) and related resolutions, or any person claiming through or for the benefit of any such person or entity, in connection with any contract or other transaction where its performance was prevented by reason of the measures imposed by the present resolution, resolution 1737(2006) or resolution 1747(2007);

18. Requests within ninety days a further report from the Director General of the Agency on whether the Islamic Republic of Iran has established full and sustained suspension of all activities mentioned in resolution 1737(2006), as well as on the process of Iranian compliance with all the steps required by the Board of Governors of the Agency and with the other provisions of resolutions 1737(2006) and 1747(2007) and the present resolution, to the Board and, in parallel, to the Council for its consideration;

19. Reaffirms that it shall review the actions of the Islamic Republic of Iran in the light of the report referred to in paragraph 18 above, and:

(a) That it shall suspend the implementation of measures if and for so long as the Islamic Republic of Iran suspends all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities, including research and development, as verified by the Agency, to allow for negotiations in good faith in order to reach an early and mutually acceptable outcome;

(b) That it shall terminate the measures specified in paragraphs 3 to 7 and 12 of resolution 1737(2006), as well as in paragraphs 2 and 4 to 7 of resolution 1747(2007) and in paragraphs 3, 5 and 7 to 11 above as soon as it determines, following receipt of the report referred to in paragraph 18 above, that the Islamic Republic of Iran has fully complied with its obligations under the relevant resolutions of the Council and met the requirements of the Board of Governors, as confirmed by the Board;

(c) That it shall, in the event that the report shows that the Islamic Republic of Iran has not complied with resolutions 1696(2006), 1737(2006) and 1747(2007) and the present resolution, adopt further appropriate measures under Article 41 of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations to persuade the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply with these resolutions and the requirements of the Agency, and underlines that further decisions will be required should such additional measures be necessary;

20. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

In favour: Belgium, Burkina Faso, China, Costa Rica, Croatia, France, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Panama, Russian Federation, South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Viet Nam.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Indonesia.

Speaking before the vote, Iran said that the draft resolution did not meet the minimum standards of legitimacy and legality, and emphasized that Iran's nuclear programme was entirely peaceful and did not fall within the purview of the Council. Indonesia said that the IAEA report of 22 February had recognized the important progress made in Iran's cooperation with the Agency, as well as its lack of compliance with Council resolutions. Indonesia had expected the draft to reflect those complex dynamics and mixed findings. Indonesia was not convinced of the efficacy of additional sanctions at present.

Communication. A 3 March statement [S/2008/147] by the Foreign Ministers of China, France, Germany, Russia, the United Kingdom and the United States, with the support of the High Representative of the European Union (EU), deplored Iran's continued failure to comply with Security Council and IAEA requirements, but remained committed to a negotiated solution. It said that the Ministers were prepared to further develop the proposals they presented to Iran in June 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 432], which offered substantial opportunities for benefits to Iran and the region.

Security Council consideration. On 17 March [meeting 5853], Johan Verbeke (Belgium), the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to Council resolution 1737(2006) [ibid., p. 436] (Iran Sanctions Committee), briefed the Council on its activities from 19 December 2007 to 17 March 2008. He noted that by resolution 1803(2008) (see p. 409), the Council had called upon all States to exercise vigilance in the areas of financial support for trade with Iran and of banking with Iran, and to inspect the cargoes to and from Iran of aircraft and vessels, at their airports and seaports, owned or operated by two Iranian companies, when there were reasonable grounds to believe that they were transporting goods prohibited under resolutions 1737(2006), 1747(2007) or 1803(2008).

Communications. By a 17 March letter [S/2008/190], Iran commented on the discussions in the Security Council at its 3 and 17 March meetings, stating that the Council had once again been "downgraded to a mere tool of the national foreign policy of just a few countries". Iran's nuclear programme was and would remain absolutely peaceful. A statement of 24 March [A/62/767-S/2008/203] from Iranian Foreign Minister Mottaki also referred to the Council's "unlawful engagement" with respect to Iran's nuclear activities.

IAEA report (May). Pursuant to resolution 1803(2008), the IAEA Director General on 26 May [S/2008/338] reported that Iran's alleged studies on the green salt project, high explosives testing and missile re-entry vehicle project were of concern. Their clarification was critical to an assessment of the nature of Iran's past and present nuclear programme. Further, Iran had continued the operation of PFEP and the fuel enrichment plant, as well as the installation of new cascades and new generation centrifuges for test purposes. It had also continued with construction of its IR-40 reactor.

Security Council consideration (June). On 13 June [meeting 5909], Jan Grauls (Belgium), Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1737(2006), briefed the Council on its activities since 18 March. The Committee had granted two requests for exemption to the assets freeze for meeting extraordinary expenses. The Committee had also received one notification of one State regarding its intention to make or receive payments, or to authorize the unfreezing of funds, in connection with contracts entered into prior to the listing of persons and entities.

Communications. By a 16 June letter [S/2008/393], the Council received a set of proposals by the Foreign Ministers of China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States, with the support of the High Representative of the EU, which had been passed to Iran on 14 June. A 17 June letter from Iran [S/2008/397] transmitted a proposed package for constructive negotiations, together with a letter of 13 May from its Foreign Minister, calling for wide-ranging negotiations, to the countries of the "five plus one" group (the five permanent members of the Security Council plus Germany).

On 1 August [S/2008/520], France, the United Kingdom and the United States, in support of the Council's call in resolution 1803(2008) for States to be vigilant over the activities of financial institutions in their territories with Iranian banks, in particular with Bank Melli and Bank Saderat, provided information on the branches and subsidiaries of those banks. In a reply dated 15 August [S/2008/554], Iran stated that those Iranian banks had never been involved in any illicit activities, including non-peaceful nuclear activities, simply because there were no such non-peaceful nuclear activities in Iran.

During the year, Iran transmitted to the Security Council letters referring to what it described as baseless allegations made against it during Council meetings, mainly attributed to the United States [S/2008/280, S/2008/391, S/2008/530, S/2008/706]. Another letter, dated 30 April [S/2008/288], cited a televised interview with United States Senator Hilary Rodham Clinton, stating that she had threatened the use of force against Iran. Other letters [S/2008/377, S/2008/599] referred to threats from the "Israeli regime".

Security Council consideration (September). On 11 September [meeting 5973], Security Council Committee Chairman Grauls briefed the Council on its activities since 14 June. He said that the Committee had recently focused on ensuring greater vigilance from Member States over the activities of financial institutions that dealt with banks domiciled in Iran. The Committee also probed reports that one State might have contravened an export ban on arms and related materiel from Iran, and received assurances from the country involved that it would continue to fully implement the sanctions.

IAEA report (September). IAEA's report of 15 September [GOV/2008/38] said that Iran had provided the Agency with access to declared nuclear material and had provided the required nuclear material accounting reports in connection with declared nuclear material and activities. Regrettably, the Agency had not been able to make any substantive progress on the alleged green salt studies and other key issues. Iran needed to provide the Agency with substantive information to support its statements and provide access to relevant documentation and individuals.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 September [meeting 5984], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1835(2008). The draft [S/2008/624] was submitted by Belgium, China, Croatia, France, Germany, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 15 September 2008 on the implementation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons safeguards agreement and relevant provisions of Security Council resolutions 1737(2006), 1747(2007) and 1803(2008) in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Reaffirming its commitment to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

1. Reaffirms the statement by its President of 29 March 2006, and its resolutions 1696(2006) of 31 July 2006, 1737(2006) of 23 December 2006, 1747(2007) of 24 March 2007 and 1803(2008) of 3 March 2008;

2. Takes note of the statement of 3 March 2008 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of China, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, with the support of the High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy of the European Union, describing the dual-track approach to the Iranian nuclear issue;

3. Reaffirms its commitment, within this framework, to an early negotiated solution to the Iranian nuclear issue, and welcomes the continuing efforts in this regard;

4. Calls upon the Islamic Republic of Iran to comply fully and without delay with its obligations under the above-mentioned resolutions of the Security Council, and to meet the requirements of the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communications. By a 10 October letter [S/2008/643], Iran forwarded a 6 October letter from the Secretary of its Supreme National Security Council to the EU High Representative, as well as to the Foreign Ministers of the "five plus one" group of countries. In the letter, Iran regretted that its package of proposals for paving the way to talks had not yet been accepted.

A 23 October letter from Iran [A/63/507-S/2008/675] protested the United Kingdom's removal of "the so-called 'People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran', a notorious terrorist group", from its list of proscribed groups.

IAEA report (November). In its report of 19 November [GOV/2008/59], the Agency came to essentially the same conclusions as in its previous report.

Security Council consideration (December). On 10 December [meeting 6036], Security Council Committee Chairman Grauls briefed the Council on its activities since 12 September. He said that the Council, by its resolution 1835(2008), had reaffirmed its commitment to an early negotiated solution through a dual-track approach to the Iranian nuclear issue that included both targeted sanctions and generous incentives.

Communication. On the same day, the Council President received a letter from Iran [S/2008/776] responding to allegations against its peaceful nuclear programme by certain Council members, particularly the United States, the United Kingdom and France, made at that day's Security Council meeting.

IAEA report. A later IAEA report [GOV/2009/8], covering developments from 19 November to the end of 2008, stated that Iran had neither implemented the Additional Protocol nor agreed to IAEA's request for access to the additional locations mentioned in its previous reports. IAEA was not in a position to provide assurance about the absence of undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran. The IAEA

Director General urged Iran to implement all measures required to build confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of its nuclear programme.

Sanctions Committee report. On 31 December, the Committee Chairman transmitted to the Security Council a report [S/2008/839] on its activities in 2008. During the year, the Committee held five informal consultations. It decided to consolidate into a single document the lists of names of persons and entities subject to the travel ban, travel notification requirement and assets freeze. The Committee granted two requests for exemptions to the assets freeze and received four notifications of exemptions to the freeze for transactions made prior to the sanctions. In a 27 March note, the Committee Chairman reminded Member States that, as requested by various Council resolutions, they should report to the Committee about the steps they had taken to implement the sanctions outlined in those resolutions. By year's end, the Committee had received 90 reports pursuant to resolution 1737(2006), 77 reports pursuant to resolution 1747(2007) and 63 reports pursuant to resolution 1803(2008). The list of those reports was appended to the Committee's report.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Statements by Secretary-General. On 26 June [SG/SM/11659], the Secretary-General welcomed progress in the six-party talks—China, Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), Japan, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, United States—towards the verifiable denuclearization of the Korean peninsula. That day's submission by the DPRK of the declaration of its nuclear programmes to China as chair of the talks, followed by the reciprocal actions of the United States, were important steps forward. The Secretary-General called on all six participants to take that opportunity to expedite movement towards the full implementation of the 2005 Joint Statement [YUN 2005, p. 450].

On 16 July [SG/SM/11704], the Secretary-General welcomed the progress at the sixth round of the six-party talks in Beijing, which included an agreement to establish mechanisms to verify the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula and to monitor the implementation of related commitments. He urged participants to further advance that multilateral process and to contribute to resolving bilateral issues.

Communications. On 3 July [S/2008/435], the DPRK forwarded to the Security Council a statement from its Foreign Ministry saying that the United States, on 26 June, had begun the process of taking the DPRK off the list of state sponsors of terrorism and exempting it from the "Trading with the Enemy Act," as a practical measure for lifting economic sanctions against it under a 2007 agreement [YUN 2007, p. 380] reached at the six-party talks. Expressing appreciation for that move, the statement said that it should lead the United States to totally withdrawing its hostile policy towards the DPRK in all fields, adding that only then could the denuclearization process make smooth progress.

On 11 August [S/2008/547], the DPRK transmitted a report entitled "The United States should not abuse the Armistice Agreement Supervisory Mechanism she scrapped", issued by the Panmunjom Mission of the Korean People's Army on 8 August. The report concluded that the only valid choice to promote lasting peace and secure stability on the Korean peninsula was to replace the 1953 Armistice Agreement [YUN 1953, p. 121] with a peace agreement and establish a new system to ensure peace.

Statements by Secretary-General. On 13 October [SG/SM/11862], the Secretary-General welcomed the agreement between the United States and the DPRK on denuclearization verification measures, allowing for the resumption of the six-party process and related activities. He urged all participants of the talks to meet their respective obligations and to complete the "disablement phase" as soon as possible.

On 12 December [SG/SM/12001], the Secretary-General noted that at the six-party talks, held in Beijing from 8 to 11 December, despite serious discussions, differences remained unresolved, including on terms of verification of the nuclear activities by the DPRK. He strongly supported the goal of verifiable denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula in a peaceful manner, and appreciated that the parties had reaffirmed that goal and unanimously agreed to advance the talks. He expressed his hope that the parties would overcome their remaining differences and complete the implementation of the second-phase actions, and stood ready to assist in any way possible.

Security Council consideration. On 15 December [meeting 6043], Giulio Terzi di Sant'Agata (Italy), the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1718(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 444] to oversee sanctions measures, briefed the Council on the Committee's activities since 1 January 2007. Resolution 1718(2006) required Member States to prevent the supply, sale or transfer to the DPRK of specific listed items, materials, equipment, goods and technology that could contribute to developing weapons of mass destruction. States were required to freeze the assets and ban the travel of designated persons involved in such efforts. They were also to report to the Council within 30 days of the adoption of the resolution on the steps they had taken to implement it. The tasks of the Committee included seeking from States—in particular those producing or possessing the items, materials, equipment, goods and technology listed in the resolution—information on the actions they had taken to implement the measures imposed by the resolution; to examine and take action on information regarding alleged violations of those measures; and to consider and decide upon requests for exemptions.

Security Council resolution 1718(2006) Committee report. On 31 December [S/2008/830], the Committee Chairman transmitted to the Council President a report on the Committee's activities during 2008. As at 31 December, the Committee had received replies from 73 countries and the European Union concerning the implementation of that resolution. Those replies were accessible on the Committee website, unless a State requested that its reply be kept confidential. The list of replies was annexed to the report.

Nepal

The United Nations Mission in Nepal (UNMIN), established in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 385], continued to assist the country in its transition to peace following a decade of armed conflict. Headed by Ian Martin (United Kingdom), the Secretary-General's Personal Representative in Nepal, the Mission helped build confidence in the peace process, including through arms monitoring. Unarmed UN arms monitors were deployed in the Maoist cantonment and satellite sites around the country, as well as at the Nepal Army arms storage depot in Kathmandu. The Security Council extended the Mission's mandate on 23 January and 23 July, the last time until 23 January 2009.

Report of Secretary-General (January). By his 3 January report [S/2008/5] on the peace process in Nepal and UNMIN's activities since his previous report [YUN 2007, p. 386], the Secretary-General said that the period had been characterized by stalemate and crisis. Nevertheless, the seven political parties had remained in dialogue and increasingly turned their attention to an array of critical issues—including review of past agreements and their implementation, security sector reform and the need for setting up commissions on land reform and investigating disappearances.

UNMIN continued to monitor the arms and armies of the two sides (Maoist army and Nepal Army). The Arms Monitoring Office remained at its full strength of 186 monitors, and all five sectors were fully operational under senior sector commanders. The two Joint Monitoring Teams in each sector—each comprising one UN monitor, one Nepal Army monitor and one Maoist army monitor—had proven effective for the early resolution of potential local violations and for enabling a rapid response to incidents requiring investigation. UNMIN continued its focus on election security issues, and one police adviser had been deployed to each of the five operational regions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 January [meeting 5825], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1796(2008). The draft [S/2008/34] was submitted by the United Kingdom.

accordance with resolution 1740(2007) and in line with the provisions of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, noting the importance of a durable long-term solution in helping to create the conditions for the completion of the activities of the Mission, and noting too in this regard the need to address outstanding issues, including those relating to minors,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Nepal and his team in the Mission, and the United Nations country team, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, which is monitoring human rights at the request of the Government of Nepal, and stressing the need for coordination and complementarity of efforts between the Mission and all the United Nations actors in the Mission area,

1. Decides, following the request of the Government of Nepal and based on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, to renew the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Nepal, as set out in resolution 1740(2007), until 23 July 2008;

5. Requests the parties in Nepal to take the necessary steps to promote the safety, security and freedom of movement of Mission and associated personnel in executing the tasks defined in the mandate;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (May). By his report of 12 May [S/2008/313] on the peace process and UNMIN's activities since 3 January, the Secretary-General said that the twice-postponed election for a Constituent Assembly—the centrepiece of the political transition charted in the 12-point understanding of 22 November 2005 between the then Seven-Party Alliance and the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) (CPN(M)) and in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement of 21 November 2006—was held on 10 April in a generally orderly and peaceful atmosphere. More than 63 per cent of the 17.6 million eligible voters participated, with a high turnout of women and young people. The election was the most observed in Nepal's history, with more than 60,000 national and nearly 800 international observers deployed across the country; despite reservations, the major parties accepted the results. Final official results were announced on 8 May, and the 601-member Constituent Assembly would comprise people representing all of the major social groups, with a greatly increased proportion of women and younger members.

Nevertheless, significant challenges remained. First and foremost was the formation of a new Government. A second challenge was the building of sufficient agreement on how to fulfil the commitment in the interim Constitution that the republic be implemented at the first meeting of the Constituent Assembly, and interim arrangements made for the functions of Head of State during the drafting of the new Constitution. A third challenge was completion of the peace process, for although the 23-point agreement of the Seven-Party Alliance and CPN(M) provided the basis for moving forward to the election [YUN 2007, p. 386], many of its commitments and those of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement remained unfulfilled.

As at 24 April, 968 of the authorized 1,048 UNMIN personnel had been recruited. Of 795 civilian personnel on board, 233 (29.3 per cent) were female. UNMIN's efforts to recruit national staff from traditionally marginalized communities had yielded positive results: 46 per cent of staff (169 out of 367) was from those groups.

Report of Secretary-General (July). By his report of 10 July [S/2008/454], the Secretary-General said that the convening on 28 May of the Constituent Assembly was a milestone in the peace process. The Assembly was to draft a new Constitution within two years, and would act as the legislature during that transitional period. At its first session, the Assembly voted by 560 votes to 4 to end the 239-year-old monarchy and to implement a federal democratic republic. A constitutional amendment was also adopted creating the posts of President and Vice-President.

The former king, Gyanendra Shah, was afforded all the rights and responsibilities of any Nepali citizen and given 15 days to vacate the Narayanhiti Palace in central Kathmandu, which he did on 11 June. The republic was established peacefully amid public celebrations, apart from some minor incidents involving improvised explosive devices detonated at the venue of the Assembly and at other locations in Kathmandu, allegedly by Hindu fundamentalist groups, in the week when the Assembly's inaugural session was held.

Some impediments to forming a new Government were removed on 25 June when the Seven-Party Alliance signed an agreement providing for the time-bound resolution of key issues in the peace process. It required termination within 15 days of the paramilitary functioning and activities of the Maoist Young Communist League, which CPN(M) had indicated would fully comply with the laws of the land.

The Maoists were also required to return all seized property within the same time frame, after which legal action would be taken.

The negotiation of the agreement and the consequent amendments to the Interim Constitution had involved significant, difficult compromises among the three largest parties. The Nepali Congress had insisted that, as the second-largest party, it should be able to nominate its candidate to the presidency, and that it might otherwise remain in opposition.

At the following Assembly meeting, on 26 June, Prime Minister Girija Prasad Koirala announced his resignation and called on the Maoists to form a government. Nevertheless, newly elected members of the Assembly, in which 25 political parties were represented, had begun to question their relevancy, as the negotiations had been conducted principally among the three largest parties and other members of the Seven-Party Alliance.

Many of the commitments in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the 23-point agreement of 2007 and other agreements remained unfulfilled. Of particular concern was the fact that no progress had been made regarding the discharge from the Maoist cantonments of minors and others found ineligible by UNMIN. The Maoist leadership said that it remained committed to their discharge as soon as a new government was in office.

Following the completion of the election on 10 April, the number of UNMIN arms monitors declined. As at 30 June, there were 155 monitors remaining out of the authorized strength of 186. Overall UNMIN staffing stood at 802, out of the authorized 1,045 personnel. In preparation for the end of the UNMIN mandate on 23 July, an end-of-mission task force was established for transferring the residual tasks to the UN system in Nepal, and to assist national and international staff in applying for alternative employment.

Communication. On 22 July [S/2008/476], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a letter of 8 July from Nepal requesting a six-month extension of UNMIN's mandate from 23 July, the date of the expiration of its previous mandate.

Security Council consideration (July). Briefing the Security Council on 18 July [meeting 5938], the Special Representative, Mr. Martin, said that on 19 July the Constituent Assembly was scheduled to elect Nepal's first president and then name a prime minister, who would form a new government. Although the Secretary-General had not anticipated a further extension of UNMIN's mandate, the Council had before it a request based on a consensus among the main parties for such an extension.

The most contentious issue concerned the sharing of posts and power among the parties. The Maoists were acknowledged by the other parties as having the right, as the largest party in the Assembly, to name the prime minister. But both the Nepali Congress and the Communist Party of Nepal (Unified Marxist-Leninist (UML)) laid claim to the presidency, with the Nepali Congress stating that otherwise it would not participate in a new coalition government. The Maoists continued to appeal to all major parties to participate in a Maoist-led Government, but had not accepted the preferred presidential nominees of either the Nepali Congress or UML. Instead, they had nominated a Madhesi, who was not from any of the major parties.

Nepalis agreed that the peace process would not be complete while there were still two armies—a dangerous situation. All main political actors believed that a limited further UNMIN presence was necessary—a view that the Secretary-General supported.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 5941], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1825(2008). The draft [S/2008/472] was submitted by the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1740(2007) of 23 January 2007 and 1796(2008) of 23 January 2008,

Acknowledging the strong desire of the Nepalese people for peace and the restoration of democracy and the importance in this respect of the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and subsequent agreements by the relevant parties,

Expressing its continued readiness to support the peace process in Nepal in the timely and effective implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and subsequent agreements, in particular the agreement of 25 June 2008, as requested by the Government of Nepal,

Welcoming also the prospect of the formation of a democratically elected government and institutions in Nepal,

Echoing the call by the Secretary-General for all parties in Nepal to move forward swiftly in the implementation of the agreements reached, noting the assessment of the Secretary-General that the United Nations Mission in Nepal will be well placed to assist in the management of arms and armed personnel in accordance with the agreement of 25 June 2008 between the political parties, and recognizing the willingness of the Mission to assist the parties in this, as requested, in order to achieve a durable solution,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 10 July 2008 on the Mission, in accordance with his mandate,

Welcoming also the completion of the two phases of the verification process and continuing assistance with the management of arms and armed personnel of both sides in accordance with resolution 1740(2007) and in line with the provisions of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, noting the importance of a durable long-term solution in helping to create the conditions for the completion of the activities of the Mission, and noting also in this regard the need to address outstanding issues, including the release of minors in cantonment sites and continued reporting on this issue as required under resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005,

Noting with appreciation that, with the successful holding of the Constituent Assembly elections, some of the elements of the mandate relating to the Mission as set out in resolution 1740(2007) have already been accomplished,

Taking note of the letter dated 8 July 2008 from the Government of Nepal to the Secretary-General, in which it recognizes the contribution of the Mission and requests an extension of the Mission at a smaller scale to carry out the remainder of the mandate for six months,

Recognizing the need to pay special attention to the needs of women, children and traditionally marginalized groups in the peace process, as mentioned in the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and in resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000,

Recognizing also that civil society can play an important role in democratic transition and conflict prevention,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Nepal and his team in the Mission, and the United Nations country team, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, which is monitoring human rights at the request of the Government of Nepal, and stressing the need for coordination and complementarity of efforts between the Mission and all the United Nations actors in the Mission area, particularly in order to ensure continuity, as the mandate comes to an end,

1. Decides, in line with the request of the Government of Nepal and the recommendations of the Secretary-General, to renew the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Nepal, as established under resolution 1740(2007), until 23 January 2009, taking into account the completion of some elements of the mandate, and the ongoing work on the monitoring of the management of arms and armed personnel in line with the agreement of 25 June 2008 among the political parties, which will support the completion of the peace process;

2. Calls upon all parties to take full advantage of the expertise and readiness of the Mission, within its mandate, to support the peace process to facilitate the completion of outstanding aspects of the mandate of the Mission;

3. Concurs with the view of the Secretary-General that the current monitoring arrangements should not be necessary for a substantial further period, and expects to see them concluded within the period of this mandate;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Secretary-General for a phased, gradual drawdown and withdrawal of Mission staff, including arms monitors;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of progress towards implementation of the present resolution and to submit a report on this and the implications for the Mission no later than 31 October 2008;

6. Calls upon the Government of Nepal to continue to take the necessary decisions to create conditions conducive to the completion of the activities of the Mission by the end of the current mandate, including through implementation of the agreement of 25 June 2008, in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the Mission from Nepal;

7. Calls upon all parties in Nepal to work together in a spirit of cooperation, consensus and compromise in order to continue the transition to a durable long-term solution to enable the country to move to a peaceful, democratic and more prosperous future;

8. Requests the parties in Nepal to take the necessary steps to promote the safety, security and freedom of movement of Mission and associated personnel in executing the tasks defined in the mandate;

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In a 24 October report [S/2008/670], the Secretary-General said that developments had included the election by the Constituent Assembly of the first President, Vice-President and Prime Minister of the Federal Democratic Republic of Nepal, and the formation of a Council of Ministers, bringing to an end a period of political uncertainty. On the other hand, there had been little progress by the Constituent Assembly towards its main task of drafting a new Constitution. Despite some improvements, problems had persisted at the Maoist army cantonment sites, with combatants frequently complaining about the lack of Government support in meeting their food requirements, the availability of clean drinking water and the provision of adequate health facilities.

Continuing challenges at the local level included weak rule of law in the Tarai, where abductions and killings continued, and the distinction between politically motivated incidents by illegal armed groups and criminal actions was becoming increasingly blurred. Moreover, a series of strikes and other protests over a range of issues had caused disruption and economic loss.

As for UNMIN, its staffing level had been substantially reduced. As at 10 October, the staffing level was 283 out of the authorized 306 civilian personnel, together with 85 arms monitors out of the authorized strength of 90.

Security Council consideration (November). Briefing the Council on 7 November [meeting 6013], the Special Representative said that on 31 October and 1 November, the Secretary-General had paid a two-day visit to Nepal, where he had addressed the Constituent Assembly, congratulating it on the country's historic transformation.

The new Government's three priorities were completing the peace process, drafting the new Constitution and achieving rapid economic progress, each of which faced major challenges. The extension of UNMIN's mandate in July related only to an aspect of the first challenge—dealing with the management of arms and armies.

Nepal said that UNMIN, among other things, was mandated to monitor the cantonments and assist in the peace process through arms management. If the process extended beyond the end of the Mission's mandate on 23 January 2009, the Government might request a six-month extension.

Report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2009/1], the Secretary-General reviewed the situation since 24 October. He said there had been slow progress on key issues relating to the peace process since the swearing-in of the CPN(M)-led coalition Government in August—particularly with respect to the special committee to supervise, integrate and rehabilitate the Maoist army personnel, which had yet to convene. On 28 October, just prior to the Secretary-General's visit to Nepal, the Government announced the formation of the special committee.

Noting that the Seven-Party Alliance agreement of 25 June provided that the committee would comprise members from "major parties"—whether or not they were represented in the Government—he said that the Government decision provided for one representative each from CPN(M), UML, the Madhesi People's Rights Forum and the Nepali Congress, with the UML Deputy Prime Minister and Home Minister acting as coordinator, and the CPN(M) Minister for Peace and Reconstruction as an additional ex officio member.

The formation of the special committee immediately met with controversy. The Nepali Congress objected that the terms of reference decided upon by the Government were at variance with the 25 June agreement. Other smaller opposition parties expressed disappointment at not being consulted. Negotiations among the largest parties subsequently appeared to resolve their differences regarding the terms of reference. However, the Nepali Congress also objected to the composition of the committee, calling for equal representation of parties, and no agreement had yet been reached on that point.

With respect to UNMIN, as at 1 December, 355 of the authorized 396 personnel were in the Mission.

Communication. By a 30 December letter to the Council [S/2008/837], the Secretary-General transmitted a 12 December letter from Nepal requesting a six-month extension of UNMIN's mandate, from 23 January 2009.

Children and armed conflict

By an 18 April report [S/2008/259] prepared pursuant to Council resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], the Secretary-General reviewed the situation of children and armed conflict in Nepal from 1 October 2006 to 31 December 2007. He said that while grave violations of children's rights had decreased significantly since the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in 2006, violations against children had not ceased.

Prior to the signing of the ceasefire agreement, substantial numbers of children had been recruited by CPN(M) and moved into cantonments. While no progress had been made in securing their formal discharge, many had been released informally. Meanwhile, social unrest in the Terai region had contributed to a pattern of protests and the emergence of political and armed groups, creating new risks for children. Those included not only recruitment, but also their increasing use by all major political parties in political demonstrations, strikes and blockades.

The Secretary-General recommended that CPN(M) agree to a concrete, time-bound action plan to implement its commitment to release children in its army, and end obstacles to the reintegration of informally released children. He also recommended that the Government clearly commit to reintegrating children associated with armed forces and armed groups, to criminalizing child recruitment, and to prosecuting violators of their rights. He called on armed groups in the Terai to end such violations, and on political parties to end the use of children in demonstrations, strikes and blockades.

Financing of UNMIN

In October [A/63/346/Add.3], the Secretary-General estimated UNMIN's resource requirements for 2009 at $6,932,600. In a report of 10 December [A/63/593], ACABQ said that those requirements covered operations through January 2009 and the planned liquidation of the Mission in the period from February to May 2009. It noted, however, from the Security Council's meeting on 7 November [meeting 6013], that UNMIN's presence might be required for another six months, with further adjustments. If the Council were to extend the Mission's mandate, the liquidation activities would be postponed accordingly.

On 24 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 63/263 section XI (see p. 1548), approved the amount submitted by the Secretary-General as part of the $429,497,600 budget for the 27 special political missions authorized by the General Assembly and/or Security Council.

Myanmar

Statement by Secretary-General. On 11 February, the Secretary-General, in a statement [SG/SM/11409], said that the announcement by the Myanmar Government that it planned to hold a constitutional referendum in May and multiparty democratic elections by 2010 marked the first establishment of a time frame for implementing its political road map process. The Secretary-General called on the authorities to make the process inclusive, participatory and transparent in order to ensure that any draft Constitution was representative of the views of all the Myanmar people. It was important for the leadership to engage in a substantive dialogue with the General Secretary of the National League for Democracy (NLD), Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other parties to the national reconciliation process. The United Nations remained ready to support that process. This latest development also made it essential that a visit to Myanmar by his Special Adviser be allowed to proceed.

Security Council consideration (March). On 18 March [meeting 5854], the Special Adviser, Ibrahim Gambari, briefed the Security Council on his visit to Myanmar (6–10 March). The authorities had granted most of the meetings he requested. Mr. Gambari met with various Government ministers, and met twice with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi. He also met with the political parties, including NLD, the National Unity Party and the PaO National Organization—which represented ethnic and nationality groups—as well as the Union Solidarity and Development Association. Regrettably, he had been unable to meet with the senior Government leadership or with other political parties, or with representatives of ethnic minority groups.

The visit provided an opportunity to exchange views on the preparations for the planned constitutional referendum in May and for multiparty democratic elections by 2010.

Mr. Gambari regarded the fact that he had been granted a second meeting with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi as an indication that the Government remained interested in maintaining that channel of communication. The Government had appointed a minister for liaison with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi who, on her part, had signalled her willingness to cooperate with the Government in the interest of the nation. She expected the United Nations, through its good offices mission, to help facilitate a substantive and time-bound dialogue to that end.

Meanwhile, the United Nations remained the only international actor maintaining face-to-face dialogue with Myanmar's leaders on the need for further efforts towards national reconciliation, democracy and human rights. It was also the only outsider with access to both the Government and Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and acting as a go-between between the two.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 May [meeting 5885], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/13 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms the statement made by its President on 11 October 2007 and the statement made by its President to the press on 14 November 2007, and all the expectations expressed in those statements.

The Council takes note of the announcement by the Government of Myanmar of a referendum on a draft constitution in May 2008 and elections in 2010. It further notes the commitment by the Government to ensure that the referendum process will be free and fair. The Council underlines the need for the Government to establish the conditions and create an atmosphere conducive to an inclusive and credible process, including the full participation of all political actors and respect for fundamental political freedoms.

The Council reaffirms its unwavering support for the Secretary-General's good offices mission and expresses its appreciation for the work of his Special Adviser on Myanmar, Mr. Ibrahim Gambari. The Council encourages the Government of Myanmar and all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the United Nations.

The Council welcomes the important role that the countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations continue to play in supporting the United Nations good offices mission.

The Council affirms its commitment to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Myanmar and, in that context, reiterates that the future of Myanmar lies in the hands of all of its people.

The Council remains seized of the matter.

Communication. A 2 May letter [S/2008/289] from Myanmar to the Council President stated that pressure exerted by members of the Security Council on other members had resulted in the issuance of the presidential statement of the same day. Myanmar not being a threat to international or regional peace and security, the statement delved into domestic matters, and that appeared highly objectionable.

Cyclone Nargis. In a statement of 4 May [SG/SM/11545], the Secretary-General expressed his sadness by the loss of life and the destruction suffered by the people of Myanmar after Cyclone Nargis struck the country on 2 May. As a first step, a UN Disaster Assessment and Coordination had been organized and was on stand-by to assist the Government in responding to humanitarian needs. The United Nations was prepared to extend other assistance and to mobilize international aid in support of the Government.

On 7 May [SG/SM/11552], the Secretary-General expressed his concern about the continuing tragedy in Myanmar, where the Government had confirmed that over 22,000 people had died and more than 41,000 people were missing following the impact of the cyclone on 2–3 May. He urged the Government to respond to the outpouring of international support and solidarity by facilitating the arrival of aid workers and the clearance of relief supplies in every way possible.

On 8 May [SG/SM/11556], the Secretary-General took note of the Government's decision to proceed with the constitutional referendum on 10 May, while postponing it in some of the areas most affected by the cyclone. Due to the scope of the disaster, he believed that it might be prudent to focus instead on mobilizing all available resources and capacity for the emergency response efforts.

By a joint statement of 19 May [SG/2138-IHA/1260], the Secretary-General and the Chair of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), citing the devastating impact of Cyclone Nargis, announced the convening of an ASEAN-United Nations International Pledging Conference, to be held on 25 May in Yangon, Myanmar.

On 23 May [SG/T/2605], the Secretary-General met with the Head of State, Senior General Than Shwe. Following the meeting, he said that the Senior General had agreed to allow international aid workers into the affected areas, regardless of nationality.

Addressing the Pledging Conference on 25 May [SG/SM/11597], the Secretary-General said that he had visited Myanmar's Irrawaddy Delta a few days earlier. The Government had put in place a functioning relief programme, but much more needed to be done. Experienced international relief workers should have unhindered access to the areas hardest hit, and extra helicopters and boats were urgently required. The Secretary-General's discussions with Myanmar's leadership had been encouraging; they agreed on the need to act urgently, and any hesitation the Government might have had about allowing international humanitarian groups to operate freely in the affected areas had passed. The United Nations Flash Appeal sought $201 million to assist roughly 1.5 million survivors for the next three months; contributions amounting to some 20 per cent of that amount had been received, with a further 20 per cent pledged.

Statements by Secretary-General. By a statement of 27 May [SG/SM/11598], the Secretary-General regretted the Government's decision to extend for a sixth consecutive year the detention under house arrest of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi. The sooner restrictions on her and other political figures were lifted, the sooner Myanmar would be able to move towards inclusive national reconciliation, the restoration of democracy and full respect for human rights.

On 23 July [SG/SM/11716], the Secretary-General said that on that day he had convened a meeting of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General on Myanmar (Australia, China, the EU, France, India, Indonesia, Japan, Norway, Russian Federation, Singapore, Republic of Korea, Thailand, United Kingdom, United States, Viet Nam) to discuss the upcoming visit of his Special Adviser to the country. The Group expressed its expectation that Mr. Gambari's next visit would yield tangible progress on the issues of concern to the international community, particularly on the resumption of dialogue between Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and the Government, the credibility of the electoral process and the regularization of engagement with the good offices of the Secretary-General.

On 24 September [SG/SM/11810], the Secretary-General welcomed the release by the Government on 23 September of several political prisoners as part of an amnesty procedure, including Myanmar's longest-serving political prisoner, U Win Tin, and six other senior NLD members. The release of political prisoners had been one focus of discussion between the Special Adviser and the Government during his latest visit to Myanmar (18–23 August). The Secretary-General reiterated that all political prisoners should be released and that all Myanmar citizens should be able to enjoy political freedoms—necessary steps towards the process of national reconciliation and dialogue.

On 27 September [SG/SM/11835], the Secretary-General chaired the first high-level meeting of the Group of Friends—the sixth meeting of the Group since it was established in December 2007. While noting the recent actions taken by the Government, the Group encouraged it to work more closely with the UN good offices to address key issues of international concern, especially the release of political prisoners and the initiation of an all-inclusive dialogue with the opposition. The Group encouraged all parties to seize the opportunity of the UN good offices, while stressing the Government's responsibility to demonstrate its commitment through further tangible results.

On 12 November [SG/SM/11922], the Secretary-General expressed his concern at the reports of sentences and severe prison terms imposed in connection with the 2007 peaceful demonstrations [YUN 2007, p. 383]. He called for all political prisoners to be released and for all citizens to be allowed to freely participate in their country's political future as part of an inclusive national reconciliation process.

General Assembly action (December). On 24 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/245 (see p. 886), by which it called on the Government to release political prisoners; to resume a dialogue with all political actors, including NLD and representatives of ethnic nationalities; to pursue, through dialogue and peaceful means, the suspension and end of conflict with all ethnic nationalities; and to allow the full participation of representatives of all political parties and representatives of ethnic nationalities in a process of national reconciliation, democratization and the establishment of the rule of law.

Children and armed conflict

On 25 July [S/AC.51/2008/9], in a statement addressed to the non-State armed groups in Myanmar, the Chairman of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict urged the leaders of the United Wa State Army, the Karen National Union/Karen National Liberation Army (KNU-KNLA), the Karenni National Progressive Party, the Kachin Independence Organization, the Karenni National People's Liberation Front, the Democratic Karen Buddhist Army, the Shan State Army-South, the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army and the KNU-KNLA Peace Council to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers; to allow and facilitate unhindered access to the UN country task force on monitoring and reporting established pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863]; to release the children associated with their forces and facilitate their follow-up by UNICEF, with a view to their reintegration; and to enter into dialogue with the UN country task force on monitoring and reporting to devise a time-bound action plan.

Other matters

Cambodia–Thailand border dispute

Communications. During 2008, the Security Council was kept informed of developments in a border dispute between Cambodia and Thailand, through a series of letters from those countries to the Council President.

On 18 July [S/2008/470], Cambodia described what it called Thailand's violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity. It noted that the Temple of Preah Vihear in Cambodia was inscribed into the World Heritage List on 7 July by UNESCO's World Heritage Committee. On 15 July, some 50 Thai soldiers crossed into Keo Sikha Kiri Svava pagoda, located inside Cambodian territory, about 300 metres from the Temple. By 16 and 17 July, the number of Thai soldiers on the grounds of the pagoda had increased to 480. According to Cambodia, the Thai side used its unilaterally designed map to indicate that the pagoda was in a so-called "overlapping area." In adjudicating the conflict between Cambodia and Thailand over the Temple in 1962 [YUN 1962, p. 467], however, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) had pronounced in favour of the map that situated Preah Vihear in Cambodian territory, stating that both parties, by their conduct, had recognized the line and thereby in effect agreed to regard it as being the frontier line. Cambodia concluded that it could not ignore that the Thai military provocation was aimed at creating a de facto "overlapping area" that legally did not exist on Cambodian soil. On 19 July, Cambodia addressed a similar letter [A/62/917] to the President of the General Assembly.

On 21 July [S/2008/474], Thailand replied that the area adjacent to the Temple of Preah Vihear, where the pagoda was situated, was part of Thailand's territory, and that Thailand's position was fully consistent with the 1962 ICJ judgment. Cambodia's territorial claim was based on its unilateral understanding of that judgement.

Also on 21 July [S/2008/475], Cambodia stated that subsequent negotiations with Thailand had been inconclusive and that Thailand, in the meantime, had built up its military presence with artillery and tanks along the border. Cambodia asked for the convening of an urgent meeting of the Security Council, describing the issue as a grave threat to peace and security in the region.

Statement by Secretary-General. On 21 July [SG/SM/11710], the Secretary-General called for restraint on both sides and expressed his hope that the matter could be resolved peacefully and by diplomatic means in the context of the traditionally excellent relations between the two countries.

Communications. On 22 July [S/2008/478], Thailand, commenting on Cambodia's request for an urgent Security Council meeting, said that the matter could be resolved amicably. The first step had already been taken on 21 July in Thailand's Sa Kaeo Province under the General Border Committee, headed by high-level representatives from both countries.

On 25 July [S/2008/490], following up on that letter, Thailand said that bilateral consultations between the two countries' Foreign Ministers would take place on 28 July in Cambodia. Within that context, it welcomed the Security Council's decision to postpone consideration of Cambodia's request for an urgent meeting.

Foreign Ministers' meetings. On 28 July, Cambodia [S/2008/498] and Thailand [S/2008/494] informed the Security Council that their Foreign Ministers, meeting on 28 July, had agreed on a common recommendation to their Governments, calling on both countries to exercise the utmost restraint so that the problem could be settled through peaceful means, using bilateral mechanisms. They also outlined their agreement on provisional arrangements pending survey and demarcation by a joint boundary commission. Thailand also sent an account of the meeting to the General Assembly President on 30 July [A/62/919].

On 19 August, Thailand [S/2008/565], and on 20 August, Cambodia [S/2008/569], provided accounts of a second meeting of their Foreign Ministers (Cham, Thailand, 18–19 August). Both sides welcomed the first-phase redeployment of their respective troops out of the pagoda, the area surrounding the pagoda and the Temple; agreed to hold a second meeting in Cambodia on 29 August to discuss the second phase of troop redeployment; and agreed that the next meeting of the Joint Commission on Demarcation for Land Boundary be convened in early October. Both sides agreed to consider the issue of the Ta Muen/Tamone Temples (also located in the border area) at the next Foreign Ministers' meeting.

Communications. On 15 September [S/2008/606], Cambodia forwarded a letter dated 14 August from its Deputy Foreign Minister to Thailand's Foreign Minister, stating that, on 26 July, the Thai armed forces had moved troops into the Tamone Temple Complex and begun to occupy the temples by constructing a fence and other structures, in violation of Cambodia's sovereignty and territorial integrity and of international law. Thailand should immediately remove the fence and other structures in the area, withdraw its troops, pull down the military camp from the Tamone Thom Temple, and restore the Tamone Temple complex and nearby area to their condition prior to the Thai occupation.

In response, Thailand, on 19 September [S/2008/611], forwarded a letter dated 18 August from its Foreign Minister to Cambodia's Foreign Minister asserting Thailand's ownership of the Prasat Ta Muen Temple complex. It also contained an aide-memoire of 16 September from the Foreign Ministry to the Cambodian Government protesting Cambodia's violation of Thailand's sovereignty over the Temple of Ta Kwai, an archeological site in Thailand.

Statement by Secretary-General. On 15 October [SG/SM/11865], the Secretary-General expressed concern about the exchange of gunfire on that day along the Cambodia–Thailand border and the reported casualties. He called on both parties to exercise utmost restraint and urged them to expedite bilateral talks so that their differences could be resolved peacefully.

Communications. Also on 15 October [S/2008/653], Cambodia stated that Thai troops crossed into Cambodian territory at three locations in the area of the Temple of Preah Vihear and fired on Cambodian soldiers stationed there. Those locations were the Keo Sikha Kiri Svava Pagoda (approximately 300 metres from the Temple of Preah Vihear and 700 metres from the border), Veal Intry (approximately 1,120 metres from the border) and Phnom Trap (approximately 1,600 metres from the border).

In response, Thailand, on 16 October [S/2008/657], said that on the previous day, while conducting a routine patrol near the area called Phu Ma Khua in Thai territory, Thai soldiers came under attack by Cambodian soldiers using rocket-propelled grenades and sub-machine guns. At the same time, around the area near Pha Mor I Dang in Thai territory, another group of Cambodian soldiers opened fire, using recoilless guns, rocket-propelled grenades, mortars and rifles, on Thai soldiers—acts which Thailand considered a serious violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On 17 October [S/2008/660], Cambodia informed the Security Council that unilateral demining activity by Thai soldiers in Cambodia's territory in the area adjacent to the Temple of Preah Vihear contravened the agreements made by both sides. That letter was also sent to the General Assembly [A/63/495].

Also on 17 October [S/2008/661], referring to that letter, Thailand said that the urgency of demining in the area adjacent to the Temple of Phra Viharn came after two Thai rangers, who were on routine patrol inside Thailand's territory on 6 October, stepped on landmines and lost their legs. Thailand was alarmed by the incident because Thai rangers had been using this patrol route for a long time without any incident, since that route was known to have been cleared of landmines. The NGO Thai Mine Action Centre found a number of newly planted mines in a nearby area. The landmines were of a type known to be in the possession of Cambodian authorities. Despite that incident, Thailand had chosen the path of dialogue, transparency and goodwill in solving the problem.

Cambodia

Statement by Secretary-General. On 15 April [SG/SM/11514], on the tenth anniversary of the death of the Khmer Rouge leader Pol Pot, the Secretary-General reminded the international community of the importance of bringing to closure one of history's darkest chapters. The United Nations and the Government of Cambodia remained engaged in efforts to hold the Khmer Rouge senior leaders and those most responsible accountable for their horrific crimes. The Secretary-General expressed his hope that, with the support of the international community, the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia would soon deliver justice for the Cambodian people.

India–Pakistan

The UN Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP) continued in 2008 to monitor the situation in Jammu and Kashmir. By a letter of 16 October [S/2008/663], the Secretary-General conveyed to the Security Council his intention to appoint Major General Kim Moon Hwa (Republic of Korea) as Chief Military Observer of UNMOGIP, replacing Major General Dragutin Repinc (Croatia), who had relinquished his post on 28 December 2007. By a reply of 20 October [S/2008/664], the Council took note of that intention.

Statement by OHCHR. On 27 August, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) expressed concern about the violent protests in Indian-administered Kashmir that reportedly led to civilian casualties as well as restrictions on the right to freedom of assembly and expression. The Office called on the Indian authorities—and in particular the security forces—to respect the right to freedom of assembly and expression and comply with international human rights principles in controlling the demonstrators. The Office called for a thorough and independent investigation into all killings, and called on the demonstrators to protest using peaceful means only.

Mongolia

Statement by Secretary-General. On 2 July [SG/SM/11673], the Secretary-General expressed concern at the violence resulting from the demonstrations in Mongolia and regretted the consequent loss of life. He deplored the resort to violence to protest the conduct of the parliamentary elections on 29 June. He urged all parties to exercise restraint and engage in dialogue, and appealed to all demonstrators to refrain from any further acts of violence. Mongolia had made a peaceful transition to democracy, and all parties should respect that achievement and find ways to settle the crisis.

Also on 2 July [A/62/894], Mongolia transmitted to the Secretary-General a presidential decree of 1 July and a recommendation of 2 July of Mongolia's National Security Council on the state of emergency declared in the capital, Ulaanbaatar. The President of Mongolia, Nambaryn Enkhbayar, drew attention to the property destruction, fire-setting, threats against law-enforcement officers and disorder caused by violent actions of a group of persons in Ulaanbaatar's Sukhbaatar District on 1 July. To normalize social life, a four-day state of emergency had been declared in Ulaanbaatar. The National Security Council called on political parties to refrain from inciting the population to carry out illegal actions and to refrain from disturbing the social order. It also called on the media to report accurately and to refrain from distributing information that justified or encouraged illegal acts.

Statement by OHCHR. On 3 July, OHCHR expressed concerns about developments in Mongolia. There had been reports of at least five deaths, numerous injuries and around 700 protestors detained. The Office called upon the authorities to exercise utmost restraint, to ensure that due process was followed in the case of any detentions, and to properly investigate the incidents leading to deaths and injuries.

The Philippines

Children and armed conflict

In April, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], the Secretary-General submitted a report [S/2008/272] on children and armed conflict in the Philippines. The report, which covered the period from 1 July 2005 to 30 November 2007, focused on grave violations perpetrated against children in the country, including the recruitment and use of children, killing and maiming of children, sexual violence against children, attacks on schools and hospitals, denial of humanitarian access and abductions of children. The report identified parties to the conflict, both State and non-State actors, who committed grave abuses against children, including Government security forces, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, the New People's Army and the Abu Sayyaf Group/Jemaah Islamiya.

Acknowledging the challenges in addressing such violations, the report recommended that State and non-State actors enter into dialogue with the United Nations for preparing action plans to end the recruitment and use of children by armed forces and groups, as well as other violations of children's rights. All parties to the conflict should facilitate access to their areas of operation and ensure the safety of staff carrying out monitoring and reporting. The Government should investigate and prosecute those responsible for grave violations against children.

Tajikistan

UN Regional Centre for Preventive Diplomacy

Communication. On 28 April [S/2008/285], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President of his intention to appoint Miroslav Jenča (Slovakia) as his Special Representative and Head of the United Nations Regional Centre for Preventive Diplomacy for Central Asia in Ashgabat, Turkmenistan [YUN 2007, p. 387]. On 30 April [S/2008/286], the Council took note of that intention.

Security Council statement. By a press statement of 10 December [SC/9528], Security Council members welcomed the engagement by the Centre with the Governments of the region and regional organizations on issues of preventive diplomacy, in accordance with its mandate.

United Arab Emirates–Iran

Greater Tunb, Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa

On 21 January [S/2008/33], the United Arab Emirates requested that the Security Council retain on its agenda for 2008 the item entitled “Letter dated 3 December 1971 from the Permanent Representatives of Algeria, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Republic and the People’s Democratic Republic of Yemen to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council” [YUN 1971, p. 209] concerning Iran’s occupation of “the Greater Tunb, the Lesser Tunb and Abu Musa, three islands belonging to the United Arab Emirates”, until such time as the dispute was resolved by peaceful means through direct negotiations or through the International Court of Justice.

The League of Arab States (LAS), in communications transmitted on 10 March [S/2008/179], 19 May [S/2008/344] and 17 September [S/2008/609], informed the Security Council of the adoption of three resolutions denouncing the Iranian Government’s consolidation of its occupation of the three islands, and affirming the sovereignty of the United Arab Emirates over them. The League also resolved to inform the Secretary-General and the Security Council of the importance that the Council remain seized of the issue until Iran ended its occupation of the islands and the United Arab Emirates regained its full sovereignty over them.

In a 31 March letter [S/2008/220] referring to the LAS letters, Iran said that the islands were an integral and eternal part of the Iranian territory and rejected any claims to the contrary. By a letter of 21 August [S/2008/577], the United Arab Emirates protested Iran’s establishment of a maritime rescue office and an office for registering ships and sailors on Abu Musa as a blatant violation of the Memorandum of Understanding concluded in November 1971 concerning the island. By a letter of 3 September [S/2008/593], Iran said that those actions had been in accordance with its sovereign rights and with the ongoing arrangements emanating from the documents exchanged in 1971.

Regional meetings

On 30 May [A/62/853-S/2008/358], the Russian Federation transmitted a joint communiqué by the Foreign Ministers of China, India and Russia on the outcome of their meeting in Yekaterinburg, Russia, on 14 and 15 May. With respect to the Asia-Pacific region, it included comments on expanding cooperation with Central Asian countries, as well as on the situation in Afghanistan, the Iranian nuclear programme and the six-party talks for resolving the nuclear problem in the Korean Peninsula.

Europe and the Mediterranean

The restoration of peace and stability in the post-conflict countries of the European and Mediterranean region advanced in 2008, as efforts to re-establish their institutions and social and economic infrastructure continued. However, a number of issues remained unresolved, and in some countries the peace process was seriously challenged.

The international community, led by the European Union (EU), continued to assist Bosnia and Herzegovina in moving towards full integration into Europe through the EU Stabilization and Association Process. The country in June signed the Stabilization and Association Agreement with the EU and was provided with a road map for visa liberalization. Nevertheless, nationalist rhetoric prevailed in the political scene as a result of a municipal election campaign and other developments in the region.

The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo continued to assist in building a modern, multiethnic society. In February, Kosovo declared independence, an act followed by boycotts by Kosovo Serbs and protests in many areas in Kosovo and Serbia. In light of developments, the United Nations Mission in June launched a reconfiguration process. In October, acting on a Serbian proposal, the General Assembly requested the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion on whether Kosovo's unilateral declaration of independence was in accordance with international law.

Renewed efforts to end the stalemate in the Georgian-Abkhaz peace process were threatened in August by the war in South Ossetia and by the Georgian-Russian conflict. The recognition of Abkhazia and South Ossetia by the Russian Federation further increased tensions. Georgia withdrew from the 1994 Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces (Moscow Agreement), and the Collective Peacekeeping Force of the Commonwealth of Independent States was officially terminated, substantially changing the context in which the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia operated.

No progress was made towards settling the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan over the occupied Nagorny Karabakh region in Azerbaijan. In March, acting on a proposal by Azerbaijan, the General Assembly called for the withdrawal of Armenian forces from Azerbaijan.

The situation in Cyprus appeared to improve, and UN efforts focused on assisting the two sides in implementing the 8 July 2006 Agreement. Full-fledged negotiations between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot sides were launched in September under UN auspices. The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus continued to cooperate with the two communities, facilitating projects benefiting Greek and Turkish Cypriots in the buffer zone and advancing the goal of restoring normal conditions and humanitarian functions on the island.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

During 2008, the European Union (EU) continued to lead the international community's efforts in assisting the two entities comprising the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (where mainly Bosnian Muslims (Bosniacs) and Bosnian Croats resided) and the Republika Srpska (where mostly Bosnian Serbs resided)—in implementing the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, pp. 544 & 551]. The Office of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina (OHR) was responsible for the Agreement's civilian aspects [YUN 1996, p. 293], while the European Union Police Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (EUPM) was responsible for helping develop sustainable policing arrangements. The EU Force (EUFOR) mission was responsible for the Agreement's military aspects, which were transferred to it by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 401]. The Peace Implementation Council (PIC) and its Steering Board continued to monitor and facilitate the Agreement's implementation.

The High Representative reported on progress made in the Agreement's implementation and related political developments during the year in the context of his mission implementation plan, which set out a number of core tasks to be accomplished [YUN 2003, p. 401]. Bosnia and Herzegovina made progress on its European integration path when two police reform laws were adopted in April, opening the way for the signature of the Stabilization and Association Agreement in June. In addition, the European Commission released a road map for visa liberalization. Several processes dominated the political landscape, such as the run-up to the municipal elections held in October and the transition from OHR to a reinforced EU engagement. In November, leaders of three political parties signed the Prud Agreement addressing key issues in the country. The police services improved their capacity to maintain public peace and order, including in complex situations such as the commemoration ceremonies in Srebrenica and eastern Bosnia and the aftermath of the arrest of Radovan Karadžić, a fugitive from the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY).

In November, the Security Council extended by one year the mandate of EUFOR. The Council welcomed the decision of NATO to continue to maintain the headquarters in Bosnia and Herzegovina so that it could work with EUFOR to help implement the 1995 Peace Agreement. In addition, the Council reiterated that the primary responsibility for implementing the Peace Agreement lay with the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and underlined the need for their full cooperation with ICTY and for strengthening joint institutions.

Implementation of Peace Agreement

Civilian aspects

The civilian aspects of the 1995 Peace Agreement entailed a broad range of activities, including the provision of humanitarian aid and resources for infrastructure rehabilitation, the establishment of political and constitutional institutions, the promotion of respect for human rights and the holding of free and fair elections. The High Representative, who chaired the PIC Steering Board and other key implementation bodies, was the final authority with regard to implementing the civilian aspects of the Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 547]. The reports on EUPM activities were submitted by the High Representative to the Security Council through the Secretary-General.

Office of High Representative

Reports of High Representative. The High Representative, Miroslav Lajčák (Slovakia), reported to the Security Council, through the Secretary-General, on the peace implementation process for the periods 1 October 2007 to 31 March 2008 [S/2008/300], 1 April to 31 October 2008 [S/2008/705], and 1 November to 30 April 2009.

The Council considered the High Representative's reports on 19 May and 5 December.

On 20 November, the Council adopted resolution 1845(2008) (see p. 431), authorizing the extension of EUFOR until 20 November 2009.

In 2008, the PIC Steering Board determined that OHR should remain in place until the authorities fulfilled five objectives and two general conditions.

Mission implementation plan

The High Representative, briefing the Security Council on 19 May [meeting 5894] when it considered his report covering the latter half of 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 390] and the first quarter of 2008, said that the situation had improved considerably as Bosnia and Herzegovina had taken a significant step towards stabilizing the political situation by adopting two police reform laws. The country was on the verge of signing a Stabilization and Association Agreement with the EU and moving towards membership in NATO. The PIC Steering Board in February had reached a consensus on a set of five objectives and two conditions, the fulfilment of which would end the High Representative's tenure and trigger a transition to an EU Special Representative.

However, following Kosovo's unilateral declaration of independence in February (see p. 436), the leadership of the Republika Srpska had linked its future status with that of Kosovo. The entity's ruling Alliance of Independent Social Democrats (SNSD) had called for the transformation of Bosnia and Herzegovina into an asymmetric federation or confederation, claiming the right to self-determination for the Republika Srpska. The High Representative had responded by stressing that Bosnia and Herzegovina was an internationally recognized State whose sovereignty and territorial integrity were guaranteed by the Dayton Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544 & 551] and from which there was no right to secede.

During the year, Bosnia and Herzegovina made important progress on the reforms required for it to integrate into Euro-Atlantic institutions. An agreement in March among the State and entity governments on moveable defence property resulted in securing intensified dialogue towards a membership action plan at the NATO summit in Bucharest in April. Two long-awaited police reform laws were adopted in April and came into force on 14 May, opening the way for signing a Stabilization and Association Agreement and an Interim Agreement with the EU on 16 June. As part of an overall programme for Western Balkan countries, the European Commission provided Bosnia and Herzegovina with a road map for visa liberalization that contained requirements in the fields of document security, illegal migration, public order and security, and external relations.

The conjunction of continuing domestic political stalemate with mounting regional uncertainty in the run-up to and immediate aftermath of Kosovo's declaration of independence made it impossible for the PIC Steering Board to confirm the closure of OHR in June. At a meeting of 26–27 February, the Steering Board determined that the Office should remain in place and continue to carry out its mandate under the Dayton Peace Agreement until such time as the domestic authorities fulfilled five objectives (resolution of State property, resolution of defence property, completion of the Brčko Final Award, fiscal sustainability, entrenchment of the rule of law) and two general conditions (signing of the Stabilization and Association Agreement and a positive assessment of the situation by the Steering Board). The Steering Board recognized the progress made by the authorities in delivering the objectives and conditions at its meetings of 24–25 June and 19–20 November. However, concerns remained regarding the prevailing political situation, including challenges to the country's sovereignty, territorial integrity and constitutional order.

The arrest of ICTY fugitive Radovan Karadžić in July resulted in a worsening political climate following statements and actions of both Serb and Bosniak political leaders, although reactions to the arrest did not affect the security situation.

On 8 November, the leader of SNSD, Milorad Dodik, that of the Party of Democratic Action (SDA), Sulejman Tihić, and that of the Croatian Democratic Union of Bosnia and Herzegovina (HDZ BiH), Dragan Čović, signed the Prud Agreement, which addressed constitutional reform; resolution of the State property objective for the transition from OHR to the EU Special Representative; implementation of annex 7 of the Dayton Peace Agreement in connection with the organizing of a census; a constitutional solution for Brčko's access to the Bosnia and Herzegovina Constitutional Court; and Bosnia and Herzegovina Fiscal Council and budget issues. The agreement reflected an apparent willingness to make progress on important political issues.

Briefing the Council on 5 December [meeting 6033], the High Representative cautioned that negative and nationalist rhetoric threatened to dampen fresh momentum in Bosnia and Herzegovina's journey towards the EU, just months after its milestone signing of the Stabilization and Association Agreement. Despite signs of progress, notably an 8 November agreement among three major Bosnian parties on key issues, nationalist and ethnic agendas prevailed over the Euro-Atlantic agenda. Hence, the 16 June signing of the Agreement, progress towards visa liberalization with the EU and a decision by NATO to begin membership dialogue had not delivered the change in approach needed. Challenges had come from all sides. The negative political climate hindered progress on delivering the five objectives and two conditions set out by PIC to allow for the closure of OHR and transition to a stronger EU engagement. Stressing the need for continued international attention to Bosnia and Herzegovina, the High Representative said that it would be important to recognize the recent, more positive atmosphere and build on the emerging readiness to compromise.

Civil affairs

The High Representative, in his November report [S/2008/705], noted that the October municipal election campaign had provided for a further hardening of positions on all sides and that nationalist rhetoric continued to dominate politics at all levels. The Republika Srpska National Assembly on 21 February adopted a resolution condemning Kosovo's unilateral declaration of independence and demanding that Bosnia and Herzegovina not recognize it. It went on to state that the Republika Srpska "would consider that it too possessed the right to establish its future legal status by means of a referendum". The High Representative reacted immediately and stressed that entities of Bosnia and Herzegovina had no right to secede.

In that political environment, the six parties in the coalition at the State level met on 23 August and were unable to make any headway on the reform agenda. A Serbian Democratic Party initiative on an ethnically based census was defeated in the House of Peoples of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 27 October. In September, President Haris Silajdžić gave speeches to the UN General Assembly and to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe—which had not been cleared with the other two members of the Bosnia and Herzegovina Presidency—which caused controversy in the Republika Srpska, as they emphasized the genocide committed in Srebrenica in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 530].

Despite the negative political atmosphere, amendments to the Election Law of Bosnia and Herzegovina were adopted in May, which allowed all who were residents in Srebrenica in 1991 to have the option of casting votes in its 2008 municipal elections only, irrespective of their displaced person status.

Little progress was made towards reaching an agreement on immovable defence property that would continue to serve defence purposes. To invigorate the process, the NATO Headquarters in Sarajevo in July developed a concept paper outlining the key issues that should be regulated by a transfer agreement on immovable property. Overall, Bosnia and Herzegovina worked hard to achieve progress within the NATO Partnership for Peace Programme. However, the lack of staff capacity in ministries had begun to impose friction on the country's hitherto rapid progress through the various stages of the Programme.

Successful implementation of the Mostar Statute hinged on a delicate balance of power between the main national parties, SDA and HDZ Bosnia and Herzegovina. The issue of financing the Croat-dominated Herzegovina Radio-Television, which the city of Mostar wrote off its own books in 2007, and the appointment of a Bosniak candidate as Police Commissioner were resolved. A Police Commissioner was appointed immediately after the local elections on 9 October, and on 29 October the Federation government passed a decision allocating €150,000 (€75,000 each) to Hercegovačka Radio-Television and Radio Herceg Bosna. While developments within the Brčko District, with the exception of implementation of the 2008 elections results, were nearing the point where closure of Supervision was possible, a key issue remained unresolved. The provision of guarantees for the status of the District after Supervision through modest additions to the Constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina reached a stalemate when the Party for Bosnia and Herzegovina, SNSD, the Party of Democratic Progress and HDZ 1990 decided to support a law to the exclusion of the constitutional additions required by the Supervisor.

The combined efforts of OHR, NATO, EUFOR, ICTY, the Bosnia and Herzegovina Intelligence and Security Agency and the Republika Srpska police, all of which contributed to locating fugitives Stojan Župljanin and Radovan Karadžić, were critically facilitated by the various sanctions of OHR, the EU and the United States, as well as the sanctions of Bosnia and Herzegovina against members of the Persons Indicted for War Crimes support network. ICTY fugitives Goran Hadžić and Ratko Mladić remained a priority for OHR.

Judicial reform

The main development in 2008 was the decision in February of the PIC Steering Board's Political Directors to single out "entrenchment of the rule of law" as one of the objectives to be delivered before the transition from OHR to the EU Special Representative could be effected. PIC underscored the need to demonstrate this entrenchment through the adoption of a national war crimes strategy, the law on aliens and asylum, and a national justice sector reform strategy. Progress on that objective was achieved despite attempts by political leaders elsewhere to undermine the independence of the judiciary and the mandate of State law-enforcement agencies. Positive outcomes were achieved with the adoption of the Law on Stay and Movement of Aliens and Asylum in April and of the National Justice Sector Reform Strategy in June, which addressed the key elements of a functional justice sector. The National War Crimes Strategy was adopted on 29 December and the implementation action plans of the National Justice Sector Reform Strategy were endorsed in December. The Strategy set criteria for distributing cases between the Bosnia and Herzegovina and entity judiciaries; reflected work done on cataloguing crime events; recognized the need for resources and legislative amendments; stressed the importance of regional cooperation in war crimes investigations; and called upon the authorities to improve that cooperation.

Economic reforms

The Bosnia and Herzegovina Fiscal Council—aimed at facilitating better coordination between the State and the entities on fiscal policies—was established on 23 July, and held its first meeting on 11 September. A major step towards creating a single pharmaceutical market was taken in June with the adoption of the Law on Pharmaceuticals and Medical Devices. The energy sector faced a challenge when the Republika Srpska Government on 11 September announced its unilateral withdrawal from the Electricity Transmission Company—the cornerstone of Bosnia and Herzegovina's energy sector reform. The Federation enacted a Law on Profit Tax, which was in harmony with its Republika Srpska equivalent and would prevent double taxation, and a new Law on Income Tax.

Public administration reform

Progress in public administration reform was limited and uneven, and dogged by persistent political disagreements and lack of progress on constitutional reform. The Federation and the Republika Srpska Governments proposed amendments to the law on the civil service that would change the status of civil servants and run contrary to the public administration reform strategy in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which was adopted by all levels of government in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 456]. In effect, those proposed changes would make civil servants political appointees, opening the door to nepotism and political influence in both entities. OHR and the European Commission reacted to those draft laws.

Media development

The reform of the public broadcasting system was achieved with the adoption on 26 July of the Federation's public broadcasting framework law. It followed a ruling on 10 June by the Federation Constitutional Court that the law did not violate the vital national interest of the Croat people [YUN 2006, p. 456]. Croat political representatives continued to press for a channel that would broadcast exclusively in Croat, and the Croat caucus in the Bosnia and Herzegovina House of Peoples succeeded in having an initiative adopted that tasked the Council of Ministers to look into the matter.

The independence of the Communications Regulatory Agency continued to be challenged. On 15 October, the Republika Srpska National Assembly adopted a declaration claiming that the Agency was, for the second year in a row, being run by an illegal body. The appointment of a new director of the Agency continued to be blocked by the ruling coalition, which, through its representatives in the Council of Ministers, continued to fail to appoint a new Director. This encouraged political actors to challenge the legality of the decisions of the Agency.

Relations with other countries

The issue of Kosovo's future status featured prominently in the country's political discourse. The countdown to a unilateral declaration of independence in February exacerbated rhetoric and concern on the part of Bosnia and Herzegovina's Serbs, who shared the general Serb identification of Kosovo with their faith, culture and nationhood, albeit to a lesser degree than in Serbia proper. The Prime Minister of the Republika Srpska, Milorad Dodik, took part in many manifestations of Serb solidarity over Kosovo, but argued that its fate should not cause disturbances in Bosnia and Herzegovina; he did not support the more extreme manifestations of Serb anger over Kosovo's declaration of independence and its recognition by many countries. Demonstrations against Kosovo's independence in the Republika Srpska were relatively small.

The border-definition issues with Croatia and Serbia remained unresolved, as well as the problem of Croatia's plan to build a bridge, bypassing the small slice of Adriatic coastline of Bosnia and Herzegovina, between the mainland and the Pelješac peninsula, possibly impairing Bosnia and Herzegovina's access to the sea. Inadequacies in judicial cooperation among Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Montenegro and Serbia, particularly over war crime prosecutions, also remained.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 6021], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1845(2008). The draft [S/2008/720] was submitted by Belgium, Croatia, France, Italy, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

European Union missions in Bosnia and Herzegovina

EUPM

Report of EU Secretary-General. As requested by the Security Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2002/33 [YUN 2002, p. 363], the EU High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy and Secretary-General of the EU Council, Javier Solana, reported to the Security Council through the UN Secretary-General on the activities of the European Union Police Mission (EUPM).

The report [S/2008/732], covering the period from April to September, stated that the Mission's progress in support of police restructuring and police reform had been consistent. The Mission continued to advise the harmonization and development of the legislation to reform the police bodies in the entities, cantons and Brčko District.

Although considerable achievements had been made since the launch of EUPM in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 399], effective results in the fight against organized crime and in the establishment of key State law-enforcement agencies such as the Border Police or the State Investigation and Protection Agency (SIPA) were a long-term endeavour. The recent arrests of prominent figures allegedly involved in organized crime represented, however, a significant breakthrough.

The report stressed the need for implementing the two police reform laws. EUPM was advising and monitoring implementation and was acting as a facilitator to overcome technical difficulties and different views among local stakeholders about the scope of the reform. The Mission would continue to focus on a concrete operational approach, and continue to reach out to the judiciary and, in particular, to prosecutors to improve cooperation between police forces and the prosecutors' offices. It would also assist the authorities in harmonizing the police legislation and in implementing the integrated border management strategy.

At the end of September, the Mission numbered 418 staff (167 international police officers, 30 international civilian experts and 221 national staff). All 27 EU Member States as well as six non-EU countries contributed to EUPM. On 1 November, Brigadier General Stefan Feller (Germany) succeeded Brigadier General Vincenzo Coppola (Italy) as Head of Mission/Police Commissioner.

Police restructuring

Police restructuring efforts included the implementation of two police reform laws (the Law on the Directorate for Coordination of Police Bodies and Agencies for Support of Police Structure, and the Law on Independent and Supervisory Bodies of Police Structure), which came into force on 14 May. With their adoption, four new coordination and support institutions and three supervisory and oversight bodies would be established at the State level. The Ministry of Security had established the Selection Commission in charge of choosing the Directors and the Deputy Directors of the Agency for Police Support, the Agency for Education and the Agency for Forensic Examinations and Expertise. The Ministry in July also established the Commission for Harmonization to align relevant laws with the two new police reform laws. EUPM participated in its work and followed related developments. The Parliamentary Assembly appointed the ad hoc Joint Commission for conducting the procedure for appointing the Independent Board and the Public Complaints Board. However, the Commission failed to complete its task by the set deadline of 14 August and asked for EUPM assistance in drafting the necessary decisions and fulfilling its task.

The police reform laws were of crucial importance in prompting a review of the SIPA structure and functioning, which led to amending the SIPA Law and establishing a commission to streamline the structure. EUPM provided assistance in building up the Border Police by advising it on implementing the integrated border management strategy. EUPM also provided technical assistance to the Ministries of Security and Finance in harmonizing the Law on Salaries with police-related legislation. EUPM was assisting in drafting the Law on Police Officials and the Law on Internal Affairs of the Republika Srpska; in the Brčko District it assisted local authorities in drafting the District Law on Police. It also assisted cantonal authorities in finalizing the cantonal Law on Internal Affairs. In support of the fight against organized crime, EUPM advised on specific cases and provided advice on institution building.

In April, an agreement to enhance mechanisms of cooperation between the police and prosecutors' offices was signed. From May to July, the Mission organized media workshops for prosecutors, helping them enhance their skills in communicating with the public on organized crime.

EUFOR

The EU FORCE (EUFOR) mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina executed the military aspects of the Peace Agreement specified in annexes 1-A and 2, which were transferred to it by NATO in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 401]. Its 2008 activities were described in five reports, covering the periods from 1 December 2007 to 29 February 2008 [S/2008/242], 1 March to 31 May [S/2008/413], 1 June to 31 August [S/2008/838], 1 September to 30 November [S/2009/44] and 1 December 2008 to 28 February 2009 [S/2009/418], submitted by the EU High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy and Secretary-General of the EU Council, in accordance with various UN Security Council resolutions.

As at 30 November, the force of some 2,200 EUFOR troops was concentrated in Sarajevo, with liaison and observation teams deployed throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina. EUFOR continued to provide deterrence, ensure compliance in relation to the responsibilities specified in the Peace Agreement, and contribute to maintaining a safe and secure environment. It provided support to law-enforcement agencies in fighting organized crime, in close cooperation with the EU Police Mission, and to ICTY in the search for persons indicted for war crimes.

In July, EUFOR and Bosnia and Herzegovina's Ministry of Defence signed a memorandum of understanding covering the participation of the Armed Forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina (AFBiH) in EUFOR exercises. EUFOR continued to assist and support AFBiH with planning for the disposal of surplus arms and ammunition.

The EU Council reviewed the operation on 10 November and highlighted the decisive progress made towards accomplishing its mandate. The Council considered that the preparatory work for a possible development of the operation should be continued, taking into account the future role of the EU Special Representative and political developments.

Serbia

The Kosovo province of Serbia continued to receive UN assistance in 2008 in building a multi-ethnic society. The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), together with the Kosovo leadership, led efforts to strengthen the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government, mainly the Kosovo Assembly and the Kosovo Government, and to transfer authority to those institutions, in line with the 2001 Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government [YUN 2001, p. 352]. UNMIK also monitored progress in achieving the standards set out in the 2003 "standards for Kosovo" document [YUN 2003, p. 420], by which Kosovo was expected to develop stable democratic institutions under UNMIK administration before any decision could be made on its future status. However, on 17 February the Assembly of Kosovo adopted a "declaration of independence" declaring Kosovo an independent and sovereign state. This led to condemnation by the Serbian authorities, boycott of Kosovo institutions by Kosovo Serbs and protests in several areas in Kosovo and in Serbia. Some of the protests turned violent, but the overall security situation in Kosovo remained calm.

On 12 June the Secretary-General, in letters addressed to Boris Tadić, President of Serbia, and Fatmir Sejdiu, President of Kosovo, outlined plans to reconfigure UNMIK and the broader international civil presence in Kosovo. The letters also confirmed that the position of the United Nations on Kosovo status was of status neutrality, and detailed the commitment to a dialogue with Serbia in six areas: police, courts, boundary management, Serbian patrimony, transport and infrastructure, and customs. Kosovo's Constitution, which did not envisage a real role for UNMIK and did not contain a reference to resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], came into force in June and was rejected by Kosovo Serbs.

In June, Lamberto Zannier was appointed as Special Representative for Kosovo and Head of UNMIK, succeeding Joachim Rücker, and a few days later the start of UNMIK's reconfiguration was formally announced. The Special Representative facilitated preparations for the EU to undertake an operational role in Kosovo in the rule-of-law area, under the framework of resolution 1244(1999) and the overall authority of the United Nations.

In October, the General Assembly, by resolution 63/3 (see p. 1404), requested an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on whether the unilateral declaration of independence of Kosovo was in accordance with international law.

Situation in Kosovo

Security Council consideration (January). On 16 January [meeting 5821], the President of Serbia, Boris Tadić, told the Security Council that despite enormous efforts by the Serbian negotiating team to reach a compromise, four months of negotiations led by the international mediating troika—the EU, the Russian Federation and the United States—had failed to yield results. Serbia and its people had suffered from the tragic mistakes of the past regime: they should not be punished again because of a flawed policy of a bad regime almost a decade ago. The parties should make every effort to resolve the misunderstandings and conflicts peacefully and by agreement alone, not by making unilateral moves. Unilateral recognition of Kosovo's independence would no doubt be a precedent. No one had the right to destabilize Serbia and the Balkans through hasty decisions, which would have unforeseeable consequences for other regions fraught with problems of ethnic separatism. The UN Charter guaranteed the principle of respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of internationally recognized States, and Serbia was such a State.

Following his statement, Council members continued their discussion in a private meeting [meeting 5822], during which President Tadić, the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Kosovo, Joachim Rücker, and the Kosovo Prime Minister, Hashim Thaçi, had an exchange of views.

Communication. In January [S/2008/7], Serbia forwarded to the Security Council its comments on the Secretary-General's report on UNMIK [YUN 2007, p. 403] covering the period from 1 September to 15 December 2007.

Security Council consideration (February). On 12 February [S/2008/92], Serbia requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider an extremely grave situation in the Serbian province of Kosovo and Metohija, where the final preparations were taking place for a unilateral declaration of independence by the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government, which would constitute a violation of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) and Serbia's territorial integrity, and would endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. Also on 12 February [S/2008/93], the Russian Federation supported Serbia's request.

On 14 February [meeting 5835], the Council held a closed meeting, during which Council Members and Serbia's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Vuk Jeremić, had an exchange of views.

On 17 February [A/62/703-S/2008/111], Serbia informed the Secretary-General that on that day the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government of its southern province of Kosovo and Metohija had unilaterally declared independence, in violation of Security Council resolution 1244(1999). In the wake of that attempt to establish a fait accompli, Serbia had adopted a Decision to abrogate the unilateral secessionist acts and activities of the Provisional Institutions. Serbia demanded that the Special Representative take all necessary measures, in accordance with resolution 1244(1999) and other Council decisions, as he had on previous occasions, to abrogate all acts and actions by which unilateral independence had been declared. Serbia called upon the Secretary-General to ensure that his Special Representative exercised his powers and responsibilities by declaring that act null and void and dissolve the Assembly of Kosovo, since its "declaration of independence" was not in conformity with the resolution. By its Decision, Serbia had also requested that the Security Council declare that unilateral act legally invalid. It demanded that the Council call for the continuation of the political process leading towards a solution. Finally, Serbia demanded that all Member States respect Serbia's sovereignty and territorial integrity and thereby reject the so-called independence of Kosovo and Metohija.

Also on 17 February [S/2008/103], Serbia requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council to consider the unilateral declaration of independence. Supporting that request [S/2008/104], the Russian Federation on the same day requested that a meeting be convened on 18 February, in view of the dangerous situation with grave, damaging consequences for peace and security in the Balkans.

Addressing the Council on 18 February [meeting 5839], the Secretary-General stressed the need to ensure the stability of Kosovo and the safety and security of its population, in particular the minority communities. He urged all to refrain from any actions or statements that could endanger peace, incite violence or jeopardize security in Kosovo and the region, adding that his efforts, and those of his Special Representative, were aimed at ensuring that the situation in Kosovo and in the wider region remained stable, and that the population of Kosovo was protected. Pending guidance from the Security Council, UNMIK would continue to carry out its mandate under Council resolution 1244(1999).

Serbian President Tadić requested the Secretary-General to instruct his Special Representative to declare Kosovo's "unilateral and illegal" declaration of independence "null and void". The action by the Kosovo Provisional Institutions violated resolution 1244(1999), which reaffirmed Serbia's sovereignty and territorial integrity, including Kosovo and Metohija. He requested the Security Council to ensure that the provisions of that resolution were fully respected. Serbia would never recognize the independence of Kosovo, would never renounce Kosovo and would not give up the struggle for its legitimate interests. For the citizens of Serbia and its institutions, Kosovo would forever remain a part of Serbia.

Supporting Serbia's call, Russia emphasized that the actions by the Kosovo Albanian leadership and those who supported them set a dangerous precedent and might lead to an escalation of tensions and inter-ethnic violence in the province. A durable solution to the Kosovo status issue could be achieved only on the basis of a decision to be worked out with the Security Council taking the leading role, a decision in line with the norms of international law and based on agreements between Belgrade and Pristina.

China expressed concern over the unilateral declaration of independence and hoped that the EU would take into account not only the interests of Serbia and Kosovo, but also the concerns of other countries in the region. More important, it needed to pay attention to and uphold the role of the Security Council in resolving the issue. The Council should encourage Serbia and Kosovo to continue their pursuit of a mutually acceptable solution through political and diplomatic means.

Meanwhile, several Council members indicated their support for the "new state", including Belgium, France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States. The United Kingdom noted that it was not ideal for Kosovo to become independent without the consent of Serbia and without consensus in the Council. However, the unique circumstances of the violent break-up of the former Yugoslavia and the unprecedented UN administration of Kosovo made that a sui generis case, which created no wider precedent. The United States noted that Kosovo's independence was a culmination of a long and unique process. Intensive efforts to settle the final status of Kosovo had left no stone unturned, but the parties had been unable to reach agreement. Kosovo's declaration of independence was a logical, legitimate and legal response to the situation at hand, and fully consistent with resolution 1244(1999). The people of Kosovo had decided to bring the issue to a close, and had done so in a mature, non-violent and responsible manner.

Communication. On 18 February [S/2008/106], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a letter from Javier Solana, EU High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy, informing him that on 4 February the EU Council had decided to deploy a rule-of-law mission in Kosovo. The mission sought to maintain an international civilian presence, within the framework of resolution 1244(1999), and to contribute to the maintenance of regional peace and security. At the same time, the EU had appointed Pieter Feith (the Netherlands) as its Special Representative in Kosovo to coordinate EU activities on the ground.

Press statement. On 21 February, the Security Council condemned that day's mob attacks against embassies in Belgrade, which—amid protests over the decision by the Assembly of Kosovo to declare independence from Serbia—had resulted in damage to embassy premises and had endangered diplomatic personnel. In a press statement [SC/9260], the Council recalled the fundamental principle of the inviolability of diplomatic missions and the obligations on host Governments, including under the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, to protect embassy premises. It welcomed the steps taken by the Serbian authorities to restore order and protect diplomatic property and personnel.

Security Council consideration (March). On 6 March [S/2008/162], Serbia requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the aggravation of the situation concerning the Serbian province of Kosovo and Metohija owing to the unilateral declaration of independence by the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government and the subsequent recognition of that act by some Member States in alleged violation of Serbia's sovereignty and territorial integrity, as well as of the provisions of resolution 1244(1999).

At the Council meeting of 11 March [meeting 5850], Serbia's Foreign Affairs Minister Jeremić said that the situation on the ground had deteriorated since 17 February. Those 20 or so countries that had furthered the secessionist cause of the Kosovo Albanians had made the international system more unstable, more insecure and more unpredictable. Recognizing the unilateral declaration of Kosovo's independence legitimized the act of unilateral secession by a provincial non-State actor, transformed the right to self-determination into an avowed right to independence and legitimized the forced partition of sovereign States. Stressing that Serbia would never recognize Kosovo's unilateral secession, he called for resolution 1244(1999) to be observed in full. There must be no erosion of the mandate of UNMIK, and no further transfers of competencies from UNMIK to any other body. Serbia wished no ill to the ethnic Albanians in its southern province and took seriously their right to obtain substantial self-governance while remaining under a common sovereign roof. Serbia was committed to open dialogue and good-faith negotiations. It was in Serbia's vital interest that all of Kosovo's communities prosper together in peace, security and reconciliation.

Council members subsequently went into informal consultations on the issue.

Report of Secretary-General (March). Reporting in March [S/2008/211], the Secretary-General said that following mayoral and municipal elections in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 404], the Assembly of Kosovo on 9 January elected its President and members of its Presidency, and re-elected Fatmir Sejdiu as President of Kosovo. A new coalition government was formed by the Democratic Party of Kosovo and the Democratic League of Kosovo, led by Prime Minister Taçi. Six out of 10 Kosovo Serb members of the Assembly took the oath of office.

The Assembly on 17 February adopted a "declaration of independence", declaring Kosovo an independent and sovereign State. The declaration received the support of 109 of the 120 members of the Assembly; the 10 Kosovo Serb members did not attend. The declaration stated that Kosovo fully accepted the obligations of the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement [YUN 2007, p. 399], and pledged that Kosovo would adhere to resolution 1244(1999) and would work constructively with the United Nations. The Secretary-General immediately drew that development to the attention of the Security Council and reaffirmed that, pending guidance from the Council, the United Nations would continue to operate on the understanding that resolution 1244(1999) remained in force, and that UNMIK would continue to implement its mandate in the light of the evolving circumstances.

Serbian President Tadić informed the Secretary-General that Serbia had adopted a decision that Kosovo's declaration of independence represented a forceful and unilateral secession of a part of the territory of Serbia, and did not produce any legal effect either in Serbia or in the international legal order.

Kosovo Serbs protested peacefully in several areas in Kosovo, including northern Mitrovicë/Mitrovica, Graçanicë/Gračanica, Kamenicë/Kamenica and Shtërpçë/Štrpce. However, some protests turned violent, particularly in northern Kosovo. The Kosovo Albanian community's reaction had been restrained. Following the declaration of independence, Kosovo Serbs, with the support of the Serbian authorities, expanded their boycott of the institutions of Kosovo to include UNMIK Customs, the Kosovo Police Service, the judicial system, municipal administration and UNMIK Railways, but they continued to work in municipalities where they remained a small minority. Meanwhile, leaders of Kosovo Serb political parties continued to have informal contacts with UNMIK and the Government of Kosovo.

Despite a number of serious security incidents, the overall security situation remained calm; the majority of incidents occurred in the days immediately before and after the declaration of independence. An explosion between the UNMIK-run Court and a police station in northern Mitrovicë/Mitrovica on 29 February damaged four UN vehicles. The Kosovo Serb protests against Kosovo institutions had been generally peaceful, with the exception of the burning down of UNMIK police and customs facilities at the two crossing points with Serbia on the Administrative Boundary Line in northern Kosovo.

In several Kosovo Serb areas in southern Kosovo, where operational police competencies had been transferred to the Kosovo Ministry of the Interior, Kosovo Serb police officers no longer recognized the Kosovo police chain of command and demanded to be placed under the direct command of UNMIK police officers. In northern Kosovo, where competencies had not been transferred, the situation remained unchanged.

The Secretary-General stated that the declaration of independence and subsequent events had posed significant challenges to the ability of UNMIK to exercise its administrative authority. To address those challenges, UNMIK would continue to act in a realistic and practical manner and in the light of the evolving circumstances to ensure peace and security. Pending Security Council guidance, there might be a need for UNMIK to adjust its operational deployment to developments and changes on the ground, in a manner consistent with the operational framework established under resolution 1244(1999).

Communication. On 17 April [S/2008/260], Serbia transmitted to the Security Council its comments on the Secretary-General's report, together with comments on the technical assessment of progress in implementing the standard for Kosovo and the resolution of Serbia's National Assembly confirming the Government's decision on the annulment of allegedly illegitimate acts concerning the proclamation of Kosovo's unilateral independence.

Security Council consideration (April). On 21 April [meeting 5871], the Security Council held a closed meeting on the situation in Kosovo, during which Council members, Special Representative Rucker, Serbian President Tadić and Kosovo Prime Minister Thaçi had an exchange of views.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In a special 12 June report [S/2008/354], the Secretary-General noted that the Security Council had taken no position following the 17 February declaration, and that 42 Member States had recognized the independence of Kosovo. In addition, a new reality and challenges to UNMIK authority had emerged on the ground in Kosovo Albanian majority areas. The Assembly of Kosovo on 9 April had passed a "Constitution of the Republic of Kosovo" that was scheduled to come into force on 15 June. The Constitution would effectively remove from UNMIK its powers as an interim civil administration. In that regard, the government of Kosovo had indicated that it would welcome a continued UN presence in Kosovo provided that it carried out only limited residual tasks.

The Secretary-General said that, following the entry into force of the Kosovo Constitution, UNMIK would no longer be able to perform effectively the vast majority of its tasks as an interim administration and expressed his intention to reconfigure UNMIK in order to allow the EU to enhance its operational role in Kosovo in the area of the rule of law under the framework of resolution 1244(1999) and the overall authority of the United Nations. The UN presence would carry out monitoring and reporting, facilitate arrangements for Kosovo's engagement in international agreements and facilitate dialogue between Pristina and Belgrade on issues of practical concern.

In letters dated 12 June addressed to Presidents Tadić and Sejdiu [S/2008/354, annex I & II], the Secretary-General said that the position of the United Nations on Kosovo's status was of a strict neutrality, and that he intended to exercise the authority vested in him by resolution 1244(1999) to reconfigure the international civil presence as set out in the report. In the letter to President Tadić, the Secretary-General said that UN engagement in dialogue with Belgrade would be in six key areas of practical mutual concern: police, the courts, customs, transportation and infrastructure, boundaries, and the Serbian patrimony.

Security Council consideration (June). On 17 June [S/2008/401], Serbia requested a meeting of the Security Council to consider the report of the Secretary-General.

Addressing the Council on 20 June [meeting 5917], the Secretary-General said that his proposal to reconfigure the UN presence in Kosovo was a practical and workable solution to a complex and difficult situation. In almost 40 years of diplomatic life, he had never encountered an issue as divisive, as delicate and as intractable. The declaration of independence, the ensuing violence, the elections organized by the Serbs and the promulgation of a new Constitution had profoundly changed the environment. Those developments had created a profoundly new reality in which UNMIK was no longer able to perform as effectively as in the past, the vast majority of its tasks as an interim administration. The EU had expressed its readiness to perform an enhanced role in the area of the rule of law, and had put in place measures to do so. Such an enhanced role would be in the interest of the international community. His reconfiguration package was an effort in the light of new developments to try to find an operational modus vivendi to help move Kosovo a few steps back from the brink of further conflict. The package was founded on the imperative to maintain peace, security and stability in Kosovo and the region, while responding and adapting to changing circumstances on the ground.

Serbian President Tadić said that Kosovo's unilateral declaration of independence directly contravened the UN Charter, the Helsinki Final Act and other cornerstone documents upon which the international system had been built. That was why Serbia's National Assembly had declared Kosovo's action—and all subsequent decisions stemming from it—null and void. The Secretary-General's report referred to a "so-called Constitution" intended to implement the Ahtisaari Proposal [YUN 2007, pp. 398 & 399], which the UN Security Council had not endorsed and, therefore, carried no legal weight whatsoever. The report said that the "Constitution" was designed to effectively remove from UNMIK its powers of civil administration. That usurpation by the Pristina authorities of UNMIK's mandate was deeply troubling, as was the impression the report gave of acquiescing to an unjustifiable violation of resolution 1244(1999).

Kosovo President Sejdiu said that Kosovo's independence was declared in line with the Ahtisaari plan, and the transition to the new status had gone well. The country had since been recognized by 43 Member States, and more nations were recognizing it every month. The Ahtisaari plan, overwhelmingly endorsed by the Assembly of Kosovo, was the guiding framework for Kosovo's efforts. The Assembly had since adopted more than 40 pieces of legislation. Those changes had created a new situation requiring the United Nations, once again, to adapt its presence. The people of Kosovo, therefore, appreciated the Secretary-General's initiative to reconfigure the UN presence. The United Nations would continue to perform rule-of-law functions in accordance with resolution 1244(1999), until the EU was able to perform fully its operational role—all steps that Kosovo would support.

Several Council members, including France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States, expressed support for the package, but others, notably the Russian Federation, had serious objections to the reconfiguration and the enhanced EU role in Kosovo. China acknowledged the many changes in Kosovo since 1999, but said that the basis for implementing resolution 1244(1999) had not changed.

New Head of UNMIK. On 20 June [S/2008/411], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Lamberto Zannier (Italy) as his Special Representative for Kosovo and Head of UNMIK. On 23 June [S/2008/412], the President of the Council informed the Secretary-General that Council members had taken note of that intention.

Report of Secretary-General (July). The Secretary-General reported in July [S/2008/458] that the Kosovo Constitution had come into force on 15 June, along with a package of laws covering decentralization and borders, and authorizing the creation of a Kosovo Foreign Ministry and Intelligence Service. On 10 June, the Kosovo Assembly adopted a national anthem, and on 17 June, the Kosovo Government authorized the establishment of nine "embassies" in Member States that had recognized the declaration of independence. The Kosovo authorities committed themselves to implementing in full the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement prepared by the Secretary-General's Special Envoy for the future status process for Kosovo, Martti Ahtisaari, which was presented to the Council in March 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 399].

Kosovo Serbs had rejected the Constitution. Following Serbian parliamentary and local municipal elections on 11 May, organized by the Serbian Electoral Commission in 23 of Kosovo's 30 municipalities, Serbian officials and Kosovo Serb leaders started to establish parallel municipal government structures in Serb-majority municipalities in accordance with Serbian law. Kosovo Serbs had continued to strongly oppose the declaration of independence. They had carried out continued protests, some of which had turned violent, like the one on 17 March, when an UNMIK police operation, supported by the international security presence in Kosovo (KFOR), re-established UNMIK control over the UNMIK courthouse in northern Mitrovicë/Mitrovica, which had been forcefully seized on 14 March by Kosovo Serb judicial employees protesting and asking to be reinstated in their positions. During the operation, the UNMIK police and KFOR came under attack by the protesters. The confrontation resulted in the death of Kynal Ihor, an international police officer from Ukraine, and in the wounding of 64 UNMIK police officers, 24 KFOR soldiers and several Kosovo Serb protesters. The incident led to a 36-hour withdrawal of UNMIK police from northern Mitrovicë/Mitrovica, leaving KFOR as the first responder during the interim period.

The Secretary-General said that the ability of UNMIK to operate as before had been fundamentally challenged owing to actions taken by both the authorities in Pristina and the Kosovo Serbs. In Pristina, Kosovo's authorities had instituted measures that sought to effectively assume the Mission's powers. The Constitution made no mention of any role or function of the United Nations and did not contain a reference to resolution 1244(1999), although Kosovo's authorities had welcomed the continued UN presence. Kosovo had also passed legislation whose purpose was to assume legal control and responsibility over areas that were previously reserved to the Secretary-General's Special Representative. Kosovo Serbs, on their part, had rejected the Constitution and connected legislation and, with the support of Belgrade, had expanded their boycott of Kosovo's institutions and widened their parallel structures, particularly in northern Kosovo. Following the meeting of the Security Council on 20 June (see p. 438), and in light of the fact that the Council was unable to provide guidance, the Secretary-General decided to move forward with the reconfiguration and instructed UNMIK to cooperate with the EU in order for it to assume an enhanced operational role in Kosovo in the area of the rule of law, in accordance with resolution 1244(1999) and under a "United Nations umbrella" headed by the Special Representative.

UNMIK would continue to support Kosovo in its effort to consolidate democratic governance institutions, advance economic growth and move towards a future in Europe. Building a society in which all communities could coexist in peace remained a difficult and long-term challenge. The Secretary-General called upon the authorities in Pristina and Belgrade, and representatives of all of Kosovo's communities, to continue to work together with UNMIK.

Security Council consideration (July). Addressing the Council on 25 July [meeting 5944], the new Special Representative for Kosovo, Mr. Zannier, said that events on the ground had contributed to creating a profoundly new operating reality for UNMIK. The ability of UNMIK to perform the vast majority of its tasks as an interim administration had been fundamentally challenged, owing to actions taken by the authorities in Pristina and the Kosovo Serbs. The Kosovo authorities continued to seek to assume the powers and responsibilities of a sovereign State. Those included the approval by the Kosovo Assembly of funds for establishing a Ministry of Foreign Affairs; a Minister had been appointed and was present in the Security Council. The Assembly of Kosovo continued to pass legislation, which was now promulgated by the President of Kosovo without reference to the Special Representative's powers under resolution 1244(1999) or the constitutional framework. Meanwhile, the Kosovo Serbs continued to oppose cooperation with the authorities in Pristina, stressing that they would only cooperate with UNMIK. As a result of the Serbian local elections of 11 May, new parallel municipal authorities were operating in all Serb-majority municipalities. As a consequence of the stark divergence of paths taken by the Serbian and Albanian communities, the space in which UNMIK could operate had changed. While he and his staff continued to monitor the work of the authorities and to mediate disputes between communities, his power to impose solutions had in practice disappeared throughout much of the territory. The EU decision to end funding for UNMIK's economic reconstruction pillar had left UNMIK as from 30 June without the technical capacity or budget to operate in most economic areas. As a result, UNMIK had been engaged in planning for a reconfiguration of its presence which took into account those circumstances. An initial reconfiguration plan had been developed, outlining measures which would reduce the Mission's capacity in areas where it could no longer effectively function, for example, in civil administration, and enhance it in others, with particular attention to minorities. Mr. Zannier remained optimistic that UNMIK could continue to facilitate dialogue on matters affecting the lives of all communities.

While maintaining that Serbia could not accept its own forcible partition, Serbian Foreign Minister Jeremić called the way in which the reconfiguration had started "an inglorious episode", but stressed that it was now essential to proceed in the right way—with the full engagement of Serbia. The reconfiguration must be completed with Serbia's acceptance and the Council's explicit approval. That was the only way to ensure legitimacy and sustainability. The voice of Serbia, on the reconfiguration and much else, could no longer be disregarded. Serbia would spare no effort in honestly engaging with the United Nations in forging an acceptable, forward-looking reconfiguration arrangement that would uphold the overall authority of the United Nations, while opening up space for the institutional inclusion of regional organizations.

Skënder Hyseni, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Kosovo, said that Pristina was ready to engage in discussions with Belgrade, as two independent States, on a wide range of practical issues of mutual interest. Such dialogue was indispensable because of the ties of the past. It was in the very best interests of both Belgrade and Pristina to talk, as they aspired to join the western community of nations as represented in the EU.

The Russian Federation said that UNMIK's reconfiguration was inadmissible without the Security Council's authorization. The Secretary-General had exceeded his authority and intruded on the Council's prerogative in taking that decision. There seemed to be an attempt to legalize a structure for implementing the Ahtisaari Proposal, which had not been approved by the Council but which would abet the unilateral establishment of an unlawfully proclaimed construct. The EU's aspiration to play a more robust role in Kosovo was understandable, but should be met on the basis of resolution 1244(1999) and with respect for the prerogatives of the Council.

General Assembly action. On 8 October [A/63/PV.22], Serbia's Foreign Minister Jeremić introduced in the General Assembly a draft resolution [A/63/L.2]

requesting an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on whether the unilateral declaration of independence of Kosovo was in accordance with international law. Sending the question to the Court, he said, would prevent the Kosovo crisis from serving as a deeply problematic precedent in any part of the globe where secessionist ambitions were harboured. An advisory opinion would provide politically neutral, yet judicially authoritative, guidance to many countries still deliberating how to approach such unilateral declarations. The question posed refrained from taking political positions on the Kosovo issue.

On the same day, the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/3 by a recorded vote of 77 to 6, with 74 abstentions (see p. 1404). By that action, the Assembly requested the ICJ to render a non-binding advisory opinion on whether the unilateral declaration of independence by the Provisional Institutions of Self-Government of Kosovo was in accordance with international law.

Report of Secretary-General (November).

In a report [S/2008/692] issued in November, the Secretary-General said that Kosovo had been recognized as an independent state by 52 countries and had applied for membership in the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank Group. Kosovo also decided to undertake a census of the population, established a Ministry for Security Forces and appointed an 11-member Central Election Commission.

The Kosovo authorities underlined that independence was irreversible and the review by the ICJ of the legality of the declaration of independence would not prevent other countries from recognizing Kosovo as an independent State. The Kosovo Serb political leadership in northern Kosovo continued to oppose the deployment to the north of the International Civilian Office, foreseen in the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement—which was not endorsed by the Security Council—and the deployment of the EU Rule of Law Mission in Kosovo (EULEX).

KFOR launched the recruitment process for a future Kosovo security force. During the first stage, the selection would be made from the Kosovo Protection Corps (KPC). Non-recruited KPC members would be resettled, reintegrated or retired with dignity. A resettlement programme would be funded by a NATO trust fund and implemented by the United Nations Development Programme.

UNMIK announced the start of the reconfiguration process on 26 June and had begun to adapt its structure within the framework of resolution 1244(1999). The reconfiguration of UNMIK was being accelerated, was taking place in a transparent manner and was consistent with the UN position of strict neutrality on the question of Kosovo's status. The Special Representative was facilitating the EU's preparations to undertake an enhanced operational role in the rule-of-law area, focusing on policing, justice and customs. EULEX would fully respect resolution 1244(1999), operate under the overall authority and within the status-neutral framework of the United Nations and submit reports to it on a regular basis. UNMIK had been working closely with EULEX on technical arrangements designed to facilitate its deployment under resolution 1244(1999). The Pristina authorities had welcomed the beginning of the reconfiguration, but had expressed reservations about a perceived lack of clarity on the timing of the process and about the competencies to be retained by UNMIK. The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) would remain a central element of a reconfigured UNMIK through the OSCE mission in Kosovo.

Serbia had accepted the results of the dialogue with the Special Representative on the six key areas and the arrangements set out in the report, while the Pristina authorities had stated that they did not accept those arrangements: they favoured the quick deployment of EULEX and would cooperate with it on its deployment throughout the territory of Kosovo.

Security Council consideration (November).

Briefing the Council on 26 November [meeting 6025], the Special Representative said that UNMIK was re-orienting its field presence to concentrate on areas occupied by non-Albanian communities, monitoring the interests of those communities and retaining a supporting and mediation role. UNMIK needed to concentrate on the areas where it could still make a difference for good, rather than attempt to continue functions that were neither relevant nor needed. EULEX was deploying at an increasingly accelerated rate, but UNMIK remained the principal international guarantor of the rule of law in Kosovo. Its role was becoming much more political, for example, in providing an interface for the dialogue between Belgrade and Pristina. Since it had not yet been possible to establish conditions for the two sides to talk to each other, UNMIK had a role as an interlocutor of both, although each side interpreted that role in a different way.

Stressing that Serbia's voice must be respected, Foreign Minister Jeremić said that a dialogue between Serbia and the United Nations had begun, focusing on the six topics of mutual concern proposed by the Secretary-General. That dialogue created the conditions to protect the well-being of Serbs and other gravely endangered communities in Kosovo. It cemented the fact that Serbia remained indispensable to the self-governance of its southern province.

While underscoring Kosovo's full support for the deployment of EULEX, Kosovo Foreign Minister Hyseni said that, in a declaration of 18 November, Kosovo had made very clear its rejection of the six-point proposal made by the Secretary-General. Kosovo could not permit any action that infringed upon its sovereignty and territorial integrity. Kosovo would cooperate with EULEX for its deployment throughout Kosovo on the basis of Kosovo's declaration of independence, Constitution and laws, as well as the Ahtisaari package, the EU joint action plan of 4 February and the initiatives for EULEX deployment, as its mandate fully respected Kosovo's sovereignty, territorial integrity and unity.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 6025], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/44 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 24 November 2008 on the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and, taking into account the positions of Belgrade and Pristina on the report, which were reflected in their respective statements, welcomes their intentions to cooperate with the international community.

The Council welcomes the cooperation between the United Nations and other international actors, within the framework of Council resolution 1244(1999), and also welcomes the continuing efforts of the European Union to advance the European perspective of the whole of the Western Balkans, thereby making a decisive contribution to regional stability and prosperity.

Communication. On 12 December [S/2008/803], Serbia clarified its position on the reconfiguration of the international civilian presence in Kosovo and Metohija. Serbia had indicated its support for EULEX on the assumption that, in addition to being status-neutral, EULEX fully respected resolution 1244(1999) and operated under UN authority, serving as the implementing arm of the United Nations. EULEX's mandate did not include the implementation of any portion of the Ahtisaari Comprehensive Proposal for a Kosovo Status Settlement, which was not endorsed by the Security Council and therefore had no standing in international law. In a letter to Serbia received on 6 December, the Special Representative had indicated his intention to reconfigure UNMIK operations in the rule-of-law area following the deployment of EULEX. The letter did not specify how the Special Representative intended to implement the provisions agreed to in the "dialogue with Belgrade" outlined in the Secretary-General's November report, especially those relating to the rule of law. Serbia viewed UNMIK as its primary interlocutor on implementation and all other issues related to the interim administration of Kosovo. It was therefore essential that the executive and reserved powers accorded to it by the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government [YUN

2001, p. 352] continued to be exercised. Moreover, the UN field presence through regional and subregional offices remained vital, as did its presence in Belgrade. Accordingly, the Special Representative was expected to propose a schedule of meetings on implementation. Sustaining the engagement of the United Nations and the Special Representative remained a crucial component in achieving success on the ground and contributing to stability. The Representative's continuing activities served as a guarantee of the status-neutrality of the international presence.

Further report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2009/149], the Secretary-General said that EULEX deployed Kosovo-wide without incident on 9 December, assuming full operational responsibility in the area of the rule of law. Serbia and a majority of Kosovo Serbs accepted that deployment on condition that it would fully respect resolution 1244(1999) and that it would operate under the overall authority of the United Nations and within its status-neutral framework.

As a result, after almost 10 years of service in Kosovo, UNMIK police successfully completed their operations, including in the Mitrovicë/Mitrovica region. By 9 December, EULEX had deployed 1,045 police officers throughout Kosovo. Over a three-day period, UNMIK police throughout Kosovo reported to their former posts in civilian clothes and introduced the EULEX police monitors/advisers to their Kosovo police counterparts. On 12 December, an agreement was signed between UNMIK police and EULEX on the transfer of crime investigation files.

Progress on standards implementation

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the technical assessments of progress in implementing the standards for Kosovo (functioning democratic institutions, rule of law, freedom of movement, returns and reintegration, economy, property rights, cultural heritage, dialogue with Belgrade and the Kosovo Protection Corps), which it had to meet to comply with resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353]; the Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government [YUN 2001, p. 352]; the original standards/benchmarks statement endorsed by the Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2002/11 [YUN 2002, p. 369]; and the 2004 Kosovo Standards Implementation Plan [YUN 2004, p. 408]. The assessments, prepared by the Special Representative, were annexed to the Secretary-General's three reports to the Council on UNMIK covering 2008 [S/2008/211, S/2008/458, S/2008/692].

Functioning democratic institutions. Following the November 2007 elections [YUN 2007, p. 404], the new Assembly of Kosovo was inaugurated on 4

January. On 9 January, it elected its President and six members of its Presidency, while the election of the Kosovo Serb representative and the other non-Albanian representative was completed in February. The Assembly on 9 January re-elected the President of Kosovo and elected the Prime Minister and Government. The new Government included two female Ministers and two female deputy Ministers, compared with one female Minister and one female Deputy Minister in the previous Government. In April, the Government approved the Kosovo programme on gender equality, which focused on education of women, integration of women into the economy, labour and social welfare, culture and the media, health, gender relations and decision-making processes.

Many Kosovo Serbs started to report back to work, after an initial boycott following the declaration of independence, but the situation varied in different areas of Kosovo. Some Kosovo Serb leaders announced the formation of parallel municipal assemblies based on the local elections organized by Belgrade in Kosovo Serb areas in May. The Anti-Corruption Agency [YUN 2007, p. 405] in March submitted its first annual report to the President of the Assembly. The implementation of the Law on the Use of Languages continued to suffer from insufficient allocation of human and financial resources, and only one municipality had adopted a municipal regulation on the use of languages. A new 11-member Central Election Commission was appointed by presidential decree in August. The newly formed Election Complaints and Appeals Commission, a five-member body of Supreme Court judges, provided for redress of grievances relating to electoral issues. Kosovo's new legal framework envisaged an increase in the number of municipalities from 33 to 38, but the non-participation of the Kosovo Serb community was paralysing the process of creating the new Kosovo Serb majority municipalities foreseen in the new Law on Municipal Boundaries.

Most of the municipalities had not met their fair-share financing obligations. As a result of the new Law on Local Government Finance, municipalities were expected to integrate fair-share financing into their regular budget from 2009 onwards: that would make it challenging to follow up on the use of funds targeted for minority communities.

Rule of law. Five District Legal Aid Bureaux were opened in January and three new Special Prosecutors were recruited for the Special Prosecutors Office. The multi-ethnic character of the police had been challenged since the declaration of independence, because Kosovo Serb police officers in many southern Kosovo municipalities were suspended following their statement that they would no longer recognize the police chain of command and their demand to be placed under the direct command of UNMIK police. In May, the Government decided to continue to pay the suspended police officers to encourage them to return to their posts, and an operational plan to assist those who wished to return was put in place. Despite progress in the relationship between the Ministry of Internal Affairs and the police, sustained efforts were needed to get the police to accept the Ministry's oversight. Kosovo Serb judges and prosecutors continued their protests in northern Mitrovicë/Mitrovica. The Judicial Council and the Ministry of Justice continued to pay salaries to all court staff and prosecutors' office staff pending their return to work. In the north, the courthouse in Mitrovicë/Mitrovica reopened on 3 October, on the basis of the dialogue of the Special Representative with the Government of Serbia and his consultations with other stakeholders, and following approximately six months of legal vacuum.

In July, a suspect was arrested in an outstanding case related to the March 2004 riots [YUN 2004, p. 405] and charged with participation, as a leader, in a crowd that committed criminal offences against Kosovo Serb residents, Serbian Orthodox religious sites and the UNMIK headquarters in Prizren. The first Kosovo passports were issued in July. However, the authorities had not placed any restrictions on the use by Kosovo Serbs of Serbian passports, and had begun issuing new Kosovo identity cards, while UNMIK and Serbian identity documents continued to be valid.

Freedom of movement. In 2008, regular surveys showed that more than 96 per cent of minority community members continued to travel outside their areas of residence. Freedom of movement was not a concern of the minority communities, except for the Kosovo Albanian minorities in northern Kosovo, according to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). Nevertheless, efforts were needed from the Ministry of Transport and Communications to develop the humanitarian transport service. The humanitarian bus line from a Kosovo Albanian neighbourhood in northern Mitrovicë/Mitrovica to the southern part of the city was restored on 7 April after being temporarily halted following the declaration of independence. The railway service between Zvečan/Zvečan and Fushë Kosovë/Kosovo Polje had not resumed after it was stopped in early March, when Serbian Railways began illegally operating train service in the north of Kosovo and Kosovo Serb staff ceased to report to work. A replacement footbridge built across the Ibar River connecting south Mitrovicë/Mitrovica to the Three Towers mixed area in the north was inaugurated in July, facilitating freedom of movement for all communities.

Returns and reintegration. The number of minority returns declined sharply in comparison with previous years, which could be attributed to political developments, including the declaration of independence, as well as to the non-transparent allocation of returns funding and the non-consultative approach to returns-related issues adopted by the Ministry of Communities and Returns. UNHCR estimated that only 582 minority community members returned to Kosovo in 2008, compared with 1,816 in 2007 and 1,669 in 2006. UNHCR reported a very high percentage (84.45 per cent) of sustainable returns to Kosovo between March 2005 and June 2008. The boycott by Kosovo Serb representatives of various decision-making forums on returns had affected the work and quality of decisions on communities and returns-related issues. With the signing of a memorandum of understanding on 23 May between the Ministry of Communities and Returns and an internally displaced persons association, the Ministry expected to enhance its relations with such associations in many communities and improve returns-related projects. The allocated funding for the Ministry increased to €7.1 million for 2008, with a funding gap of €18 million for 23 approved organized returns projects. The Ministry faced a wide range of irregularities in administration, management, and budget and finance-related issues. The arrival of the new Minister for Communities and Returns coincided with the suspension and subsequent dismissal of five directors in the Ministry on charges of corruption and misuse of funds. The Ministry had proposed a revision of the beneficiary selection criteria for individual returns so as to include Kosovo residents who were not displaced as a result of the 1999 conflict.

Economy. On 15 February, the Assembly of Kosovo approved the budget for 2008, as previously endorsed by the Economic and Fiscal Council. The budget amounted to €1.1 billion, a substantial increase over the €718 million budget for 2007, and was promulgated by the Special Representative on 29 February. An International Monetary Fund (IMF) mission visited Kosovo in April to assess the macroeconomic framework and fiscal policies. The IMF had revised upwards the Kosovo GDP figures, which were estimated at €3,343 million (€1,573 per capita) in 2007, and forecast a real GDP growth of about 5 per cent per annum over a five-year period. As at 30 April, the Kosovo Trust Agency (KTA) had launched 30 waves of privatization, with 551 new companies derived from the assets of 313 socially owned enterprises tendered for sale. In June, UNMIK and the Ministry of Transport and Communications participated in the launch of a treaty establishing a transport community of the western Balkans, opening the way for the inclusion of Kosovo in the treaty. In July, UNMIK and the Ministry participated in the steering committee meeting of the South-East Europe Transport Observatory.

In August, UNMIK, in cooperation with Kosovo authorities, completed the signing of an agreement on privileges and immunities of the secretariat of the Central European Free Trade Agreement, thereby clearing the way for the implementation of the agreement. The European Commission adopted the 2008 progress report for Kosovo, and would present a feasibility study that would assess further means for Kosovo's progress towards integration with the EU. The situation along the Administrative Boundary Line had not changed since the destruction of customs facilities in northern Kosovo on 19 February. UNMIK Customs continued to have no presence there, leading to an estimated loss of €2 million a week in customs and value added tax revenue in both the Kosovo and Serbian budgets. UNMIK's economic reconstruction pillar (pillar IV) ceased all substantive operations on 30 June, pursuant to a decision by the European Commission. As a consequence, UNMIK no longer possessed any technical capacity or budgetary allocation to perform functions formerly carried out by that pillar. In that context, on 24 August, former KTA officials, appointed by the Kosovo authorities to official positions in the newly established Privatization Agency of Kosovo, took over the KTA compound in the presence of police officers. Following the takeover of the compound, the Privatization Agency was expected to attempt to restart the privatization process.

Property rights. The Kosovo Cadastral Agency had completed a pilot project on the registration of apartments in seven municipalities, which would be used as a model for the registration of apartments throughout Kosovo. The draft law on the treatment of illegal construction was adopted by the Assembly and was pending promulgation, as well as the draft law on the sale of apartments where tenure rights existed. The draft law on the organization of cadastral institutions was included in the Government's legislative strategy for 2008. The number of cases adjudicated by the Property Claims Commission stood at 14,105, or 39 per cent of all claims received. The Kosovo Property Agency (KPA) had kept up the momentum in the adjudication process, and continued to administer abandoned properties and the voluntary rental scheme. There were 4,325 abandoned properties under KPA administration, of which 2,258 participated in the rental scheme with the consent of their owners.

Cultural heritage. The private security company contracted by the Ministry of Culture, Youth and Sports to implement additional security measures for 15 Orthodox sites under the €50,000 grant from the Government [YUN 2007, p. 406] began its work following approval of its plan by the Serbian Orthodox Church in February. Also in February, the Assembly adopted a Law on the Establishment of Special Protective Zones. The Special Representative issued two executive decisions regarding a property dispute involving the Visoki Dečani Monastery. Works on the Hadum Mosque in Gjakovë/Djakovica under the auspices of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with a United States donation, commenced in April.

In 2008, the Kosovo police recorded 51 incidents targeting religious and cultural heritage sites, including vandalism and theft. Security for cultural and religious heritage sites continued to be a priority. The police continued to maintain a round-the-clock presence at the Church of Saint Nicholas in Prishtinë/Priština, as well as routine patrolling of cultural and religious sites across Kosovo. The Reconstruction Implementation Committee would require the support of all stakeholders, particularly the Serbian Orthodox Church, to conclude its undertaking.

Dialogue with Belgrade. Discussions were conducted on the Secretary-General's proposals as set out in his June report (see p. 438). The Special Representative stated that dialogue and consultations with all parties had been conducted in Belgrade and Pristina, without prejudice to their positions on the status issue. All parties had accepted the reconfiguration of the structure and profile of the international presence and had sought pragmatic progress in the discussions with the Special Representative on the six provisions—police, courts, customs, transportation and infrastructure, boundaries and Serbian patrimony.

Kosovo Protection Corps. KPC remained focused on developing its operational capability. From 22 March to 12 April, a detachment of KPC deminers, accompanied by an UNMIK representative took part in rescue operations in the village of Gërdec near Tirana, Albania, to help deal with the consequences of the explosion of an ammunition depot on 15 March. Following the declaration of independence in February, eight Kosovo Serb members of the KPC stopped working. No disciplinary action had been taken against them and efforts continued to persuade them to return to work. Minority representation in the KPC, which had 2,865 active members at the end of 2008, remained at 6.1 per cent, including the representation of Kosovo Serbs, which had decreased slightly from 1 per cent to 0.98 per cent since May. Women were represented at all levels, although total numbers were relatively small, at 3 per cent.

UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo

THE United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), established in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 357] to facilitate a political process to determine Kosovo's political future, comprised five components: interim administration (led by the United Nations); institution-building (led by OSCE); economic reconstruction (led by the EU); humanitarian affairs (led by UNHCR); and police and justice (led by the United Nations). UNMIK was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General Joachim Rucker (Germany), who was succeeded by Lamberto Zannier (Italy) on 20 June.

The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNMIK activities and developments in Kosovo for the periods from 16 December 2007 to 1 March 2008 [S/2008/211], 1 March to 25 June [S/2008/458], 26 June to 31 October [S/2008/692], 1 November to 9 March 2009 [S/2009/149] and in a special report submitted on 12 June [S/2008/354].

OIOS report. In April, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) issued a report on the comprehensive audit of UNMIK's mandate implementation [A/62/807], which focused on establishing the police and an independent and multi-ethnic judiciary and reforming the correctional system; performing basic civil administrative functions, promoting the establishment of self-government, promoting human rights and ensuring the return of refugees and displaced persons; and developing the legal, institutional and policy framework for economic reconstruction and development. The audit identified a number of failures and deficiencies in implementing the mandates. OIOS had concerns about the management of the transfer of responsibilities to the central government ministries and local municipalities. It also noted deficiencies in the governance mechanisms and internal control processes at the KTA. Furthermore, the continued weaknesses and backlog of court cases in the judiciary system were of concern.

UNMIK had transferred more than 80 per cent of the competencies for law enforcement to the Kosovo police and had established judicial systems that had been "Kosovorized" to a large extent. However, a lack of leadership and managerial skills had limited UNMIK's ability to accomplish the mandated goals in an effective manner, and the continued weaknesses in the judiciary system were of concern. The staff strengths of the police and the Kosovo Correctional Service were built up on an ad hoc basis. The UNMIK Regulation was not promptly amended to provide clear goals for the required multi-ethnic composition of the judiciary. Moreover, the number of pending court cases, which stood at 160,238 as at March 2007, was alarming.

Turning to civil administration, OIOS said that UNMIK had not established minimum criteria for assessing the preparedness of central government ministries and local government municipalities before the transfer of civil administration competencies, and failed to put effective mechanisms in place to monitor and determine whether the ministries and municipalities had adequately assumed those competencies. Significant deficiencies were also identified in the governance mechanisms and internal control processes at KTA. OIOS maintained that UNMIK and the KTA

Board of Directors operated the Agency in a way that did not adhere to the KTA Regulation, corporate governance principles, financial fiduciary responsibilities and public accountability requirements. For example, the KTA Board contravened the KTA Regulation and the Agency's governance principles and guidelines when it approved the appointment of politically active members to the Board of Directors of the Kosovo Energy Corporation. That has resulted in a weak corporate governance framework that could jeopardize the effective performance and financial sustainability of the Agency.

OIOS issued a series of recommendations, and suggested that the Secretary-General bring the report to the attention of the Security Council.

Report of Secretary-General. In his July report on UNMIK [S/2008/458], the Secretary-General said that the OIOS report identified a number of failures and deficiencies. His Special Representative had raised concerns that the report did not reflect a balanced assessment of the UNMIK performance throughout the course of its nine years in Kosovo. Taking into account the evolving circumstances on the ground, the Special Representative would monitor gaps in the standards implementation and assist the local authorities in implementing the standards in order to fulfil the UNMIK mandate.

Financing

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's reports on the UNMIK budget for the periods from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 [A/62/610] and from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 [A/62/687]; the Secretary-General's note on the financing arrangements for the Mission for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008 [A/62/801] and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [A/62/781/Add.18]; the OIOS report on the comprehensive audit of the Mission mandate implementation [A/62/807]; and the statement by the representative of the Secretary-General transmitting his comments thereon [A/C.5/62/SR.49], adopted, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/62/875], resolution 62/262 without vote [agenda item 151].

International security presence (KFOR)

In accordance with resolution 1244(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 353], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council reports on the activities during 2008 of the international security presence in Kosovo (KFOR), also known as Operation Joint Guard, covering the periods 1 to 31 January [S/2008/204], 1 to 29 February [S/2008/331], 1 to 31 March [S/2008/362], 1 to 30 April [S/2008/477], 1 to 31 May [S/2008/549], 1 to 30 June [S/2008/600] and 1 to 31 July [S/2008/638]. As at 31 July, the force, which operated under NATO leadership, comprised 14,409 troops, including 2,173 troops from non-NATO countries.

As before, KFOR handled incidents related to unexploded ordnance, counterfeit currency, illegal weapons possession, drugs, human trafficking and smuggling. KFOR units continued to focus on maintaining a safe and secure environment and freedom of movement throughout Kosovo, as well as on preventing non-compliant-group activities. They conducted high-visibility operations throughout Kosovo to deter any possible attempt at destabilization.

Georgia

In 2008, efforts continued to advance the Georgian-Abkhaz peace process, based on the 2001 Basic Principles for the Distribution of Competences between Tbilisi (Georgia's Government) and Sukhumi (the Abkhaz leadership) [YUN 2001, p. 386]. That document was intended to serve as a framework for substantive negotiations on the status of Abkhazia as a sovereign entity within the State of Georgia.

The escalation of hostilities and war in South Ossetia in August, as well as the subsequent Georgian-Russian conflict, deeply affected the situation in the Georgian-Abkhaz zone of conflict and the overall conflict-settlement process. In the aftermath of the conflict, the Russian Federation recognized Abkhazia's and South Ossetia's independence, while Georgia declared them territories occupied by the Russian Federation. Following Russia's recognition of Abkhazia, Georgia withdrew from the 1994 Moscow Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces [YUN 1994, p. 583]. Subsequently, the Commonwealth of Independent States decided to suspend its peacekeeping operation in the conflict zone, which had been in place for 14 years [ibid.], monitored by the United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia.

In the EU-mediated agreement signed in Moscow on 8 September, it was agreed that the UN Mission would continue to carry out its mandate as before the August hostilities. In October, the Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 15 February 2009.

UN Observer Mission in Georgia

The United Nations Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG), established by Security Council resolution 858(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 509], continued to monitor compliance with the 1994 Moscow Agreement and to fulfil other tasks, as mandated by Council resolution 937(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 584]. The Mission operated in close collaboration with the collective peacekeeping forces of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), located since 1994 in the zone of conflict [ibid., p. 583]. The Council extended the Mission's mandate twice during the year, the first time until 15 October, and the second until 15 February 2009.

UNOMIG main headquarters was located in Sukhumi (Abkhazia, Georgia), with a liaison office in the Georgian capital of Tbilisi, and team bases and sector headquarters in the Gali and Zugdidi sectors. A team base in the Kodori Valley was manned by observers operating from Sukhumi. As at December 2008, UNOMIG strength stood at 136 military observers and 20 police advisers.

In September [S/2008/631], Johan Verbeke (Belgium) succeeded Jean Arnault (France) as the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Georgia and Head of UNOMIG. He was assisted by the UNOMIG Chief Military Observer, Major General Anwar Husain (Bangladesh), who succeeded Major General Niaz Muhammad Khan Khattak (Pakistan).

Political aspects of the conflict

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a January report on the situation in Abkhazia [S/2008/38], the Secretary-General stated that UNOMIG continued its efforts to prevent the escalation of tensions in the zone of conflict and to facilitate dialogue between the Georgian and Abkhaz sides. The Secretary-General noted that no incident had occurred between those sides and that no further confrontation had taken place between Georgian security forces and CIS peacekeeping forces since their tense stand-off on 30 October 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 417]. A string of allegations concerning either the deployment of forces on both sides of the ceasefire line or incidents involving the Abkhaz forces or the CIS peacekeeping force, however, generated tensions and, occasionally, alarm in the zone of conflict and beyond.

While some work had been done following up on the Bonn meeting [YUN 2007, p. 413], differences between the sides persisted on the formal political dialogue. Concerned that internal problems in Georgia could set the stage for military action in the zone of conflict, the Abkhaz side announced a strengthening of security measures along the ceasefire line until mid-January. The Government of Georgia denied any aggressive intentions and, in turn, interpreted Abkhaz security measures as the introduction of a state of emergency in the Gali district, possibly aimed against the Georgian population in the district. The two electoral campaigns that had taken place in 2007 [ibid., p. 412], for the Georgian presidency and the de facto Abkhaz parliament, illustrated the rift between the political aspirations of the sides and their constituencies, with reunification and independence seen as top, non-negotiable priorities in Tbilisi and Sukhumi, respectively, and promoted with an equal sense of urgency. The Security Council had repeatedly called upon the sides to exercise restraint. A successful dialogue on security, economic rehabilitation and the return of internally displaced persons and refugees would help bring about a comprehensive political settlement.

Following a statement by a Russian ruling party official about possible deliberations in the Russian Duma in January on a request by the Abkhaz de facto parliament for Russian recognition of Abkhaz independence, Georgian officials stated that the Government would take all necessary measures under the Constitution to protect Georgia's territorial integrity.

Meeting of Group of Friends (February). On 18 and 19 February, senior representatives of the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General (France, Germany, Russian Federation, United Kingdom and United States) met in Geneva under the chairmanship of the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Edmond Mulet. The meeting was attended by Georgian and Abkhaz delegations.

The Georgian side stressed the importance of the international community's commitment to Georgia's territorial integrity and sovereignty, as reflected in Council resolutions, and noted progress in implementing measures discussed in Geneva and Bonn. It stated that its commitments regarding the upper Kodori Valley were fulfilled and verifiable, thanks to transparency measures such as the establishment of a UNOMIG team base there, and therefore believed that the issue should be removed from the agenda. It underscored its readiness to elaborate and implement jointly with the Abkhaz side proposals aimed at increasing confidence, people-to-people contacts and the development of strong ties between civil societies. The Georgian delegation emphasized the establishment of economic links and the lifting of economic sanctions, and stressed that joint economic activities could be the best mechanism to ensure confidence-building. It expressed its readiness to revisit the package of documents prepared in 2005 on the non-use of force and the return of internally displaced persons and refugees.

The Abkhaz side said that international intermediaries should take into account in a more balanced way the international principles of self-determination and territorial integrity, particularly in light of recent decisions on Kosovo, and proposed that comprehensive settlement negotiations use as a basis the Abkhaz position paper "Key to the Future", submitted in 2006. It reaffirmed its commitment to the implementation of the confidence-building measures proposed by the Friends. It stressed the main issues apt to improve confidence and, to a large extent, the credibility of the negotiation itself, such as the full implementation of the Moscow Agreement with regard to the Kodori Valley, the non-use of force and the lifting of the CIS embargo against Abkhazia. The Abkhaz side stressed its flexibility in finding compromises on those issues, including the gradual establishment of a local police force in the upper Kodori Valley with international assistance, and the adoption of the already negotiated package of documents on non-use of force and the return of internally displaced persons.

The Group of Friends stressed the importance of cooperation by the two sides in enhancing the security situation. The Group reiterated its call for the resumption of the security meetings between the sides, UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force. It also expressed disappointment at the lack of progress made since the Bonn meeting and underscored the importance of implementing the proposals for confidence-building measures made by the Group in February 2007 and endorsed by the Security Council [YUN 2007, p. 412]. The Group reaffirmed the importance of the right of return for all the refugees and internally displaced persons to Abkhazia, Georgia, and encouraged the sides to focus on practical steps to improve conditions for returns.

Communications. In letters dated 7 March [A/62/732, S/2008/167], Georgia expressed concern about the Russian Federation's withdrawal from the 1996 decision of the CIS Council of Heads of State on measures aimed at settling the conflict in Abkhazia [YUN 1996, p. 352]. By that withdrawal, Russia considered itself no longer bound by the obligation to prevent the sale and supply of armaments to the Abkhaz side, or to prevent the enrolment of its own citizens in armed groups in the conflict zone. By withdrawing unilaterally, Russia created the basis for providing the separatist government with military assistance and for establishing its military presence in Abkhazia.

On 10 March [S/2008/168], the Russian Federation said that on 6 March it had informed the CIS Executive Committee that the Russian Federation, due to a change in the circumstances, no longer considered itself bound by the 1996 decision of the CIS Council that had established sanctions against Abkhazia to induce it to take a more flexible position on the return of refugees and temporarily displaced persons. The situation had cardinally changed. Most of the Georgian refugees that lived in Abkhazia's Gali District had returned there. Further progress was impeded by Georgia's rejection of the system for their registration proposed by UNHCR. The Abkhaz side had been fulfilling its obligations under the agreements of the conflict settlement process. The Georgian side had not displayed a similar constructive approach and was actually undermining negotiations, having placed its administrative structure in the upper Kodori Valley. Against that background, the sanctions had lost their meaning: they were hindering the implementation of economic and social programmes and were causing unjustified hardship for the Abkhaz people. Russia had therefore decided to lift the sanctions.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In an April report [S/2008/219], the Secretary-General said that, despite the efforts of his Special Representative, the negotiation process remained suspended, as the Abkhaz side continued to insist on the withdrawal of Georgian armed personnel from the upper Kodori Valley as a precondition for resuming negotiations. He welcomed the dialogue between the Georgian Ministry of Internal Affairs, the CIS peacekeeping force and UNOMIG, which had been taking place regularly on the Zugdidi side of the ceasefire line.

In March, the de facto Abkhaz Parliament adopted a statement that supported the suspension of negotiations with the Georgian side until the withdrawal of Georgian forces from the upper Kodori Valley. It also called upon the de facto leadership to take measures to re-establish Abkhaz "jurisdiction" over the upper Kodori Valley and appealed to the United Nations, international organizations and States to consider recognition of Abkhazia's independence. On 6 March, the Russian Federation announced that it no longer considered itself bound by the restrictions introduced by the 1996 decision of the CIS Council of Heads of State. Georgia considered the decision as an overt attempt to infringe upon its sovereignty and territorial integrity, declared a "policy of zero tolerance towards the militarization of Abkhazia, Georgia" and pledged to work with the international community to prevent complications. In March, the Russian State Duma held three hearings on Abkhaz and South Ossetian appeals for recognition of their independence, and on 21 March adopted a statement that, while expressing support for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia, deemed necessary an adjustment in Russian policy in the light of Kosovo's unilateral declaration of independence. The Duma called on the executive branch to strengthen protection of Russian citizens living in Abkhazia and proposed that the executive branch consider recognizing Abkhazia's independence. Georgia's Ministry of Foreign Affairs viewed the statement of the Duma as an attempt to interfere in Georgia's internal affairs and warned that any modification in the deployment of the CIS peacekeeping force without the consent of the Georgian authorities in Abkhazia would constitute an act of aggression against Georgia.

On 28 March, President Mikheil Saakashvili outlined Georgia's proposals for resolving the conflict, which included: unlimited autonomy and wide federalism, supported by international guarantees; broad Abkhaz political representation in the official structures of Georgia, including a new post of Vice-President to be occupied by an Abkhaz; the right to veto legislation and decisions related to the constitutional status of Abkhazia and to issues related to Abkhaz culture, language and ethnicity; the establishment of jointly controlled free economic zones in the Gali and Ochamchira districts; and the gradual merger of law-enforcement and customs services. He also suggested that the Russian Federation become, together with other members of the international community, a mediator to the conflict. The de facto Abkhaz leadership stated that those proposals were not acceptable and confirmed its position that building good-neighbourly relations with Georgia on an equal basis was the only subject it was prepared to consider.

In light of the situation and the role UNOMIG played in promoting stability, cooperation and the restoration of dialogue, the Secretary-General recommended that its mandate be extended for another six months, until 15 October.

Security Council consideration (April). At a closed meeting on 14 April [meeting 5865], Mr. Mulet briefed Security Council members and representatives of UNOMIG troop-contributing countries. The briefing was followed by an exchange of views.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 April [meeting 5866], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1808(2008). The draft [S/2008/248] was submitted by Croatia, France, Germany, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States.

18. Strongly supports the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and encourages the Group of Friends of the Secretary-General to continue giving him their steadfast and unified support;

19. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. On 15 April [A/62/802], Georgia transmitted the new proposals of President Saakashvili on the peaceful resolution of the conflicts in Georgia.

On 17 April [S/2008/257], Georgia informed the Security Council that on 16 April, Russian President Vladimir Putin had instructed the Russian Government to launch formal cooperation with the de facto authorities of Abkhazia and the Tskhinvali region/South Ossetia. That action was designed for annexing parts of Georgian territory and threatened Georgia's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Georgia therefore requested a meeting of the Security Council. On the same day [A/62/810], Georgia informed the Secretary-General that Russia's "very dangerous step" aimed to legalize factual annexation of Abkhazia and the Tskhinvali region/South Ossetia.

Georgia transmitted further communications on 25 March [A/62/765-S/2008/197], 9 April [S/2008/234], 28 April [A/62/824], 5 May [A/62/830-S/2008/299], 2 June [A/62/852-S/2008/357], 8 July [A/62/904-S/2008/450], 10 July [A/62/909-S/2008/464], 16 July [S/2008/469] and 25

July [S/2008/497]. The Russian Federation transmitted a further communication on 4 June [S/2008/363].

Security Council consideration (April). Meeting in closed session on 23 April [meeting 5874], Council members and David Bakradze, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Georgia, had an exchange of views.

Communication. On 1 May [A/62/827-S/2008/298], Georgia transmitted a 30 April joint statement of the Presidents of Ukraine and Georgia expressing concern over Russia's attempt to call into question Georgia's territorial integrity by elevating the status of relations with Abkhazia and South Ossetia, thereby encouraging the self-recognized republics to secede from Georgia.

General Assembly action. On 12 May, Georgia submitted to the General Assembly a draft resolution [A/62/L.45] on the status of internally displaced persons and refugees from Abkhazia, Georgia. The draft recognized the right of return of all refugees and internally displaced persons, regardless of their ethnicity, to Abkhazia, Georgia. The Assembly adopted the draft by a recorded vote of 14 to 11, with 105 abstentions, as resolution 62/249 (see p. 891).

Communication. On 27 May [S/2008/342], Georgia informed the Security Council that the UNOMIG report regarding the downing on 20 April of a Georgian unmanned aerial vehicle by a Russian military aircraft over Abkhazia was released on 26 May. Georgia requested a meeting of the Council to address the issue.

Security Council consideration (May). On 30 May [meeting 5900], at a closed session, Council members and the representatives of Georgia and Germany had an exchange of views on the situation in Georgia.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In July, the Secretary-General reported [S/2008/480] that UNOMIG continued to seek to prevent an escalation of tensions in the zone of conflict and facilitate a resumption of dialogue. However, the situation on the ground had severely deteriorated in both political and security terms.

The Abkhaz side continued to insist on the withdrawal of Georgian forces from the upper Kodori Valley and the signing of a document on non-resumption of hostilities as a precondition for re-engaging in negotiations. The Georgian side focused on President Saakashvili's peace initiative and developed its various components. Georgia emphasized the need to change the negotiating formats, including by granting a prominent role to the EU, as a condition for progress, while the Abkhaz side remained opposed to any modification.

On 16 April, Russian Federation President Putin issued an instruction authorizing direct relations with the Abkhaz and South Ossetian de facto authorities in a number of fields. Russia stated that the decision was aimed at supporting Russian citizens and the local population and responded to what it called Georgia's aggressive intentions. The Georgian side protested what it considered a blatant violation of Georgia's sovereignty and territorial integrity, amounting to legalizing a factual annexation of Abkhazia and South Ossetia. In late April, the Russian Federation reinforced the Russian-manned CIS peacekeeping force stationed in the restricted weapons zone, and in May it introduced a military railways unit to rehabilitate the railways south of Sukhumi, outside the area of responsibility of UNOMIG and the CIS peacekeeping force. Differences between the two countries rose to a new level, with Georgia blaming Russia for "accelerated annexation" of Abkhazia, and Russia accusing Georgia of preparing for the imminent implementation of a military option in Abkhazia.

Concerned over those developments, senior representatives of the Group of Friends met in Berlin on 30 June, together with the Special Representative, to discuss ways to prevent further deterioration. However, the subsequent period saw a dramatic increase in violence, including indiscriminate bombings of public places in Gagra, Sukhumi and Gali on the Abkhaz-controlled side of the ceasefire line, as well as roadside explosions on the Georgian-controlled side. The bombings resulted in four fatalities, including one UNOMIG staff member.

The Secretary-General called upon every stakeholder to preserve the integrity of the ceasefire regime. He appealed to the Abkhaz side to observe the freedom of movement of UNOMIG and to the Georgian side to observe the freedom of movement of the CIS peacekeeping force.

Communication. On 10 July [S/2008/453], Georgia informed the Security Council that on 8 July Russian military aircraft had intruded into Georgian airspace, and requested a meeting of the Council.

Security Council consideration (July). On 21 July [meeting 5939], at a closed Security Council meeting, Council members and the representative of Georgia had an exchange of views.

New Special Representative. On 30 July [S/2008/518], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Johan Verbeke (Belgium) as the Special Representative for Georgia and Head of UNOMIG. On 1 August [S/2008/519], the Council took note of that intention.

Georgian-Russian conflict

Escalation of hostilities

On 9 July, in the lower Kodori Valley, a clash between the Abkhaz and Georgian sides on the Acham-khara heights was reported. The Abkhaz side claimed that an Abkhaz de facto security post had been raided by the Georgian side, resulting in two Abkhaz reservists being injured, while the Georgian side stated that one of its patrols had been attacked while securing the Achamkhara heights in anticipation of a UNOMIG visit to the Kvabchara Valley. It reported that three Georgian Ministry of Internal Affairs personnel had been injured. Tensions rose further after allegations by the Georgian side of mortar firing by the Abkhaz side into the Kvabchara valley on 26 July. UNOMIG began investigations of both incidents, but had to suspend them because of ensuing events the following month.

In the Zugdidi sector, existing tensions between the CIS peacekeeping force and Georgian law enforcement representatives led to the suspension in July of the sector-level tripartite meetings which—by bringing together the Georgian side, the CIS peacekeeping force and UNOMIG—had served as a forum for resolving operational issues. Following a series of bomb blasts in public places in Gagra and Sukhumi on 29 and 30 June, in which 12 people were injured, the Abkhaz de facto authorities ordered the closure of the ceasefire line as at 1 July. The most serious incident in years in the UNOMIG area of responsibility occurred on 6 July, when four people were killed and six injured following an explosion in a café in the town of Gali, near the Mission's sector headquarters. Among the fatalities were a UNOMIG language assistant and the head of the Gali de facto Abkhaz security service.

During this period, UNOMIG was assisting the efforts of Germany, as the Coordinator of the Group of Friends, to advance a plan for the settlement of the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict that had been proposed by the German Minister for Foreign Affairs, Frank-Walter Steinmeier, and presented to the sides during his visit to the region in mid-July. The plan contemplated a three-phase process: agreements on security measures, including a declaration on the non-use of force and modalities for the return of internally displaced persons and refugees; economic rehabilitation and confidence-building measures; and discussions on the political status of Abkhazia. The Georgian and Abkhaz sides stated their readiness to participate in a meeting in Berlin, but predicated their support for the proposed plan on a number of conditions.

At the same time, tensions between Georgia and Russia were rising. Russian officials were increasingly insisting that the Georgian side sign non-use of force agreements with the Abkhaz and South Ossetian sides to defuse tensions and restore confidence as a basis for negotiation. Georgian officials accused the Russian Federation of attempting to annex Georgian territories and demanded again that both the negotiations and peacekeeping formats be further internationalized.

On 4 August, as exchanges of fire between the Georgian and South Ossetian sides intensified, the Abkhaz side announced the postponement of its participation in the Berlin meeting and warned that “if Georgia starts fighting against South Ossetia, Abkhazia will open a second front”.

Communications. On 7 August [S/2008/533], the Russian Federation requested an emergency meeting of the Security Council to consider the aggressive actions of Georgia against South Ossetia. That same day [A/62/924-S/2008/535], Georgia transmitted a statement by the President of Georgia on the latest developments in the Tskhinvali region, Georgia.

Security Council consideration. The Russian Federation told the Security Council, which met on 8 August [meeting 5951], that just hours after reaching agreement on holding negotiations to resolve the escalating South Ossetia conflict, Georgian military divisions had begun a massive attack against Tskhinvali, South Ossetia’s capital. The Georgian authorities had pursued the military option despite diplomatic efforts by Moscow, Tbilisi, Tskhinvali, Washington, D.C., and other capitals. The situation in the conflict zone was critical, with massive artillery fire directed against a peaceful civilian population. Georgian tanks and infantry had reportedly begun to attack the southern parts of Tskhinvali. The Council had to play its role by immediately calling for an end to the hostilities and a rejection of the use of force.

Georgia maintained that following attacks by South Ossetian separatists, it had announced a unilateral ceasefire on 7 August as a sign of its willingness to defuse tensions. President Saakashvili had explained in a televised address of that evening that he had ordered the ceasefire specifically to give the South Ossetian secessionist regime the chance to resume talks. Military action had been taken in self-defence after repeated armed provocations, and with the sole goal of protecting civilians. Additional illegal forces and military equipment were entering Georgia from Russia through the Roki tunnel. The separatists were continuing to threaten attacks outside South Ossetia, and Russian peacekeepers had told Georgia that they were unable to control the separatists, who were ignoring appeals for direct talks. The illegal separatist authorities and armed formations were under the control and direction of Russian security and defence agencies. Numerous high-ranking Russian officers among the peacekeepers, as well as other officials from the Russian military, intelligence and law-enforcement services, were serving in senior roles—a clear violation of Russia’s obligation to remain neutral. Georgia was seeking a negotiated solution to the conflict, with international engagement: Georgia’s offer of autonomy stood, with international guarantees including an elected regional parliament, an elected regional president, shared sovereignty and protections for South Ossetian identity, culture and language. Georgia had sought Russia’s constructive engagement in the region’s economic rehabilitation and agreed security arrangements. Instead, Russia had become a party to the conflict. Georgia called on the international community to condemn Russia’s continuing infringement of Georgian sovereignty and territorial integrity. Georgia was ready to immediately begin peace talks aimed at resolving the conflict. The United States called on the parties to respect the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Georgia, and called on Russia to pull its troops back and not inflame the situation by sending its forces into Georgia. France called for an immediate cessation of hostilities and a resumption of dialogue, with a view to a ceasefire.

On 8 August [S/2008/536], however, Georgia informed the Security Council that on that same day, Russian military aircraft had intruded into Georgian airspace and bombed civilians and military infrastructure. Russian army units had invaded Georgia, in the Tskhinvali region. Georgia requested a meeting of the Security Council to address the threat to Georgia’s independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Georgia told the Security Council’s second meeting of 8 August [meeting 5952] that Russia had started a full-scale military invasion of Georgia, with troops entering the country and jets bombing airfields, military bases and villages. Georgia called on Russia to stop the bombing campaign, withdraw its forces and negotiate a ceasefire, adding that Georgian President Saakashvili was offering direct dialogue with Moscow.

The Russian Federation said that Georgia had carried out an attack on South Ossetia despite Russian appeals for a ceasefire, an end to that fratricidal conflict and resumption of negotiations. Georgian forces were bombarding towns, including those outside the immediate conflict zones, and had created panic among the civilian population, many of whom were trying to flee to safety. Many of the people living in South Ossetia were Russian citizens. Georgia’s actions had caused casualties among Russian peacekeepers. Russia was present on the territory of Georgia on an absolutely legal basis, pursuant to its peacekeeping mission in accordance with international agreements.

Heightened conflict and ceasefire

The escalating hostilities in South Ossetia on 7 and 8 August and the ensuing Georgian-Russian conflict profoundly affected the situation in the Georgian-Abkhaz zone of conflict and the overall conflict-settlement process. On 8 August, the Abkhaz side began introducing heavy weapons into the restricted weapons zone in violation of the 1994 Moscow Agreement [YUN 1994, p. 583]; and on 9 August, a series of bombardments was carried out in the upper Kodori Valley. The same day, Russian forces reportedly carried out aerial attacks in western Georgia, including on the railway station and military base in Senaki and the seaport of Poti—all located outside the zone of conflict—as well as around the town of Zugdidi. Georgia [S/2008/537] requested another meeting of the Security Council on the military aggression launched by Russia against Georgia.

Meanwhile, Abkhaz de facto authorities requested UNOMIG on 9 August to leave immediately its team base in Adjara in the upper Kodori Valley. When exiting through the lower Kodori Valley, the patrol heard sounds of an aerial attack from the direction of the upper Kodori Valley and saw a convoy of Abkhaz tanks and military personnel in the lower Kodori Valley. On the same day, the Abkhaz de facto Ministry of Defence declared that aerial strikes had been carried out on the military infrastructure in the upper Kodori Valley. After entering the Kodori Valley, the Abkhaz side claimed to have found heavy weapons and found evidence of the presence of personnel of the Georgian Ministry of Defence and accommodation facilities suitable for some thousands of personnel. UNOMIG indicated that the infrastructure in the upper Kodori Valley was suitable for the accommodation of personnel in numbers exceeding those provided by the Georgian side. UNOMIG was not able to resume its regular patrolling of the Kodori Valley since its team withdrew on 9 August, however, as the CIS peacekeeping force indicated that the safety of UNOMIG staff could not be guaranteed.

On 10 August, an air attack was reported on the Georgian signals unit south of the village of Urta; and on the same and following day, Russia introduced large numbers of troops into the zone of conflict. Although the troops were initially deployed on the Gali side of the ceasefire line, they were later moved into the Zugdidi side of the zone of conflict and adjacent areas in Senaki and Poti.

The United States requested an emergency meeting of the Council on 10 August [S/2008/538] to address the escalation of violence in Georgia. On that day [meeting 5953], Georgia told the Council that all Georgian troops had withdrawn from the conflict zone in South Ossetia and a humanitarian corridor had been established for civilians south of Tskhinvali. During the ceasefire, however, Georgian forces had been bombed many times and prevented from a full withdrawal. Russia said that the crisis was due to the aggression by Georgia against South Ossetia, and that Russia had reacted appropriately to defend civilians and its peacekeepers. Russia was ready to put an end to the war, was withdrawing from South Ossetia and was ready to sign an agreement on the non-use of force. The United States said that Russia had claimed that its military operations were intended to protect its peacekeepers and civilians in South Ossetia, yet its actions went far beyond that, and its expansion of the conflict to another separatist area of Georgia suggested other motives. The Council should condemn Russia's military assault on Georgia. Russia should carefully consider the implications of its aggression against a sovereign and democratic State.

The Secretary-General reported [S/2008/631] that from 8 to 11 August, UNOMIG issued three violation reports to the Abkhaz side for the presence of heavy military equipment in the restricted weapons zone, which the Abkhaz side refused to sign. On 10 August, the Abkhaz de facto authorities proclaimed martial law in the districts of Gali, Ochamchira and Tkvarcheli and announced partial mobilization. On several occasions, Abkhaz servicemen denied freedom of movement to UNOMIG patrols, threatening them with weapons. Seven violation reports involving nine cases of restriction of movement were issued to the Abkhaz side. A senior Georgian representative in Zugdidi informed UNOMIG on 11 August that the CIS peacekeeping force had issued an ultimatum to all Georgian law-enforcement agencies in the Zugdidi area to surrender all weapons. At the request of UNOMIG, the leadership of the CIS peacekeeping force agreed to allow law-enforcement personnel to carry side arms while on duty. Later that day, UNOMIG patrols observed that Georgian security posts at the ceasefire line that had been manned by special police forces had been abandoned, although Georgian criminal police and others remained on duty in the Zugdidi sector with side arms. Also on 11 August, the CIS peacekeeping force occupied five buildings, most of them belonging to the Georgian Ministry of Internal Affairs.

That same day [S/2008/540], Georgia requested a public emergency meeting of the Security Council on the military occupation of Georgia by the Russian Federation.

Meeting in closed session on that date [meeting 5954], the Security Council was briefed by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, B. Lynn Pascoe, and Mr. Mulet. Council members, the representative of Georgia, Mr. Pascoe and Mr. Mulet had an exchange of views.

Also on 11 August [S/2008/545], the Russian Federation again stated its position on the conflict. On 7 August, Georgian forces, in violation of the ceasefire agreements in the zone of Georgian-Ossetian conflict, had launched a military operation in South Ossetia. In the city of Tshinval, about 1,500 peaceful civilians—most of them Russian citizens—had lost their lives. A targeted massive assault had been launched on the Russian peacekeeping contingent which was part of the Joint Peacekeeping Forces, leading to casualties. In those circumstances, Russia had no choice but to use its right to self-defence. The use of force by Russia pursued no other goal but to protect the Russian peacekeeping contingent and Russian citizens.

Ukraine expressed concern that same day [A/62/928-S/2008/546] over the deterioration of the situation in South Ossetia (Georgia) and reaffirmed its position on Georgia's territorial integrity and sovereignty.

On 12 August, the Abkhaz side launched a ground attack and established control over the upper Kodori Valley.

Ceasefire plan. On 12 August, the French presidency of the EU visited Moscow and Tbilisi, and discussions led to a six-point ceasefire plan whose provisions also affected the situation in the UNOMIG area of responsibility. The Secretary-General, in a statement of 13 August [SG/SM/11743], welcomed the acceptance by Georgia and Russia of a peace plan proposed by French President Nicolas Sarkozy, and urged the parties to move quickly to halt the fighting. He called for immediate follow-through in implementing the agreed principles, including the end to hostilities and the withdrawal of forces to previous positions. He reiterated his support for a solution based on the respect of Georgia's territorial integrity and sovereignty, and offered his good offices.

The Parliament of Georgia [A/62/935-S/2008/557] issued an appeal three days later to the international community.

On 19 August [S/2008/561], France requested an emergency Security Council meeting on the situation in Georgia. On that day [meeting 5961], the Council was briefed by Mr. Pascoe, who said that agreement to six principles sponsored by the French Presidency of the EU had ended the military hostilities. Those principles were: commitment by all parties to renounce the use of force; immediate and definitive cessation of hostilities; free access to humanitarian aid; withdrawal of Georgian forces to their places of permanent deployment; withdrawal of Russian forces to their lines of deployment prior to 7 August 2008; and convening of international discussions on lasting security and stability arrangements for Abkhazia, Georgia, and South Ossetia, Georgia. The implementation of those principles would allow for the provision of international assistance, defuse the situation and offer hope for a political solution. As a result of the hostilities, 158,600 people had been displaced: 98,600 within Georgia, about 30,000 within South Ossetia and another 30,000 in other parts of the area. The United Nations was ready to facilitate international discussions to implement the accord and to take part in concrete arrangements for a settlement.

Post-ceasefire events

On 26 August, the Russian President stated that the attack by Georgia on South Ossetia had left Russia with no choice but to recognize Abkhazia and South Ossetia as independent States. In response to strong international criticism and support expressed for Georgia's territorial integrity, Russia stated that any return to status quo ante was no longer possible in the light of the genocide in South Ossetia.

The next day [S/2008/587], Georgia requested a Security Council meeting to consider the illegal unilateral actions of the Russian Federation with regard to two Georgian provinces, Abkhazia and South Ossetia. On 28 August, the Parliament of Georgia declared Abkhazia and South Ossetia territories occupied by the Russian Federation, and the Russian peacekeepers an occupying force. Georgia subsequently severed diplomatic relations with Russia.

Also on 28 August [meeting 5969], the Security Council was briefed by Elizabeth Spehar, Officer-in-Charge of the Department of Political Affairs, who reported that 18 checkpoints of the Russian forces remained north of Gori, Georgia, as well as in other areas. Wolfgang Weisbrod-Weber, Officer-in-Charge of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, told the Council that UNOMIG had observed large-scale Russian troop and military hardware withdrawal from Georgia to the Abkhaz-controlled side of the ceasefire line. Nonetheless, Abkhaz forces continued to control pockets north of the Inguri River, on the Georgian side of the ceasefire line, and the situation in and around the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict zone remained tense.

On 29 August, Georgia declared that the 1994 Moscow Agreement was null and void and reiterated its commitment to the six-point ceasefire plan as the only valid basis for conflict resolution. Following those decisions, the Abkhaz side announced its intention to reinforce the "State border".

Moldova transmitted to the Secretary-General that same day [A/62/950] a statement on the events in South Ossetia and Abkhazia. Moldova did not consider that the international recognition of Abkhazia and South Ossetia would stabilize the situation. At the same time, it deemed it inappropriate to compare the situation in Georgia with the one in Transnistria, and believed that speculations on how the situation in Abkhazia and South Ossetia might affect the Transnistrian settlement process [YUN 2007, p. 423] were counterproductive. Moldova had created very favourable prerequisites for its settlement, and there was political will on all sides participating in the settlement to the conflict.

On 1 September, Georgia decided to terminate the CIS peacekeeping operation in Abkhazia, Georgia.

On 7 September, UNOMIG, accompanied by the CIS peacekeeping force, conducted a special patrol to the Kodori Valley. Abkhaz forces were occupying the entire Valley, and a battalion of CIS peacekeepers was stationed there. It found that the UNOMIG Kodori team base in Adjara was occupied by Abkhaz personnel. All the movable assets that had been left at the base on 9 August were missing.

On 8 September, the French presidency of the EU and the Russian President elaborated provisions for implementing the six-point ceasefire plan, which were agreed upon on the same day by the President of Georgia. Among those provisions, it was reaffirmed that UNOMIG observers would continue to carry out their mandate as had existed on 7 August, subject to possible future adjustments decided on by the Security Council.

Meanwhile, the next day, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Abkhaz de facto Foreign Minister signed a document establishing formal diplomatic relations, followed by the signing of an agreement on friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance in Moscow on 17 September.

Communications. Georgia transmitted further communications on 7 August [A/62/923-S/2008/534], 9 August [A/62/926-S/2008/542, A/62/925-S/2008/543, A/62/953-S/2008/544], 13 August [A/62/931-S/2008/551], 16 August [A/62/936-S/2008/562], 20 August [A/62/941-S/2008/573], 21 August [A/62/942-S/2008/574] and 20 November [S/2008/725, A/63/561-S/2008/727].

Report of Secretary-General (October). In a 3 October report [S/2008/631], the Secretary-General stated that following the outbreak of hostilities in South Ossetia in August, the context in which UNOMIG had operated during the past 14 years had changed considerably. It was not yet known which features, if any, of the Moscow Agreement—the basis of the Mission's observation mandate—would be retained when the security discussions concluded. As long as international involvement in the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict was seen as helping to prevent future conflict, however, UNOMIG might be called upon to make a contribution, and both the Georgian and Abkhaz sides supported its continuation. In that context, the Secretary-General recommended extending the Mission for a four-month period.

Communications. On 6 October [S/2008/637], the Russian Federation informed the Council that the deployment of the mission of EU observers in the security zones along the borders of Abkhazia and South Ossetia was proceeding smoothly. They were beginning to interact with the Russian peacekeepers, who were being withdrawn from those zones. At the same time, the situation remained tense and dangerous incidents persistently occurred. Nevertheless, Russia intended to complete the withdrawal of its military from Georgia on time, by 10 October.

On 24 October [A/63/508-S/2008/674], Georgia transmitted a statement of its Parliament on facts concerning violations of the ceasefire agreement by the Russian Federation.

Security Council consideration (October). At a closed meeting on 9 October [meeting 5991], Mr. Mulet briefed Security Council members and representatives of UNOMIG troop-contributing countries. The briefing was followed by an exchange of views.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 October [meeting 5992], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1839(2008). The draft [S/2008/639] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 1808(2008) of 15 April 2008,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 23 July and 3 October 2008,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations mission for a new period terminating on 15 February 2009;

2. Decides also to remain actively seized of the matter.

Year-end developments. In a later report [S/2009/69 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General proposed measures that could be a basis for an effective security regime, and that the Council endorse the continued presence of a UN mission retaining the existing configuration and deployment. He also noted that as a result of recent events, the position of the Mission, whose operation and security depended largely on the goodwill of the sides, and which had continued its activities of patrolling, observation and liaison in its area of responsibility, had become precarious and could rapidly become unsustainable.

The security regime based on the Moscow Agreement had seen further erosion. The Collective CIS Peacekeeping Force, which had been in place in the conflict zone for the previous 14 years, was officially terminated by the decision adopted at the meeting of the Council of the Heads of State of CIS, held in Bishkek on 10 October. Russian armed forces remained deployed on the Abkhaz-controlled side of the zone of conflict. Georgian and Abkhaz forces were deployed on their respective sides of the ceasefire line, facing each other in a potentially dangerous stand-off. The Special Representative and the Mission maintained regular contacts with the Georgian and Abkhaz sides, urging them to comply with the spirit of the Moscow Agreement and inviting their views on a possible future UN mission. The Special Representative also held consultations with senior representatives of the Russian Federation, the United States, the EU and its members, as well as the OSCE.

In October, the Abkhaz side destroyed several improvised pedestrian bridges in the Gali Sector to prevent “illegal” crossing of the ceasefire line. Afterwards, the Abkhaz de facto authorities announced that there were three “official” crossing points: at the Inguri River bridge and at the villages of Saberio and Meore Otobaya.

Subsequently, on 23 October, the Parliament of Georgia adopted a law declaring Abkhazia and South Ossetia “occupied territories” and the Russian Federation a “military occupier”. The law, signed on 31 October by President Saakashvili of Georgia, declared null and void all legislative and administrative acts issued by the de facto authorities in Abkhazia and South Ossetia. It also restricted access to these territories and prohibited economic and financial activities that did not comply with Georgian law.

The Russian Parliament ratified on 4 November the Russian-Abkhaz and Russian-South Ossetian treaties on friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance. Russian officials stated that the presence of Russian armed forces in Abkhazia and South Ossetia would be based on those documents and announced plans for the establishment of military bases and the deployment of 3,700 troops in Abkhazia and South Ossetia each.

A Georgian serviceman was killed on 15 November during an exchange of fire close to Kalagali village. While the UN police and personnel of the EU monitoring mission were inspecting the scene of the incident, a second round of shooting came from the Abkhaz-controlled side. Following another exchange of fire in Ganmukhuri on 20 November, at the same time as a UN police patrol was examining the scene, another round of shootings occurred. In both incidents, the Abkhaz side claimed that it opened fire to prevent an armed group from crossing the ceasefire line; however, the Mission could not find evidence substantiating that claim.

In October, November and December, UNOMIG conducted three patrols to the upper Kodori Valley to assess the security and humanitarian conditions, including the situation regarding the return of the population displaced as a result of the August events. The patrols spoke with several inhabitants and members of the new de facto local administration, and the Abkhaz de facto authorities announced that all the local population, estimated in 2002 at up to 2,000, could return if the displaced persons obtained Abkhaz “passports” and gave up their Georgian citizenship. In December, UNOMIG observed a convoy of Russian forces composed of heavy military equipment entering the security zone. According to information provided by the Russian forces, their deployment in the security zone was concentrated in five areas along the ceasefire line, stretching from the upper Gali district to the Black Sea coast. The Mission also reported the introduction of heavy weapons and military personnel by the Abkhaz side into the zone of conflict. The Special Representative and the Chief Military Observer urged the Abkhaz side to comply with the spirit of the Moscow Agreement and to withdraw their military materiel from the zone of conflict.

Pursuant to the six-point ceasefire agreement (see p. 456) and subsequent implementing measures, the Special Representative co-chaired, together with representatives of the EU and OSCE, three rounds of international discussions in Geneva, in which delegations from Georgia, the Russian Federation and the United States, as well as Abkhaz and South Ossetian representatives participated. In the second round (18–19 November) two working groups—on security and stability and on refugees and internally displaced persons—agreed to focus on practical issues; and at the third round (17–18 December) the working group on security and stability discussed a proposal for joint incident prevention and response mechanisms. Although all participants agreed on most elements of the proposed mechanisms, differences prevented an agreement. The working group on refugees and internally displaced persons discussed concrete steps to improve the living conditions of the displaced population. Participants agreed in principle to hold the next round of discussions in Geneva in February 2009.

On 23 December, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs and the de facto Minister for Foreign Affairs of Abkhazia signed a memorandum of understanding on cooperation in international affairs. The Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs announced that additional agreements, including an agreement on military cooperation and joint protection of “Abkhazia’s borders”, would be signed at the beginning of 2009.

Humanitarian situation and human rights

The UNOMIG Human Rights Office in Abkhazia continued to promote human rights protection and to provide support to local non-governmental organizations (NGOs), except when its activities in the zone of conflict were restricted due to the events in August. It continued to facilitate the Assisting Communities Together project, which promoted small grants to local NGOs to carry out human rights education and training projects. The Office conducted regular monitoring visits to detention facilities, monitored court trials and provided legal advisory services to the local population. It also gathered first-hand information from victims, witnesses and other reliable sources; it monitored and followed up on individual cases related to due process and the right to a fair trial, the treatment of detainees, the illegal occupation of property, the right to adequate housing, and housing and property rights.

From 4 to 7 February, the Office, the Mission gender focal point and the UN police held a seminar in Pitsunda on the protection of women and minors against domestic violence. From 12 to 18 August, UNHCR and its implementing partners assisted approximately 1,000 internally displaced persons from the upper Kodori Valley, who were transported to Kutaisi where the Government of Georgia provided them with temporary accommodation.

UNHCR, together with its partners, completed its planned activities including community-based protection and confidence-building, education-related projects, basic shelter repair, income generation, agricultural support and training.

Armenia and Azerbaijan

In 2008, Armenia and Azerbaijan maintained their positions with regard to the Nagorno-Karabakh region of Azerbaijan, which had erupted in conflict in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 388], followed by a ceasefire agreement in May 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 577]. Both sides addressed communications regarding the conflict to the Secretary-General. The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) Minsk Group (France, Russian Federation, United States) continued to mediate the dispute between Armenia and Azerbaijan.

Communication. On 5 March [A/62/724-S/2008/163], Azerbaijan informed the Secretary-General that since early morning on 4 March, the Armenian occupying forces had violated the ceasefire regime, which led to escalation. The Azerbaijani Army had repulsed the attacks. Four Azerbaijani military personnel were killed and the Armenian forces lost 12 military personnel. The violation of the ceasefire regime by Armenia was directed to divert the attention of its citizens and the international community from the country's internal difficulties.

General Assembly consideration. On 14 March, Azerbaijan submitted to the General Assembly a draft resolution [A/62/L.42] on the situation in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan.

Introducing the draft resolution, Azerbaijan said that it did not accept the argument that the text was unilateral and untimely. It had been prepared in accordance with international law and was impartial. It had been prompted by unfolding circumstances, both regionally and internationally, which had heightened concerns over the status of the settlement process. It was, therefore, apropos and timely. Azerbaijan was concerned and alarmed at the lack of clear proposals from the Co-Chairs of the OSCE Minsk Group with regard to the resolution of issues regarding the liberation of all of the occupied territories and the return of the Azerbaijani population to Nagorno-Karabakh. The Co-Chairs had no right to deviate from the principle of territorial integrity for the sake of their "notorious neutrality". Such neutrality was not a position, but a lack of one. There could be no neutrality when the norms of international law were violated. Four Security Council resolutions adopted in 1993 demanded the withdrawal of the occupying forces from Azerbaijan and the creation of the conditions for the return of internally displaced persons, while the General Assembly's dispatch of a fact-finding mission to the occupied territories in 2005 had confirmed the Armenian settlement of the territories.

Calling the resolution a wasted attempt to pre-empt the outcome of the peace talks, Armenia said that was not how responsible members of the international community conducted the difficult but rewarding mission of bringing peace and stability to peoples and regions. The three Minsk Group Co-Chairs had found that the draft resolution did not help the peace talks, and the Assembly should follow their lead. Refugees and territories were a problem created by Azerbaijan, which had unleashed war against people it claimed as its sovereign citizens. Only when the initial cause was resolved would the fate of all the territories and refugees concerned be put right.

The United States noted that the Minsk Group Co-Chairs had proposed a set of basic principles for the peaceful settlement of the conflict to the two sides in November 2007 on the margins of the OSCE Ministerial Council in Madrid. The proposal comprised a balanced package of principles currently under negotiation. The draft resolution did not consider the proposal in its balanced entirety. Because of that selective approach, the Co-Chairs opposed that unilateral text, which threatened to undermine the peace process. However, the negotiators reaffirmed their support for Azerbaijan's territorial integrity, and thus did not recognize the independence of Nagorno Karabakh. In light of the clashes along the line of contact, which had occasioned loss of life, both sides must refrain from unilateral actions, either at the negotiations table or in the field.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 March [meeting 86], the Assembly adopted resolution 62/243 [draft: A/62/L.42] by recorded vote (39-7-100) [agenda item 20].

The situation in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan

The General Assembly,

Cyprus

During 2008, progress was made in resolving the Cyprus problem. The Secretary-General’s Special Representative in Cyprus continued to assist the two sides in implementing the 8 July 2006 Set of Principles and Decision [YUN 2006, p. 487], which included commitment to the unification of Cyprus based on a bizonal, bicomunal federation and political equality, and an agreement to meet regularly on issues affecting day-to-day life of the Cypriot people. The Greek and Turkish Cypriot leaders agreed to establish working groups and technical committees, and in September launched full-fledged negotiations under UN auspices, aimed at finding a mutually acceptable solution.

The United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) continued to cooperate with its UN partners and local actors to facilitate projects benefiting both Greek and Turkish Cypriots in and outside the buffer zone and to promote confidence-building measures between them. The Security-Council extended the UNFICYP mandate twice during the year, the second time until 15 June 2009.

Incidents and position statements

Communications. Throughout 2008, the Secretary-General received letters from the Government of Cyprus and from Turkish Cypriot authorities containing charges and counter-charges, protests and accusations, and explanations of positions regarding the question of Cyprus. Letters from the “Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus” were transmitted by Turkey. In communications dated between 7 February and 16 December, Cyprus reported violations of the international air traffic regulations and the national airspace by Turkish military aircraft [A/62/683-S/2008/83, A/62/803-S/2008/253, A/62/882-S/2008/389, A/62/920-S/2008/524, A/63/543 & Corr.1-S/2008/704 & Corr.1, A/63/599-S/2008/788]. The “Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus” refuted those allegations, stating that the flights mentioned took place within the sovereign airspace of the “Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus”, over which the Cypriot administration in South Cyprus had no jurisdiction or right of say [A/62/699-S/2008/101, A/62/819-S/2008/276, A/62/892-S/2008/429, A/62/932-S/2008/552, A/63/566-S/2008/731].

On 14 November [A/63/554-S/2008/719], Cyprus informed the Secretary-General that, on 13 November, vessels legitimately conducting exploratory surveys within the exclusive economic zone of Cyprus received threats by a Turkish warship and were forced to withdraw within the territorial waters of Cyprus. On 26 November [A/63/574-S/2008/741], Turkey transmitted a letter from the “Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus” stating that the Greek Cypriot side’s unilateral activities regarding the delimitation of maritime jurisdiction before a comprehensive settlement violated the rights and interests of the Turkish Cypriot people, who had equal rights and say over the natural resources in and around the island. Also on 26 November [A/63/575-S/2008/742], Cyprus reported that the harassment of vessels by Turkish warships within the exclusive economic zone of Cyprus had continued unabated, in complete disregard of Cyprus’s sovereign rights.

Other communications were transmitted by Turkey from the “Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus” on 25 January [A/62/666-S/2008/56] and 28 November [A/63/578-S/2008/749, A/63/579-S/2008/750], and by Cyprus on 25 September [A/63/378].

Good offices mission

On 21 March, Demetris Christofias, who became President following elections in Cyprus in February, met with Mehmet Ali Talat, the Turkish Cypriot leader, in the presence of the Special Representative, and agreed on a path towards a comprehensive settlement. The agreement entailed the establishment of a number of working groups to consider the core issues pertaining to an eventual settlement plan, and of technical committees to seek immediate solutions to everyday problems. Moreover, the leaders decided to open a crossing at Ledra Street in the centre of old town Nicosia, which had for many years been a symbol of the division of Cyprus.

On 26 March, representatives of the leaders agreed to establish six working groups on governance and power-sharing, EU matters, security and guarantees, territory, property and economic matters, as well as seven technical committees on crime and criminal matters, economic and commercial matters, cultural heritage, crisis management, humanitarian matters, health and the environment. The groups and committees began to meet regularly on 22 April, as foreseen by the leaders, facilitated by the United Nations. From late March, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Lynn Pascoe, met five times with President Christofias and Mr. Talat, and both confirmed their commitment to reaching a comprehensive settlement under the auspices of the Secretary-General.

Following the meeting on 23 May hosted by the Special Representative, the leaders issued a joint statement [S/2008/353, annex III] reaffirming their commitment to a bizonal, bicomunal federation with political equality, as defined in relevant Security Council resolutions. The partnership would comprise a federal Government with a single international personality, as well as a Turkish Cypriot Constituent State and a Greek Cypriot Constituent State, which would be of equal status.

Since his appointment as the Special Adviser on Cyprus as from 14 July [S/2008/456, S/2008/457], Alexander Downer (Australia) conducted four visits to facilitate meetings between the leaders and their representatives and officials.

On 1 July, the leaders issued a joint statement stating that they had discussed the issues of single sovereignty and citizenship. On 25 July the leaders undertook a final review of the progress made by the working groups and technical committees, which had held more than 270 meetings, and agreed to launch full-fledged negotiations, which began as scheduled on 3 September. The aim of the negotiations was to find a mutually acceptable solution to the Cyprus problem that would safeguard the fundamental and legitimate rights and interests of all Cypriots. Any agreed solution would be put to separate, simultaneous referendums. Subsequently, the leaders met on nine occasions under UN auspices. In the first phase of negotiations the focus was on the key issues of governance and power-sharing.

On 22 December, the leaders, in a joint statement, reaffirmed their commitment and resolve to finding a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem. They also recognized that although some progress had been made, it had been insufficient.

The Secretary-General noted [S/2008/744] that efforts to solve the Cyprus problem had entered a new phase and that the decision to resume fully fledged negotiations was encouraging. Differences along the way would naturally appear, considering that the issues to be addressed were difficult. Nonetheless, he expressed optimism about the process, and underscored that the parties should not neglect the political aspects of the process, explaining to their communities the benefits of a solution. To support the efforts of the parties throughout the process, the United Nations had adopted an integrated approach that maximized synergies among the good-offices mission and UNFICYP.

UNFICYP

In 2008, the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), established in 1964 [YUN 1964, p. 165], continued to monitor the ceasefire lines between the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces on the northern side and the Cypriot National Guard on the southern side of the island; to maintain the military status quo and prevent a recurrence of fighting; and to undertake humanitarian and economic activities.

On 9 April [S/2008/244], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Tayé-Brook Zerihoun (Ethiopia) as his Special Representative in Cyprus and Head of UNFICYP, replacing Michael Møller (Denmark), who completed his assignment on 31 March. Also on 9 April [S/2008/246], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Rear Admiral Mario Sánchez Debernardi (Peru) as UNFICYP Force Commander, replacing Major General Rafael José Barni (Argentina). The Council took note of those intentions on 14 April [S/2008/245, S/2008/247].

As at 31 October, UNFICYP comprised 858 troops and 69 civilian police.

The Secretary-General submitted two reports covering UNFICYP activities for the periods from 16 November 2007 to 23 May 2008 [S/2008/353] and from 24 May to 23 November [S/2008/744].

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (June). In a June report [S/2008/353], the Secretary-General noted that the situation in Cyprus remained calm and stable, with no major incidents along the ceasefire lines.

UNFICYP liaised extensively with senior commanders of the opposing forces to agree on the military-technical terms in order to implement the 21 March decision of the leaders and prepare for the opening of the crossing point at Ledra Street. On 3 April, UNFICYP conducted a major security operation to support the opening of the crossing point on that day. An incident on the evening of 3 April resulted in a brief closing of the crossing point, which was reopened later that night and since then had been functioning without problems. However, the incident showed that both sides needed to demonstrate cooperation and restraint while managing the crossing point.

The Turkish Forces provided minefield records and maps of 16 suspected mined areas after an agreement on the guidelines for clearing those areas was reached after a protracted series of meetings. In March, a deminer from Mozambique lost a limb in a mine explosion.

The requests for facilitation from Cypriots to UNFICYP ranged from religious and educational issues, the conduct of commemorative and socio-cultural events, the evacuation of patients and the transfer of the deceased, to law enforcement matters. During the reporting period, the Force facilitated 77 bicomunal events, which brought together more than 4,117 persons from both communities. In addition, UNFICYP carried out 62 humanitarian convoys and visits in support of 375 Greek Cypriots and 136 Maronites living in the northern part of the island. It also continued to assist Turkish Cypriots in the southern part in obtaining identity documents, housing, welfare services, medical care, employment and education. The Force continued to receive with concern reports about the demolition of Greek Cypriot houses in the north.

UNFICYP continued to develop working relations with police forces on both sides of the buffer zone. Its relations with the Cyprus police had been positive and constructive, while relations with the Turkish Cypriot police were developing at a slower pace.

The Secretary-General expressed commitment to helping the parties in moving forward to the formal talks as expeditiously and smoothly as possible. He also recommended that the Council extend the UNFICYP mandate until 15 December.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 April [meeting 5869], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/9 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council warmly welcomes the agreement reached on 21 March 2008 by the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot leaders and commends them for the political leadership they have shown.

The Council is encouraged by the launch of the working groups and technical committees that will prepare the ground for the start of fully fledged negotiations, in a spirit of good faith, on a comprehensive and durable settlement under the auspices of the Secretary-General's good offices mission. The Council looks forward to the results of this preparatory process within the three-month timeline agreed by the two leaders, which, it is hoped, will build trust, momentum and a sense of common interest in the search for a just and lasting solution.

The Council further welcomes the opening of the Ledra Street crossing as an indication of political will to tackle issues that have obstructed progress and an important signal that both sides seek to improve the lives of all Cypriots. The Council looks forward to further such confidence-building measures.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the reunification of Cyprus based on a bicomunal, bizonal federation and political equality, as set out in the relevant Council resolutions, and its willingness to support the efforts of the Secretary-General to this end. In this context, the Council welcomes the readiness of the Secretary-General to assist the parties in Cyprus, and further welcomes the prospect of the appointment, after the completion of the preparatory period and based on progress, of a Special Adviser to facilitate movement towards a comprehensive settlement.

The Council welcomes the appointment of Mr. Tayé-Brook Zerihoun as the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Cyprus, and expresses its appreciation for the work of the previous Special Representative, Mr. Michael Møller.

Security Council consideration. On 9 June [meeting 5906], in a closed meeting, the Special Representative briefed the Security Council and countries contributing troops to UNFICYP. The briefing was followed by an exchange of views.

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

On 4 September [meeting 5971], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/34 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council warmly welcomes the launch of fully fledged negotiations between the two leaders, under the good offices mission of the Secretary-General, aimed at the reunification of Cyprus.

The Council commends the two leaders for the progress made since their first meeting on 21 March 2008 and supports their common approach. The Council calls upon both sides to continue to work together in a constructive and positive manner in order to reach a comprehensive and durable settlement approved in separate and simultaneous referendums. The Council looks forward to progress in the negotiations and reiterates its readiness to support the process.

The Council welcomes the appointment of Mr. Alexander Downer as the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Cyprus and looks forward to being briefed on the progress of the good offices process.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In November [S/2008/744], the Secretary-General noted that the situation in the buffer zone remained stable and that only minor incidents were recorded.

UNFICYP no longer maintained an overt military presence at the Ledra Street crossing, and crossings had continued without incident. The Secretary-General commended both sides for their decision to cancel their main annual military exercises. In a significant confidence-building measure, the National Guard cancelled the “Exercise Nikiforos” and the Turkish Forces responded by cancelling its “Exercise Toros”. However, the Turkish Forces continued to impose restrictions on the movement of UNFICYP on the Karpas peninsula and at the walled area of Varosha. Regarding the clearance of 26 Turkish Forces minefields, 17 minefields would be completed by the end of December, leaving 9 to be cleared.

Cypriots from both sides continued to seek the resolution of day-to-day issues that affected their lives, with the assistance of UNFICYP, which also continued to facilitate the normalization of conditions in the buffer zone and humanitarian assistance to both communities. Regular monthly meetings between Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot political party leaders continued at the Ledra Palace Hotel under the auspices of the Embassy of Slovakia. The 54 requests made by Greek Cypriot and Maronite internally displaced and refugee families that wished to return and permanently reside in the north were still pending. Following a review of its activities in facilitating humanitarian assistance to Turkish Cypriots in the south, UNFICYP began discussions with local authorities and community representatives to further improve the humanitarian and welfare action directed to them. During the reporting period, UNFICYP, in cooperation with international and local partners, facilitated 56 bicomunal events, with the participation of nearly 5,300 persons from both communities. The Force authorized six projects in the buffer zone, outside of civil-use areas, including telecommunications infrastructure, sewage system, housing and road construction. Relations between UNFICYP and the police forces on both sides remained cooperative and constructive.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council extend the UNFICYP mandate until 15 June 2009.

Security Council consideration. On 5 December [meeting 6032], in a closed meeting, the Special Representative briefed the Security Council and countries contributing troops to UNFICYP. The briefing was followed by an exchange of views.

Cooperation with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe

On 26 September [meeting 5982], the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), Alexander Stubb, briefed the Security Council about the work and priorities of OSCE. He noted that recent crises, such as the situation in Georgia, had underlined the critical importance of cooperation between OSCE and the United Nations. The 56-member organization intended to promote the implementation of all UN principles, conventions and other global instruments. The OSCE early warning, crisis management and post-conflict activities were crucial components of the UN-based international order. In many ways, both the United Nations and OSCE were in the business of preventing and resolving conflicts. The challenges the two organizations currently shared were Afghanistan, Georgia and Kosovo. The work of international security structures should be redirected in the spirit of effective multilateralism, so that they provide genuine security and stability to member countries and their inhabitants. Both OSCE and the United Nations should be a part of such long-term efforts.

By decision 63/552 of 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on cooperation between the United Nations and OSCE would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Middle East

The year 2008 was marked by a number of encouraging developments in the Middle East. Bilateral and multilateral efforts intensified to find a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict within the framework set out at the 2007 Annapolis Conference. Nonetheless, the goal of a peaceful settlement of the conflict by the end of the year remained elusive, and the situation on the ground in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, remained difficult, hampering political efforts to achieve the vision of two States existing side by side in peace and security. In the Gaza Strip, in particular, prolonged violence and a deepening humanitarian crisis prevailed, complicated by the widening rift between the Palestinian factions in the Fatah-controlled West Bank and the Hamas-controlled Gaza Strip. As part of the recently intensified diplomatic efforts in the Middle East peace process, the good offices of the Secretary-General continued, as well as those of the Middle East Quartet (European Union, Russian Federation, United Nations, United States) to promote the road map initiative endorsed by the Security Council in 2003 and confirmed at Annapolis in 2007.

The year 2008 also marked 60 years of Palestinian dispossession. At a special meeting to commemorate that event, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) reiterated the permanent responsibility of the United Nations towards the question of Palestine until it was resolved in all its aspects in accordance with international law, and urged the international community to continue its support for the Middle East peace process.

The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs in the Occupied Territories reported to the General Assembly on the situation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, working under increasingly difficult circumstances, continued to provide education, health and social services to over 4 million Palestinians living in and outside camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, as well as in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

In Lebanon, marked progress was made in returning the country to stability and reconciliation.

An agreement among Lebanese political leaders was reached on 21 May that led to the election of General Michel Sleiman as President of Lebanon, the formation of a Government of national unity and the launching of a national dialogue. Despite the improved political climate, however, the country's stability remained fragile and was threatened by a number of serious security incidents involving Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias. Progress towards a permanent ceasefire and long-term solution between Israel and Lebanon remained elusive.

The United Nations International Independent Investigation Commission continued to investigate the 14 February 2005 assassination of former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafik Hariri and 22 others. The Security Council extended the Commission's mandate until February 2009 to allow for a smooth transition and handover to the Special Tribunal for Lebanon, which was to begin its work in March 2009.

The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) continued to cooperate closely with the Lebanese Armed Forces in consolidating the strategic military and security environment in southern Lebanon. UNIFIL's mandate was extended in August for another 12 months. Also during the year, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights. The United Nations Truce Supervision Organization continued to assist UNIFIL and UNDOF in their tasks.

Peace process

Political developments

In 2008, the Middle East peace process, revived in November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 445] at the Annapolis Conference in Maryland, United States, took centre stage as bilateral and multilateral efforts continued to find a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Both the General Assembly and the Security Council reaffirmed their support for the peace process, and called on the parties to fulfil their obligations under the road map, as stated in the Annapolis Joint Understanding [ibid., p. 446].

Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert and Palestinian Authority (PA) President Mahmoud Abbas met for bilateral negotiations on 8 and 27 January, 7 and 13 April, 5 May, 2 June, 13 July, 6 and 31 August, and 16 September. In addition, negotiations within the Annapolis framework were held by a joint steering committee headed by Israel's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Tzipi Livni, and the Palestinian Chief Negotiator, Ahmed Qurei. Despite intensive efforts, the goal of a peace settlement by the end of the year was not reached, but the parties remained committed to continuing their confidential bilateral negotiations, to which the international community pledged its ongoing support.

Representatives of the Middle East Quartet (European Union, Russian Federation, United Nations, United States), who continued to monitor the political and economic situation in the Middle East and the bilateral Israeli-Palestinian negotiations, met several times throughout the year, joined by Quartet Representative Tony Blair, former Prime Minister of the United Kingdom.

The Security Council discussed the situation in the Middle East, including the Palestine question, at meetings held on 22 January [meeting 5824 & Res.1], 30 January [meeting 5827], 26 February [meeting 5846], 1 March [meeting 5847], 25 March [meeting 5859 & Res.1], 23 April [meeting 5873], 28 May [meeting 5899], 27 June [meeting 5927], 22 July [meeting 5940 & Res.1], 20 August [meeting 5963], 18 September [meeting 5974], 26 September [meeting 5983], 22 October [meeting 5999], 25 November [meeting 6022], 3 December [meeting 6030], 16 December [meeting 6045], 18 December [meeting 6049 & Res.1] and 31 December [meeting 6060]. During those meetings, the Council was briefed by Secretariat officials on the peace process and developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, especially the precarious situation in the Gaza Strip. On 18 December, the Council adopted a resolution declaring its support for the negotiations initiated at Annapolis.

Occupied Palestinian Territory

Although Israeli-Palestinian negotiations within the framework of the Annapolis peace process gathered momentum in 2008, the situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip remained volatile. Israel and Palestine brought to the attention of the Secretary-General and the Security Council President information on attacks committed by both sides throughout the year [A/ES-10/409-S/2008/8 & Corr.1; A/ES-10/410-S/2008/23; A/62/647-S/2008/24; A/ES-10/411-S/2008/35; A/62/667-S/2008/55; A/62/673-S/2008/72; A/62/674-S/2008/73; A/ES-10/412-S/2008/81; A/62/685-S/2008/86; A/62/688-S/2008/90; S/2008/131; A/62/710-S/2008/132; A/ES-10/413-S/2008/144; A/ES-10/414-S/2008/149;

A/ES-10/415-S/2008/150; A/62/735-S/2008/169; S/2008/189; A/62/770-S/2008/209; A/62/797-S/2008/233; A/ES-10/417-S/2008/256; S/2008/261; A/62/812-S/2008/269; A/62/820-S/2008/277; A/ES-10/418-S/2008/282; A/62/839-S/2008/311; A/62/840-S/2008/316; A/62/843-S/2008/328; A/ES-10/419-S/2008/365; A/62/857-S/2008/367; S/2008/420; S/2008/430; A/ES-10/420-S/2008/404; A/ES-10/421-S/2008/421; A/ES-10/425-S/2008/689; A/ES-10/426-S/2008/717; A/ES-10/427-S/2008/768; S/2008/807; S/2008/814; S/2008/816; A/ES-10/428-S/2008/819; A/ES-10/429-S/2008/828; A/ES-10/430-S/2008/835; A/ES-10/429-S/2008/828].

The deteriorating humanitarian and security situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly the escalation of violence in the Gaza Strip, was discussed by the Security Council throughout the year. A number of third parties, among them Cuba on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) [A/62/652-S/2008/28, A/62/665-S/2008/47, S/2008/57, A/62/672-S/2008/70, A/62/715-S/2008/152, A/63/571-S/2008/735, A/63/673-S/2009/13], the European Union [S/2008/841], Iran [S/2008/790, S/2008/817, S/2008/845], Jordan [S/2008/818], Malaysia [S/2008/37], and Pakistan on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference [A/62/693-S/2008/96, A/62/731, S/2008/153], also expressed concern about the situation in the Occupied Territory and the events in Gaza.

Political and security situation

The beginning of 2008 was marked by a serious and rapid deterioration in the security situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, especially in the Gaza Strip. On 4 [A/ES-10/409-S/2008/8], 15 [A/ES-10/410-S/2008/23] and 21 January [A/ES-10/411-S/2008/35], Palestine complained to the Security Council President that the Occupied Palestinian Territory had begun the year under increasing assault by Israel, with lethal raids and attacks against towns in the Gaza Strip, and air missile attacks on 2 and 3 January, killing some 23 Palestinians and wounding many others. Ten days later another 37 Palestinians were killed, including children. Palestine said that, even as they engaged in direct bilateral negotiations in the fragile peace process, Israel intensified its military campaign, spreading more death, destruction and terror among the civilian population, particularly in the Gaza Strip. In addition, Israel intensified its closure of the Occupied Palestinian Territory by sealing all border crossings, preventing the delivery of food supplies since 18 January, and persisted with the reduction of fuel supplies to the Gaza Strip, cutting off fuel to the main power plant. Such collective punishment threatened to exacerbate the humanitarian crisis and was hastening the deterioration of the situation on the ground. In response, Israel, on 15 January

[A/62/647-S/2008/24], said that it would not stand by when its citizens were under attack, and reserved the right to defend itself from armed attacks. Since June 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 441], when Hamas took control of Gaza, more than 1,000 Qassam rockets and mortar shells had been fired and Hamas and other Palestinian groups continued their quest to murder Israelis and destroy Israel. Those acts were indicative of the daily dangers facing Israeli civilians, particularly those living near the Gaza Strip, and the two acts of terrorism that took place on the same day reminded that Palestinian terrorism remained the greatest obstacle to peace and security in the region. The Palestinian leadership had to stop the violence, dismantle the terrorist infrastructure and the cycle of impunity, and bring terrorists to justice.

Replying to a 17 January 2008 letter [A/62/652-S/2008/28] from Cuba on behalf of the NAM Coordinating Bureau condemning Israel's recent military assaults against Palestinian civilians in the Gaza Strip, Israel stated, on 28 January [A/62/667-S/2008/55], that putting blame on Israel demonstrated a failure to understand the realities on the ground. Palestinian terrorism, stewarded by Hamas, made security measures a necessity. Hamas fired at border-crossings, forcing closures and hampering Israeli and international efforts to deliver humanitarian aid and relief. Recently, Hamas allegedly attempted to smuggle explosives and weapons material into Gaza, using humanitarian convoys, and diverted fuel from domestic generators to produce Qassam rockets. Israel believed that responsible members of the international community could play a constructive role by supporting the bilateral process between Israel and the PA. That meant taking a balanced approach rather than a one-sided stance as the NAM statement reflected.

On 21 January [A/62/655], Israel charged that negotiations with the Palestinians had been met with an escalation of Palestinian violence and terrorist activity, specifically by Hamas terrorists who controlled the Gaza Strip. While Israel worked to facilitate humanitarian assistance, Palestinian terrorists did everything to thwart those efforts and provoke Israeli reactions. Since June 2007, Israel had permitted more than 9,000 Palestinians to enter Israel to seek medical treatment, while Hamas had fired over 1,500 rockets and mortars.

Security Council consideration (January). Speaking at an emergency meeting of the Security Council on 22 January [meeting 5824], convened in response to a request by Saudi Arabia on behalf of the Group of Arab States [S/2008/31], the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, B. Lynn Pascoe, reported that the crisis in the Gaza Strip and southern Israel had escalated dramatically since 15 January, when the Israeli Defence Force (IDF) entered the Gaza Strip and engaged Hamas militants in a heavy battle. The precursor to that escalation lay in daily rocket and mortar attacks on Israeli civilian residential areas by several militant groups from Gaza and regular IDF military attacks on and into Gaza. During that week, over 150 rockets and mortar attacks were launched at Israel, injuring 11 Israelis, while IDF launched 8 ground incursions, 15 air strikes and 10 surface-to-surface missiles, killing 42 Palestinians and injuring 117, among them civilians. This revealed the ever-present potential for the Annapolis process to be undermined by the deterioration of the situation on the ground. Less than two weeks earlier, the parties began negotiations on core issues, and United States President George W. Bush had visited the region to underline his commitment to assisting them in reaching a peace treaty in 2008 and implementing the first phase of the road map presented to the parties by the Quartet in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 464] and endorsed by the Security Council [ibid., p. 472].

The Secretary-General had appealed for an immediate end to the violence and stressed the responsibility of all parties to adhere to their obligations under international humanitarian law and not to endanger civilians. Indiscriminate rocket and mortar firing towards civilian population centres and crossing points was unacceptable, Mr. Pascoe said; such attacks terrorized Israeli communities near Gaza, particularly in the town of Sderot, endangered humanitarian workers at crossing points, a regular occurrence well before Israel's disengagement, and caused civilian casualties, damage, school closures and high levels of post-traumatic stress disorders. Over 100,000 Israelis lived within range of standard Qassam rocket fire.

The Gaza crossings remained largely closed since the Hamas takeover. To bring about a cessation of rocket fire, Israelis had tightened restrictions on crossings into Gaza, except for imports to meet minimal humanitarian needs. Compared with the first half of 2007, Gaza's imports had dropped 77 per cent, and exports by 98 per cent. Most Palestinians could not exit Gaza, and large UN construction projects were frozen because of the unavailability of building materials. On 18 January 2008, as rocket fire intensified, Israel imposed a comprehensive closure of the Gaza Strip, halting the import of fuel, food and medical and relief items. The shut-down of the Gaza power plant left every area in Gaza, except Rafah, with power cuts of 8 to 12 hours a day, and approximately 40 per cent of the population without access to running water. Thirty million litres of raw sewage were pumped into the Mediterranean Sea owing to the breakdown of equipment.

The United Nations was actively involved, through interventions of the Secretary-General, the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, Robert H. Serry, and the UNRWA Commissioner-General, Karen Koning AbuZayd, in seeking an urgent easing of the blanket closure of Gaza. Israel reopened two crossings for fuel and the delivery of humanitarian supplies by international organizations, but the humanitarian situation was still extremely fragile as the entry of commercial humanitarian supplies was still not permitted. Mr. Pascoe reiterated the United Nations' commitment to the welfare of the civilian population affected by the conflict. The work being performed in Gaza by UN agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) was one of the few things that stood between the existing crisis conditions and an even more dramatic deterioration of the situation. The United Nations would continue to ensure that civilians were protected and assisted, whatever the political environment.

At the Council's 30 January meeting [meeting 5827], Mr. Pascoe said that the past month underscored the gap between the aspirations of the political process and the grim realities of the ground. Continued efforts to progress along the Annapolis track were overshadowed by an intensification of violence in Gaza and southern Israel, combined with periods of total closure of the Gaza Strip and increased humanitarian suffering and violations of human rights. Mr. Pascoe noted that President Bush had stressed that the point of departure for permanent status negotiations was an end to the occupation that began in 1967 [YUN 1967, p. 177], and that he had made a number of public observations regarding borders, refugees, Jerusalem and security. He had also issued calls for both sides to fulfil their commitments under the road map, including removal of outposts and a settlement freeze, and action against violence and terrorism.

Since his 22 January briefing, Mr. Pascoe added, there had been significant developments in the crisis in Gaza. On 23 January, Palestinian militants destroyed entire sections of the border fence at the Rafah crossing with Egypt, and hundreds of thousands of Gazans crossed the border. Following efforts by Egyptian security forces to close the border on 25 January, Hamas had toppled additional sections of the border fence. A number of Egyptian security personnel sustained injuries when fired upon by Palestinian militants, but they exercised restraint and the situation remained calm. By 29 January, shops in the border area in Egypt had largely run out of goods, and Egyptian forces resealed the border.

From 18 January, when Israel imposed a comprehensive closure, to 29 January, only 32 truckloads of goods had entered Gaza, compared to a daily average of 93 trucks during the first two weeks of 2008 and 250 trucks before June 2007. There was a backlog of some 224 trucks of UNRWA, the World Health Organization (WHO) and the World Food Programme

(WFP). Fuel imports from Israel resumed on 22 January, although due to the level of supply, electricity cuts would continue. Some water wells were functioning again, but according to the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), 40 per cent of Gazans still had limited access to safe water.

The crisis added new urgency to the PA proposal to operate the Gaza crossings. The Secretary-General supported that proposal and welcomed the recent Arab League and European Council resolutions in that respect, as well as the diplomatic efforts under way. Mr. Pascoe called on all parties to work urgently towards the controlled reopening of the crossings for both humanitarian reasons and commercial flows, which should include materials and equipment to enable UN re-housing and rubble removal projects to resume. The United Nations stood ready to assist efforts to implement the PA's proposals in any way it could.

Mr. Pascoe said that 108 Palestinians had been killed and 229 injured in January. There were also a number of violent incidents in the West Bank, including in occupied East Jerusalem, where Palestinian militants attacked Israeli border police and religious seminary students. Three Israelis were killed and 24 injured by Palestinian militants. IDF incursions into West Bank cities and towns continued on a regular basis. In early January, the entire city of Nablus was placed under a three-day curfew.

On 30 January, Israel's Supreme Court declared legal the reductions of fuel and electricity supplies to Gaza, effectively approving the Government's 19 September 2007 decision [YUN 2007, p. 444] to impose sanctions on the Gaza Strip in response to continued rocket and mortar fire on Israel. Mr. Pascoe noted that the level of violence had reduced significantly during the past week, but he remained concerned that 77 rockets and mortars had been fired by Palestinian militants in that time and that IDF had carried out four incursions and air strikes on Gaza.

Communications. On 2 January [A/62/629-S/2008/3], Israel called the international community's attention to the fate of Israeli soldier, Corporal Gilad Shalit. Since his capture by Palestinian militants on 25 June 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 510], there had been no verification of his health or condition.

On 24 January [A/62/661-S/2008/42], Iran requested relevant UN agencies to take immediate measures to provide the Palestinian people in the Gaza Strip with basic goods and services. On 30 January [S/2008/57], Cuba protested the Security Council's rejection of NAM's request to participate in its deliberations. On 31 January [S/2008/62], Cuba responded to what it called fallacious remarks against NAM made by Israel during the Council debate.

Security Council consideration (February). On 26 February [meeting 5846], Mr. Serry, the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process and the Secretary-General's Personal Representative to the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and the Palestinian Authority, reported to the Council that Israeli Foreign Minister Livni and Palestinian lead negotiator Qurei met on a continuous basis, while President Abbas and Prime Minister Olmert continued their fortnightly meetings. Mr. Serry also met United States General William Fraser—appointed to lead United States efforts to monitor implementation of phase I of the road map in accordance with the Annapolis Joint Understanding—during his first visit to the region, offered full UN support to the United States-led monitoring process and looked forward to regular Quartet consultation on it.

John Holmes, the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, briefed the Council on his visit to the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Israel from 14 to 18 February. Mr. Holmes said he found the conditions for the people of Gaza grim and miserable, as eight months of severe restrictions on the movement of goods and people had taken a heavy economic and social toll, in addition to years of difficulty and economic decline. The consequences were increasingly severe. Almost 80 per cent of the population was receiving food aid as most industry and agriculture had collapsed, raising unemployment and poverty to new heights. Vulnerability to disease was rising, notably among children who made up more than half of the Gaza population.

The effective Israeli isolation of Gaza was not justified, Mr. Holmes stated, in spite of the provocation and illegality of the continuing firing of rockets by Hamas, whose physical and psychological damage to the population in Sderot he had witnessed during his mission. The isolation of Gaza amounted to collective punishment and did not appear to have the desired effect, either in halting the rockets or in weakening Hamas' position among the Gaza people. Meanwhile, the consequences for civilians on both sides were dramatic. The fundamental principles of distinction between combatants and non-combatants and of proportionality in attacks during the conduct of hostilities had to be respected by all sides.

The situation in Gaza was not sustainable and was extremely damaging to the prospects for the peace process, and only political efforts could change that dynamic. Meanwhile, Mr. Holmes said he had pressed the Israeli Government and the PA to ensure that more humanitarian and other goods were allowed into Gaza on a more predictable and systematic basis. He had also made the same message clear to Hamas. That meant reopening the crossings and establishing better mechanisms to identify and address the fundamental needs of the population. There were some indications that the Israeli authorities were willing to respond positively to his requests that the materials necessary for the resumption of $213 million worth of frozen humanitarian projects in sanitation, housing, education and health be allowed into Gaza and that spares and equipment for medical and sanitation services be given priority. The Palestinian Prime Minister's proposals for the reopening of the key Karni crossing—the only one with adequate infrastructure for processing large quantities of goods—deserved support, and a properly negotiated role was necessary for the Rafah crossing; one that did not give credence to the idea that Israel could hand over its responsibilities for Gaza to Egypt or any other State or authority. Arrangements to ensure proper screening for goods passing in both directions through the crossings, in order to meet Israel's security concerns, should be possible, with appropriate international support.

Conditions of life in the West Bank were better than those in Gaza, Mr. Holmes observed, but the situation there was of no less concern. The construction of the barrier, the steady expansion of settlements and the 580 separate checkpoints and blockages within the West Bank fragmented communities and seriously impaired the access of tens of thousands of people to their lands and to essential services, especially medical services. Severe movement restrictions affected economic growth, increased poverty and food insecurity and reduced health standards, thus further threatening the viability of a future Palestinian State.

In Mr. Holmes' view, the disconnect between the deteriorating realities on the ground in Gaza and the West Bank, as well as in Sderot, and the hopes and aims of the continuing peace talks, seemed almost total and risked making a mockery of the readiness of the international community to invest $7.7 billion in the economic development of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. As the Special Coordinator had stressed, unless that chasm was bridged quickly and the humanitarian indicators began to rise, the chances of success in the peace talks might be fatally undermined. Notwithstanding all the difficulties, Mr. Holmes concluded, the humanitarian community would continue to respond to the moral imperative of saving and improving lives and preserving human dignity. UNRWA and other agencies, as well as NGOs working in Gaza, were doing a heroic job under difficult and dangerous circumstances.

Security Council consideration (March). Opening the Council's emergency session on 1 March [meeting 5847], convened on the request by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [S/2008/142], the Secretary-General reported an alarming escalation of violence in Gaza and southern Israel during the preceding week, and a terrible civilian death toll. Some 117 rockets had been fired from Gaza at civilian centres in southern Israel, as far north as the city of Ashkelon. According to press reports and Israeli Government sources, those rockets were not home-made Qassams, but of advanced Katyusha-like design, allegedly smuggled into Gaza when the border with Egypt was breached. During the same period, IDF attacked Gaza from air and by land, killing an estimated 90 Palestinians and causing heavy property damage. All UNRWA schools were closed and many families were trapped inside their houses by the violence, unable to obtain medical aid or reach safety.

The Secretary-General condemned Palestinian rocket attacks as acts of terrorism and called for their immediate cessation. While recognizing Israel's right to defend itself, he condemned the disproportionate and excessive use of force that had killed and injured so many civilians, including children, and called on Israel to cease such attacks, comply with international humanitarian law and exercise the utmost restraint. Incidents in which civilians were killed or injured should be investigated and accountability ensured.

Concerned at the possibility of escalating violence, the Secretary-General offered UN support for all efforts to end it and bring about a period of calm, and called on all parties to step back from the brink of even deeper and more deadly clashes. He was also concerned at the impact of those developments on the negotiation process, and called on the international community, important stakeholders and Security Council members to exercise their influence on the parties to stop the violence and allow humanitarian relief.

Addressing the Council again on 25 March [meeting 5859], the Secretary-General said that the process was too important to be allowed to lose momentum through inaction or indifference, or to be overwhelmed by violence.

Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs Pascoe regretted that the reporting period had seen major escalations of violence: heavy Israeli air and land military assault in Gaza; the firing of over 390 rockets and mortars at Israel, including longer-range rockets; an attack on a Jewish school in West Jerusalem; IDF operations targeting alleged militants throughout the West Bank; and clashes between the IDF and protesting Palestinians in West Bank cities, including East Jerusalem. In total, 124 Palestinians, among them 36 children, were killed in IDF operations, and 359 injured, while Palestinian militants killed 13 Israelis, including 4 children, and injured 55. Tensions remained high, and although there was an observable reduction of violence in and around Gaza, violence had spread to Jerusalem and the West Bank. The United Nations supported Egyptian efforts to bring about a cessation of violence, particularly in Gaza, and to facilitate a gradual reopening of crossings into Gaza in coordination with the parties. All parties were urged to cooperate with those efforts and ensure that legitimate traffic into and out of Gaza at all crossing points took place and concerns about alleged smuggling were addressed.

Although the volume of goods entering the Gaza Strip had improved, the humanitarian situation remained grave. Shortages continued in the health sector, and sanitation authorities had dumped 60,000 cubic metres of raw and partially treated sewage into the sea. Fuel shortages prevented 63 per cent of Gaza's regular fishing trips, further exacerbating the dire socio-economic scenario. Food insecurity increased as salaries dried up, and at least 50,000 additional beneficiaries were added to food assistance distribution lists.

In the West Bank, 580 IDF-imposed obstacles continued to block Palestinian movement. Restrictions, which were at the root of Palestinian economic decline, continued despite PA security efforts. Action to ease closure inside the West Bank was essential if the Palestinian economy was to develop as the basis for a viable Palestinian State.

Israeli settlement activity continued, including in East Jerusalem. The PLO raised concerns about Israeli archeological excavations bordering the Haram Al-Sharif/Temple Mount, and about alleged plans to bring more Israeli settlers to East Jerusalem. Israel's failure to cease its settlement activity—including natural growth—or to dismantle the outposts erected after March 2001 was contrary to the road map. The Secretary-General made public his concerns that urgent action had to be taken on that issue. Construction work on the barrier continued within occupied Palestinian territory, and the number of house demolitions in the West Bank had noticeably increased. Since the beginning of the year, over 100 structures—at least half of them residential—had been demolished, displacing nearly 400 Palestinians.

Mr. Pascoe said that there was little to report about the state of the bilateral negotiations, reflecting the confidentiality being maintained, which enabled Israeli and Palestinian leaders to be candid in their discussions. While those negotiations had been suspended for a period by Palestinian President Abbas due to the significant Palestinian casualties in Gaza, meetings between the heads of the two negotiating teams had resumed and the work of the technical groups formed between the parties was being pursued. Palestinian Prime Minister Salam Fayyad and a senior Israeli Ministry of Defence official attended the first trilateral meeting on monitoring the implementation of phase I road map commitments, hosted by General Fraser.

The United Nations supported the reform efforts of Prime Minister Fayyad's Government. A recent International Monetary Fund (IMF) mission confirmed that, despite the difficult environment, impressive financial reform measures had been taken. The Palestinian Development Plan was being finalized and would be shared with the international community to enlist support. Efforts to reform, train and equip the Palestinian security forces in the West Bank continued, and Palestinian security forces had undertaken operations to disarm and arrest militants. However, more work had to be done by the PA to reassert law and order across the West Bank and meet its road map obligations to combat terrorism effectively; if those obligations were to be met, greater Israeli-PA security cooperation was essential.

The Quartet continued to be in close contact at the principal and envoy levels. The United Nations supported ongoing discussions over the idea of a renewed international meeting to be held in Moscow, and continued to stress the vital role of Arab States in support of the peace process, the central importance of the 2002 Arab Peace Initiative [YUN 2002, p. 415], and the ultimate need for a comprehensive regional peace.

Security Council consideration (April). At the Security Council's 23 April meeting [meeting 5873], Angela Kane, Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, reported that there had been major episodes of violence, especially in and around Gaza, which had also witnessed heightened humanitarian distress, while conditions in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, had not significantly improved. During the reporting period, 69 Palestinians, including 15 children, were killed in IDF operations and 95 were injured. Six Israelis were killed by Palestinian militants and 27 injured. Some 70 rockets and mortars were fired at Israel or at crossing points. Hamas and other militant organizations also staged attacks against crossing points between Gaza and Israel, which were the only outlets for international humanitarian assistance. Alarmed at the prospects of a further intensification of violence, with its implications for civilians and the security of all parties, the United Nations supported and encouraged Egyptian efforts to achieve calm in Gaza leading to a reopening of crossings, as well as to ensure security along the border. It also urged all parties to work with Egypt, and regional States with influence to work for calm.

Following a trilateral meeting between United States Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, Palestinian Prime Minister Fayyad and Israeli Defence Minister Ehud Barak on 30 March, Israel announced measures to ease conditions in the West Bank, among them the opening of additional PA police stations, approval of delivery of equipment to Palestinian security forces, an additional 5,000 permits for Palestinian construction workers in Israel, and the passage of regional and international business figures to a planned investment conference to be convened by Prime Minister Fayyad in Bethlehem from 21 to 23 May. Israel also announced its intention to remove obstacles in the West Bank, and subsequently reported that it had removed 61 of them. UN staff on the ground confirmed that 44 had been removed. The United Nations urged further and more substantive progress to ease restrictions, as envisaged in the 2005 Agreement on Movement and Access [YUN 2005, p. 519], as that was vital to Palestinian economic revival.

Tenders and construction permits for hundreds of housing units in Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory were announced, and construction work on the barrier continued, in deviation from the 1949 Armistice Demarcation Line (Green Line) [YUN 1948–49, p. 184] and contrary to the 2004 Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) [YUN 2004, p. 452]. Restrictions on UN operations increased in the West Bank, with the installation of Israeli civilian police checkpoints, causing significant delays and security concerns. Twenty incidents of violence between settlers and Palestinians during March were reported in the southern West Bank alone. Palestinian security forces in the West Bank pursued militants and criminal elements during the reporting period. Some militants were granted amnesty, pursuant to PA-Israel understandings. A newly trained battalion of Palestinian security forces was expected to be deployed and efforts to increase national security planning, reform and train security services, and strengthen all aspects of the rule of law needed to continue, with support by international partners.

Efforts to advance the political process continued through direct bilateral negotiations. The Quartet principals were to meet in London on 2 May, on the margins of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee meeting assessing progress in Palestinian institutional and economic development, to review all aspects of the Annapolis process and the situation on the ground. In the meantime, the Secretary-General and Special Coordinator Serry were working with the parties, regional partners and the Quartet to support the political process, encourage action to meet commitments and improve conditions on the ground, and address the grave humanitarian, political and security situation in and around Gaza.

Quartet meeting (May). Meeting in London on 2 May [SG/2137], the Quartet encouraged the parties in the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations to make every effort to realize the shared goal of an agreement by the end of the year on the establishment of a Palestinian State, and called on the international community to remain constructively engaged in support of that goal and an end to the conflict. It emphasized the importance of visible progress on the ground to build confidence and create an atmosphere supportive of negotiations. The Quartet welcomed the steps taken by both sides in the wake of the trilateral meeting between United States Secretary of State Rice, Palestinian Prime Minister Fayyad and Israeli Defence Minister Barak, and stressed the urgent need for rapid and continued implementation of those and previous commitments to improve conditions on the ground. While noting some positive steps taken, including the removal of roadblocks and an outpost by Israel, as well as improved security performance by the PA, the Quartet stressed that much more remained to be done to improve the situation on the ground, change the conditions of life in the West Bank and keep the political process on track. In that context, it supported Quartet Representative Tony Blair, and underscored the need for donor coordination. The Quartet backed the planned Bethlehem Conference on Private Sector Investment (21–23 May), as well as the parties' agreement to improve security and economic conditions in Jenin, which it felt could be a model for progress. Noting the importance of justice sector reform, it looked forward to the upcoming June meeting in Berlin to promote and coordinate donor assistance in that area.

The Quartet called on both sides to fulfil their obligations under the road map and refrain from any steps that could undermine confidence, or prejudice the outcome of negotiations. In that context, it called on Israel to freeze its settlement activity, including natural growth, and to dismantle outposts erected since March 2001. The PA should also fight terrorism and accelerate steps to rebuild and refocus its security apparatus; both sides should increase cooperation in that respect and facilitate the delivery of security assistance to the PA.

Looking forward to a productive meeting of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee, the Quartet encouraged all parties to support Palestinian institutional capacity-building and economic development, and called on donors to follow through on pledges made at the December 2007 Paris Donors' Conference [YUN 2007, p. 446]. Emphasizing the crucial role of Arab States in support of the peace process, and the importance of the 2002 Arab League peace initiative [YUN 2002, p. 415], the Quartet encouraged Arab States to fulfil their political and financial roles in support of the process begun at the Annapolis Conference.

The Quartet also discussed the proposed international meeting in Moscow to lend support to the parties in their negotiations and efforts on the ground. It authorized its envoys to continue to facilitate the achievement of those goals, and reaffirmed its commitment to a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East based on Security Council resolutions

Communications. Underscoring its commitment to the bilateral negotiations, Israel, on 24 March [S/2008/189], stressed that Palestinian terrorism remained the greatest obstacle to peace and security and called on the Palestinian leadership to stop the violence, dismantle the terrorist infrastructure, end the cycle of impunity and bring the terrorists to justice. Israel remained committed to the bilateral process, and despite the escalation of rocket attacks, its leaders continued to meet with their Palestinian counterparts and move forward with negotiations. The first trilateral meeting with General Fraser, the PA and Israel took place the previous week, and the IDF Civil Administration hosted a one-day symposium with its Palestinian counterparts, bringing together, for the first time since 1998, all officials coordinating civilian and defence issues between Israel and the PA. On 18 April [S/2008/261], Israel reiterated its commitment to the bilateral process.

Security Council consideration (May). Addressing the Security Council on 28 May [meeting 5899], Mr. Serry noted that during the past month, the complex political, security, human rights and humanitarian crisis in Gaza and southern Israel had deepened. Four Israeli civilians were killed by Palestinian militants and at least 30 injured, while IDF operations killed at least 50 Palestinians, among them 11 children, and injured 207, including at least 22 children. Humanitarian conditions for the 1.5 million people in the Gaza Strip were increasingly grave. Approximately 5 per cent of the weekly average supply of petrol and 16 per cent of the weekly average of diesel entering Gaza prior to June 2007 were delivered during the reporting period, leading to a virtual cessation of vehicular traffic and of some UNRWA operations, including food distribution, for four working days. The Gaza power plant shut down entirely for two days due to the sporadic nature of import and delivery.

Gazans faced significant interruptions in their access to water, due to a lack of fuel and spare parts. Up to 80 million litres of raw and partially treated sewage continued to be discarded into the Mediterranean Sea every day, and an estimated 600 tons of rubbish accumulated in the streets daily, with attendant health risks. In May, the catch by fishermen was 50 per cent less than that of the same month the previous year, and meat shortages were compounded by the destruction of two chicken farms on 17 May during IDF operations. No exports had left Gaza for five months, and only 77 trucks during the six months before that.

The Rafah crossing to Egypt opened on an exceptional basis between 10 and 12 May, to allow 140 of the 1,700 patients seeking medical treatment and about 750 students and others to cross into Egypt. Some 550 Gaza residents also crossed back from Egypt.

Meanwhile Palestinian institutions in Gaza were more and more separated from the PA itself, and Hamas-Fatah tensions were increasingly evident. In addition, Salafist elements were suspected of attacks on cafes and other institutions associated with Christians in Gaza. The United Nations repeatedly made clear its concern that the situation in and around Gaza was unsustainable, and called for a different and more positive strategy for Gaza. In London, the Quartet threw its weight behind a new strategy to provide security for all Gazans, end all acts of terror, provide for the controlled and sustained opening of the Gaza crossings for humanitarian reasons and commercial flows, support the legitimate PA Government and work towards conditions that would permit implementation of the 2005 Agreement on Movement and Access. The United Nations also commended and supported the Egyptian effort to calm the violence and ease the situation on the ground, through contacts with representatives of Hamas and other groups in Gaza, and with the Israeli and Palestinian Governments.

Mr. Serry reported that a number of important political developments in the Middle East had taken place during the previous month, with the potential for lasting change, but they all remained fragile, as underlying sources of tension had to be addressed through further political progress and action on the ground. While comprehensive discussions were under way and the parties remained committed to the process, important gaps had to be overcome. United States Secretary of State Rice visited the region immediately after the 2 May Quartet meeting to push the Annapolis process forward, and President Bush underlined his support for the process during a subsequent trip. In the economic sphere, the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee, also meeting on 2 May, stressed that Israel had to enable Palestinian reform and economic revival, while the Palestinians had to continue their reform efforts, and regional and international players needed to continue providing concrete support. On 13 May, Quartet Representative Blair announced a package of measures coordinated with the parties to stimulate economic development, ease movement and access restrictions, develop 60 per cent of the West Bank in Area C and build Palestinian security capability and performance. The package also included measures to establish an economic and security zone around Jenin, which, if successful, could be replicated elsewhere.

Those measures held promise, Mr. Serry said, but much more remained to be done to improve conditions, implement recent commitments and fulfil road map obligations. Steps taken—such as continued efforts by Palestinian security forces to disarm and arrest militants—needed encouragement and support from all parties. He noted that Israel had approved the reopening of 20 Palestinian police stations, but IDF incursions continued in the West Bank, including in areas where Palestinian security forces were deployed. Additionally, Israel had not consented to the delivery of certain equipment to those forces. Construction in a majority of Israeli settlements continued, as did the building of settlement infrastructure in East Jerusalem and throughout the West Bank. Palestinian institutions in East Jerusalem remained closed by Israeli order, despite road map commitments, and hundreds of demolition orders remained pending against Palestinian structures, along with some 3,000 further orders in the remainder of the West Bank. The Israeli Government had undertaken to review them as part of Quartet Representative Blair's package for stimulating economic development.

Quartet meeting (June). At a 24 June meeting in Berlin [SG/2140], the Quartet, stressing the urgent need for tangible progress towards an agreement by the end of 2008 on the establishment of an independent and viable Palestinian State, and an end to the conflict, committed to supporting the parties in implementing the difficult decisions required to achieve those outcomes. It underscored the need for more visible progress on the ground to build confidence and support progress in the negotiations. Israel's removal of some significant West Bank checkpoints and the opening of a number of Palestinian police stations in Area B (which was under full Palestinian civil control and joint Israeli-Palestinian security control) represented a good step, but greater efforts were required to project a new reality, including through further steps improving access and movement. The Quartet noted the improvement in Palestinian security performance, including in Jenin, but stressed that continued efforts to fight terrorism and implement a more comprehensive security strategy were necessary for sustainable long-term improvement. It urged the parties to build on those efforts, fulfil all their obligations under the road map and refrain from any steps that could undermine confidence or prejudice the outcome of negotiations. The Quartet reiterated its concern at continuing settlement activity and called on Israel to freeze all such activity.

The Quartet endorsed the outcome of the Berlin Conference in Support of Palestinian Civil Security and the Rule of Law, which took place on 24 June on the invitation of Germany, and with the participation Prime Minister Fayyad, foreign ministers and representatives of over 40 countries and international organizations. With its focus on the Palestinian police and justice sector, the Quartet stated that the Conference provided a timely forum to refocus and direct international support efforts towards two key sectors of Palestinian state-building. It called for speedy implementation of projects agreed and robust donor support, and emphasized the importance of unobstructed delivery of security assistance to the PA.

Noting the dire budget situation facing the PA, the Quartet urged all donors to fulfil their pledges from the December 2007 Paris donors conference [YUN 2007, p. 446] and looked to the next Ad Hoc Liaison Committee meeting on 22 September to take stock of progress. It reaffirmed its support for the Quartet Representative and congratulated the PA on the success of the Palestine Investment Conference (Bethlehem, 21–23 May). It commended the close cooperation between Israel and the PA on that initiative and encouraged similar cooperation on short- and medium-term projects and private sector activities.

The Quartet expressed its continuing support for the Egyptian-brokered calm that came into effect on 19 June, urged that it be respected and extended, and expressed the hope that it would lead to improved security and humanitarian conditions for Israelis and Palestinians alike, and the restoration of normal civilian life in Gaza. As a matter of urgency, it tasked the Quartet Representative to develop and promote measures to improve conditions in Gaza.

The Quartet welcomed the 21 May announcement that indirect talks between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic had been launched with Turkey's facilitation, aimed at achieving peace in accordance with the 1991 Madrid terms of reference [YUN 1991, p. 221].

Security Council consideration (June). On 27 June [meeting 5927], the Director of the Asia and the Pacific Division in the Department of Political Affairs reported to the Security Council that, owing to Egypt's efforts over the past several months, a cessation of all acts of violence began on 19 June. The calm, which prevailed for several days, was broken on 24 June, when Palestinian militants fired one mortar and three rockets at Israel, injuring two Israeli civilians. Another rocket was fired from Gaza at Israel on 25 June, and two mortar shells on 27 June. In response, Israel closed the border crossings for three days. In the reporting period before the ceasefire, Palestinian militants launched 125 rockets and 149 mortars at Israel and Gaza crossings. Those attacks, as well as clashes with IDF soldiers operating in Gaza, resulted in the death of one Israeli civilian and the injury of 12 civilians and four IDF soldiers. On 12 June, direct mortar hits on the Erez crossing terminal caused significant damage and led to its closure for a number of days. The attack followed an explosion in Gaza caused by Palestinian militants, killing eight Palestinians, and injuring 40 others, including 21 children. Also prior to the ceasefire, IDF conducted 25 air strikes and a number of land incursions into the Gaza Strip. Thirty Palestinians, including at least six civilians, two of them children, were killed; 53 others, among them at least 25 civilians, five of them children, were injured. Conditions in Gaza were still grave, despite a 30 per cent increase in the number of truckloads of supplies into Gaza between 22 and 24 June and slightly increased fuel imports since mid-May.

The United Nations encouraged the parties to pursue discussions under Egypt's auspices to secure the release of Gilad Shalit [YUN 2006, p. 510]. A letter from Mr. Shalit to his parents was forwarded by Hamas to representatives of former United States President Jimmy Carter on 9 June, but the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) had still not been granted access to him after two years in captivity. The United Nations also hoped that the issue of Palestinian prisoners would be addressed. Measures to support the PA and the Palestinian economy in the West Bank should be intensified, including by donors fulfilling pledges for budgetary support and by Israel easing closures, and road map obligations should be acted upon, particularly an Israeli settlement freeze. Palestinian efforts on security performance and reform should continue and be supported.

Security Council consideration (July). On 22 July [meeting 5940], Mr. Pascoe reported to the Security Council that the security situation in Gaza and Israel had improved, as the Egyptian-mediated ceasefire had generally been upheld. During the reporting period, one Palestinian civilian was killed by IDF near the Gaza-Israel border, and two others were injured. Palestinian militants fired 7 rockets and 10 mortars at Israel, which did not result in casualties; no IDF air strikes or incursions were reported. Hamas communicated to the Gaza public its support for the calm, and detained individuals involved in firing mortars. However, 9 Palestinians were killed and 29 injured by internal violence, reckless handling of weaponry and tunnel collapses along the Gaza-Egyptian border.

The number of truckloads of supplies entering the Gaza Strip through the Sufa and Karni crossings increased by 54 per cent during the four weeks following the ceasefire, compared to the previous month. Imports of cement increased substantially, but the import of non-food commodities increased only slightly. The continued lack of raw materials and prohibition against exports precluded any significant economic recovery. Approximately 95 per cent of local industrial establishments remained closed.

On 17 July, Israeli officials informed their PA counterparts that they would increase the amount of fuel allowed into Gaza. However, between 27 June and 20 July, only 17 per cent of daily needs of petrol, 57 per cent of diesel, 40 per cent of cooking gas and 81 per cent of industrial gas requirements were met. The Gaza Electricity Company continued to operate at less than 70 per cent of its full capacity.

According to Mr. Pascoe, UN Special Coordinator Serry visited the Gaza Strip on 10 July to explore ways to resume stalled projects, including UN projects, as requested by the Quartet. The United Nations asked Israel to facilitate the resumption of priority projects as a matter of urgency. Prime Minister Olmert, in his discussions with the Secretary-General, undertook to consider that matter.

President Abbas continued wide-ranging consultations on a national dialogue to implement the Yemini initiative for Palestinian reunification. Both the Secretary-General and the Special Coordinator supported President Abbas' initiative for progress towards the reunification of the Gaza Strip and the West Bank within the framework of the legitimate PA. The League of Arab States (LAS) would have a leading role to play in facilitating such efforts.

As efforts continued to solidify the ceasefire in Gaza, it was critical to accelerate progress in the West Bank. In that connection, it was noted with concern that Israeli forces had stepped up their military operations throughout the West Bank since 19 June. IDF closed down and seized equipment of alleged Hamas-affiliated institutions in Nablus, including schools, medical centres, media outlets and civic associations. Israel outlawed 36 international NGOs, charging them with fundraising for Hamas. Israeli troops raided the Nablus municipality, arrested elected PA officials and ordered the closure of the Nablus main shopping mall. PA officials, including Prime Minister Abbas, criticized those operations as undermining the economy and the Authority's efforts to improve security in the West Bank. Palestinian security forces continued to impose law and order and disarm and arrest militants. The United Nations was concerned about the effects of Israeli raids on the efforts of Palestinian security forces to operate effectively in areas under their control.

On 2 July, three Israeli civilians, including two women, were killed and 30 others injured when a Palestinian from East Jerusalem using a bulldozer attacked vehicles in West Jerusalem. In the West Bank, three Palestinians were killed by IDF, and 136 others injured, including at least 22 children. Most of the injuries occurred during anti-barrier demonstrations. On three occasions since mid-June, Israeli settlers reportedly fired rockets towards the Palestinian villages of Burin, southwest of Nablus. On 12 July, Israeli police arrested a settler suspected of that attack. On 21 July, another rocket was fired from the settlement.

Construction activity in settlements across the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, continued. On 3 July it was reported that Defense Minister Ehud Barak approved the construction of a new building in the Beit Romano settlement in Hebron's old city. Across the West Bank, movement and access deteriorated slightly. Four significant obstacles removed during June were reinstalled by IDF in July, bringing the number of closure obstacles to 609. Meanwhile, Israel renovated the Wadi Nar, or Container, checkpoint controlling movement from the north to the southern part of the West Bank, rather than honouring its prior commitment to remove it.

Within the context of the Annapolis political process, Israeli Prime Minister Olmert and PA President Abbas met on 13 July on the margins of the Paris Summit for the Mediterranean, underscoring their determination to reach an agreement. However, significant gaps remained, and in discussions with both parties, the Secretary-General emphasized the need to press ahead with bilateral talks, with the goal of overcoming all outstanding differences. It was nevertheless encouraging that on 22 July, for the first time, Israeli President Shimon Peres hosted President Abbas in his residence in Jerusalem.

Communication. On 22 July, [S/2008/482], Israel submitted to the Security Council a written statement in addition to its remarks made before the Council. In the statement, Israel charged that the Council meetings on the Question of Palestine were detached from daily reality and served to feed the rhetoric that fuelled a business-as-usual mentality. If the vision of peace had not yet been turned into reality, it was not for lack of meetings in the Council, or lack of agreements or UN resolutions or international conferences. It was because there was still daily terrorism and violence and hatred. Israel was not asking for special treatment. Like any other country, it should be subject to criticism and debate on a fair and impartial basis. Israel had tried to engage the international community with openness and transparency. The Council held periodical briefings for Council members to hear updates from intelligence and military experts on the ground. However, even those briefings, which were vital and necessary to understand the real situation in the region, were not attended by all Council members for political reasons. All too often the finger was pointed at Israel without any consideration as to the whole picture.

Security Council consideration (August). Briefing the Security Council on 20 August [meeting 5963], Mr. Pascoe stated that Palestinian internal violence had increased considerably. One Israeli soldier died of injuries sustained on 11 July in East Jerusalem, and nine Israelis were reported injured. The Egyptian-mediated ceasefire in Gaza had largely held but remained fragile. Ten rockets and one mortar had been fired from Gaza into Israel without causing casualties, and there had been no IDF air strikes or incursions, although one Palestinian child had been injured by IDF shooting near the border. Due to the collapse of tunnels along the Gaza-Egypt border, 12 Palestinians had been killed and 34 injured. Over 25 tunnels had been closed as a result of Egyptian efforts against smuggling. The United Nations welcomed Israel's decision to release approximately 200 Palestinian prisoners as a goodwill gesture to President Abbas. However, Mr. Pascoe noted, the benefits of the ceasefire had not yet translated into any significant improvement in the living conditions of the people of Gaza. Further to the Secretary-General's discussions with Prime Minister Olmert in Paris in July on stalled UN projects in Gaza, Israeli authorities were considering allowing the import of additional quantities of construction materials for UN priority projects for housing, school construction and water and sanitation. The United Nations hoped for the early resumption of all its suspended projects in Gaza.

In the West Bank, three Palestinians, among them two children, had been killed and 185 injured, including 47 children. There had also been a rise in settler violence. Settlement activity continued across the West Bank, particularly in East Jerusalem, and tenders were announced for over 400 new settlements. On 10 August, two major checkpoints in the West Bank had been partially reopened to Palestinian traffic, leading to significant access improvements. However, the overall number of closures remained unchanged at 608, as some previously removed obstacles had been reinstalled.

The implementation of Quartet Representative Blair's May economic stimulation package advanced, as selected obstacles to movement had been eased, and a telecommunications contract was signed between Israel and the PA on 28 July, enabling a second mobile phone operator to launch in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. To achieve significant economic impact, all outstanding measures needed to be implemented rapidly and as originally negotiated.

Mr. Pascoe noted that Israeli-Palestinian negotiations were ongoing at both political and technical levels. On 6 August, Prime Minister Olmert met again with President Abbas, but it appeared that the gaps between the parties' positions remained. Mr. Pascoe reiterated the Secretary-General's call for them to make real progress in overcoming differences to reach the goal of an agreement by the end of the year, despite the political constraints. Those discussions took place against the background of the 30 July announcement by Prime Minister Olmert that he would not be seeking re-election as leader of the Kadima party and would therefore be stepping down as Prime Minister, but would remain in office until either a new Government was formed by the new party leader or after general elections were held.

Security Council consideration (September).

Appearing before the Security Council on 18 September [meeting 5974], Mr. Serry said that the ceasefire in Gaza continued to hold, as Hamas made efforts to prevent the launching of rockets and mortars into Israel and there was no reported IDF incursion or air strike. However, Israel responded to isolated rocket fire by closing crossings for a period. The humanitarian situation remained grim, given the continued closure and restricted movement into and out of the Gaza Strip. Imports decreased by 21 per cent compared with the preceding four weeks, and the import of all types of fuel remained below previous levels. UN priority projects remained stalled and the shortage of raw materials, combined with the total ban on exports, had kept more than 95 per cent of Gaza's industry closed. Hamas' actions compounded the problems facing Gazans, increasingly divorcing Palestinian institutions from the PA itself and interrupting basic service delivery. Palestinian interfactional violence during the reporting period resulted in the death of 14 people, including two children, and another 52 injured. Most of the casualties occurred on 15 and 16 September in Gaza City during armed clashes between security forces and militants affiliated with Hamas and members of one armed clan.

The only way to begin addressing the overall crisis and lay the basis for a two-State solution was for Gaza to be peacefully reunited with the West Bank, within the framework of the legitimate PA and in a manner that allowed the peace process to advance. In that context, Egypt started consultations with each Palestinian faction to formulate a proposal that could serve as a common national platform. Egypt's efforts were strongly supported at the LAS Foreign Ministers' meeting (Cairo, 9 September) and welcomed by the United Nations.

Mr. Serry told the Council that although bilateral negotiations between Israel and the PLO continued, no agreement had been reached on the core issues. The potential of those substantive discussions had to be built upon through the continuation of intensive negotiations. Notwithstanding the prevailing uncertainties surrounding the political process, there had been a gradual but systematic process of Palestinian self-empowerment in the West Bank, under the leadership of President Abbas and Prime Minister Fayyad. Although those efforts were imperfect and faced many obstacles, they reflected a determination to build the institutions of a future Palestinian State.

The PA continued to make real strides in implementing its security plan, which included action against militants in accordance with obligations under phase 1 of the road map. Further improvement of the security conditions in Hebron was a priority for the Palestinian Government. In pursuing its reform and development plan [YUN 2007, p. 446], the PA also made notable gains in other areas, including public finance and the initiation of microfinance projects.

As to Israeli settlement activity, the Secretary-General had repeatedly stated that it was contrary to the Fourth Geneva Convention as well as Israel's commitments under the road map and the Annapolis process. His repeated calls and those of the Quartet as a whole had not brought about significant action; rectifying that unacceptable situation should be the urgent priority of any new Israeli Government. Contrary to the road map, Palestinian institutions in East Jerusalem remained closed by Israeli order, and barrier construction continued around East Jerusalem and within the West Bank, in deviation from the Green Line, and contrary to the 2004 advisory opinion of the ICJ.

On 26 September [meeting 5983], the Council held an urgent meeting, in response to a request by Saudi Arabia on behalf of LAS [S/2008/615], to discuss the continued Israeli settlement activity which, Saudi Arabia said, in its opening statement, was clearly violating international law, UN resolutions and Israel's obligations under the road map and the Annapolis process.

Communication. On 26 September [S/2008/625], Cuba expressed regret over the Security Council's refusal to allow NAM to participate in its deliberations, calling the Council's decision an example of its customary lack of transparency.

Quartet statement (September). In a statement issued following its meeting in New York, on 26 September [SG/2143], the Quartet reaffirmed its support for the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations and commended the parties for their efforts. Recognizing that a meaningful and results-oriented process was under way, the Quartet called on the parties to make every effort to conclude an agreement before the end of 2008. It noted the significance of the Annapolis process and the importance of confidentiality for preserving its integrity, and underlined its commitment to the negotiations' irreversibility, as well as to the creation of an independent, democratic and viable Palestinian State in the West Bank and Gaza, living in peace and security alongside Israel, and an end to the conflict. The Quartet expressed its desire to see the continuation of negotiations, involving substantive discussions on all issues, including core issues without exception, in order to ensure the fulfilment of the Annapolis goals. It reiterated its call on all Palestinians to commit themselves to non-violence, recognition of Israel and acceptance of previous agreements and obligations, noting that restoring Palestinian unity based on PLO commitments would be an important factor in that process.

The Quartet emphasized the need for a renewed focus on improvements in the situation on the ground and stated that visible and tangible progress should accompany the negotiations. The Quartet commended the PA for the encouraging results of its efforts to reform the security sector, confront militias and terrorism, and enforce the rule of law in areas under its control, as well as Israeli measures to lift restrictions to access and movement. It encouraged further steps to ease conditions for Palestinian civilian life and economy. The parties should redouble their cooperative efforts on security, and expand the success in Jenin to other major centres in the West Bank. The international community, including regional partners, should support those efforts with targeted and coordinated assistance and through the continued efforts of the Quartet Representative. The Quartet called for speedy implementation of the outcome of the Berlin Conference and invited donors to fulfil the pledges made at the Paris Donor Conference [YUN 2007, p. 446], in line with the Palestinian Reform and Development Plan 2008–2010. It welcomed the 22 September statement of the Ad Hoc Liaison Committee reaffirming that economic progress in the Occupied Palestinian Territory was an essential part of bringing the Israeli-Palestinian conflict to an end, and recalling the importance of equitable burden-sharing.

The Quartet discussed the status of the parties' obligations under the road map as an integral part of the Annapolis follow-up. Concerned about the increasing settlement activity, it called on Israel to freeze such activity as it had a damaging impact on the negotiating environment and was an impediment to economic recovery, and to dismantle outposts erected since March 2001. It reiterated that the parties should avoid actions that undermined confidence and could prejudice the outcome of negotiations. Quartet principals condemned the rise in settler violence against Palestinian civilians, urging the enforcement of the rule of law without discrimination or exception. Likewise, it condemned acts of terrorism against Israelis, including rocket attacks from the Palestinian territories, and stressed the need for further Palestinian efforts to fight terrorism and dismantle the terror infrastructure, as well as foster an atmosphere of tolerance.

The Quartet commended Egypt for its effort to overcome Palestinian divisions and to reunite the West Bank and Gaza under the legitimate PA. It welcomed the continuing calm between Gaza and southern Israel, and hoped that it would result in further relief for the civilian population of Gaza, including the regular opening of the crossings for both humanitarian and commercial flows, and sustained peace on Israel's southern border. The Quartet expected the movement of persons and goods to be normalized in the coming months, as foreseen in the 2005 Agreement on Movement and Access [YUN 2005, p. 519], and supported the immediate resumption of stalled United Nations and other donor projects in Gaza to facilitate economic activity, reduce dependence on humanitarian assistance and restore links between Gaza and the West Bank.

Security Council consideration (October). The Egypt-brokered calm was by and large holding between Gaza and southern Israel, Mr. Pascoe noted in his statement before the Security Council on 22 October [meeting 5999], although incidents had taken place, including the firing of a rocket into the Negev on 21 October and the subsequent closure of border crossings. The movement of goods and people in and out of Gaza had not improved and construction projects, including those of the United Nations, remained on hold. The split between the West Bank and Gaza was having increasingly adverse effects. The strike of teachers continued to affect some 250,000 pupils, and the strike of health workers caused concern over the quality and timely provision of services.

The Egyptian-mediated process aimed at the reunification of Gaza and the West Bank within the framework of the legitimate PA was ongoing. Earlier in the month, Egyptian mediators completed a round of meetings with Palestinian factions, which had since received a draft proposal for consideration. President Abbas also continued regional consultations. The United Nations looked forward to all regional States lending their support to Egypt's efforts under the auspices of LAS, which was to meet at the Foreign Ministers' level in Cairo in November.

Bilateral contacts between Israel and the Palestinians continued, with meetings held between Israeli negotiators and Foreign Minister Livni and lead Palestinian negotiator Qurei on 23 September; between Presidents Abbas and Peres on 26 September in New York; and between advisers. In Israel, the process of political transition was ongoing, with President Peres commissioning newly elected Kadima Party leader Livni, on 21 September, to form a new Government. On 26 September, the Secretary-General convened a meeting of the Quartet principals at UN Headquarters, and on the same date, Quartet members and Arab League representatives discussed how to work together in the crucial period ahead in support of the Israeli-Palestinian process, Palestinian reunification and regional peace. They also reaffirmed the central importance of the Arab Peace Initiative [YUN 2002, p. 495].

The Ad Hoc Liaison Committee comprising the parties and key donors, as well as Quartet Representative Blair, who met (22 September) on the margins of the General Assembly, commended the efforts of Prime Minister Fayyad's Government to implement its reform and development agenda, and encouraged the continuation of ongoing security and institution-building efforts.

PA security efforts, in accordance with the road map, focused on deepening progress in the Jenin governorate, which Special Coordinator Serry visited on 22 October. Efforts were being extended to Hebron, where Palestinian security forces discovered a tunnel allegedly used by militants. The PA also made considerable progress in defining a strategy for developing the judicial sector, including the doubling of the number of judges and prosecutors.

Despite those efforts, the situation on the ground did not improve, as Israeli-Palestinian violence claimed the lives of seven Palestinians, two of them children, while injuring 116 Palestinians and 34 Israelis. No progress was made in the reporting period on Israel's key road map and Annapolis commitments. Settlement construction continued across the West Bank, including in East Jerusalem, and a majority of Palestinian Muslims had not been able to pray at the Al-Aqsa mosque during the month of Ramadan due to permit and access restrictions. The Secretary-General continued to call for an end to unilateral action in Jerusalem and reminded all parties that the status of the city remained an issue for permanent status negotiations.

Quartet meeting (November). In Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, on 9 November [SG/2145], the Quartet was briefed in a first-ever joint meeting with the parties by PA President Abbas and Israeli Foreign Minister Livni on the negotiating efforts since the Annapolis Conference. Over the past year they had engaged in direct, sustained and intensive bilateral negotiations, based on a joint work plan that included the establishment of more than 10 committees, not only on core issues, but on an array of other topics necessary to turn the two-State solution into a reality. The parties reached a number of mutual understandings on the principles governing the negotiating process, including the need for continuous, uninterrupted, direct, bilateral negotiations; the principle that nothing would be considered agreed until everything was agreed; and the need to reach a comprehensive agreement addressing all issues, rather than just announcing agreement on selected items in isolation. The parties remained committed to implementing their respective obligations under the road map, and to the agreed mechanisms for monitoring and judging its implementation, as well as to implementation of the future peace treaty being subject to implementation of the road map. President Abbas and Foreign Minister Livni asked that the international community continue to support the parties' efforts in the framework of the Annapolis process and that all States promote an environment conducive to peace, non-violence and the two-State solution. They urged political and economic assistance, especially in relation to institutional and security reform, capacity-building, economic development and the fulfilment of pledges to the legitimate Palestinian Government, which had accepted the Quartet principles and respected the PLO commitments. They asked the international community to redouble efforts to confront extremism, incitement, terrorism and intolerance, and stressed that, absent the joint request of the parties, third parties should not intervene in the bilateral negotiations.

The Quartet endorsed the goals set out by the parties and called upon all States to lend their diplomatic and political support. It renewed its call on relevant States and international organizations to assist in developing the Palestinian economy, maximizing resources available to the PA and contributing to Palestinian institution-building in preparation for statehood. The Quartet welcomed the deployment of Palestinian security services in the Hebron governorate as a sign of the progress resulting from increased security cooperation. It emphasized its determination to continue working with Israel and the Palestinian Government to facilitate access and movement, and an improvement in conditions on the ground in order to address urgent humanitarian needs, foster economic activity and improve the atmosphere of negotiations. The Quartet reiterated its call to the parties to fully implement their obligations under phase I of the road map, including the freeing of settlement activity and the dismantlement of the terrorism infrastructure.

Security Council consideration (November). At the 25 November Security Council meeting [meeting 6022], Mr. Pascoe noted that recent developments underscored the fact that the gap between the political tracks and the situation on the ground remained large. Israeli-Palestinian violence during the reporting period resulted in the deaths of 16 Palestinians, while injuring 122 others, mainly civilians. One Israeli was killed in a stabbing attack in Jerusalem, and 25 Israeli soldiers and civilians were injured during the period. The tahdiya, or period of calm, in Gaza and southern Israel, in effect since 19 June, was threatened by a number of violent incidents. Israel conducted a military incursion into Gaza on 4 November to destroy a tunnel allegedly used to abduct Israeli soldiers, and a number of smaller incursions followed. More than 123 rockets and 118 mortars were fired by Palestinian militants into Israel or at the crossings between Israel and Gaza. Between 4 and 23 November, Israel severely restricted the access of humanitarian workers and commercial and humanitarian goods to Gaza, causing UNRWA and WFP to suspend food aid. Fuel shortages, causing the Gaza power plant to shut down for more than 12 days, led to water rationing throughout the Gaza Strip, affecting approximately 600,000 people. Despite fuel deliveries, the Gaza power plant was still not working due to a technical malfunction and lack of spare parts.

Rocket fire decreased dramatically on 23 November and the following day, Israel reopened the Kerem Shalom crossing. After rocket-firing towards Ashkelon on the evening of 24 November, however, all crossings were closed again. Major news agencies and organizations protested to the Israeli Government that foreign and Israeli media had not been allowed entry for more than 14 days.

Mr. Pascoe stated that the joint meeting of the parties with the Quartet in Sharm el-Sheikh on 9 November was an important marker of the ongoing political process pursuant to the Annapolis Conference. Following their bilateral meeting at Sharm el-Sheikh, Prime Minister Olmert and President Abbas met in Jerusalem on 17 November, the same date of the announcement by Prime Minister Olmert of Israel's intention to release some 250 Palestinian prisoners as a gesture to President Abbas prior to the upcoming Muslim festival of Eid al-Adha.

Mr. Pascoe expressed regret that Israel and the Palestinians would likely fall short of their commitment made at Annapolis to reach an agreement by the end of the year. The parties stated that negotiations would continue uninterrupted, and their goal remained a comprehensive peace agreement addressing all issues, without exception. Furthermore, they recommitted to the implementation of their road map commitments, on which more urgent action was vital to ensure the credibility of the process.

Recent developments in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and in Israel underscored the large gap remaining between the political tracks and the situation on the ground, posing considerable obstacles to the path that lay ahead. Palestinians remained divided, and the rhetoric between Hamas and Fatah had intensified. The PLO Central Committee announced the election of Mahmoud Abbas as the President of the State of Palestine, but the Hamas leadership rejected that move. Developments on the ground remained the biggest challenge to building lasting peace.

The importance of the Arab Peace Initiative was widely discussed as a vital platform for reaching the goal of a comprehensive regional peace. The United Nations commended the efforts of King Abdullah of Saudi Arabia, which led to the convening of a high-level General Assembly meeting under the agenda item "Culture of Peace" on 13 November, attended by numerous leaders from the Middle East. In addition, the Secretary-General urged United States President-elect Barack Obama to engage early in the Middle East.

The Secretary-General expressed his concern over the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Gaza to Prime Minister Olmert and Foreign Minister Livni on 18 and 20 November, respectively. He restated his condemnation of rocket fire, but stressed that Israel had to uphold humanitarian principles. In public statements of 14 and 21 November, the Secretary-General urged Israel to facilitate freer movement of urgently needed humanitarian supplies and of UN personnel into Gaza, and emphasized that measures which increased the hardship and suffering of the civilians of Gaza were unacceptable and should cease immediately. He was pleased that some humanitarian supplies and fuel had been allowed into Gaza and expected Israel to resume facilitating regular deliveries of both. The United Nations was concerned about reports of human rights abuses in Gaza under the de facto Hamas regime, which had apparently strengthened its control, divorcing Gaza institutions from those of the PA.

Communications. On 25 November [A/63/572-S/2008/736], the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted a request by the Syrian President, as Chairman of the Arab Summit, that the United Nations prevail on Israel “to desist immediately from its immoral and inhuman practices in the Gaza Strip”.

Quartet statement (December). In a 15 December statement [SG/2147], the Quartet affirmed that a final treaty and lasting peace would be reached through simultaneous and mutually re-enforcing efforts on three tracks: negotiations; building the institutions of a Palestinian State, including facilitating economic development through an improvement of conditions on the ground; and implementation of the parties’ obligations under the road map, as stated in the Annapolis Joint Understanding [YUN 2007, p. 446].

The Quartet urged that the calm that came into effect on 19 June be respected and extended. It condemned the indiscriminate attacks on Israel and called for an immediate cessation of violence. The Quartet reiterated its call for Israel to allow into Gaza sufficient materials to facilitate the resumption of stalled UN and other donor projects and supported the efforts of the Secretary-General and Quartet Representative Blair in that regard.

The Quartet called on all States to demonstrate their support for the Annapolis process and their commitment to the two-State solution by contributing to an environment conducive to an end to the conflict. It noted that at the Paris Donor Conference [YUN 2007, p. 446], international donors had pledged unprecedented levels of support for the success of the Annapolis process, providing an essential element of stability as the process unfolded. The Quartet called on all States and international organizations to continue to provide economic assistance to the legitimate Palestinian Government in security reform, institution- and capacity-building, and economic development, and to fulfil their pledges. The Quartet welcomed the robust Israeli-Palestinian cooperation for the expansion of security and law and order in the West Bank, most notably in Jenin and Hebron, the successful deployment of the Palestinian security services to Hebron being the most recent demonstration of substantial progress. The Quartet urged the Palestinians to continue reforming the security services and dismantling terrorism infrastructure, and Israel to freeze all settlement activities and address the growing threat of settler extremism.

The Quartet offered its support for an intensification of diplomatic efforts towards a peaceful coexistence among all States in the region and a just, lasting and comprehensive Middle East peace, based on UN Security Council resolutions. In that context, it welcomed efforts to invigorate the Arab Peace Initiative as part of a comprehensive approach to resolving the Arab-Israeli conflict, and looked forward to the intensification of the Israeli-Syrian negotiations. In consultation with the parties, the Quartet supported the convening of an international meeting in Moscow in 2009.

Security Council consideration (December). Addressing the Council on 16 December [meeting 6045], the Secretary-General regretted that the peace agreement had not been concluded as originally envisioned and that there were still many hurdles to face, but noted that a serious process was under way. The Secretary-General reiterated his commitments to the goal of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region, based on Council resolutions, the principle of land for peace, the 1991 Madrid Conference terms of reference [YUN 1991, p. 221] and the 2002 Arab Peace Initiative [YUN 2002, p. 415].

United States Secretary of State Rice stated that the resolution before the Council built on the work of the international community through the Quartet. Firstly, the resolution confirmed the irreversibility of the bilateral negotiations and endorsed the parties’ brave efforts. There was no substitute for the Annapolis process, and stagnation was not an option. The Annapolis process had advanced under the leadership of President Abbas, Prime Minister Olmert and Foreign Minister Livni, and those advances had to be preserved and built upon. Secondly, the resolution reiterated the importance of fulfilling obligations under the road map. Neither party should undertake any activity that contravened road map obligations or prejudiced the final status negotiations. The United States’ view had been made very clear in that regard, especially in connection with settlement activity. At the same time, the PA had an absolute obligation to dismantle the infrastructure of terror in the territories, reform its security services and end incitement. Thirdly, the resolution underscored that peace would be built on mutual recognition, freedom from violence and terror, the two-State solution and previous agreements and obligations. The threat of extremism and terrorism posed by Hamas was a threat to the Annapolis process and to the fulfilment of legitimate Palestinian aspirations. Fourthly, the resolution emphasized that the solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict should be aligned with efforts towards broad regional peace. The Arab Peace Initiative was a historic proposal in that regard. Just as Arab States should reach out to Israel, so should Israel reach out to Arab States.

The Annapolis negotiations gave confidence that the goal of two independent and democratic States, Israel and Palestine, living in peace and security was not just a vision but a commitment of the parties and of the international community. The chosen path would finally bring Israel the peace and security that could only come from living side-by-side in reconciliation with its democratic neighbour, Palestine, and that path forward would finally give to the people of Palestine the dignity and humanity that could only come from living in an independent and sovereign State.

Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov of the Russian Federation, which co-sponsored the resolution, considered it essential to continue the negotiations while building on what had been achieved. Of particular importance were the resolution's provisions calling for the full implementation by both parties of their obligations under the road map. The text also underscored the crucial need to allow the Arab Peace Initiative to work effectively. Under the current circumstances, it was especially important to restore the territorial and political unity of the Palestinian national administration as quickly as possible, which was essential for strengthening the Israeli-Palestinian dialogue and ensuring the viability of future final arrangements in the framework of that dialogue. The Israeli and Palestinian parties faced a very complex problem that required political will and courage, qualities which the negotiators had shown, but progress was impossible without the active support of the international community. Russia, along with its partners, would take every step necessary to ensure that the international meeting on the Middle East, scheduled for 2009 in Moscow, would mark an important step forward and would serve to accelerate the process to reach an agreement, which was the goal of the Council's resolution.

Speaking before the Security Council on 18 December [meeting 6049], Mr. Serry observed that for the previous six weeks, the calm in Gaza had been gravely challenged, with heightened rhetoric and continued violence in recent days, an increase in rocket-firing and a resumption of Israeli air strikes. Expressing concern about Hamas' statements questioning the renewal of the calm, which expired that day, Mr. Serry appealed for the calm to be respected and extended. He also appealed for respect of basic humanitarian principles. The unprecedented level of closure of crossing points caused unacceptable hardship. UNRWA again had to suspend all food distribution. Price increases resulted in Gazans spending approximately two thirds of their income on food. Limitations on cash allowed into Gaza left beneficiaries of humanitarian organizations, PA employees and pensioners unable to collect salaries, pensions and welfare payments, and forced UNRWA to suspend cash assistance to 94,000 beneficiaries. A one-time transfer of 100 million new Israeli shekels had alleviated the crisis for the time being, but a predictable mechanism for the transfer of cash was required. UN projects worth over $150 million, including six priority projects identified by the Secretary-General in May, remained suspended due to a lack of materials.

The Secretary-General outlined his concerns about conditions in Gaza in a letter delivered to his Quartet colleagues the previous week, Mr. Serry said. The United Nations welcomed the Quartet's call for the provision of humanitarian supplies to the people in Gaza to be assured continuously, and noted its call for Israel to allow into Gaza sufficient materials to facilitate the resumption of stalled UN and other donor projects. The United Nations sought more effective communication and cooperation with Israel to ensure that it was able to execute its mandated programmes to the civilian population.

Preparations for the Israeli general election scheduled for 10 February 2009 continued, Mr. Serry said, and a new United States administration would take office on 20 January. There were also internal challenges on the Palestinian side. The immediate priority was to sustain the process during the transition period by building a solid bridge to carry through the fragile period ahead. Ensuring calm in and around Gaza and improving humanitarian conditions had to be a priority. The decision of the Arab League to ensure that there was no vacuum on the Palestinian side, to support the legitimate Palestinian Government and pursue Palestinian unity demanded support. It was important to pursue specific action to improve conditions on the ground in the West Bank. The three tracks of the Annapolis process—negotiations, institution-building and phase I road map implementation—had to be protected, preserved and, where possible, advanced to set the stage for a decisive push for peace in 2009.

Security Council meeting on crisis in Gaza (31 December). On 31 December, the Council convened [meeting 6060] in response to requests by Egypt [S/2008/842] and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [S/2008/815, S/2008/843]. In his address to the Council, the Secretary-General stated that a dramatic crisis in Gaza and southern Israel had reached its fifth day. The civilian population, the fabric of Gaza, the future of the peace process, stability in the region and goodwill among people throughout the world were trapped between the irresponsibility displayed in the indiscriminate rocket attacks by Hamas militants and the disproportionality of the continuing Israeli military operation. As a result of the crisis and violence, conditions for the 1.5 million people in Gaza were nothing short of terrifying, as they were living under heavy bombardment targeted at the infrastructure of Hamas, as well as the former PA security structure, government buildings, residential homes, mosques and businesses. More than 300 people were dead—among them at least 60 women and children—and over 800 were wounded. In southern Israel, a continuous stream of rockets was being fired from Gaza, hitting major cities with hundreds of thousands of people. Four Israelis died during the preceding four days, and over 30 more were injured. Schools were closed and daily life was extremely difficult, as Israelis were in constant fear of rockets hitting homes and schools.

Condemning the ongoing rocket and mortar attacks by Hamas and other Palestinian militants, the Secretary-General also condemned Israel's excessive use of force, and reminded all parties that they had to fully uphold international humanitarian law. It was the civilian population that bore the brunt of the escalation, and the international community had to act swiftly and decisively to end their suffering. All parties should address the humanitarian and economic needs in Gaza and take measures to ensure the provision of humanitarian supplies. The Secretary-General paid tribute to UN staff in the area, working under adverse conditions to address the humanitarian situation of Gaza, and was pained at the death, injury and damage that UN personnel and premises, as well as others associated with UN programmes, had sustained. He urged the international community, in particular those in the region, to exert what influence they had on the parties to end the violence. There was need for decisive action. He welcomed the efforts under way, including by Arab and European leaders, but stressed that not enough had been done and more was urgently required. There had to be an immediate ceasefire fully respected by all parties to create new conditions on the ground that ensured that crossings into Gaza would be reopened, rocket and weapons smuggling ended, political dialogue pursued to reunite Gaza with the West Bank, and that the root cause of the suffering—the absence of Israeli-Palestinian peace—also ended.

Nineteen other speakers addressed the Council in the ensuing debate.

Committee on Palestinian Rights. The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, in its annual report to the General Assembly [A/63/35], noted that the reporting period from 5 October 2007 to 6 October 2008 was characterized by a dichotomy between the resumption of the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations and intensified international engagement, on one hand, and on the other, a deteriorating situation on the ground. The lack of tangible progress in the situation on the ground had a negative effect on the ongoing negotiations between the parties. The Committee stressed the need for a complete cessation of all acts of violence, including military attacks, destruction and acts of terror. It called on Israel to end its illegal policies and oppressive practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, such as settlement activities, the construction of the wall and numerous measures of collective punishment. The Committee was of the view that the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territory had to end without conditions, allowing the Palestinian people to establish an independent State on all territories occupied in 1967, including East Jerusalem, and to exercise their inalienable rights, including the right to self-determination. The Committee firmly supported the two-State solution in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257], 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213], 1397(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 418] and 1515(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 483].

Peaceful settlement of question of Palestine

Report of Secretary-General. In a 23 September report [A/63/368-S/2008/612], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 62/83 [YUN 2007, p. 462] and covering the period from September 2007 through August 2008, the Secretary-General put forward his observations on the state of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and on international efforts to move the peace process forward, as well as the views of the Security Council and the concerned parties on the question of Palestine.

For the Council, the goal of achieving a peaceful settlement remained one of the major challenges facing the international community. It considered the situation in Palestine every month under the agenda item “The situation in the Middle East, including the question of Palestine”, with briefings by either the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs or the Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, followed by an open Council meeting or consultations among the Council members.

In a 30 July note verbale, Israel declared that it remained committed to the bilateral process with the moderate, legitimate PA leadership that embraced its responsibility and the vision of two States living side by side in peace and security. In the past months, meetings had taken place to set in motion the building blocks for a political horizon and to maintain a dialogue between Israel and the PA. Israel hoped to work with its moderate counterparts in the region to advance mutual understanding and the bilateral process. Rather than promoting a vision that recognized both sides’ rights and responsibilities, however, General Assembly resolution 62/83 [YUN 2007, p. 462] obscured the parties’ efforts to achieve a negotiated outcome.

Also on the same date in a note verbale, the Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations stated that 2008 marked the passage of 60 years since the Palestinians had lost their homeland. The situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, remained critical, with little progress towards the realization by the Palestinians of their inalienable rights and the achievement of a peaceful settlement of the Palestine question. While the Annapolis Conference had set the end of 2008 as the timeline for establishing an independent Palestinian State and a comprehensive settlement to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, bilateral negotiations and several high-level meetings had been held between Israeli and Palestinian leadership, and the Middle East peace process remained high on the international agenda, progress had been minimal. Moreover, negative developments on the ground continued to impede the process and complicate efforts to address the core, final status issues of Jerusalem, settlements, borders, refugees, water and security. The peace process was in a state of serious disrepair, as it was constantly being undermined by Israel’s illegal actions that precluded the full implementation of resolution 62/83. Since the adoption of that resolution, Israel had not ceased its collective punishment, reprisals and military operations against the Palestinian civilian population, but instead pursued its settlement activities, particularly around East Jerusalem and the Jordan Valley. Continuation of that situation would make the establishment of a sovereign, contiguous, viable and independent Palestinian State, with East Jerusalem as its capital, and the realization of the two-State solution impossible.

The situation in the Gaza Strip remained critical, as Israel continued to close border crossings and the Gaza Strip was separated from the West Bank with no functional territorial link. Consequently, poverty had increased, and health conditions had deteriorated. The majority of the more than 1.4 million Palestinians in Gaza lived in poverty and depended on food aid for survival.

The Secretary-General regretted the continued violence between Israelis and Palestinians, as well as among Palestinians, but noted that road map implementation saw some arguable progress. He welcomed the parties' diplomatic efforts, as well as those of the League of Arab States and several Arab countries to advance regional efforts for peace, and affirmed that the United Nations would continue to work towards the creation of an independent, democratic, contiguous and viable Palestinian State living side by side in peace with a secure Israel, within the framework of a comprehensive regional settlement, consistent with Security Council resolutions and in accordance with the road map, the Arab Peace Initiative and the principle of land for peace.

The situation on the ground, both in Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, had deteriorated in many instances, the Secretary-General observed, and much more needed to be done to build the necessary foundations for a successful political process and for eventual and sustainable implementation of any agreement reached. Settlement activity had to stop completely and restrictions on movement and access lifted, while the PA needed to make further progress in imposing law and order.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 60], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/29 [draft: A/63/L.35 & Add.1] by recorded vote (164-7-3) [agenda item 16].

Fatah-Hamas relations

Communication. On 25 March [S/2008/201], Yemen informed the Security Council of its initiative regarding the resumption of dialogue between the two Palestinian movements, Fatah and Hamas, which had signed, on 23 March, the Sana'a Declaration to restart negotiations, in affirmation of the unity of the territory and the people of the Palestinian homeland and of a single authority. Yemen's initiative, the elements of which were annexed to its letter, foresaw a restoration of the status quo ante of 13 June 2007 in Gaza, adherence to commitments made by the PLO, and the holding of early presidential and parliamentary elections. The resumption of dialogue should be founded on the 2005 Cairo Agreement and the Agreement on Palestinian National Reconciliation (Mecca, Saudi Arabia, February 2007) [YUN 2007, p. 437]; on the basis that the Palestinian people were an indivisible whole, and that the PA was composed of an elected President and Parliament and an executive authority in the form of a Government of national unity; and on a commitment to Palestinian legitimacy in all its elements. All parties were to affirm respect for and commitment to the Palestinian constitution and law, and national security services loyal to the Government. A coalition Government of national unity would be formed, in which all factions were represented according to the number of seats each held in Parliament. Palestinian institutions should include all factions without distinction and be under the control of the supreme authority and of the national unity Government. LAS would form a committee composed of Egypt, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic, whose task would be to implement those points; Yemen was ready to participate in that committee should it be asked.

Security Council consideration. On 27 June [meeting 5927], the Director of the Asia and Pacific Division in the Department of Political Affairs brought the Security Council's attention to President Abbas' 5 June statement, made after extensive internal consultations, calling for a comprehensive national dialogue in order to implement the proposed initiative by the President of Yemen on Palestinian reunification (see above). It was hoped that such dialogue could support the calm in Gaza and the sustained reopening of the crossings, and make progress towards the goal of reunifying Gaza and the West Bank within the framework of the legitimate PA.

Briefing the Council on 20 August [meeting 5963], the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Mr. Pascoe, stated that there had been a major increase in Palestinian internal violence, contributing to a total of 43 Palestinians killed and 366 injured. The rise in internal Palestinian violence stemmed from an incident on 25 July in which five Hamas members and a child were killed in a beachside bombing in Gaza. Hamas claimed that the Fatah-affiliated Hillis clan was sheltering the perpetrators and attacked the clan's stronghold in eastern Gaza City, the last bastion of the Fatah military presence in the Gaza Strip. The ensuing violence left 10 members of the Hillis family dead, with dozens of clan members fleeing to the West Bank through Israel. Members of the Hillis family were detained by Hamas along with dozens of Fatah and other activists, and there had been allegations of torture committed by Hamas.

Following the 25 July bombing, Hamas initiated a campaign for total control of the Gaza Strip. It raided and closed down over 200 community-based organizations in Gaza, which disrupted activities involving thousands of beneficiaries. Eighty organizations reopened following Hamas's review of their operations. Hamas also seized control of the last remaining PA institutions within the Gaza Strip, notably the Governorates, which continued to report to President Abbas and which Hamas had previously recognized as legitimate PA structures. Three Governors had been detained by Hamas, and two of them were still in prison. Those actions, Mr. Pascoe said, severely prejudiced the prospects for Palestinian reunification within the framework of the legitimate PA and raised concern at the potential consequences for UN operations in Gaza.

In reaction to Hamas' actions in Gaza, Palestinian security forces in the West Bank arrested dozens of Hamas activists, most of whom were later freed on President Abbas' orders. They also closed a number of Hamas-linked institutions in the West Bank. Mr. Pascoe called on both Hamas and the PA to release detainees seized as a result of the recent violence, as a first step in a process leading to reconciliation and the reunification of Gaza and the West Bank under the PA.

Hamas' actions compounded the problems facing Gazans, divorcing Palestinian institutions from the PA itself and interrupting basic service delivery. Mr. Serry, Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process reported to the Council on 18 September [meeting 5974]. Following Hamas' decision to replace head and deputy head teachers with Hamas-affiliated staff and to reallocate thousands of teachers to new schools, a teachers' strike led to major disruptions in the education sector since the start of the new academic year on 24 August. On 30 August, health workers joined the strike after the dismissal of a number of employees, forcing hospitals to postpone elective surgery and many health centres to close or suspend services. There were reports of Hamas marching doctors to their hospitals at gunpoint to ensure continuity of critical services. Despite the efforts of Mr. Serry's office to resolve the crisis for the sake of the welfare of the population, Hamas' unwillingness to restore the status ante quo was blocking a resolution of the conflict.

On 25 November [meeting 6022], Mr. Pascoe told the Security Council that Palestinians remained divided. Further to its reconciliation proposal to the Palestinian factions, Egypt had invited them to a meeting in Cairo on 9 November, but Hamas did not attend. The Secretary-General called on Hamas and all Palestinian factions to work urgently to reunify the Gaza Strip and West Bank within the PA framework and in a manner that allowed the peace process to move forward. However, rhetoric between Hamas and Fatah intensified. The PLO Central Committee announced its election of Mahmoud Abbas as President of the State of Palestine, but the Hamas leadership rejected that move.

On 18 December [meeting 6049], Mr. Serry reported to the Council that Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh continued to challenge the continuation in office of President Abbas pending a resolution of the internal divide. While calling for Palestinian reunification, he rejected agreements signed and commitments undertaken by the PLO. President Abbas publicly raised the possibility of calling elections if reconciliation was not achieved. Foreign Ministers of LAS, meeting in Cairo on 26 November, called on President Abbas to continue his mandate until such time as Palestinian reconciliation was possible and presidential and legislative elections could be held simultaneously in both the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. They affirmed basic terms for such reunification and their continued support for efforts to achieve it, so as to reunite Gaza and the West Bank. The Quartet noted that position, stressing that restoring Palestinian unity would be an important step forward. Mr. Serry urged Hamas to respond positively to those exhortations, as it could not be in the interests of the Palestinian people for essential cornerstones of Palestinian legitimacy and national aspirations to be challenged.

Aid shipment to Gaza

Communication. On 2 December [S/2008/754], the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya requested a Security Council emergency meeting to consider an incident on 1 December involving the Libyan ship Al-Marwa, which it said had been heading for Gaza to deliver humanitarian aid, when two Israeli gunboats forced it to turn back. Libya requested the Council to act urgently to allow the ship to enter the port of Gaza and unload its cargo. In a letter on the same date [S/2008/753], Libya provided details on its cargo which, it affirmed, contained only foodstuffs and medicines, and invited the United Nations and the International Red Cross to inspect the ship to verify that it was on a humanitarian mission.

Security Council consideration. In response to Libya's request, the Security Council met on 3 December [meeting 6030]. Opening the Council debate, Libya claimed that Israel's action amounted to piracy under article 101 of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea [YUN 1982, p. 178], and called on the Council to ensure Israel's compliance with the Convention.

Israel, on the other hand, charged that Libya, since its election to the Council, had prevented any initiative on Middle East issues that contradicted its own narrow agenda. If Libya were genuinely interested in supporting peace and security in the Middle East, it would have condemned Hamas when it brutally took control of the Gaza Strip in a violent coup against the moderate PA, as well as the constant barrage of thousands of rockets and mortars on Israeli towns and villages by terrorists, Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic for harbouring, supporting and training terrorists, and the ongoing transfer of sophisticated weapons and financial resources to terrorist groups.

The United States said that those seeking to provide assistance to the people of Gaza could work through existing institutions and UN programmes and non-provocative and non-confrontational mechanisms. Direct delivery by sea was neither appropriate nor responsible under the circumstances.

The Council did not take any action on Libya's request.

Israeli settlements

The issue of Israeli settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, remained central to the question of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, as it did to the peace negotiations. The road map and the Annapolis joint statement committed Israel to dismantle all settlement outposts erected since 2001 and to freeze—in a manner consistent with the 2001 report of the Sharm el-Sheikh Fact-Finding Committee (Mitchell Report) [YUN 2001, p. 409]—all settlement activity including natural growth.

Communications. Throughout the year, Palestine brought to the attention of the Secretary-General and the Security Council President the ongoing construction and expansion of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, especially in and around East Jerusalem [A/ES-10/416-S/2008/170, A/ES-10/419-S/2008/365, A/ES-10/422-S/2008/513, A/ES-10/423-S/2008/629, A/ES-10/424-S/2008/667, A/ES-10/427-S/2008/768]. Cuba, on behalf of NAM [S/2008/396], and Pakistan [S/2008/440], on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, called on the Security Council to address the critical settlements issue. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territory [A/63/326] also dealt with the issue of Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory and their impact on the enjoyment of human rights by the Palestinians.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/108 [YUN 2007, p. 458], the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/63/519], prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), on the implementation of that resolution, especially the continuation of Israeli settlements activities in the occupied territories, covering the period from January to August 2008.

According to the Israeli Ministry of the Interior, the settler population in the West Bank, excluding East Jerusalem, had increased by 5.1 per cent from 268,163 in January 2007 to 282,362 in January 2008. According to UN sources, almost 40 per cent of the West Bank was taken up by Israeli infrastructure associated with the settlements, including roads, barriers, buffer zones and military bases.

Construction in the settlements had increased in 2008 by a factor of 1.8, in comparison with the same period in 2007; from January to May 2008, 433 new housing units were initiated, compared to just 240 units from January to May 2007. As at August 2008, more than 1,000 new buildings with approximately 2,600 housing units were being constructed in the settlements, about 55 per cent of which were located to the east of the separation wall. The number of tenders for construction in the settlements increased by 540 per cent in 2008 (417 housing units, compared with 65 in 2007), and in East Jerusalem for the construction of 1,761 housing units, up from 46 in 2007. Furthermore, 125 new structures were added to existing outputs, including 30 permanent houses.

Settlements, including their municipal boundaries, took up some 9 per cent of the total West Bank territory. Additional areas for agricultural and industrial use, as well as for future settlement expansion and military purposes, were included within the settlement regional jurisdiction, all of which were prohibited to Palestinians. Despite Israel's claim that the internal closure system within the West Bank was imposed on Palestinian residents for security purposes, most of those restrictions on movement were largely for the protection of Israeli settlers and settlements and to provide settlers with unobstructed travel between settlements and Israel itself; none of the restrictions on freedom of movement applied to Israeli settlers or Israeli citizens.

The Palestinians' right to an adequate standard of living were negatively affected by the settlements and the associated security regime and repeated instances of settler violence, as was their right to own property, since the building of settlements entailed expropriation and destruction of private Palestinian lands. It was estimated that 33 per cent of settlement areas was private Palestinian land.

In view of the worsening human rights situation in the occupied territory, the protection of both Palestinian and Israeli civilians required action by all parties and the international community, according to the Secretary-General. Israel should abide by its commitments, as stated in the road map and reiterated in the Annapolis Joint Statement, to immediately dismantle settlement outposts erected since March 2001 and to freeze all settlement activity, including natural growth. It should also halt attacks by settlers and ensure proper investigation and redress for the victims of such violence. The General Assembly and the international community should promote implementation of its decisions, resolutions and recommendations and those of the Security Council, the ICJ and UN human rights mechanisms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/63/401], adopted resolution 63/97 by recorded vote (171-6-2) [agenda item 30].

Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolution 62/108 of 17 December 2007, as well as those resolutions adopted at its tenth emergency special session,

Recalling also relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 446(1979) of 22 March 1979, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, 476(1980) of 30 June 1980, 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981 and 904(1994) of 18 March 1994,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Considering that the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies constitutes a breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention and relevant provisions of customary law, including those codified in Additional Protocol I to the four Geneva Conventions,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolutions ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004 and ES-10/17 of 15 December 2006,

Noting that the International Court of Justice concluded that “the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (including East Jerusalem) have been established in breach of international law”,

Taking note of the recent report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Recalling the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 13 September 1993 and the subsequent implementation agreements between the Palestinian and Israeli sides,

Recalling also the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and noting specifically its call for a freeze on all settlement activity,

Aware that Israeli settlement activities involve, inter alia, the transfer of nationals of the occupying Power into the occupied territories, the confiscation of land, the exploitation of natural resources and other actions against the Palestinian civilian population that are contrary to international law,

Bearing in mind the detrimental impact of Israeli settlement policies, decisions and activities on efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East,

Expressing grave concern about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions and the agreements reached between the parties, and concerned particularly about Israel’s construction and expansion of settlements in and around Occupied East Jerusalem, including its so-called E-1 plan that aims to connect its illegal settlements around and further isolate Occupied East Jerusalem, and in the Jordan Valley,

Expressing grave concern also about the continuing unlawful construction by Israel of the wall inside the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, and expressing its concern in particular about the route of the wall in departure from the Armistice Line of 1949, which is causing humanitarian hardship and a serious decline of socio-economic conditions for the Palestinian people, is fragmenting the territorial contiguity of the Territory, and could prejudice future negotiations and make the two-State solution physically impossible to implement,

Deeply concerned that the wall’s route has been traced in such a way as to include the great majority of the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Deploping settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan and any activities involving the confiscation of land, the disruption of the livelihood of protected persons and the de facto annexation of land,

Recalling the need to end all acts of violence, including acts of terror, provocation, incitement and destruction,

Gravely concerned about the rising incidents of violence by illegal armed Israeli settlers in the Occupied Palestinian Territory against Palestinian civilians and their properties and agricultural lands,

Noting the Israeli withdrawal from within the Gaza Strip and parts of the northern West Bank and the importance of the dismantlement of the settlements therein as a step towards the implementation of the road map,

Taking note of the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the special meeting of the Security Council convened on 26 September 2008,

1. Reaffirms that the Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49;

Communications. On 5 December [S/2008/765], Egypt, as Chair of the Arab Group, requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to address the recent escalation of Israeli settler violence, harassment, intimidation and provocation against Palestinian civilians, their properties and agricultural lands. Of particular concern was the rise of tensions in Al-Khalil (Hebron). On the same date [A/ES-10/427-S/2008/768], Palestine reported that Israeli settler terrorism against Palestinian civilians had intensified during recent weeks, especially in Hebron.

Jerusalem

East Jerusalem, where most of the city's Arab population lived, remained one of the most sensitive issues in the Middle East peace process and a focal point for the United Nations. Continued settlement activities in East Jerusalem, like those throughout the West Bank, raised the concern of the Secretary-General and the Human Rights Council, as well as others. The Human Rights Council, by resolution 7/18 of 27 March [A/HRC/7/78] (see p. 894), deplored Israel's announcement of the construction of new housing units in East Jerusalem, as they undermined the peace process and the creation of a contiguous, sovereign and independent Palestinian State, and violated international law and pledges made by Israel at the Annapolis Conference. The Special Committee on Israeli Practices reported [A/63/273] (see p. 502) that it had heard detailed testimony, supported by maps and photographs, on an excavation project in the Arab neighbourhood of Silwan in East Jerusalem, a few hundred metres from Al-Haram Al-Sharif/Temple Mount, which troubled the Palestinian population and archaeological experts. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the occupied Palestinian territories, in an August report [A/63/326] (see p. 896), stated that the expansion of settlements had been particularly notable in East Jerusalem, where 1,800 new housing units had been approved. That expansion, accompanied by expulsions of Palestinians, furthered the Israeli policy of making East Jerusalem into a place of majority Jewish residence. In addition, he said, the presence of 250,000 Jews living illegally in East Jerusalem was being overlooked.

Report of Secretary-General. On 29 October [A/63/361], the Secretary-General reported that four Member States (Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Syria) had replied to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement General Assembly resolution 62/84 [YUN 2007, p. 447], which addressed the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem, in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) [YUN 1980, p. 426].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 60], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/30 [draft: A/63/L.36 & Add.1] by recorded vote (163-6-6) [agenda item 15].

Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947, in particular its provisions regarding the City of Jerusalem,

Recalling also its resolution 36/120 E of 10 December 1981 and all subsequent resolutions, including resolution 56/31 of 3 December 2001, in which it, inter alia, determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which have altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling further the Security Council resolutions relevant to Jerusalem, including resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" on Jerusalem,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004,

Expressing its grave concern about any action taken by anybody, governmental or non-governmental, in violation of the above-mentioned resolutions,

Expressing its grave concern in particular about the continuation by Israel, the occupying Power, of illegal settlement activities, including the so-called E-1 plan, its construction of the wall in and around East Jerusalem, its restrictions on access to and residence in East Jerusalem, and the further isolation of the city from the rest of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, which is having a detrimental effect on the lives of Palestinians and could prejudice a final status agreement on Jerusalem,

Reaffirming that the international community, through the United Nations, has a legitimate interest in the question of the City of Jerusalem and the protection of the unique spiritual, religious and cultural dimensions of the city, as foreseen in relevant United Nations resolutions on this matter,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reiterates its determination that any actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem are illegal and therefore null and void and have no validity whatsoever, and calls upon Israel to cease all such illegal and unilateral measures;

2. Stresses that a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the question of the City of Jerusalem should take into account the legitimate concerns of both the Palestinian and Israeli sides and should include internationally guaranteed provisions to ensure the freedom of religion and of conscience of its inhabitants, as well as permanent, free and unhindered access to the holy places by the people of all religions and nationalities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Other aspects

Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting Human Rights

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/106 [YUN 2007, p. 455], the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Special Committee on Israeli Practices), established by Assembly resolution 2443(XXIII) [YUN 1968, p. 555], reported for the fortieth time on the human rights situation in the territories it considered occupied by Israel—the Syrian Arab Golan, and the occupied Palestinian territory of the West Bank, East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip [A/63/273].

The report was based on information gathered during the Special Committee's mission to the Middle East (23 June–5 July), visiting Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, where it heard the testimony of 33 witnesses. As in previous years, the Committee was not authorized by Israel to visit the occupied territories, as had been the case since 1968.

The Special Committee noted once again the serious deterioration of the human rights situation in the occupied territories due to the Israeli occupation and the population's despondency in view of the violations of their basic human rights. Palestinians continued to suffer from Israeli military action that resulted in considerable loss of life and injuries and damage to property and infrastructure. They were subjected to collective punishment and had seen their rights violated with an ever-decreasing possibility to seek effective redress. The construction of the separation wall in the West Bank and East Jerusalem was ongoing in defiance of the 2004 ICJ Advisory Opinion [YUN 2004, p. 452]. Settlements and bypass roads continued to expand, while restrictions on the freedom of movement intensified, severely affecting the enjoyment of virtually all human rights by the Palestinian population. The situation in the Gaza Strip was particularly serious, despite the hope resulting from the 19 June ceasefire (see p. 484). The Committee also noted that the shift from development to humanitarian assistance had increased even further.

The deterioration of the human rights situation could be largely attributed to Israeli practices, the Committee concluded. Israel and the international community had an obligation to ensure the realization of the human rights of the Palestinian people—including the population of Gaza—not as a matter of humanitarian charity, but as an obligation.

The Special Committee reiterated some of its recommendations made in 2007 [YU 2007, p. 452], calling on the Assembly to urgently consider all means to fulfil its responsibilities regarding all aspects of the Palestine question until it was resolved in conformity with UN resolutions and norms of international law and until the inalienable rights of the Palestinians were fully realized. The Assembly should urge the Security Council to ensure implementation of the 2004 ICJ Advisory Opinion and Assembly resolution ES-10/15, adopted at the tenth emergency special session on Palestine [YUN 2004, p. 465], requesting Israel to dismantle the segments of the separation wall and make reparations for the damage arising from its construction. The Council should consider sanctions against Israel if it persisted in neglecting its international legal obligations, ensure that States were not assisting in the construction of the wall, and encourage Quartet members to fully implement the road map to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement.

Israel should recognize the applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, respect international law, cease its excessive use of force and the destruction of land, property, houses and infrastructure, and stop confiscating Palestinian land and expanding Jewish settlements. It should restore freedom of movement throughout the territory, end the closure and collective punishment of the people of Gaza, stop mass arrests and arbitrary detention, and guarantee those arrested a fair trial and detention conditions in keeping with international conventions. Israel should urgently implement its obligations set forth in the road map [YUN 2003, p. 464] and withdraw its military presence from the Occupied Palestinian Territory and its occupation of the Syrian Golan. Israel should also implement the recommendations of UN treaty bodies, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, and the High Commissioner for Human Rights. Furthermore, it should establish an independent and transparent system of accountability, ensuring prompt and impartial investigations.

For its part, the PA should abide by human rights law and international humanitarian law, aim to resolve the urgent human rights and humanitarian crisis in the territory, and fully restore the rule of law in areas under its control, as well as comply with the road map requirements.

The Special Committee urged civil society groups, and diplomatic, academic and research institutions to use their influence to make widely known the serious human rights and humanitarian situation of the Palestinians, as well as the human rights situation in the occupied Syrian Golan. It commended the efforts of Israeli NGOs made on behalf of Palestinian rights, and encouraged international and national media to provide broad and accurate coverage of the situation in the occupied territory, with a view to mobilizing international public opinion in favour of a just and lasting settlement.

Report of Secretary-General. On 5 November [A/63/518], the Secretary-General submitted a report by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on the implementation of resolution 62/109 [YUN 2007, p. 453] on Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, covering the period from January to August 2008. The report addressed the policy of Israeli closures and severe restrictions, including their impact on the socio-economic situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the separation wall and the destruction of property, and the conditions affecting Palestinian prisoners in Israel.

Claiming that it was necessary for its security, Israel continued to impose a comprehensive closure system, which consisted of a complex array of physical and administrative obstacles that had a severe and detrimental impact on the rights of the Palestinians, specifically the right to freedom of movement, to choose a residence, and to leave and re-enter the Occupied Territory. The restrictions also had serious economic consequences, impeded access to health care, education and employment and caused significant financial hardship and the interruption of essential social networks and communities. The permit system imposed on all Palestinian identification card holders remained active; permits for Palestinians to enter Israel, and hence travel to East Jerusalem and the West Bank were still difficult to obtain, and the rules as to whether a permit was required or would be granted were fluid and could change daily. The permit system was enforced by a web of checkpoints along the Green Line and in the West Bank and Jerusalem. In April, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs estimated that there were 88 manned obstacles out of a total of 607 closure obstacles in the West Bank. During the first half of 2008, 41 days of general closure were enforced in the West Bank, compared to 19 in 2007.

Israel had not met the conditions established under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN 1996, p. 423] for derogation from the right to freedom of movement, requiring that, when imposed, a derogation had to be temporary, existing only during an officially proclaimed state of emergency that threatened the life of the nation. The restrictions imposed by Israel on the Palestinian population also infringed on its duties under international humanitarian law.

The construction of the wall, which fragmented the West Bank into non-contiguous enclaves, brought new restrictions on movement and access. In July, after years of deliberations by the Israeli High Court, Israel declared that it would demolish sections of the wall around the village of Bil'in, west of Ramallah, and near Qalqilia in the northern West Bank, moving the wall's location in those two areas by 2.4 kilometres to allow Palestinian farmers access to 2,600 dunums of land. In areas where the wall had already been built, extensive rights violations of Palestinians living nearby were frequently reported. In areas located between the barrier and the 1949 Armistice Demarcation Line (Green Line) [YUN 1948–49, p. 184], representing 9.8 per cent of the West Bank, access by Palestinian farmers to their lands and water resources was severely limited and could be achieved only through restrictive permit and gate regimes.

A 168-kilometre-long section of the wall separated East Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank, which, in conjunction with the identification card and permit system and the series of checkpoints, had weakened the social and economic connection between residents of East Jerusalem and the West Bank. By contrast, the wall encircled settlements around Jerusalem and within the West Bank and connected them to Israel, ensuring that Israeli settlers had unimpeded access to Jerusalem. IDF security measures had an impact on access to religious sites in East Jerusalem, and traders and consumers no longer had access to its markets.

Since the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements (Oslo Agreement) [YUN 1993, p. 521], land in the West Bank had been divided into three areas. Area C, which accounted for around 61 per cent of West Bank territory, remained under Israeli military authority, including building and planning. During the first quarter of 2008, Israeli authorities demolished 124 structures for lack of permit; 61 of those were residential buildings that caused the displacement of 435 Palestinians, including 135 children.

On Palestinians in Israeli prisons, the report noted that more than 650,000 Palestinians had been detained since the beginning of Israeli occupation in 1967. As at 31 August 2008, there were 8,403 prisoners in Israeli jails and detention centres, 649 of whom were administrative detainees held without charge or trial. Serious concerns existed regarding the conditions of Palestinians during detention. Torture and other forms of ill treatment continued to be prevalent in the context of arrest and interrogation of persons suspected of being a security threat. Palestinian prisoners faced inadequate access to health care and food. Female prisoners were reportedly subjected to sexual harassment, frequent body searches and physical intimidation, and minors were not treated in accordance with international standards. Following the Hamas takeover of the Gaza Strip in June 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 441], Israel suspended visits from family members travelling from Gaza to Palestinian detainees in Israel, thus depriving more than 900 detainees of direct contact with their relatives for over one year.

The report recommended that, in view of the worsening human rights situation in the Territory, the United Nations should reiterate its commitment to ensuring strong advocacy for the needs and rights of civilians and remind the parties of their primary responsibility for protecting civilians.

Report of Special Rapporteur. By a 25 August note [A/63/326], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Special Rapporteur (Richard Falk) on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, covering the period from 1 January to 31 July 2008 (see p. 896).

UN Register of Damage. The UN Register of Damage Caused by the Construction of the Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, established in Vienna in accordance with General Assembly resolution ES-10/17 [YUN 2006, p. 529], became operational in June, with a small team of 18 substantive and technical staff, following the appointment of a three-member Board in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 461] and of the Executive Director in January 2008. The Board adopted provisional rules of procedure for claims registration and a claim form for registration of damage, and began the work of collecting claim forms and considering them for inclusion in the Register.

The Board reviewed the first 30 claim forms translated from Arabic into English, processed through the Register's electronic database and reviewed by staff of the Office. It decided to include in the Register losses set out in each of those forms, signifying the beginning of the existence of the Register.

The Special Committee on Palestinian Rights [A/63/273] stated that the establishment of the Register had been a lengthy and—as considered by many—disappointing process owing to its lack of presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and narrow mandate.

The Special Committee was supported by various UN agencies in the implementation of its mandate, specifically OHCHR and the offices of the United Nations Resident Coordinators in Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic in the organization of a mission and by offering in situ support. DPI continued to disseminate information on the Special Committee's work through various means, ensuring that such information was available to global audiences in the six official UN languages. The Department held its annual training programme for Palestinian journalists, published a new version of the booklet The United Nations and the Question of Palestine and displayed a new exhibit on Palestine at UN Headquarters on the issue of human rights in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

Work of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Guided also by international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, as well as international standards of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 2443(XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and 62/106 of 17 December 2007, and the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council,

Convinced that occupation itself represents a gross and grave violation of human rights,

Gravely concerned about the continuing detrimental impact of the events that have taken place since 28 September 2000, including the excessive use of force by the Israeli occupying forces against Palestinian civilians, resulting in thousands of deaths and injuries, the widespread destruction of property and vital infrastructure and the internal displacement of civilians,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Economic and social situation

ESCWA report. By a 6 May note [A/63/74-E/2008/13], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan, prepared by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/26 [YUN 2007, p. 449] and General Assembly resolution 62/181 [ibid., p. 450].

The report concluded that a combination of intensified closures and sanctions imposed by Israel, as well as heightened Palestinian internal conflict, had led to a measurable deepening of the socio-economic crisis in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Living conditions were declining and social and spatial dismemberment was occurring, as residents of the Gaza Strip had become almost completely isolated, with access only to basic commodities and humanitarian items.

The situation in the Occupied Territory prompted the UN country team to launch the 2008 consolidated appeal which, at $452.2 million, represented about an 8 per cent increase over 2007 (see p. 1005). The appeal focused on humanitarian aid; the protection of civilians and the implementation of international humanitarian law; humanitarian monitoring and reporting; and the strengthening of UN humanitarian coordination. While those measures were aimed at stabilizing socio-economic conditions, they were not expected to contribute to their long-term improvement.

The Secretary-General observed that the water supply and sanitation services for Palestinians were insufficient and unreliable in terms of quality. The daily average of per capita water consumption was below the minimum recommended standard. In 2007, on average, 35.2 per cent in the West Bank and 36.3 per cent of households in the Gaza Strip had piped water. In the Gaza Strip, 15 per cent of the population was receiving water for only one or two hours per day, owing to the lack of electrical power due to fuel supply cuts and the ban on the importation of spare parts, water wells and pumping stations. As at 23 January 2008, about 30 per cent of Gazans had limited access to running water, and about 35 million litres of sewage daily were entering the sea.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. The Special Committee on Israeli Practices, in its annual report [A/63/273], noted that one of the major issues in the Occupied Palestinian Territory was competition for resources, most significantly the control of water resources. According to testimony received, Palestinians suffered from acute water scarcity, resulting from the continuous expansion of settlements, with Israeli consumption reaching 4.3 times that of the average of the Occupied Territory and Israeli settlers' consumption 5.3 times that of the West Bank average. Of available groundwater resources in the West Bank, 18 per cent was used by Palestinians, while 82 per cent was controlled and used by Israelis.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2008/31 [draft: E/2008/L.26] as orally revised by roll-call vote (49-2-2) [agenda item 11].

Fourth Geneva Convention

The applicability of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) to the Israeli-occupied territories was reaffirmed during the year by the General Assembly and several other UN bodies, including the Special Committee on Israeli Practices.

Report of Secretary-General. In a 15 October report [A/63/484], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that Israel had not replied to his September request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement resolution 62/107 [YUN 2007, p. 457] demanding that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, and that it comply scrupulously with its provisions. The Secretary-General said that had drawn the attention of all High Contracting Parties to paragraph 3 of resolution 62/107, calling on them to ensure Israel's respect for the Convention's provisions, and to paragraph 6 of Assembly resolution 62/110 [ibid., p. 518] calling on Member States not to recognize Israeli actions to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the Syrian Golan. Two Member States had replied to his request for information on steps taken to implement the resolution.

Palestinian women

Report of Secretary-General. In a report submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women [E/CN.6/2008/6], in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/7 [YUN 2007, p. 460], the Secretary-General summarized the situation of Palestinian women and reviewed UN assistance to them during the period between October 2006 and September 2007, with particular reference to humanitarian assistance, economic activities, education and training, health and human rights.

As the crisis in the Occupied Palestinian Territory deepened, Palestinian women and girls experienced increased poverty and unemployment and a decline in living standards and food security, the Secretary-General said. Their movement and access to health care, employment and schools were further restricted by closures, checkpoints and roadblocks. Close to 30 per cent of pregnant women in the West Bank had difficulties accessing antenatal care and safe delivery. Declines in the education system led to high dropout and low graduation rates. Violence against women, especially domestic violence, remained widespread.

Women should be fully involved in conflict resolution and peacebuilding initiatives in the region. UN assistance focusing on the empowerment of women should be strengthened and women's full participation in decision-making increased. A gender perspective should be fully integrated into international assistance programmes. UN studies and reports on the situation of the Palestinian people should incorporate gender perspectives, research on the situation of Palestinian women and girls should be encouraged, and assistance to them intensified.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/2008/27], adopted resolution 2008/11 by roll-call vote (25-2-17) [agenda item 14 (a)].

Situation of and assistance to Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women,

Recalling also its resolution 2007/7 of 24 July 2007 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women as it concerns the protection of civilian populations,

Recalling the importance of the implementation of General Assembly resolution 57/337 of 3 July 2003 on the prevention of armed conflict, and Security Council resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security,

Noting the resumption of bilateral negotiations within the Middle East peace process on its agreed basis, and expressing the need for the speedy achievement of a final and comprehensive peace settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides,

Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding, and stressing the importance of their equal participation and involvement in all efforts for the maintenance and promotion of peace and security and the need to increase their role in decision-making with regard to conflict prevention and resolution,

Concerned about the grave situation of Palestinian women resulting from the severe impact of ongoing illegal Israeli practices, including settlement activities and the unlawful construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, the continued imposition of closures and restrictions on the movement of persons and goods and the many severe consequences arising from Israeli military operations in and sieges of civilian areas, in particular in the Gaza Strip, which have impacted detrimentally their social and economic conditions and deepened the humanitarian crisis faced by Palestinian women and their families,

Stressing the importance of providing assistance, especially emergency assistance, to alleviate the dire socio-economic and humanitarian situation being faced by Palestinian women and their families,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 31 August 2005 regarding the issue of Palestinian women giving birth at checkpoints, and expressing grave concern at the increasing difficulties faced by pregnant Palestinian women owing to a lack of appropriate and timely antenatal, delivery and post-natal care due to the obstruction of access to proper medical care,

Recalling the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and recalling also General Assembly resolution ES-10/15 of 20 July 2004,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and affirming that these human rights instruments must be respected in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem,

Expressing its condemnation of all acts of violence, including all acts of terror, provocation, incitement and destruction, especially the excessive use of force against Palestinian civilians, many of them women and children, resulting in injury and loss of human life,

Expressing grave concern over the increased difficulties faced by Palestinian women, including the sharp increase in poverty, soaring unemployment, incidents of domestic violence, and declining health and education standards as a result of the deterioration in the economic and social conditions on the ground in the Occupied Palestinian Territory,

5. Calls upon the international community to continue to provide urgently needed assistance and services in an effort to alleviate the dire humanitarian crisis being faced by Palestinian women and their families, to promote their development in various fields and to help in the reconstruction of relevant Palestinian institutions;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to monitor and take action with regard to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century";

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to review the situation, to assist Palestinian women by all available means, including those set out in his report, and to submit

Other issues related to Palestine

General aspects

The General Assembly again considered the question of Palestine in 2008, which took centre stage within the framework of the Annapolis process. Following its discussion of the annual report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) [A/63/35], the Assembly adopted a resolution requesting the Committee to continue promoting the realization of the rights of the Palestinians, including their right to self-determination, to support the Middle East peace process, and to mobilize international support for and assistance to the Palestinians. In observance of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, celebrated annually on 29 November in accordance with Assembly resolution 32/40 B [YUN 1977, p. 304], the Committee held a solemn meeting. At a special meeting at UN Headquarters on 20 June, it marked 60 years of dispossession of Palestine refugees.

Communications. On 10 April [S/2008/243], the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, referring to the Secretary-General's summary statement [S/2008/10] concerning the list of items of which the Security Council was seized, reiterated the Committee's continuing objection to deleting from that list the items relating to the exercise of the rights of the Palestinian people, the Palestine question and the situation in the Middle East. Those items, the Chairman stressed, should remain on the list since they continued to engage the Council's primary responsibility with regard to the maintenance of international peace and security. Any decisions to delete them, especially at that critical point, would go well beyond procedural exercise and would have far-reaching political implications.

On 22 August [A/62/946-S/2008/584], Indonesia and South Africa submitted the statement of the co-chairs of the New Asian-African Strategic Partnership Ministerial Conference on Capacity-Building for Palestine (Jakarta, Indonesia, 14 July).

Communications. Iran, in a series of letters [A/62/705-S/2008/117, S/2008/198, A/62/792-S/2008/228, A/62/798-S/2008/246, A/62/815-S/2008/275, S/2008/377, S/2008/599], voiced its support for the peoples of Palestine, condemned Israel's treatment of Palestinians and accused Israeli officials of making threats against Iran and its officials.

In a letter of 19 February [S/2008/110], Israel informed the Secretary-General and the Security Council of remarks made by two senior members of the Iranian leadership allegedly threatening Israel.

Committee on Palestinian Rights

As mandated by General Assembly resolution 62/80 [YUN 2007, p. 466], the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) reviewed and reported on the Palestine question and made suggestions to the Assembly and the Security Council. By decision 62/553 of 11 September, the Assembly, on the Committee's request [A/62/951], increased its membership to 23, following the appointment of Nicaragua to the Committee.

In pursuance of its mandate, the Committee continued to mobilize the international community in support of the Palestinian people, in cooperation with UN bodies, Governments, intergovernmental and civil society organizations.

Through international meetings and conferences, the Committee raised awareness of the various aspects of the Palestine question and garnered international support for the rights of the Palestinians and for a peaceful settlement. During the period under review, the following international events were held under the Committee's auspices: UN Seminar on Assistance to the Palestinian People (Amman, Jordan, 19–20 February); UN International Conference on Palestine Refugees (Paris, 29–30 April); and UN International Meeting on the Question of Palestine (Qawra, Malta, 3–4 June).

The Committee's annual report to the Assembly [A/63/35] covered the period from 5 October 2007 to 6 October 2008. The Committee noted that the year 2008 marked 60 years of Palestinian dispossession. It reiterated the permanent responsibility of the United Nations towards the Palestine question until it was resolved, and urged the international community to continue its support for the Middle East process.

The Committee considered that its programme of international meetings and conferences contributed to focusing attention on the need for advancing a peaceful settlement and mobilizing much-needed assistance to the Palestinians. Wishing to make its contribution to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement, and in view of the many difficulties facing the Palestinians and besetting the peace process, the Committee called on all States to join it in that endeavour and to extend their cooperation and support to the Committee. It invited the Assembly again to recognize the importance of its role and to reconfirm its mandate.

At a special meeting on 20 June marking 60 years since the dispossession of the Palestinian people, the Committee Chairman urged the international community to live up to its responsibility to bring about a just solution to the Palestine question, give support to advancing the political process and bolster it through real changes on the ground, thereby enabling the parties to make progress in negotiations on all the permanent status issues.

Assistance to Palestinians

UN activities

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/93 [YUN 2007, p. 470], the Secretary-General, in a May report [A/63/75-E/2008/52], described UN and other assistance to the Palestinian people from May 2007 to April 2008. The report provided an overview of the work of UN agencies, in cooperation with Palestinian and donor counterparts, to assist the Palestinian people and institutions with regard to economic and fiscal development, humanitarian and socio-economic development, human and social development, UN system support, private sector development, emergency assistance, and donor response and coordination.

UN agencies and programmes had to adjust to a situation in which priorities and activities with respect to the Gaza Strip and the West Bank diverged significantly under the impact of the de facto political split between the two constituent parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In Gaza, UN entities faced severe restrictions and obstacles, which made the delivery of assistance more urgent, and more difficult.

The Palestinian economy continued to decline, especially in the Gaza Strip, where the private sector collapsed in the aftermath of Hamas' takeover in 2007 and the near-complete closure by Israel. The West Bank, however, witnessed some modest economic recovery under the new PA Government. There was significant progress in reform [YUN 2007, p. 441], including pledges from international donors of $7.7 billion for a three-year period to enable the implementation of the new Palestinian Reform and Development Plan. By April, half of the pledges targeting recurrent expenditures had been disbursed, in addition to $500 million towards budgetary support. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to ensure free education for over 250,000 pupils in 306 schools in the West Bank and Gaza through its network of vocational, technical and teacher training. In Gaza, a recovery plan was introduced to provide support to 50,000 pupils in UNRWA schools. Under the Palestinian Education programme, implemented in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), five new schools were constructed in the West Bank and Gaza and 10 buildings rehabilitated, creating 1,880 new seats for students. The Programme also provided equipment, computer labs, libraries and other teaching aids to 190 schools, benefiting over 5,000 students. UNESCO provided technical assistance for the Ministry of Education and Higher Education in sectoral policy and planning efforts, supporting the preparation of the five-year Education Development Strategic Plan (2008-2012). The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) provided technical and financial assistance for building capacity and establishing teacher-training centres in disadvantaged districts. It also provided equipment for the National Institute for Teacher Education in Ramallah and Gaza, supported informal learning and recreational activities for adolescents to improve literacy and vocational skills, and implemented short-term training for teachers and school administrators. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) developed a national referral system for youth-friendly services, and continued to build the capacity of teachers, counsellors, health staff and school health committee coordinators for in-school information and counselling activities.

The World Health Organization (WHO) provided technical expertise to the Ministry of Health, training staff in child nutrition, safe water, hygiene, outbreaks and epidemics, and control and prevention of non-communicable diseases. It also supported the Ministry in procuring and delivering essential pharmaceutical supplies, substantially improving drug availability in the West Bank and Gaza. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), together with the Ministry of Agriculture and other partners, implemented 19 projects focusing on the recovery of crop and animal production, the introduction of aquaculture, support for backyard farming, gardening and cottage industries for women, and emergency assistance for preparedness and response to avian influenza outbreaks. FAO also assisted in technical training in agricultural production and marketing, irrigation and greenhouse rehabilitation, land reclamation, water resource management and the improvement of livestock production, crops and orchards.

The Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator continued to coordinate UN assistance to the Palestinian people and to represent the UN system at donor forums, while OCHA continued humanitarian coordination through the 2008 consolidated appeal (see p. 1005) and its ongoing collection of data and reporting on closures, violence and other issues. With field offices throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, OCHA identified programming gaps, published monthly reports monitoring humanitarian indicators and facilitated NGO projects through the Humanitarian and Emergency Response Fund.

Those developments occurred against the backdrop of an escalation of conflict, which remained the single greatest challenge to economic revival and viability in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and compelled agencies to deliver increasing emergency and humanitarian assistance instead of longer-term development programming. The new Palestinian Reform and Development Plan challenged the United Nations and the international community to increase the predictability of funding and programming and to ensure that their programming met the objectives identified in the Plan. The process of establishing shared strategic objectives for UN programming, initiated in early 2008, would need to translate into a common UN programmatic response to the Plan.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2008/243 of 24 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

UNCTAD assistance to Palestinians

At its fifty-fifth session (Geneva, 15 September–26 October), the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) considered its report on assistance to the Palestinian people [TD/B/55/2]. The report stated that the economy of the Occupied Palestinian Territory stagnated in 2007, as a result of which gross domestic product (GDP) per capita continued its downward trend and poverty deepened. If it were not for the resumption of foreign aid in the second half of 2007, the GDP would have contracted for the second year in a row. The construction of the separation barrier, the Israeli closure policy and the erosion of productive capacity continued to prevent recovery and entrenched “de-development”. The economic gap between the West Bank and Gaza widened as a result of political developments and the tight closure imposed on the Gaza Strip.

The report noted that the PA had announced significant reforms for achieving fiscal sustainability, but to put the economy on a path of sustainable development and self-sufficiency, those reforms needed to be complemented by empowering the PA with appropriate policy instruments. In addition, there was an urgent need to strengthen PA capacity to formulate and implement development policies and to provide sound economic management for their implementation.

UNCTAD responded to the emerging needs of the Palestinian economy through a programme of assistance designed to achieve specific national development objectives in four clusters: trade policies and strategies; trade facilitation and logistics; finance and development; and enterprise, investment and competition policy. In line with the UN Strategic Framework for 2008–2009 [YUN 2006, p. 1635], assistance to the Palestinian people had intensified in the past year, involving new research areas and technical assistance activities to mitigate the adverse economic and social conditions and to contribute to building the economic capacities of a sovereign and viable Palestinian State. However, progress towards those objectives continued to be affected by adverse conditions, especially the restrictions on the mobility of national project staff and access of UNCTAD experts to the Occupied Palestinian Territory. Political instability compelled the secretariat to suspend planned activities in the Gaza Strip, and several projects remained unfunded, despite the secretariat's appeals to donors. Nonetheless, UNCTAD was able, through a selective and flexible mode of operation, to make significant progress.

UNRWA

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) continued to provide vital education, health, relief and social services, and micro-finance to an ever-growing refugee population in the Gaza Strip, the West Bank, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

Report of Commissioner-General. In his report on the work of the Agency in 2008 [A/64/13], the UNRWA Commissioner-General said that the Occupied Palestinian Territory continued to experience the most dramatic developments. In the Gaza Strip, the year began and ended with major conflicts. The blockade imposed by Israel in June 2007 after the Hamas takeover [YUN 2007, p. 441] and the dissolution of the Palestinian National Unity Government by President

Abbas [ibid.] seriously affected all aspects of Palestinian life, even though it allowed for the exceptional importation of some essential humanitarian supplies, urgent medical evacuations and the passage of a small number of Palestinians. Unemployment rose as more private enterprises closed, depleting further the capacity of Palestinian society to support itself.

The Agency provided emergency food assistance to 190,000 refugee families and introduced a feeding programme for all 200,000 pupils in its schools in the Gaza Strip. Around $12 million was disbursed as cash grants to 30,000 poor refugee families and $6 million to cover back-to-school costs. In addition, UNRWA created 3 million job days for 56,000 refugees.

A lack of currency notes, due to the Gaza blockade, forced the Agency to suspend, effective 19 November, social welfare payments to 19,000 destitute families in the Gaza Strip. By December, UNRWA warehouses were almost empty and the Agency was unable to consolidate strategic reserves, despite the ceasefire, and was forced to delay emergency food aid to 135,000 families towards the end of the year.

During the Israeli offensive in December (see p. 492), UNRWA provided temporary shelter to over 50,000 Palestinians seeking refuge in 50 Agency installations. Critical operations, including food distributions, continued where possible.

In the West Bank, UNRWA faced increased difficulties in accessing refugee communities to meet their humanitarian needs. A total of 918 access incidents were reported, compared with 231 the previous year. In Lebanon, despite the tense political and security situation, UNRWA was able to operate with little interruption. However, tensions between Palestinian factions mounted during the second half of the year, leading to an unstable situation in the Ein el-Hilweh refugee camp, in particular. In Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic, UNRWA and the refugees enjoyed a secure and stable environment, but the continued presence of Iraqi refugees in both countries contributed to inflation and strained services provided by the Government and by UNRWA.

The security of UNRWA staff remained a concern, especially in the Gaza Strip, as did obstructions to the Agency's services and damage to its premises. An action plan was developed for mainstreaming security at all levels, as a step towards the adoption of an UNRWA security policy. Under its management reform programme, initiated in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 557], UNRWA made significant progress in achieving best practice standards in programme cycle management. The basis for a medium-term strategy for 2010–2015 was developed. A needs assessment was undertaken and results-based planning commenced for the 2010–2011 biennium; the Agency's performance indicator framework was revised accordingly.

Advisory Commission. In its comments on the Agency's 2008 report, transmitted by its Chairman [A/64/13], the UNRWA Advisory Commission commended the Agency for continuing to deliver its programmes and services to all Palestinian refugees and its vital role in contributing to regional stability. The Commission was concerned about the loss of life and hardships endured by the majority of Palestinian refugees in the West Bank and Gaza, and that the separation barrier, closures, curfews and other movement restrictions were hindering economic development, as well as UNRWA's ability to carry out its mandated tasks. The Commission reiterated the urgent need to remove restrictions regarding the movement of UNRWA staff and goods.

The Commission was also concerned about obstructions to the Agency's services and damage to its premises. It called on the General Assembly to examine the direct taxation level and additional restrictions imposed by Israel on Agency containers passing through Gaza crossings and to consider calling for reimbursement of those charges by Israel. It called on all parties to fully respect international law and urged UNRWA to continue to report on the impact of international humanitarian law violations on its operations. It remained concerned about the lack of Agency access to, and information on, its staff held by both Israeli and Palestinian authorities.

The Commission restated its view that the enduring hardships of Palestine refugees underscored UNRWA's critical role. It noted the difficulties the Agency faced in reaching a funding level sufficient to maintain adequate service delivery, and urged the international donor community to mobilize the resources needed. Noting that UNRWA's emergency appeal for $262 million in 2008 for the Occupied Palestinian Territory was its largest to date, the Commission expressed concern that only $176 million had been received.

The Commission emphasized its ongoing support for the Agency's continuing reform to improve its effectiveness in service delivery, develop the medium-term strategy for 2010–2015 and establish a clearer link between the strategy and the three corresponding biennial budgets.

The Commission called for full support for the rebuilding of the Nahr El-Bared camp in Lebanon and for relief assistance to some 30,000 refugees displaced following its destruction in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 472].

Report of Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established by General Assembly resolution 194(III) [YUN 1948–49, p. 203] to facilitate the repatriation, resettlement and economic and social rehabilitation of the refugees and the payment of compensation, in its sixty-second report, covering the period from 1 September 2007 to 31 August 2008 [A/63/317], submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/102 [YUN 2007, p. 473], noted the submission of its August 2007 report [ibid.] and observed that it had nothing further to report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, having considered the UNRWA Commissioner-General's report covering the period from 1 January to 31 December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 471], on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/63/400], adopted resolution 63/91 by recorded vote (173-1-6) [agenda item 29].

The Assembly, also on 5 December [meeting 64], on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/63/400], adopted resolution 63/93 by recorded vote (172-6-1) [agenda item 29].

Deeply concerned about the critical financial situation of the Agency, as well as about its rising expenditures resulting from the deterioration of the socio-economic and humanitarian conditions in the region and their significant negative impact on the provision of necessary Agency services to the Palestine refugees, including its emergency-related and development programmes,

Recalling Articles 100, 104 and 105 of the Charter of the United Nations and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations,

Gravely concerned about the extremely difficult living conditions being faced by the Palestine refugees in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, particularly in the refugee camps in the Gaza Strip, resulting, inter alia, from the loss of life and injury, the extensive destruction of their shelters, properties and vital infrastructure, the displacement of the Palestine refugees, the prolonged closures and socio-economic decline,

Aware of the extraordinary efforts being undertaken by the Agency for the repair or rebuilding of thousands of damaged or destroyed refugee shelters and for the provision of shelter and emergency aid for those refugee families internally displaced as a result of Israeli military actions, as well as for those refugees affected and displaced by the crisis in the Nahr el-Bared refugee camp in northern Lebanon, and welcoming the efforts of the Government of Lebanon and the international community to support the rebuilding by the Agency of the Nahr el-Bared camp,

Also deploring the killing and wounding of refugee children, including in the Agency's schools, by the Israeli occupying forces,

Expressing deep concern about the gravely negative impact of the continuing closures, the imposition of severe restrictions on the movement of persons and goods, and the construction of the wall, contrary to international law, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around East Jerusalem, on the socio-economic situation of the Palestine refugees,

Deeply concerned about the continuing imposition of restrictions on the freedom of movement and access of the Agency's staff, vehicles and goods, and the injury, harassment and intimidation of the Agency's staff, which undermine and obstruct the work of the Agency, including its ability to provide essential basic and emergency services,

6. Requests the Secretary-General to support the institutional strengthening of the Agency through the provision of sufficient financial resources from the regular budget of the United Nations;

7. Endorses, meanwhile, the efforts of the Commissioner-General to continue to provide humanitarian assistance, as far as practicable, on an emergency basis, and as a temporary measure, to persons in the area who are internally displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of recent crises in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and Lebanon;

8. Acknowledges the important support provided by the host Governments to the Agency in the discharge of its duties;

9. Encourages the Agency, in close cooperation with other relevant United Nations entities, to continue making progress in addressing the needs and rights of children and women in its operations in accordance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, respectively;

10. Expresses concern about the continuing relocation of the international staff of the Agency from its headquarters in Gaza City and the disruption of operations at the headquarters due to the deterioration and instability of the situation on the ground;

13. Urges the Government of Israel to speedily compensate the Agency for damage to its property and facilities ties resulting from actions by the Israeli side and to expeditiously reimburse the Agency for all transit charges incurred and other financial losses sustained by the Agency as a result of delays and restrictions on movement and access imposed by Israel;

14. Calls upon Israel particularly to cease obstructing the movement and access of the staff, vehicles and supplies of the Agency and to cease the levying of extra fees and charges, which affect the Agency's operations detrimentally;

15. Requests the Commissioner-General to proceed with the issuance of identification cards for Palestine refugees and their descendants in the Occupied Palestinian Territory;

16. Reiterates its request to the Commissioner-General to proceed with the modernization of the archives of the Agency through the Palestine Refugee Records Project, and to indicate progress in her report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

17. Notes the success of the Agency's microfinance and microenterprise programmes, and calls upon the Agency, in close cooperation with the relevant agencies, to continue to contribute to the development of the economic and social stability of the Palestine refugees in all fields of operation;

18. Reiterates its appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to continue and to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships for higher education to Palestine refugees in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the Agency and to contribute to the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees, and requests the Agency to act as the recipient and trustee for the special allocations for grants and scholarships;

19. Urges all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to continue and to increase their contributions to the Agency so as to ease the ongoing financial constraints, exacerbated by the current humanitarian situation on the ground that has resulted in rising expenditures, in particular with regard to emergency services, and to support the Agency's valuable and necessary work in assisting the Palestine refugees in all fields of operation.

UNRWA financing

In 2008, UNRWA expended $807.1 million—against a budget of $897.1 million—on its regular budget, projects and emergency appeal activities. The largest component was an expenditure of $496 million under the regular budget, accounting for 61.5 per cent of total expenditure. Emergency activities and projects accounted for 23 per cent and 15.4 per cent, respectively. The self-supporting microfinance department made up less than 1 per cent of total expenditure. Education remained the largest programme, accounting for 60 per cent of the regular budget, followed by health (18 per cent) and relief and social services (11 per cent). The unfunded portion of $48.4 million resulted from a difference between a needs-based budget and the donor contributions. The shortfall necessitated the adoption of stringent austerity measures throughout the Agency.

Working Group. The Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA held two meetings in 2008, on 12 and 19 September. In its report to the General Assembly [A/63/375], the Working Group noted that the deficit against the 2008 project budget of $56.8 million was expected to reach $38.1 million. The Working Group was particularly concerned that, in light of the constraints on the Agency's ability to deliver quality services imposed by inadequate physical facilities, large recurrent project budget deficits could adversely affect the regular services for refugees.

The Working Group was informed by UNRWA that its $1,093 million budget for the 2008–2009 biennium, excluding projects, had been endorsed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) and subsequently approved by the Fifth Committee. Overall pledges to UNRWA's 2008 regular budget were anticipated to fall significantly short of adjusted budget expenditure.

The Working Group noted with regret that the 2006–2007 budget had been seriously underfunded and was concerned at the large funding gap anticipated for the Agency's 2008 regular budget. It reiterated that it was the responsibility of the international community to ensure that UNRWA services were maintained at an acceptable level and that funding kept pace with the changing needs of the refugee population. It urged donors to fully fund the emergency appeal, since 70 per cent of registered refugees in the Gaza Strip were dependent on UNRWA for essential sustenance. The Working Group urged Governments to fully fund the 2008–2009 UNRWA budget and ensure that the real value of contributions to the Agency was maintained, as well as that donor support of emergency-related and special programmes did not decrease or divert contributions to its regular programme.

Displaced persons

In an August report [A/63/315], submitted in compliance with General Assembly resolution 62/103 [YUN 2007, p. 477], which called for the accelerated return of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to their homes in the territories occupied by Israel since then, the Secretary-General said that, based on information obtained from the UNRWA Commissioner-General during the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008, 1,171 refugees registered with the Agency had returned to the West Bank and 389 to the Gaza Strip from places outside the Occupied Palestinian Territory. The number of displaced registered refugees known by the Agency to have returned since June 1967 was about 30,563. The Agency was unable to estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned as it kept records only of registered refugees, and even those might be incomplete. It was not involved in any arrangements for the return of refugees or displaced persons who were not registered.

On 28 April, the Secretary-General sought information from Member States on action taken or envisaged to implement the relevant provisions of resolution 62/103. In a 7 August note verbate, Israel replied that it supported UNRWA's humanitarian mission and its contribution to the welfare of Palestinians, but remained concerned about the political motivation of resolutions 62/102 to 62/105 on UNRWA [ibid, pp. 473 & 478], as they did not reflect the reality on the ground. Israel favoured consolidating UNRWA resolutions and removing extraneous political language. It looked forward to continuing its working relationship with UNRWA, and urged the Secretary-General and the Agency to consider ways in which the fulfilment of its mandate could be enhanced in an accountable and responsible manner.

Peacekeeping operations

In 2008, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), originally set up to monitor the ceasefire called for by Security Council resolution S/801 of 29 May 1948 [YUN 1947–48, p. 427] in the newly partitioned Palestine, continued its work. UNTSO unarmed military observers fulfilled evolving mandates—from supervising the four armistice agreements between Israel and its neighbours (Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic) to observing and monitoring other ceasefires, as well as performing a number of additional tasks. During the year, UNTSO personnel worked with two remaining UN peacekeeping forces in the Middle East—the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL).

Lebanon

Lebanon remained in the focus of international attention and concern throughout 2008, as the country was taken to the brink of civil war. Terrorist attacks and assassinations targeting symbols of Lebanese sovereignty continued unabated until a reconciliation agreement among Lebanese political leaders was reached on 21 May, which led to the election of General Michel Sleiman as President of Lebanon, the formation of a Government of national unity and the launching of a national dialogue. The Secretary-General extended his good offices with a view to sustaining the relative calm that prevailed in the post-election period. However, despite the improved political climate, the country's stability remained fragile and was threatened by a number of serious security incidents involving Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias.

The paramilitary group Hizbullah maintained a major armed component separate from the State, while Palestinian militias kept up significant paramilitary structures inside and outside refugee camps, and along the Lebanese-Syrian border. Hizbullah carried out further attacks against positions of the Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) inside Israel, while IDF continued attacks within Lebanon.

The Secretary-General reported during the year on the implementation of Security Council resolutions 1559(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 506] and 1701(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 583]. The election of President Sleiman and the establishment of diplomatic relations between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic represented significant steps forward in the implementation of the former. Some progress was made with regard to the implementation of resolution 1701(2006) as well, most notably the signing of a humanitarian agreement between Hizbullah and Israel in July. On 16 July, Israel swapped the bodies of some 200 Lebanese and Palestinian fighters and five Lebanese prisoners for the bodies of two Israeli soldiers captured in 2006—Ehud Goldwasser and Eldad Regev. Major challenges remained, however, including the activities of Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias, alleged breaches of the arms embargo, border violations and Israeli overflights of Lebanese territory, all of which hindered the establishment of a permanent ceasefire and a long-term solution between Israel and Lebanon as called for by the resolution.

In order to assist in enhancing border security between Lebanon and Syria, the Secretary-General dispatched the Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team II to undertake a thorough follow-up assessment of the implementation of the recommendations of the first team of border security experts, which had conducted an initial assessment in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 484].

The United Nations International Independent Investigation Commission (UNIIC) continued to investigate the 14 February 2005 assassination of former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafik Hariri and 22 others [YUN 2005, p. 550].

The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), whose mandate the Security Council renewed in August for another 12 months, continued to play a crucial role in ensuring peace and stability in southern Lebanon, as well as full respect for the Blue Line, the provisional border drawn by the United Nations following the withdrawal of Israeli troops from southern Lebanon in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 465].

On 19 December, by resolution 63/211, the General Assembly, noting the environmental disaster caused by the destruction by the Israeli Air Force on 15 July 2006 of oil storage tanks near the el Jiyeh electric power plant in Lebanon, resulting in an oil slick that covered the entire Lebanese coastline [YUN 2006, p. 1215], requested Israel to compensate Lebanon and other affected countries for the costs of repairing the environmental damage (see p. 1150).

Appointment of Special Coordinator. On 8 April [S/2008/236], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Johan Verbeke (Belgium) as his Special Coordinator for Lebanon, replacing Geir Pedersen, who had been appointed in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 479]. The Council took note of the Secretary-General's intention on 11 April [S/2008/237]. On 30 July [S/2008/516], the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Michael C. Williams (United Kingdom) as Special Coordinator to succeed Mr. Verbeke. The Council, on 1 August [S/2008/517], took note of the Secretary-General's intention.

Communications. In communications received throughout the year [A/62/630-S/2008/4, A/62/634-S/2008/9, A/62/635-S/2008/11, A/62/637-S/2008/13, A/62/646-S/2008/22, A/62/656-S/2008/30, A/62/664-S/2008/46, A/62/675-S/2008/74, A/62/677-S/2008/79, A/62/678-S/2008/78, A/62/690-S/2008/94, A/62/702-S/2008/112, A/62/709-S/2008/129, A/62/716-S/2008/154, A/62/717-S/2008/155, A/62/738-S/2008/174, A/62/786-S/2008/224, A/62/787-S/2008/225, A/62/832-S/2008/301, A/62/833-S/2008/302, A/62/844-S/2008/333, A/62/861-S/2008/374, A/62/862-S/2008/375, A/62/886-S/2008/406, A/62/907-S/2008/461, A/62/908-S/2008/462, A/62/911-S/2008/484, A/62/937-S/2008/563, A/62/938-S/2008/564, A/62/944-S/2008/576, A/62/954-S/2008/604, A/63/357-S/2008/607, A/63/358-S/2008/608, A/63/380-S/2008/627, A/63/480-S/2008/650, A/63/481-S/2008/651, A/63/502-S/2008/669, A/63/533-S/2008/698, A/63/534-S/2008/699, A/63/557-S/2008/721, A/63/577-S/2008/747, A/63/585-S/2008/759, A/63/586-S/2008/758, A/63/661-S/2008/810] Lebanon reported on Israeli acts of aggression by air, land and sea, along with violations of the Blue Line, and consequently, of Lebanese sovereignty and territorial integrity.

In a series of letters [A/62/636-S/2008/12, A/62/655, S/2008/131, S/2008/189, S/2008/730], Israel called the attention of the Secretary-General and the Security Council to alleged violations of resolution 1701(2006). In other letters [A/62/725-S/2008/164, S/2008/232], Syria responded to Israeli allegations of weapon smuggling across the Syrian-Lebanese border and its alleged support of terrorist organizations in the region.

Political situation

Lebanon continued to experience a severe political crisis due to its failure to elect a President, an office vacant since 24 November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 501], when the extended term of President Émile Lahoud ended, as the Secretary-General reported in his semi-annual April report [S/2008/264] on the implementation of resolution 1559(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 506]. Despite the efforts of Lebanese, regional and international players, all attempts to elect a new President were fruitless. The electoral void fuelled political polarization and impeded the functioning of the country's legitimate constitutional institutions, in particular the Government and the Parliament, and contributed to violent confrontations between the opposing parties. The absence of an agreement on the presidential elections threatened the very foundations of the Lebanese State and the sovereignty, independence and stability of the country.

Following a ministerial meeting convened by the Secretary-General in December 2007 on the sidelines of the Paris donor conference [YUN 2007, p. 446], the Foreign Ministers of LAS convened in 2008 (Cairo, Egypt, 6 January) and agreed unanimously on a three-point plan to end the constitutional crisis in Lebanon. At a further meeting on 27 January in Cairo, the Foreign Ministers noted the continuing impasse, as the majority and the opposition disagreed on the interpretation of the portion of the plan related to the composition of the Government of national unity. On 6 March, the Foreign Ministers added to their original plan a provision calling for the improvement of Syria-Lebanon relations. At the twentieth ordinary Arab League summit (Damascus, Syria, 29–30 March) [S/2008/296], several Arab delegations reduced the level of their representation in protest at the non-implementation of the plan, while Lebanon did not attend. In the final summit communiqué, the Arab leaders called for adherence to the Arab League initiative to settle the Lebanese crisis, and urged Lebanon's leaders to elect consensus candidate Sleiman and agree on the basis for the formation of a national unity Government. They also stressed placing Lebanese-Syrian relations on the proper track and emphasized the importance of the formation of the international tribunal on the assassination of former Prime Minister Hariri [YUN 2005, p. 551].

In his observations, the Secretary-General stressed that the Lebanese people had a unique opportunity to open a new chapter in their difficult history. They and their political representatives had to rise to the occasion and elect a President without any conditions beyond those prescribed by the constitution. Such an election would signify a major milestone on the road towards full reassertion of Lebanon's sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence. The Secretary-General regretted that despite the numerous calls of the Lebanese people and the international community, such an election had still not been held. He firmly believed that the Lebanese leaders first and foremost had to think about the future of their country and transcend sectarian and individual interests. Parliament, which had not met in more than a year, had to be allowed to convene urgently to fulfil its constitutional duties, without foreign interference or influence. The Secretary-General was concerned that further delay in electing a President would complicate the adoption of an electoral law and the holding of parliamentary elections on time, in the first quarter of 2009.

Security Council consideration. On 8 May [meeting 5888], Terje Roed-Larsen, Special Envoy for the implementation of Security Council resolution 1599(2004), told the Council that in the context of the prolonged electoral void in Lebanon, representatives of Egypt, France, Germany, Italy, Jordan, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom and the United States; the Secretaries-General of the Council of the European Union, the United Nations and the Arab League; and Lebanon's acting Foreign Minister met in Kuwait on 22 April. They expressed support to the legitimate Lebanese Government and called for the immediate election of the consensus candidate, General Sleiman, as president without prior conditions, the establishment of a national unity Government, and the holding of general elections in conformity with an electoral law agreed by all parties, in accordance with the Arab League Plan (see p. 531). Noting that the election of a president had been postponed for the eighteenth time, to 13 May, the Secretary-General urged the Parliament to convene on that date to fulfil its constitutional duties.

Doha Agreement. At a meeting in Doha, Qatar (16–21 May), rival Lebanese factions reached an agreement ending the 18-month political crisis and opening the way for the election of a President of the Republic. The Doha Agreement on the outcome of the meeting of the Lebanese National Dialogue (the Doha Agreement), signed on 21 May by all participating political leaders, was transmitted to the Security Council by LAS on 22 May [S/2008/392] and by Qatar on 22 August [S/2008/578]. The Agreement provided for the election of the consensus candidate General Michel Sleiman as President of the Republic; the formation of a national unity Government, comprising 30 ministers—16 of whom would be allocated to the majority, 11 to the opposition, and 3 to the President; the submission of the reform clauses of the draft electoral law, drafted by the National Electoral Law Drafting Commission, to Parliament for consideration; and the initiation of dialogue on the reinforcement of the authority of the State in accordance with paragraph 5 of the 15 May 2008 Beirut agreement.

All parties pledged by virtue of the Agreement not to resign or obstruct the Government's work, to refrain from using weapons or violence to achieve political gains, as well as from using mutual recrimination or political and sectarian propaganda, and to commit themselves to security and military authority being the sole province of the State.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 May [meeting 5896], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/17 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council congratulates the leaders and people of Lebanon and welcomes and strongly supports the agreement reached in Doha on May 21 under the auspices of the Arab League, which constitutes an essential step towards the resolution of the current crisis, the return to the normal functioning of Lebanese democratic institutions and the complete restoration of Lebanon's unity and stability.

The Council commends the efforts of the League of Arab States, in particular of the committee of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, under the leadership of the Emir of the State of Qatar, Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa Al-Thani, the Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Qatar, Sheikh Hamad bin Jassim bin Jabr Al-Thani, and the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, Mr. Amre Moussa, in helping Lebanese leaders to reach an agreement.

The Security Council welcomes the agreement to elect a President of the Republic, to establish a national unity cabinet and to address Lebanon's electoral law, in accordance with the League of Arab States initiative, as well as the decision to continue the national dialogue on ways to reinforce the authority of the State over all its territory, in such a way to guarantee the sovereignty and the safety of the State and the people of Lebanon. It welcomes the agreement to ban the use of weapons and violence as a means to settle disputes, irrespective of their nature and under any circumstances.

The Council calls for the implementation of this agreement in its entirety, in accordance with the League of Arab States initiative, and in conformity with the Taef agreement and all relevant Council resolutions and statements of its President on the situation in Lebanon.

The Council reaffirms its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty, unity and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized borders and under the sole and exclusive authority of the Government of Lebanon over all Lebanese territory.

New President and unity Government. In his eighth semi-annual report [S/2008/654] on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1559(2004), the Secretary-General reported in October that due to the tireless efforts of the Emir of Qatar, his Prime Minister and the LAS Secretary-General, the Lebanese Parliament convened on 25 May to elect a new President as part of the Doha Agreement. General Michel Sleiman, who received 118 out of 127 votes, was the first president to take office in Lebanon since the withdrawal of Syrian troops in 2005. On 11 July, following intense negotiations, President Sleiman issued a decree forming a national unity Government, headed by Fouad Siniora as Prime Minister. In accordance with the Doha Agreement, the 30-member cabinet included 16 seats allocated to the Parliamentary majority, 11 to the opposition and 3 to the President. On 12 August, by an overwhelming majority, the Parliament expressed confidence in the new cabinet and its policy. On 30 September, the Parliament adopted a new electoral law paving the way for parliamentary elections in 2009.

The Secretary-General said that the Lebanese had taken a step further towards strengthening their country's sovereignty, stability, unity and political independence. It was important that the parties implement in full the provisions of the Doha Agreement, including their commitment to refrain from the use of weapons to settle internal political disputes. He welcomed the first session of the National Dialogue, held on 16 September to address the question of a national defence strategy and the status of armed groups. If Lebanon was to accomplish the process of consolidating its sovereignty and national unity, all parties had to fully engage in that national process in a spirit of genuine cooperation.

Security Council consideration. Reporting to the Security Council on 30 October [meeting 6008], Special Envoy Roed-Larsen said that the Secretary-General was concerned that the scars left by the clashes in spring might have prompted, if not accelerated, a process of rearmament in Lebanon. That activity and the continued presence of groups with military and paramilitary capacities threatened the holding of the free and fair parliamentary elections in 2009. The United Nations supported the Government's efforts to ensure a stable security environment in which those elections could be held. The United Nations welcomed attempts by Lebanese leaders to normalize their relations in the interests of Lebanon's security and political stability.

Implementation of resolution 1559(2004)

The Secretary-General submitted his seventh and eighth semi-annual reports on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1559(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 506], which called for strict respect of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and political independence of Lebanon under the sole and exclusive authority of the Government, the withdrawal of all remaining foreign forces and the disbanding and disarmament of all Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias. He also declared the Council's support for the extension of the Government's control over all Lebanese territory, and for a free and fair electoral process in the presidential election.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his seventh semi-annual report on the implementation of resolution 1559(2004) [S/2008/264], the Secretary-General stated that in the six months since his last report [YUN 2007, p. 499], Lebanon continued to experience a severe political crisis, centred on the failure to elect a President. It had also contributed, at times, to violent confrontations between the opposing parties, leading to casualties. The absence of an agreement on the presidential elections threatened the very foundations of the State, which confronted challenges of a magnitude unseen since the end of the civil war, with possible regional repercussions. The series of terrorist attacks and assassinations that had shaken Lebanon since October 2004, targeting symbols of its sovereignty, continued unabated. On 25 January, Major Wissam Eid, head of the technical section of the Information Branch of the Internal Security Forces, was killed along with five others, and 20 people were injured.

On 8 January, UNIFIL troops were attacked for the third time since the July/August 2006 war [YUN 2006, p. 574] outside the area of operations. On 15 January, in the first attack on a diplomatic target in Beirut since the civil war, an explosion apparently targeted a vehicle of the United States Embassy, leaving three people dead and dozens wounded. The climate of insecurity induced several countries to issue travel warnings to Lebanon and to reduce their Embassy staff.

Since the withdrawal of Syrian troops, military assets and the military intelligence apparatus from Lebanon in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 560], the Secretary-General had encouraged the initiation by Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic of a process that would eventually lead to the establishment of full diplomatic relations, which would significantly contribute to the stability of the region. Regrettably, there had been no progress towards that goal. The delineation of the border between the two countries remained an element of crucial importance. The mandate in resolution 1559(2004) for Lebanon to extend its governmental authority over all of its territory could only be realized if the entirety of that territory was known by the Government and all other parties, with its exact boundaries determined and delineated. The implementation of measures towards that end would be an important step towards the extension of the Government's control over all of its territory and to stability in the region. Preventing breaches of the arms embargo was also critical to achieving that objective. Lebanon continued to be concerned about smuggling activities along its eastern and northern land borders. A number of Member States had provided the Secretary-General with information that appeared to corroborate the allegation of the flow of weapons and fighters across the Syrian-Lebanese border. Syria continued to deny any involvement in those breaches and pointed to contacts between itself and Lebanon regarding the control of their common borders. It affirmed that it had increased the presence of its border guards.

Due to the ongoing political crisis, in particular the impasse in electing a President and the deteriorating security situation, the Government's ability to extend its authority over all of Lebanese territory remained restricted and the opposition continued to question the Government's legitimacy. The Government reiterated its interest in improving the monitoring of its land borders to prevent the unauthorized flow of weapons, munitions and personnel into the country. The armed forces helped to improve peace and stability in southern Lebanon, despite being overstretched as a result of competing security challenges. The existence of Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias and allegations of widespread rearming and paramilitary training across the spectrum constituted a challenge for the Government's authority throughout its territory. The most significant militia was the armed component of Hizbullah. In addition, several Palestinian militias operated inside and outside of refugee camps. The existence of armed groups challenged the control of the legitimate Government. The Secretary-General regretted that in recent months, there had been no discussion among Lebanese leaders about a political process leading to the disbanding and disarming of the militias, as called for by the 1989 Taif Agreement [YUN 1989, p. 203] and resolution 1559(2004).

On 7 January, at the initiative of PA President Mahmoud Abbas, in cooperation with Lebanese Prime Minister Fouad Siniora, the PLO representative in Lebanon, Abbas Zaki, launched the Palestine Declaration for Lebanon, setting out for the first time since the end of the civil war in 1991 the PLO policy towards Lebanon. The Declaration addressed the two main concerns of resettlement and arms. It rejected any resettlement plan and emphasized Palestinian respect for Lebanon's independence and sovereignty, and stipulated that all arms carried by various Palestinian factions, be they inside or outside refugee camps, had to be subject to Lebanese laws and not used in any inter-Lebanese conflict. The PLO offered an unconditional apology for any damage caused by the Palestinians to Lebanon, whether intentionally or not, since 1948.

In the same spirit, the document urged the Lebanese to improve the living conditions of the refugees.

Palestinian refugee camps continued to pose a major challenge to Lebanon's stability and security, owing in particular to the presence of a range of non-State actors. The Secretary-General was concerned over the threats from Al-Qaida-inspired militias in the camps and the emergence of new militant groups. On 21 March, clashes between Fatah and the extremist militant group Jund al-Sham, known to espouse Al-Qaida-oriented ideology, erupted in the Ain al-Hilweh camp, leading to one fatality. While the situation in most of the 12 Palestinian camps remained relatively stable, the threat of internal violence spilling over into surrounding areas existed in a number of them, particularly in southern Lebanon. Given the detrimental effects of living conditions in the camps on the wider security situation in Lebanon, it was imperative that progress be made towards disbanding and disarming Palestinian militias, as well as improving the living conditions of the refugees.

The Secretary-General was concerned also over the activities of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command and Fatah al-Intifada, which maintained significant paramilitary infrastructures outside refugee camps and along the Lebanese-Syrian border. As both groups had their headquarters in Damascus, the Secretary-General reminded Syria that it bore responsibility for urging them to abide by Security Council resolutions and the decisions of the Lebanese Government. He took note of the public call on Syria by Prime Minister Siniora, on the eve of the Arab League summit on 28 March, to cooperate with Lebanon on disarming Palestinian militias headquartered in Damascus.

Hizbullah's maintenance of an armed component and a paramilitary structure separate from the State had an adverse effect on the Government's efforts to assert its exclusive control over the entire territory of Lebanon and constituted a threat to regional peace and security. In several public announcements, the leaders of Hizbullah claimed that it had rebuilt and increased its military capacity since the July/August 2006 war [YUN 2006, p. 574]. Hizbullah also reportedly continued to develop throughout the country a secure communication network separate from the State's system. Those developments gave rise to a growing impression that parallel institutional structures were being built up.

The Secretary-General called on all Lebanese leaders to initiate discussions on the status of Hizbullah's paramilitary arsenal. Mindful of the regional ramifications, the Secretary-General called on those parties with close ties to Hizbullah, in particular Iran and Syria, to support its transformation in the best interest of regional peace and stability.

The Secretary-General was alarmed by the consistent allegations that militias on all sides of the political spectrum were reappearing, in contravention of the Taif Agreement [YUN 1989, p. 203] and resolution 1559(2004). He called on the Lebanese parties to halt immediately all efforts to rearm and engage in weapons training, and to return instead to dialogue through the legitimate political institutions, in particular the Parliament, as the only viable method of settling issues and resolving the ongoing political crisis.

The disarming and disbanding of Lebanese and non-Lebanese militias was necessary to complete Lebanon's consolidation as a sovereign and democratic State, and should be carried out through an inclusive political dialogue that addressed the political and economic interests of all Lebanese. The Secretary-General urged renewed political dialogue to affirm the commitment of all parties to the disarmament of the militias, including Hizbullah, in fulfilment of resolution 1559(2004). In that context, he emphasized, Syria and Iran, which maintained close ties with the party, bore a significant responsibility in supporting such a process, for the sake of the security, stability and welfare of both Lebanon and the wider region.

Three years after Syria's military withdrawal from Lebanon, the Secretary-General said that the time had come for a redefinition and formalization of ties between the two historically close neighbours, in mutual respect for their sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence.

Conscious of the conditions in the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon and the challenges arising from them, the Secretary-General commended the Lebanese Government, working in close cooperation with the PLO and UNRWA, for its commitment to improving those conditions. The UN system stood ready to work with its Lebanese and Palestinian partners towards that goal, while helping to bring about an Israeli-Palestinian peace agreement. He called on Member States to contribute generously to the forthcoming appeal by Lebanon and UNRWA for the reconstruction of the Nahr al-Bared camp and the rehabilitation of the surrounding area affected by the previous year's violence, at a donor conference to be held under World Bank auspices.

Communications. On 2 May [S/2008/293], Iran brought to the Security Council President's attention allegedly unwarranted references against Iran contained in the Secretary-General's April report (see p. 533).

On 4 May [S/2008/295], Syria said that the Secretary-General's report went well beyond the mandate of the Special Envoy for the Implementation of Security Council resolution 1559(2004) and addressed issues unrelated to the resolution.

Report of Secretary-General (October). On 16 October, the Secretary-General, in his eighth semi-annual report [S/2008/654] on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1559(2004), stated that over the previous six months, Lebanon had experienced both the ruinous effects of sectarian violence, as well as hope and optimism. On 6 May, the Lebanese Cabinet declared Hizbullah's secure communication network separate from the State's system illegal and unconstitutional, and announced the dismissal of the chief of security of Beirut International Airport. In protest, Hizbullah closed all roads leading to and from the airport and other principal roads in parts of the capital, and threatened to continue its action until the Government rescinded both decisions. Later that day, there were exchanges of fire throughout several districts of Beirut between members of the opposition and pro-Government forces, which also closed the main border crossing between Lebanon and Syria. The violence, which included the use of heavy weaponry, escalated and spread to other parts of the country, bringing it to an effective standstill. Hostilities continued until 14 May, resulting in 69 fatalities and more than 180 wounded. During the clashes, many alleged human rights violations were registered, including illegal detention and ill-treatment, civilian deaths, instances of summary execution, destruction of private property, and attacks on the media and freedom of expression.

On 11 May, LAS condemned the use of armed violence to achieve political objectives, and at an emergency meeting, decided to dispatch a delegation to Beirut. On 14 May, a Ministerial Committee of Arab Foreign Ministers, headed by the Prime Minister of Qatar, Sheikh Hamad bin Jasseim Al-Thani, and by the Secretary-General of LAS, Amre Moussa, held discussions in Lebanon with the parties aimed at ending the crisis. The following day, the Cabinet rescinded its 6 May decision, and shortly afterwards, the Arab Committee announced an inter-Lebanese understanding that called for calm on the streets and the withdrawal of all armed elements. The agreement also called for a Lebanese national dialogue to begin the following day in Doha, Qatar, where Lebanese leaders reached a comprehensive political understanding on 21 May, leading to the election of General Sleiman as President of Lebanon on 25 May (see p. 533). On the eve of the election, the long-standing protests outside the Prime Minister's Office were brought to an end. On 13 and 14 August, at the invitation of President Bashar Al-Assad, President Sleiman visited the Syrian Arab Republic, where a series of agreements were reached of significant relevance to the implementation of resolution 1559(2004).

Despite the reconciliation agreement reached in Doha, there were violent clashes leading to fatalities, especially in and around the northern city of Tripoli. In a particularly serious incident of 13 August, an improvised explosive device was detonated at a bus stop frequently used by Lebanese soldiers in Tripoli, killing 15 people, among them 10 soldiers. On 10 September, Saleh Aridi, a senior member of the Lebanese Democratic Party, was killed in a car bomb in Baysur. On 29 September, a new terrorist attack targeted the Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) in Tripoli, killing six people, including four soldiers, and injuring 32, among them 18 soldiers. The clashes in May and the several security incidents emphasized the threats posed by the presence of militias to the stability of the country, and the need for the Government and LAF to exercise the monopoly on the use of force throughout Lebanon.

The Secretary-General encouraged the early initiation of a process for the establishment of full diplomatic relations between Lebanon and Syria. Following a meeting in Paris on 12 July, convened by French President Nicolas Sarkozy, and talks on 13 and 14 August, between the Presidents of Lebanon and Syria, the Foreign Ministers of both countries, on 15 October, signed in Damascus a memorandum announcing the establishment of diplomatic relations effective the same day. In that document, the two countries reaffirmed their determination to reinforce and consolidate their relations on the basis of mutual respect for their sovereignty and independence. They informed the Secretary-General that embassies would be established in both capitals by the end of the year.

No significant progress was made towards the full delineation of the common border between the two countries. However, noting that the parties on 14 August had announced the revival of the work of the joint committee for delineating the common borders, the Secretary-General welcomed their renewed intention to make progress on the matter.

Over the reporting period, there was no tangible progress towards the disbanding and disarming of militias, as called for in the Taif Agreement and resolution 1559(2004). Hizbullah's parallel structures prevented exclusive government control over the entire Lebanese territory and threatened international peace and security. The Secretary-General called on Hizbullah to comply with all relevant Security Council resolutions and urged all parties with close ties to that organization, in particular Syria and Iran, to support its transformation into a political party.

At the conclusion of the national dialogue held in Doha (16–21 May), Lebanese leaders reaffirmed their commitment to the principles of the Lebanese Constitution and the Taif Agreement. They also committed themselves to prohibiting the use of weapons or violence in any internal conflict and pledged to pursue the national dialogue under the auspices of the Lebanese President, and to promote the Government's authority throughout its territory and its relations with different groups in a way that would guarantee the security of the State and its citizens. No progress was made in disarming Palestinian militias.

While rejecting the permanent resettlement of Palestinians in Lebanon, the Government acknowledged their right to a dignified life and pledged to continue efforts to resolve their humanitarian and social concerns inside and outside the camps. It intended to work with Palestinians to implement the decisions of the 2006 national dialogue [YUN 2006, pp. 569–73], while assuming the responsibility of protecting the camps from any attack. During an historic visit to Lebanon on 28 and 29 August, PA President Abbas reiterated his support for the decisions of the national dialogue and the need for Palestinians in Lebanon to respect the country's sovereignty and political independence.

The Secretary-General urged Syria to ensure that the two Palestinian groups headquartered in Damascus, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command and Fatah al-Intifada, abided by Lebanese Government's decisions and Lebanese law, in line with relevant Security Council resolutions. Continuing security incidents in the Ain al-Hilweh camp and the precarious situation of the Al-Beddawi camp indicated that the restoration of law and order in the camps would be key to ensuring stability and security in Lebanon. The Secretary-General welcomed the Government's commitment—negotiated with the Palestinian authorities and announced at the international donor conference held in Vienna on 23 June—to rebuild the Nahr al-Bared camp and to take joint responsibility for security therein. He hoped that it would serve as a model for Lebanon's other Palestinian camps.

The Secretary-General called on Lebanese parties to halt immediately all efforts to acquire and build paramilitary capacities. He also welcomed the outcome of the Syrian-Lebanese summit held in Damascus in August, at which both Presidents announced important steps their countries would take to normalize their relations.

Communication. Commenting on the Secretary-General's report, the Syrian Arab Republic, on 29 October [S/2008/680], stated that the resolutions adopted by the LAS Ministerial Council in March underlined support for Lebanon's national reconciliation process and the sovereignty and integrity of its territory. Syria reaffirmed its denial of claims in the Secretary-General's report that weapons and fighters continued to flow across the border. Syria reaffirmed that the delineation of the border with Lebanon was a bilateral issue, the real impediment to which was Israel's continued occupation of the Syrian Golan, the Shab'a Farms and the northern part of the village of Ghajar, and its refusal to comply with international resolutions.

Security Council consideration. On 30 October [meeting 6008], the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's eighth semi-annual report on the implementation of resolution 1559(2004), which was introduced by his Special Envoy. The Council did not take any action on the report.

Further developments. In accordance with the 15 October memorandum establishing diplomatic relations between Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, the Secretary-General indicated, in a later report [S/2009/218], that on 23 December, the Lebanese President issued a presidential decree naming the Lebanese members of the Lebanese-Syrian border committee tasked with delineating their common border, which was reactivated pursuant to the agreement reached in Damascus in August.

Implementation of resolution 1701(2006) and UNIFIL activities

In three periodic reports submitted to the Security Council during the year, the Secretary-General updated the Security Council on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 583], highlighting progress made, as well as areas that continued to impede the establishment of a permanent ceasefire and a long-term solution between Israel and Lebanon. By the same resolution, the Council had expanded the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) to undertake substantial new tasks, in addition to those mandated under resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312], and authorized an increase in the Force strength from 2,000 to a maximum of 15,000 troops. In August, the Council extended UNIFIL's mandate for another year.

Communication. On 15 February [A/62/698-S/2008/102], Lebanon transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Security Council a position paper, prepared in anticipation of the Secretary-General's periodic report on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006). Lebanon declared its commitment to the resolution's full implementation, and abided by its obligations thereunder. It looked forward to serious progress on the resolution's remaining elements and to the full abiding by Israel.

Report of Secretary-General (February). On 28 February, the Secretary-General submitted his sixth report [S/2008/135] on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006). He noted that both Lebanon and Israel expressed continued commitment to implementing the resolution, and cooperation between UNIFIL and LAF had increased through the augmentation of coordinated operations, which contributed significantly to the general calm prevailing in the UNIFIL area.

In the UNIFIL area of operations, the military and security situation was generally stable. The deployment and activities of UNIFIL and LAF contributed to the longest period of relative stability in southern Lebanon in many years and helped to establish a new strategic environment south of the Litani River. Those efforts were also felt in northern Israel, as acknowledged by the Israeli authorities. However, a number of serious incidents raised tension, particularly along known points of friction along the Blue Line.

On 8 January, IDF informed UNIFIL that two rockets had hit the northern Israeli town of Shelomi, causing minor damage, but no injuries. No trace of the launching site was discovered, and no one had claimed responsibility. Lebanese civilians from around Ghajar village were involved in smuggling illegal substances and commercial goods into Israel. On 3 February, an IDF patrol opened fire and wounded two Lebanese civilians suspected of smuggling in the Israeli-occupied area around Ghajar village, north of the Blue Line. One of them subsequently died, and the other was in LAF custody. UNIFIL was investigating the incident.

During the reporting period, there were three instances of IDF soldiers pointing their weapons, including lasers, in the direction of UNIFIL patrols. UNIFIL, as well as IDF, were investigating an incident on 13 February, when small arms fire from the Israeli side hit a minefield warning sign in the vicinity of a UN mine clearance team operating close to the Blue Line. On 24 February, a UNIFIL vehicle patrol in the area of operations was blocked for a few hours by a group of Lebanese civilians. On two occasions in January, in the Shab'a Farms area and in the vicinity of Ghajar, IDF apprehended a Lebanese shepherd crossing the Blue Line. UNIFIL also reported a number of minor ground violations by local shepherds, which might be inadvertent, but could lead to incidents and unintended escalation of tension along the Blue Line. A pilot project was initiated by UNIFIL, with LAF and IDF, to visibly mark a six-kilometre stretch of the Blue Line in the western sector of the area of operations.

UNIFIL observed a significant number of Israeli violations of Lebanese airspace on an almost daily basis, particularly on 7 and 11 February, involving large numbers of fighter aircraft and unmanned aerial vehicles. Some of the aircraft flew at low altitude, including over UNIFIL headquarters in Naqura. On 17 February, UNIFIL recorded 36 air violations, mainly by unmanned aerial vehicles. Israeli overflights of Lebanese territory violated Lebanese sovereignty and resolution 1701(2006), escalated tensions and significantly increased the possibility of security incidents—as demonstrated on 21 January, when LAF opened fire on Israeli aircraft violating Lebanese airspace. Air violations caused unnecessary apprehension among the local population, particularly when conducted at low altitude and in a provocative manner, and impeded UNIFIL's ability to further stabilize the situation. Lebanon continued to protest those violations of its sovereignty and of resolution 1701(2006), while Israel maintained that overflights were a necessary security measure that would continue until its two soldiers, Ehud Goldwasser and Eldad Regev, abducted in 2006, were released and the measures set out in paragraphs 14 and 15 of resolution 1701(2006) concerning the arms embargo were implemented in full.

Concerning security and liaison arrangements, the UNIFIL Force Commander and senior representatives of LAF and IDF held regular tripartite meetings as a confidence-building mechanism, and addressed key security and military operational issues to help prevent incidents and violations, and enhance liaison and coordination. Despite intensive efforts, the impasse over the temporary security arrangements for the northern part of Ghajar village had not been overcome.

In the area of operations controlled by the combined presence of UNIFIL and LAF troops, UNIFIL maintained 61 permanent positions, 136 observation posts and six temporary checkpoints and observation posts. The Force conducted an average of 400 vehicle, foot and air patrols, day and night, in any 24-hour period throughout its area of operations in both rural and urban areas. LAF deployed four brigades of different sizes, operated more than 100 checkpoints and observation posts, and patrolled critical locations south of the Litani River. In maintaining that significant commitment of resources, LAF contributed to the improvement of peace and stability in southern Lebanon, despite being overstretched as a result of additional responsibilities, such as manning the border areas and providing security in main Lebanese urban centres, particularly Beirut. On occasion, LAF had to temporarily redeploy some troops from the UNIFIL area of operations to address such specific security requirements.

Coordination and liaison between UNIFIL and LAF strengthened during the reporting period to ensure that the area between the Blue Line and the Litani River was free of unauthorized armed personnel, assets and weapons. Coordinated operations, including temporary observation posts, co-located checkpoints and coordinated vehicle and foot patrols increased, resulting in enhanced monitoring and control over the UNIFIL area. Those operations resulted in 96 findings of abandoned arms, ammunition and explosive devices, and the discovery of rocket launchers, rockets, mortar bombs, explosive devices, and caves or bunkers. LAF destroyed or confiscated arms and ammunition found south of the Litani River. UNIFIL and LAF ensured that the area south of the Litani River was free of unauthorized armed personnel, assets and weapons. Rocket firings and attacks against UNIFIL indicated that there were still hostile elements and unauthorized arms, including in the area of operations, undermining joint efforts to implement resolution 1701(2006) and posing a direct threat to peace and security. It was therefore necessary for UNIFIL and LAF to intensify their coordinated efforts, through increased controls on the Litani River, to counter any movement of weapons and prevent hostile activities.

The UNIFIL Maritime Task Force continued to perform maritime interdiction operations along the Lebanese coast to prevent the entry into Lebanon of unauthorized arms and related materiel. Since the Task Force assumed its mission in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 589], more than 12,500 ships had been hailed and queried, with close to 70 vessels identified as suspicious.

Overall coordination between UNIFIL and IDF was good, the Secretary-General stated, with UNIFIL maintaining a liaison office with two officers at the IDF Northern Command headquarters in Zefat. Progress was also made towards the establishment of a UNIFIL office in Tel Aviv.

The Secretary-General was concerned about the smuggling of weapons into Lebanon across the Lebanese-Syrian border. Also of concern were the heavily armed military positions of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command and Fatah al-Intifada along the same border, whose existence challenged Lebanon's sovereignty, owing to their de facto control of that stretch of the border. LAF maintained a defensive line around both of those military camps.

Lebanon continued to enhance its capacity to secure its borders. The Lebanese Common Border Force, which brought together about 800 personnel from the four main Lebanese security agencies (Army, Internal Security, General Security and Customs Authorities), began ground operations between December 2007 and January 2008, in an area of operations some 130 kilometres along Lebanon's northern border with the Syrian Arab Republic and 20 kilometres into Lebanese territory. The Lebanese authorities also relocated the key northern border crossing of Aboudieh to a location along the Nahr al-Kabir river to reduce the possibility for diversionary routes and illicit cross-border activity. The customs authorities updated and enhanced the computerization of their tracking and control mechanisms with support from the international community.

Key aspects of the recommendations of the Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team for enhancing security arrangements along the border remained to be implemented. As requested by the Security Council in statement S/PRST/2007/29 [YUN 2007, p. 487], the Secretary-General intended to dispatch a second team to Lebanon to carry out an assessment, in coordination with the Lebanese Government.

UNIFIL's total strength amounted to 12,707 military personnel as at 25 February. It was supported by 51 United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) military observers of the Observer Group Lebanon. In addition, 313 international and 612 national staff served with UNIFIL. The Maritime Task Force comprised four out of five required frigates and seven out of ten required corvettes/patrol boats. A ship-to-task analysis to ensure that the UNIFIL naval assets were optimally equipped to carry out their tasks was being finalized. At the end of February, Germany would hand over leadership of the Task Force to the European Maritime Force, a southern European naval initiative supported by France, Italy, Portugal and Spain. A comprehensive review of UNIFIL's Strategic Military Cell was finalized, as requested by General Assembly resolution 61/250 B [ibid., p. 492].

The Secretary-General noted that since the adoption of resolution 1701(2006), the deployment and activities of both UNIFIL and LAF had contributed to the longest period of stability in southern Lebanon for many years and helped to establish a new strategic environment in the area south of the Litani River. Those effects were also felt in northern Israel and acknowledged by the Israeli authorities. However, a number of incidents occurring over the reporting period had raised tensions in the UNIFIL area of operations. The Secretary-General was concerned about the threats of open war against Israel uttered by the Secretary-General of Hizbullah on 14 and 22 February, following the funeral of Imad Mughniyeh, assassinated on 13 February in Damascus; such rhetoric was against the spirit and intentions of resolution 1701(2006), which aimed to achieve a permanent ceasefire.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 April [meeting 5867], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/8 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its resolution 1773(2007) as well as the statements by its President on Lebanon and welcomes the reports of the Secretary-General of 30 October 2007 and of 28 February 2008.

It reiterates its commitment to the full implementation of all provisions of its resolution 1701(2006) and reaffirms its strong support for the efforts of the Secretary-General in this regard.

The Council takes note of the progress as well as of the concerns expressed by the Secretary-General regarding the implementation of resolution 1701(2006) and emphasizes the need for greater progress on all the key issues required for a permanent ceasefire and long-term solution, as referred to in the reports of the Secretary-General.

It also calls upon all concerned parties, in particular in the region, to intensify their efforts in implementing resolution 1701(2006), including by fully cooperating with the Secretary-General in this regard.

The Council reiterates its full support for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and calls upon all parties to abide by their obligations to respect the safety of United Nations personnel. It welcomes the further enhancement of the cooperation between the Force and the Lebanese Armed Forces.

It stresses the importance of, and the need to achieve, a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, based on all its relevant resolutions including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973.

Communications. In a 4 April letter [S/2008/223], Iran rejected allegations in the Secretary-General's February report (see p. 537) concerning the transfer of sophisticated weaponry to Lebanon, which it claimed were based on false and misleading information provided by Israel.

On 18 April [S/2008/261], Israel welcomed the Council President's statement, but stated it would have preferred specific reference made to the major aspects of the arms embargo, the rearming of Hizbullah and the abducted Israeli soldiers. A detailed list of Blue Line violations was annexed to Israel's letter.

On 17 June [A/62/883-S/2008/399], Lebanon forwarded a position paper on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006), as well as lists of 633 air, 13 maritime and 143 land violations by Israel during the period from 11 February to 29 March. Lebanon declared that it looked forward to achieving serious progress on the outstanding elements of the resolution and to Israel's full implementation of its articles.

Report of Secretary-General (June). On 27 June, the Secretary-General submitted his seventh report [S/2008/425] on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006). Following the efforts of LAS and the mediation by Qatar, Lebanon started to emerge from the crisis that had paralyzed the normal functioning of State institutions for the past year and a half. The Doha Agreement reached on 21 May (see p. 532) established the basis for resolving many long-standing issues.

There were no breaches of the cessation of hostilities, and UNIFIL continued, with the parties, to ensure full respect for the Blue Line. UNIFIL and LAF also continued to ensure that the area between the Blue Line and the Litani River was not utilized for hostile activities and was free of any unauthorized armed personnel, assets and weapons. Cooperation between UNIFIL and LAF continued to be good. The military and security situation in the UNIFIL area was generally quiet, although a number of incidents on occasion raised tensions. The Blue Line continued to be respected by the parties, although there were allegations of violations that could, however, not be corroborated by UNIFIL. Some progress was made with respect to the pilot project for visibly marking a 6-kilometre stretch of the Blue Line, although the process seemed to have slowed down. The pumping by Israel of accumulated flood water to Lebanese territory in the vicinity of Kafr Kila prompted demonstrations by affected Lebanese farmers; UNIFIL defused tension by pumping the water into trucks for dispersal elsewhere and submitted a proposal to the parties to prevent a recurrence of the problem.

During the reporting period, UNIFIL recorded and protested unprecedented violations by Israel of Lebanese airspace, at an average of more than 20 per day, in March and April. Israel had not completed its withdrawal from southern Lebanon in accordance with its obligations under resolution 1701(2006), which, according to the Secretary-General, was a continuous source of tension. To break the impasse and facilitate IDF withdrawal, UNIFIL submitted a new proposal and was awaiting the parties' response. Following shooting incidents the previous year and in February in the vicinity of Ghajar, UNIFIL implemented security measures to prevent violations of the Blue Line and smuggling activities, in accordance with an agreement reached with the parties during an April tripartite meeting. UNIFIL and LAF also intensified patrolling in the area.

In April, UNIFIL and LAF conducted the first session of a strategic review of their military tasks and reached agreement on measures to strengthen coordination and liaison; increasing the number of daily counter-rocket launching operations and expanding coverage from areas adjacent to the Blue Line to other parts of the area of operations; enhancing efforts to deter and prevent hunting in the area of operations; intensifying of surveillance in areas near the Blue Line; and operating co-located checkpoints and increasing the number of vehicle checks. They also agreed to improve liaison and interaction at the operational and tactical levels. As a result, coordinated operations increased in frequency and complexity. During co-ordinated operations, 92 items, including abandoned arms, ammunition and explosive devices from the 2006 conflict or before were discovered in the area south of the Litani River.

To date, UNIFIL, working in cooperation with LAF, had found no evidence of new military infrastructure in the UNIFIL area of operations. However, UNIFIL did encounter unauthorized armed personnel on one occasion, and past attacks on UNIFIL and rocket attacks against Israel demonstrated that there were unauthorized arms and hostile groups prepared to use them. Several incidents during the reporting period highlighted the challenges that UNIFIL faced in fulfilling its mandated activities.

The UNIFIL Maritime Task Force continued to perform maritime interdiction operations along the Lebanese coast to prevent the entry of unauthorized arms and related material. On 17 March, the Task Force electronically detected a vessel entering the UNIFIL area of maritime operations from Israeli waters without following proper procedure, and on 22 and 23 May, LAF protested the alleged hailing by IDF navy of two ships in Lebanese territorial waters.

During the reporting period, there were several incidents in or around the camps, in particular the Ein el-Hilweh camp in Sidon and the Nahr al-Bared camp in northern Lebanon, as well as near the city of Tripoli. Seven people were killed and 26 injured as a result. In one of those incidents, which occurred on 31 May near the entrance of Nahr al-Bared, a LAF outpost was targeted by an explosion that killed one soldier. Due to the deterioration of the security situation early in May and the resignation of the Government later that month, it was not possible to dispatch a team of experts to carry out a detailed assessment of the implementation of the recommendations of the 2007 Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team [YUN 2007, p. 484].

There was no significant change in the border security arrangements along the eastern frontier of Lebanon with the Syrian Arab Republic. The Lebanese Common Border Force, deployed along the northern border with the Syrian Arab Republic, in the context of a German-led pilot project, uncovered numerous cases of smuggling, mostly involving fuel and other consumer products, but no incidents of weapons smuggling were observed. Measures were taken to close the illegal smuggling routes and enhance procedures at official crossing points.

The Lebanese authorities, with international donor support, worked to improve Lebanon's capacity to control its borders in other areas, such as the Beirut International Airport, and Lebanese Customs and General Security. Lebanon emphasized the need for cooperation on border management with Syrian counterparts.

During the period from the end of the 2006 conflict through 19 June 2008, incidents involving unexploded ordnance, including cluster munitions, led to 27 civilian fatalities and 231 civilian injuries, while mine-clearance incidents resulted in 13 fatalities and 38 injuries. The UN Mine Action Coordination Centre-South Lebanon coordinated the clearance and reduction of approximately 36.6 million square metres of contaminated land, comprising 49 per cent of the surface and 29 per cent of the sub-surface areas, through a joint effort including LAF, the United Nations, bilaterally funded clearance organizations and UNIFIL. In total, 145,580 cluster munitions were located and destroyed. The size of the affected area, originally estimated at 32 million square metres, had increased to 39.4 million. The Mine Action Coordination Centre identified 21 additional cluster-bomb strike locations, bringing the total to 984 locations recorded.

On the issue of Shab'a Farms, the Secretary-General had received a letter from Prime Minister Siniora, dated 2 April, welcoming the completion of the cartographic work on the definition of the area. The Prime Minister considered that the provisional definition in the Secretary-General's 30 October 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 490] provided a reasonable and practical basis for removing one of the obstacles standing in the way of establishing a permanent ceasefire. The Secretary-General had not received any official responses from Israel or the Syrian Arab Republic to his provisional definition, nor to his repeated requests for documents from the Syrian Arab Republic.

UNIFIL continued to focus on mitigating risks to its personnel, assets and installations through infrastructure enhancement projects, information-gathering and analysis, as well as the ongoing acquisition of electronic countermeasures to jam explosive devices and micro-unmanned aerial vehicles. In accordance with the plans outlined in his previous report to increase the Force's intelligence capabilities, a Joint Mission Analysis Centre was established. In addition, UNIFIL continued to implement security enhancements throughout its area of operations through the construction of reinforced perimeter structures, permanent observation towers and underground reinforced shelters, as well as the replacement of temporary water and sanitation infrastructure in military positions.

On 16 May, an armoured personnel carrier with Malaysian UNIFIL soldiers overturned near the town of Srifa in the western sector of the UNIFIL area of operation; one peacekeeper died and five others were wounded, four of them seriously. On 15 June, one Spanish peacekeeper died and two others were injured after an armoured personnel carrier overturned near the UNIFIL Sector East headquarters in Marjayoun. UNIFIL was supported by 52 UNTSO military observers of the Observer Group Lebanon.

In line with the second comprehensive review of the Strategic Military Cell, and taking into consideration the decision in General Assembly resolution 62/265 on the financing of UNIFIL (see p. 546), the Strategic Military Cell would undergo a phased downsizing aimed at full integration of its functions within the reinforced Office of Military Affairs of the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations.

Communication. On 7 July [A/62/899-S/2008/448], Iran called on the Security Council and the Secretary-General to address the issue of the 1982 abduction of three members of the Iranian Embassy staff in Beirut and an Iranian journalist, for which it held Israel responsible, and to help secure their release.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his eighth report on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006), of 18 November [S/2008/715], the Secretary-General said that he was pleased to report that all parties continued to express their commitment to resolution 1701(2006). The political climate in Lebanon had improved in the past months, due to the implementation of the elements of the Doha Agreement, the election of President Sleiman, the formation of a national unity Government and the launching of a National Dialogue (see p. 533).

The cessation of hostilities between Israel and Lebanon continued to hold and the military and security situation in the UNIFIL area of operations remained generally quiet. The parties generally maintained respect for the Blue Line, apart from the Ghajar area, where IDF still occupied part of the village and an adjacent area north of the Blue Line, in violation of resolution 1701(2006). Incursions into Lebanese airspace by Israeli aircraft and unmanned aerial vehicles continued in high numbers, which UNIFIL and Lebanon protested. Control by IDF of northern Ghajar continued to be a source of tension. On 22 August, Lebanon informed the Force Commander of its readiness to accept the UNIFIL proposal (see p. 540) to facilitate the withdrawal of IDF from the area, on the condition that Israel agreed to the proposal within three months, and that a date for Israel's eventual withdrawal be established. UNIFIL invested considerable efforts in mediating the proposal between the parties and the Secretary-General hoped that Israel would endorse it.

Progress on the pilot project to visibly mark a 6-kilometre stretch of the Blue Line was slow. After extensive field work and discussions at both the bilateral level and in the tripartite forum, the parties reached agreement on a further seven points to be marked, which brought the total number of points to 16. The parties also agreed on an additional 4-kilometre stretch to extend the pilot project. UNIFIL proposed a new plan to accelerate the process, which was accepted by both parties.

UNIFIL and the LAF Senior Command continued their strategic review sessions of military tasks carried out by the two Forces in implementing resolution 1701(2006) in order to intensify cooperation in operational activities and expand coordination and liaison procedures. At their 21 October meeting, the Senior Commands assessed the level of cooperation achieved and agreed, in an effort to mitigate potential effects of the reduced LAF presence due to temporary redeployment to the north, to conduct a joint review to enhance the effectiveness of the coordinated checkpoints. They also agreed to increase regular vehicle checks, intensify efforts to curtail hunters, expand liaison arrangements, and review operating procedures between the UNIFIL Maritime Task Force and the Lebanese navy. The Maritime Task Force would assist in further institutionalizing naval training programmes at the Lebanese naval training institute. Continued material and technical support over the medium- to long-term to enable the Lebanese navy to gradually assume responsibilities currently undertaken by the Maritime Task Force was a high priority.

Coordination and liaison with IDF remained good and efficient. The UNIFIL Force Commander met with the Israeli Minister of Defense and the IDF Chief of Staff to discuss issues related to UNIFIL mandate. In late August, owing to the deterioration of the security situation elsewhere in the country, the Lebanese authorities temporarily redeployed troops from southern Lebanon to strengthen LAF presence in the north of the country. To ensure that the reduction did not negatively affect implementation of resolution 1701(2006), they assured the UNIFIL Force Commander that the redeployment would be limited in scope, of short duration and balanced by further enhancements of the coordinated activities.

LAF and UNIFIL continued to discover abandoned armed-element facilities, arms and ammunitions dating back to the 2006 conflict or before in the area between the Litani River and the Blue Line.

During the reporting period, a series of grave security incidents highlighted the threat posed by armed groups operating inside Lebanon but outside State control. President Suleiman conveyed to the Secretary-General his concern over the presence and activities of extremist groups. The continued risk that Hizbullah's separate military capacity posed to Lebanon's sovereignty was evidenced on 28 August, when armed elements opened fire on a LAF helicopter patrolling north of the Litani. The pilot died in the attack, for which Hizbullah later admitted responsibility, and one person was arrested. Palestinian arms inside and outside of the 12 registered refugee camps remained a serious threat to Lebanon's stability and sovereignty, the Secretary-General stated. He welcomed the initiatives between the Lebanese Government and Palestinian authorities to take joint responsibility for security inside the Nahr al-Bared camp.

The Secretary-General, on 16 July, dispatched for the second time a team of independent border security experts to assess implementation by the Government of the 2007 recommendations of the Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team (LIBAT I) [YUN 2007, p. 486] and gauge the impact of those measures on progress on the ground for Lebanon's overall border management capacity. On 26 August, the Secretary-General conveyed the expert's report, known as LIBAT II, to the Security Council, indicating his full support for its conclusions and recommendations, including the proposal that the Government develop a strategic plan for border security.

The deployment of Syrian troops along Lebanon's northern border started in late September and continued. Syrian authorities stated, on 29 October, that the deployment, one of the outcomes of the August summit meeting between the Presidents, aimed to halt and prevent smuggling and sabotage. Both Lebanese and Syrian senior officials confirmed that the extension of the Syrian deployment to the eastern border in late October was conducted in close coordination.

The UN Mine Action Coordination Centre-South Lebanon conducted an operational reassessment to review new and existing data on the contaminated area in southern Lebanon. The review established that some previously known and recorded strikes might be bigger than originally estimated. Some 74 additional cluster bomb strike locations were identified, making a total of 1,058 locations recorded thus far. As a result, the estimated contaminated area increased to 48.1 million square metres. To date, the Centre had coordinated the clearance and reduction of 40.2 million square metres of the contaminated area and located and destroyed 150,255 cluster munitions.

On 3 September, one UNIFIL explosive ordnance disposal expert with the Belgian contingent was killed. In addition, three mine-clearance personnel were injured in separate incidents, bringing the totals to 14 killed and 41 injured.

The Mine Action Coordination Centre carried out a minefield clearance project in the Addaisseh area in Sector East. More than 70,000 square metres were cleared and 4,569 mines located and destroyed in areas adjacent to the Blue Line. That was the first such clearance project of minefields by the Centre in the sensitive areas near the Blue Line. The transfer of primary responsibility for managing humanitarian clearance operations to LAF, as at 1 January 2009, was under way. The remaining Mine Action Coordination Centre staff would work exclusively in support of UNIFIL clearance and explosive ordnance disposal assets.

Negotiations on the release of the abducted Israeli soldiers Ehud Goldwasser and Eldad Regev, and Lebanese prisoners detained in Israel, including Samir Quntar and Nassim Nisr, as well as the five Hizbullah combatants captured by Israel during the 2006 conflict, resumed in earnest in March. The Secretary-General's facilitator submitted a modified draft formula to the sides, culminating in the development of a humanitarian agreement by late April. On 1 June, one of the Lebanese prisoners, Nassim Nisr, was released, having completed a six-year jail sentence, and was repatriated to Lebanon. At the same time, Hizbullah returned the remains of some Israeli soldiers killed in action.

Following further negotiations, the humanitarian agreement was signed by Hizbullah and Israel on 2 July, providing for an exchange of reports on humanitarian cases of particular sensitivity, including the case of Ron Arad, an Israeli airman missing in Lebanon since 1986, as well as on the fate of four Iranians abducted in Lebanon in 1982. The second phase of the agreement called for the two Israeli soldiers to be repatriated in exchange for the five Lebanese prisoners remaining in Israeli custody, the remains of eight Lebanese killed in action during the 2006 war, information on two Lebanese citizens, Yahya Skaff and Muhammad Farran, the remains of four members of the Dallal Mughrabi group, as well as up to 199 other Lebanese citizens, mostly of Palestinian origin. In a final phase, Israel would release Palestinian detainees in appreciation of successful UN facilitation and in anticipation of further UN-sponsored support for its endeavours to uncover the fate of Ron Arad and other persons missing in action.

Implementation of the agreement started shortly after it was signed, with the exchange of the bodies of the two Israeli soldiers for the bodies of some 200 Lebanese and Palestinian fighters and five Lebanese prisoners. After 18 months of intense efforts, the Secretary-General remarked, the humanitarian aspect of resolution 1701(2006) had been met. On 6 August, Israel freed five Palestinian prisoners in a move directly related to the agreement with Hizbullah, and Prime Minister Olmert announced that a large number of Palestinian prisoners would be released later in the month in a move designed to support the Annapolis peace process [YUN 2007, p. 445]. On 25 August, 198 Palestinian detainees were released.

Following their summit meeting in Damascus on 13 and 14 August, the Presidents of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic announced the reactivation of the Lebanese-Syrian committee tasked with delineating their common border.

Concerning the key question of Shab'a Farms, in a meeting in Damascus on 6 November, the Syrian Foreign Minister categorically reiterated to the Special Coordinator for Lebanon that Shab'a Farms fell under Lebanon's sovereignty. The Secretary-General still had not received any response from either Israel or the Syrian Arab Republic to the provisional geographical definition of the area.

The period under review was one of relative calm in the UNIFIL area of operations, albeit punctuated by specific threat warnings emanating from militant and extremist groups, including Al-Qaida. Joint efforts and cooperation with the Lebanese authorities and LAF continued to ensure that such threats were addressed appropriately. As at 11 November, UNIFIL total military strength was 12,770 personnel, with a civilian strength of 318 international and 656 national staff. The Force was supported by 51 UNTSO military observers of the Observer Group Lebanon.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General stated that, although there were no breaches of the cessation of hostilities between Lebanon and Israel and relative calm continued to prevail, greater progress should have been achieved since the adoption of resolution 1701(2006). The general improvement of the situation, together with the continued stability in the area of operations and encouraging prospects in the region, created a momentum that both Lebanon and Israel should seize to make bold strides towards a permanent ceasefire and long-term solution.

Further developments. According to the Secretary-General's ninth report on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006) [S/2009/119], tension in the UNIFIL area of operations rose in late December, with the outbreak of the crisis in Gaza (see p. 492). On 25 December, LAF discovered, and with UNIFIL's assistance, defused and dismantled eight rockets that were armed and ready to be launched in the direction of Israel. Several violations of the Blue Line by IDF, as well as Lebanese civilians, were registered. Regarding Israel's claim that Hizbullah had held manoeuvres both north and south of the Litani River on 22 November, UNIFIL did not observe any activity that would substantiate that allegation.

Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team

On 25 August [S/2008/582], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the report of the Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team II (LIBAT II), dispatched, in coordination with the Lebanese Government, to undertake a thorough follow-up assessment of the implementation of the recommendations of the Lebanon Independent Border Assessment Team I, which, in accordance with resolution 1701(2006), had conducted a first assessment in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 484].

Led by Lasse Christensen (Denmark), LIBAT II visited Lebanon from 15 to 31 July. It held talks with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Defence, the directors of the four border security agencies and regional military commanders, stakeholders in the German-led Northern Border Pilot Project and donor representatives. The Team visited all four operational border crossing points and one not yet open, as well as locations along the Green Border in the north and east of Lebanon, including locations of Lebanese-Syrian territorial dispute and cross-border areas under Palestinian control. It also visited the Beirut airport and the Beirut and Tripoli seaports.

Although the Northern Border Pilot Project was deemed to be in a consolidation phase, the Team believed that it had not yet reached the stage of full implementation. Equipment for essential operations had yet to arrive, there were cases of incompatibility of equipment and power, vehicles were not being used as intended, and there did not appear to be any output, coordination or sharing of intelligence among agencies. Moreover, the level of operational integration between the four border security agencies was less than optimal. There was also concern over the manner in which the Project was planned and executed.

To a certain degree, the Northern Border Project incorporated a number of Team I recommendations. At the border crossing points, in particular along the Green Border in the east, little progress was observed, despite the fact that a number of recommendations could easily have been implemented without political, structural or financial implications. At the airport and seaports, some minor progress could be observed, but there still remained considerable room for improvement. It was the opinion of Team II that the lack of a strategic master plan was a primary cause for the inactivity, in particular along the eastern border. The lack of strategic planning and desired end state for border security had a negative impact on the Lebanese potential to uphold and enforce control of its borders.

Among the positive steps taken was the relocation of the Aboudieh border crossing point to the actual border, the installation of additional border security equipment such as scanners, and the computerization of passport control. However, the overall situation rendered Lebanon's borders as penetrable as they had been during the first assessment in 2007. LIBAT II, therefore, reiterated the 2007 recommendations, especially those regarding the establishment of a multi-agency mobile force focusing on arms smugglings; the establishment of an intelligence and analysis component within that force; the deployment of international border security experts to it; the establishment of a dedicated border guard agency to streamline border security procedures and gather all expertise and intelligence in one agency; full and absolute control over border crossing points by creating standard operating procedures; measures to separate legal and illegal near-border or border-crossing activities; training programmes and the provision of border-specific equipment; and the establishment of cooperation with Syrian counterparts.

LIBAT II further suggested that the Lebanese Government instigate the formation of a strategic plan, which should include its desired end state and objectives, as well as ways of achieving them, and that donors enhance cooperation and coordination of their activities. The expansion of the Northern Border Pilot Project to include responsibility for the border crossing points should be considered, and the issue of delineation of the Lebanon's border with the Syrian Arab Republic should be addressed vigorously.

In transmitting the report, the Secretary-General stated that he fully supported the conclusions and recommendations of the Team II.

The Secretary-General, in his November report on the implementation of resolution 1701(2006) [S/2008/715], said that the LIBAT II report was widely distributed among Lebanese and international officials and was well received by all key stakeholders. Following the recommendations in the report, the Government formed a steering committee to begin preparing a border strategy, through a process designed to include the views and expertise of the four security agencies, as well as key government ministries. A group of donor countries working on border management was also assembled to assist in the process. The steering committee, which held its first meeting on 31 October, under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Siniora, reaffirmed its commitment to improve border management along Lebanon's northern and eastern borders and agreed on a mechanism and timeline to develop the strategy.

UNIFIL

The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) continued to discharge its mandate by observing, monitoring and reporting on developments in its area of operation. Established by Security Council resolution 425(1978), following Israel's invasion of Lebanon [YUN 1978, p. 312], UNIFIL was mandated to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restore international peace and security, and assist Lebanon in regaining authority in southern Lebanon. In 1982, the Council, by resolution 511(1982) [YUN 1982, p. 450], authorized the Force to provide protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population. Following the withdrawal of Israeli forces in June 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 465], UNIFIL was reinforced to monitor the territories previously occupied by Israeli forces, prevent the recurrence of fighting and create conditions for the restoration of Lebanese authority.

On 21 August [S/2008/568], the Secretary-General recommended that the Council renew the UNIFIL mandate for a further 12 months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Review of UNIFIL Strategic Military Cell

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the General Assembly request in resolution 61/250 B [YUN 2007, p. 492] for a comprehensive review of the Strategic Military Cell, created to ensure that UNIFIL's expansion, deployment and additional mandated responsibilities were conducted with and supported by sufficiently dedicated capabilities, the Secretary-General, on 14 March, submitted a report [A/62/744] outlining its role, structure and functions, as well as options for its future phased reduction.

The General Assembly, by resolution 62/265 of 20 June (see p. 546), decided that the target date for the termination of the Strategic Military Cell should be no later than 30 June 2010.

UNIFIL financing

Reports of Secretary-General. In January [A/62/632], the Secretary-General submitted a performance report on the UNIFIL budget for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007. Expenditures amounted to $495,735,600, out of an appropriation of $496,615,500, leaving an unencumbered balance of $879,900. In March [A/62/751], the Secretary-General submitted the budget for UNIFIL for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, totalling $688,813,300 and providing for the deployment of 15,000 military personnel, and 415 international and 842 national staff, including temporary positions.

Report of ACABQ. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its April report [A/62/781/Add.5], recommended that the unencumbered balance of $879,900, as well as other income and adjustments in the amount of $7,372,800 for the period ended 30 June 2007, be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the General Assembly, and that the proposed UNIFIL budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, be reduced to $668,370,300, largely in view of a projected delayed deployment of troops, downsizing of the Strategic Military Cell and rationalization of expenditures for communication.

Other security issues

Investigation of assassination of former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri

UN International Independent Investigation Commission

The United Nations International Independent Investigation Commission (UNIIIC), established by Security Council resolution 1595(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 553], continued to assist Lebanese authorities in their investigation of the assassination of former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri and 22 others on 14 February 2005 [ibid., p. 551]. The Commission was headed by Judge Daniel A. Bellemare (Canada), who was appointed Commissioner by the Secretary-General in November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 502], succeeding Serge Brammertz (Belgium).

Communications. On 30 January [S/2008/60], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a letter from the Lebanese Prime Minister requesting technical assistance for his Government's efforts to investigate the murder, in a 25 January terrorist act, of Major Wissam Eid, head of the technical department in the Intelligence Service of the Internal Security Forces, and Adjutant Oussama Merheb and other innocent civilians. Major Eid had played a central role in uncovering the perpetrators of several of the terrorist assassinations and attacks that Lebanon had recently witnessed. The Prime Minister requested that UNIIIC contact the Lebanese authorities for that purpose. Replying on 31 January [S/2008/61], the Council invited the Commission to extend appropriate technical assistance to the Lebanese authorities in the investigation.

Report of UNIIIC (March). The tenth UNIIIC report on progress in implementing the Commission's mandate, covering the period since its last report [YUN 2007, p. 505], was transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Security Council on 28 March [S/2008/210]. The Commission reported that it had evidence that a network of individuals acted in concert to carry out the assassination of former Prime Minister Hariri, and that criminal network, or parts thereof, were linked to some of the other cases within the Commission's mandate. The report also provided details of UNIIIC's assistance to the Lebanese authorities in their investigation of 20 other bombings and assassinations in Lebanon since October 2004, including recent attacks targeting members of Lebanon's security forces. In carrying out its mandate, UNIIIC continued to work closely with the Lebanese authorities. Its cooperation with the Syrian Arab Republic was generally satisfactory. The Commission implemented new working practices to foster additional assistance from Member States, as well as encourage the cooperation of witnesses and other sources. Out of the 256 requests for assistance, 28 had been sent to 11 Member States other than Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

UNHIC was also preparing for the transition to the Special Tribunal in Lebanon [YUN 2007, p. 505], scheduled for 1 March 2009.

Security Council consideration. Introducing UNHIC's tenth report to the Security Council on 8 April [meeting 5863], Commissioner Bellemare noted that not only was the investigation very complex, but it was conducted in an extremely volatile environment. Unfortunately, UNHIC's establishment did not have an immediate deterrent effect on terrorists as bombings continued, with two more deadly attacks added to the Commission's mandate since its November 2007 report [ibid.].

In order to give UNHIC the time to continue its investigation, Mr. Bellemare requested the Council to consider extending its mandate beyond 15 June. The Council did not take any action on the report at that meeting.

Communication. By a letter of 8 May, transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General [S/2008/334], the Lebanese Prime Minister expressed the hope that the Council would respond favourably to Commissioner Bellemare's 8 April request to extend UNHIC's mandate to 31 December.

Taking note of the request to extend the mandate of the Commission, expressed by the Commissioner in his briefing to the Security Council on 8 April 2008, in order to ensure stability and continuity in the investigative process,

Taking note also of the letter dated 8 May 2008 from the Prime Minister of Lebanon to the Secretary-General expressing the hope that the Council will respond favourably to the request of the Commissioner by extending the mandate of the Commission until 31 December 2008, and noting the concurrent recommendation of the Secretary-General in this regard,

4. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of UNHIC (December). On 2 December [S/2008/752], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council UNHIC's eleventh report, which gave an overview of progress made since the Commission's March report. The Commission reported that it had acquired new information that might allow it to link additional individuals to the network that had carried out the assassination of former Prime Minister Hariri. It provided details of its assistance to the Lebanese authorities in their investigation of 20 other bombings and assassinations in Lebanon since October 2004, as well as an update on the links between those attacks and the Hariri case.

As to progress achieved, the Commission found that members of the Hariri network were also associated with other attacks. A review of financial transactions revealed other leads that were being pursued. The inventory of exhibits, which consisted of over 10,000 forensic items, including more than 7,000 related to the Hariri case, had been completed and reviewed. The results of recently conducted forensic examinations revealed information regarding the explosives used in certain of the targeted attacks and their placements in the vehicles used during the attacks. Moreover, forensic examinations in five of the targeted attacks revealed new DNA profiles and fingerprints from the vehicles and other items used in the attacks. The Commission had also been provided with a weapon allegedly used in the attack on former Minister Pierre Gemayel [YUN 2006, p. 596]; reports of a ballistics analysis to determine whether it had indeed been used were expected in the coming weeks.

Since March, 29 persons had been indicted in connection with the 13 February 2007 twin bus bombing in Ain Alaq, which left three people dead and 20 others injured [YUN 2007, p. 502]. UNHIC provided technical assistance in analysing the explosive devices used and DNA profiles.

A significant amount of investigative work related to all the cases within UNIIIC's mandate remained to be done and the Prosecutor would need to continue investigating them to establish which ones were connected with the Hariri case in the manner required under the statute of the Tribunal.

Since its March report, UNIIIC had submitted 24 assistance requests to the Syrian Arab Republic, which provided responses within the specified deadlines. The Syrian authorities had also facilitated nine missions to the country. Out of the 619 assistance requests issued by the Commission during the reporting period, 96 were sent to 40 Member States other than Lebanon and Syria.

Following the Secretary-General's announcement that the Special Tribunal for Lebanon was on track to commence functioning on 1 March 2009, the Commission requested an extension of its mandate to 28 February 2009, to enable it to continue its investigation without interruption and gradually transfer its operations, staff and assets to The Hague. Once the Office of the Prosecutor of the Tribunal was operational, it would need to continue investigating all the cases within the Commission's current mandate in order to establish which of them were connected to the Hariri case in the manner required under the Tribunal's statute. The Office would require the full cooperation and support of the Lebanese authorities, as well as other Member States, in order to conduct effective investigations and prosecutions.

Communication. On 4 December [S/2008/764], Lebanon submitted to the Secretary-General a letter from its Prime Minister supporting the Commissioner's request for an extension of UNIIIC's mandate until 28 February 2009.

1. Welcomes the report of the Commission;
2. Decides to extend the mandate of the Commission until 28 February 2009;
3. Decides also to remain seized of the matter.

Special Tribunal for Lebanon

During the year, progress was made in establishing the Special Tribunal for Lebanon which, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1757(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 506], was created with a dual mandate to investigate and prosecute the perpetrators of the Hariri assassination and related attacks.

On 30 November, the Secretary-General announced that the Special Tribunal was on track to commence functioning on 1 March 2009. To ensure continuity of the investigations and a smooth and co-ordinated transition from UNIIIC to the Tribunal, the Council extended the Commission's mandate until 28 February 2009. Judge Daniel A. Bellemare, the UNIIIC Commissioner since 1 January 2008, was appointed Prosecutor of the Tribunal and was to take up his office on 1 March 2009.

Reports of Secretary-General. On 12 March [S/2008/173], the Secretary-General submitted his second report, pursuant to resolution 1757(2007), under which he had been mandated to establish the Special Tribunal for Lebanon, in coordination with the Government of Lebanon.

Since his first progress report [YUN 2007, p. 515], substantial progress had been made in a number of areas. All actions relating to the preparatory phase had been undertaken, if not completed. The United Nations and the Netherlands had signed the agreement concerning the Tribunal headquarters [YUN 2007, p. 516], and premises for the Tribunal had been identified. The judges, Prosecutor and Registrar had been selected, the Management Committee established and the recruitment process for the Head of the Defence Office had begun. A draft budget, including a staffing table, would be submitted to the Management Committee, and communication and outreach policies had been prepared.

The start-up phase had commenced, as work on the preparation of the premises and on a coordinated transition between UNHCR and the Tribunal was being conducted. Once the Registrar started operating, a core unit of Registry personnel would be established in The Hague to assist the Registrar in his functions.

The Tribunal would commence functioning in successive phases. It was anticipated that early informal consultations among the judges would facilitate the drafting of the rules of procedure and evidence and other necessary documents. In addition to the Registrar, the Prosecutor, followed by the pre-trial judge, would start their duties earlier than the other senior officials. The Tribunal President would also take up duties on a full-time basis at an earlier date to ensure the Tribunal's efficient management and functioning, and the judges of the Trial and Appeals Chambers would do so on a date to be determined.

The Secretary-General assured the Council that the Secretariat was dedicated to establishing the Tribunal in a timely manner, with the generosity and support of Member States.

In his third report [S/2008/734] pursuant to resolution 1757(2007), submitted on 26 November, the Secretary-General said that on the basis of the progress reported so far, and following consultations by the UN Legal Counsel with the Lebanese Prime Minister and the UNHCR Commissioner, it was envisaged that the Tribunal would commence functioning on 1 March 2009. The transition period should begin on 1 January and extend to 28 February 2009. All practical arrangements would be in place for the Prosecutor to arrive on 1 March and continue the investigation with minimum disruption. The Trust Fund created for the Tribunal's establishment and activities had received approximately $55.1 million in contributions. In November, the Legal Counsel invited Member States to make further pledges and called for assurances of the donors' continuing commitment to the Tribunal's financial viability. Given the current budget proposal totalling $51 million, the contributions received were sufficient for the commencement and first year of operation. The Legal Counsel was engaged in efforts to increase the pledges of financing for the subsequent two years. Against that background, the Secretary-General would be taking a decision regarding the commencement of the Tribunal on 1 March 2009, after a transition period starting on 1 January.

The Secretary-General believed that the impending start of the Tribunal would send a strong signal that the Lebanese Government and the United Nations remained committed to ending impunity in Lebanon.

In a later report [S/2009/106], the Secretary-General stated that on 12 December, the Management Committee approved the Special Tribunal's budget of $51.4 million for its first year of operation starting on 1 January 2009. The budget was adopted on the understanding that the Registrar could propose a supplementary budget if activities not anticipated in the budget arose. Arrangements between the United Nations and the Special Tribunal were being made to close the United Nations Trust Fund and to transfer the amount remaining in the Fund to the Special Tribunal before its commencement date. On 30 December, the first transfer of $10 million was made from the Trust Fund to the Special Tribunal.

Communications. On 18 December [S/2008/824], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that following adoption of resolution 1852(2008) extending UNHCR's mandate to the end of February 2009, he had decided that the Special Tribunal should commence on 1 March 2009. The Council took note of that decision on 29 December [S/2008/825].

Syrian Arab Republic

The Golan Heights in the Syrian Arab Republic, occupied since 1967, was effectively annexed when Israel extended its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the territory at the end of 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 309]. The General Assembly again demanded that Israel withdraw from all the occupied Syrian Golan to the line of 4 June 1967, in implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions, and called upon the two countries to resume talks. The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) continued to supervise the ceasefire between Israel and Syria in the Golan Heights and to ensure the separation of forces. The Mission's mandate was extended twice during the year. In May 2008, indirect talks were launched between Israel and Syria, facilitated by Turkey.

Communications. In a 3 March letter [A/62/723-S/2008/161], Syria charged Israel with uprooting tree seedlings on 23 February belonging to a Syrian citizen and resident of the village of Buq'ata in the occupied Golan, in an attempt to alter the demographic character of the Golan.

In a 31 December letter [A/63/669] to the Secretary-General and the General Assembly President, Syria requested that the international community prevent Israel from continuing any behaviour that exploited, damaged, caused loss or depletion of or endangered the Golan's natural resources.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its annual report [A/63/273], the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Special Committee on Israeli Practices) summarized the views contained in the fortieth annual report of the Syrian Arab Republic on Israeli practices affecting the human rights of Syrian citizens in the occupied Golan Heights, covering the period from 31 July 2007 to 1 July 2008. The report noted a deteriorating human rights situation in the occupied Golan, with an increasing number of Israeli settlers and expansion of settlements, which numbered 45. Syrian citizens were denied access to water resources and permission to dig artesian wells or build cisterns, whereas numerous wells had been dug for the nearby settlements, lowering the groundwater level in the Arab villages. The waters of Mas'adah Lake had been diverted to the settlements, whereas the inhabitants of the occupied villages were prevented from using them. In general, Syrian citizens in the Golan received only 20 per cent of their annual needs, while settlers in the same area received 120 per cent.

According to Syria's report, prisoners from the Golan were subjected to the harshest forms of physical and mental torture and denied their most basic rights. Israeli authorities repeatedly refused requests from international institutions, including the ICRC, to visit Syrian prisoners. Women were subjected to repeated arrest. There were an estimated 2 million landmines and 76 minefields in the occupied Golan, posing a constant threat to the local people and their livestock. The five occupied Arab villages in the Golan suffered from a chronic shortage of health centres and clinics, and schools were overcrowded and unsanitary. Discrimination existed also with regard to wages and taxes. Syria reiterated its demand for the resumption of family visits through the Quneitra crossing point, under ICRC supervision. President Bashar al-Assad had issued instructions that Syrian citizens in the occupied Golan had to be issued a national identity number and identity card, to make it clear that they belonged to the Syrian homeland.

Human Rights Council action. By resolution 7/30 of 28 March [A/HRC/7/78] (see p. 895) on human rights in the occupied Syrian Golan, the Human Rights Council reaffirmed the illegality of Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Golan, and called on Israel to comply with General Assembly and Security Council resolutions declaring that decision null and void.

Reports of Secretary-General. On 15 October [A/63/482], responding to General Assembly resolution 62/110 [YUN 2007, p. 518], the Secretary-General reported that no reply had been received in response to his request for information from Israel on its implementation of that resolution. Two Member States had responded.

In his 29 October report on the situation in the Middle East [A/63/361], the Secretary-General stated that four Member States had replied to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 62/85 [YUN 2007, p. 518], which dealt with Israeli policies in the occupied Syrian territory.

A 5 November report [A/63/519] of the Secretary-General, prepared by OHCHR, described the continued Israeli settlements activities in the occupied territories, including the Syrian Golan Heights, covering the period from January to August 2008. At the end of June, some 18,000 Israelis were estimated to be living in 32 settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan. Construction of infrastructure and housing was pursued actively in early 2008, notwithstanding calls by the international community to halt construction in the occupied territories and despite the fact that the Golan Height were on the agenda of recent peace talks between Syria and Israel. The detrimental impact of the Israeli occupation on the livelihood of the population of the Golan related to the restrictions on land cultivation and farming. Such practices were contrary to the standards and principles set out by the International Labour Organization concerning equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, which included the right to equal access to water and other resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 60], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/31 [draft: A/63/L.37 & Add.1] by recorded vote (116-6-52) [agenda item 15].

UNDOF

The mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), established by Security Council resolution 350(1974) [YUN 1974, p. 205] to supervise the observance of the ceasefire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic in the Golan Heights and ensure the separation of their forces, was renewed twice in 2008: in June and December, each time for a six-month period.

UNDOF maintained an area of separation, some 75 kilometres long and varying in width between 12.5 kilometres in the centre to less than 200 metres in the extreme south. The area of separation was inhabited and policed by the Syrian authorities, and no military forces other than UNDOF were permitted within it.

As at 15 November, UNDOF comprised 1,039 troops from six member States. It was assisted by 75 UNTSO military observers.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities between 1 January and 30 June [S/2008/390] and 1 July and 31 December 2008 [S/2008/737]. Both reports noted that the UNDOF area of operations remained generally quiet. The Force supervised the area of separation by means of fixed positions and patrols and carried out inspections of equipment and force levels in the areas of limitation. As in the past, both sides denied inspection teams access to some of their positions and imposed restrictions on the Force's freedom of movement. UNDOF continued to adapt its operation posture to the ongoing IDF training in the area of limitation on the Alpha side and Syrian civilian settlement growth in the proximity to the ceasefire line in the area of separation. Both sides continued to construct new and renovate existing defensive positions in the respective areas of limitations, and the security forces of both sides undertook anti-smuggling actions. Israeli national customs officials continued to operate periodically at the IDF post at the UNDOF crossing gate between the Israeli-occupied Golan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Both parties took steps to ease limitations on the movement of UNDOF supplies. The Force also assisted the ICRC with the passage of persons through the area of separation and carried out operational mine clearance. The Force Commander and his staff maintained close contact with the military authorities of both sides, and both parties generally cooperated with UNDOF in the execution of its tasks.

The Secretary-General observed that the situation in the Middle East was tense and likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement could be reached. Stating that he considered UNDOF's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of both Israel and Syria, recommended in June that its mandate be extended until 31 December 2008, and in December, until 30 June 2009.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 June [meeting 5926], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1821(2008). The draft [S/2008/415] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 16 June 2008 on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and reaffirming its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000,

1. Calls upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;
2. Welcomes the efforts being undertaken by the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force to implement the Secretary-General's zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse and to ensure full compliance of its personnel with the United Nations code of conduct, requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary action in this regard and to keep the Security Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to take preventive and disciplinary action to ensure that such acts are properly investigated and punished in cases involving their personnel;
3. Decides to renew the mandate of the Force for a period of six months, that is, until 31 December 2008;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

On 12 December [meeting 6039], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1848(2008). The draft [S/2008/771] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 26 November 2008 on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and reaffirming its resolution 1308(2000) of 17 July 2000,

1. Calls upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;
2. Welcomes the efforts being undertaken by the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force to implement the Secretary-General's zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse and to ensure full compliance of its personnel with the United Nations code of conduct, requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary action in this regard and to keep the Security Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to take preventive and disciplinary action to ensure that such acts are properly investigated and punished in cases involving their personnel;
3. Decides to renew the mandate of the Force for a period of six months, that is, until 30 June 2009;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

After the adoption of each resolution, the President made identical statements, S/PRST/2008/25 on 27 June, and S/PRST/2008/46 on 12 December, on behalf of the Council:

In connection with the resolution just adopted on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council:

As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states in paragraph 11: "... the situation in the Middle East is tense and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached". That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council.

UNDOF financing

Reports of Secretary-General. The General Assembly had before it the performance report on the UNDOF budget for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 [A/62/562], which showed expenditures totalling $39,549,000 against an apportionment of $39,865,200.

It also had the UNDOF budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 [A/62/719 & Corr.1] in the amount of $45,726,000, which provided for the deployment of 1,047 military contingent personnel, and 45 international and 108 national staff. The comments of ACABQ on both reports were contained in its April report [A/62/781/Add.7 & Corr.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/877], adopted resolution 62/264 without vote [agenda item 153 (a)].

Disarmament

Nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation issues remained in 2008 at the forefront of the international agenda, with the objective of moving towards a nuclear-weapons-free world. Advances towards that goal, however, were modest, as both the Conference on Disarmament and the United Nations Disarmament Commission remained in deadlock. The Conference was unable to reach a consensus on a substantive programme of work, while the Commission concluded its three-year cycle without any consensus on recommendations concerning nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, as well as practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional weapons. Meanwhile, the chronic pattern of deeply divided voting on nuclear resolutions in the General Assembly continued.

In other developments, the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the 2010 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) concluded in May, although it was unable to agree to attach the Chairman's factual summary to its report. The United Nations Panel of Governmental Experts on the Issue of Missiles in All Its Aspects could not reach a consensus on measures to deal with that issue. Several States ratified and signed the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, and a Joint Ministerial Statement was adopted at the Ministerial Meeting held in September, urging the Treaty's early entry into force.

Throughout the year, regional organizations continued to address disarmament and non-proliferation issues. With respect to nuclear-weapon-free zones, a significant advance came with the ratification of the Central Asian Nuclear-Weapon-Free-Zone Treaty, paving the way for its entry into force in 2009. The verification programme of the International Atomic Energy Agency remained at the core of multilateral efforts to curb the proliferation of nuclear weapons and move towards nuclear disarmament. Comprehensive safeguards agreements, concluded pursuant to NPT, and the Model Additional Protocols to those agreements, which granted the Agency complementary inspection authority, remained the principal legal instruments upholding the Agency's safeguards regime. In 2008, safeguards were applied for 163 States with safeguards agreements in force. However, there was little progress on safeguard issues in Iran and the Syrian Arab Republic, or on proliferation issues in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, as the Agency and concerned States worked to resolve remaining issues.

Other gains included the issuance by the Russian Federation and the United States of a Strategic Framework Declaration covering several areas of co-operation, including the intention to pursue legally binding arrangements to replace the expiring Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I). Australia and Japan established the International Commission on Nuclear Non-Proliferation and Disarmament, and nuclear disarmament proposals were put forward by the European Union and the United Kingdom. In October, the UN Secretary-General launched his five-point proposal for a world free of nuclear weapons.

A major highlight in the field of conventional arms was the adoption of the Convention on Cluster Munitions, a milestone in global efforts to ban such weapons, although member States of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons were unable to reach a consensus in addressing issues relating to the humanitarian impact of cluster munitions. Parties to that Convention held their ninth annual meeting in November. Also in November, the Ninth Meeting of the States Parties to the Anti-Personnel Mine-Ban Treaty took place in Geneva, which resulted in the approval of requests by 15 States to extend the 10-year deadline for clearance and destruction of such mines.

Progress towards establishing an arms trade treaty gained momentum, with the convening of a Group of Governmental Experts to examine the feasibility and scope of a comprehensive, legally binding instrument establishing international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms. The Group recommended further consideration of efforts within the United Nations to address the issue on a step-by-step basis. The General Assembly established an open-ended working group to implement that recommendation in 2009.

With respect to transparency measures, the number of States using the Standardized Instrument for Reporting Military Expenditures remained stable. While the number of States reporting data to the UN Register of Conventional Arms had dropped sharply in recent years, there was an increase in the number of States reporting on transfer of small arms and light weapons.

In April, the Security Council held a debate on small arms and light weapons, and in July, the General Assembly convened its third biennial meeting of States on the implementation of the programme of action to combat their illicit trade. For the first time, such a biennial meeting was able to adopt a substantive outcome document, one that identified a way forward for international cooperation; assistance and capacity-building to combat illicit brokering; management and surplus disposal; and marking and tracing. The Assembly agreed to convene another conference to review the implementation of the programme of action in 2012.

The Security Council in November held a high-level debate on the relationship between disarmament and development—another issue of long-standing interest at the United Nations.

UN role in disarmament

UN machinery

Disarmament issues before the United Nations were considered mainly through the Security Council, the General Assembly and its First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a deliberative body) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum, which met in Geneva). The Organization also maintained efforts to engage civil society organizations concerned with disarmament issues.

The Office of Disarmament Affairs continued to advance the disarmament agenda (see below).

The Assembly, by decision 63/503 of 19 September, included in its agenda, under items 81 to 96, issues related to disarmament, allocating them to the First Committee. Agenda item 80, on the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency, would be considered directly in plenary. By decision 63/552, of 24 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on general and complete disarmament would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Advancing the disarmament agenda

UN Office for Disarmament Affairs

The UN Office for Disarmament Affairs (UNODA), established in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 524], on the proposal of the Secretary-General and confirmed by the General Assembly in resolution 61/257 [ibid., p. 525], assumed the functions of the Department for Disarmament Affairs in supporting the work of Member States and treaty bodies, servicing the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters and administering the UN disarmament fellowship programme.

It reinforced the advocacy potential of the Organization in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation. Under the leadership of the High Representative for Disarmament Affairs, the Office enhanced its engagement and cooperation with Member States, intergovernmental organizations and civil society.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the Assembly's request in resolution 61/257, the Secretary-General submitted in July a report [A/63/125] summarizing the activities of UNODA and the High Representative since their establishment. The report outlined the Secretary-General's vision for 2008 and beyond as it related to disarmament and non-proliferation. The Secretary-General highlighted the need to reinvigorate the collective response to disarmament and non-proliferation by addressing long-standing deadlocks in nuclear disarmament, and stepping up efforts to combat the scourge of proliferation of small arms and light weapons that undermined the security of individuals, countries and regions that could least afford it, as well as addressing the threats that were growing fastest—those facilitated by the revolution in life sciences. The Secretary-General stressed the need to promote biotechnology benefits to developing countries while mitigating the risks of misuse.

As noted in the report, the High Representative participated in and/or represented the Secretary-General at increased number of conferences, meetings and seminars. During the 12 months since his appointment in July 2007, he delivered 33 addresses and five statements and/or messages on behalf of the Secretary-General, focusing on nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation issues in response to the interest manifested by the organizers of pertinent events. The High Representative called for full compliance with existing treaty obligations, greater reductions in the stockpiles of nuclear weapons, greater transparency, diminished reliance on nuclear weapons in security policies and universalization of existing norms. He pressed the need for early entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and the negotiation and early conclusion of a treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices. He supported the existing nuclear-weapon-free zones and encouraged the establishment of new ones. Furthermore, he highlighted the efforts to promote multilateral norms in such fields as illicit trade in small arms and light weapons; the transparency of conventional arms transfers, holdings and production; transfers of conventional arms; and the regulation of missiles. Those efforts complemented initiatives at governmental and non-governmental levels which showed a resurgence of interest in and commitment to achieving a world free of nuclear weapons.

An important area of UNODA activities involved information dissemination, including raising public awareness of disarmament and non-proliferation issues, and maintaining close liaison with the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, other research and educational institutions outside the United Nations, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The Office continued to implement the United Nations Disarmament Fellowship, Training and Advisory Services Programme. To heighten public awareness on disarmament issues, the Office disseminated to Member States and the international community comprehensive, objective and factual information on disarmament through its website, publications and other activities.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 61/95 [YUN 2006, p. 679], UNODA released electronic Disarmament Updates to all Permanent Missions in New York and Geneva and to civil society at large. The Office published three Occasional Papers, as well as The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook in hard copy and on UNODA's website. The Disarmament Studies Series No. 32, Verification in all its Aspects, including the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Verification, was released. Between April 2007 and April 2008, the Office briefed more than a thousand students from all over the world on disarmament issues.

As stipulated in General Assembly resolutions 59/93 [YUN 2004, p. 582] and 61/73 [YUN 2006, p. 678], UNODA, in cooperation with the UN Department of Public Information, launched educational disarmament and non-proliferation pages on the UN Cyber-SchoolBus website focusing on nuclear disarmament and small arms. Video messages by the High Representative addressing specific issues—such as the Third Biennial Meeting of States to Consider the Implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects; the fortieth anniversary of the opening for signature of the landmark Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; the Global Week of Action Against Gun Violence; and the World Federation of United Nations Associations initiative devoted to a nuclear-weapon-free world—were posted on the UNODA website.

UNODA carried out a number of activities in support of multilateral efforts on disarmament and the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, in particular nuclear weapons, as well as in support of conventional disarmament, especially with regard to major weapons systems, small arms and light weapons, landmines and cluster munitions. Through its regional centres for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean, the Office contributed to generating a more active involvement in disarmament and non-proliferation issues of regional and subregional stakeholders.

The Secretary-General concluded that the reorganization of the former Department for Disarmament Affairs into UNODA and the appointment of the High Representative did not have financial, administrative or budgetary implications and did not affect the Office's objectives for the biennium.

The Secretary-General pointed out that the activities described in his report demonstrated the growing tasks asked of the newly established Office. The implementation of resolution 61/257 did not result in any net increase in UNODA's regular budget, and additional responsibilities resulting from new mandates and activities requested by Member States required additional human and financial resources. In light of the limited resources available through the regular budget, the Office intensified its resource mobilization efforts.

The financial stability and sustainability of UNODA, which relied on extrabudgetary funds, particularly with regard to its three regional centres, remained a challenge to the operational capacity of the Office. Strengthening the Office to better support a proactive United Nations in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation would require additional resources. Such resources would enable comprehensive monitoring and in-depth analysis of salient and emerging issues and trends, effective policy formulation, timely expert advice and assistance to the Secretary-General, and support to Member States to facilitate negotiations and deliberations in multilateral bodies, including the Conference on Disarmament. It would also strengthen the ability of the United Nations to implement relevant elements of the UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy. Securing regular budget funding for the biennium 2010–2011 was therefore essential.

The Secretary-General considered the establishment of UNODA and the appointment of the High Representative vital steps in his efforts to revitalize the disarmament agenda and to meet the increasingly complex responsibilities assigned to the Organization by Member States in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation, both regarding weapons of mass destruction and conventional weapons.

The General Assembly on 17 November [A/63/PV.51] had before it the Secretary-General's report, but did not take any action.

Fourth special session devoted to disarmament

During the year, no progress was made towards the convening of a fourth special session devoted to disarmament. Previously, the General Assembly had held three Special Sessions devoted to Disarmament—in 1978, 1982 and 1988. Only the first special session succeeded in producing a final document. Since 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 447], the Assembly had called for a fourth special session. It then established in 2002 a Working Group [YUN 2002, p. 487] to discuss the agenda and the possibility of establishing a preparatory committee for a fourth session. In 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 611], the Assembly established an Open-Ended Working Group to consider objectives and agenda, including the possible establishment of a preparatory committee.

By resolution 62/29 [YUN 2007, p. 526], the General Assembly mandated the reconvening of the Open-ended Working Group and requested the Working Group to submit a report, including possible substantive recommendations, to the Assembly's sixty-second session. However, as the Group did not convene its organizational or substantive sessions during the year, the Assembly decided on 11 September (decision 62/552) to continue work on convening those sessions. As no related resolution was adopted during its sixty-third session, the Assembly took decision 63/519, by which it included the item in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth (2009) session.

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, comprising all UN Member States, held seven plenary meetings of the final session (New York, 7–24 April) of its three-year cycle of deliberations. Prior to its substantive session, an organizational session was convened on 18 March, at which the Commission took note of the provisional agenda and approved the general programme of work. The two main agenda items under consideration were recommendations for achieving disarmament and non-proliferation of nuclear weapons (see p. 572), and practical confidence-building measures (CBMs) in the field of conventional weapons (see p. 611). As in previous years, two Working Groups were set up to deal with the substantive agenda items.

In his address to the opening session, the Secretary-General renewed his call for States to move forward in a spirit of compromise and accommodation. He underscored the Commission's importance and stressed that incremental progress could have positive spillover effects not only across the UN disarmament machinery, but also to other multilateral forums, including those dealing with treaty regimes. He urged Member States to make an extra effort to reach consensus, thereby bringing the Commission's work during the past three years to a successful conclusion.

However, Member States were unable to bridge the gap in their positions and failed to reach consensus on the Working Groups' recommendations. Notwithstanding the lack of concrete results, the Commission, at its final meeting on 24 April, adopted its 2008 report [A/63/42] to the General Assembly.

In introducing his report to the Committee of the Whole, the Chair of Working Group I commended the Group's efforts in seeking to reconcile the concerns of nuclear-weapon States and non-nuclear-weapon States. While no State questioned that the three pillars of nuclear consensus—disarmament, non-proliferation and the peaceful use of nuclear energy—were inextricably linked, States prioritized them differently. Despite a lack of consensus, the Chair stressed that the well-founded discussions of the Group allowed the Commission to maintain its unique framework for deliberations within the UN disarmament machinery.

The Chair of Working Group II stated that despite extensive discussions and constructive engagement, the Group was unable to overcome outstanding issues in the Chair's revised paper.

In his concluding statement, the Chairman of the Commission stressed that although final consensus eluded the Commission's work, the meetings allowed for valuable exchanges of views and deliberations on the most crucial topics, which in itself served as a CBM.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/391], adopted resolution 63/83 without vote [agenda item 91 (a)].

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body, held a three-part session in Geneva in 2008 (23 January–28 March, 12 May–27 June and 28 July–12 September) [A/63/27]. The Conference held 35 formal and 33 informal plenary meetings, at which it continued to consider the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

To facilitate the work of the Conference, the six 2008 Presidents appointed seven Coordinators to oversee two rounds of deliberations on each of the items on the Conference agenda, under the authority of the Presidents. At the inaugural meeting on 23 January, the UN Secretary-General urged the Conference to rekindle the ambition and sense of common purpose that had produced its past accomplishments, move forward in a spirit of compromise and return to productive work.

The Presidents of the Conference tabled a draft decision, which was initially challenged by China, to bridge the long-standing differences that had prevented members from reaching a substantive agreement. Inter alia, it was decided to appoint a coordinator to preside over negotiations on a treaty banning the production of fissile materials for nuclear weapons. While there had been no opposition to securing a fissile materials treaty per se, a number of countries insisted that its mandate specifically encompassed existing stocks and a verification mechanism. Despite a wide range of delegations supporting the Presidential proposal, the Conference was not able to secure a consensus.

One noteworthy development was the tabling on 12 February of a draft Treaty on Prevention of the Placement of Weapons in Outer Space and of the Threat or Use of Force Against Outer Space Objects by China and the Russian Federation.

Nuclear disarmament

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolutions 62/32 [YUN 2007, p. 535], 62/39 [ibid., p. 545] and 62/42 [ibid., p. 538], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on nuclear disarmament [A/63/135], describing international efforts to address the threats posed by nuclear weapons through disarmament initiatives aimed at eliminating those weapons, as well as arms control and non-proliferation and risk reduction measures. Each of the three resolutions, the Secretary-General noted, dealt with specific aspects of nuclear disarmament. In resolution 62/32, the Assembly had called for a review of nuclear doctrines and requested the five nuclear-weapon States to take measures towards implementing immediate steps to reduce the risks of unintentional and accidental use of nuclear weapons. In resolution 62/39, the Assembly had underlined the unanimous conclusion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) [YUN 1996, p. 461] that there existed an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under international control. In resolution 62/42, the Assembly had reaffirmed that nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation were substantively interrelated and mutually reinforcing, and outlined specific steps to achieve nuclear disarmament.

Some nuclear-weapon States had announced reductions in the number of nuclear weapons in their stockpiles, the Secretary-General reported, while other unilateral declarations by some nuclear-weapon States included efforts to accelerate the dismantlement of nuclear warheads, the closing of nuclear test sites, and reductions in deployed weapons and the number of their delivery systems.

On 6 April, agreement was reached between the United States and the Russian Federation to develop a legally binding arrangement as a follow-up to the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I). The Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces Treaty had also been opened to multilateralization, and several new initiatives by Governments and civil society promoted proposals aimed at achieving the vision of a world free of nuclear weapons, including a call from four statesmen from the United States and an international conference (Oslo, Norway, 26–27 February).

Yet many concerns and challenges remained, according to the Secretary-General. Reductions in the number of nuclear weapons fell short of expectations and had not been internationally verified. Irreversibility was not guaranteed and precise numbers regarding the size and composition of the world's nuclear weapons arsenals remained undisclosed. While the total number of nuclear weapons had fallen significantly from the heights of the cold war, reportedly 26,000 nuclear weapons were left in stockpiles. Concerns remained over nuclear doctrines, particularly the reaffirmation by some nuclear-weapon States of the vital role of a nuclear deterrent in their security policies, and about extending the life of and modernizing warheads and weapon systems.

The Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) had yet to enter into force (see p. 579), and efforts to achieve universalization over the previous year had resulted in the addition of one signatory State, bringing the total to 178 States. Six States had also ratified the Treaty, bringing the total number of ratifications to 144; that included a ratification by an “annex 2” State, so that 35 of the 44 nuclear-capable States whose ratification was needed for CTBT's entry into force had ratified it.

The Secretary-General also noted that the Disarmament Commission in April held constructive deliberations on recommendations for achieving nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation of nuclear weapons at the last session of its three-year cycle, but substantive differences remained and the Commission ended without reaching an agreement.

Proliferation threats. In the previous decade, three States had announced their acquisition of nuclear weapons. The 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [YUN 1968, p. 17, GA res. 2373(XXII), annex] still fell short of universal membership, and while 88 States had adopted the Additional Protocol, 30 States parties had not yet concluded their comprehensive safeguard agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), as required under the Treaty. Diplomatic efforts continued with a view to achieving the full compliance of Iran with Security Council resolutions 1737(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 436], 1747(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 374] and 1803(2008) (see p. 409). Efforts in the six-party talks regarding implementation by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) of the 2005 joint statement [YUN 2005, p. 450] and the agreement of 13 February 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 380] continued. Work on disabling nuclear facilities was progressing and in June the DPRK submitted a declaration on its nuclear programme activities.

States parties to NPT concluded the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the 2010 Review Conference (Geneva, 28 April–9 May). The Committee held substantive discussions on principles, objectives and ways to promote the implementation of the Treaty and its universality. Non-nuclear-weapon States recognized the recent announcements by nuclear-weapon States regarding reductions to their stockpiles, but expressed concern over the slow pace of implementation of their disarmament obligations. The need to address proliferation issues effectively was discussed, as was the need for States parties to fulfil their compliance and safeguard commitments, including maximum efforts to bring about diplomatic solutions to compliance concerns and to strengthen confidence among all States parties. The importance of achieving universality of the Treaty was underlined and the contribution of nuclear-weapon-free zones to global and regional security was emphasized. States parties reaffirmed the importance of the resolution on the Middle East adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference [YUN 1995, p. 189] and stressed its validity until its goals and objectives were achieved. States parties also reaffirmed that nothing in the Treaty should be interpreted as affecting their inalienable right to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and that the exercise of that right must be consistent with the Treaty's non-proliferation obligations.

Several new proposals for the development of a multilateral approach to the nuclear fuel cycle had been put forward as a means of coping with an expected expansion in nuclear energy and dealing with the possible associated risks. Various initiatives were acknowledged as contributing to cooperation in reducing threats from weapons of mass destruction (WMDs), including the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism, the Global Partnership against the Spread of Weapons and Materials of Mass Destruction, and the Global Threat Reduction Initiative. The entry into force of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism in July 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 550] had strengthened efforts to combat nuclear terrorism and the Security Council, by resolution 1810(2008) (see p. 585), responded to the threat posed by the proliferation of WMDs and related materials to non-State actors. By that resolution, the Council extended by three years the mandate of the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544] and decided that the Committee should promote the resolution's implementation.

The Secretary-General concluded that despite progress in some areas, greater collaborative efforts were required to reduce nuclear danger and address disarmament and non-proliferation challenges. The revitalization of the disarmament and non-proliferation agenda remained a priority for the United Nations.

The Secretary-General and his High Representative for Disarmament Affairs, through advocacy and direct interaction with States, international and regional organizations and civil society, continued to highlight the need for further advancement in reducing the threat of nuclear weapons and the importance of achieving progress in the pursuit of a world free of nuclear weapons.

Included in the report were replies from four Member States—Canada, Cuba, Japan and Qatar—to the Secretary-General's invitation of February 2008 to inform him of measures they had taken with regard to the implementation of resolution 62/39 [YUN 2007, p. 545] concerning the follow-up to the ICJ advisory opinion on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons (see p. 583).

Five-point proposal. In an address to the East-West Institute (New York, 24 October), the Secretary-General put forward a five-point proposal on nuclear disarmament. He urged all NPT parties, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to fulfil their Treaty obligations and undertake negotiations on effective measures leading to nuclear disarmament. Permanent members of the Security Council should commence discussions on security issues in the nuclear disarmament process. New efforts were needed: to bring CTBT and the Central Asian and African nuclear-weapon-free-zone treaties into force; for the Conference on Disarmament to begin immediately and without preconditions negotiations on a fissile material treaty; to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East (see p. 601); and for all NPT parties to conclude safeguards agreements with the IAEA and voluntarily adopt the safeguards under the Additional Protocol. Nuclear-weapon States were invited to send descriptions of their work regarding accountability and transparency in nuclear disarmament to the United Nations for wider dissemination. Finally, a number of complementary measures were needed, including the elimination of other types of WMDs; new efforts against WMD terrorism; limits on production and trade in conventional arms; and new weapons bans, including of missiles and space weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/47 by recorded vote (118-50-14) [agenda item 89 (g)].

Reducing nuclear danger

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Reaffirming that any use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would constitute a violation of the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects would seriously enhance the danger of nuclear war,

Convinced also that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Considering that, until nuclear weapons cease to exist, it is imperative on the part of the nuclear-weapon States to adopt measures that assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering also that the hair-trigger alert of nuclear weapons carries unacceptable risks of unintentional or accidental use of nuclear weapons, which would have catastrophic consequences for all mankind,

Emphasizing the need to adopt measures to avoid accidental, unauthorized or unexplained incidents arising from computer anomaly or other technical malfunctions,

Conscious that limited steps relating to de-alerting and de-targeting have been taken by the nuclear-weapon States and that further practical, realistic and mutually reinforcing steps are necessary to contribute to the improvement in the international climate for negotiations leading to the elimination of nuclear weapons,

Mindful that a diminishing role for nuclear weapons in the security policies of nuclear-weapon States would positively impact on international peace and security and improve the conditions for the further reduction and the elimination of nuclear weapons,

Reiterating the highest priority accorded to nuclear disarmament in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and by the international community,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons that there exists an obligation for all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Recalling also the call in the United Nations Millennium Declaration to seek to eliminate the dangers posed by weapons of mass destruction and the resolve to strive for the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weapons, including the possibility of convening an international conference to identify ways of eliminating nuclear dangers,

1. Calls for a review of nuclear doctrines and, in this context, immediate and urgent steps to reduce the risks of unintentional and accidental use of nuclear weapons, including through the de-alerting and de-targeting of nuclear weapons;

2. Requests the five nuclear-weapon States to take measures towards the implementation of paragraph 1 above;

3. Calls upon Member States to take the necessary measures to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects and to promote nuclear disarmament, with the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 62/32 of 5 December 2007;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts and support initiatives that would contribute towards the full implementation of the seven recommendations identified in the report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters that would significantly reduce the risk of nuclear war, and also to continue to encourage Member States to consider the convening of an international conference, as proposed in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to identify ways of eliminating nuclear dangers, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Reducing nuclear danger".

Conference on Disarmament

In 2008, the Conference on Disarmament was unable to arrive at a consensus on the establishment of a subsidiary body to address nuclear disarmament or on a substantive programme of work. As a result, the item was considered only during general debates and informal meetings. The Conference had before it a proposal for the programme of work [CD/1840] and letters submitted by Pakistan on the proposal [CD/1843 & 1851]. It held two informal meetings on 5 and 19 February, followed by a session on nuclear disarmament on 31 July. During those discussions, Canada underlined NPT’s pivotal role in nuclear disarmament, non-proliferation and peaceful use of nuclear energy, and reiterated that a fissile material agreement would be a step forward in meeting the Article VI obligations of the nuclear-weapon States. To enhance transparency, it made proposals for: regular updates by nuclear-weapon States on policies and doctrines; numbers and status of nuclear weapons and delivery systems; reduction of operational readiness of nuclear weapons systems; nuclear reduction to be transparent; and a multilateral agreement to reduce nuclear weapons. China noted that peace and international security and a healthy international environment were the basis of nuclear disarmament, and added that the United States and the Russian Federation had a special responsibility in that regard. It reiterated its pledge not to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States and urged other nuclear powers to follow its example. The United States, on 7 February, organized a presentation by the Administrator of its National Nuclear Security Administration, at which time some concern about certain elements were introduced. Concerns were also expressed on 5 February, when a statement was made by the Defence Minister of the United Kingdom to shift and shape the interpretation of NPT commitments, particularly those under Article VI. Some States said that greater emphasis was placed on nuclear non-proliferation at the expense of nuclear disarmament. The Group of 21’s (G-21) position on the subject was reiterated by the Syrian Arab Republic, the Regional Group Coordinator, and supported by Algeria, Egypt, Iran and Pakistan.

Other developments included the establishment of the International Commission on Nuclear Non-Proliferation and Disarmament, which sought to shape a global consensus for the 2010 NPT Review Conference and beyond. The 15-member panel was led by former Australian and Japanese Foreign Ministers and was comprised of former heads of State, ministers, military strategists and disarmament experts.

On 25 March, France transmitted President Nicolas Sarkozy’s 21 March statement setting out his country’s non-proliferation and disarmament policies, announcing new reductions in nuclear weapons and delivery systems, and outlining a disarmament “action plan”, primarily aimed at the eight States that had declared they had conducted nuclear tests [CD/1842].

Presidential reports [CD/1841, 1845 & 1848] were submitted for Parts I–III of the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/73 by recorded vote (173–4–6) [agenda item 89].

Renewed determination towards the total elimination of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling the need for all States to take further practical steps and effective measures towards the total elimination of nuclear weapons, with a view to achieving a peaceful and safe world free of nuclear weapons, and renewing the determination to do so,

Noting that the ultimate objective of the efforts of States in the disarmament process is general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling its resolution 62/37 of 5 December 2007,

Convinced that every effort should be made to avoid nuclear war and nuclear terrorism,

Reaffirming the crucial importance of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons as the cornerstone of the international nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation regime, and expressing regret over the lack of agreement on substantive issues at the Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, as well as over the elimination of references to nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation in the World Summit Outcome in 2005, the year of the sixtieth anniversary of the atomic bombings in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan,

Recalling the decisions and the resolution of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the Final Document of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international peace and security and the promotion of nuclear disarmament are mutually reinforcing,

Reaffirming that further advancement in nuclear disarmament will contribute to consolidating the international regime for nuclear non-proliferation, which is, inter alia, essential to international peace and security,

Taking note of concrete proposals and initiatives on nuclear disarmament, including those put forward or undertaken by nuclear-weapon States, including recently by France and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland,

Expressing deep concern regarding the growing dangers posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, inter alia, nuclear weapons, including that caused by proliferation networks,

Recognizing the importance of implementing Security Council resolution 1718(2006) of 14 October 2006 with regard to the nuclear test proclaimed by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on 9 October 2006, while taking note of the progress achieved by the Six-Party Talks,

1. Reaffirms the importance of all States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons complying with their obligations under all the articles of the Treaty;

2. Stresses the importance of an effective Treaty review process, welcoming the substantive discussions held at the second session of the Preparatory Committee in 2008, and calls upon all States parties to the Treaty to work together to ensure that the third session of the Preparatory Committee, in 2009, is held constructively, in order to facilitate the successful outcome of the 2010 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

3. Reaffirms the importance of the universality of the Treaty, and calls upon States not parties to the Treaty to accede to it as non-nuclear-weapon States without delay and without conditions, and pending their accession to refrain from acts that would defeat the objective and purpose of the Treaty as well as to take practical steps in support of the Treaty;

4. Encourages further steps leading to nuclear disarmament, to which all States parties to the Treaty are committed under article VI of the Treaty, including deeper reductions in all types of nuclear weapons, and emphasizes the importance of applying irreversibility and verifiability, as well as increased transparency in a way that promotes international stability and undiminished security for all, in the process of working towards the elimination of nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to undertake reductions of nuclear weapons in a transparent manner, and invites all nuclear-weapon States to agree on transparency and confidence-building measures, while noting in this regard the increased transparency recently demonstrated by nuclear-weapon States on their nuclear arsenals, including the current number of their nuclear warheads;

6. Encourages the Russian Federation and the United States of America to implement fully the Treaty on Strategic Offensive Reductions, which should serve as a step for further nuclear disarmament, and to undertake nuclear arms reductions beyond those provided for by the Treaty, including through the conclusion of a legally binding successor to the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I), which is due to expire in 2009, while welcoming the progress made by nuclear-weapon States, including the Russian Federation and the United States of America, on nuclear arms reductions;

7. Encourages States to continue to pursue efforts, within the framework of international cooperation, contributing to the reduction of nuclear-weapons-related materials;

8. Calls for the nuclear-weapon States to further reduce the operational status of nuclear weapons systems in ways that promote international stability and security;

9. Stresses the necessity of a diminishing role for nuclear weapons in security policies to minimize the risk that these weapons will ever be used and to facilitate the process of their total elimination, in a way that promotes international stability and based on the principle of undiminished security for all;

10. Urges all States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty at the earliest opportunity with a view to its early entry into force, stresses the importance of maintaining existing moratoriums on nuclear-weapon test explosions pending the entry into force of the Treaty, and reaffirms the importance of the continued development of the Treaty verification regime, including the international monitoring system, which will be required to provide assurance of compliance with the Treaty;

11. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to immediately resume its substantive work to its fullest, considering the developments of this year in the Conference;

12. Emphasizes the importance of the immediate commencement of negotiations on a fissile material cut-off treaty in the Conference on Disarmament and its early conclusion, and calls upon all nuclear-weapon States and States not parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to declare moratoriums on the production of fissile material for any nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices pending the entry into force of the Treaty;

13. Calls upon all States to redouble their efforts to prevent and curb the proliferation of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery;

14. Stresses the importance of further efforts for non-proliferation, including the universalization of the International Atomic Energy Agency comprehensive safeguards agreements, while also strongly encouraging further works for achieving the universalization of the Model Protocol Additional to the Agreement(s) between State(s) and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the Application of Safeguards approved by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency on 15 May 1997, and the full implementation of relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolution 1540(2004) of 28 April 2004;

15. Encourages all States to undertake concrete activities to implement, as appropriate, the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations study on disarmament and non-proliferation education, submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session, and to voluntarily share information on efforts they have been undertaking to that end;

16. Encourages the constructive role played by civil society in promoting nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session an item entitled "Renewed determination towards the total elimination of nuclear weapons".

Fissile material

Throughout the 2008 session of the Conference on Disarmament, most of its members, particularly from the Western Group, supported negotiations on a treaty to ban the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices. However, as a programme of work was not accepted, the Conference was unable to begin negotiating such a treaty. Notwithstanding, the Conference on 6 and 20 February held two rounds of informal deliberations on the prohibition of production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and explosive devices, under the chairmanship of the Coordinators for that issue. Another round of informal deliberations was held on 31 July.

During plenary meetings and informal deliberations, many delegations reiterated the need to commence negotiations on a fissile material cut-off treaty (FMCT). They urged Conference members to agree to the 2008 President's proposal on a programme of work (see p. 567) and immediately begin those negotiations without precondition. The Secretary-General, at the Conference's inaugural meeting, remarked that the negotiations would advance nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation. The United Kingdom called on the three countries that had not taken part in the previous year's negotiations to do so in 2008. The United States stood by the draft it had tabled in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 617]. France outlined an "action plan" that included immediate negotiations on a treaty and a moratorium on the production of fissile material. China, stressing that a balanced and acceptable work programme must first be agreed upon, considered the Conference the only venue for negotiating an FMCT, whereas for the Russian Federation, a treaty on the prevention of an arms race in outer space was a priority, although it noted that it would not object to negotiations within the agreed work programme.

During the high-level segment of the 2008 session from 3 to 5 March, Foreign Ministers from Argentina, Iran, Kazakhstan, the Netherlands, Norway, Romania and Slovakia underlined the importance of negotiating an FMCT. Similarly, Japan, Sweden, Turkey and Ukraine highlighted the need for the Conference to start negotiations.

Broad support for starting negotiations came also from regional groups, including the European Union (EU), members of the Western Group and the Eastern European Group. On behalf of the G-21, Sri Lanka stated that while the Group reiterated its position that total nuclear disarmament remained a priority, it was mindful of the need to address issues pertaining to fissile material, the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and negative security assurances. A number of G-21 countries, such as Brazil, Colombia and South Africa, were in favour of commencing, without precondition, FMCT negotiations. India also expressed support for establishing an FMCT ad hoc committee as part of the Conference's programme of work. On behalf of the Latin American countries, Chile supported the proposal on a programme of work.

Despite the overwhelming support for the proposed programme of work, which would allow the Conference to begin negotiations, no consensus was reached during the year. However, substantive discussions continued through all three rounds of informal deliberations. In his assessment of the February deliberations, the Coordinator noted that no delegation had expressed opposition to FMCT negotiations, with many stressing the need to commence such a treaty without delay.

The Coordinator also reported that no new positions were put forward on sub-issues, including: definition; scope; production of fissile material for non-explosive purposes; transparency; stocks; and compliance and verification. The 2008 deliberations contained no new elements, but helped reaffirm the need for FMCT negotiations and revalidated the outcome of previous agenda item discussions, which was the goal of the 2008 Presidents.

During the final part of the session, the Conference President (United States) held the third round of informal meetings under the Coordinators on all seven agenda items (see p. 562). At the end of its Presidency, the United States noted with regret that the meetings had failed to reach consensus on a programme of work, which was perplexing as the discussions had underscored the common understanding of the Conference's purpose and the importance of substantive work on its core issues—including the prompt commencement of negotiations on an FMCT.

While the Conference was unable to agree on a mandate to negotiate an FMCT, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States recommitted themselves to the current moratoria for the production of weapon-usable fissile material. A number of countries called on all nuclear weapon States to declare such a moratorium.

The General Assembly, in resolution 63/73 of 2 December, called for the immediate commencement of negotiations on an FMCT (see p. 567).

Security assurances

The Conference on Disarmament, based on its organizational framework and under the guidance of Senegal, held two informal meetings on 12 and 21 February, followed by an additional session on 7 August, to discuss international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. The Coordinator, in an effort to build on areas of consensus, drew on the previous year's work [YUN 2007, p. 532]; however, the deliberations revealed that most positions remained unchanged. Some delegations believed that the existing frameworks, such as Security Council resolutions and nuclear-weapon-free zones, sufficiently addressed the objective, while others, arguing that the existing guarantees were inadequate, supported the development of a new legally binding instrument.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/387], adopted resolution 63/39 by recorded vote (122-1-58) [agenda item 87].

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined to abide strictly by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures and arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this question,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under the item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the relevant decision of the Thirteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Kuala Lumpur on 24 and 25 February 2003, which was reiterated at the Fourteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Havana on 15 and 16 September 2006, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all the nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against the non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 984(1995) of 11 April 1995 and the views expressed on it,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990, 46/32 of 6 December 1991, 47/50 of 9 December 1992, 48/73 of 16 December 1993, 49/73 of 15 December 1994, 50/68 of 12 December 1995, 51/43 of 10 December 1996, 52/36 of 9 December 1997, 53/75 of 4 December 1998, 54/52 of 1 December 1999, 55/31 of 20 November 2000, 56/22 of 22 November 2002, 58/35 of 8 December 2003, 59/64 of 3 December 2004, 60/53 of 8 December 2005, 61/57 of 6 December 2006 and 62/19 of 5 December 2007,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties with regard to evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, be explored further in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Also recommends that the Conference on Disarmament actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international agreements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Disarmament Commission

Working Group I of the Disarmament Commission [A/63/42] continued to consider recommendations for achieving the objective of disarmament and non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, on which it held pre-session informal consultations on 18 March, as well as a number of informal and formal meetings during the session. Despite extensive deliberations, Member States could not reach consensus on the Working Group's recommendations.

During the discussions, most States acknowledged NPT as the cornerstone of the international non-proliferation and disarmament regime and urged its full implementation. In that respect, numerous States endorsed the outcomes of the 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 189] and 2000 NPT Review Conferences [YUN 2000, p. 487]. Many States expressed support for the entry into force of CTBT, the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and negotiations on a fissile material treaty.

Slovenia, on behalf of the EU, emphasized that all disarmament and non-proliferation agreements should be effectively resourced, fully implemented and complied with. In addition, the EU stressed that a multilateral approach to non-proliferation provided the best way of countering the threat of WMD proliferation and their means of delivery.

Repeated calls were made for the complete, verifiable and irreversible elimination of nuclear weapons. Indonesia, on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (NAM), underscored the need for nuclear-weapon States to implement the unequivocal undertaking of totally eliminating nuclear weapons. In that regard, NAM called for an international conference to establish a phased programme for their complete elimination, as well as their development, production, acquisition, testing, stockpiling, transfer, use and threat of use, and to provide for their destruction. Mexico, for the Rio Group, expressed concern about the lack of substantive agreement on nuclear disarmament. Many States stressed that reducing the role of nuclear weapons in strategic and security doctrines was essential to realize the goal of nuclear disarmament. Kazakhstan, for its part, lamented the absence of political will to promote the disarmament agenda, and reiterated its proposal to draft an international legally binding instrument banning the use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear weapon States.

Some States expressed concern over the prospect of an arms race in outer space. The Russian Federation reiterated its view that devising measures to keep outer space free from any weapons and prevent it from turning into a new arena of confrontation was of vital importance for ensuring the development of science and maintaining international peace and security.

Bilateral agreements and unilateral measures

Russian Federation–United States framework for strategic cooperation

The United States–Russia Strategic Framework Declaration was signed by both States on 6 April to set forth a foundation for strategic cooperation between the two countries. Areas identified in the Declaration included steps to: promote security in the face of new and emerging threats; prevent the spread of WMDs; combat global terrorism; and advance economic cooperation. The two countries agreed to develop a legally binding arrangement following the expiration of the 1991 landmark Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I) [YUN 1991, p. 34] that was due to expire in December 2009. Both States aimed to engage in a high-level dialogue to analyse and address intermediate and shorter-range missile threats and inventory options. Furthermore, they agreed to intensify dialogue on issues concerning bilateral and multilateral missile defence cooperation, and to continue cooperation on preventing the spread of WMDs and on combating global terrorism.

United States–India Agreement for Peaceful Nuclear Cooperation

On 1 October, the United States Congress approved the Agreement for Peaceful Nuclear Cooperation with India, which was subsequently signed by both States on 10 October. That was made possible through the IAEA Board of Governors' approval of the India-specific Safeguards Agreement given on 1 August and the exception the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) granted to its full-scope safeguard requirements on 6 September.

The IAEA Board of Governors approved by consensus the "Agreement between the Government of India and the IAEA for the Application of Safeguards to Civilian Nuclear Facilities", which required IAEA to verify that certain nuclear material and facilities declared by India were used only for peaceful purposes. Under the agreement, India could add facilities over time to come under IAEA safeguards.

After addressing a series of questions concerning the United States' draft proposal, NSG also reached a consensus agreement to adopt the “Statement on Civil Nuclear Cooperation with India”, thus enabling the necessary exception to its full-scope safeguards requirements that would allow civil nuclear trade with India.

In the NSG statement, the Participating Governments declared their desire to contribute to the effectiveness, integrity and widest possible implementation of the provisions of NPT. They further noted that India had: decided to separate its civilian nuclear facilities; concluded negotiations with IAEA for the application of safeguards to civilian nuclear facilities; committed to the Additional Protocol to the safeguards agreement, which would harmonize its export control guidelines with those of NSG; and continued its unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing. On that basis, NSG agreed to adopt and implement a policy on civil nuclear cooperation by the Participating Governments with the IAEA-safeguarded Indian nuclear programme. That would allow the Participating Governments to transfer trigger-list items and/or related technology, nuclear-related dual-use equipment, materials, software and related technology to India for peaceful purposes and for use in IAEA-safeguarded facilities, provided that the transfer satisfied all other provisions of the NSG revised guidelines.

Democratic People’s Republic of Korea

Work continued in 2008 under the Six-Party Talks (China, Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK), Japan, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, United States) to achieve the verifiable denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. As part of the denuclearization process, the DPRK submitted to the United States for review documentation on its nuclear programmes and, in July, demolished the cooling tower of its experimental nuclear power plant. However, on 18 August, IAEA was informed that the DPRK had decided to suspend disabling activities at its reactor site and, by month’s end, commented that it would consider restoring its plutonium-producing facility over the perceived failure of the United States to fulfil its side of the October 2007 agreement on “Second-Phase Actions for the Implementation of the Joint Statement”. On 23 September, the DPRK informed IAEA that its inspectors would have no further access to its reprocessing plant, from which agency seals had already been removed, and stated its intent to introduce nuclear material back into the plant (see p. 595).

In early October, intense negotiations between the United States and the DPRK led to an agreement on verification measures, which would serve as a baseline for a Verification Protocol to be finalized and adopted by the Six Parties. That led to the removal of the DPRK from the United States list of State Sponsors of Terrorism, while the DPRK restored the access of IAEA inspectors to its nuclear facilities and confirmed that it would resume its disablement. However, new complications arose towards the end of year, as the DPRK claimed that it had not agreed to sampling as one of the verification measures, since that would be a breach of its sovereignty. Consequently, the last round of the Six-Party Talks ended in early December in Beijing without agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/41 by recorded vote (141-3-34) [agenda item 89].

Decreasing the operational readiness of nuclear weapons systems

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 62/36 of 5 December 2007,

Recognizing also that the maintenance of nuclear weapons on high alert was a feature of cold war nuclear postures, and welcoming the increased confidence and transparency since the cessation of the cold war,

Concerned that, notwithstanding the end of the cold war, several thousand nuclear weapons remain on high alert, ready to be launched within minutes,

Noting the increased engagement in multilateral disarmament forums in support of further reductions to the operational status of nuclear weapons systems,

Recognizing that the maintenance of nuclear weapons systems at a high level of readiness increases the risk of the use of such weapons, including the unintentional or accidental use, which would have catastrophic consequences,

Recognizing also that reductions in deployments and the lowering of operational status contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as to the process of nuclear disarmament, through the enhancement of confidence-building and transparency measures and a diminishing role for nuclear weapons in security policies,

Welcoming bilateral initiatives, such as the proposed United States/Russian Federation Joint Centre for the Exchange of Data from Early Warning Systems and Notification of Missile Launches, which can play a central role in operational status reduction processes,

Welcoming also the steps taken by some States to reduce the operational status of their nuclear weapons systems, including de-targeting initiatives and increasing the amount of preparation time required for deployment,

1. Calls for further practical steps to be taken to decrease the operational readiness of nuclear weapons systems, with a view to ensuring that all nuclear weapons are removed from high alert status;

2. Urges States to update the General Assembly on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/41:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Georgia, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Moldova, Montenegro, Netherlands, Palau, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Ukraine.

Also on 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/46 by recorded vote (117-45-19) [agenda item 89 (v)].

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 E of 15 December 1994 on a step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat, and its resolutions 50/70 P of 12 December 1995, 51/45 O of 10 December 1996, 52/38 L of 9 December 1997, 53/77 X of 4 December 1998, 54/54 P of 1 December 1999, 55/33 T of 20 November 2000, 56/24 R of 29 November 2001, 57/79 of 22 November 2002, 58/56 of 8 December 2003, 59/77 of 3 December 2004, 60/70 of 8 December 2005, 61/78 of 6 December 2006 and 62/42 of 5 December 2007 on nuclear disarmament,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Bearing in mind that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction of 1972 and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction of 1993 have already established legal regimes on the complete prohibition of biological and chemical weapons, respectively, and determined to achieve a nuclear weapons convention on the prohibition of the development, testing, production, stockpiling, loan, transfer, use and threat of use of nuclear weapons and on their destruction, and to conclude such an international convention at an early date,

Recognizing that there now exist conditions for the establishment of a world free of nuclear weapons, and stressing the need to take concrete practical steps towards achieving this goal,

Bearing in mind paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, calling for the urgent negotiation of agreements for the cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems, and for a comprehensive and phased programme with agreed time frames, wherever feasible, for the progressive and balanced reduction of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, leading to their ultimate and complete elimination at the earliest possible time,

Reaffirming the conviction of the States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons that the Treaty is a cornerstone of nuclear non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament and the importance of the decision on strengthening the review process for the Treaty, the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, the decision on the extension of the Treaty and the resolution on the Middle East, adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Stressing the importance of the thirteen steps for the systematic and progressive efforts to achieve the objective of nuclear disarmament leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons, as agreed to by the States parties in the Final Document of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Reiterating the highest priority accorded to nuclear disarmament in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and by the international community,

Reiterating its call for an early entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty,

Noting with appreciation the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I), to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America are States parties,

Recalling the entry into force of the Treaty on Strategic Offensive Reductions ("the Moscow Treaty") between the United States of America and the Russian Federation as a significant step towards reducing their deployed strategic nuclear weapons, while calling for further irreversible deep cuts in their nuclear arsenals,

Noting with appreciation the unilateral measures taken by the nuclear-weapon States for nuclear arms limitation, and encouraging them to take further such measures, while reiterating deep concern over the slow pace of progress towards nuclear disarmament and the lack of progress by the nuclear-weapon States towards accomplishing the total elimination of their nuclear arsenals,

Recognizing the complementarity of bilateral, plurilateral and multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament, and that bilateral negotiations can never replace multilateral negotiations in this respect,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and the multilateral efforts in the Conference on Disarmament to reach agreement on such an international convention at an early date,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996, and welcoming the unanimous reaffirmation by all Judges of the Court that there exists an obligation for all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Panel of Governmental Experts

Report of Secretary-General. In July [A/63/176], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Panel of Governmental Experts on the issue of missiles in all its aspects, established in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 541] pursuant to Assembly resolution 59/67 [YUN 2004, p. 537]. The Panel held its second and third sessions from 25 to 29 February and 2 to 6 June, respectively. During those sessions, it conducted in-depth discussions on all aspects of the subject, including the peaceful uses of missile technology, export control, missile defence, global and regional security implications of missiles, missile-relevant confidence-building measures, and a possible UN role for addressing the issue. At the end of its third and final session in June, the Panel adopted a consensus report concluding, among other things, that in the interest of international peace and security, continued international efforts were important to deal with the increasingly complex subject of missiles. The Panel noted that it would be useful to try to develop understandings on how to categorize and describe missiles, how their different aspects interrelated, and how they impacted on global and regional security scenarios. It emphasized the value of further deliberations, focusing on areas of existing and emerging consensus as well as the important role of the United Nations in building such a consensus.

Missile Technology Control Regime

The Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR)—an informal and voluntary association of countries sharing the goal of non-proliferation of unmanned systems capable of delivering WMDs—at its twenty-third plenary meeting (Canberra, Australia, 5–7 November) recognized that more must be done to discourage WMD means-of-delivery programmes and proliferation activities, and acknowledged that particular challenges were posed by missile proliferation in Northeast Asia, South Asia and the Middle East. At the meeting, the partners discussed export control challenges and confirmed their determination to strengthen MTCR controls to meet proliferation threats, including those posed by rapid technological change. The partners discussed a number of proposals to maintain the accuracy and comprehensiveness of MTCR controls, and agreed on changes to the list of controlled goods, as well as on nationally implemented measures to improve the effectiveness of controls. The partners expressed their determination to implement the Security Council resolutions relevant to MTCR export controls and to prevent the transfer of any items, materials, goods and technology that could contribute to WMD missile proliferation. More broadly, the partners reiterated their support for implementation of Council resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544], which called on all States to establish effective national export controls to prevent WMD proliferation.

Missile defence system in Europe

Plans for stationing a missile defence system in Europe were further consolidated when the United States and the Czech Republic issued a Joint Statement on 3 April announcing the completion of negotiations on a missile defence agreement that called for the stationing of a ballistic missile-tracking radar in the Czech Republic, and on 20 August when the United States and Poland signed the legally binding “Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of Poland Concerning the Deployment of Ground-Based Ballistic Missile Defense Interceptors in the Territory of the Republic of Poland”. Those plans were criticized by the Russian Federation, which declared its intention to deploy countermeasures should the missile defence system become reality.

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

Status

As at 31 December, 179 States had signed the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) adopted by General Assembly resolution 50/245 [YUN 1996, p. 454], and 148 had ratified it. In accordance with article XIV, CTBT would enter into force 180 days after the 44 States possessing nuclear reactors, listed in annex 2 of the Treaty, had deposited their instruments of ratification. At year's end, 35 of those States had ratified the Treaty. During the year, instruments of ratification were deposited by Barbados, Burundi, Colombia, Lebanon, Malawi, Malaysia and Mozambique.

Report of Secretary General. In July [A/63/124], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/59 [YUN 2007, p. 543], the Secretary-General reported, in consultation with the Preparatory Commission for CTBT, on efforts of States that had ratified the Treaty towards its universalization and possibilities for providing assistance on ratification procedures to States that so requested it.

Ministerial Meeting in support of CTBT entry into force

The Fourth Ministerial Meeting in support of CTBT's entry into force (New York, 24 September) was convened by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Australia, Austria, Canada, Costa Rica, Finland, Japan and the Netherlands. In his opening address, the Secretary-General reiterated his appeal to those States whose ratification was needed for the entry into force—China, the DPRK, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Pakistan and the United States—to sign and ratify the Treaty, underlining that it would be a major step in the efforts to build a safer, more peaceful world. Approximately 40 Foreign Ministers participated in the Meeting and issued a Joint Ministerial Statement that was subsequently endorsed by 96 countries. In the Statement, which was annexed to a letter of 19 December [A/63/634] to the Secretary-General, the Ministers called on all States that had not yet done so to sign and ratify the Treaty without delay, in particular those whose ratification was needed for its entry into force, and committed themselves individually and together to make the Treaty a focus of attention at the highest political levels.

Preparatory Commission for the CTBT Organization

The Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization (CT-ВТО), established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 452], continued to develop the Treaty's verification regime. Further progress was made in setting up the International Monitoring System (IMS) [YUN 1999, p. 472], the global network of 337 facilities to be built in 90 countries and designed to detect nuclear explosions prohibited by CTBT. By the end of 2008, approximately 250 IMS stations, representing 70 per cent of the entire network, had been verified and were transmitting information to the International Data Centre in Vienna. The migration of the Global Communications Infrastructure had been completed, with the data volume transmitted through the system. The number of IMS data users increased further, crossing the threshold of 1,000 authorized individual users in 100 countries. In September, a major on-site inspection in Kazakhstan was carried out successfully—the first comprehensive inspection ever conducted, involving all major elements of the on-site inspection regime. Additionally, equipment weighing 50 tons was deployed in Semipalatinsk, a former Soviet nuclear test site in Kazakhstan. Speaking before the First Committee on 15 October, the CT-ВТО Executive Secretary informed members that the International Scientific Studies project was launched in March, whereby participating scientific institutions independently assessed the verification regime and explored future opportunities for cooperation between CTВТО and the scientific community. The project was to culminate in a conference in Vienna in June 2009.

The Preparatory Commission held its thirtieth (23–24 June) [CTBT/PC-30/1] and thirty-first (17–18 November) [CTBT/PC-31/1] sessions, both in Vienna, to consider the reports of its working groups and to discuss organizational, budgetary and other matters. The Commission adopted its 2009 programme budget in the amounts of $52,614,400 and €18,543,600.

Note and report of Secretary-General. By a July note [A/63/156], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the report of the Commission's Executive Committee for 2007. In an August report [A/63/228-S/2008/531], the Secretary-General noted that the report of the Executive Secretary for 2006 [YUN 2007, p. 542] had been submitted to the Assembly pursuant to article IV, paragraph 1, of the Agreement to Regulate the Relationship between the United Nations and the Preparatory Commission, annexed to Assembly resolution 54/280 [YUN 2000, p. 501].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November [meeting 37], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/13 [draft: A/63/L.11] by recorded vote (64-1-0) [agenda item 114 (t)].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the report of the Executive Secretary of the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization,

Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session the sub-item entitled “Cooperation between the United Nations and the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization”.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/13:

In favour: Albania, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Belarus, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Cambodia, China, Congo, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Mexico, Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Myanmar, New Zealand, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, San Marino, Singapore, Slovakia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Togo, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: None.

Prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons

In 2008, the Conference on Disarmament did not hold negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons, as called for in General Assembly resolution 62/51 [YUN 2007, p. 545]. The Assembly, in resolution 63/75 (see below), reiterated its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/390], adopted resolution 63/75 by recorded vote (121-50-10) [agenda item 90 (e)].

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to the survival of mankind,

Bearing in mind the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 8 July 1996 on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons,

Convinced that a multilateral, universal and binding agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would contribute to the elimination of the nuclear threat and to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons, thereby strengthening international peace and security,

Conscious that some steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly states that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that any use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Determined to achieve an international convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons, leading to their ultimate destruction,

Stressing that an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons, with a specified framework of time,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 2008 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on this subject as called for in General Assembly resolution 62/51 of 5 December 2007,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 63/75:

Advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice

Pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 62/32 [YUN 2007, p. 535], 62/39 [ibid., p. 545] and 62/42 [ibid., p. 538], on the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice that the threat or use of nuclear weapons was contrary to the UN Charter [YUN 1999, p. 461], the Secretary-General in July presented information from four States (Canada, Cuba, Japan, Qatar) on measures they had taken to implement resolution 62/39 and towards nuclear disarmament [A/63/135].

On 2 December [meeting 61], on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/49 by recorded vote (127-30-23) [agenda item 89 (u)].

Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the continuing existence of nuclear weapons poses a threat to all humanity and that their use would have catastrophic consequences for all life on Earth, and recognizing that the only defence against a nuclear catastrophe is the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the certainty that they will never be produced again,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Mindful of the solemn obligations of States parties, undertaken in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, particularly to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Recalling the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty in its resolution 50/245 of 10 September 1996, and expressing its satisfaction at the increasing number of States that have signed and ratified the Treaty,

Recognizing with satisfaction that the Antarctic Treaty and the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok, Pelindaba and Semipalatinsk, as well as Mongolia's nuclear-weapon-free status, are gradually freeing the entire southern hemisphere and adjacent areas covered by those treaties from nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing the need for the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on a phased programme for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons with a specified framework of time,

Expressing its regret over the failure of the 2005 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to reach agreement on any substantive issues,

Expressing its deep concern at the lack of progress in the implementation of the thirteen steps to implement article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons agreed to at the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty,

Desiring to achieve the objective of a legally binding prohibition of the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, threat or use of nuclear weapons and their destruction under effective international control,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996,

Taking note of the relevant portions of the report of the Secretary-General relating to the implementation of resolution 62/39,

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons".

Non-proliferation issues

Non-proliferation treaty

Status

In 2008, the number of States party to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], remained at 190. NPT entered into force on 5 March 1970. It was extended indefinitely by Assembly resolution 50/70 in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 189].

2010 review conference

Following the entry into force of NPT, quinquennial review conferences, as called for under article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty, were held, the first one in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 27], and the most recent in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 597].

As decided by the NPT parties in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 547], the Preparatory Committee for the 2010 Review Conference held its second session in 2008 (Geneva, 28 April–9 May) [NPT/CONF.2010/PC.II/13]. Participants included 106 States parties, one specialized agency, the IAEA, five intergovernmental organizations and 63 NGOs.

The Committee held 14 meetings, nine of which were devoted to a substantive discussion on three main clusters and three specific blocks of issues. The clusters dealt with implementation of the Treaty provisions related to: non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, disarmament and international peace and security; non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, safeguards and nuclear-weapon-free zones; and the inalienable right of all NPT parties to develop research, produce and use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, without discrimination and in conformity with articles I and II. The specific blocks of issues addressed: nuclear disarmament and security assurances; regional issues, including with respect to the Middle East and the implementation of the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review Conference [YUN 1995, p. 189]; and other Treaty provisions, including article X. The Committee also held an interactive debate on each topic.

The Committee invited the UN Secretary-General, in consultation with the members of the Preparatory Committee, to nominate a provisional Secretary-General for the Review Conference, who would later be confirmed by the Conference itself. To promote greater financial transparency and accountability, it requested the Secretary-General to provide a financial report to the Conference as well as to each session of the Preparatory Committee.

The Committee decided to meet for its third session in New York from 4 to 15 May 2009, and that the Review Conference would be held from 26 April to 21 May 2010, also in New York.

The General Assembly, in resolution 63/58 (see p. 580), welcomed the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the 2010 Review Conference and called on the Committee, at its third session in 2009, to identify and address specific aspects where progress was required, in order to advance the objective of a nuclear-weapon-free world, building on the outcomes of the 1995 [ibid.] and 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 597] Conferences.

Non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction

Security Council Committee on WMDs

In April, the Security Council, by resolution 1810(2008) (see below), extended until 2011 the mandate of the 1540 Committee, established in 2004 for a period of no longer than two years, with a mandate to report to the Council on the implementation of resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544] concerning the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction (WMDs). The Committee's mandate had been extended until 2008 by resolution 1673(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 635].

In July, the Committee presented its second report (see p. 587), identifying implementation measures that States had put in place, especially since the adoption of resolution 1673(2006). New reports and information submitted by States and governmental sources since 2006 demonstrated a qualitative improvement in progress towards full implementation of resolution 1540(2004). As at November, 159 States had submitted their first national reports, and 102 States had also provided additional or updated information.

The key activities undertaken by the Committee in 2008 included examining measures taken to implement resolution 1540(2004); conducting outreach activities; developing deeper and mutually beneficial cooperation with other Security Council counter-terrorism bodies, as well as with global, regional and subregional intergovernmental organizations; and creating new tools to facilitate assistance.

The Committee Chair, members and experts participated in numerous international, regional and national workshops, conferences and seminars to advance the full implementation of Security Council resolutions 1540(2004), 1673(2006) and 1810(2008). The events addressed topics ranging from the broad challenge of preventing WMD proliferation to specific aspects of resolution 1540(2004) and included issues concerning chemical and biological weapons-related materials; the prevention of nuclear terrorism; trafficking in nuclear materials; border and export controls; brokering and financial control; and criminal law aspects of countering nuclear, chemical and biological terrorism, in light of relevant universal instruments. Some workshops addressed capacity-building and assistance as priority areas.

On 6 May [meeting 5886] and 12 November [meeting 6015], the Committee, jointly with the Counter-Terrorism Committee and the Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee, briefed the Council on progress achieved in fulfilling their respective mandates.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 April [meeting 5877] the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1810(2008). The draft [S/2008/273] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

5. Encourages States that have requests for assistance to convey them to the 1540 Committee, and encourages them to make use of the 1540 Committee’s assistance template to that effect; urges States and international, regional and subregional organizations to inform the 1540 Committee, as appropriate, by 25 June 2008 of areas in which they are able to provide assistance; and calls upon States and such organizations, if they have not done so previously, to provide the 1540 Committee with a point of contact for assistance by 25 June 2008;

11. Further decides, in that regard:

(a) To encourage the pursuit of the ongoing dialogue between the 1540 Committee and States on their further actions to implement fully resolution 1540(2004) and on technical assistance needed and offered;

(e) To request the 1540 Committee to provide opportunities for interaction with interested States and relevant international, regional and subregional organizations to promote the implementation of resolution 1540(2004);

12. Reiterates the need to enhance ongoing cooperation between the 1540 Committee, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1267(1999) concerning Al-Qaida and the Taliban and associated individuals and entities, and the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism, including through, as appropriate, enhanced information-sharing, coordination on visits to countries, within their respective mandates, technical assistance and other issues of relevance to all three Committees, and expresses its intention to provide guidance to the Committees on areas of common interest in order better to coordinate their efforts;

13. Urges the 1540 Committee to encourage and take full advantage of voluntary financial contributions to assist States in identifying and addressing their needs for the implementation of resolution 1540(2004), and requests the 1540 Committee to consider options for developing and making more effective existing funding mechanisms and to report to the Council on its consideration of the matter no later than 31 December 2008;

14. Decides that the 1540 Committee shall submit to the Council no later than 24 April 2011 a report on compliance with resolution 1540(2004) through the achievement of the implementation of its requirements;

15. Also decides to remain seized of the matter.

Implementation report. In July [S/2008/493], the Committee on WMDs reported on its work to promote full implementation of Council resolution 1540(2004) by Member States.

Since the extension of its mandate in 2006, the Committee had held formal and informal meetings, as well as informal consultations. Its three sub-committees, established in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 545], held meetings to consider national reports and additional information submitted by States. The Committee continued to be assisted by experts who received substantive and logistical support from UNODA.

In September 2007, the Committee had adopted its sixth programme of work, for the period from 1 October 2007 to 27 April 2008, which represented a continuation of the fifth programme with the addition of the preparation of the Committee's report on the second biennium of its work. In October and November 2007, the Committee had sent letters to all 192 Member States, each of them accompanied by a matrix prepared by the Committee's experts, reminding them to submit reports or provide up-to-date information on further steps they had taken or planned to take to achieve full implementation of resolution 1540(2004). As at 1 July 2008, 103 States had responded and the total number of States having submitted at least one report since 2004 stood at 155, with one organization also having reported. Of those States that had submitted first reports, 102 provided additional information.

The Committee believed that it had made considerable progress with regard to implementation of resolution 1540(2004), assisting the Council in implementation monitoring through: the examination of relevant measures taken by Member States; the organization of intensive outreach activities; the development of deeper and mutually beneficial cooperation with other Council counter-terrorism bodies, as well as with global, regional and subregional intergovernmental organizations; the creation of new tools to facilitate assistance and transparency; and the enhancement of dialogue with individual States. The Committee further believed that those activities had substantially raised the awareness of the international community about the dangers associated with the potential nexus between the proliferation of WMDs, their means of delivery and related materials, and non-State actors. Since the adoption of Council resolution 1673(2006), the Committee had sought to facilitate Member States' efforts to prepare to address that nexus.

The Committee identified specific measures that States had in place to implement resolution 1540(2004), including steps they had taken since April 2006. Those measures ranged from developing new institutional means to incorporate the obligations from the resolution into national practices to adopting new legislation and enforcement measures, executing new policies and creating new assistance programmes geared towards resolution implementation.

Notwithstanding the progress made, the Committee concluded that Member States needed to do far more. Consequently, achieving the resolution goals required further attention by the Council and more intensive action, particularly on capacity-building and sharing lessons learned. Among other recommendations, the Committee believed that, consistent with resolution 1810(2008), it should strengthen its clearing-house role for channelling assistance to States in need; increase tailored dialogue with and among States to identify assistance needs and projects to meet them; and promote awareness of, make better use of and consider options for developing funding mechanisms in order to build capacity for implementation. To those ends, it should work more closely with global and regional intergovernmental organizations and arrangements, within and outside the UN system, to foster experience-sharing, create discussion forums and develop innovative mechanisms to achieve implementation.

The Committee Chair presented the Committee's report to the Security Council on 18 August [meeting 5955].

Communications. By a letter of 26 December [S/2008/821], the Chair of the Committee on WMDs informed the Security Council President that the Committee had initiated a discussion on options for developing and making more effective the existing funding mechanisms for the implementation of resolution 1540(2004).

By a communication of the same date [S/2008/820], the Secretary-General informed the Council President that on 19 December, the Committee had approved the recruitment of three new experts to the group of experts assisting the Committee, effective 1 April 2009.

By a letter of 24 October to the First Committee Chairperson [A/C.1/63/9], Ecuador expressed concern at a publication sponsored by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, entitled Implementing Resolution 1540: the Role of Regional Organizations, which had been presented to Member States during an event on 22 October. The chapter referring to the resolution's implementation in Latin America and the role of the Organization of American States allegedly contained errors, outdated information and a baseless statement about the status of implementation by certain regional States. Such occurrences in no way contributed to the efforts being made by all countries of Latin America and the Caribbean to ensure the full implementation. Similar sentiments were voiced by Cuba [A/C.1/63/7].

New types of WMDs

The issue of radiological weapons had been on the Conference on Disarmament agenda since 1979. In accordance with the joint initiative by the 2008 Presidents, and under the guidance of the Coordinator (Bulgaria), the Conference [A/63/27] held three informal meetings on 13 and 29 February and on 7 August on "New types of WMDs and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons".

During the discussions, delegations validated the outcome of the 2007 Conference meetings on the subject [YUN 2007, p. 550]. While a number of delegations underscored the continued relevance of that agenda item, particularly considering the threat of dirty bombs by non-State actors, most agreed that it was not a key issue and that priority should be given to the core issues on the agenda. Consequently, no specific issues or new proposals were raised during the proceedings in 2008.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/382], adopted resolution 63/36 by recorded vote (175-1-1) [agenda item 82].

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament

of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Recalling further paragraph 77 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Determined to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction that have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of weapons of mass destruction identified in the definition of weapons of mass destruction adopted by the United Nations in 1948,

Noting the desirability of keeping the matter under review, as appropriate,

1. Reaffirms that effective measures should be taken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction;

3. Calls upon all States, immediately following any recommendations of the Conference on Disarmament, to give favourable consideration to those recommendations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its sixty-third session;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report the results of any consideration of the matter in its annual reports to the General Assembly;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Terrorism and WMDs

During the year, the United Nations continued to promote international action against terrorism through collaborative efforts with Member States and regional and international organizations, and through the work of the Counter-Terrorism Committee (see p. 70) and the Al-Qaida and Taliban Sanctions Committee (see p. 376). In combating terrorism, the Committee on WMDs worked with those bodies, and on 6 May [meeting 5886] and 12 November [meeting 6015], the three Committees jointly briefed the Security Council on progress achieved in fulfilling their mandates. The Council, in resolution 1805(2008) of 20 March (see p. 71), reiterated the need to enhance ongoing cooperation among the three bodies regarding non-proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and their means of delivery, as well as their respective groups of experts, through information-sharing, coordinated visits to countries, technical assistance and other relevant issues.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/33 [YUN 2007, p. 551], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/63/153], presented the views of 10 Member States and 11 international organizations, including UN agencies, on measures they reported on preventing terrorists from acquiring WMDs, their means of delivery, and related materials and technologies.

IAEA action. During the year, IAEA continued to emphasize the need to advance Member States' capacity to tackle potential threats associated with nuclear terrorism. On 4 October [GC/52/RES/10], the IAEA General Conference, in a resolution on measures to protect against nuclear terrorism, invited all States to consider the potential danger of illicit trafficking of nuclear and other radioactive material across their borders and within their countries, and welcomed the Agency's activities in support of States' efforts to enhance nuclear security worldwide.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/60 without vote [agenda item 89 (r)].

Noting also that the Group of Eight, the European Union, the Regional Forum of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and others have taken into account in their deliberations the dangers posed by the likely acquisition by terrorists of weapons of mass destruction, and the need for international cooperation in combating it,

Noting further the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism, launched jointly by the Russian Federation and the United States of America,

Acknowledging the consideration of issues relating to terrorism and weapons of mass destruction by the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its fifty-second regular session,

Taking note also of the 2005 World Summit Outcome adopted on 16 September 2005 at the High-level Plenary Meeting of the sixtieth session of the General Assembly and the adoption on 8 September 2006 of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy,

Taking note further of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 5 of resolution 62/33,

Mindful of the urgent need for addressing, within the United Nations framework and through international cooperation, this threat to humanity,

Emphasizing that progress is urgently needed in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation in order to maintain international peace and security and to contribute to global efforts against terrorism,

1. Calls upon all Member States to support international efforts to prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery;

2. Appeals to all Member States to consider early accession to and ratification of the International Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism;

4. Encourages cooperation among and between Member States and relevant regional and international organizations for strengthening national capacities in this regard;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to compile a report on measures already taken by international organizations on issues relating to the linkage between the fight against terrorism and the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and to seek the views of Member States on additional relevant measures, including national measures, for tackling the global threat posed by the acquisition by terrorists of weapons of mass destruction and to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Measures to prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction".

Multilateralism in disarmament and non-proliferation

Given the multifaceted challenges confronting international disarmament and non-proliferation, the United Nations continued in 2008 to reinforce and strengthen multilateralism as the core principle in addressing those issues.

The Secretary-General, with the support of the High Representative on Disarmament and UNODA, remained committed to revitalizing the international disarmament agenda, as well as the effectiveness of the United Nations in that area. He continued to play a large role in promoting and supporting multilateral efforts to strengthen the implementation of existing multilateral disarmament, non-proliferation and arms limitation agreements, and encouraged new inclusive, complementary and mutually reinforcing initiatives. Under the leadership of the High Representative for Disarmament, UNODA enhanced its engagement and cooperation with Member States, intergovernmental organizations and civil society.

At its Fifteenth Ministerial Conference (Tehran, Iran, 27–30 July), the Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) underlined multilateralism and multilaterally agreed solutions, in accordance with the UN Charter, as the only sustainable method of addressing disarmament and international security issues.

Reports of Secretary-General. In his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization [A/63/1], the Secretary-General noted that the risks inherent in the existence of WMDs, especially nuclear weapons, were universally recognized. Though welcoming recent initiatives aimed at achieving a world free of nuclear weapons, as well as reductions of nuclear arsenals and reduced reliance on nuclear weapons, he stressed that further reductions in strategic and non-strategic stockpiles, greater transparency, de-alerting and a diminished role for nuclear weapons in security policies were needed.

Noting that the year 2008 marked the fortieth anniversary of the opening for signature of the NPT, the Secretary-General said that the Treaty must be strengthened and trust in it be rebuilt, as part of a broader process of reaffirming the rule of law as well as the importance of multilateralism.

The Secretary-General was encouraged by the continued determination and efforts by States to bring the CTBT into force as soon as possible and was pleased to report progress in the implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (see p. 604). The Secretary-General noted that efforts continued in the Conference on Disarmament to overcome the long-standing deadlock over its priorities. In January, he had urged Members to forestall arms races, reduce tensions and free resources for achieving the Millennium Development Goals. Successful negotiations on a fissile material ban and substantive discussions on preventing the placement of weapons in outer space, nuclear disarmament and security assurances depended on high-level leadership and political support. Controlling conventional weapons remained central to UN disarmament efforts, the Secretary-General asserted, and strong calls to address the humanitarian impact of cluster munitions had been answered with the adoption in May of the Convention on Cluster Munitions (see p. 623).

According to the Secretary-General, the revitalization of multilateral disarmament efforts was within reach. Full implementation of multilateral disarmament and non-proliferation arrangements and the achievement of their universality remained a major challenge. Strengthening regional mechanisms and developing effective partnerships, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the UN Charter, would help bolster progress and unlock the disarmament stalemate.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/27 [YUN 2007, p. 553], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/63/126], presented replies received from five Member States (Cuba, the Netherlands, Panama, Qatar, Spain) on the promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation.

The Security Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2008/43, of 19 November (see p. 592), stressed the importance of a multilateral system to better address, in accordance with international law, the multifaceted and interconnected challenges and threats confronting the world. It expressed its support for multilateralism as one of the most important means for resolving security concerns in accordance with international law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/50 by recorded vote (126-5-50) [agenda item 89 (m)].

Promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation

The General Assembly,

Determined to foster strict respect for the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 56/24 T of 29 November 2001 on multilateral cooperation in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation and global efforts against terrorism and other relevant resolutions, as well as its resolutions 57/63 of 22 November 2002, 58/44 of 8 December 2003, 59/69 of 3 December 2004, 60/59 of 8 December 2005, 61/62 of 6 December 2006 and 62/27 of 5 December 2007 on the promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation,

Recalling also the purpose of the United Nations to maintain international peace and security and, to that end, to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace, as enshrined in the Charter,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which states, inter alia, that the responsibility for managing worldwide economic and social development, as well as threats to international peace and security, must be shared among the nations of the world and should be exercised multilaterally and that, as the most universal and most representative organization in the world, the United Nations must play the central role,

Convinced that, in the globalization era and with the information revolution, arms regulation, non-proliferation and disarmament problems are more than ever the concern of all countries in the world, which are affected in one way or another by these problems and, therefore, should have the possibility to participate in the negotiations that arise to tackle them,

Bearing in mind the existence of a broad structure of disarmament and arms regulation agreements resulting from non-discriminatory and transparent multilateral negotiations with the participation of a large number of countries, regardless of their size and power,

Aware of the need to advance further in the field of arms regulation, non-proliferation and disarmament on the basis of universal, multilateral, non-discriminatory and transparent negotiations with the goal of reaching general and complete disarmament under strict international control,

Recognizing the complementarity of bilateral, plurilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament,

Recognizing also that the proliferation and development of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons, are among the most immediate threats to international peace and security which need to be dealt with, with the highest priority,

Considering that the multilateral disarmament agreements provide the mechanism for States parties to consult one another and to cooperate in solving any problems which may arise in relation to the objective of, or in the application of, the provisions of the agreements and that such consultations and cooperation may also be undertaken through appropriate international procedures within the framework of the United Nations and in accordance with the Charter,

Stressing that international cooperation, the peaceful settlement of disputes, dialogue and confidence-building measures would contribute essentially to the creation of multilateral and bilateral friendly relations among peoples and nations,

Being concerned at the continuous erosion of multilateralism in the field of arms regulation, non-proliferation and disarmament, and recognizing that a resort to unilateral actions by Member States in resolving their security concerns would jeopardize international peace and security and undermine confidence in the international security system as well as the foundations of the United Nations itself,

Noting that the Fourteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Havana on 15 and 16 September 2006, and the Fifteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Tehran on 29 and 30 July 2008, welcomed, respectively, the adoption of General Assembly resolutions 60/59 and 62/27 on the promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation, and underlined the fact that multilateralism and multilaterally agreed solutions, in accordance with the Charter, provide the only sustainable method of addressing disarmament and international security issues,

Reaffirming the absolute validity of multilateral diplomacy in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation, and determined to promote multilateralism as an essential way to develop arms regulation and disarmament negotiations,

1. Reaffirms multilateralism as the core principle in negotiations in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation with a view to maintaining and strengthening universal norms and enlarging their scope;

2. Also reaffirms multilateralism as the core principle in resolving disarmament and non-proliferation concerns;

3. Urges the participation of all interested States in multilateral negotiations on arms regulation, non-proliferation and disarmament in a non-discriminatory and transparent manner;

4. Underlines the importance of preserving the existing agreements on arms regulation and disarmament, which constitute an expression of the results of international cooperation and multilateral negotiations in response to the challenges facing mankind;

5. Calls once again upon all Member States to renew and fulfil their individual and collective commitments to multilateral cooperation as an important means of pursuing and achieving their common objectives in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation;

6. Requests the States parties to the relevant instruments on weapons of mass destruction to consult and cooperate among themselves in resolving their concerns with regard to cases of non-compliance as well as on implementation, in accordance with the procedures defined in those instruments, and to refrain from resorting or threatening to resort to unilateral actions or directing unverified non-compliance accusations against one another to resolve their concerns;

7. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General containing the replies of Member States on the promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation, submitted pursuant to resolution 62/27;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the issue of the promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation".

Collective security through regulation and reduction of armaments

Communication. In a concept paper on strengthening collective security through general regulation and reduction of armaments [S/2008/697], submitted to the Security Council on 10 November, Costa Rica said that in the context of the challenges and opportunities of the twenty-first century, the regulation and limitation of armaments should be understood as one element of the broader and more comprehensive design for the maintenance of peace and security, and should be seen as part of the toolkit the United Nations had at its disposal to enhance the stability of international relations, development and the peaceful settlement of disputes. Another means to help prevent conflict was an enhanced system of regional arrangements, duly coordinated and supported by the United Nations.

Security Council consideration. On 19 November [meeting 6017], the Security Council held an open debate on the item "Maintenance of international peace and security: strengthening collective security through general regulation and reduction of armaments", based on Costa Rica's proposal. The meeting was presided over by the President of Costa Rica, Óscar Arias Sánchez, who noted that it would focus on Article 26 of the UN Charter, which gave the Council the responsibility to promote peace and security with the least diversion of resources for armaments by formulating plans for a system for the regulation of armaments. He underlined that the time had come to recognize the link between the waste of resources devoted to arms and the need for resources for development.

Addressing the Council, the High Representative for Disarmament Affairs read a statement by the Secretary-General stressing that the strengthening of collective security could build trust between States and pave the way for agreements and cooperation in other fields.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 November [meeting 6017], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/43 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its primary responsibility under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Council remains convinced of the necessity to strengthen international peace and security through, inter alia, disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control. It considers that the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces, as appropriate, constitutes one of the most important measures to promote international peace and security with the least diversion of the world's human and economic resources.

The Council notes the importance of collective security and its impact on disarmament and development, and stresses its concern at increasing global military expenditure.

The Council stresses the importance of appropriate levels of military expenditure, in order to achieve undiminished security for all at the lowest appropriate level of armaments. It urges all States to devote as many resources as possible to economic and social development, in particular in the fight against poverty and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

The Council affirms the 2005 World Summit Outcome, in which Heads of State and Government recognized that development, peace and security and human rights are interlinked and mutually reinforcing.

The Council stresses the vital importance of an effective multilateral system to better address, in accordance with international law, the multifaceted and interconnected challenges and threats confronting our world and to achieve progress in the areas of peace and security, development and human rights, which are the pillars of the United Nations system and the foundations for collective security and well-being. It also expresses its support for multilateralism as one of the most important means for resolving security concerns in accordance with international law.

The Council expresses its support for national, bilateral, regional and multilateral measures adopted by Governments aimed at reducing military expenditure, where appropriate, thereby contributing to strengthening regional and international peace and security.

The Council underlines the importance of promoting norm-setting in accordance with international law, as part of the efforts to strengthen non-proliferation, disarmament and arms control measures, as well as the importance of compliance with and reinforcing of the existing agreements, conventions and treaties which relate to these matters and international peace and security.

The Council reiterates that cooperation with regional and subregional organizations in matters relating to the maintenance of peace and security and consistent with Chapter VIII of the Charter can improve collective security and therefore should be continuously strengthened. In this regard, it underlines the importance of strengthening the capacity of such organizations in conflict prevention, crisis management, armaments control and in supporting States recovering from conflict and laying the foundation for sustainable peace and development.

The Council recalls the obligation of all States to accept and carry out its decisions in accordance with Article 25 of the Charter and affirms its commitment to continue monitoring and promoting the effective implementation of its decisions, in order to avoid conflict, promote and maintain international peace and security and further confidence in collective security.

The Council calls upon Member States, regional and subregional organizations, the Secretariat and the competent United Nations funds and programmes, as appropriate, to make further efforts to preserve, facilitate, develop and strengthen international and regional cooperation in the areas of arms control, non-proliferation and disarmament, through, inter alia, further implementation, development and strengthening of relevant agreements and instruments.

The Council intends to continue following this issue.

International Atomic Energy Agency

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued to serve as the focal point for worldwide cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear technology; for promoting global nuclear safety and security; and, through its verification activities, for assuring compliance with international obligations to use nuclear material and facilities for peaceful purposes. Accordingly, the fifty-second session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 29 September–4 October) adopted resolutions on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear, radiation, transport and waste safety; nuclear security; strengthening the Agency's technical cooperation activities; strengthening activities related to nuclear science, technology and application; strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system and application of the Model Additional Protocol; and implementation of the NPT safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East.

The General Assembly, in resolution 63/6 (see p. 1138), took note of the IAEA's 2007 annual report.

IAEA activities

In its 2008 annual report [GC(53)/7], the Agency detailed its activities during the year. With projections of future growth of nuclear power revised upward, the Agency continued to facilitate coordination and information-sharing in the area of technology innovation and development. Specifically, it compiled the expectations of developing countries in the form of "common user considerations" for appropriate designs to be developed in the near future. Six countries completed assessments of innovative nuclear systems using the evaluation methodology developed by the Agency's International Project on Innovative Nuclear Reactors and Fuel Cycles, and a group of eight countries completed a similar joint study, the results of which would be used to update the methodology.

There were a number of positive responses to the Director General's proposal to establish a nuclear fuel reserve of last resort, under Agency auspices, in the event of supply disruptions. Also, progress was made on other proposals related to assurances of fuel supply by Member States.

The growing interest among Member States in starting nuclear power programmes was reflected in a larger number of requests for IAEA assistance in analysing energy options and in preparing for the introduction of nuclear power. With more than 50 Member States expressing interest in considering the introduction of nuclear power, the number of approved technical co-operation projects on analysing energy options went up from 29 in 2006–2007 to 41 in 2008, while the number of projects on considering the introduction of nuclear power increased from 13 to 44 during the same period. The Agency conducted four missions in 2008—to the Cooperation Council for the Arab States of the Gulf, Nigeria, the Philippines and the Sudan—to advise on their consideration of nuclear power. In December, the Agency introduced a new Integrated Nuclear Infrastructure Review service to assist States in adopting a comprehensive and integrated approach to the introduction of nuclear power. In addition, the Agency published Evaluation of the Status of National Nuclear Infrastructure Development and held a workshop to discuss the evaluation guidance.

There was an increased demand for IAEA assistance in assessing national and regional energy systems and energy strategies; its analytical tools were being used by 115 Member States and six international organizations. During the year, the Agency trained 402 energy analysts and planners from 58 countries in the use of the analytical tools. To meet the increased demand for training, the Agency introduced “technology supported learning” and used the cyber platforms of the Asian Network for Education in Nuclear Technology and the Latin American Energy Organization.

The Agency provided training, assistance missions and guidance to support both the planning for and development of human resources needed for the introduction or expansion of nuclear power. It reviewed countries’ human resource needs for that purpose, and completed two reports, entitled Commissioning of Nuclear Power Plants: Training and Human Resource Consideration and Managing Human Resources in the Field of Nuclear Energy.

The twenty-second edition of the “Red Book”, Uranium 2007: Resources, Production and Demand, published in 2008, reported an increase in uranium resources due to recent growth in worldwide exploration. The study predicted that the resources would last another 83 years at the current rate of consumption.

To facilitate greater international cooperation in the utilization of research reactors, the Agency began establishing a number of regional networks. It also increased the number of technical cooperation projects supporting research reactors from four to ten. A training course to help build up the necessary human resources was developed for Member States with little or no nuclear infrastructure.

Responding to the world’s food, environmental and cancer crises, the Agency strengthened its partnerships to enhance State and regional capacities in the use of nuclear technologies for sustainable solutions in such areas as food security, disease prevention and control, water resources and environmental management.

In the area of nuclear safety and security, IAEA continued to play an important role, supporting the development and implementation of international conventions and codes of conduct, helping to establish international standards and guidelines, and assisting Member States through peer review missions in enhancing their national safety and security infrastructures, as well as supporting regional and global knowledge networks. In 2008, the Agency celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its safety standards programme, through which it supported States in meeting their national safety and security objectives; since 1958, over 200 safety standards had been published. In more than 150 safety reviews, security reviews and experts’ missions and over 170 workshops, seminars and training courses during the year, the Agency helped Member States appraise national application of safety standards and security guidelines and provided advice and assistance.

Missions of the Integrated Regulatory Review Service (IRRS), an international mechanism for sharing regulatory knowledge and experience among senior regulators, visited Botswana, Côte d’Ivoire, Germany, Guatemala, Madagascar, Namibia, Sierra Leone, Spain and Ukraine. In order to promote high quality self-assessments—one of the major goals of IRRS—the Agency developed a methodology that could also be used for other self-assessment activities. The Agency assisted Iran, Lebanon, Peru, Ukraine and Viet Nam with their self-assessments in preparation for IRRS missions to those countries. A network for sharing information among countries’ regulatory bodies was being developed.

By the end of the year, 14 Member States had registered their expert capabilities with the Agency’s Response Assistance Network. In July, an emergency exercise tested the international response to a simulated accident at a nuclear power plant. Also during the year, IAEA established the International Seismic Safety Centre as a focal point for seismic safety at nuclear installations worldwide.

Dealing with other nuclear safety matters, the Agency completed an updated safety standard on the classification of radioactive waste. Its International Steering Committee on Denials of Shipment of Radioactive Material, set up in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 644], organized four workshops on establishing regional networks to deal with the issue, and oversaw the establishment of a database for denials of shipment, receiving more than 100 denial reports by the end of the year.

The deposit by the United States in May of its instrument of ratification of the Convention on Supplementary Compensation for Nuclear Damage marked an important milestone in the Agency’s efforts to strengthen the global nuclear liability regime.

IAEA provided training to more than 1,700 people from approximately 90 States in all aspects of nuclear security, and assisted in recovering more than 1,500 disused radioactive sources and moving them to national storage facilities. Nearly 600 pieces of radiation detection equipment were delivered to 24 States, in some cases with Agency training on the use of the equipment.

Assisting States by establishing nuclear security information tools continued to be a high priority. During the year, ten States approved Integrated Nuclear Security Support Plans, developed by the Agency as a blueprint for nuclear security work to be implemented over time.

The Agency worked with the Chinese authorities to ensure nuclear security at the Beijing Olympic Games in August—the largest security project it had ever been involved in—and provided security support to Peru for the Latin American and Caribbean-European Union Summit and the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation CEO Summit.

Through its technical cooperation projects, the Agency supported the use of appropriate nuclear science and technology to address major sustainable priorities at the national, regional and interregional levels. Support was delivered principally in the areas of human health; agricultural productivity and food security; water resources management; environmental protection; physical and chemical applications; and sustainable energy development, with safety and security a cross-cutting area.

The main focus of technical cooperation activities in the Asia and Pacific region was on strengthening the technical capacity of national and regional institutions and resource centres for applications in health, agriculture, environmental protection and energy. In Africa, IAEA supported 37 Member States in developing technical, managerial and institutional capacities in nuclear science and technology and applications. In Latin America, support was given to 22 Member States in the areas of human health, food and agriculture, and radiation and transport safety, while in Europe, fuel repatriation, core conversion and related research reactor upgrades and activities continued. The Agency also supported countries interested in starting a nuclear power programme.

IAEA safeguards

IAEA's verification programme remained at the core of multilateral efforts to curb the proliferation of nuclear weapons and move towards nuclear disarmament. The purpose of its safeguards system was to provide credible assurance to the international community that nuclear material and other specified items were not diverted from peaceful nuclear uses. Under the system, the Agency established and administered safeguards, and the rights and obligations assumed in safeguards agreements, thus enabling it to independently verify the declarations made by States about their nuclear material and activities. The nature and scope of such declarations—and of the measures implemented to verify them—stemmed from the type of safeguards agreement that a State had with the Agency.

Comprehensive safeguards agreements, concluded pursuant to NPT, and the Model Additional Protocols to those agreements, which granted the Agency complementary verification authority, had been approved by the IAEA Board of Governors in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 486]; they remained the principal legal instruments strengthening the Agency's safeguards regime. In 2008, safeguards were applied for 163 States with agreements in force. Additional protocols entered into force for two States during the year, bringing the number of States in force to 88. States for which both the safeguards and Additional Protocols were in force numbered 84.

In a 4 October resolution [GC(52)/RES/13], the IAEA General Conference stressed the need for effective safeguards to prevent the use of nuclear material for prohibited purposes, and requested all concerned States and other parties to safeguards agreements, including nuclear-weapon States, that had not yet done so to promptly sign additional protocols and bring them into force as soon as possible, in conformity with their national legislation. The Conference noted that as at 4 October, IAEA was implementing State-level integrated safeguards approaches for 29 States and acknowledged that Agency safeguards could achieve further effectiveness and efficiency when a State-level perspective was used in safeguards activities planning, implementation and evaluation. The Conference encouraged increased cooperation between the IAEA secretariat and State and regional systems of accounting for and control of nuclear material, and commended Member States, notably Japan, which had implemented elements of a plan of action outlined in a 2000 Conference resolution [YUN 2000, p. 505] and updated in September; it recommended that other States consider doing so to facilitate the entry into force of comprehensive safeguards agreements and additional protocols.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

In the DPRK, the Agency had not implemented safeguards for a number of years and therefore could not draw any safeguard conclusions regarding the country. It continued, however, to monitor and verify the shutdown-status of the Yongbyon nuclear facilities and one facility at Taechon as agreed on in the Six-Party Talks. Those activities were partially discontinued from 22 September to 13 October at the request of the DPRK, resulting in a lack of access for Agency inspectors to the Yongbyon facilities and in the removal of Agency seals and surveillance equipment at the Radiochemical Laboratory. Resuming its activities on 14 October, the Agency found no indication of operation during that period.

Reporting to the General Conference on 2 September [GOV/2008/40-GC(52)/14], the Director General stated that the Agency was continuing to implement the ad hoc monitoring and verification arrangement with the cooperation of the DPRK. While it had not been able to take part in the disablement activities, IAEA had been able to observe and document those activities, which had started in November 2007.

In a 4 October resolution [GC(52)/RES/14] on the implementation of the NPT safeguards agreement between the Agency and the DPRK, the General Conference supported the continuation of IAEA's monitoring and verification activities at the Yongbyon facilities as agreed in the Six-Party Talks, and acknowledged the Agency's activities in relation to the disablement process. It stressed the essential verification role of the Agency and called on the DPRK to come into full compliance with NPT.

Iran

International concern over Iran's nuclear programme persisted during the year. The IAEA Director General submitted four reports [GOV/2008/4, GOV/2008/15, GOV/2008/38, GOV/2008/59] to the Board of Governors on the implementation of Iran's NPT safeguards agreement and relevant Security Council resolutions. The Agency was able to verify the non-diversion of the declared nuclear material in Iran, but remained unable to draw a conclusion regarding the absence of undeclared nuclear material and activities. Contrary to Security Council decisions, Iran did not suspend its uranium enrichment-related activities and continued its heavy water-related projects.

In a 27 February letter [A/62/712-S/2008/138], Iran stated that the IAEA Director General's report of 22 February [GOV/2008/4] had clearly and evidently declared that all six remaining issues regarding its peaceful nuclear programme had been resolved and that all current nuclear activities in Iran were under Agency monitoring, and thus all the justifications and foundations for the Security Council's actions on the issue had vanished.

On 3 March, the Security Council adopted resolution 1803(2008) (see p. 409), noting with concern that, as confirmed by the Director General's reports, Iran had not established full and sustained suspension of all enrichment-related and reprocessing activities and heavy water-related projects, nor resumed cooperation with IAEA under the Additional Protocol, nor taken the other steps required by the Board of Governors, nor complied with Council resolutions 1696(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 433], 1737(2006) [ibid., p. 436] and 1747(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 374]. The Council, welcoming the agreement between Iran and IAEA to resolve all outstanding issues concerning Iran's nuclear programme and progress made in that regard, encouraged IAEA to continue its work to clarify all outstanding issues, stressing that this would help re-establish international confidence in the exclusively peaceful nature of Iran's nuclear programme. The Council supported the Agency in strengthening its safeguards on Iran's nuclear activities and requested within 90 days a further report from the Director General. The Director General transmitted [S/2008/338] on 26 May to the Council a report [GOV/2008/15] stating that contrary to its decisions, Iran had not suspended its enrichment-related activities and had continued with the construction of an IR-40 reactor.

In a September report [GOV/2008/38], the Director General noted that the Agency had not been able to make any substantive progress on the alleged studies and issues relating to the green salt project, high explosives testing and missile re-entry vehicle project and other key remaining issues of concern. Unless Iran provided substantive information and implemented the Additional Protocol, the Agency would not be able to provide credible assurance about the absence of undeclared nuclear material and activities in the country. Reaffirming its commitment to an early negotiated solution to the Iranian nuclear issue, the Security Council, in resolution 1835(2008) of 27 September (see p. 414), called on Iran to comply fully and without delay with its obligations.

On 19 November, the Director General reported [GOV/2008/59] that due to a lack of cooperation by Iran, the Agency had not been able to make substantive progress on key remaining issues and had not been able to verify the current status of the construction of the IR-40 reactor. It affirmed that Iran had not suspended its enrichment-related activities.

Syrian Arab Republic

The Director-General in November presented a report to the Board of Governors on the implementation of the Syrian Arab Republic's safeguards agreement [GC(53)/7]. In April, the Agency was provided with information alleging that an installation at Dair Alzour, destroyed by Israel in September 2007, had been a nuclear reactor, while Syria stated that it had been a military site not involved in any nuclear activities. From environmental samples, the Agency found that a significant number of natural uranium particles had been produced as a result of chemical processing. The issues related to the Dair Alzour site and some other locations remained unresolved and as a consequence, the Agency was not able to make progress towards resolving those issues. At the end of 2008, the Agency's verification work in the country was continuing. For 2008, IAEA found no indication of the diversion of declared nuclear material and was able to conclude that all such material in Syria remained in peaceful activities.

Middle East

In a September report on application of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East [GOV/2008/29/Rev.1-GC(52)/10/Rev.1], the IAEA Director General noted that all States of the Middle East region, except Israel, were parties to NPT. There continued to be a fundamental difference between Israel and other States of the region with regard to the application of comprehensive Agency safeguards. Israel took the view that safeguards as well as all other regional security issues should be addressed in the framework of a regional security and arms control dialogue in the context of a multilateral peace process, whereas the other States of the region emphasized that they were all parties to NPT and that there was no automatic sequence that linked the application of comprehensive safeguards to all nuclear activities in the Middle East. The Director General stated that he would continue with his consultations regarding the early application of comprehensive safeguards to all nuclear activities in the region.

In a 4 October resolution [GC(52)/RES/15], the IAEA General Conference affirmed the need for States in the region to accept the application of full-scope safeguards to all their nuclear activities as an important confidence-building measure, and requested the Director General to continue consultations with the States of the region to facilitate the early application of full-scope safeguards as relevant to the preparation of model agreements and as necessary steps towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/56 [YUN 2007, p. 557], the Secretary-General reported in October [A/63/115 (Part II)] that apart from the IAEA resolution on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East, which was annexed to his report, he had not received any additional information since his 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 557].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/392], adopted resolution 63/84 by recorded vote (169-5-6) [agenda item 92].

The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy

Agency, the latest of which is resolution GC(52)/RES/15, adopted on 4 October 2008,

Cognizant that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the region of the Middle East would pose a serious threat to international peace and security,

Mindful of the immediate need for placing all nuclear facilities in the region of the Middle East under full-scope safeguards of the Agency,

Recalling the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference urged universal adherence to the Treaty as an urgent priority and called upon all States not yet parties to the Treaty to accede to it at the earliest date, particularly those States that operate unsafeguarded nuclear facilities,

Recognizing with satisfaction that, in the Final Document of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the Conference undertook to make determined efforts towards the achievement of the goal of universality of the Treaty, called upon those remaining States not parties to the Treaty to accede to it, thereby accepting an international legally binding commitment not to acquire nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices and to accept Agency safeguards on all their nuclear activities, and underlined the necessity of universal adherence to the Treaty and of strict compliance by all parties with their obligations under the Treaty,

Recalling the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference noted with concern the continued existence in the Middle East of unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, reaffirmed the importance of the early realization of universal adherence to the Treaty and called upon all States in the Middle East that had not yet done so, without exception, to accede to the Treaty as soon as possible and to place all their nuclear facilities under full-scope Agency safeguards,

Noting that Israel remains the only State in the Middle East that has not yet become party to the Treaty,

Concerned about the threats posed by the proliferation of nuclear weapons to the security and stability of the Middle East region,

Stressing the importance of taking confidence-building measures, in particular the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, in order to enhance peace and security in the region and to consolidate the global non-proliferation regime,

Emphasizing the need for all parties directly concerned to seriously consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, inviting the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty and, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under Agency safeguards,

Noting that one hundred and eighty States have signed the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, including a number of States in the region,

1. Welcomes the conclusions on the Middle East of the 2000 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Reaffirms the importance of Israel's accession to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and placement of all its nuclear facilities under comprehensive International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, in realizing the goal of universal adherence to the Treaty in the Middle East;

3. Calls upon that State to accede to the Treaty without further delay and not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons, and to renounce possession of nuclear weapons, and to place all its unsafeguarded nuclear facilities under full-scope Agency safeguards as an important confidence-building measure among all States of the region and as a step towards enhancing peace and security;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East".

Radioactive waste

IAEA's safety standards provided the global reference for the high safety level required for the use of nuclear power and other applications. In April, the Contracting Parties to the Convention on Nuclear Safety held their fourth review meeting. Efforts were made to increase the number of Contracting Parties to the Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel Management and on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Management. With the addition of Senegal and Tajikistan, the Joint Convention had 46 Contracting Parties at the end of 2008. During the year, the Agency updated a safety standard on the classification of radioactive waste, covering all radioactive waste types and recognizing the clearance concept for identifying the boundary between waste that needed to be managed as radioactive and that which could be removed from regulatory control for management as conventional waste. The Agency organized a series of regional workshops to explain to decision makers and technical experts the importance of having a national policy and related strategies in place for the management of radioactive waste and spent fuel. It also organized appraisals of policies and strategies in Bolivia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Namibia, Spain, Ukraine and Venezuela.

At an inaugural meeting that took place in Paris in June, IAEA launched the International Project on Demonstrating the Safety of Geological Disposal to provide a forum for the exchange of experience and opinions in demonstrations of the safety of geological disposal and aimed at providing a platform for knowledge transfer.

At the request of the Nuclear Agency of Romania, IAEA reviewed the radiological situation of workers, the population and the environment surrounding the Cernavoda nuclear power plant, and concluded that the plant had a radiation protection programme in place for workers, the public and the environment consistent with the recommendations of international safety standards. The Agency conducted a peer review of the Technical Programme for the Development of the Slovenian National Repository for Low and Intermediate Level Radioactive Waste, at the request of Slovenia's national radioactive waste management agency. Focusing on the Bradwell nuclear power plant in the United Kingdom, it conducted an International Peer Review of the Magnox Decommissioning Programme in that country; the achievements and issues from that review were examined at an international meeting in November.

The Agency project to assist Iraq in the evaluation and decommissioning of the former facilities that used radioactive waste continued, with the support of France, Germany, Italy, Ukraine, the United Kingdom and the United States. Following its launch in 2007, the International Decommissioning Network expanded its activities in 2008, including by acting as focal point for integrating complementary efforts in decommissioning. The Contact Expert Group, with 13 participating Member States, made substantial progress in solving nuclear legacy issues in the Russian Federation.

In a 3 October resolution [GC(52)/RES/9], the IAEA General Conference urged Member States to continue increasing regulatory effectiveness in the field of nuclear, radiation, transport and waste safety, and encouraged them to become party to the Joint Convention. Those already parties to the Joint Convention were encouraged to continue pursuing efforts to enhance transparency, efficiency and effectiveness of the review process, in preparation for the third Review Meeting to be held in May 2009.

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

Africa

As at 31 December, 26 States had ratified the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Treaty of Pelindaba) [YUN 1995, p. 203], which was opened for signature in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 486]. The Treaty had 56 signatories. China, France, and the United Kingdom had ratified Protocols I and II thereto, and France had also ratified Protocol III. The Russian Federation and the United States had signed Protocols I and II. By the terms of the Treaty, ratification by 28 States was required for its entry into force.

In resolution 63/65 (see p. 603) on a nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas, the General Assembly welcomed the efforts towards the completion of the ratification process of the Pelindaba Treaty and called on the States of the region that had not yet done so to sign and ratify the Treaty.

Asia

Central Asia

In 2008, three of the five Central Asian States—Kazakhstan, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan—ratified the Treaty on a Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone in Central Asia, paving the way for its entry into force, after Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan had ratified it in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 561]. Having been opened for signature in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 644], the Treaty was signed that same year by all five Central Asian States. The Protocol to the Treaty was open for signature by the five nuclear-weapon States, none of which had signed it by the end of 2008, partly owing to their concern over some of the Treaty terms.

The Treaty was the first nuclear-weapon-free zone located entirely in the northern hemisphere. Under its terms, the Central Asian States were the first countries in the world legally bound to adhere to enhanced IAEA safeguards on their civilian nuclear assets. The Treaty required them to meet international standards for the physical protection of nuclear material, and not to research, develop, manufacture, test, stockpile, acquire, possess, or have any control over any nuclear weapon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/63 by recorded vote (141-3-36) [agenda item 89 (i)].

Emphasizing the role of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia in promoting cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and in the environmental rehabilitation of territories affected by radioactive contamination, and the importance of stepping up efforts to ensure the safe and reliable storage of radioactive waste in the Central Asian States,

Recognizing the importance of the Treaty on a Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone in Central Asia, signed in Semipalatinsk, Kazakhstan, on 8 September 2006, and emphasizing its significance in the attainment of peace and security,

Mongolia

Communication. On 30 April [A/63/73-S/2008/297], Mongolia transmitted a memorandum on activities for promoting its nuclear-weapon-free status since its earlier memorandum on the issue in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 477].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 61/87 [YUN 2006, p. 646], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/122] reviewing new developments and UN assistance to Mongolia to consolidate and strengthen its nuclear-weapon-free status. The range of activities described in the report related both to Mongolia's nuclear-weapon-free status and the non-nuclear aspects of its international security. The Secretary-General noted that during the ten years since the General Assembly had adopted resolution 53/77 D on the topic [YUN 1998, p. 515], the country's nuclear-weapon-free status was being institutionalized and gaining wider recognition. In September 2007, Mongolia had presented a draft trilateral treaty on its nuclear-weapon-free status to China and the Russian Federation. The Secretary-General hoped that UN assistance, geared to helping the country cope with its economic and ecological vulnerabilities, would further contribute to consolidating Mongolia's nuclear-weapon-free status and to achieving sustainable development and balanced growth, as well as reinforcing its efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/56 without vote [agenda item 89 (b)].

South-East Asia

The ten States parties to the Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Bangkok Treaty), which had opened for signature in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 207] and entered into force in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 495], continued to establish an institutional framework to implement the Treaty. At the forty-first Ministerial Meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (Singapore, 20–21 July), the Ministers reaffirmed the importance of persevering in strengthening cooperation to implement the Treaty and instructed their officials to continue engaging nuclear-weapon States to secure their accession to the Treaty Protocol as soon as possible.

Latin America and the Caribbean

States parties to the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) [YUN 1967, p. 13] continued to consolidate the Treaty regime. In a resolution [AG/RES.2377(XXXVIII-O/08)] adopted at its thirty-eighth session (Medellin, Colombia, 1–3 June), the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS), reaffirming that the consolidation of the nuclear-weapon-free zone set forth in the Treaty constituted a demonstration of the commitment to complete and verifiable disarmament and the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, called on regional States that had not yet done so to sign or ratify the amendments to the Treaty. It reaffirmed the importance of strengthening the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (OPANAL), recognized its work in ensuring compliance with the Treaty obligations, and supported OPANAL's cooperation and coordination mechanisms with the other nuclear-weapon-free-zone Treaties, in order to expedite the achievement of common objectives.

In February, the OAS Permanent Council's Committee on Hemispheric Security convened a special session to consider OAS progress with respect to initiatives on CTBT and related instruments. The session reaffirmed OAS's commitment to the Western Hemisphere as a nuclear-weapon-free zone and stressed its support for CTBT. Also in February, OPANAL organized a seminar on the other nuclear-weapon-free-zone-treaty: the Treaty of Tlatelolco, on the occasion of the forty-first anniversary of its opening for signature.

Middle East

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/18 [YUN 2007, p. 563], the Secretary-General, in July [A/63/115 (Part I) & Add.1] reported on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. He had continued consultations with concerned parties and observed that the issue of establishing a zone remained important. At the second session of the Preparatory Committee for the 2010 Review Conference of NPT Parties (see p. 584), States parties reiterated their support for the establishment of such a zone and reaffirmed the importance of implementing the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 NPT Review and Extension Conference [YUN 1995, p. 205]. The League of Arab States had reiterated its call on the international community to take effective practical steps to that end.

The Secretary-General called on all concerned parties to resume dialogue with a view to creating stable security conditions and establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone, and reiterated the readiness of the United Nations to provide assistance. His report included the views of 11 Governments—Cuba, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jamaica, Japan, Kuwait, the Netherlands, Qatar, Spain and the Syrian Arab Republic.

In October, the IAEA General Conference adopted a resolution [GC(52)/RES/15] calling on all parties directly concerned to take the steps required, including confidence-building and verification measures, for the establishment of a mutually and effectively verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region. The resolution was transmitted to the General Assembly annexed to a report of the Secretary-General [A/63/115 (Part II)].

Bacteriological (biological) and chemical weapons

The threat of biological and chemical weapons as well as related materials and technology remained of concern to the international community. In accordance with the decisions and recommendations adopted at the 2006 Sixth Review Conference [YUN 2006, p. 650], the States parties to the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (BWC) [YUN 1972, p. 5] continued the intersessional process leading to the 2011 Seventh Review Conference. The Second Review Conference of the 1993 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction (CWC) [YUN 1993, p. 111], in April, examined the operation of the Convention since the First Review Conference in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 560] and provided recommendations for its future implementation. Significant advances were also made pursuant to the Action Plan on national implementation of CWC, as nearly all States parties had either established or designated a National Authority as required by the Convention.

Other activities. Pursuant to a request of the 2006 Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy [YUN 2006, p. 65], UNODA started in April to develop the software platform for the Biological Incident Data Base for reporting incidents categorized as unusual but natural, accidental or deliberate outbreak of diseases. Also in 2008, UNODA continued to update the roster of experts and laboratories whose services were available to the Secretary-General for the investigation of reports of the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons. The Office also worked on technical guidelines and procedures for investigations of cases of alleged use of biological and chemical weapons.

Bacteriological (biological) weapons

As the international community continued to focus on the increasingly important issue of biological weapons, by the end of the year, States parties to BWC were halfway through their intersessional programme of annual meetings to discuss effective action on issues critical to implementing the Convention. While other disarmament and non-proliferation areas were characterized by setbacks and stalemates, the States parties to BWC were working towards cementing their gains at the next Review Conference, the seventh, scheduled for 2011. The 2008 meetings—made up of sessions at both the expert and the State party levels—considered two specific topics as mandated by the Sixth Review Conference in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 650]: national, regional and international measures to improve biosafety and biosecurity, including laboratory safety and security of pathogens and toxins; and oversight, education, awareness-raising and adopting and/or developing codes of conduct to prevent misuse in the context of advances in bio-science and bio-technology research.

Meeting of States parties

As decided by the Sixth Review Conference of the States parties to BWC [YUN 2006, p. 650], the meeting of those States was convened in 2008 (Geneva, 1–5 December) [BWC/MSP/2008/5]. It was attended by 97 States parties, five signatory States and one State currently not party, as well as four international organizations and 17 ngos and research institutes. The Meeting succeeded in delivering a comprehensive range of common understandings. Participants agreed that biosafety referred to principles, technologies, practices and measures implemented to prevent the accidental release of, or unintentional exposure to, biological agents and toxins, and that biosecurity meant the protection, control and accountability measures implemented to prevent the loss, theft, misuse, diversion or intentional release of biological agents and toxins and related resources, as well as unauthorized access to, retention or transfer of such material. It was established that the aims of dealing with bio-safety and biosecurity were to contribute to: preventing the development, acquisition or use of biological and toxin weapons; implementing BWC; and fulfilling other international obligations and agreements, such as the revised International Health Regulations of the World Health Organization and the provisions of Security Council resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544]. The report also recorded common understandings on how to realize those aims. Tools on biosafety and biosecurity would support accreditation, certification, audit or licensing of facilities, organizations or individuals, as well as training requirements, mechanisms to check qualifications and expertise, national criteria for relevant activities and national lists of agents, equipment and other resources. It was determined that States parties needed assistance in the following areas: to enact and improve relevant legislation; to strengthen laboratory infrastructure, technology, security and management; to provide training; and to help incorporate biosafety and biosecurity into existing efforts to address disease. The report affirmed the importance of balancing “top-down” government and institutional controls with “bottom-up” scientific oversight. The Meeting reviewed a report by the Chairman on efforts to expand BWC membership. The Meeting recognized that progress had been made during the year as the Cook Islands, Madagascar, the United Arab Emirates and Zambia had joined the Convention. The Meeting also had before it the second annual report by the Implementation Support Unit.

Experts’ meeting. In accordance with the outcome of the Sixth Review Conference [YUN 2006, p. 650], the 2008 meeting of States parties was preceded by a preparatory expert meeting (Geneva, 18–22 August) [BWC/MSP/2008/MX/3]. A total of 103 States took part in the meeting. Also represented were four UN institutions and seven specialized agencies or other international organizations, and representatives from science, academia and industry. The two topics of biosafety (improvement through national, regional and international measures) and biosecurity (oversight of science, education, awareness-raising and codes of conduct) were addressed in seven working sessions which, in a departure from past practices, were open to the public. Three panel discussions focused on specific aspects of the two main topics, the role of industry and the private sector in biosafety and biosecurity; risk assessment, management and communication concepts and techniques; and oversight of science and engagement of stakeholders. During the meeting, 35 working papers were circulated and several Compendiums of National Approaches were introduced.

Chemical weapons

Chemical weapons convention

Guinea-Bissau and Lebanon ratified or acceded to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction (cwc), bringing the number of States parties to 185 by the end of 2008. The Convention was adopted by the Conference on Disarmament in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 65] and entered into force in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 499] with 165 signatories.

Second Review Conference

The Second Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention (The Hague, 7–18 April), with the participation of 114 States parties, reviewed the operation of the Convention since the First Review Conference in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 560]. The Conference adopted a final report [RC-2/4] containing an in-depth review of the Convention's implementation and future guidance.

In his message to the Conference, the Secretary-General stressed that cwc was one of the world's most successful disarmament treaties, with near-universal membership. He noted that the Action Plan on universality and national implementation, recommended by the First Review Conference, had been effective both in promoting adherence to the Convention and in implementation assistance. In his capacity as depositary, the Secretary-General urged Governments that had not yet done so to ratify or accede to it without delay. He further stressed that all States parties had the obligation to destroy their chemical weapons and production facilities, noting that the possessor States must destroy their stockpiles completely before the final 29 April 2012 deadline established pursuant to the Convention.

In his opening statement, the Director-General of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) recalled its core objectives, including complete chemical disarmament. He reported that 26,538 metric tons of Category 1 chemical weapons, which represented over 38 per cent of the total declared stockpiles, had been destroyed under OPCW verification, while 52 per cent of Category 2 chemical weapons, had been completely eliminated. The 65 chemical weapons production facilities declared to OPCW by 12 States parties had all been inactivated, with 94 per cent of them either having been destroyed or converted for peaceful purposes. Noting that the non-proliferation of chemical weapons was a long-term fundamental goal of the Convention and OPCW's second core objective, he highlighted the substantial progress made by its industry verification regime through data monitoring and on-site inspection, as envisaged in the Convention's article VI.

The report adopted by the Second Review Conference reaffirmed that complete destruction of chemical weapons was essential for the realization of the objectives and purposes of the Convention. It reaffirmed the importance of the possessor States parties' obligation to complete the destruction of their stockpiles within the final extended deadline of April 2012, as set by the Conference at its eleventh session [YUN 2006, p. 653], and welcomed the statements of possessor States reiterating their commitment to doing so. Noting that OPCW had established an effective verification system to achieve CWC's non-proliferation and confidence-building aims, it highlighted that after more than 3,000 inspections were carried out at over 1,080 sites in 80 States, not one case of non-compliance was reported. The Conference re-emphasized the continuing relevance and importance of article X on assistance and protection against chemical weapons for States parties. That was recognized as being a motivating factor for States not party to the Convention to join it. Similarly, States parties emphasized the importance of article XI on international cooperation to promote peaceful uses of chemistry as fundamental tools for the objectives and purposes of CWC.

The Conference again stressed the importance of achieving CWC universality and full and effective national implementation. It urged the remaining 12 States not party to the Convention to ratify or accede to it as a matter of urgency and without preconditions.

Thirteenth Session of the Conference of States Parties

At the thirteenth session of the Conference of States Parties (The Hague, 2–5 December), the Director-General of OPCW noted that in follow-up to the Second Review Conference (see p. 606), the OPCW Secretariat had prepared a number of documents, one of which referred to the long-term strategy to address the relationship with the various stakeholders, and that the Secretariat would submit to the Executive Council its views on options to enhance the interaction among the Scientific Advisory Board, States parties and the policymaking organs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/48 without vote [agenda item 89 (k)].

Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject of chemical weapons, in particular resolution 62/23 of 5 December 2007, adopted without a vote, in which it noted with appreciation the ongoing work to achieve the objective and purpose of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Determined to achieve the effective prohibition of the development, production, acquisition, transfer, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and their destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that, since the adoption of resolution 62/23, two additional States have acceded to the Convention, bringing the total number of States parties to the Convention to one hundred and eighty-four,

Reaffirming the importance of the outcome of the Second Special Session of the Conference of the States Parties to Review the Operation of the Chemical Weapons Convention (hereinafter "the Second Review Conference"), including the consensus final report, which addressed all aspects of the Convention and made important recommendations on its continued implementation,

Emphasizing that the Second Review Conference welcomed the fact that, eleven years after its entry into force, the Convention remains a unique multilateral agreement banning an entire category of weapons of mass destruction in a non-discriminatory and verifiable manner under strict and effective international control,

1. Emphasizes that the universality of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction is fundamental to the achievement of its objective and purpose, acknowledges progress made in the implementation of the action plan for the universality of the Convention, and calls upon all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the Convention without delay;

2. Underlines that implementation of the Convention makes a major contribution to international peace and security through the elimination of existing stockpiles of chemical weapons, the prohibition of the acquisition or use of chemical weapons, and provides for assistance and protection in the event of use, or threat of use, of chemical weapons and for international cooperation for peaceful purposes in the field of chemical activities;

3. Stresses the importance to the Convention that all possessors of chemical weapons, chemical weapons production facilities or chemical weapons development facilities, including previously declared possessor States, should be among the States parties to the Convention, and welcomes progress to that end;

4. Reaffirms the obligation of the States parties to the Convention to destroy chemical weapons and to destroy or convert chemical weapons production facilities within the time limits provided for by the Convention;

5. Stresses that the full and effective implementation of all provisions of the Convention, including those on national implementation (article VII) and assistance and protection (article X), constitutes an important contribution to the efforts of the United Nations in the global fight against terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

6. Notes that the effective application of the verification system builds confidence in compliance with the Convention by States parties;

7. Stresses the importance of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in verifying compliance with the provisions of the Convention as well as in promoting the timely and efficient accomplishment of all its objectives;

8. Urges all States parties to the Convention to meet in full and on time their obligations under the Convention and to support the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in its implementation activities;

9. Welcomes progress made in the national implementation of article VII obligations, commends the States parties and the Technical Secretariat for assisting other States parties, on request, with the implementation of the follow-up to the plan of action regarding article VII obligations, and urges States parties that have not fulfilled their obligations under article VII to do so without further delay, in accordance with their constitutional processes;

10. Emphasizes the continuing relevance and importance of the provisions of article X of the Convention, and welcomes the activities of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in relation to assistance and protection against chemical weapons;

11. Reaffirms that the provisions of the Convention shall be implemented in a manner that avoids hampering

the economic or technological development of States parties and international cooperation in the field of chemical activities for purposes not prohibited under the Convention, including the international exchange of scientific and technical information, and chemicals and equipment for the production, processing or use of chemicals for purposes not prohibited under the Convention;

12. Emphasizes the importance of article XI provisions relating to the economic and technological development of States parties, recalls that the full, effective and non-discriminatory implementation of those provisions contributes to universality, and also reaffirms the undertaking of the States parties to foster international cooperation for peaceful purposes in the field of chemical activities of the States parties and the importance of that cooperation and its contribution to the promotion of the Convention as a whole;

13. Notes with appreciation the ongoing work of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons to achieve the objective and purpose of the Convention, to ensure the full implementation of its provisions, including those for international verification of compliance with it, and to provide a forum for consultation and cooperation among States parties, and also notes with appreciation the substantial contribution of the Technical Secretariat and the Director-General to the continued development and success of the Organization;

14. Welcomes the cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons within the framework of the Relationship Agreement between the United Nations and the Organization, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

OpCW, mandated to oversee cwc implementation and to provide a forum for consultations and cooperation among States parties, continued to make progress in the three areas of work under the Convention: chemical disarmament; non-proliferation, assistance and protection; and international cooperation, as detailed in a December report [C-14/4] on its activities during the year.

In 2008, opcw verified the destruction of 4,137 metric tonnes of chemical weapons, with more than 30,000 metric tonnes of chemical weapons having been verified as destroyed by 31 December. One State party completed the destruction of all its chemical weapons, leaving four remaining possessor States at the end of the year. By 31 December, India had destroyed 99 per cent, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya 2 per cent, the Russian Federation 30 per cent, and the United States 57 per cent of their declared stockpiles. Nine of the 12 States parties that had declared chemical weapons production facilities had either destroyed or converted all of them. Out of 65 declared facilities, four remained to be fully destroyed or converted.

Under article VI of the Convention, the OPCW secretariat inspected 200 chemical-industry facilities. Measures undertaken to further optimize the chemical-industry inspection regime included a greater use of sequential inspections (that is, conducting several inspections during a single mission), a reduction in the size of inspection teams, increased electronic processing of declarations through the Verification Information System, and the release of the software for creating electronic declarations. The start-up phase of sampling and analysis was completed in March.

OPCW continued to coordinate and deliver protection against chemical weapons under article X of the Convention and provided training to strengthen national capacities. It organized seminars, workshops, and a regional exercise with a view to establishing regional coordination. The Secretariat continued to develop its capacity to coordinate and mobilize the international-response mechanism. As part of that effort, exercise TRIPLEX 2008 focused on the development of capacities for a humanitarian response to complex emergencies.

OPCW also continued to promote the peaceful use of chemistry, and to facilitate fulfilment by Member States of their national obligations. It assisted them in developing capabilities to deal with any situation arising from the use or threat of use of chemical weapons, and continued to provide support to the African States parties to enable them to meet their requirements under the Convention, holding a number of training and capacity-building courses.

OPCW further pursued the implementation of its mandate under article XI, relating to economic and technological development, through a number of programmes. It assisted States parties, in the form of workshops, courses, and visits, to meet their obligations under article VII of the Convention. At the Tenth Annual Meeting of National Authorities (The Hague, 28–30 November), 92 States parties were represented. The Meeting included a thematic segment devoted to the role of industry in CWC implementation. The Director-General noted that 177 out of 184 States parties had established national authorities, a requirement under the Convention and a key element in its implementation. A European Union-sponsored day for national authorities of OPCW Member States was held at OPCW headquarters on 1 December, focusing in two separate sessions on the import and export of scheduled chemicals, article X submissions and legal aspects related to CWC implementation, and on preparing and handling industry inspections.

The OPCW Executive Council, at its fifty-second (4–7 March), fifty-third (24–27 June) and fifty-fourth (14–17 October) sessions, addressed issues relating to deadlines for the destruction of chemical weapons stockpiles; the agreed detailed plans for verification of the destruction of chemical weapons at a number of facilities and approved amendments to various facility agreements regarding on-site inspections; revisions to the specifications for three items of inspection equipment; the guidelines regarding declaration of import and export data for chemicals; and the obligation of possessor States parties to destroy their chemical weapons within the extended deadlines. It welcomed the positive steps the Secretariat was undertaking on the implementation of the programme for Africa.

The Secretary-General, by a 22 July note [A/63/155], transmitted to the General Assembly the 2006 OPCW report and the 2007 draft report, in accordance with the Agreement concerning the Relationship between the United Nations and OPCW, signed in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 516], as outlined in Assembly resolution 55/283 [YUN 2001, p. 495], and which entered into force in 2001.

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/61 [YUN 2006, p. 652], the Secretary-General reported in a June note [A/63/91] that the depositary of the 1925 Geneva Protocol had received no notice of withdrawals of reservations since the adoption of that resolution.

Conventional weapons

Member States accorded considerable attention to conventional weapons, including small arms and light weapons, anti-personnel mines and cluster munitions. The Security Council in April held an open debate on issues related to the topic, and for the first time, the debate was broadened beyond merely the illicit trade. In July, the General Assembly convened its Third Biennial Meeting of States on the implementation of the UN Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, which produced a substantive outcome document with recommendations on its implementation. The Assembly decided to convene, no later than 2012, a conference to review progress made in implementing the Programme of Action. Sustained efforts resulted in the conclusion on 30 May of the Convention on Cluster Munitions in Dublin, Ireland. The process of examining the feasibility, scope and parameters of a possible arms trade treaty to provide international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms continued, with emphasis on strengthening conventional arms control initiatives at the regional and subregional levels. Progress was made in the area of conventional ammunition with the conclusion of the work of the Group of Governmental Experts on enhancing cooperation on surplus ammunition stockpiles.

Meetings of States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (Mine-Ban Convention) and to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects took place in November.

Disarmament Commission action. Working Group II of the Commission on Disarmament [A/63/42] continued its consideration of practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional weapons, on which it held 10 meetings between 9 and 22 April. Despite extensive discussions and constructive engagement, the Working Group was unable to overcome outstanding issues in the Chairman's revised paper which constituted the basis of its deliberations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/57 without vote [agenda item 89 (g)].

Information on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the contribution of confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms, adopted on the initiative and with the agreement of the States concerned, to the improvement of the overall international peace and security situation,

Convinced that the relationship between the development of confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms and the international security environment can also be mutually reinforcing,

Considering the important role that confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms can also play in creating favourable conditions for progress in the field of disarmament,

Recognizing that the exchange of information on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms contributes to mutual understanding and confidence among Member States,

Recalling its resolutions 59/92 of 3 December 2004, 60/82 of 8 December 2005 and 61/79 of 6 December 2006,

1. Welcomes all confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms already undertaken by Member States as well as the information on such measures voluntarily provided;

2. Encourages Member States to continue to adopt confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms and to provide information in that regard;

3. Also encourages Member States to continue the dialogue on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms;

4. Welcomes the establishment of the electronic database containing information provided by Member States, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the database updated and to assist Member States, at their request, in the organization of seminars, courses and workshops aimed at enhancing the knowledge of new developments in this field;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session the item entitled "Information on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms".

Towards an arms trade treaty

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 61/89 [YUN 2006, p. 655], the Secretary-General established a Group of Governmental Experts to examine the feasibility, scope and draft parameters for a comprehensive, legally binding instrument establishing international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms.

The Group, comprised of experts from 28 countries, met for three sessions (New York, 11–15 February, 12–16 May, 28 July–8 August), and noted that the question of feasibility had both political and technical dimensions, which impacted the security concerns of all States. Treaty feasibility would be dependent on establishing: collectively agreed-upon objectives; practical applicability; resistance to political abuse; and potential for universality. On the issue of scope, the Group noted that no single existing instrument contained an all-encompassing list of options raised by Member States. The Group considered the seven categories of the UN Register of Conventional Arms, small arms and light weapons, and if categories such as ammunition, explosives, components, defence services, technology related to the manufacture of weapons and ammunition should be included. On types of activities, the Experts looked at exports, imports, transfers, re-exports, transit, trans-shipment, licensing, transportation, technology transfer and manufacturing, and foreign licensing production, as well as countering illegal re-exports, unlicensed production and transfers, illicit arms brokering, and transfer of arms to non-State actors. Also mentioned were stockpiles and conventional weapons production.

On the issue of draft parameters, the Group agreed that UN Charter principles would be central to any potential treaty and would have to take into account General Assembly resolutions and the Guidelines for international arms transfers adopted by the Disarmament Commission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 448]. Terrorism and organized crime, regional stability, socio-economic development, end-use and end-user assurances, diversion, and compliance with Security Council arms embargoes and other international obligations were among the aspects that needed to be addressed.

Noting the complexity of the issues related to conventional arms, the Group concluded that further consideration was required, within the UN framework and in an open and transparent manner, to achieve, on the basis of consensus, a balance that would benefit all.

The Secretary-General, in August, presented the Group's report to the General Assembly [A/63/334]. Earlier, in a February addendum [A/62/278/Add.4], to a 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 570], he had submitted the view of a Member State on an arms trade treaty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/240 by recorded vote (133-1-19) [agenda item 89].

Towards an arms trade treaty: establishing common international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, and reaffirming its respect for and commitment to international law,

Recalling its resolutions 46/36 L of 9 December 1991, 51/45 N of 10 December 1996, 51/47 B of 10 December 1996, 56/24 V of 24 December 2001, 60/69 and 60/82 of 8 December 2005, and 61/89 of 6 December 2006,

Recognizing that arms control, disarmament and non-proliferation are essential for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Reaffirming the inherent right of all States to individual or collective self-defence in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter,

Acknowledging the right of all States to manufacture, import, export, transfer and retain conventional arms for self-defence and security needs, and in order to participate in peace support operations,

Recalling the obligations of all States to fully comply with arms embargoes decided by the Security Council in accordance with the Charter,

Reaffirming its respect for international law, including international human rights law and international humanitarian law, and the Charter,

Taking note of and encouraging relevant initiatives, undertaken at the international, regional and subregional levels between States, including those of the United Nations, and of the role played by non-governmental organizations and civil society, to enhance cooperation, improve information exchange and transparency and implement confidence-building measures in the field of responsible arms trade,

Recognizing that the absence of common international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms is one of the contributory factors to conflict, the displacement of people, crime and terrorism, thereby undermining peace, reconciliation, safety, security, stability and sustainable social and economic development,

Acknowledging the growing support across many regions for concluding a legally binding instrument negotiated on a non-discriminatory, transparent and multilateral basis, to establish common international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms, including through regional and subregional workshops and seminars held in order to discuss the initiative launched by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/89,

Taking due note of the views expressed by Member States on the feasibility, scope and draft parameters for a comprehensive, legally binding instrument establishing common international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms, submitted to the Secretary-General at his request,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General, prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts, which states that, in view of the complexity of the issues of conventional arms transfers, further consideration of efforts within the United Nations to address the international trade in conventional arms is required on a step-by-step basis in an open and transparent manner to achieve, on the basis of consensus, a balance that will provide benefit to all, with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations at the centre of such efforts,

Determined to prevent the diversion of conventional arms, including small arms and light weapons, from the legal to the illicit market,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts, taking into account the views of Member States;

2. Encourages all States to implement and address, on a national basis, the relevant recommendations contained in paragraphs 28 and 29 of the report of the Secretary-General, and commends all States to carefully consider how to achieve such implementation in order to ensure that their national systems and internal controls are at the highest possible standards to prevent the diversion of conventional arms from the legal to the illicit market, where they can be used for terrorist acts, organized crime and other criminal activities, and further calls upon those States in a position to do so to render assistance in this regard upon request;

Small arms

Report of Secretary-General. In an April report [S/2008/258] submitted pursuant to a 2007 Security Council request [YUN 2007, p. 570], the Secretary-General discussed various aspects of small arms, with an emphasis on the negative impact illicit small arms had on security, human rights and social and economic development, in particular in areas of crisis and post-conflict situations. The report analysed global instruments of relevance in stemming uncontrolled proliferation of small arms. The Secretary-General made 13 recommendations geared to strengthening coordination on the issue, especially within the UN system.

Security Council consideration. Having the Secretary-General's report before it, the Security Council met on 30 April [meeting 5881] in an open debate to discuss small arms and light weapons-related issues. For the first time, the debate was broadened beyond the illicit trade of such weapons, reflecting the increased recognition that effective policy measures should be comprehensive and cross-cutting. UNODA introduced the report, and speakers from almost 50 countries joined in the discussion.

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report [A/63/261], the Secretary-General described activities to consolidate peace through practical disarmament measures, and summarized national, regional and sub-regional assistance to States in their efforts to curb the illicit trade of small arms and light weapons. The report also provided an overview of the implementation by the UN system, intergovernmental organizations and States of General Assembly resolution 62/47 [YUN 2007, p. 574]. Pursuant to that resolution, 109 reports from States had been received on the implementation of the Programme of Action to curb illicit trade in small arms, 104 of which also included information on the implementation of the International Tracing Instrument, while 84 also provided information on activities related to curbing illicit brokering.

The Secretary-General reported that under the auspices of the UN Coordinating Action on Small Arms (CASA), two important initiatives had been launched: the Programme of Action Implementation Support System, which succeeded the CASA database and served as an electronic "one-stop shop" for information on the implementation of the Programme of Action and as a clearing house for international cooperation and assistance; and the development of international small arms control standards aimed at responding to the challenges posed by the uncontrolled proliferation of small arms.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that the unprecedented adoption of an outcome document at the Third Biennial Meeting of States (see p. 614) constituted a reaffirmation of Member States' commitment to the full implementation of the Programme of Action and the adoption of a more results-oriented approach. The discussion at the Meeting emphasized the critical importance of international cooperation and assistance and highlighted the need for States to implement the 2007 Group of Governmental Experts recommendations on illicit arms brokering [ibid., p. 571].

During the reporting period, the implementation of the International Tracing Instrument was one of the priorities of States, and the regional workshops organized by UNODA underscored the need for continued efforts to promote the Instrument and to develop concrete projects aimed at building States' capacity in marking, record-keeping and tracing. The workshops were useful in enhancing the understanding of the Instrument's provisions, familiarizing participants with the tracing tools available through the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) and preparing for consideration of the Instrument at the Third Biennial Meeting of States.

Other action. In an effort to publicize linkages between gender and small arms issues, UNODA organized during the year a number of public events in partnership with civil society.

Programme of Action on illicit trade in small arms

Third Biennial Meeting of States. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/47 [YUN 2007, p. 574], the Third Biennial Meeting of States to Consider the Implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects [YUN 2001, p. 499] was held (New York, 14–18 July) [A/CONF.192/BMS/2008/3]. During ten plenary sessions, Member States considered four main themes: international co-operation, assistance and national capacity-building; illicit brokering; stockpile management; and small arms and light weapons tracing. The outcome of the first Meeting of States to consider the implementation of the International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons (International Tracing Instrument or ITI) was annexed to the report of the Third Biennial Meeting.

The national reports on implementation of the Programme of Action submitted by 109 States were analysed by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in a draft report entitled Implementing the United Nations Programme of Action on Small Arms and Light Weapons.

The Meeting was able to adopt, for the first time, a report that contained a substantive outcome for each theme considered, including recommendations for the "way forward". Despite the efforts of the Chair and the facilitators to achieve consensus on the recommendations, the report was adopted by recorded vote (134-0-2).

As a contribution to the Meeting, UNODA, together with the Office of the Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict and the International Action Network on Small Arms of Belgium, on 15 June, sponsored a high-profile panel discussion on the impact of small arms on children, which was aimed at raising global awareness and exploring solutions for better protection of children.

Illicit arms brokering

The United Nations continued to pay attention to the threat posed by black-market weapons-related activities, including through illicit brokering and intermediation services. The Organization remained engaged in efforts to prevent and combat illicit arms brokering, particularly with respect to small arms and light weapons. The report of the Group of Governmental Experts, established by General Assembly resolution 60/81 [YUN 2005, p. 625] to consider further steps for enhancing international cooperation in preventing, combating and eradicating illicit brokering, emphasized that the globalized environment in which arms brokering took place necessitated the development of a holistic approach to address the issue.

At the Third Biennial Meeting, States noted the negative impact of illicit brokering on security, stability, conflict resolution, development, the prevention of crime and drug trafficking, humanitarian assistance, international humanitarian law and the implementation of arms embargoes. They reaffirmed that illicit brokering was a global problem requiring a comprehensive approach, and noted that the 2007 Group of Governmental Experts [YUN 2007, p. 571] had provided a set of key recommendations to address the challenges posed by illicit brokering. The importance of end-user certification was noted, as was the importance of regional and international initiatives and of subregional, regional and international cooperation. The UN role in enhancing information-sharing on illicit brokering was also recognized. In addition, States exchanged views on the possibility of negotiating an international legally binding instrument on illicit brokering.

Recognizing that addressing illicit brokering was essential to the full and effective implementation of the Programme of Action, States reaffirmed their commitment to develop regulatory national legislation or administrative procedures; acknowledged the importance of implementing the recommendations by the Group of Governmental Experts; underlined the importance of international cooperation, including among national law enforcement agencies; and declared that they would consider working to advance the process in order to reach agreements and establish mechanisms to find solutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/67 without vote [agenda item 89].

Preventing and combating illicit brokering activities

The General Assembly,

Noting the threat to international peace and security posed by illicit brokering activities circumventing the international arms control and non-proliferation framework,

Concerned that, if proper measures are not taken, the illicit brokering of arms in all its aspects will adversely affect the maintenance of international peace and security and prolong conflicts, thereby impeding sustainable economic and social development, and result in the threat of illicit transfers of conventional arms and the acquisition of weapons of mass destruction by non-State actors,

Recognizing the need for Member States to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities, which covers not only conventional arms but also materials, equipment and technology that could contribute to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery,

Reaffirming that efforts to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities should not hamper the legitimate arms trade and international cooperation with respect to materials, equipment and technology for peaceful purposes,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1540(2004) of 28 April 2004, in particular paragraph 3, which determined that all States should develop and maintain appropriate effective border controls and law enforcement efforts to detect, deter, prevent and combat, including through international cooperation when necessary, illicit trafficking and brokering in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation and consistent with international law,

Recalling also relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, including resolutions 62/40 and 62/47 of 5 December 2007, which include calls for the control of brokering activities, as well as resolution 62/26 of 5 December 2007, by which the General Assembly invited Member States to enact or improve national legislation on the transfer of arms, military equipment and dual-use goods and technology,

Taking note of international efforts to prevent and combat illicit arms brokering, in particular in small arms and light weapons, as demonstrated by the adoption in 2001 of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, and the entry into force in 2005 of the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime,

Noting the report of the Group of Governmental Experts established pursuant to resolution 60/81 of 8 December 2005 to consider further steps to enhance international cooperation in preventing, combating and eradicating illicit brokering in small arms and light weapons as an international initiative within the framework of the United Nations,

Recalling the report of the Third Biennial Meeting of States to Consider the Implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, which acknowledges the importance of implementing the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on illicit brokering, and of developing national legislation and administrative procedures in this area,

Underlining the inherent right of Member States to determine the specific scope and content of domestic regulations in accordance with their legislative frameworks and export control systems, consistent with international laws,

Welcoming the efforts made by Member States to implement laws and/or administrative measures to regulate arms brokering within their legal systems,

Acknowledging the constructive role civil society can play in raising awareness and providing practical expertise on the prevention of illicit brokering activities,

1. Underlines the commitment of Member States to address the threat posed by illicit brokering activities;

2. Encourages Member States to fully implement relevant international treaties, instruments and resolutions to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities;

3. Calls upon Member States to establish appropriate national laws and/or measures to prevent and combat the illicit brokering of conventional arms and of materials, equipment and technology that could contribute to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, in a manner consistent with international law;

4. Acknowledges that national efforts to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities can be reinforced by such efforts at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Emphasizes the importance of international cooperation and assistance, capacity-building and information-sharing in preventing and combating illicit brokering activities;

6. Encourages Member States to draw, where appropriate, on the relevant expertise of civil society in developing effective measures to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session an item entitled "Preventing and combating illicit brokering activities".

Stockpile management

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 61/72 [YUN 2006, p. 661], the Secretary-General established a Group of Governmental Experts to consider further steps to enhance cooperation with regard to the issue of conventional ammunition stockpiles in surplus. In three one-week sessions (Geneva, 14–18 January; New York, 30 March–4 April and 7–11 July), the Group examined a wide range of issues relating to conventional ammunition stockpiles and adopted a report [A/63/182] with a set of recommendations on measures that could be undertaken to address the problem at the national, regional and global levels.

The Group stressed that the problem was largely a result of inadequate stockpile management, which posed an excessive risk for two main reasons: stockpiles could become unstable and threaten public safety with explosions or contamination, and unsecured stockpiles could easily be diverted for illicit use. The Group's recommendations emphasized the need for greater international cooperation and assistance to address the problem. It proposed that: national stockpile management staff be educated and trained; technical guidelines be developed to assist States in improving their management capacities; and knowledge resource management on ammunition and technical issues within the UN system be improved to ensure that States had ready access to technical expertise and guidance for the safe and secure storage of ammunition and the disposal of surplus stockpiles.

Acting on the Group's recommendations, UNODA formulated a project for the development of technical guidelines for the stockpile management of conventional ammunition, which was expected to commence in 2009. The guidelines would be available for States to use on a voluntary basis.

Recognizing that effective stockpile management and responsible surplus disposal were essential to full and effective implementation of the Programme of Action and that poorly managed and inadequately secured stockpiles posed a security threat, States at the Third Biennial Meeting stressed the need for raising awareness among national authorities of the critical importance of putting in place adequate systems and procedures for national stockpile management. Among those procedures were revising policies and developing practical guidelines, as well as enhancing cooperation and exchange of information on national experiences and providing technical and financial support for capacity-building.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/61 without vote [agenda item 89 (c)].

Problems arising from the accumulation of conventional ammunition stockpiles in surplus

The General Assembly,

Mindful of contributing to the process initiated within the framework of the United Nations reform to make the Organization more effective in maintaining peace and security by giving it the resources and tools it needs for conflict prevention, peaceful resolution of disputes, peacekeeping, post-conflict peacebuilding and reconstruction,

Underlining the importance of a comprehensive and integrated approach to disarmament through the development of practical measures,

Taking note of the report of the Group of Experts on the problem of ammunition and explosives,

Recalling the recommendation contained in paragraph 27 of the report submitted by the Chairman of the Open-ended Working Group to Negotiate an International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons, namely, to address the issue of small arms and light weapons ammunition in a comprehensive manner as part of a separate process conducted within the framework of the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction the work and measures pursued at the regional and subregional levels with regard to the issue of conventional ammunition,

Recalling its decision 59/515 of 3 December 2004 and its resolution 60/74 of 8 December 2005, as well as its resolution 61/72 of 6 December 2006, by which it decided to include the issue of conventional ammunition stockpiles in surplus in the agenda of its sixty-third session,

1. Encourages all interested States to assess, on a voluntary basis, whether, in conformity with their legitimate security needs, parts of their stockpiles of conventional ammunition should be considered to be in surplus, and recognizes that the security of such stockpiles must be taken into consideration and that appropriate controls with regard to the security and safety of stockpiles of conventional ammunition are indispensable at the national level in order to eliminate the risk of explosion, pollution or diversion;

2. Appeals to all interested States to determine the size and nature of their surplus stockpiles of conventional ammunition, whether they represent a security risk, if appropriate, their means of destruction, and whether external assistance is needed to eliminate this risk;

3. Encourages States in a position to do so to assist interested States within a bilateral framework or through international or regional organizations, on a voluntary and transparent basis, in elaborating and implementing programmes to eliminate surplus stockpiles or to improve their management;

7. Encourages States in a position to do so to contribute, on a voluntary and transparent basis, to the development within the United Nations of technical guidelines for the stockpile management of conventional ammunition, which would be available for States to use on a voluntary basis, in order to assist States in improving their national stockpile management capacity, preventing the growth of conventional ammunition surpluses and addressing wider risk mitigation;

8. Reiterates its decision to address the issue of conventional ammunition stockpiles in surplus in a comprehensive manner;

9. Decides to include this issue in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session.

International Tracing Instrument

The International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons (International Tracing Instrument or ITI) was adopted by General Assembly decision 60/519 [YUN 2005, p. 621]. The first Meeting of States to consider the implementation of ITI constituted a segment of the Third Meeting of States. In four regional workshops (Nairobi, 10–11 December 2007; Lome, Togo, 17–18 April 2008; Seoul, Republic of Korea, 27–28 May; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 11–12 June), UNODA, in collaboration with Interpol, raised awareness and helped States build capacity to implement the Instrument.

The Secretary-General, in his April report on small arms [S/2008/258] to the Security Council, stated that the Instrument could be of high practical value to counter illicit small arms trade, but its ultimate success depended on its actual implementation, for which a framework for assistance and cooperation was essential; it needed to be promoted and its implications understood by policymakers and practitioners.

With a view to ensuring full and effective implementation of the Instrument, States at the Third Meeting of States agreed to a number of measures, including: bringing national laws, regulations and administrative procedures in line with the Instrument; including in national reports information on experiences in tracing illicit small arms and light weapons; supporting the role of the United Nations in building national capacity; supporting the role of Interpol, including further development and promotion of the Interpol Weapons Electronic Tracing System and other mechanisms facilitating tracing; making use of and supporting the web-based Programme of Action Implementation Support System; and cooperating with civil society to advance implementation of the Instrument.

Assistance to States for curbing illicit small arms traffic

The Secretary-General, in his August report [A/63/261] on consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, discussed assistance to States for curbing illicit traffic in small arms, including activities undertaken at the regional and subregional levels.

The Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), in partnership with the West African Action Network on Small Arms and the national commissions on small arms and light weapons, conducted campaigns in its member States to raise awareness of the negative impact of illicit traffic and to advocate for the ratification of the 2006 ECOWAS Convention on Small Arms and Light Weapons. Through its Small Arms Control Programme, ECOWAS strengthened its efforts to institutionalize the national commissions and build their capacity, and convened the Second Annual Consultative Meeting of National Commissions on Small Arms and Light Weapons (Cotonou, Benin, 3–4 July). The Regional Centre on Small Arms and Light Weapons in the Great Lakes Region, the Horn of Africa and Bordering States [YUN 2007, p. 1430], to assist its 12 member States in implementing their commitments, organized a regional workshop on marking and record-keeping (Mombasa, Kenya, 31 March–4 April) and a seminar on man-portable air defence systems (Nairobi, 1–2 July).

The Organization of American States had approved three pieces of model legislation covering: marking and tracing of firearms; legislative measures to establish criminal offences for illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms and related materials; and strengthening controls at export points. The models were designed to promote the adoption of legislative and other measures as part of the implementation of the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials.

The European Union (EU) reported that its Council adopted, on 17 March, a Joint Action to support EU activities to promote, among developing countries, the control of arms exports and the principles of the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports. Its members agreed to exchange information on a confidential basis on brokering licences granted. The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe promoted information-sharing among its members through annual and one-off confidential information exchanges, and NATO continued to support projects for the destruction of small arms and light weapons stockpiles.

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and Protocols

Status

As at 31 December, the accession of Guinea-Bissau, Iceland, Jamaica and Madagascar brought to 108 the number of States parties to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (CCW) and its annexed Protocols [YUN 1980, p. 76] on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I); on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices, as amended on 3 May 1996 (Protocol II) [YUN 1996, p. 484]; and on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III). Amended Protocol II, which had entered into force on 3 December 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 844], had 92 acceptances as at the end of 2008. The 1995 Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) [YUN 1995, p. 530], which took effect on 30 July 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 530], had 93 parties, following the consent to be bound by five States. The Protocol on Explosive Remnants of War (Protocol V), which was adopted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 566] and entered into force in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 663], had 51 acceptances. The number of parties to the amendment to Article I of the Convention, which entered into force on 18 May 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 563], stood at 72.

Group of Governmental Experts

The Group of Governmental Experts, established by the Second Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention [YUN 2001, p. 504], held five sessions (14–18 January, 7–11 April, 7–11 July, 1–5 September, 3–7 November). In December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 576], the States parties had mandated the Group to negotiate a proposal urgently addressing the humanitarian impact of cluster munitions, while striking a balance between military and humanitarian considerations, and to report to the November 2008 Meeting of the High Contracting Parties. The mandate proved to be a difficult challenge. It became clear that minimizing the hazards caused by cluster munitions required a comprehensive approach. The negotiations also revealed the technical complexity and political sensitivity of the process, and were under pressure from and dependent on the development of the Oslo Process [YUN 2007, p. 576], which resulted in the Convention on Cluster Munitions (see p. 623), with a strong humanitarian focus. Building on the political momentum and substantive foundation set by the 2007 Group of Governmental Experts [ibid., p. 575], the Chair submitted a paper that listed the elements identified by the States as those most essential for the draft protocol on cluster munitions.

It appeared possible for the Group to make progress on some less controversial and divisive issues, such as most definitions, victim assistance, international co-operation and assistance, and stockpile management. However, discussions on other elements, among them the definition of cluster munitions, the core provisions of international humanitarian law, the scope of prohibitions and restrictions, and the issue of transfers, revealed a divergence of views. By the fifth session, the Group encountered much difficulty in striking a balance between military and humanitarian considerations. On 3 November, the Chair produced a text before the opening of the final plenary meeting. The Convention on Cluster Munitions adherents felt that humanitarian considerations were inadequately reflected. The International Committee of the Red Cross, the UN Mine Action Service and civil society expressed concerns over deficiencies in the protection of civilians. In a statement, some 25 delegations stressed that the text did not meet humanitarian standards and would only serve to justify the continued use of those weapons. A number of delegations also tabled amendments and proposals, including the text of a draft protocol prohibiting the transfer of cluster munitions.

The Group adopted its procedural report [CCW/GGE/2008-V/2], which stated that at its final plenary meeting on 12 November, the Group had not concluded its negotiations on the Chair's text and recommended to the Meeting of the High Contracting Parties that possible further negotiations take place in 2009, without prejudice to any present or future proposals.

Meeting of High Contracting Parties to the Convention

The Meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention (Geneva, 13–14 November) ended on a positive note due to the number of solid decisions taken by the Conferences of the High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II and Protocol V, and to a compromise solution for continuation in 2009 of the Group of Governmental Experts' work on cluster munitions. The Meeting adopted a report [CCW/MSP/2008/4] that included all decisions for 2009 activities.

The most tangible action was that surrounding the Convention Parties' work on cluster munitions. The Chair renewed a mandate for the Group of Governmental Experts: to address urgently the humanitarian impact of cluster munitions, while striking a balance between military and humanitarian considerations, and to report to the next Meeting of the High Contracting Parties. The Group would meet for up to two weeks in early 2009.

Other issues considered by the Meeting were impacted by the fate of the new protocol on cluster munitions that shifted the focus on negotiating a new mandate for the Group of Governmental Experts. Nonetheless, the following were included: the report on implementation of the Plan of Action; the report on the activities of the Sponsorship Programme; the compliance mechanism whereby States parties were requested to submit annually national compliance reports and to nominate experts for inclusion in the Pool of Experts the issue of mines other than anti-personnel mines, which was to be considered under the overall responsibility of the future Chair-designate; and the proposal to establish an Implementation Support Unit. The Meeting further decided on 2009 dates and the duration of the Convention's activities.

Protocol V on explosive remnants of war

The year marked the commencement of implementing the relevant decisions by the First Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Protocol V held in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 576]. At the first Meeting of Experts (see below) several substantive aspects of implementing Protocol V provisions at the national level were considered, and tools were developed to assist States parties in complying with the Protocol as well as with some of the decisions of the First Conference. Subsequently, the tools were approved by the Second Conference of the High Contracting Parties.

Meeting of Experts

Pursuant to a 2007 decision of the First Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Protocol V, the first Protocol V Meeting of Experts took place (Geneva, 2–4 July). The substantive discussions addressed each of the five main topics identified by the First Conference: clearance of explosive remnants of war; cooperation and assistance and requests for assistance; Article 4 generic electronic template for recording information; generic preventive measures; and victim assistance.

Second Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Protocol V

The Second Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Protocol V met (Geneva, 10–11 November) on ways to enhance the implementation mechanism of the Protocol.

Based on the Coordinators' reports of the discussions held during the July Meeting of Experts and the recommendations contained therein, the Second Conference decided to adopt the Plan of Action of Victim Assistance; continue consideration of victim assistance and of clearance, removal or destruction of explosive remnants of war; change the reporting format of form "G" to conform with the Technical Annex to Protocol V; adopt the revised Article 4 Generic Electronic Template and keep under review its usefulness as a tool for recording and retaining information; approve the formats for request for assistance to the database submissions; further develop the concept for a web-based information system for Protocol V, in order that the 2009 Meeting of Experts could develop a proposal for consideration and adoption by the Third Conference of the High Contracting Parties; and link the available materials on generic preventive measures to the Protocol V website. The Coordinator was invited to undertake open-ended consultations to identify how best to use existing theory and practice, and to develop recommendations for progress in the field of preventive technical measures; a proposal by France [CCW/P.V/CONF/2008/7] would be used as a starting point.

The Second Conference adopted its report [CCW/P.V/CONF./2008/12], containing the mandate for the Third Conference in 2009, including the Meeting of Experts, to be held in Geneva in April 2009.

Annual Conference of States Parties to Amended Protocol II

The Tenth Annual Conference of High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II on Mines, Booby-traps and Other Devices (Geneva, 12 November) successfully revitalized the activities under that Protocol. The most important outcome of the Conference was the decision to establish an informal open-ended group of experts to be overseen by the President of the Eleventh Annual Conference, which would meet from 20 to 21 April 2009 to review the operation and status of the Protocol; consider matters arising from States parties' reports and the development of technologies to protect civilians against indiscriminate effects of mines; and address the issue of improvised explosive devices.

The Conference also considered matters arising from reports of the parties, and noted that only 45 of the 92 States parties had submitted annual reports or updates. An appeal for universality was adopted on the occasion of the Protocol's tenth anniversary of entering into force on 3 December. The Conference adopted its final report [CCW/AP.II/CONF.10/2], and nominated the office holders of the 2009 Eleventh Annual Conference.

In an effort to encourage more accessions to the Convention and its Protocols and continue the 2006 Plan of Action to Promote Universality [YUN 2006, p. 664], six regional seminars were organized during 2008.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/393], adopted resolution 63/85 without vote [agenda item 93].

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

Cluster munitions

The Convention on Cluster Munitions (CCM), which prohibits all use, stockpiling, production and transfer of cluster munitions causing unacceptable harm to civilians and provides for support to victims and affected communities, was adopted in Dublin, Ireland, on 30 May by 107 States, and signed in Oslo, Norway, on 3 December by 94 States and simultaneously ratified by four.

The cluster munitions ban process, also known as the Oslo Process, was launched in February 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 576]. At that time, 46 nations issued the "Oslo Declaration", committing themselves to conclude by 2008 a legally binding international instrument. The Oslo Process held meetings in Lima, Peru, in May 2007 and in Vienna in December 2007. In February 2008, 79 countries adopted the "Wellington Declaration" at a conference in Wellington, New Zealand, setting forth the principles to be included in the Convention.

During the year, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) supported seven regional meetings on cluster munitions (Livingstone, Zambia, 31 March–1 April; Mexico City, 16–17 April; Sofia, Bulgaria, 18–19 September; Kampala, Uganda, 29–30 September; Xiengkhuang, Lao People's Democratic Republic, 20–22 October; Quito, Ecuador, 6–7 November; Beirut, Lebanon, 11–12 November).

On 13 October, Ireland transmitted to the General Assembly's First Committee the Final Document of the Diplomatic Conference for the Adoption of a Convention on Cluster Munitions (Dublin, 19–30 May) [A/C.1/63/5], adding that the President of the Conference would report to the Committee on 21 October.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/71 without vote [agenda item 89].

Convention on Cluster Munitions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the conclusion of negotiations on the Convention on Cluster Munitions at Dublin on 30 May 2008,

Noting that the Convention will be opened for signature at Oslo on 3 December 2008, and will remain open for signature thereafter at United Nations Headquarters in New York until its entry into force,

Bearing in mind, in particular, the tasks entrusted to the Secretary-General pursuant to the terms of the Convention,

Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be necessary to fulfil the tasks entrusted to him by the Convention on Cluster Munitions.

Anti-personnel mines

1997 Convention

The number of States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (Mine-Ban Convention), which was adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 503] and entered into force in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 498], remained at 156.

Meeting of States parties

The Ninth Meeting of the States Parties to the Mine-Ban Convention (Geneva, 24–28 November) [APLC/MSP.9/2008/4] was held in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/41 [YUN 2007, p. 582]. A total of 95 States parties, 2 signatories and 20 States not parties, together with international organizations and institutions, as well as NGOs, participated in the meeting. Intersessional preparatory work was conducted in Standing Committees (Geneva, 2–6 June).

The most significant challenge confronting the Meeting was in relation to implementing Article 5. For the first time, States parties had to decide whether or not to grant requests for extension to 15 States parties that were unable to meet their mine-clearance deadline. Consequently, all requests submitted earlier in 2008 were examined by a group of States parties under the authority of the President of the Eighth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention [YUN 2007, p. 581]. The report of the former President and the requests by 15 States were considered by the States parties at an informal session. While most of the cases did not pose any significant problem, it was possible to avoid a vote and grant the extensions.

The implementation of Article 4 proved to be another pointed issue. The Meeting focused on three cases of failure to comply with obligations to destroy or ensure the destruction of stockpiled anti-personnel mines. Non-compliance represented a serious challenge as stockpile destruction was essential for implementing the Convention's comprehensive ban. To prevent future non-compliance, the Meeting welcomed a proposal by the Co-Chairs of the Standing Committee on Stockpile Destruction on steps to ensure full Article 4 implementation [APLC/MSP.9/2008/WP.36].

The Meeting agreed to hold the Convention's Second Review Conference in Cartagena, Colombia (30 November–4 December 2009).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/42 by recorded vote (163-0-18) [agenda item 89].

Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/54B of 1 December 1999, 55/33V of 20 November 2000, 56/24M of 29 November 2001, 57/74 of 22 November 2002, 58/53 of 8 December 2003, 59/84 of 3 December 2004, 60/80 of 8 December 2005, 61/84 of 6 December 2006 and 62/41 of 5 December 2007,

Reaffirming its determination to put an end to the suffering and casualties caused by anti-personnel mines, which kill or maim hundreds of people every week, mostly innocent and defenceless civilians, including children, obstruct economic development and reconstruction, inhibit the repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons and have other severe consequences for years after emplacement,

Believing it necessary to do the utmost to contribute in an efficient and coordinated manner to facing the challenge of removing anti-personnel mines placed throughout the world and to assure their destruction,

Wishing to do the utmost in ensuring assistance for the care and rehabilitation, including the social and economic reintegration, of mine victims,

Welcoming the entry into force, on 1 March 1999, of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, and noting with satisfaction the work undertaken to implement the Convention and the substantial progress made towards addressing the global anti-personnel landmine problem,

Recalling the first to eighth meetings of the States parties to the Convention, held in Maputo (1999), Geneva (2000), Managua (2001), Geneva (2002), Bangkok (2003), Zagreb (2005), Geneva (2006), and the Dead Sea (2007) and the First Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, held in Nairobi (2004),

Recalling also that at the eighth meeting of the States parties to the Convention, held at the Dead Sea from 18 to 22 November 2007, the international community monitored progress on implementation of the Convention and supported continued application of the Nairobi Action Plan 2005–2009, and established priorities to achieve further progress towards ending, for all people and for all time, the suffering caused by anti-personnel mines,

Noting with satisfaction that additional States have ratified or acceded to the Convention, bringing the total number of States that have formally accepted the obligations of the Convention to one hundred and fifty-six,

Emphasizing the desirability of attracting the adherence of all States to the Convention, and determined to work strenuously towards the promotion of its universalization,

Noting with regret that anti-personnel mines continue to be used in conflicts around the world, causing human suffering and impeding post-conflict development,

1. Invites all States that have not signed the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction to accede to it without delay;

2. Urges all States that have signed but have not ratified the Convention to ratify it without delay;

3. Stresses the importance of the full and effective implementation of and compliance with the Convention, including through the continued implementation of the Nairobi Action Plan 2005–2009;

4. Urges all States parties to provide the Secretary-General with complete and timely information as required under article 7 of the Convention in order to promote transparency and compliance with the Convention;

5. Invites all States that have not ratified the Convention or acceded to it to provide, on a voluntary basis, information to make global mine action efforts more effective;

6. Renews its call upon all States and other relevant parties to work together to promote, support and advance the care, rehabilitation and social and economic reintegration of mine victims, mine risk education programmes and the removal and destruction of anti-personnel mines placed or stockpiled throughout the world;

7. Urges all States to remain seized of the issue at the highest political level and, where in a position to do so, to promote adherence to the Convention through bilateral, subregional, regional and multilateral contacts, outreach, seminars and other means;

8. Reiterates its invitation and encouragement to all interested States, the United Nations, other relevant international organizations or institutions, regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations to participate in the ninth meeting of the States parties to the Convention, to be held in Geneva from 24 to 28 November 2008 and in the intersessional work programme established at the first meeting of the States parties and further developed at subsequent meetings of the States parties;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with article 12, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to undertake the preparations necessary to convene the next Review Conference of the States parties to the Convention and, pending a decision to be taken at the ninth meeting of the States parties, and on behalf of the States parties and in accordance with article 11, paragraph 4, of the Convention, to invite States not parties to the Convention, as well as the United Nations, other relevant international organizations or institutions, regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations to attend the Review Conference as observers;

Practical disarmament

Disarmament Commission action. The Disarmament Commission [A/63/42] allocated to Working Group II the item “Practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional weapons”. The Group discussed the item between 9 and 22 April, based on a paper by its Chairman, and decided to continue consideration of the issue in the future.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 61/76 [YUN 2006, p. 666], the Secretary-General, in August [A/63/261], presented an overview of action taken by States and regional and subregional organizations regarding practical disarmament measures, especially those by the Group of Interested States in Practical Disarmament Measures. He reported that following a review of its mandate in light of the overlap with some of the activities included in the Programme of Action, the Group resolved to refocus on its original activities, which included examination and provision of joint support for concrete projects in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, weapons collection programmes, demining, conversion and public awareness campaigns. The Group engaged in exchanging information on lessons learned and their dissemination to interested States. At its March meeting, the Group considered a funding proposal by the Nairobi-based Regional Centre on Small Arms [YUN 2007, p. 1430] to support practical disarmament projects in Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and the Sudan.

In addition to the assistance by some of the Group’s members, UNDP provided support to over 15 States and led several joint missions with other UN agencies and departments in the fields of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, security sector reform, gender and early recovery. In the Sudan, UNDP, the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the United Nations Children’s Fund coordinated their efforts in supporting a national strategy for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, complemented by community security and small arms control initiatives.

The Secretary-General noted that 12 States had submitted information in the areas of capacity-building of national institutions dealing with small arms and light weapons; collection and destruction of surplus and illicit arms; destruction and demilitarization of ammunition; support to civil society with a view to enhancing capacity to assist in combating illicit arms; support for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration in countries emerging from conflict; and disarmament of illegal armed groups in countries not in conflict.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/62 by recorded vote (182-0-0) [agenda item 89 (e)].

Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/45 N of 10 December 1996, 52/38 G of 9 December 1997, 53/77 M of 4 December 1998, 54/54 H of 1 December 1999, 55/33 G of 20 November 2000, 56/24 P of 29 November 2001 and 57/81 of 22 November 2002, its decision 58/519 of 8 December 2003, as well as its resolutions 59/82 of 3 December 2004 and 61/76 of 6 December 2006 entitled “Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures”,

Convinced that a comprehensive and integrated approach towards certain practical disarmament measures often is a prerequisite to maintaining and consolidating peace and security and thus provides a basis for effective post-conflict peacebuilding; such measures include collection and responsible disposal, preferably through destruction, of weapons obtained through illicit trafficking or illicit manufacture as well as of weapons and ammunition declared by competent national authorities to be surplus to requirements, particularly with regard to small arms and light weapons, unless another form of disposition or use has been officially authorized and provided that such weapons have been duly marked and registered; confidence-building measures; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants; demining; and conversion,

Noting with satisfaction that the international community is more than ever aware of the importance of such practical disarmament measures, especially with regard to the growing problems arising from the excessive accumulation and uncontrolled spread of small arms and light weapons, including their ammunition, which pose a threat to peace and security and reduce the prospects for economic development in many regions, particularly in post-conflict situations,

Stressing that further efforts are needed in order to develop and effectively implement programmes of practical disarmament in affected areas as part of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration measures so as to complement, on a case-by-case basis, peacekeeping and peacebuilding efforts,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on prevention of armed conflict, which, inter alia, refers to the role which the proliferation and the illicit transfer of small arms and light weapons play in the context of the build-up and sustaining of conflicts,

Taking note of the statement by the President of the Security Council of 31 August 2001 underlining the importance of practical disarmament measures in the context of armed conflicts, and, with regard to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, emphasizing the importance of measures to contain the security risks stemming from the use of illicit small arms and light weapons,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms and, in particular, the recommendations contained therein, as an important contribution to the consolidation of the peace process through practical disarmament measures,

Welcoming the work of the United Nations Coordinating Action on Small Arms mechanism, which was established by the Secretary-General to bring about a holistic and multidisciplinary approach to this complex and multifaceted global problem,

Welcoming also the establishment, within the United Nations system, of the Programme of Action Implementation Support System, which provides a comprehensive tool to facilitate international cooperation and assistance for the implementation of practical disarmament measures, including the matching of assistance needs with available resources,

Welcoming further the reports of the first, second and third biennial meetings of States to consider the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, held in New York from 7 to 11 July 2003, from 11 to 15 July 2005 and from 14 to 18 July 2008,

1. Stresses the particular relevance of the “Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N”, adopted by the Disarmament Commission by consensus at its 1999 substantive session;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, submitted pursuant to resolution 61/76, and once again encourages Member States as well as regional arrangements and agencies to lend their support to the implementation of recommendations contained therein;

3. Emphasizes the importance of including in United Nations-mandated peacekeeping missions, as appropriate and with the consent of the host State, practical disarmament measures aimed at addressing the problem of the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in conjunction with disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes aimed at former combatants, with a view to promoting an integrated comprehensive and effective weapons management strategy that would contribute to a sustainable peacebuilding process;

4. Welcomes the activities undertaken by the Group of Interested States, and invites the Group to continue to promote, on the basis of lessons learned from previous disarmament and peacebuilding projects, new practical disarmament measures to consolidate peace, especially as undertaken or designed by affected States themselves, regional and subregional organizations as well as United Nations agencies;

5. Encourages Member States, also in the framework of the Group of Interested States, to continue to lend their support to the Secretary-General, relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and non-governmental organizations in responding to requests by Member States to collect and destroy small arms and light weapons, including their ammunition, in post-conflict situations;

6. Welcomes the synergies within the multi-stakeholder process, including Governments, the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and institutions as well as non-governmental organizations in support of practical disarmament measures and the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a report on the implementation of practical disarmament measures, taking into consideration the activities of the Group of Interested States in this regard;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session the item entitled “Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures”.

Transparency

Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament [A/63/27] held two informal meetings, on 15 and 28 February, followed by a 12 August session on “Transparency in Armaments”.

Israel's initiative to ban arms transfers to terrorists remained the most sensitive issue. The discussions revealed considerable divergences of views, particularly with Algeria and the Syrian Arab Republic warning of potentially politicizing the issue.

A number of delegations were of the view that transparency in armaments remained important, and while there was no opposition to the idea of appointing a Special Coordinator or establishing an Ad Hoc Committee, it was deemed essential to remain focused on an agreed programme of work, based primarily on the four core issues of nuclear disarmament, a Fissile Material Cut-off Treaty, prevention of an arms race in outer space, and negative security assurances.

UN Register of Conventional Arms

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/77 [YUN 2006, p. 668], the Secretary-General in July submitted the sixteenth annual report on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms [A/63/120 & Add.1-3], established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 75] to promote transparency on arms transfers.

The report presented information provided by 91 Governments on imports and exports in 2007 in the seven categories of conventional arms (battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, attack helicopters, combat aircraft, warships and missiles, and missile launchers). Governments also provided information on military holdings, procurement through national production, and international transfers of small arms and light weapons. The number of States complementing their reports with data on international small arms and light weapons transfers increased from 37 in 2006 to 48 in 2007.

The report also highlighted numerous activities undertaken by the Secretariat during the year, through UNODA, in collaboration with Governments and regional organizations, to enhance awareness of the Register and encourage greater participation in it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/69 by recorded vote (160-0-22) [agenda item 89 (f)].

Noting the focused discussion on transparency in armaments that took place in the Conference on Disarmament in 2007 and 2008,

Stressing that the continuing operation of the Register and its further development should be reviewed in order to secure a Register that is capable of attracting the widest possible participation,

Transparency of military expenditures

UNODA continued its efforts to raise awareness of and promote transparency in military matters. During the First Committee session, it prepared and distributed among delegations a fact sheet on the Standardized Instrument for Reporting Military Expenditures, recommended by the General Assembly in resolution 35/142 B [YUN 1980, p. 88]. In view of the forthcoming governmental review of the operation and further development of the Instrument in 2010, efforts were made to start preparations for the review, as mandated by General Assembly resolution 62/13 [YUN 2007, p. 579].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 62/13, the Secretary-General, in a July report with later addenda [A/63/97 & Add.1-3], presented reports from 77 Member States on their national military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data were available. The reporting instrument was that recommended by the Assembly in resolution 35/142 B [YUN 1980, p. 88].

The report was presented to the First Committee under agenda item 81, "Reduction of military budgets". In the Committee, no proposal was submitted and no action was taken under that item.

On 2 December, the General Assembly took note of the First Committee's report [A/63/381] on the item "Reduction of military budgets" (decision 63/516).

Verification

The United Nations continued to consider the issue of verification of arms agreements and the work of the Panel of Governmental Experts in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 670]. The Panel's report including recommendations was presented to the General Assembly in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 580].

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/21 [ibid., p. 581], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the issue of verification of arms agreements, treaties and other commitments [A/63/114 & Add.1], including the views of five Governments (Canada, Cuba, Spain, Sweden, United States) and one international treaty organization (opcw).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/59 by recorded vote (158-0-18) [agenda item 89].

Compliance with non-proliferation, arms limitation and disarmament agreements and commitments

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 60/55 of 8 December 2005 and other relevant resolutions on the question, and noting the report of the Panel of Government Experts on verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification,

Recognizing the abiding concern of all Member States for ensuring respect for the rights and obligations arising from treaties to which they are parties and from other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance by Member States of the Charter of the United Nations and compliance with non-proliferation, arms limitation and disarmament agreements to which they are parties and with other agreed obligations are essential for regional and global peace, security and stability,

Stressing that failure by States parties to comply with such agreements and with other agreed obligations not only adversely affects the security of States parties but also can create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements,

Stressing also that the viability and effectiveness of non-proliferation, arms limitation and disarmament agreements and of other agreed obligations require that those agreements be fully complied with and enforced,

Concerned by non-compliance by some States with their respective obligations,

Noting that verification and compliance, and enforcement in a manner consistent with the Charter, are integrally related,

Recognizing the importance of and support for effective national, regional, and international capacities for such verification, compliance, and enforcement,

Recognizing also that full compliance by States with all their respective non-proliferation, arms limitation and disarmament agreements and with other agreed obligations they have undertaken contributes to efforts to prevent the development and proliferation, contrary to international obligations, of weapons of mass destruction, related technologies and means of delivery, as well as to efforts to deny non-State actors access to such capabilities,

1. Underscores the contribution that compliance with non-proliferation, arms limitation and disarmament agreements and with other agreed obligations makes to enhancing confidence and to strengthening international security and stability;

2. Urges all States to implement and to comply fully with their respective obligations;

3. Calls upon all Member States to encourage and, for those States in a position to do so, to appropriately assist States which request assistance to increase their capacity to implement fully their obligations;

4. Calls upon all concerned States to take concerted action, in a manner consistent with relevant international law, to encourage, through bilateral and multilateral means, the compliance by all States with their respective non-proliferation, arms limitation and disarmament agreements and with other agreed obligations, and to hold those not in compliance with such agreements accountable for their non-compliance in a manner consistent with the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Urges those States not currently in compliance with their respective obligations and commitments to make the strategic decision to come back into compliance;

6. Encourages efforts by all States, the United Nations and other international organizations, pursuant to their respective mandates, to take action, consistent with the Charter, to prevent serious damage to international security and stability arising from non-compliance by States with their existing non-proliferation, arms limitation and disarmament obligations.

Other disarmament issues

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

Conference on Disarmament. The issue of the prevention of an arms race in outer space was again addressed by the Conference on Disarmament [A/63/27]. In the absence of a programme of work, the Conference was unable to establish a formal framework for dealing with the issue, but in accordance with the agreed organizational procedure, it held three rounds of informal deliberations, on 7 and 21 February and 5 August. In February, China and the Russian Federation presented a draft “Treaty on Prevention of the Placement of Weapons in Outer Space and of the Threat or Use of Force Against Outer Space Objects”, which was welcomed by a number of countries, including the 21 members of the Non-Aligned Movement, as well as the EU. During the high-level segment in March, a number of dignitaries underlined the importance of the issue and welcomed the draft treaty, whereas the United States, in a paper submitted in August, informed the Conference that the draft provided no grounds for it to change its long-standing principle that arms control constraints or limitations on space-based systems and activities, beyond the existing regimes in force, were not in its national security interests, and that it was not possible to develop an effectively verifiable agreement for banning either space-based weapons or a terrestrial-based anti-satellite system.

A number of Conference members stressed the importance of transparency and confidence-building measures (TCBMs) in outer space activities. In particular, the EU referred to its code of conduct on outer space activities and announced that it was working on a set of TCBMs for presentation to the Conference. Several countries supported the establishment of a code of conduct for outer space activities. At the informal meeting on 21 February, the Chairman of the United Nations Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space made a presentation to the Conference, clarifying the Committee’s mandate, roles and responsibilities in relation to the Conference.

Summarizing the discussion, the Coordinator observed that there was broad consensus on the existence of deficiencies in the current outer space architecture; TCBMs could either be complementary to a future legal instrument, be sufficient on their own, or taken up in the context of the draft Treaty that was welcomed by many delegations, with several expressing interest in continuing more substantive discussions thereon and one opposing new binding space control agreements. The Coordinator reported that interest was shown in continuing work in two areas: TCBMs, with the work of the EU serving as a basis for further discussions, and the Chinese-Russian draft treaty.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/43 [YUN 2007, p. 585], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/136 & Add.1] containing proposals from six States (Bangladesh, Chile, Cuba, France (on behalf of the EU), Qatar, Ukraine) on transparency and confidence-building measures in outer space activities in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation and the prevention of an arms race in outer space.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/388], adopted resolution 63/40 by recorded vote (177-1-1) [agenda item 88].

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes and shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development,

Reaffirming also the provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this issue, and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing that prevention of an arms race in outer space would avert a grave danger for international peace and security,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Noting also that there were no objections in principle in the Conference on Disarmament to the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee, subject to re-examination of the mandate contained in the decision of the Conference on Disarmament of 13 February 1992,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, including the weaponization of outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling, in this context, its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, 47/51 of 9 December 1992 and 48/74 A of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as a means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that negotiations for the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remain a priority task of the Ad Hoc Committee and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

Noting with satisfaction the constructive, structured and focused debate on the prevention of an arms race in outer space at the Conference on Disarmament in 2008,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space does not in and of itself guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that the regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness and that it is important to comply strictly with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the sole multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to complete the examination and updating of the mandate contained in its decision of 13 February 1992 and to establish an ad hoc committee as early as possible during its 2009 session;

7. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

8. Urges States conducting activities in outer space, as well as States interested in conducting such activities, to keep the Conference on Disarmament informed of the progress of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on the matter, if any, so as to facilitate its work;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Maritime security and safety

At the ninth meeting [A/63/174] of the Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea (New York, 23–27 June) (see p. 1497), delegations underscored the danger posed to maritime security by illicit trafficking of small arms and weapons of mass destruction. It was recognized that the legal regimes governing maritime security and safety might have common and mutually reinforcing objectives that could benefit from synergies with non-proliferation measures and instruments such as the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and the Subsoil Thereof (Seabed Treaty), adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2660(XXV) [YUN 1970, p. 17].

Disarmament and development

The issue of the relationship between disarmament and development remained controversial in 2008.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/48 [YUN 2007, p. 586] the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/63/134], summarizing activities to implement the action programme adopted by the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development [YUN 1987, p. 82] and the recommendations of the Group of Governmental Experts on the relationship [YUN 2004, p. 579]. It also detailed information received from five Governments (Cuba, Dominican Republic, Lebanon, Qatar, Serbia). To strengthen the UN role in disarmament and development, a high-level Steering Group had designated focal points at the working level to discuss the issue, but a significant divergence of views between States had resulted in a limited response from Member States, which impacted the Steering Group's ability to take decisive action and to commit the necessary resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/52 without vote [agenda item 89 (aa)].

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the new challenges for the international community in the field of development, poverty eradication and the elimination of the diseases that afflict humanity,

Stressing the importance of the symbiotic relationship between disarmament and development and the important role of security in this connection, and concerned at increasing global military expenditure, which could otherwise be spent on development needs,

Recalling the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on the relationship between disarmament and development and its reappraisal of this significant issue in the current international context,

Bearing in mind the importance of following up on the implementation of the action programme adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

1. Stresses the central role of the United Nations in the disarmament-development relationship, and requests the Secretary-General to strengthen further the role of the Organization in this field, in particular the high-level Steering Group on Disarmament and Development, in order to ensure continued and effective coordination and close cooperation between the relevant United Nations departments, agencies and sub-agencies;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

3. Urges the international community to devote part of the resources made available by the implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements to economic and social development, with a view to reducing the ever-widening gap between developed and developing countries;

4. Encourages the international community to achieve the Millennium Development Goals and to make reference to the contribution that disarmament could provide in meeting them when it reviews its progress towards this purpose in 2008, as well as to make greater efforts to integrate disarmament, humanitarian and development activities;

5. Encourages the relevant regional and subregional organizations and institutions, non-governmental organizations and research institutes to incorporate issues related to the relationship between disarmament and development in their agendas and, in this regard, to take into account the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on the relationship between disarmament and development;

6. Reiterates the invitation to Member States to provide the Secretary-General with information regarding measures and efforts to devote part of the resources made available by the implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements to economic and social development, with a view to reducing the ever-widening gap between developed and developing countries;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution, including the information provided by Member States pursuant to paragraph 6 above;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

Promoting development through reduction of armed violence

In September, 85 States met in Geneva for a Review Summit of the 2006 Geneva Declaration on Armed Violence and Development, hosted by Switzerland and UNDP. On 16 October [A/63/494], Switzerland, on behalf of the Geneva Declaration core group of States (Brazil, Finland, Guatemala, Indonesia, Kenya, Morocco, the Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, United Kingdom) forwarded to the General Assembly the Geneva Declaration and the statement adopted by the Review Summit.

By the Declaration, 42 countries acknowledged that armed violence and conflict impeded realization of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), and that conflict prevention and resolution, violence reduction, human rights, good governance and peacebuilding were key steps towards reducing poverty, promoting economic growth and improving people's lives. The participants agreed to work individually and together, at national, regional and multilateral levels, on practical measures that: promoted conflict prevention, resolution and reconciliation and supported post-conflict peacebuilding; stemmed the proliferation and illegal trafficking of small arms and light weapons; upheld respect for human rights and promoted the peaceful settlement of conflicts based on justice and the rule of law; fostered public security institutions; and ensured that armed violence prevention and reduction initiatives targeted specific risk factors and groups, and were linked to providing alternative livelihoods. They supported initiatives to measure the human, social and economic costs of armed violence, to assess risks, and to disseminate best practices. They set the goal of achieving, by 2015, measurable reductions in armed violence and tangible improvements in human security worldwide.

At the conclusion of the Review Summit, a statement was adopted reaffirming the goals of the Geneva Declaration, to which meanwhile 94 States had subscribed. The participating States recognized that development, peace and security and human rights were interlinked and mutually reinforcing, and that armed violence might hinder the achievement of the MDGs. They commended the efforts made to promote sustainable security and a culture of peace by taking action to reduce armed violence and its negative impact on socio-economic and human development. They further commended Guatemala, Kenya and Thailand for having hosted regional conferences on armed violence and development, which had resulted in regional declarations, and encouraged States and organizations to implement those declarations. They acknowledged that States bore the primary responsibility for preventing, reducing and ending armed violence through practical measures, reaffirmed the commitments in the Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome, as expressed in Assembly resolution 60/1 [YUN 2005, p. 48], and reaffirmed their support for UN efforts to promote implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects. They agreed to meet again no later than 2011 to assess progress in achieving those goals.

On 17 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/23 [draft A/63/L.27 & Add.1, as orally revised] without vote [agenda item 107].

Science and technology and disarmament

Discussions on science and technology in the context of international security had featured regularly at the United Nations during the past decade. The agenda item “Role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament” was included in the sixty-third session of the General Assembly in accordance with Assembly resolution 61/55 [YUN 2006, p. 740].

By decision 63/518 of 2 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/384], included the item in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth (2009) session.

The Assembly took related action on the same day in resolution 63/37 (see p. 696) on developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security, calling on Member States to promote the consideration of existing and potential threats in the field of information security, as well as possible measures to limit them. It requested the Secretary-General to study those threats as well as cooperative measures to address them, with the assistance of a governmental group of experts.

Studies, information and training

Disarmament studies

During the year, the following expert groups on disarmament issues, established by the General Assembly, completed their work: the Group of Governmental Experts towards an arms trade treaty, establishing common international standards for the import, export and transfer of conventional arms, mandated by General Assembly resolution 61/89 [YUN 2006, p. 655]; the Group of Governmental Experts on problems arising from the accumulation of conventional ammunition stockpiles in surplus, established in accordance with resolution 61/72 [ibid., p. 661]; and the Group of Governmental Experts on missiles in all its aspects, established pursuant to resolution 59/67 [YUN 2004, p. 537]. Preparations started for a governmental review of the operation and further development of the Standardized Instrument for Reporting Military Expenditures, mandated by resolution 62/13 [YUN 2007, p. 579]. In December, the Assembly, by resolutions 63/37 (see p. 696) and 63/89 (see p. 695), called for further studies on developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security, and on the UN Register of Conventional Arms, respectively.

The United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) was involved in a number of studies. Among others, it began work on a study of the political and legal aspects of multinational approaches to the nuclear fuel cycle and was continuing research on the role of regional bodies in implementing global treaties. Its ongoing multi-year research project entitled “Disarmament as humanitarian action: making multilateral negotiations work” was aimed at rethinking and reframing the ways and means of international arms control and disarmament. The project “Creating a new dynamic for public-private partnerships for peaceful and sustainable development: human security and equitable access to resources” was completed in May. A draft security needs assessment protocol, for use by UN agencies in post-conflict environments, was nearing completion and a report outlining the purposes of the protocol was published in April. Under the project “International assistance for implementing the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects”, a mechanism was being developed to assist in matching needs and resources with respect to implementing the Programme of Action. UNIDIR continued to explore the possibilities for a weapons-of-mass-destruction-free zone in the Middle East.

The Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization (CTBTO) in February launched an International Scientific Studies Project with the participation of over 100 scientists from 33 countries, to evaluate through independent studies and assessments the capabilities and level of readiness of the Treaty verification system; findings were to be presented at an international scientific conference in Vienna in June 2009.

Disarmament education

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 61/73 [YUN 2006, p. 678], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/63/158 & Add.1], reviewed the results of the implementation of the 34 recommendations of a 2002 UN study [YUN 2002, p. 544] on disarmament and non-proliferation education and possible new opportunities for promoting such education. Seven Member States (Burundi, Cambodia, Italy, Mauritius, the Netherlands, Qatar, Spain) had submitted information, as well as nine UN entities and international organizations and 16 civil society and non-governmental organizations.

The Secretary-General in his conclusions noted that the 34 recommendations were aimed at Governments and international and regional organizations, as well as civil society, encouraging actors to recognize the contribution such education could make to a well-informed citizenry and thus a more secure world. For the two-year review of the implementation of those recommendations, a large quantity of information was received. Several Governments had used the framework of the 2010 Review Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to promote education and training in nuclear non-proliferation. As in previous reports, most initiatives had been carried out by civil society, which remained the creative and driving force. In order to take advantage of the renewed global interest in the possibilities offered by a world free of nuclear weapons, much work remained to be done. Some of the most effective efforts involved partnerships among Governments and international, regional and civil society organizations that could serve as a model for future activities. The United Nations would continue to seek opportunities to promote and participate in such collaborative work.

Among UN entities, UNODA, in cooperation with the UN Department of Public Information (DPI), had launched an educational disarmament and non-proliferation website that was expanded with additional interactive capacities. UNODA also co-sponsored the World Federation of United Nations Associations educational programme entitled “Students for a nuclear-weapons-free world”, in preparation for the 2010 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons Review Conference. UNIDIR held a seminar on disarmament and non-proliferation education, continued to issue its quarterly journal, and expanded distribution of its material through online social networking. An electronic newsletter was launched in June by CTBTO, whose education activities increasingly focused on electronic dissemination of information to targeted audiences.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/70 without vote [agenda item 89 (d)].

United Nations study on disarmament and non-proliferation education

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/33 E of 20 November 2000, 57/60 of 22 November 2002, 59/93 of 3 December 2004 and 61/73 of 6 December 2006,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on disarmament and non-proliferation education, in which the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the United Nations study on disarmament and non-proliferation education,

Also welcoming the launch of the disarmament and non-proliferation education website, “Disarmament Education: Resources for Learning”, by the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat, and the educational disarmament and non-proliferation website on the United Nations CyberSchoolBus site, launched by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and the Office for Disarmament Affairs,

Emphasizing that the Secretary-General concludes in his report that efforts need to be continued to implement the recommendations of the study and follow the good examples of how they are being implemented to stimulate even further long-term results,

Desirous of stressing the urgency of promoting concerted international efforts at disarmament and non-proliferation, in particular in the field of nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, with a view to strengthening international security and enhancing sustainable economic and social development,

Conscious of the need to combat the negative effects of cultures of violence and complacency in the face of current dangers in this field through long-term programmes of education and training,

Remaining convinced that the need for disarmament and non-proliferation education has never been greater, not only on the subject of weapons of mass destruction but also in the field of small arms and light weapons, terrorism and other challenges to international security and the process of disarmament, as well as on the relevance of implementing the recommendations contained in the United Nations study,

Recognizing the importance of the role of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, in the promotion of disarmament and non-proliferation education,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Member States, the United Nations and other international and regional organizations, civil society and non-governmental organizations, which, within their purview, implemented the recommendations made in the United Nations study, as discussed in the report of the Secretary-General reviewing the implementation of the recommendations, and encourages them once again to continue applying those recommendations and reporting to the Secretary-General on steps taken to implement them;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report reviewing the results of the implementation of the recommendations and possible new opportunities for promoting disarmament and non-proliferation education, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session;

3. Reiterates the request to the Secretary-General to utilize electronic means to the fullest extent possible in the dissemination, in as many official languages as feasible, of information related to that report and any other information that the Office for Disarmament Affairs gathers on an ongoing basis in regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations study;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session the item entitled “Disarmament and non-proliferation education”.

Disarmament Information Programme

During the year, UNODA continued to raise awareness and understanding of the work of the United Nations on disarmament and related issues. The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook was distributed worldwide and was also accessible electronically. The quarterly e-publication UNODA Update continued to highlight events and activities of the Office and other disarmament forums. On the subject of verification in all its aspects, Study Series 32 was released in 2008, and two booklets were published, entitled Small Arms and Light Weapons: Selected United Nations Documents and Disarmament 2007: Critical Disarmament Issues.

Dedicated websites were designed for major disarmament-related conferences, including the first and second sessions of the Preparatory Committee for the 2010 NPT Review Conference and the Third Biennial Meeting of States, as well as in connection with issues such as efforts to achieve an arms trade treaty.

During the four-week session of the General Assembly's First Committee in October, two exhibits were displayed: one, organized by Mayors for Peace, showing photographs of the Hiroshima-Nagasaki Atomic Bomb project, and another, entitled “The World is Watching”, sponsored by UNODA and organized by Control Arms, highlighting the dangers of the spread of illicit small arms and UN efforts towards an international arms trade treaty.

UNODA also facilitated the participation of civil society organizations in disarmament-related meetings and conferences and collaborated closely with coalitions of NGOs that spearheaded such participation.

Messenger of Peace Michael Douglas, continuing to use his celebrity status to promote disarmament and advocate for peace, conducted radio and television interviews, participated in round-table discussions with policy-makers and journalists and held discussions with senior members of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives.

Report of Secretary-General. In the Secretary-General's July report [A/63/162], priority issues for UNODA's Disarmament Information Programme included WMDs; conventional weapons, particularly small arms and light weapons; and the dissemination of information on disarmament.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that the Disarmament Information Programme was orienting its publications to electronic formats. DPI had highlighted disarmament and arms control issues of topical interest, especially nuclear weapons and small arms and light weapons, using its network of information centres around the world and its outreach capacity.

The Secretary-General appealed for continued support, and expressed appreciation to Governments and private donors for their contributions to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Programme. As at the end of 2007, the Fund balance stood at $328,216. During the period from 1 January through 30 June 2008, additional contributions totalling $51,000 were received.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/390], adopted resolution 63/81 without vote [agenda item 90 (b)].

United Nations Disarmament Information Programme

1. Welcomes the launch of the new United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs website, and invites Member States and other users to make use of its expanded content and specialization;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to make effective use of the limited resources available to him in disseminating as widely as possible, including by electronic means, information on arms control and disarmament to Governments, the media, non-governmental organizations, educational communities and research institutes, and in carrying out a seminar and conference programme;

3. Stresses the importance of the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme as a significant instrument in enabling all Member States to participate fully in the deliberations and negotiations on disarmament in the various United Nations bodies, in assisting them in complying with treaties, as required, and in contributing to agreed mechanisms for transparency;

4. Commends with satisfaction the launch of The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook for 2007, with new format and content, as well as its online edition, by the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs;

5. Notes with appreciation the cooperation of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and its information centres in pursuit of the objectives of the Programme;

6. Recommends that the Programme continue to inform, educate and generate public understanding of the importance of multilateral action and support for it, including action by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms control and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner, and that it focus its efforts:

(a) To continue to publish in all official languages The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook, the flagship publication of the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs;

(b) To continue to maintain the disarmament website as a part of the United Nations website and to produce versions of the site in as many official languages as feasible;

(c) To continue to intensify United Nations interaction with the public, principally non-governmental organizations and research institutes, to help further an informed debate on topical issues of arms limitation, disarmament and security;

(d) To continue to organize discussions on topics of interest in the field of arms limitation and disarmament with a view to broadening understanding and facilitating an exchange of views and information among Member States and civil society;

7. Recognizes the importance of all support extended to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, and invites once again all Member States to make further contributions to the Fund with a view to sustaining a strong outreach programme;

8. Takes note of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General, which reviews the implementation of the recommendations made in the 2002 study on disarmament and non-proliferation education;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session a report covering both the implementation of the activities of the Programme by the United Nations system during the previous two years and the activities of the Programme contemplated by the system for the following two years;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session the item entitled "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme".

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, which advised the Secretary-General and also served as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, held its forty-ninth (New York, 20–22 February) and fiftieth (Geneva, 9–11 July) sessions, discussing energy security and the environment in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation; multilateralism and the UN dimension; and, in continuation of discussions from its 2007 session [YUN 2007, p. 590], emerging weapons technologies, including outer space aspects. The Board's deliberations and recommendations were summarized in an August report of the Secretary-General [A/63/279].

The Board encouraged a broader dialogue on the peaceful use of nuclear energy, including the various proposals for establishing national and multilateral nuclear fuel supply arrangements under a multilateral framework. Following an exchange of views on the Nuclear Security Project, or "Hoover Plan", a proposal launched in 2007 by former high-ranking United States officials, the Board recommended that the Secretary-General continue to strengthen his personal role in generating political will in the field of nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, seizing the momentum created by the Plan and encouraging wider discussions on its objective, with the United Nations possibly acting as a multilateral forum. With regard to emerging weapons technologies, including outer space issues, the Board suggested that the Secretary-General continue raising awareness of the risks related to those technologies and initiate a dialogue between Governments and the scientific community on emerging technologies with military applications. It also proposed that he consider creating a high-level panel, including eminent scientists, on the issue of emerging weapons technologies, including outer space aspects, and their possible implications for international peace and security.

In its capacity as UNIDIR Board of Trustees (see below), the Board adopted the Institute's 2008 programme of work and budget.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNIDIR Director [A/63/177] covering the period from August 2007 to July 2008 and the proposed 2008–2009 programme of work and budget, as approved by the Advisory Board in its capacity as UNIDIR's Board of Trustees.

The Institute's work programme remained centred on the three main areas of global security and disarmament, regional security and disarmament, and human security and disarmament, thus addressing the full range of substantive disarmament issues from small arms to weapons in outer space. The period under review was characterized by increased outreach and relations with the UN system, in particular through two research projects on security needs assessment and disarmament as humanitarian action. The Institute engaged in a range of consultations, discussions and seminars pertaining to the work of the Conference on Disarmament. It also increased the number of institutes with which it collaborated on research projects and meetings and organized a range of research meetings, both in Geneva and in different regions. UNIDIR held a series of meetings on creative approaches to the entry into force of CTBT, and in April, it was involved in a seminar on CTBT and the fissile material cut-off treaty. In May, it co-organized a seminar during the 2008 Preparatory Committee for the 2010 Review Conference of the NPT. Under the umbrella project "Working our way to nuclear disarmament", it produced a paper on the role of regional organizations in implementing Security Council resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544].

The Institute was engaged in a UNODA-executed project on promoting the universalization of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons through regional seminars. UNIDIR was also involved in organizing a series of discussions on cluster munitions and controlling the spread of small arms and light weapons. In preparation for an arms trade treaty, it co-organized seminars and analysed the elements required for such a treaty. It presented to the Third Biennial Meeting of States a draft report assessing implementation of the UN Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects and developed needs assessments and an inventory of expertise as part of the Coordinating Action on Small Arms mechanism for disseminating information.

UNIDIR continued to update the Disarmament Insight website, launched in April 2007, and to publish its bilingual quarterly journal Disarmament Forum. In early 2008, it launched a project entitled "The road from Oslo: analysis of negotiations to address the humanitarian effects of cluster munitions" and issued a publication, The Humanitarian Impact of Cluster Munitions.

Disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

In June 2008, 25 fellows participated in the UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, which began in Geneva on 25 August and concluded in New York on 24 October. The programme continued to be structured in three segments: a study session in Geneva; study visits to disarmament-related intergovernmental organizations and to Member States; and a study session at UN Headquarters in New York.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 61/91 [YUN 2006, p. 680], the Secretary-General reported in July [A/63/129] on the UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, which, since being launched in 1979 [YUN 1979, p. 92], had trained 759 officials from 159 States. He observed that the programme continued to enhance disarmament expertise, particularly in developing countries, and contributed to better understanding Member States' and the international community's concerns in the fields of disarmament and security and to fostering progress in disarmament, arms limitation and non-proliferation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/390], adopted resolution 63/79 without vote [agenda item 90 (a)].

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme,

Noting that the programme continues to contribute significantly to developing greater awareness of the importance and benefits of disarmament and a better understanding of the concerns of the international community in the field of disarmament and security, as well as to enhancing the knowledge and skills of fellows, allowing them to participate more effectively in efforts in the field of disarmament at all levels,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has trained a large number of officials from Member States throughout its thirty years of existence, many of whom hold positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament within their own Governments,

Recognizing the need for Member States to take into account gender equality when nominating candidates to the programme,

Recalling all the annual resolutions on the matter since the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, in 1982, including resolution 50/71 A of 12 December 1995,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, in particular to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by the Assembly in its resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States and organizations that have consistently supported the programme throughout the years, thereby contributing to its success, in particular to the Governments of Germany and Japan for the continuation of extensive and highly educative study visits for the participants in the programme, to the Government of the People's Republic of China for organizing a study visit for the fellows in the area of disarmament in 2007 and to the Government of Switzerland for organizing a study visit in 2008;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the International Atomic Energy Agency, the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization and the James Martin Center for Nonproliferation Studies of the Monterey Institute of International Studies for having organized specific study programmes in the field of disarmament in their respective areas of competence, thereby contributing to the objectives of the programme;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to implement annually the Geneva-based programme within existing resources and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fifth session the item entitled "United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services".

Regional disarmament

The added value of a regional approach to UN disarmament efforts having been acknowledged for almost three decades, the United Nations over the years sought to enhance, in tangible terms, the role of regional approaches to disarmament and security, including as a complement to global efforts.

In April, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council a report on the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security [S/2008/186], and noted the growing significance of regional organizations for maintaining international peace and security. Efforts continued to address regional disarmament and non-proliferation issues, such as curbing the spread of WMDs, tackling the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, establishing confidence- and security-building measures, and promoting nuclear-weapon-free zones at the regional and subregional level.

In accordance with the Security Council President's request in his statement S/PRST/2007/7 [YUN 2007, p. 109], the Secretary-General's report included specific proposals on how the United Nations could support arrangements on cooperation and coordination with regional organizations. To support endeavours in non-proliferation and disarmament, the report recommended that cooperation be increased in three areas: counter-terrorism; Security Council resolutions 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544] and 1673(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 635]; and illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/43 without vote [agenda item 89 (i)].

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991, 47/52 J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 I of 16 December 1993, 49/75 N of 15 December 1994, 50/70 K of 12 December 1995, 51/45 K of 10 December 1996, 52/38 P of 9 December 1997, 53/77 O of 4 December 1998, 54/54 N of 1 December 1999, 55/33 O of 20 November 2000, 56/24 H of 29 November 2001, 57/76 of 22 November 2002, 58/38 of 8 December 2003, 59/89 of 3 December 2004, 60/63 of 8 December 2005, 61/80 of 6 December 2006 and 62/38 of 5 December 2007 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of all States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Conventional arms control at regional and subregional levels

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 62/44 [YUN 2007, p. 591], submitted a July report [A/63/117 & Add.1] containing the views of nine Member States—Cambodia, Lebanon, Mauritius, Mexico, Panama, Qatar, Serbia, Spain, Ukraine—on conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels. By its 2007 action, the Assembly decided to give urgent consideration to conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels, since threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arose mainly among States in the same region or subregion.

Among its activities, UNODA, through regional workshops, helped States build capacity in implementing the International Tracing Instrument. In partnership with the EU, UNODA organized six regional seminars to promote the universality of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed Inhuman or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its annexed Protocols.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/389], adopted resolution 63/44 by recorded vote (175-1-2) [agenda item 89 (x)].

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 O of 15 December 1994, 50/70 L of 12 December 1995, 51/45 Q of 10 December 1996, 52/38 Q of 9 December 1997, 53/77 P of 4 December 1998, 54/54 M of 1 December 1999, 55/33 P of 20 November 2000, 56/24 I of 29 November 2001, 57/77 of 22 November 2002, 58/39 of 8 December 2003, 59/88 of 3 December 2004, 60/75 of 8 December 2005, 61/82 of 6 December 2006 and 62/44 of 5 December 2007,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Noting with particular interest the initiatives taken in this regard in different regions of the world, in particular the commencement of consultations among a number of Latin American countries and the proposals for conventional arms control made in the context of South Asia, and recognizing, in the context of this subject, the relevance and value of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, which is a cornerstone of European security,

Believing that militarily significant States and States with larger military capabilities have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that an important objective of conventional arms control in regions of tension should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise and to avoid aggression,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the meantime, to seek the views of Member States on the subject and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels".

and cooperation among States in each particular region in the areas of peace, disarmament and development,

Noting that in paragraph 91 of the Final Document of the Fourteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Havana, on 15 and 16 September 2006, the Heads of State or Government emphasized the importance of the United Nations activities at the regional level to increase the stability and security of its Member States, which could be promoted in a substantive manner by the maintenance and revitalization of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament,

Africa

The year was characterized by an increased involvement of the African Union (AU) and other subregional organizations in small arms and light weapons-related matters. The results were noticeable in efforts to coordinate the continent's response to the proliferation and misuse of small arms and light weapons. In particular, following a meeting of regional bodies (Mombasa, Kenya, 9–10 June) the AU set up a Steering Committee comprising all regional and subregional organizations engaged in the issue.

At the subregional level, the members of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) moved towards the entry into force of ECOWAS's small arms and light weapons Convention, as seven of the nine States required for its entry into force had ratified the Convention. The ECOWAS Small Arms Control Programme [YUN 2006, p. 685] continued to assist West African States in practical disarmament, specifically in building the capacity of national small arms commissions and civil society to control illicit flow.

Focusing on States not party to the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC), UNODA, in partnership with the EU, conducted two regional seminars, one for West and East Africa, and the other for the Horn of Africa, Great Lakes region and Southern Africa, (Lome, Togo, 21–22 April, 24–25 April), to promote CWC's universality.

State members of the Nairobi Protocol for the Prevention, Control and Reduction of Small Arms and Light Weapons in the Great Lakes Region and the Horn of Africa, adopted in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 571] and in force since 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 684], worked to implement the Protocol.

In Central Africa, members of the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), with the support of the United Nations and the EU, began drafting a legal instrument to control small arms and light weapons in the region. The members also began drafting a programme to promote cross-border cooperation and enhance the management of border security and trafficking issues. Disarmament programmes were carried out in the member States of the Regional Centre on Small Arms and Light Weapons in the Great Lakes Region, the Horn of Africa and Bordering States (RECISA). The Centre supported the destruction of surplus weapons and commissioned national studies to help develop a regional strategy for a 2009 launch. It conducted regional training courses for police and the military (Mombasa, Kenya, 31 March–4 April; Nairobi, 3 July).

UNDP supported the ECOWAS and RECISA small arms control programmes in strengthening their capacities through training, research and awareness-raising. UNDP also supported countries having obligations under article 4 of the Mine-Ban Convention (calling for the destruction of stockpiled anti-personnel mines), due to be fulfilled in 2008.

Standing Advisory Committee

At its twenty-seventh ministerial meeting (Luanda, Angola, 13–15 May) [A/63/82-S/2008/360], the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa reviewed the geopolitical and security situation in some of its States members, specifically Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It discussed promotion of disarmament and arms limitation in Central Africa, focusing on a draft code of conduct for armed and security forces known as the "Sao Tome Initiative", and a legally binding instrument, prepared by the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, as well as implementation of the UN Programme of Action on small arms and light weapons and related issues, and on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544]. The Committee endorsed the principal recommendations of the ECCAS report, which included proceeding with the draft for adoption in 2010, and developing a Small Arms Unit within the ECCAS secretariat that would campaign for ratification of the instrument and focus on small arms and light weapons trade-related issues in the subregion.

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/53 [YUN 2007, p. 594], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/63/164], described the activities of the Advisory Committee from July 2007 to June 2008, during which period the Committee's twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh ministerial meetings took place. The Memorandum of Understanding between the ECCAS secretariat and UNODA had contributed to strengthening their cooperation, the Secretary-General concluded, particularly with regard to the joint implementation of the Sao Tome Initiative. The ongoing efforts to revitalize the Committee's work illustrated its relevance and adaptability. States members were committed to working together, with the support of the United Nations and its partners, to implement the decisions taken. In that connection, the Committee called on interested States to help it finance the implementation of specific projects through the Committee's Trust Fund.

Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa

In accordance with the priorities expressed by Member States during the 2007 Consultative Mechanism for the Reorganization of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa [YUN 2007, p. 596], the Centre, established in Lome, Togo, in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 85], focused on conventional arms, broadening its scope of activities while strengthening relationships with regional and civil sector organizations, as well as on security sector reform. It continued to assist and advise the Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, and provided technical support for regional and subregional workshops and seminars, among them a workshop on the International Tracing Instrument (Lome, 17–18 April 2008) and two regional seminars (Lome, 21–22 April, 24–25 April).

The Centre participated in the subregional meeting on the implementation of the Nairobi Protocol

(Uganda, 17–22 August), organized by the African Centre for Security Studies, and in the first AU Region's Steering Committee for regional and subregional entities (United Republic of Tanzania, 24–26 November). The Centre organized a seminar on a legal framework for interventions of armed forces within a democratic context (Togo, 11–13 March) and in collaboration with the African Security Sector Network, a subregional workshop entitled "Parliamentary oversight of security: an interactive needs assessment of the defence and security commissions of Benin and Togo". A workshop conducted by the United Nations Office for West Africa on linkages between security and elections resulted in a recommendation that the Office develop, in partnership with the Centre and ECOWAS, a regional code of conduct on the use of security and armed forces during an electoral period.

The Centre continued to maintain a small arms register for Africa to promote confidence-building and transparency in arms transfers between the countries participating in the Small Arms Transparency and Control Regime in Africa project [YUN 2003, p. 587].

The Centre's capacity-building programme for civil society was aimed at supporting mostly West African organizations. It published a training manual to assist in delivering courses and conducted training sessions in the region. The first phase of a proposed programme in East Africa was discussed by the Regional Centre on Small Arms and the East African Action Network on Small Arms.

Focusing its outreach and information efforts on its Internet portal, the Centre's new key component was a freely accessible database on peace, security and disarmament in Africa. The Centre organized youth forums with graduate and undergraduate students to discuss the challenges of disarmament in Africa, armed conflict and international human rights law, and the problem of child soldiers.

Report of Secretary-General. The Centre's activities from July 2007 to June 2008 were described in a report of the Secretary-General [A/63/163], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/216 [YUN 2007, p. 596]. In the report, the Secretary-General expressed gratitude to the Assembly for its decision to fund the Centre's operating costs and three new posts from the regular UN budget, and called on all countries, especially the States of the region, to contribute more actively to the Centre's disarmament projects through voluntary contributions.

The Secretary-General reported that during the period under review, the Trust Fund for the Centre had received by 31 December 2007 voluntary contributions totalling $1,123,990 for the 2006–2007 biennium for the execution of new projects, and the Fund's balance stood at $1,124,973 at that date.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/390], adopted resolution 63/80 without vote [agenda item 90 (b)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the provisions of Article 11, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations stipulating that a function of the General Assembly is to consider the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and arms limitation,

Recalling its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, 41/60 D of 3 December 1986, 42/39 J of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 D of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, and its resolutions 46/36 F of 6 December 1991 and 47/52 G of 9 December 1992 on regional disarmament, including confidence-building measures,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, in which he stated that an increase in the Regional Centre's human and operational capacity would enable it to discharge its mandate in full and to respond more effectively to requests for assistance from African States,

Deeply concerned that, as noted in the report of the Secretary-General, despite the decision taken in Khartoum in January 2006 by the Executive Council of the African Union, in which the Council called upon member States to make voluntary contributions to the Regional Centre to maintain its operations, no such funds have been received to ensure its operations,

Recalling that, in its resolution 60/86, it requested the Secretary-General to establish, within existing resources, a consultative mechanism of interested States, in particular African States, for the reorganization of the Regional Centre,

Taking note of the concrete recommendations on the Regional Centre's future work programme, as well as on its staffing and funding, made by the Consultative Mechanism for the Reorganization of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa upon the conclusion of its work,

2. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the Regional Centre to align its actions with the priorities identified in the recommendations of the Consultative Mechanism;

3. Welcomes the undertaking by the Regional Centre of new initiatives and projects in the fields of security sector reform and practical disarmament measures, as detailed in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Urges all States, as well as international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions to strengthen the programmes and activities of the Regional Centre and facilitate their implementation;

5. Urges, in particular, States members of the African Union to make voluntary contributions to the Regional Centre's trust funds in conformity with the decision taken by the Executive Council of the African Union, in Khartoum in January 2006;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to facilitate closer cooperation between the Regional Centre and the African Union, in particular in the areas of peace, security and development;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary support to the Regional Centre for greater achievements and results;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa".

Asia and the Pacific

Three nuclear-related developments were significant for the region in 2008. The ratification of the Central Asian Nuclear-Weapon-Free-Zone Treaty by Turkmenistan on 19 April, Tajikistan on 12 November and Kazakhstan on 11 December, paved the way for the Treaty to enter into force. As part of the process of the Six-Party Talks to denuclearize the Korean Peninsula, the first informal meeting of the relevant Foreign Ministers was held (Beijing, 8–11 December), with the parties discussing nuclear verification activities and reaffirming the goal of verifiable denuclearization of the Peninsula. Australia and Japan co-chaired the first session of the International Commission on Nuclear Non-proliferation and Disarmament (Sydney, Australia, 9 July), a global initiative co-sponsored by the two countries with the aim of reinvigorating the global effort against nuclear proliferation and strengthening NPT during the lead-up to the 2010 Review Conference and beyond.

During the forty-first Ministerial Meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) (Singapore, 20–21 July), the Ministers in a joint communiqué welcomed the progress made in implementing the 2007 Plan of Action by the Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone. They noted that States parties should resume direct consultations with nuclear-weapon States to resolve outstanding issues regarding the Treaty on the Zone and Protocol. Reaffirming that the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula was necessary for regional peace and security, the Ministers expressed support for the Six-Party Talks. They agreed that the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) should initiate concrete measures on regional security challenges, particularly through cooperation in non-proliferation and disarmament.

At the Fifteenth Meeting of ARF (Singapore, 24 July), the Singapore Declaration was adopted to promote and maintain regional peace and security through strengthening dialogue and cooperation. At the meeting, the Ministers endorsed the establishment of a new working group, the ARF Inter-Sessional Meeting on Non-Proliferation and Disarmament, to provide a discussion platform and concentrate on Security Council resolution 1540(2004) implementation in the region.

The Council of Heads of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, at its eighth meeting (Dushanbe, Tajikistan, 28 August), adopted the Dushanbe Declaration stating that the Central Asian Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone was an important step in consolidating the NPT regime and would help strengthen regional security and contribute to the fight against international nuclear terrorism. During the meeting, member States (China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Russian Federation, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan) signed an agreement on cooperation in combating illegal circulation of weapons, ammunition and explosives.

The Pacific Islands Forum Secretariat worked with its 16 member countries on a range of security and disarmament issues and continued to support the South Pacific Nuclear-Weapons-Free Zone. It engaged France, Japan and the United Kingdom on the safety and security of civil nuclear shipments through the Pacific Ocean. In cooperation with the Secretariat, the CTBTO Preparatory Commission provided practical assistance for a regional workshop for Pacific Island States (Apia, Samoa, 8–9 May) on CTBT ratification and implementation. The Secretariat consulted with its members on a new small arms and light weapons project, to be launched in 2009, focusing on police control of ammunition, registration of weapons and holders, weapons safety, and educational material for weapons users. The Secretariat began drafting a “Regional Model Law Governing the Control of Weapons”. It supported members’ compliance with international counter-terrorism obligations, and in cooperation with New Zealand convened a regional counter-terrorism working group. It worked with members and international partners on other regional priorities, such as enhancing border security capacity and strengthening maritime security.

UNDP, together with Switzerland and Thailand, hosted a regional meeting on armed violence and development (Bangkok, 8–9 May), during which 24 Governments adopted a declaration on armed violence and development.

Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific

The new office for the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific opened in Kathmandu, Nepal, on 18 August, following its relocation from New York, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/52 [YUN 2007, p. 598].

The Centre organized several annual conferences. The twentieth UN Conference on Disarmament Issues (Saitama City, Japan, 27–29 August) focused on reinforcing the three pillars of the NPT (safety, security and safeguards), the nuclear renaissance and non-proliferation, arms control and security in East Asia, and cooperation with civil society. The Centre and the Republic of Korea organized the seventh Joint Conference entitled “Nuclear Renaissance and the NPT: Reinforcing the Three Pillars of the NPT” (Jeju Island, Republic of Korea, 24–26 November). With EU support and in collaboration with Kazakhstan, the Centre organized two seminars to promote the universality of the CCW and its Protocols in the region (Almaty, 24–25 September; Kathmandu, 17–18 December).

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/63/178], the Secretary-General gave an account of the activities of the Centre from July 2007 to June 2008. He noted that positive developments had paved the way for its relocation to the region and marked a turning point for its operation and activities. The Centre continued to promote disarmament and security dialogue and cooperation in the region through organizing conferences.

The Secretary-General reiterated his appeal to Member States, in particular those of the region, to increase their financial support of the Centre, in particular its core funding in support of the Centre’s programme and activities. As at 31 December 2007, he noted that the Centre’s trust fund balance stood at $299,736.

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/390], adopted resolution 63/77 without vote [agenda item 90 (f)].

Europe

During 2008, European intergovernmental organizations continued to promote the implementation of international disarmament instruments and to fund disarmament initiatives throughout Europe and other regions.

Disarmament activities of the EU further expanded within the framework of the European Security Strategy, as well as within the EU strategy on the non-proliferation of WMDs and on combating the illicit accumulation and trafficking of small arms and light weapons and their ammunition. The EU supported the implementation of Security Council resolutions 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544], 1673(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 635] and 1810(2008) (see p. 585), and sponsored workshops to strengthen the capacity of States involved in the export control process. On 14 May, the EU adopted a second Joint Action aimed at strengthening the capacities of non-EU States involved in export control, and on 8 December, the EU Council adopted a Council Common Position defining rules for the control of exports of military technology and equipment that replaced the Code of Conduct. The EU adopted a model article, to be inserted in relevant agreements with non-EU countries, that would constitute the legal basis for enhanced cooperation in combating illicit trade, and co-financed three regional seminars (Lome, Togo; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Seoul, Republic of Korea). Projects in the Western Balkans were carried out in Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Kosovo, Montenegro, Serbia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to aid those States in establishing legal and institutional control frameworks harmonized with EU policies and practices. The EU provided financial assistance to the UN Regional Centre for Latin America and the Caribbean for activities in that field, ensuring training courses for law enforcement authorities and Members of Parliament.

As part of a Joint Action to promote universalization of the CCW, the EU sponsored regional seminars in the Dominican Republic, Kazakhstan, Morocco, Nepal and Togo on issues concerning anti-personnel landmines and explosive remnants of war. On 23 June, the EU Council adopted a Joint Action in support of the universalization of the Mine-Ban Convention, to enable regional accession seminars. Mine action continued to be part of wider assistance and development programmes in third countries. On 24 November, a set of guidelines on European Community mine action for 2008–2013 was endorsed to steer mine-affected countries towards effective mine action programming. Additionally, European Commission support to mine action continued to be carried out in nine countries, where activities encompassed mine clearance (including cluster bombs), mine risk education, stockpile destruction, and assistance in the safe return, resettlement and establishment of livelihoods of internally displaced persons and refugees. On 8 December, the EU Council adopted new lines of action in combating the proliferation of WMDs and their delivery systems. As a major IAEA donor, the EU continued to support IAEA nuclear terrorism prevention activities and assisted in securing nuclear materials throughout the world. Also in December, the EU adopted a draft international Code of Conduct for outer space activities.

The EU assisted African countries in developing national infrastructures for CTFBT monitoring and verification and supported the International Science and Technology Centre and the Science and Technology Centre of Ukraine in mitigating the risk of WMD proliferation in the Commonwealth of Independent States.

The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) supported work identifying illicit transfers of small arms and light weapons and implementing the UN Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects.

In the South-East European region, OSCE, the Regional Cooperation Council (RCC), the Regional Arms Control Verification and Implementation Assistance Centre (RACVIAC) and the South Eastern and Eastern Europe Clearinghouse for the Control of Small Arms and Light Weapons promoted and funded disarmament projects. OSCE States participating in the Forum for Security Cooperation continued to exchange views on WMD proliferation. They also continued developing a handbook of best practice guides for implementing resolution 1540(2004).

In the field of conventional weapons, OSCE updated its 2004 commitments on small arms export control and initiated a comprehensive review of controls. An initiative was launched that led to best practices to prevent destabilizing transfers through air transport, as well as the adoption of an information-exchange questionnaire on the topic.

Following the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding between UNDP and the OSCE Secretariat, two joint projects were initiated in Belarus and Montenegro, on joint implementation projects and on conventional ammunition, respectively.

According to their own reports, OSCE participating States destroyed a total of 7,685,424 units of small arms and light weapons from 2001 to 2007. The destruction of approximately 120 tons of mélange (a rocket fuel component) was completed, and in Albania, an OSCE project to destroy 30 tons of mélange was initiated.

On 3 April, the Heads of State and Government of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) reaffirmed in the Bucharest Summit Declaration that arms control, disarmament and non-proliferation would make an important contribution to peace, security and stability and to preventing the spread and use of WMDs and their means of delivery. NATO's main non-proliferation activity in 2008 was the convening of a seminar on proliferation issues (Germany, 13–14 November), with the participation of representatives from the Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council, the Mediterranean Dialogue, the Istanbul Cooperation Initiative, Asian and Pacific nations (Australia, China, India, Japan, Pakistan), international organizations, academic institutions and think tanks. NATO also organized a regional workshop on the practical implementation of Security Council resolution 1540(2004) (Croatia, 5–6 June), where participants from South-Eastern Europe, allies and international organizations discussed lessons learned and best practices in export controls, including national action plans, information-sharing and cooperation among different agencies and with the private sector and academia.

On 28 March, the North Atlantic Council issued a statement on the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe urging the Russian Federation to end the suspension of its legal obligations and work together to reach agreement on the basis of the parallel action package and preserve the benefits of the regime. Moreover, NATO continued to coordinate conventional arms control through the Verification Coordinating Committee, which held 17 meetings for national delegates and experts in 2008.

On 27 February, RCC was launched as the successor to the Stability Pact for South-Eastern Europe and focused on developing a strategic and operational framework on security issues for increased regional cooperation and ownership. A Memorandum of Understanding was signed between RCC and UNDP, key promoters of regional security cooperation.

RACVIAC fostered cooperation and broader security dialogue among the South-East European countries by enhancing openness, predictability and transparency in the field of military security. Thirty-eight seminars, conferences, workshops and training courses, with a total of 980 participants, were carried out in cooperation with a wide range of partners, such as OPCW, the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, NATO, UNDP, UNODA and the International Action Network on Small Arms. The Centre also assisted South-East European countries in fulfilling their arms control commitments and in preparing them for accession to other arms control agreements.

UNDP, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Switzerland hosted a regional meeting (Sarajevo, 13–14 November) on armed violence and development, bringing together Governments from the Caucasus and Eastern and South-Eastern Europe. Fourteen countries subsequently adopted the Sarajevo Declaration on Armed Violence and Development.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Member States of the Organization of American States (OAS) approved on 21 February the Tlatelolco Commitment as the first joint initiative to strengthen border controls, adopt best practices at customs facilities and implement model regulations. In harmony with the 1997 Inter-American Convention Against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials (CIFTA) [YUN 1997, p. 519], the Commitment aimed at improving controls of firearms imports and exports. The Banff Declaration, adopted on 5 September, called for ratification of CIFTA and the Inter-American Convention on Transparency in Conventional Weapons Acquisition and emphasized States' commitment to reduce WMD proliferation and their delivery vehicles. As at 31 December, 29 OAS members had ratified CIFTA, and during the year, member States approved two new model legislations. An OAS programme was initiated in Central America to strengthen national capacities to prevent and eliminate illicit firearms trafficking by training national authorities in stockpile management techniques, modernizing stockpile facilities and destroying obsolete or surplus firearms and ammunitions.

The Commitment to Public Security in the Americas, adopted on 8 October in Mexico City by the OAS

Public Security Ministers, constituted the first joint policy coordination effort in the hemisphere at the ministerial level. Building on the Tlatelolco Commitment and the Banff Declaration, it further engaged States to strengthen their border security, conduct public security training and create observatories of crime and violence, thereby setting the direction to combat collectively armed violence.

On 23 May, the South American Community of Nations was created as a regional forum to foster dialogue on a number of issues, including peace and security. On 16 December, it formed an additional coordination entity, the South American Defense Council, to promote a common vision of defence, reinforce confidence-building and cooperation, preserve South America as a nuclear and other WMD-free zone, as well as to promote disarmament and a culture of peace.

Throughout the year, members of the Caribbean Community and Common Market accelerated small arms and light weapons initiatives and tasked its Implementation Agency for Crime and Security to coordinate a more effective regional approach. Two main initiatives were undertaken, encouraging member States to sign and ratify all relevant conventions and protocols, and targeting increased compliance with the UN Programme of Action. In that connection, a capacity-building project was developed to share information through a "Regional Integrated Ballistic Information Network", and expanding a ballistics database.

UNODA, in partnership with the EU, organized a regional seminar promoting national accession to ccw and its Protocols (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 11–12 March). UNDP, the UN Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean and the Spanish Government co-hosted a meeting on armed violence prevention and small arms control in Latin America (Antigua, Guatemala, 28–30 April). UNDP also supported the Central America Small Arms control initiative to strengthen subregional cooperation in preventing proliferation.

Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development

Throughout 2008, the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, in Lima, Peru [YUN 1987, p. 88], conducted major multi-year projects in assisting States to address illicit firearm trafficking, while fostering national ownership of disarmament activities. Specifically, it helped train law-enforcement officials in both populated and border areas, as well as to consolidate capacity-building in Brazil, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica and Paraguay.

The Centre continued to collaborate with the Brazilian Ministry of the Interior and UNDP-Brazil to maintain a network of relevant entities in the field, such as the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol), the World Customs Organization and UN agencies. In 2008, that network was reinforced by the participation of the newly created American Police Community and the Latin American and Caribbean Community for Police Intelligence. Supported by the Centre's online resource platform, it boosted networking and exchanges between representatives from several countries in the region, as well as from Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, the Dutch Antilles, France, Italy, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.

In cooperation with UNDP and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), the Centre worked with parliamentary representatives, NGOs, community groups and the media to make recommendations on harmonizing national firearms legislations with international firearms instruments. In cooperation with UNDP, the Centre facilitated a regional debate on armed violence and appropriate public responses.

In the context of peacekeeping operations, the Centre engaged in greater coordination with NGOs, research institutions and the media on disarmament and weapons destruction training of Brazilian and Peruvian peacekeepers.

The Centre also worked with the Provisional Technical Secretariat of the CTBTO Preparatory Commission to promote Treaty adhesion. Further to the ratifications by Barbados and Colombia in January, the Centre and the Preparatory Commission, with the support of the CTBT Article XIV Conference Co-Chairs Austria and Costa Rica, undertook coordinated missions to Dominica, Guatemala, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago for consultations. Those dialogues led to advances in the national adhesion process of the four States.

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/63/157] submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 62/49 [YUN 2007, p. 601], the Secretary-General described the Centre's activities from July 2007 to June 2008. The Centre celebrated its twentieth anniversary in 2007.

During the reporting period, it undertook an extensive review of its past and current programme of activities with a view to reaffirming its identity as a specialized regional centre for the promotion and execution of disarmament activities, in accordance with its mandate and in compliance with requests from Member States throughout the region. To meet the priorities of the United Nations and address the requirements of both donors and regional Member States, the Centre adjusted its organizational structure and operational approach. In that connection, it organized its practical disarmament activities and the promotion of disarmament and confidence-building measures under four thematic programmes: disarmament instruments and policy-making; public security; regional security and confidence-building measures; and disarmament advocacy.

The Secretary-General reported that the Centre concluded three of its most significant donor agreements to date and delivered technical assistance on issues related to illicit firearms trafficking, which was identified by regional Member States as their most pressing security concern. The Centre strengthened cooperation within the regional law enforcement community, as evidenced by the increase in information-sharing activities, the adoption of standardized best practices and the establishment of permanent coordination entities.

The Secretary-General stressed that, in the absence of assessed contributions from the UN regular budget, voluntary financial contributions, in particular for core funding, were of crucial importance for Centre operation and activities; that situation continued to have an impact on the sustainability and quality of services provided. As at 31 December 2007, the balance of the Trust Fund for the Centre stood at $1,250,946.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/63/390], adopted resolution 63/74 without vote [agenda item 90 (c)].

8. Encourages the Regional Centre to further develop activities in all countries of the region in the important area of disarmament and development;

9. Highlights the conclusion contained in the report of the Secretary-General to the sixty-first session of the General Assembly, that, through its activities, the Regional Centre has demonstrated its role as a viable regional actor in assisting States in the region to advance the cause of peace, disarmament and development in Latin America and the Caribbean;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

Middle East

In the Middle East, the League of Arab States (LAS) continued to promote a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region, as well as proceed with work on disarmament issues. Disarmament and international humanitarian law were also examined in relation to the UN-facilitated Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons and to cluster munitions.

A LAS Council resolution to draft a treaty for a WMDs free-zone in the Middle East continued to be suspended until further assessment. The League hosted the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth meetings of the “Follow-up Committee on Israeli nuclear activities”, which coordinated Arab positions on various nuclear disarmament issues. Also, the LAS Summit Council adopted two new resolutions on peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

In connection with conventional arms activities, the Second Annual Meeting of Arab National Points of Contact was held in Cairo, Egypt, from 20 to 21 May.

Supported by the EU and in collaboration with Morocco, UNODA organized a seminar on promoting the universality of CCW and its annexed Protocols in the Middle East and the Mediterranean (19–20 November). The seminar succeeded in fulfilling a need for clarification about the Convention among non-State parties from the region, many of which were affected by regulated weapons, particularly landmines and explosive remnants of war.

The General Assembly, in resolution 63/84 (see p. 597), dealt with the risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East, and in resolution 63/38 (see p. 602), it urged all concerned parties to take steps for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free Zone in that region.

Other political and security questions

In 2008, the United Nations continued to address political and security questions relating to its support for democratization worldwide, the promotion of decolonization, and the peaceful uses of outer space, as well as the Organization's public information activities.

In February, the General Assembly received the text of the Bamako Consensus on "Democracy, Development and Poverty Reduction", adopted by the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the Community of Democracies in November 2007. Conference participants committed to the enhancement of democratic governance in all regions and to upholding the conclusions of previous Ministerial Conferences. They also decided to establish a permanent secretariat in Warsaw, Poland.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continued to review progress in implementing the 1960 Declaration, particularly the exercise of self-determination by the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories. During the year, the Special Committee organized a Pacific regional seminar in Bandung, Indonesia, as part of its efforts to implement the plan of action for the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (2001–2010). Territories under review by the Special Committee included the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, New Caledonia, Tokelau and Western Sahara.

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space considered the implementation of the recommendations of the Third (1999) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) and welcomed the link between the work on UNISPACE III and that of the Commission on Sustainable Development. There was progress in the implementation of the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER). The Committee set forth guidelines for selecting and setting up regional UN-SPIDER offices. In December, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Committee.

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its fifty-sixth session in Vienna in July. It considered reports on sources of radiation exposure, the 1986 Chernobyl accident and effects on non-human biota.

In a December resolution on developments in information and telecommunications in the context of international security, the Assembly called on Member States to promote consideration of existing and potential threats in the field of information security, as well as possible measures to limit emerging threats.

The Committee on Information considered UN information policies and activities and reviewed the management and operation of the UN Department of Public Information (DPI). During the year, DPI highlighted UN priority issues in the areas of peace and security, development and human rights, and promoted the sixtieth anniversaries of United Nations peacekeeping and of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

General aspects of international security

Support for democracies

Bamako Consensus

By a January letter [A/62/662], Mali transmitted to the Secretary-General the Bamako Consensus on "Democracy, Development and Poverty Reduction", adopted by the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the Community of Democracies (Bamako, Mali, 14–17 November 2007). In the Consensus, participants committed to promote democracy in all regions, support the integrity of democratic processes in societies pursuing democracy and coordinate policies to enhance democratic governance. They reaffirmed their commitment to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to uphold the principles agreed to in previous Ministerial Conferences. They resolved to take action on issues related to democracy, development and poverty reduction, and emphasized the role of State institutions, non-State actors and international institutions, and the functioning and outreach activities of the Community of Democracies.

South Atlantic

In response to General Assembly resolution 61/294 [YUN 2007, p. 606], the Secretary-General submitted a 7 November report on the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic [A/63/525] declared in 1986 to promote cooperation among States of the region [YUN 1986, p. 369]. The Secretary-General stated that, as at 3 November, two States and five UN organizations and bodies had replied to his September request for contributions to the report.

On 24 December (decision 63/552), the Assembly decided that the item on the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Decolonization

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) held its annual session in New York in two parts—28 February and 15 April (first part); and 27 May and 9, 11–12, 18–19 and 23 June (second part). Various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 1514(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49], were considered by the Special Committee, including general decolonization issues and the situation in the individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). The Special Committee adopted three resolutions and recommended eight resolutions for adoption by the General Assembly. In accordance with Assembly resolution 62/120 [YUN 2007, p. 609], the Special Committee transmitted to the Assembly the report on its 2008 activities [A/63/23].

By decision 63/526 of 5 December, the General Assembly increased the Special Committee's membership from twenty-seven to twenty-eight. On the same date (decision 63/413), the Assembly appointed Ecuador as a member of the Special Committee.

Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

Pacific regional seminar

The Special Committee on decolonization organized a Pacific regional seminar (Bandung, Indonesia, 14–16 May) [A/63/23] to review implementation of the plan of action for the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (2001–2010) [YUN 2001, p. 530] and define priority action for the remaining years of the Decade, as declared by General Assembly resolution 55/146 [YUN 2000, p. 548]. The seminar recommended that the Special Committee, as the primary vehicle for fostering the decolonization process, continue to monitor the evolution of NSGTs towards self-determination and include the participation of NSGT representatives, on a case-by-case basis, in consultations between the Special Committee and the administering Powers. The Special Committee should also continue to develop a mechanism to systematically review, on an annual basis, the implementation of Assembly recommendations on decolonization and to explore the array of legitimate transitions to self-determination—provided that the people of a Territory had the opportunity to make a fully informed choice, in accordance with relevant UN resolutions. Participants noted with concern the military installations and activities of the administering Powers in NSGTs, which created health and environmental hazards and ran counter to the rights and interests of the people concerned.

The importance of education, awareness-raising and continued dialogue on decolonization issues was underscored, and participants reaffirmed the need for the Special Committee, in collaboration with DPI, to embark on a public-awareness campaign aimed at fostering an understanding among the people of the Territories about self-determination options. DPI should continue to disseminate relevant information, using its communication tools and making use of such opportunities as regional seminars and visiting missions.

The role of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in providing assistance to NSGTs was reiterated by participants, who encouraged the Programme to further explore ways to help identify financial resources for the development of self-government structures and prepare for self-determination. NSGTs should be given access to relevant UN programmes in the economic and social sphere in furtherance of capacity-building for the attainment of full self-government. The wider UN system should continue to strengthen support measures and formulate programmes of assistance to NSGTs, and seek proposals for the implementation of relevant resolutions by specialized agencies, as detailed in Assembly resolution 62/114 [YUN 2007, p. 613], and the Special Committee should encourage NSGTs to develop closer contacts with relevant regional organizations.

Participants welcomed the presence of representatives of France, New Zealand and the United States at the seminar, but expressed disappointment that the United Kingdom was not present. They considered cooperation from the administering Powers to be imperative, and recommended that the Special Committee, the administering Powers and NSGTs engage in constructive discussions and ways to expedite the implementation of the goals of the Second International Decade and its plan of action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/63/408], adopted resolution 63/110 by recorded vote (177-3-1) [agenda item 37].

Reconfirming the need to take measures to eliminate colonialism by 2010, as called for in its resolution 55/146,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the eradication of colonialism, as well as racial discrimination and violations of basic human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

In a February report [A/63/61] the Secretary-General stated that he had brought General Assembly resolution 62/114 [YUN 2007, p. 613] to the attention of the specialized agencies and other international institutions associated with the United Nations and invited them to submit information regarding their implementation activities in support of NSGTs. Three agencies and one regional association indicated that they were not currently conducting any assistance programmes in NSGTs.

Visiting Missions

In May [A/63/23], the Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of sending visiting missions to NSGTs. It adopted a resolution in which it stressed the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to facilitate the full implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization, and called on administering Powers to receive those missions in the Territories under their administration. It also requested the administering Powers to cooperate with the Special Committee in exploring the possibility of undertaking visiting or special missions in furtherance of the decolonization mandate of the General Assembly. The Committee Chair was asked to consult with the administering Powers concerned and report on the results.

In June, the Special Committee recommended to the General Assembly for adoption draft resolutions on 11 small NSGTs (see p. 677) and on Tokelau (see p. 675), endorsing a number of conclusions and recommendations concerning the sending of visiting and special missions to those Territories.

Puerto Rico

In accordance with the Special Committee's 2007 resolution concerning the self-determination and independence of Puerto Rico [YUN 2007, p. 620], the Committee's Rapporteur, in March [A/AC.109/2008/L.3], provided information on Puerto Rico, including recent political, military and economic developments and UN action.

Following its usual practice, the Committee [A/63/23] acceded to requests for hearings from representatives of a number of organizations, which presented their views on 9 June [A/AC.109/2008/SR.4,5]. The Committee adopted a resolution by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence; urged the United States to return the occupied land and installations on Vieques Island and in Ceiba to the people of Puerto Rico and to respect fundamental human rights, such as the right to health and economic development; and requested the General Assembly to consider the question of Puerto Rico. The Rapporteur was requested to report in 2009 on the resolution's implementation.

Territories under review

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee on decolonization, in considering the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on 12 June [A/63/23], had before it a Secretariat working paper on the Territory [A/AC.109/2008/13] that addressed constitutional and political developments, mine clearance, economic and social conditions and participation in international organizations and arrangements. The Committee heard two representatives of the Territory and two petitioners [A/AC.109/2008/SR.7], and adopted a resolution requesting Argentina and the United Kingdom to consolidate the process of dialogue and cooperation by resuming negotiations to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the Territory as soon as possible.

Argentina, in a 3 January letter to the Secretary-General [A/62/639], recalled its objective of recovering full sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands and surrounding maritime areas in accordance with the principles of international law. On the understanding that cooperation on practical aspects of the dispute would help create a climate favourable to the resumption of negotiations, Argentina had reached bilateral understandings with the United Kingdom. However, Argentina considered the United Kingdom's readiness to take unilateral actions concerning the Territory, and its refusal to address the question of sovereignty, to be unjustified and contrary to bilateral cooperation. It suggested that both countries jointly analyse all the bilateral understandings in light of their goals, and reiterated its permanent willingness to resume bilateral negotiations with a view to settling the sovereignty dispute.

In a 16 January response [A/62/660], the United Kingdom stated that it had no doubt about its sovereignty over the Falkland Islands, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands and their surrounding maritime areas, and rejected Argentina's claim to sovereignty. It said that its position was underlined by the principle of self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, and no negotiation on the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands was warranted unless and until such time as the Territory's inhabitants so wished. Additionally, the United Kingdom believed that there were opportunities for cooperation in the South Atlantic under the sovereignty formula established in the United Kingdom-Argentina Joint Statement of 19 October 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 766], which would benefit both parties. A number of proposals had been made, and the United Kingdom remained interested in fostering a constructive relationship with Argentina.

On 10 April [A/HRC/8/G/1], Argentina transmitted to the President of the Human Rights Council a letter in which it rejected sections of a national report of the United Kingdom [A/HRC/WG.6/1/GBR/1], because the Falkland Islands, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands were designated therein as "Overseas Territories". It reiterated the fact that, as an integral part of Argentine national territory, the Malvinas Islands, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands were illegally occupied by the United Kingdom and formed the subject of a recognized sovereignty dispute between the two countries. Argentina's aforementioned rejection extended to the United Kingdom's efforts to apply its human rights obligations and instruments to the Islands in question, noting that the illegal occupation of those Territories prevented Argentina from reporting on the application of the human rights instruments to which it was party throughout its national territory.

In a 1 July letter [A/62/900] to the Secretary-General, Argentina referred to the agenda item of the ninth meeting of the United Nations Open-ended Informal Consultative Process on Oceans and the Law of the Sea concerning progress made on the state of the marine environment. An analysis of that progress, as called for in General Assembly resolution 60/30 [YUN 2005, p. 1436], was conducted on 26 June. The result was a progress report containing a table of ocean regions, which included the "South West Atlantic Ocean" region. Argentina pointed out that the United Kingdom was listed among the coastal States for that region, inferring a reference to the Malvinas Islands, and rejected the contents of the document, particularly the authors' attempt to consider the Malvinas Islands as a possession of the United Kingdom.

In a 13 October [A/63/485] response to the Secretary-General, the United Kingdom rejected the contents of Argentina's letter and the claim that the Falkland Islands, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands were an integral part of Argentina's national territory.

Addressing the General Assembly on 23 September [A/63/PV.5], Argentina's President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner raised the Malvinas Islands question in the context of the need to face the twenty-first century without colonial enclaves. Despite the resolutions and measures taken by the Assembly to encourage negotiations between the two parties, the President stated that the United Kingdom refused to discuss it with Argentina and asked the Assembly to cooperate in urging the United Kingdom to comply with international law and demonstrate its seriousness in wishing to build a different world. In reply, the United Kingdom, in a 29 September letter [A/63/462] to the president of the Assembly, said that the Falkland Islands were not a colonial enclave and the overseas territories of the United Kingdom were British for as long as they wanted to remain British. Accordingly, the people of the Falkland Islands had chosen to retain their link with the United Kingdom and did not wish for any change in their status, as expressed by the democratically elected representatives of the Islands when they visited the United Nations for the Special

A 10 November letter [A/63/542] from Argentina to the Secretary-General contained a note to the United Kingdom and a press release, both dated 6 November. The contents referred to a unilateral act performed by the United Kingdom whereby it claimed to have adopted a new constitution for the Malvinas Islands. Argentina protested against that act in relation to what it called an integral part of its national territory that was subject to a sovereignty dispute. For Argentina, the act constituted an expression of disregard for the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee on decolonization calling for resumed negotiations to reach a solution to the dispute. In particular, it constituted a new violation of Assembly resolution 31/49 [YUN 1976, p. 747], which called on parties to refrain from unilateral modifications while the Islands were going through processes recommended by the Assembly resolutions. Argentina also reaffirmed its sovereignty rights over the Malvinas Islands, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands.

On 3 December [A/63/589], the United Kingdom rejected Argentina's assertion that its Falkland Islands Constitution Order 2008 was contrary to any aspect of the Joint Statements agreed between the two parties to the dispute [YUN 1989, p. 766; YUN 1990, p. 918]. The formula on sovereignty agreed to by both States was designed to enable the re-establishment of diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and Argentina, while protecting both countries' positions on the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands. The formula, as understood by the United Kingdom, would enable practical cooperation in the South Atlantic, but neither of the Joint Statements made reference to negotiations on sovereignty. Also rejected by the United Kingdom was Argentina's assertion that the Constitution Order contravened any General Assembly resolutions.

On 24 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session (decision 63/552).

Gibraltar

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of Gibraltar on 18 June [A/63/23]. Before it was a Secretariat working paper describing political developments and economic and social conditions in the Territory, and presenting the positions of the United Kingdom (the administering Power), Gibraltar and Spain concerning Gibraltar's future status [A/AC.109/2008/8 & Corr.1].

Central to the territorial dispute in 2008 was the entry into force, on 2 January 2007, of a new constitution—the Gibraltar Constitution Order 2006—approved by the people of the Territory in a 2006 referendum [YUN 2006, p. 714]. The Constitution gave Gibraltar power of self-governance, except in relation to external affairs, defence and certain aspects of policing and civil service. For nationality purposes, Gibraltar remained listed as a British Overseas Territory in the British Nationality Act of 1981, as amended by the British Overseas Territory Act 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 569]. Gibraltar and the United Kingdom, on one hand, and, on the other, Spain differed as to the significance of the new constitution for the decolonization process [YUN 2007, p. 622].

Addressing the Special Committee on decolonization on 18 June [A/AC.109/2008/SR.9], Spain reaffirmed that the question of Gibraltar involved both a sovereignty dispute and a dispute over the Territory's geographical boundaries, and that, in the case of Gibraltar, the decolonization and sovereignty disputes were inextricably linked. Spain remained committed to the Trilateral Forum for Dialogue on Gibraltar [YUN 2004, p. 606], but noted that the Forum was not for discussing sovereignty issues and that the Constitution Order 2006 could not be recognized by the United Nations as the final resolution of Gibraltar's decolonization process.

At the same meeting, Gibraltar's Chief Minister said that, according to UN doctrine and international law, decolonization could be brought about only through application of the principle of self-determination. Furthermore, and despite the statement made by Spain, no rule existed which enabled decolonization to be carried out other than by self-determination in the case of a sovereignty dispute. An appeal was made to the Special Committee to clarify whether its mandate was to promote and defend the sovereignty claim of the territorial claimant, or the rights and aspirations of its people. In that regard, the Chief Minister questioned how the Special Committee viewed Gibraltar's status in light of the dispute: if it considered Gibraltar to be pending decolonization, then it should apply the principle of self-determination; if, on the other hand, it considered it to be an occupied territory subject to a sovereignty dispute, it should delist Gibraltar, as it had no mandate to deal with such disputes. Under those circumstances, Gibraltar no longer looked to the Committee to help bring about its decolonization, and it was left with no choice than to claim its own self-determination, demonstrated by its acceptance of the new constitutional relationship with the United Kingdom. Gibraltar, too, remained committed to the Forum for Dialogue.

A Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2009/15] reported that on 2 July, a ministerial meeting of the Forum for Dialogue on Gibraltar took place in London. The parties reviewed progress in the implementation of the Cordoba Statements [YUN 2006, p. 714] and endorsed future objectives, encompassing cooperation on the environment; maritime communications; judicial, customs and police cooperation; financial services and taxation; and visa-related issues and education. The Forum met again in Gibraltar from 29 to 31 October at the non-ministerial level and worked on drafting documents with objectives for cooperation in the areas mentioned above.

Speaking before the Fourth Committee on 7 October [A/C.4/63/SR.3], Spain reiterated that, as recognized by UN resolutions, the colonial status of Gibraltar violated the UN Charter because it undermined Spain's territorial integrity. In the case of Gibraltar, it was also General Assembly doctrine that decolonization could occur only after the sovereignty issues were resolved. With reference to the Brussels Process [YUN 1984, p. 1075], Spain said that it had repeatedly expressed its willingness to resume negotiations, but no bilateral meeting had taken place since 2002. It did not accept the United Kingdom's claims that its 2006 constitutional decree towards Gibraltar had made the fulfilment of earlier UN resolutions moot, and that it was justified in not resuming negotiations because it had committed to the people of Gibraltar not to reach understandings on sovereignty without their consent. In view of the sovereignty dispute, the related issue of Spain's territorial integrity and the UN position that Gibraltar's decolonization could only result from bilateral negotiations between Spain and the United Kingdom, the principle of self-determination did not apply in the case of Gibraltar.

At the same meeting, Gibraltar's Chief Minister asserted that the question of Gibraltar was no longer a question of decolonization, as that was settled by means of the new constitution approved in a referendum of self-determination. Gibraltar's decolonization model was different from that chosen by most colonial territories in the past, namely sovereign independence. It had opted for the best model for itself. Gibraltar considered itself a victim of the Special Committee's application of the "invented doctrine" that in case of a sovereignty dispute affecting a Territory, the principle of self-determination did not apply to the decolonization process, and that the supposed national integrity of a claimant country was an acceptable decolonization consideration, regardless of the wishes of the colonial people. The Special Committee was not mandated to deal with sovereignty disputes, so Gibraltar had broken ties with the Committee and acted alone to achieve decolonization. The Assembly was therefore urged to remove Gibraltar from its list of NSGTS.

At the same meeting, the United Kingdom regretted that the Special Committee's outdated approach did not allow for the acceptance of the 2006 Constitution by Gibraltar to be recognized. The criteria used by the Committee to determine whether an NSGT should be delisted failed to take into account the modernized relationship between the United Kingdom and Gibraltar, non-colonial in nature. The Constitution confirmed the right to self-determination of the Gibraltarian people, and the United Kingdom retained its international responsibility for Gibraltar, in accord with the wishes of its people. The United Kingdom did not accept that the principle of territorial integrity had ever been applicable to Gibraltar's decolonization, or that the existence of a sovereignty dispute implied that its people did not have the right to self-determination. It reaffirmed its commitment to never enter into arrangements under which Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another State against its wishes, and welcomed the continued progress of the trilateral process of dialogue.

By decision 63/525 of 5 December, the General Assembly urged Spain and the United Kingdom to reach, in the spirit of the 27 November 1984 statement on Gibraltar [YUN 1984, p. 1075], a definitive solution to the question of Gibraltar, in the light of the relevant Assembly resolutions and applicable principles, and in the spirit of the UN Charter. It also welcomed the successful implementation of the first package of measures concluded at the Forum for Dialogue on Gibraltar [YUN 2006, p. 714] and the will to reach new agreements by July 2009.

New Caledonia

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of New Caledonia on 23 June [A/63/23]. Before it was a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2008/9] describing the political and socio-economic conditions and developments in the Territory.

The working paper noted that New Caledonia's political and administrative structures had been fundamentally altered by the 1998 Nouméa Accord on the future status of the Territory, signed in 1998 by France (the administering Power), the pro-independence coalition Front de libération national kanak socialiste (FLNKS) and the integrationist Rassemblement pour la Calédonie dans la République (RPCR) [YUN 1998, p. 574]. For 25 years, the party system of the Territory was dominated by the anti-independence RPCR, since renamed Rassemblement-Union progressiste mélanésienne (UMP). That dominance ended prior to the Caledonian elections of May 2004 with the emergence of a new party, l'Avenir Ensemble (AE), seen as more supportive of the Nouméa Accord. An addition to the political scene came with the 2007 launch, by the Union for Kanak and Exploited Workers, of a new Labour Party [YUN 2007, p. 623], a pro-independence party focusing on the complete application of the Nouméa Accord, particularly regarding the rights of the indigenous people.

As noted in a later Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2009/9], all those parties experienced tensions and internal divisions, heightened in advance or as a result of Territorial elections. The AE candidates' failure to win seats in the June 2007 elections for the French National Assembly [YUN 2007, p. 623] was a divisive factor for that party, which consequently split in two in October 2008.

Following a meeting of the signatories to the Nouméa Accord in December 2007, a statement was issued by the French Prime Minister indicating that the transfer to New Caledonia of the next set of powers was foreseen for 2009. In preparation, 13 working groups were established, one for each power to be transferred. A task force to help New Caledonia's working groups prepare for the transfer was established on 20 February 2008 under the auspices of the High Commissioner, representing France in the Territory. At the seventh meeting of the Committee of Signatories in Paris on 15 December, an agreement was reached on the 2009 transfer of powers.

While on official travel to New Caledonia in May and November 2008, the new French Secretary of State for Overseas, Yves Jégo, appointed in March, reaffirmed France's commitment to implementation of the Nouméa Accord; however, his message and the State's impartial action in the Territory did not reassure the New Caledonian political parties. At a 9 October meeting of the Fourth Committee, representatives of the Kanak people and of FLNKS [A/C.4/63/SR.5] indicated that despite French promises in conjunction with both the Matignon [YUN 1988, p. 742] and Nouméa Accords, the administering Power was not upholding its commitments, and Kanaks remained economically and professionally marginalized, especially in key sectors of society. Attention was drawn to the increasing immigration to the Territory from France and the need for a bill to restrict the right of immigrants to work; the continuing pillage of New Caledonian natural resources; the decision by the French President to regroup military forces in the Pacific in New Caledonia; and the insufficient support for a land tenure agency enabling Kanaks to buy property in suburban areas. As a result, the decolonization process was stalled and France was preventing New Caledonia from achieving sovereignty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/63/408], adopted resolution 63/106 without vote [agenda item 37].

Tokelau

On 23 June, the Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of Tokelau (the three small atolls of Nukunonu, Fakaofu and Atafu in the South Pacific), administered by New Zealand [A/63/23]. Before it was a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2008/1] covering constitutional and political developments, external relations and economic and social conditions in the Territory, and presenting the positions of New Zealand and Tokelau on the Territory's future status.

A later Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2009/2] reported on progress in Tokelau's decolonization process in light of referendums on self-determination in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 717] and 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 625]. The so-called referendum package, or self-determination package, which consisted of the draft treaty and constitution approved by the General Fono (Tokelau's national representative body) in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 675], formed the basis for the referendums, which took place, in the presence of UN monitoring missions, on the three atolls and in Samoa (the nearest sizeable neighbour to Tokelau) for eligible Tokelauans based there. However, neither referendum produced enough votes in favour to reach the legal threshold for acceptance of the package, and the status of Tokelau as an NSGT remained unchanged. Following the 2007 referendum, the General Fono referred the question on Tokelau's way forward to the Taupulega (the Council of Elders), requested New Zealand to leave the self-determination package on the table and decided that there would be a report, taking into account the views of New Zealand, from the Council of Ongoing Government, which met in the margins of the General Fono and was composed of three Faipule and three Pulenuku (representatives and mayors of each village/atoll, respectively). New Zealand recognized that, on the matter of decolonization, it was Tokelau's decision about how to proceed, and suggested that it might be helpful if several years were allowed to elapse before holding another referendum. The Council of Ongoing Government noted that Tokelau could change the two-thirds majority threshold for the referendum, but should implement measures to ensure that a threshold was supported by a clear majority in each of Tokelau's three villages to guarantee unity. It also noted Tokelau's commitment to self-determination and wish to have a constitution not encompassing the free association self-government provisions, and it therefore directed its legal advisors to make the required amendments.

Addressing the Special Committee on 23 June [A/AC.109/2008/SR.11], Pio Tuia, the Ulu-o-Tokelau (titular head of the Territory, a position rotated annually among the three Faipule), indicated that the General Fono had agreed that a period of reflection was needed. Tokelau remained committed to achieving self-government and, with the assistance of New Zealand, it was directing resources towards the priority areas it had identified. He said that Tokelau, being extremely vulnerable to the effects of climate change, was working on an energy policy that would allow the small atolls to operate on renewable energy, and appealed to the Committee to consider global warming, climate change and rising sea levels as important development concerns regarding Tokelau, and to convey that concern to the General Assembly's sixty-third (2008) session.

Speaking before the Fourth Committee on 10 October [A/C.4/63/SR.6], New Zealand confirmed that it understood the approach of Tokelau in deciding to focus on enhancing core services on the atolls rather than moving to a third referendum. The right to self-determination was fundamental and deserved full support, but needed to be accompanied by opportunities for the development of the full needs of the peoples who sought to exercise that right, and New Zealand was committed to providing those opportunities for the people of Tokelau.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/63/408], adopted resolution 63/107 [agenda item 37].

Question of Tokelau

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Tokelau,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to Tokelau,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Non-Self-Governing Territories, in particular General Assembly resolution 62/121 of 17 December 2007,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary co-operation of New Zealand as the administering Power with regard to the work of the Special Committee relating to Tokelau and its readiness to permit access by United Nations visiting missions to the Territory,

Also noting with appreciation the collaborative contribution to the development of Tokelau by New Zealand and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Recalling the inauguration in 1996 of a national legislative body, the General Fono, based on village elections by universal adult suffrage and the assumption by that body in June 2003 of full responsibility for the Tokelau budget,

Noting that, as a small island Territory, Tokelau exemplifies the situation of most remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories and that, as a case study pointing to successful cooperation for decolonization, Tokelau has wider significance for the United Nations as it seeks to complete its work in decolonization,

Recalling that New Zealand and Tokelau signed in November 2003 a document entitled "Joint statement of the principles of partnership", which sets out in writing, for the first time, the rights and obligations of the two partner countries,

Bearing in mind the decision of the General Fono at its meeting in November 2003, following extensive consultations undertaken in all three villages, to explore formally with New Zealand the option of self-government in free association and its decision in August 2005 to hold a referendum on self-government on the basis of a draft constitution for Tokelau and a treaty of free association with New Zealand,

1. Notes that Tokelau and New Zealand remain firmly committed to the ongoing development of Tokelau for the long-term benefit of the people of Tokelau, with particular emphasis on the further development of facilities on each atoll that meet their current requirements;

2. Notes also the ongoing recognition by New Zealand of the complete right of the people of Tokelau to undertake the act of self-determination when this is considered by the people of Tokelau to be appropriate;

3. Welcomes the substantial progress made towards the devolution of power to the three taupulega (village councils), in particular the delegation of the Administrator's powers to the three taupulega with effect from 1 July 2004 and the assumption by each taupulega from that date of full responsibility for the management of all its public services;

4. Recalls the decision of the General Fono in November 2003, following extensive consultations in all three villages and a meeting of the Special Committee on the Constitution of Tokelau, to explore formally with New Zealand the option of self-government in free association, and the discussions subsequently held between Tokelau and New Zealand pursuant to the decision of the General Fono;

5. Recalls also the decision of the General Fono in August 2005 to hold a referendum on self-government on the basis of a draft constitution for Tokelau and a treaty of free association with New Zealand, and notes the enactment by the General Fono of rules for the referendum;

6. Acknowledges Tokelau's initiative in devising a strategic economic development plan for the period 2007–2010;

7. Also acknowledges the ongoing and consistent commitment of New Zealand to meeting the social and economic requirements of the people of Tokelau, as well as the support and cooperation of the United Nations Development Programme;

8. Further acknowledges Tokelau's need for continued support from the international community;

9. Recalls with satisfaction the establishment and operation of the Tokelau International Trust Fund to support the future development needs of Tokelau, and calls upon Member States and international and regional agencies to contribute to the Fund and thereby lend practical support to assist this emerging country in overcoming the problems of smallness, isolation and lack of resources;

10. Welcomes the assurance of the Government of New Zealand that it will meet its obligations to the United Nations with respect to Tokelau and abide by the freely expressed wishes of the people of Tokelau with regard to their future status;

11. Also welcomes the cooperative attitude of the other States and territories in the region towards Tokelau, and their support for its economic and political aspirations and its increasing participation in regional and international affairs;

12. Calls upon the administering Power and United Nations agencies to continue to provide assistance to Tokelau as it further develops;

13. Welcomes the actions taken by the administering Power to transmit information regarding the political, economic and social situation of Tokelau to the Secretary-General;

14. Notes with appreciation the considerable progress made in the negotiation of a draft constitution by New Zealand and Tokelau, as well as the decisions on proposed national symbols by Tokelau, and the steps taken by Tokelau and New Zealand to agree to a draft treaty of free association as a basis for an act of self-determination;

15. Notes that a referendum to determine the future status of Tokelau held in February 2006 failed to produce the two-thirds majority of the valid votes cast required by the General Fono to change Tokelau's status from that of a Non-Self-Governing Territory under the administration of New Zealand;

16. Also notes the subsequent decision of the General Fono to conduct a further referendum to determine the future status of Tokelau from 20 to 24 October 2007;

17. Commends the professional and transparent conduct of both the February 2006 and the October 2007 referendums, monitored by the United Nations;

18. Notes that the October 2007 referendum also did not produce the two-thirds majority of the valid votes cast required by the General Fono to change the status of Tokelau from that of a Non-Self-Governing Territory under the administration of New Zealand to that of self-government in free association with New Zealand;

19. Acknowledges the decision of the General Fono that consideration of any future act of self-determination by Tokelau will be deferred and that New Zealand and Tokelau will devote renewed effort and attention to ensuring that essential services and infrastructure on the atolls of Tokelau are enhanced and strengthened, thereby ensuring an enhanced quality of life for the people of Tokelau;

20. Welcomes the commitment of both Tokelau and New Zealand to continue to work together in the interests of Tokelau and its people, taking into account the principle of the right to self-determination;

21. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine the question of the Non-Self-Governing Territory of Tokelau and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session.

Western Sahara

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of Western Sahara on 11 June [A/63/23]. A Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2008/14] described the Secretary-General's good offices with the parties concerned and actions taken by the General Assembly and the Security Council (see p. 319). The Committee granted a request for hearing to Ahmed Boukhari of the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguía el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente POLISARIO), who made a statement at the same meeting [A/AC.109/2008/SR.6].

The Special Committee transmitted the relevant documentation to the Assembly's sixty-third (2008) session to facilitate the Fourth Committee's consideration of the question. The Secretary-General's report [A/63/131] was submitted to the Assembly in July.

By resolution 63/105 of 5 December (see p. 322), the Assembly supported the process of negotiations initiated by the Council in 2007, with a view to achieving a political solution which would provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara; commended the efforts by the Secretary-General and his Personal Envoy in that respect; and requested the Special Committee to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara.

Island Territories

On 11 June, the Special Committee on decolonization [A/63/23] considered working papers on American Samoa [A/AC.109/2008/3], Anguilla [A/AC.109/2008/7], Bermuda [A/AC.109/2008/10 & Corr.1], the British Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2008/2], the Cayman Islands [A/AC.109/2008/11], Guam [A/AC.109/2008/15], Montserrat [A/AC.109/2008/16], Pitcairn [A/AC.109/2008/4], Saint Helena [A/AC.109/2008/6], the Turks and Caicos Islands [A/AC.109/2008/12] and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2008/17] that described political developments and economic and social conditions in each of those 11 island Territories. It also heard statements from two petitioners, one addressing the question of Guam and the other the question of the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2008/SR.6]. The Committee approved a two-part consolidated draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly (see below).

At its 7 October meeting [A/C.4/63/SR.3] the Fourth Committee heard statements from four petitioners on the question of Guam and one petitioner on the question of the United States Virgin Islands.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/63/408], adopted resolutions 63/108 A and B without vote [agenda item 37].

Question of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, Saint Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands

A

General

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of the Non-Self-Governing Territories of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, Saint Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter referred to as "the Territories",

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recognizing that all available options for self-determination of the Territories are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned and in conformity with the clearly defined principles contained in General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV), containing the principles that should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing concern that more than forty-seven years after the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, there still remain a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Conscious of the importance of continuing effective implementation of the Declaration, taking into account the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by 2010 and the plan of action for the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Recognizing that the specific characteristics and the aspirations of the peoples of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options of self-determination, without any prejudice to territorial size, geographical location, size of population or natural resources,

Noting the stated position of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the stated position of the Government of the United States of America on the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration,

Noting also the stated positions of the representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories before the Special Committee and in its regional seminars,

Noting further the constitutional developments in some Non-Self-Governing Territories affecting the internal structure of governance about which the Special Committee has received information,

Aware of the importance both to the Territories and to the Special Committee of the participation of elected and appointed representatives of the Territories in the work of the Special Committee,

Convinced that the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories should continue to guide the development of their future political status and that referendums, free and fair elections and other forms of popular consultation play an important role in ascertaining the wishes and aspirations of the people,

Convinced also that any negotiations to determine the status of a Territory must take place with the active involvement and participation of the people of that Territory, under the aegis of the United Nations, on a case-by-case basis, and that the views of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in respect of their right to self-determination should be ascertained,

Noting that a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories have expressed concern at the procedure followed by some administering Powers, contrary to the wishes of the Territories themselves, of amending or enacting legislation for application to the Territories, either through Orders in Council, in order to apply to the Territories the international treaty obligations of the administering Power, or through the unilateral application of laws and regulations,

Aware of the importance of the international financial services sector for the economies of some of the Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting the continued cooperation of the Non-Self-Governing Territories at the local and regional levels, including participation in the work of regional organizations,

Mindful that United Nations visiting and special missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, that some Territories have not received a United Nations visiting mission for a long time and that no visiting missions have been sent to some of the Territories, and considering the possibility of sending further visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers,

Mindful also that, in order for the Special Committee to enhance its understanding of the political status of the peoples of the Territories and to fulfil its mandate effectively, it is important for it to be apprised by the administering Powers and to receive information from other appropriate sources, including the representatives of the Territories, concerning the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories,

Recognizing the need for the Special Committee to ensure that the appropriate bodies of the United Nations actively pursue a public awareness campaign aimed at assisting the peoples of the Territories in gaining a better understanding of the options of self-determination,

Mindful, in this connection, that the holding of regional seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions and at Headquarters, with the active participation of representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, provides a helpful means for the Special Committee to fulfil its mandate, and that the regional nature of the seminars, which alternate between the Caribbean and the Pacific, is a crucial element in the context of a United Nations programme for ascertaining the political status of the Territories,

Mindful also that the 2008 Pacific regional seminar was held in Bandung, Indonesia, from 14 to 16 May,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation, and, in this connection, bearing in mind the applicability to the Territories of the programmes of action of all United Nations world conferences and special sessions of the General Assembly in the economic and social sphere,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the development of some Territories by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, as well as regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank, the Caribbean Community, the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, the Pacific Islands Forum and the agencies of the Council of Regional Organizations in the Pacific,

Aware that the Human Rights Committee, as part of its mandate under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, reviews the status of the self-determination process, including in small island Territories under examination by the Special Committee,

Recalling the ongoing efforts of the Special Committee in carrying out a critical review of its work with the aim of making appropriate and constructive recommendations and decisions to attain its objectives in accordance with its mandate,

Recognizing that the annual background working papers prepared by the Secretariat on developments in each of the small Territories, as well as the substantive documentation and information furnished by experts, scholars, non-governmental organizations and other sources, have provided important inputs to update the present resolution,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of the Territories to self-determination, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

2. Also reaffirms that, in the process of decolonization, there is no alternative to the principle of self-determination, which is also a fundamental human right, as recognized under the relevant human rights conventions;

3. Further reaffirms that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and in that connection reiterates its long-standing call for the administering Powers, in co-operation with the territorial Governments and appropriate bodies of the United Nations system, to develop political education programmes for the Territories in order to foster an awareness among the people of their right to self-determination in conformity with the legitimate political status options, based on the principles clearly defined in General Assembly resolution 1541(XV) and other relevant resolutions and decisions;

4. Requests the administering Powers to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter;

5. Stresses the importance of the Special Committee being apprised of the views and wishes of the peoples of the Territories and enhancing its understanding of their conditions, including the nature and scope of the existing political and constitutional arrangements between the Non-Self-Governing Territories and their respective administering Powers;

6. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of the Territories, and recommends that priority continue to be given, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, to the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

7. Requests the Territories and the administering Powers to take all measures necessary to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories against any degradation, and once again requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in the Territories and to provide assistance to those Territories, consistent with their prevailing rules of procedure;

8. Welcomes the participation of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in regional activities, including the work of regional organizations;

9. Stresses the importance of implementing the plan of action for the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, in particular by expediting the application of the work programme for the decolonization of each Non-Self-Governing Territory, on a case-by-case basis, as well as by ensuring that periodic analyses are undertaken of the progress and extent of the implementation of the Declaration in each Territory, and that the working papers prepared by the Secretariat on each Territory should fully reflect developments in those Territories;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers to participate in and cooperate fully with the work of the Special Committee in order to implement the provisions of Article 73 e of the Charter and the Declaration, and in order to advise the Special Committee on the implementation of provisions under Article 73 b of the Charter on efforts to promote self-government in the Territories, and encourages the administering Powers to facilitate visiting and special missions to the Territories;

11. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to usher in a world free of colonialism within the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee in its endeavours towards that noble goal;

12. Stresses the importance of the constitutional reviews in the respective Territories administered by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, and led by the territorial Governments, designed to address internal constitutional structures within the present territorial arrangements, and decides to follow closely the developments concerning the future political status of those Territories;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session on the implementation of decolonization resolutions adopted since the declaration of the First and Second International Decades for the Eradication of Colonialism;

14. Reiterates its request that the Human Rights Committee collaborate with the Special Committee, within the framework of its mandate on the right to self-determination as contained in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with the aim of exchanging information, given that the Human Rights Committee is mandated to review the situation, including political and constitutional developments, in many of the Non-Self-Governing Territories that are within the purview of the Special Committee;

15. Requests the Special Committee to collaborate with the Economic and Social Council and its relevant subsidiary intergovernmental bodies, within the framework of their respective mandates, with the aim of exchanging information on developments in those Non-Self-Governing Territories which are reviewed by those bodies;

16. Also requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session and on the implementation of the present resolution.

Noting, in that regard, the information contained in the paper provided by the Chairman of the Future Political Status Study Commission and distributed at the 2008 Pacific regional seminar requesting the Special Committee to review the Territory's status as a Non-Self-Governing Territory, with a view to accepting the Territory's future political status once chosen by its people,

1. Stresses the importance of the 2005 report of the Bermuda Independence Commission, which provides a thorough examination of the facts surrounding independence, and regrets that the plans for public meetings and the presentation of a Green Paper to the House of Assembly followed by a White Paper outlining the policy proposals for an independent Bermuda have so far not materialized;

Other territorial issues

Province of West Papua (Indonesia)

On 29 September, Indonesia transmitted to the General Assembly a note verbale [A/63/491] that contained a statement in reply to remarks made by the President of Vanuatu, Kalkot Matas Kelekele, to the Assembly on 26 September [A/63/PV.11].

In his remarks, the President of Vanuatu recalled the UN Millennium Summit address of the then-Prime Minister of Vanuatu, who, speaking as Chairman of the Melanesian Spearhead Group of countries, called on the United Nations to review the legality of its 1962 action to endorse the New York Agreement between Indonesia and the Netherlands that allowed for administration of the Act of Free Choice [YUN 1962, p. 124] regarding West Papua—then called West New Guinea (West Irian). The President noted that the UN Charter espoused the principles that guided UN efforts in the process of self-determination, and stated that democracy could not be championed if the United Nations continued to hang a blanket of silence over the case of West Papua.

In its reply, Indonesia said it was disturbed by the suggestion that the legality of Indonesia's sovereignty over Papua was questionable. The reintegration of West Papua into Indonesia took place when the 1969 Act of Free Choice was carried out as part of the 1962 New York Agreement, which was a solution to the conflict between Indonesia and the Netherlands because of the latter's recalcitrance to return West Papua to the former. In 1969, with the adoption of resolution 2504(XXIV) [YUN 1969, p. 179], the Assembly endorsed that solution, which was therefore valid, legal and final. The attempt to reopen the question of the legality of Indonesia's sovereignty over Papua was an irrelevant initiative that would serve the interests of secessionists and ran counter to the purposes and principles of the UN Charter.

Peaceful uses of outer space

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on Outer Space), at its fifty-first session (Vienna, 11–20 June) [A/63/20], discussed ways and means to maintain outer space for peaceful purposes; the spin-off benefits of space technology; space and society; and space and water. It also considered the implementation of the recommendations of the Third (1999) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) [YUN 1999, p. 556] and reviewed the work of its two subcommittees, one dealing with scientific and technical issues and the other with legal questions. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/217 [YUN 2007, p. 634], the Committee also considered international cooperation in promoting the use of space-derived geospatial data for sustainable development, and heard expert presentations on experiences in establishing infrastructure for data collection, processing and application.

Implementation of UNISPACE III recommendations

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/217 [YUN 2007, p. 634], the Committee on Outer Space considered the implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE III [YUN 1999, p. 556]. It agreed that they were being implemented effectively through the use of multi-year workplans, the establishment of actions teams and task forces, and reports from ad hoc and other groups. Member States were contributing to the implementation through regional and national activities, including by supporting and participating in work related to the 10-Year Implementation Plan of the Global Earth Observation System of Systems (GEOSS).

The Committee welcomed the established link between its work on UNISPACE III and the work conducted by the Commission on Sustainable Development, and noted that a report [A/AC.105/892] on the Committee's contribution to the Commission's work for the thematic cluster 2008–2009 circulated at the Commission's sixteenth (2008) session. It also noted that the important role of space technology applications in sustainable development was mentioned by the Secretary-General in his report on the review of implementation of Agenda 21 and the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation: drought [E/CN.17/2008/6]. The Committee agreed upon the plan for its contribution to the Commission's work for the thematic cluster 2010–2011 [A/AC.105/2008/CRP.3]. Its contribution should examine the areas in which space technology and its applications played an important role; pay attention to the cross-cutting issues identified by the Commission; and identify areas where space-based systems could complement terrestrial systems. It also agreed that the Director of the Division for Sustainable Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs should continue to be invited to participate in the Committee's sessions to advise on how it could best contribute to the work of the Commission. Likewise, the Director of the United Nations Office for Outer Space Affairs should attend the Commission's sessions to raise awareness and promote the benefits of space science and technology, particularly in the areas addressed by the Commission. The Committee requested the Secretariat to organize a panel discussion on space applications and food security, to be held in the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly at its sixty-third (2008) session, when it considered international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space.

The Committee noted that, in accordance with Assembly resolution 62/217, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee convened the Working Group of the Whole to consider the implementation of the UNISPACE III recommendations; and it agreed that the Working Group should focus on implementation of three actions called for in the Plan of Action: maximizing the benefits of space for disaster management; maximizing the benefits of the use and applications of Global Navigation Satellite Systems (GNSS) to support sustainable development; and enhancing capacity-building in space-related activities.

Scientific and Technical Subcommittee

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on Outer Space, at its forty-fifth session (Vienna, 11–22 February) [A/AC.105/911], considered the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the implementation of the UNISPACE III recommendations. It also dealt with matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellite, including applications for developing countries and monitoring of the Earth's environment; space debris; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; near-Earth objects; recent developments in GNSS; space-system-based disaster management support; the examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization and applications; and the International Heliophysical Year 2007.

UN Programme on Space Applications

The United Nations Programme on Space Applications, as mandated by General Assembly resolution 37/90 [YUN 1982, p. 163], continued to promote the use of space technologies and data for sustainable economic and social development in developing countries by providing long-term training fellowships, training programmes and seminars, and technical advisory services in capacity-building and regional cooperation. The Programme increased the awareness of knowledge-based themes in space science, law and exploration through multi-year workplans and projects, and by convening outreach events and workshops.

The United Nations Expert on Space Applications [A/AC.105/925] said that the Programme continued to provide support for education and training for capacity-building in developing countries through regional centres for space science and technology education, which were affiliated with the United Nations Office for Outer Space Affairs. The goal of the regional centres—located in Morocco and Nigeria for the African region, India for Asia and the Pacific, and Brazil and Mexico for Latin America and the Caribbean—remained to develop an indigenous capability for research and applications in remote sensing and geographic information systems; satellite communications; satellite meteorology and global climate; and space and atmospheric science. Education curricula for those disciplines had been developed through expert meetings held under the Programme, and two further model curricula were being developed in the areas of GNSS and space law. At its third meeting (Pasadena, United States, 8–12 December), the International Committee on GNSS (ICG) decided that the centres would act as ICG information centres. The Office for Outer Space Affairs was carrying out preparatory work to hold the fourth UN expert meeting on the regional centres in 2010. Activities conducted by the Office within the frame of the ICG workplan included: session on ionospheric storms and space weather effects during the twelfth International Symposium on Equatorial Aeronomy (Heraklion, Greece, 18–24 May); International Training Course on Satellite Navigation and Location-Based Services (Ahmedabad, India, 18 June–18 July); and ICG expert meeting on GNSS and services (Montreal, Canada, 15 July). The United Nations/Colombia/United States of America Workshop on Applications of GNSS (Medellin, Colombia, 23–27 June) addressed the use of GNSS applications for precision farming, food security, climate change, land use, forestry, agriculture, tele-health and e-learning.

Several other meetings promoting the use of and access to space-based technologies and information were convened throughout the year. With regard to integrated space technology applications, the United Nations/Saudi Arabia/United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization International Conference on the Use of Space Technology for Water Management (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 12–16 April) explored space technology applications providing solutions for water resources management and mitigating water-related emergencies; the United Nations/Indonesia Regional Workshop on Applications of Integrated Space Technology in Water Resources Management, Environmental Protection and Disaster Vulnerability Mitigation (Jakarta, Indonesia, 7–11 July) addressed initiatives in the areas of water resources management, use of space technologies in environmental-related emergencies, natural hazards and climate change; and the United Nations/Kenya/European Space Agency (ESA) Regional Workshop on the Use of Integrated Space Technology Applications in Monitoring the Impact of Climate Change on Agricultural Development and Food Security (Nairobi, Kenya, 1–5 December) addressed monitoring of climate-related disasters and environmental hazards, and improvement of regional food security.

As to tele-health and tele-education, the United Nations/Burkina Faso/World Health Organization/ESA/Centre national d'études spatiales Workshop on the Use of Space Technology in Tele-health to Benefit Africa (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 5–9 May) examined tele-health practices and development in Africa; and the United Nations/India/ESA Regional Workshop on the Use of Space Technology in Tele-epidemiology to Benefit Asia and the Pacific (Lucknow, India, 21–24 October) focused on the use of space technology for public health surveillance and tropical diseases health care. Meetings on space application for sustainable development included the United Nations/Austria/ESA Symposium on Space Tools and Solutions for Monitoring the Atmosphere and Land Cover (Graz, Austria, 9–12 September); and the United Nations/International Astronautical Federation Workshop on Space Technology Support for an Integrated Approach to Address Potential Environmental Hazards (Glasgow, United Kingdom, 26–27 September). Other meetings included the Fourth United Nations/ESA/National Aeronautics and Space Administration/Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency Workshop on the International Heliophysical Year 2007 and Basic Space Science (Sozopol, Bulgaria, 2–6 June); and the United Nations/International Academy of Astronautics Workshop on Small Satellites in the Service of Developing Countries (Glasgow, 30 September).

Following consideration of the report of the Expert on Space Applications [A/AC.105/900] describing 2007 activities, those scheduled for 2008 and activities of UN-affiliated regional centres for space science and technology education scheduled for 2007–2009, the Subcommittee expressed concern over the Programme's limited financial resources and appealed to Member States for voluntary contributions.

The General Assembly, in resolution 63/90 (see p. 684), endorsed the Programme on Space Applications for 2009 as proposed by the Expert.

Cooperation

The Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities, at its twenty-eighth session (Geneva, 16–18 January) [A/AC.105/909], discussed the coordination of plans and programmes in the practical application of space technology and related areas; space-related outcomes of the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821]; implementation of UNISPACE III recommendations; use by the UN system of the International Charter on Space and Major Disasters, to which the Office for Outer Space Affairs became a cooperating body in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 643], and methods to increase operational collaboration in the use of space technology in emergency response; lessons learned and good practices in the use of space technologies for relief efforts and disaster reduction; participation of UN system entities in the process of the Group on Earth Observations; public-private partnerships and innovative funding approaches in the UN system to promote the use of space technology and its applications; and public outreach and information exchange to promote inter-agency cooperation.

The Meeting agreed on the importance of enhancing inter-agency cooperation and coordination and identified the following key issues: strengthening the Meeting as the UN central mechanism for coordination of space-related activities; enhancing the use of space-based assets in support of disaster management; and reinforcing the contributions made by UN entities to the UN spatial data infrastructure and to GEOSS. Representatives of participating UN entities reported on their activities and plans for 2008–2009, the details of which were included in the Secretary-General's draft report on the coordination of space-related activities within the UN system: directions and anticipated results for the 2008–2009 period [A/AC.105/910]. The report was reviewed and amended by the Meeting.

Pursuant to discussions at its 2007 session [YUN 2007, p. 639], the Meeting agreed that a report on initiatives and applications for space-related inter-agency cooperation should be prepared by the Office for Outer Space Affairs in cooperation with the Economic Commission for Africa and in consultation with other UN entities for endorsement at its 2009 session. The report should consider the use of space technology for sustainable development in Africa and should be presented to the third African Leadership Conference on Space Science and Technology for Sustainable Development in 2009.

The Office for Outer Space Affairs presented the list of space-related initiatives and programmes carried out by member States of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and within the UN system in response to recommendations contained in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation [YUN 2002, p. 821]. The usefulness of the list was reviewed by the Meeting, which noted that the Commission on Sustainable Development was the General Assembly's established mechanism for providing policy guidelines to follow up on the implementation of recommendations on sustainable development. In that context, the Meeting agreed that updating the list was a duplication of effort and should be phased out.

The Meeting noted that the International Charter on Space and Major Disasters invited UN bodies that had accessed the Charter to participate in the next meeting of its secretariat, to be hosted by the Canadian Space Agency from 15 to 17 April. The Office for Outer Space Affairs would organize the Fifth UN-wide meeting on the use of space technologies for emergency response and humanitarian assistance (Bonn, Germany, 14 October) to bring together representatives from the field.

The Office for Outer Space Affairs made a presentation on the development of the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER) programme. The Meeting took note of the programme for 2007–2009 and the workplan for 2008–2009 [YUN 2007, p. 641]. The implementation of UN-SPIDER would be supported by a network of regional support offices and national focal points, and the Office would coordinate with other UN entities in implementation of the planned activities, cooperating in particular with the secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction within the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015 [YUN 2005, p. 1016] and with UNDP in the definition of national risk reduction and disaster management plans and policies.

The Office for Outer Space Affairs briefed the Inter-Agency Meeting on the continued improvements to the website of the United Nations Coordination of Outer Space Activities and noted that the brochure "Space solutions for the world's problems: how the United Nations family uses space technology for achieving development goals", prepared by the Office, was produced in four languages and was available on that website. The Meeting decided to review the brochure at its thirtieth (2010) session.

Scientific and technical issues

In 2008, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee [A/AC.105/911] continued to emphasize the importance of Earth observation satellite data to support activities in a number of key development areas. It also noted the importance of providing, for peaceful purposes, non-discriminatory access to remote sensing data and to derived information at reasonable cost and in a timely manner, and of building capacity for the adoption and use of remote sensing technology, particularly to meet the needs of developing countries. The Subcommittee encouraged further international cooperation in the use of remote sensing satellites, in particular by sharing experiences and technologies through bilateral, regional and international collaborative projects.

For its consideration of space debris, the Subcommittee had before it a Secretariat note on national research on space debris, containing replies on the issue from five Member States and one international organization [A/AC.105/918 & Add. 1]. The Subcommittee agreed that States, in particular space-faring countries, should pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources (NPS) on board, with space debris and to other aspects of space debris, including its re-entry into the atmosphere. Research on space debris should continue, and States should make available the results of that research, including information on practices that proved effective in minimizing space debris creation. The Subcommittee noted that some States were implementing mitigation measures consistent with the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, adopted in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 640], and/or the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee, or that they had developed their own mitigation standards based on those guidelines. The view was expressed that those States most responsible for the creation of space debris and those having the capability to take action on its mitigation should make a greater contribution to mitigation efforts.

The Subcommittee considered the use of nuclear power sources in outer space under the multi-year workplan for the 2007–2010 period, adopted at its 2007 session [YUN 2007, p. 640]. It discussed progress of the Joint Expert Group of the Subcommittee and of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in the development of an international technically-based framework of goals and recommendations for the safety of NPS applications in outer space. The Subcommittee reconvened its Working Group on the Use of NPS in Outer Space and noted that the Working Group updated the draft safety framework prepared by the Joint Expert Group on the basis of comments received from States [A/AC.105/C.1/L.292 & Rev.1]. The Subcommittee endorsed the report of the Working Group, which was annexed to its report.

The Subcommittee agreed that national and international efforts to detect and track near-Earth objects should be continued and expanded. Pursuant to Assembly resolution 62/217 [YUN 2007, p. 636], it reconvened its Working Group on Near-Earth Objects. The Subcommittee endorsed the Working Group's report, which included the amended multi-year work-plan proposed for 2009–2011 and was annexed to the Subcommittee's report. The Secretariat submitted to the Subcommittee a note on research in the field of near-Earth objects carried out by Member States, international organizations and other entities, containing replies from two States and four international organizations [A/AC.105/926].

Also submitted to the Subcommittee were Secretariat notes on international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space [A/AC.105/907/Add.2 & Add.3 & A/AC.105/923], containing replies from 11 Member States on their space activities.

Space-based disaster management and emergency response

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its forty-fifth session in February [A/AC.105/911], considered the January report on activities carried out in 2007 in the framework of UN-SPIDER [A/AC.105/899], established by Assembly resolution 61/110 [YUN 2006, p. 748], and heard a statement made by the UN-SPIDER Programme Coordinator on the 2007 activities and on activities to be conducted in 2008–2009. The Subcommittee noted the progress made in the implementation of the activities for 2007, including the inauguration of the UN-SPIDER office in Bonn, Germany, and agreed that UN-SPIDER should continue coordinating its activities with other institutions and initiatives promoting the use of space-based solutions for disaster risk management and with UN specialized agencies and programmes. It also noted the significant extrabudgetary resources provided by various Member States. The Subcommittee reconvened its Working Group of the Whole and endorsed its report, which was annexed to the Subcommittee's report. The Working Group noted that the Office for Outer Space Affairs was working with China and Switzerland to ensure the openings of UN-SPIDER offices in Beijing and Geneva, respectively, and was following up on commitments from various countries and institutions towards the establishment of a network of regional support offices. It agreed that the UN-SPIDER programme should work to raise the level of extrabudgetary resources.

The Committee on Outer Space [A/63/20] acknowledged the progress made within the UN-SPIDER framework and the significant extra-budgetary resources provided by various States to support UN-SPIDER activities in 2008 and 2009, and noted the increase in the availability of space-based information and in the provision of expertise to support emergency relief efforts. The Committee agreed that UN-SPIDER should work closely with national and regional centres of expertise in the use of disaster management space technology to form a network of regional support offices for implementing the programme, and proposed guidelines for selecting and setting up the support offices.

An April report [A/AC.105/916] to the Committee considered outreach activities carried out in 2007 in the framework of UN-SPIDER.

International Heliophysical Year 2007

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee [A/AC.105/911] considered the activities conducted in conjunction with the International Heliophysical Year 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 641], in accordance with the three-year workplan adopted by the Subcommittee in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 702]. The Subcommittee welcomed the progress made by States and national and international institutions in conducting outreach, educational and research campaigns, and noted that the United Nations Basic Space Science Initiative of the Office for Outer Space Affairs continued to support the deployment in countries throughout the world, in particular in developing countries, of small instruments to provide global measurements of heliospheric phenomena.

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space [A/63/20] noted that the three-year workplan had been extended to cover four years, and recognized that the International Heliophysical Year 2007 was an international endeavour that engaged States from every region to host instrument arrays, provide scientific investigators or offer supporting space missions.

Legal Subcommittee

The Legal Subcommittee, at its forty-seventh session (Vienna, 31 March–11 April) [A/AC.105/917] considered: the status and application of the five UN treaties on outer space; information on the activities of international organizations relating to space law; matters related to the definition and delimitation of outer space and the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit; review and possible revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space; review of developments concerning the draft protocol on matters specific to space assets to the Convention on International Interests in Mobile Equipment; capacity building in space law; and exchange of information on national legislation relevant to the peaceful exploration and use of outer space.

The Subcommittee welcomed the General Assembly's adoption of resolution 62/101 [YUN 2007, p. 642] and its endorsement, in resolution 62/217 [ibid., p. 634], of the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. It expressed the view that arrangements for space debris mitigation should consider the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, and that the Committee should develop guidelines for space traffic management.

The Subcommittee appreciated the distribution by the Secretariat of a revised version of the United Nations Treaties and Principles on Outer Space and Related General Assembly Resolutions [ST/SPACE/11/Rev.2], and the distribution of an updated document containing information, as at 1 January 2008, on States parties and additional signatories to the UN treaties and other international agreements relating to outer space [ST/SPACE/11/Rev.2/Add.1]. It noted that in 2007, a number of States had concluded agreements promoting international cooperation in space activities and a number of States were developing national mechanisms for registration of space objects. The Subcommittee reconvened its Working Group on the Status and Application of the Five United Nations Treaties on Outer Space [YUN 2001, p. 570], which continued its consideration of a questionnaire on the possible options for future development of international space law and agreed that, at the Subcommittee's 2009 session, it would not discuss the list of questions in the questionnaire, but the state of international space law and possible options for its development. The Working Group had before it two Secretariat notes: one on activities carried out on the Moon and other celestial bodies, international and national rules governing those activities, and information from States parties to the 1979 Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies [YUN 1979, p. 111] about the benefits of adherence to that Agreement [A/AC.105/C.2/L.271 & Corr.1]; the other on a joint statement on the benefits of adherence to the Agreement by its States parties [A/AC.105/C.2/L.272]. The Working Group requested the Secretariat to prepare a more detailed background paper on activities on the Moon either planned or being conducted by States, and agreed that the Subcommittee, in 2009, should continue its discussion on the low rate of participation of States in the Agreement. The Subcommittee endorsed the report of the Working Group and the recommendation that its mandate be extended for one additional year.

The Subcommittee reconvened its Working Group on the Definition and Delimitation of Outer Space, which considered three Secretariat notes on: replies from Member States to the questionnaire on possible legal issues with regard to aerospace objects [A/AC.105/635/Add.16]; national legislation and practice relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space [A/AC.105/865/Add.3]; and replies from Member States to questions on the definition and delimitation of outer space [A/AC.105/889/Add.1]. It also had before it several conference room papers. The Working Group agreed to suspend the invitation to the Committee's member States to submit their preferences with regard to the replies of Member States to the questionnaire and to submit proposals on criteria for analysing the replies. It also agreed to suspend the invitation to Member States to reply to the questionnaire, and to suspend consideration of aerospace objects until new events warranted its reconsideration. The Committee's member States should still submit information on national legislation or practices in relation to the definition and/or delimitation of outer space and air space. The Subcommittee endorsed the report of the Working Group.

For its consideration of capacity-building in space law, the Subcommittee had before it a report on the 2007 United Nations Expert Meeting on Promoting Education in Space Law [A/AC.105/908] and a Secretariat note containing the updated directory of education opportunities in space law [A/AC.105/C.2/2008/CRP.3]. It agreed that capacity-building, training and education in space law were of paramount importance to international, regional and national efforts to develop space activities and increase knowledge of their legal framework, noted efforts undertaken by governmental and non-governmental organizations and UN entities, and highlighted the continued role of the Office for Outer Space Affairs in providing legal advisory services and strengthening cooperation with space law entities and organizations. The Subcommittee outlined initiatives to strengthen capacity in space law, particularly in developing countries, and recommended that member States, permanent observers of the Committee on Outer Space and the Office for Outer Space Affairs consider the initiatives and inform the Subcommittee on actions taken or planned.

For its discussion on exchange of information on national legislation relevant to the peaceful exploration and use of outer space, the Subcommittee considered a Secretariat note [A/AC.105/912] and two conference room papers [A/AC.105/C.2/2008/CRP.9 & A/AC.105/C.2/2008/CRP.14] containing information on national legislation governing space activities of Member States. The Subcommittee noted that an exchange of information would allow it to examine the main developments at the national level in order to identify common principles, norms and procedures, encouraged States to continue to submit to the Office for Outer Space Affairs the texts of laws and regulations related to space activities, and noted the important role played by regional coordination mechanisms in promoting cooperation among States. It agreed that a working group would be established at the Subcommittee's 2009 session.

The Committee on Outer Space [A/63/20] approved the Subcommittee's endorsement of the report of the Working Group on the Status and Application of the Five United Nations Treaties on Outer Space, including the recommendation that its mandate be extended by an additional year. The Committee noted the progress of the Working Group on the Definition and Delimitation of Outer Space and welcomed its decision to suspend consideration of the issue of aerospace objects until new events warranted its resumption. It also welcomed the Subcommittee's agreement to include the item of capacity-building in space law on the agenda at its 2009 session, noted its consideration of specific measures to strengthen capacity in space law and encouraged response to those initiatives by member States, permanent observers, intergovernmental organizations and the Office for Outer Space Affairs.

Effects of atomic radiation

At its fifty-sixth session (Vienna, 10–18 July) [A/63/46], the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation approved for publication five scientific annexes that had last been considered at its 2007 session [YUN 2007, p. 644]. With regard to the report with scientific annexes, approved in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 751], the Committee was disappointed that volume I had not been published until July and that volume II would not likely be published before December, and observed that such delays were traceable in part to inadequate staffing and lack of funding. On that issue, the Committee noted that the General Assembly, in resolution 62/100 [YUN 2007, p. 645], had requested the Secretary-General to take measures so that its professional secretariat could service the Committee in a sustainable manner, and to provide a report to the Assembly's 2008 session addressing the issues of financial and administrative implications of increased Committee membership, staffing of its professional secretariat and methods to ensure sufficient, assured and predictable funding.

In an October report [A/63/478], the Secretary-General considered those issues and noted that six States had declared their interest in becoming members of the Committee, which comprised scientists from 21 States. The Committee had noted that the current critical financial and resource issues should be addressed prior to reaching a decision on the membership question and had suggested flexible arrangements whereby, for reasons of efficiency, the maximum number of members would remain at about the present level. The report concluded that, in order to provide up-to-date, timely and high-quality assessments, improve dissemination of findings and ensure the technical infrastructure to support the Committee, the staffing of its secretariat should be strengthened with an additional professional post, at an estimated cost to the programme budget of $169,600 per biennium. It also estimated that, should the Committee membership be increased by six members, the additional biennial requirements would amount to $90,000.

At its July session [A/63/46], the Committee also considered reports on sources of radiation exposure, the 1986 Chernobyl accident [YUN 1986, p. 584] and effects on non-human biota. In its discussion of the strategic plan for the period 2009–2013, it identified the strategic objective of increasing awareness and deepening understanding among authorities, the scientific community and civil society on the levels of ionizing radiation and its health and environmental effects. It also established the thematic priorities of medical exposures of patients, radiation levels and effects of energy production, exposure to natural sources of radiation and improved understanding of the effects from low-dose-rate radiation exposure. For its future programme of work, the Committee decided to work on assessments of levels of radiation from energy production and the effects on human health and the environment; uncertainty in radiation risk estimation; health effects that may be attributable to radiation exposure; updating methodology for estimating exposures due to discharges from nuclear installations; a summary of radiation effects; and improving data collection, analysis and dissemination. It decided to hold its fifty-seventh session in Vienna from 25 to 29 May 2009.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/63/398], adopted resolution 63/89 without vote [agenda item 27].

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 62/100 of 17 December 2007, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the work of the Scientific Committee, and of the release of its report on its fifty-sixth session,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which mankind and the environment are exposed,

Conscious of the continuing need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on mankind and the environment, and conscious also of the increased volume, complexity and diversity of that information,

Noting the views expressed by Member States at its sixty-third session with regard to the work of the Scientific Committee,

Recalling the deep concern of the Scientific Committee expressed in the report on its fifty-sixth session that reliance on a single post at the Professional level in its secretariat had left the Committee seriously vulnerable and had hampered the efficient implementation of its approved programme of work, and noting that a solution to this concern has not yet been achieved,

Recalling also its request at its sixty-second session that the Secretary-General provide a comprehensive and consolidated report, to be prepared in consultation with the Scientific Committee as appropriate, addressing the financial and administrative implications of increased Committee membership, staffing of the professional secretariat and methods to ensure sufficient, assured and predictable funding,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past fifty-three years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation, and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Reaffirms the decision to maintain the present functions and independent role of the Scientific Committee;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the work of the Scientific Committee and of the release of its extensive report to the General Assembly, with scientific annexes, which provide the scientific and world community with the Committee's latest evaluations;

4. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important activities to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

5. Endorses the future programme of work of scientific review and assessment of the Scientific Committee on behalf of the General Assembly on assessments of levels of radiation from energy production and the effects on human health and the environment, uncertainty in radiation risk estimation, attributability of health effects due to radiation exposure, updating its methodology for estimating exposures due to discharges from nuclear installations, a summary of radiation effects and improving data collection, analysis and dissemination, notes with concern that the Committee cannot initiate work immediately on topics which make up half of the entire programme due to the lack of resources within the professional secretariat, and endorses the longer-term strategic plan of the Committee for its work, as reported to the Assembly at its sixty-third session;

6. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important questions in the field of ionizing radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session;

7. Emphasizes the need for the Scientific Committee to hold regular sessions on an annual basis so that its report can reflect the latest developments and findings in the field of ionizing radiation and thereby provide updated information for dissemination among all States;

8. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their cooperation in this field;

9. Invites the Scientific Committee to continue its consultations with scientists and experts from interested Member States in the process of preparing its future scientific reports, and requests the Secretariat to facilitate such consultations;

10. Welcomes, in this context, the readiness of Member States to provide the Scientific Committee with relevant information on the effects of ionizing radiation in affected areas, and invites the Committee to analyse and give due consideration to such information, particularly in the light of its own findings;

11. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly;

12. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

13. Urges the United Nations Environment Programme to review and strengthen the present funding of the Scientific Committee, pursuant to paragraph 14 of resolution 62/100, and to continue to seek out and consider temporary funding mechanisms to complement existing ones, and, in that context, takes note of the establishment by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme of a general trust fund to receive and manage voluntary contributions to support the work of the Committee, and encourages Member States to consider making voluntary contributions to the trust fund;

14. Takes note of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General, prepared in consultation with the Scientific Committee as appropriate, on the financial and administrative implications of increased membership of the Committee, staffing of its professional secretariat and methods to ensure sufficient, assured and predictable funding;

15. Recognizes the conclusion, outlined in paragraph 48 of the report of the Secretary-General, on the need for strengthened human resources for the professional, scientific secretariat in order to support the Scientific Committee in a more predictable and sustainable manner with a longer-term perspective, to effectively facilitate the use of the invaluable expertise offered to the Committee by its members, and to enable the Committee to discharge the responsibilities and mandate entrusted to it by the General Assembly, and emphasizes in this context that these resources are needed in any case and before Member States can agree to a change in Committee membership;

16. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating his proposed programme budget for the biennium 2010–2011, to consider all options, including the possibility of internal reallocation, to provide the Scientific Committee with the resources outlined in paragraphs 48 and 50 of the report of the Secretary-General;

17. Directs the Scientific Committee to continue its reflection on how the current, as well as a potentially revised, membership for the Scientific Committee could best support the essential work of the Committee, including by developing detailed, objective and transparent criteria to be applied equitably to present and future members alike, and to report on these efforts before the end of the sixty-third session of the General Assembly;

18. Welcomes the attendance of Belarus, Finland, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Spain and Ukraine as observers at the fifty-sixth session of the Scientific Committee, invites each of those States to designate one scientist to attend, as observers, the fifty-seventh session of the Committee, and resolves to take a decision on full membership for these countries once a decision on resource allocation has been made, pursuant to paragraph 16 above, but no later than the end of the sixty-fourth session of the General Assembly.

Information and telecommunications in international security

In response to General Assembly resolution 62/17 [YUN 2007, p. 646], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/63/139], transmitted the views of six Member States on the general appreciation of the issues of information security; national efforts to strengthen information security and promote international cooperation in that area; the content of relevant international concepts aimed at strengthening the security of global information and telecommunications systems; and possible measures that the international community could take to strengthen global information security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 61], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee [A/63/385], adopted resolution 63/37 by recorded vote (178-1) [agenda item 85].

Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/70 of 4 December 1998, 54/49 of 1 December 1999, 55/28 of 20 November 2000, 56/19 of 29 November 2001, 57/53 of 22 November 2002, 58/32 of 8 December 2003, 59/61 of 3 December 2004, 60/45 of 8 December 2005, 61/54 of 6 December 2006 and 62/17 of 5 December 2007,

Recalling also its resolutions on the role of science and technology in the context of international security, in which, inter alia, it recognized that scientific and technological developments could have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needed to be maintained and encouraged,

Noting that considerable progress has been achieved in developing and applying the latest information technologies and means of telecommunication,

Affirming that it sees in this process the broadest positive opportunities for the further development of civilization, the expansion of opportunities for cooperation for the common good of all States, the enhancement of the creative potential of humankind and additional improvements in the circulation of information in the global community,

Recalling, in this connection, the approaches and principles outlined at the Information Society and Development Conference, held in Midrand, South Africa, from 13 to 15 May 1996,

Bearing in mind the results of the Ministerial Conference on Terrorism, held in Paris on 30 July 1996, and the recommendations that it made,

Bearing in mind also the results of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003 (first phase) and in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005 (second phase),

Noting that the dissemination and use of information technologies and means affect the interests of the entire international community and that optimum effectiveness is enhanced by broad international cooperation,

Expressing its concern that these technologies and means can potentially be used for purposes that are inconsistent with the objectives of maintaining international stability and security and may adversely affect the integrity of the infrastructure of States to the detriment of their security in both civil and military fields,

Considering that it is necessary to prevent the use of information resources or technologies for criminal or terrorist purposes,

Noting the contribution of those Member States that have submitted their assessments on issues of information security to the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraphs 1 to 3 of resolutions 53/70, 54/49, 55/28, 56/19, 57/53, 58/32, 59/61, 60/45, 61/54 and 62/17,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General containing those assessments,

Welcoming the initiative taken by the Secretariat and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in convening international meetings of experts in Geneva in August 1999 and April 2008 on developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security, as well as the results of those meetings,

Considering that the assessments of the Member States contained in the reports of the Secretary-General and the international meetings of experts have contributed to a better understanding of the substance of issues of international information security and related notions,

Bearing in mind that the Secretary-General, in fulfilment of resolution 58/32, established in 2004 a group of governmental experts, which, in accordance with its mandate, considered existing and potential threats in the sphere of information security and possible cooperative measures to address them and conducted a study on relevant international concepts aimed at strengthening the security of global information and telecommunications systems,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Group of Governmental Experts on Developments in the Field of Information and Telecommunications in the Context of International Security, prepared on the basis of the results of the Group's work,

1. Calls upon Member States to promote further at multilateral levels the consideration of existing and potential threats in the field of information security, as well as possible measures to limit the threats emerging in this field, consistent with the need to preserve the free flow of information;

2. Considers that the purpose of such measures could be served through the examination of relevant international concepts aimed at strengthening the security of global information and telecommunications systems;

3. Invites all Member States to continue to inform the Secretary-General of their views and assessments on the following questions:

(a) General appreciation of the issues of information security;

(b) Efforts taken at the national level to strengthen information security and promote international cooperation in this field;

(c) The content of the concepts mentioned in paragraph 2 above;

(d) Possible measures that could be taken by the international community to strengthen information security at the global level;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts, to be established in 2009 on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, to continue to study existing and potential threats in the sphere of information security and possible cooperative measures to address them, as well as the concepts referred to in paragraph 2 above, and to submit a report on the results of this study to the General Assembly at its sixty-fifth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security".

UN public information

The General Assembly's Committee on Information, at its thirtieth session (New York, 28 April–9 May) [A/63/21], continued to consider UN information policies and activities, and to evaluate and follow up on efforts made and progress achieved in information and communications.

The Committee had before it two February reports of the Secretary-General on activities of the UN Department of Public Information (DPI) for the period from July 2007 to February 2008. Part one [A/AC.198/2008/2] addressed advancements in DPI's thematic areas; strategic directions; public information and UN peacekeeping; news services; knowledge-sharing and library services; outreach and public relations; building partnerships with civil society; sales and marketing services; publications board; and capital master plan and its impact. Part two [A/AC.198/2008/3] covered the activities of the network of UN information centres (UNICs) and the UN website with particular focus on progress towards parity among official languages, accessibility and content management.

The Committee deferred its consideration of the document containing DPI's proposed strategic framework for 2010–2011 [A/63/6] until its thirty-first (2009) session.

By decision 63/524 of 5 December, the General Assembly increased the Committee's membership from 110 to 112. On the same date, by decision 63/412, the Assembly appointed Antigua and Barbuda and Zambia as members of the Committee.
