Foreword

Multiple crises in 2008 demanded immediate, concrete results from the United Nations. Severe economic recession challenged global solidarity and threatened to compromise efforts to combat climate change. A food crisis endangered the fight against poverty and hunger, putting at risk the world's poorest and most vulnerable people. Natural disasters, most notably in China, Haiti and Myanmar, caused more than 235,000 deaths, affected some 214 million people, and resulted in an estimated $190 billion in economic damage—further exacerbating already dire humanitarian situations and placing the utmost strains on aid delivery and relief assistance.

In a year that marked the sixtieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping, outbreaks of hostilities in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Georgian province of Abkhazia, the Sudan and elsewhere tested the mettle of United Nations forces and the efficacy of United Nations diplomacy. Although we were not always able to protect innocent people from harm, and suffered losses among our own, we helped deliver solutions that avoided further catastrophe and turned the tide in favour of peace and recovery.

The situation in Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territory remained difficult. Little progress was made on nuclear safeguard issues in Iran or on proliferation issues in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and terrorism remained a global threat, although the Counter-Terrorism Committee reported significant progress by Member States in implementing the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy.

The United Nations continued to support the efforts of post-conflict countries and those in transition. The Organization provided assistance to successful democratic elections in Nepal and Sierra Leone, and buttressed progress in Bangladesh, Côte d'Ivoire and Liberia. The Peacebuilding Commission expanded its involvement to a fourth country emerging from conflict: the Central African Republic. In the face of a worsening humanitarian situation in Afghanistan, the United Nations helped strengthen institutions and facilitated international civilian efforts. We promoted calm in a potentially explosive situation in Kosovo, and searched for ways to deal with piracy and issues of humanitarian access in Somalia.

I have always emphasized that human rights must be a core principle in the pursuit of the global good. The sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights saw the launch of the Universal Periodic Review mechanism for examining the human rights record of all Member States. The struggle for gender equality and the empowerment of women is a central part of our efforts for human rights, and the year saw several initiatives, including the launch of the UNiTE to End Violence Against Women campaign and the adoption of Security Council resolution 1820(2008), which broke new legal ground in stating that “rape and other forms of sexual violence can constitute war crimes, crimes against humanity or a constitutive act with respect to genocide”.

This Yearbook highlights these and many other issues on which the United Nations was active. As I stated in my annual report on our work in 2008, the rising demand for our services is daunting, yet I am convinced that with dedication, focus and commitment we can live up to the hopes of all peoples who look to us to build a more peaceful, prosperous and just world. By promoting an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations among the peoples of the world, this volume, like its predecessors, contributes to building support for peace, development, human rights and the rule of law for all.

About the 2008 edition of the Yearbook

This sixty-second volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations continues the tradition of providing the most comprehensive coverage available of the activities and concerns of the United Nations. The present volume highlights the attention given by the United Nations in 2008 to conflicts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Georgian province of Abkhazia and the Sudan, along with the challenges posed by severe economic recession, the food security crisis, climate change and natural disasters, piracy and terrorism. It features UN accomplishments in supporting democracy in post-conflict countries, championing human rights and the rule of law, fighting for gender equality and strengthening international cooperation in countering the world drug problem.

The user can locate information contained in this volume by using the Table of contents, the Subject index, the Index of resolutions and decisions and the Index of Security Council presidential statements. The volume also features six appendices: Appendix I comprises a roster of Member States; Appendix II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations and the Statute of the International Court of Justice; Appendix III presents the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; Appendix IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 2008; Appendix V gives the addresses of United Nations information centres and services worldwide; and Appendix VI lists the addresses of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented and divided into five parts covering political and security matters; human rights issues; economic and social questions; legal issues; and institutional, administrative and budgetary matters. Chapters present summaries of pertinent UN activities, including those of intergovernmental and expert bodies, as well as major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of UN bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the appropriate chapter. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of a substantive nature adopted in 2008 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are preceded by procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour–against–abstaining), if any, and an indication of their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption. The texts are followed by details of any recorded or roll-call vote.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General in 2008, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance in 2008 are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized, in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Multilateral treaties. Information on signatories and parties to multilateral treaties and conventions has been taken from the series Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General (ST/LEG/SER/E) (see treaties.un.org).

Explanatory note on documents

The following is a guide to the principal United Nations document symbols appearing in this volume:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/63/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the sixty-third session, beginning with A/63/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees. For example, A/C.1/- identifies documents of the First Committee, A/C.6/- documents of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.- of its commissions. For example, A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/- of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption, the second the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions since the fifty-seventh (2002) session are numbered consecutively from 401 for those concerned with elections and appointments and from 501 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/2008/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 2008 sessions, beginning with E/2008/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.2/- to documents of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two Arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 2008/1), and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 2008/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HSP/-	United Nations Human Settlements Programme
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols, which are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ECLAC/-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

Various other document symbols include the following:

L.- refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions.

CONF.- refers to conference documents.

INF- refers to general information documents.

SR.- refers to summary records and is followed by a meeting number.

PV.- refers to verbatim records and is followed by a meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two Arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an Arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.06.II.A.2; E/F/R.05.II.E.8; E.08.II.C.2.

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization [A/63/1], dated 12 August 2008, submitted to the sixty-third session of the General Assembly. The Assembly took note of it on 6 October (decision 63/504).

Chapter I

Introduction

1. As I come to the end of my second year at the helm of the United Nations, I am inspired by the commitment and energy of the people who serve this Organization; at the same time, I am acutely aware of the increasing weight of responsibility that lies on our collective shoulders. This past year we experienced a huge increase in the intensity of engagement across the entire spectrum of development, security, humanitarian affairs and human rights issues. The international community turned to us for assistance which ranged from helping victims of conflict and disaster and addressing the needs of the poor and hungry to restoring peace between warring parties and mobilizing the global community to address a new generation of global challenges like climate change and terrorism.

2. The rising demand for our services is daunting, and yet I am convinced that with dedication, focus and commitment we can live up to the hopes of all peoples who look to us to build a more peaceful, prosperous and just world.

3. To achieve this necessary focus, in 2008 and for the rest of my tenure, we must dedicate our effort to three key areas: delivering results for people most in need, securing global goods, and creating a stronger United Nations through full accountability.

4. The United Nations has had a long and proud history of establishing norms and principles that govern international relations. That history can and must continue. But in this new era where the world is increasingly turning to the United Nations to deliver a wide range of services in just about every corner of the Earth, the biggest challenge we face is to deliver concrete results for people most in need, wherever they are. To meet these growing needs and high expectations, we must enhance our operational delivery. This means concentrating our resources where the Organization can make the biggest difference. We cannot just make promises or call on others to act; we cannot wait for solutions to emerge. We need to seize opportunities to show results now that justify the hopes for a better future.

5. The second area requiring our focus is securing global goods. The United Nations is uniquely placed to lead the effort to address global threats that endanger every person everywhere in the world, and to secure the corresponding goods. Challenges like climate change and global health know no borders and cannot be addressed by a single State or groups of States. As the only universal organization with a comprehensive mandate, ours has a strong comparative advantage with respect to catalysing action by all countries, and building new multi-stakeholder alliances. The United Nations must rise to this challenge, since there is no other forum that can legitimately address these issues on a global scale as effectively.

6. My message is clear: we will rise or fall together depending on the effectiveness of our common response. Strategies to address these new challenges will need to be developed globally, but the locus of action and responsibility will be primarily the national level. I appeal to Governments to take action, as the consequences of inaction will spare none.

7. To deliver results for a better world, we must work to strengthen the United Nations through full accountability. Only full accountability will enable us to achieve optimal outcomes. We must look at accountability not as a narrow technical issue, but as a fundamental organizing principle and operational guideline for our Organization, and must encourage Member States to adopt the same principle. An organization where all are held accountable for upholding their responsibilities will be a significantly stronger one.

8. Working together, we can improve the nature and quality of life of the world's population and we can prevent both national and global threats from escalating to catastrophic proportions. As enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, we, the peoples of the United Nations, have this obligation and responsibility.

Chapter II

Delivering results for people most in need

9. One of the most important roles that the United Nations can play is that of champion of the powerless, the forgotten and the marginalized. Our greatest responsibility is to ensure that we improve the welfare of these populations—that we deliver results to those most in need. This means that we must help Member States deliver on their Millennium Development Goal commitments, that we must use all the resources and expertise we have gained in the field of preventive diplomacy, peacekeeping and peacebuilding to establish and preserve a secure and peaceful world, and that we must provide relief and rehabilitation assistance to victims of conflicts and disaster. It also means that we must work with the international community to ensure respect for human rights; support States in establishing rule of law, preventing genocide and delivering on their responsibility to protect; and assist them in establishing good governance and democracy.

A. Development

10. We must deliver results for a more prosperous and healthy world. Development should not be the privilege of a handful but a right for all. Yet, half of the world's adult population owns barely 1 per cent of global wealth. Although we have made significant gains towards the global goal of halving extreme poverty by 2015, many countries, particularly in Africa, are off-track with respect to achieving the Millennium Development Goals. We must build on existing real and measurable progress, and scale up action and financing. But addressing the Millennium Development Goals is not enough: we must tackle the food crisis, climate change, natural disasters and violent conflicts, which threaten to turn back the clock on development advances. And we must give priority to mitigating the impact of these forces on those most in need—the poor, women, and children, who are almost always the first and hardest hit.

11. To deliver leadership in development in the face of today's global challenges, the United Nations will need a more coherent, focused and reinvigorated approach, building on the integration of the normative and operational strengths of the Organization as a whole. This is the thrust of the proposal I put forward in my report on strengthening the development pillar of the Secretariat (A/62/708), specifically its ability to deliver effectively and efficiently on its development mandates, to improve its strategic position in dealing with major development issues and processes, and to provide important benefits to Member States. I have encouraged Member States to act on the proposal during the forthcoming session of the General Assembly. In the past year, I have also undertaken initiatives in a number of related priority areas: better linking normative, analytical and operational functions; strengthening global to regional, regional to national, and interregional linkages; furthering synergies among the work of the Secretariat, the United Nations funds and programmes and the United Nations system as a whole; and forging partnerships with key stakeholders who can complement our work in the development arena.

1. The Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals

12. As we pass the halfway point on the path to reaching the Millennium Development Goals by 2015, critical action is needed to meet all of them. The outlook for the education, health and environmental Millennium Development Goals is mixed. Across the board, gains in education seem to be most encouraging, while those linked to maternal health are least on track. We must deliver on commitments already made as well as scale up existing successes and replicate them in other countries. I am calling on the United Nations system and Member States to make addressing the needs of the poorest, with a special focus on Africa, a central priority.

13. While the number of people living in extreme poverty has declined over the years, 1.2 billion—most of whom are living in the least developed countries, especially in Africa—are still stuck in the poverty trap. Without immediate humanitarian aid and robust long-term investments in agriculture, the food crisis is expected to drive an additional 100 million people into extreme poverty. The effects of climate change will be no less severe.

14. Many countries are close to delivering universal primary education. We must continue to build on and seek out innovative measures, such as school feeding programmes and school fee waivers, which have contributed to these advances. For example, the fact that countries like Malawi, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania abolished primary school fees has resulted in dramatic increases in enrolment rates. Many other countries, however, still face enormous challenges. For example, in sub-Saharan Africa, about 41 million primary school-age children are out of school; and in South Asia, 31.5 million remain out of school.

15. Women are integral members of society and significant drivers of development. We must continue to fight for gender equality and to empower women. While women's status has improved in some areas like education, gender gaps remain pervasive. Women are underrepresented in politics and positions of power and are often paid less and subjected to far worse working conditions than men. Violence against women remains widespread, ranging from domestic violence to purposeful victimization in war, and constitutes a severe obstacle to the achievement of all global development goals. In January 2008, I launched a campaign to end violence against women, which aims at mobilizing public opinion, securing political will and ensuring increased resources to tackle this issue.

16. Perhaps the worst gender disparities are seen in the area of health, where women make up more than half of adults living with HIV in sub-Saharan Africa and every year more than 500,000 women continue to die from complications of pregnancy and childbirth. Progress continues to be slowest in improving maternal health compared with all Millennium Development Goal targets, and the provision of adequate and reliable data at the national, regional and international levels disaggregated by sex remains a challenge. This is unacceptable. I am strongly committed to advancing progress on maternal health and I urge all Member States to allocate more attention and resources to this Goal.

17. Not only is promoting and securing health for all ethical, but it also builds a foundation for prosperity, stability and poverty reduction. We must move forward in areas such as infant mortality and under-five mortality, measles and immunization, poliomyelitis and guinea worm eradication and scaling-up of malaria control tools, and in that of HIV antiretroviral treatment.

18. The AIDS epidemic continues to require an urgent response. While we have expanded access to antiretroviral treatment to 3 million people, infections continue apace, with 2.5 million newly infected in 2007 alone. The importance of prevention has never been clearer. With an estimated 33.2 million people now living with HIV, combating stigma and discrimination is equally important. The 2008 high-level meeting on AIDS reviewed progress achieved in implementing the 2001 Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and the 2006 Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS and reminded us of our responsibilities in combating the scourge of HIV/AIDS.

19. I am committed to advancing action on infectious diseases. About 1.2 billion of the world's poorest populations suffer from the crippling effects of neglected tropical diseases. Malaria kills more than 1 million people every year. These numbers are unacceptable. The first HIV/Tuberculosis Global Leaders' Forum, held at the margin of the high-level meeting on AIDS this year, called for increased collaboration on the issue of HIV and tuberculosis co-infection. We must replicate proved strategies to combat these diseases. By 2010, I intend to ensure universal coverage against malaria through ensuring that all people at risk, especially women and children in Africa, are fully covered by indoor residual spraying and long-lasting insecticide-treated bednets. Our global efforts also start at home: this year I launched UN Cares, a programme to provide services such as training, counselling and testing for HIV-positive United Nations personnel and their families.

20. Strengthening health systems provides the base for the dramatic scale-up of high-impact interventions needed to reach the health Goals. A comprehensive human resources strategy is key, particularly building up a cadre of community health workers who can provide basic services to the poor.

21. Meeting the water and sanitation targets is also of critical importance. Almost 1 billion people lack access to safe drinking water and 2.6 billion do not have access to adequate sanitation. We must double the current annual investment by the international community to about $30 billion.

22. The impacts of climate change, as seen through deforestation, soil erosion, desertification and land degradation, are aggravating poverty and threatening livelihoods. We must prioritize action to prevent a further loss in biodiversity and ensure that development efforts are environmentally sustainable.

23. A global partnership for development is critical to revitalize efforts towards achieving the Goals. I urged world leaders to deliver on the official development assistance commitments made at the 2005 World Summit, at the International Conference on Financing for Development in Monterrey, Mexico, and in Gleneagles and Heiligendamm. I call for quick and concrete progress to achieve the goal of $50 billion per year by 2010.

24. Developing open, rule-based, predictable and non-discriminatory trading and financial systems is integral to achieving the Goals. I am heartened by the Accra Accord adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its twelfth session (UNCTAD XII). We must seek to implement its ambitious agenda and make globalization a powerful means to achieve poverty eradication.

25. We must also aim for a successful outcome of the Doha round of trade negotiations this year. The continued deadlock poses a significant risk to the multilateral trading system and to the ability to achieve the Goals. Key World Trade Organization members must redouble efforts to produce a meaningful and significant development package. The food crisis is a grave sign of the need to break the impasse on agricultural trade liberalization.

26. This year, we are at a turning point in the achievement of the Goals. The High-level Event on the Millennium Development Goals on 25 September 2008 will be critical to catalysing the action needed to bridge the implementation gap. I urge Member States to provide strong leadership. The Doha Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus at the end of 2008 will offer another important opportunity to review many of the critical issues at stake. Let us ensure that the coming year is a “year of action”—one in which we translate our promises into food, shelter, education and health for those most in need.

2. The special needs of Africa

27. During my tenure, I have made a special commitment to addressing Africa’s peace, security and development needs. The Office of the Special Adviser on Africa has played an important role in forwarding this agenda, as has the Millennium Development Goals Africa Steering Group composed of multilateral development partners, which presented in June 2008 a set of practical costed recommendations for achieving the Millennium Development Goals by 2015 in Africa. I urge all countries to work with me in implementing these important recommendations.

28. It is encouraging that the overall economic performance of Africa remains strong, with a 5.7 per cent growth of gross domestic product (GDP) and a 3.7 per cent per capita income increase in 2007, owing to improved macroeconomic management, and increased private capital flows, as well as better governance in many parts of the continent. Good governance and democracy are central to promoting overall prosperity, stability and peace, as acknowledged by African leaders themselves in the Constitutive Act establishing the African Union. I commit the United Nations to supporting efforts of Africa to improve and safeguard its young democracies.

29. However, while overall growth rates are positive, they are extremely unequal throughout the continent, with a number of countries experiencing negligible, if not negative, GDP growth rates. In countries where there has been positive growth, there is little evidence that the poorest are seeing an improvement in their circumstances. Scaling up public and private sector investments and exploiting regional resources are vital.

30. Progress requires peace and security. I have been greatly encouraged by the Security Council’s support for African regional peace processes and initiatives, as well as the progress made by the Security Council and the African Union Peace and Security Council in implementing their shared goal of developing a more structured relationship. The Peacebuilding Commission’s engagement in Burundi, Sierra Leone and Guinea-Bissau should assist in stabilizing their fragile economic and political environments. I encourage the General Assembly, Security Council and the Peacebuilding Commission to continue to place the special needs of Africa at the forefront of their agenda.

31. I am committed to ensuring that the United Nations is optimally configured to help Member States make progress towards reaching their development goals. Throughout 2008, I took important steps to strengthen the development pillar of the Organization. The reinvigorated campaign under my leadership to attain the Millennium Development Goals, and other internationally agreed development goals, is one dimension of my strategy. Introducing managerial reforms that strengthen the Organization’s ability to deliver effective programming is a second important dimension which is discussed later in the report. Working to strengthen greater linkages across the development activities of the larger United Nations system, particularly through the work of my Policy Committee, which has provided recommendations for addressing policy and programme gaps in the United Nations development initiatives, is a third dimension of my strategy. Finally, I have encouraged the United Nations system to forge stronger partnerships with key stakeholders who can complement our work in the development arena, including new and emerging development partners. These also include the business community, civil society, and other charitable groups, as well as regional organizations, all of which are discussed below.

B. Peace and security

32. We must deliver results for a more secure world. Once again, during this past year, in too many places around the world, children bore arms instead of holding textbooks, the earth was scorched instead of cultivated, and national revenues were diverted to arms instead of being spent on education and health care. Every life lost and every penny spent on war was stolen from future generations.

33. The United Nations was called upon to assist in the search for peace or to promote dialogue and reconciliation on multiple fronts, including in the Sudan, Somalia, Iraq, Myanmar, the Middle East, Nepal, Sri Lanka, northern Uganda, the Central African Republic, Chad, Western Sahara and elsewhere. Our efforts took many forms. In addition to development assistance and humanitarian aid, we engaged in preventive diplomacy and peace negotiations, conducted peacekeeping missions and supported peacebuilding efforts in the aftermath of war.

1. Preventive diplomacy and support to peace processes

34. Where fighting has erupted or has the potential to do so, lasting peace rests ultimately on finding political solutions to the issues that are the source of conflict. The scale and complexity of the political, preventive and peacemaking tasks before us have grown, while a commensurate strengthening of the relevant machinery of the United Nations is long overdue. The rationale and the proposals for strengthening the Department of Political Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat were expressed in detail in my report to the General Assembly (A/62/521 and Corr.1), issued on 2 November 2007. I view those proposals as a vital complement to the earlier reforms of United Nations peacekeeping operations and as one of my top priorities. The United Nations needs to become more effective not only at stabilizing conflict situations and dealing with their humanitarian side effects, but at preventing and resolving them through political means. In the area of conflict prevention and resolution, which are Charter responsibilities, we need to do better, and the proposals to strengthen the Department of Political Affairs are fundamental to achieving a more effective role for the United Nations in this important area. Those proposals respond, in particular, to the call for a more effective use of tools such as preventive diplomacy, mediation and my "good offices" in the service of Member States and our partners in regional organizations.

35. With voluntary support, we have already taken important strides in implementing the 2005 decision of Member States to strengthen my good offices capacity, including in the mediation of disputes. We now have a fully operational Mediation Support Unit and a rapidly deployable Standby Team of Mediation Experts which are at the service of United Nations envoys, Member States and regional organizations. We have increasingly solid partnerships with regional organizations and can call upon an array of experts to assist in peacefully resolving and preventing disputes.

36. This past year, the Organization was able in many instances to assist Member States with preventive diplomacy and to provide concrete support to peace processes. For example, Nepal, with the support of the United Nations, held a historic election for a Constituent Assembly and has now embarked on the transition to a new political future. In the Central African Republic, we supported the preparatory process for a national dialogue. Following the outbreak of post-electoral violence in Kenya, the United Nations supported the African Union-led mediation by former Secretary-General Kofi Annan, which enabled the people of Kenya to avoid a larger tragedy. In the search for a political solution in Darfur, my Special Envoy continued to work closely with the African Union to try to encourage cohesion, build trust and make progress on key issues such as security, while broadening the national, regional and international bases of support. In Somalia, despite deteriorating security on the ground, my Special Representative made determined efforts to move the political process forward, as contingency planning continued for a possible stabilization force and, subsequently, conditions permitting a peacekeeping operation. In Cyprus, with renewed impetus and political will on the part of the Cypriots and their leaders, the United Nations assisted in the launch and facilitation of a preparatory process intended to lead to full-fledged negotiations.

37. With the establishment of the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG), we are involved in an innovative attempt to dismantle criminal groups whose actions threaten to erode hard-fought gains in the peace process. At the request of the Governments of Central Asia, we opened in Ashgabat the United Nations Regional Centre for Preventive Diplomacy in Central Asia, with a mandate to assist them in managing shared threats peacefully. In Iraq, we took up the challenge of a strengthened mandate calling for a greater United Nations role in forging political dialogue and reconciliation between Iraqis, encouraging regional dialogue and assisting in the resolution of disputed internal boundaries.

38. In the Middle East, I worked through the Quartet and with my envoys in the region to continue to push for comprehensive peace and security. An agreement to achieve the election of a president in Lebanon and indirect talks between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic gave some reason to hope that the dynamics might change, and I continue to strive for the attainment of a peace agreement between Israelis and Palestinians as soon as possible.

2. Peacekeeping

39. Peacekeeping is a core function of the United Nations. Peacekeeping operations constitute a critical step towards achieving sustainable peace. They have an important role in assisting national actors in the development and implementation of peacebuilding strategies and work in partnership with the United Nations country team, the international financial institutions and other international partners.

40. In this sixtieth anniversary year of United Nations peacekeeping, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the United Nations Secretariat leads 19 missions with more than 130,000 women and men, including troop and police contributions from 117 Member States, supported by a budget of some $7 billion.

41. In order to ensure that the current demands on our peacekeeping operations are met in such a way as to encompass their scale and complexity, I initiated the restructuring of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. This included the creation of a new Department of Field Support, the establishment of the Office of the Rule of Law and Security Institutions in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, Integrated Operational Teams, and a number of new shared mechanisms. The Department finalized several essential doctrine documents this past year including, notably, the “capstone” doctrine contained in “United Nations Peacekeeping Principles and Guidelines”. The Department also continues to make progress on the Peace Operations 2010 reform agenda.

42. During this reporting period, peacekeeping operations provided wide-ranging support to peace. In Haiti, Afghanistan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, our operations played a key role in supporting political processes, some of which hovered precariously between conflict and peace. In Kosovo, the role of the United Nations remained key to ensuring a safe and secure environment and stability in the region, and our operations adapted to the evolving situation on the ground so as to allow regional organizations such as the European Union to play a greater operational role within the status-neutral framework of Security Council resolution 1244(1999) and under the overall authority of the United Nations.

43. Peacekeeping operations also supported the efforts of State institutions to fully restore their authority. In Lebanon, for example, the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) is playing a key role in facilitating the return of the Lebanese Armed Forces to the area south of the Litani River, and in creating conditions within its area of responsibility needed to enable governing structures to function normally.

44. Peacekeeping operations are working with key partners to provide more holistic support to national efforts in policing, the building of justice and corrections capacity, the removal of landmines and explosive remnants of war, and the design and conduct of demobilization, disarmament and reintegration programmes. For example, in mid-March, an expert mission comprising various United Nations entities and external parties visited Timor-Leste and issued a report (S/2008/329, annex) that made comprehensive recommendations on policing and broader rule-of-law and security sector reform issues. Reflecting the need to ensure early deployment of the police component, a Standing Police Capacity was established and deployed to the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) to assist the Chadian law enforcement agencies in establishing and training a special Chadian police element.

45. In 2008, peacekeeping operations also reinforced States’ capacities to protect human rights through translating international human rights standards into national laws, regulations and policies. Missions advised on laws aimed at providing human rights protection in Burundi and Sierra Leone, and also assisted in strengthening domestic judicial processes in Liberia.

46. In addition to support for our current operations, the past year saw the deployment of two of our most complex operations to date, namely, to Darfur and to Chad and the Central African Republic. The ongoing deployment of these operations has been supported by recent peacekeeping innovations. The first Integrated Operational Team at the Department of Peacekeeping Operations Headquarters provided support to the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur in developing and implementing an integrated deployment plan. It also supported the African Union and United Nations Special Envoys in their efforts to bring the parties to the negotiating table. To assist in our work in Chad, we developed innovative partnership arrangements with the European Union.

47. Unfortunately, our many successes to date are challenged by two key issues: a number of unacceptable cases of sexual misconduct by some of our own peacekeepers and a mismatch between mandates and resources.

48. Extensive activities have been undertaken at Headquarters and in the field to prevent and address sexual exploitation and abuse by United Nations personnel. These include: training, streamlined and strengthened reporting mechanisms, awareness-raising and outreach activities both for United Nations personnel and for the host populations, a pilot campaign to address prostitution/transactional sex, and the establishment of welfare and recreation activities. The Secretariat and Member States have also agreed to a new model memorandum of understanding with troop-contributing countries that provides the United Nations with more reliable leverage for addressing sexual exploitation. Member States have also adopted a comprehensive strategy on assistance to victims. We need to ensure that the Secretariat and Member States are serious about the issue and that action is taken as we strive towards zero impunity.

49. Given the increased complexity and range of our operations and the difficult political and security environments in which many operations are deployed, now more than ever the international community must strengthen its commitment to them. Troop and police contributions are limited. Many Member States are already overstretched. Yet, at the same time, the demands being placed upon troop and police contributors and the Secretariat continue to rise. I urge Member States to maintain a common purpose behind peacekeeping. This requires sustained political engagement with relevant parties so that there is a peace to keep, and the provision of necessary resources to ensure that United Nations peacekeeping can live up to the expectations of it held by those most vulnerable.

3. Peacebuilding

50. Countries emerging from conflict face a unique set of challenges and unless they are identified and effectively addressed, these countries incur a high risk of relapsing into violence. Peacebuilding activities help promote peace agreements, lay the foundation for sustainable peace and development, and address the special needs of conflict-affected States. In 2006, Member States established a new peacebuilding architecture, comprising the Peacebuilding Commission, the Peacebuilding Support Office and the Peacebuilding Fund. In the past year, these institutions further developed their methods of extending support to countries emerging from conflict.

51. The Peacebuilding Commission, supported by the Peacebuilding Support Office, has demonstrated its added value in providing sustained attention to the countries under its consideration. The first two cases under its consideration were Burundi and Sierra Leone, followed by Guinea-Bissau and the Central African Republic, which were referred to the Commission in December 2007 and June 2008, respectively. In Sierra Leone, it played an important role in assisting with the election process, while in Burundi, it assisted in averting a major crisis by facilitating a dialogue between key stakeholders who had reached a deadlock in Parliament. The Commission has further developed its peacebuilding tools for strategic engagement, including a monitoring and tracking mechanism to measure progress made against the commitments contained in country-specific strategic frameworks.

52. This past year, the Peacebuilding Fund continued to provide a crucial funding mechanism supporting early peacebuilding initiatives. It enjoyed strong financial support from Member States and recorded pledges of $267 million, derived from a diverse base of some 44 individual donor countries. Significant progress has been made in strengthening the linkages between the Fund and the integrated strategic approaches to peacebuilding taken by the Commission. For instance, the designation of an initial funding envelope for Guinea-Bissau has provided immediate support while allowing for a better alignment in the long term between the Fund and the integrated peacebuilding strategy under deliberation in the Commission.

53. In addition to providing financial support to the countries under consideration by the Commission, I have made active use of the Fund in support of peacebuilding efforts in countries that are not in the current agenda of the Commission, including the Central African Republic, Liberia and Nepal. I have commissioned, through the Peacebuilding Support Office, an external evaluation of the Fund for the purpose of reflecting on lessons learned during its first two years of operation and further enhancing both its strategic and its catalytic role.

54. Peacebuilding is not just about “bricks and mortar”: it is a transformative process involving changing attitudes about how to manage conflict. As dealing with the aftermath of war can be costly, strengthening our capacity to resolve conflicts earlier rather than later is among the smartest investments we can make. For this reason, I am deeply committed to strengthening our peacebuilding institutions and ensuring that they are optimally configured to meet evolving needs.

C. Humanitarian affairs

55. Some of the most vulnerable and “in need” populations around the world are those that have been affected by conflicts and natural disasters. In spite of increasing global challenges, the humanitarian community has made significant strides in delivering accountable, predictable and timely assistance. Nevertheless, these efforts must be strengthened even further with additional resources and continued reforms.

56. The unprecedented increases in food prices, compounded by a decades-long decline in investment in agriculture, have reduced access to food for hundreds of millions of people. In response to the recent crisis, I created a High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis which has developed a Comprehensive Framework for Action giving us a clear road map regarding how to address the crisis. The Framework has been welcomed by many Member States. United Nations organizations are meanwhile responding to the urgency of the situation. For example, the World Food Programme has raised $3 billion of the $6 billion needed for 2008. I have set aside a reserve of $100 million from the Central Emergency Response Fund to help fund new humanitarian needs related to soaring food prices. In addition, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has launched a $1.7 billion appeal to provide low-income countries with seeds and other agricultural support.

57. The rise in the number and intensity of extreme weather events has also been striking, with an increasing number of the poor being affected by drought, floods and cyclones. In 2007, the United Nations launched an unprecedented 15 Flash Appeals, 14 of which were in response to extreme weather events in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

58. One of the largest disasters in 2008 was Cyclone Nargis, which hit Myanmar in May and claimed the lives of tens of thousands of people, with millions severely affected. This disaster and the initial access problems for international relief workers highlighted the need to strengthen our partnership with regional organizations and to work with Govenments to create operating environments conducive to their receiving effective assistance. The earthquake in Sichuan Province, China, also in May 2008, illustrated how disaster events can surpass even the disaster response capacities of major countries. These events underscored vividly once again the importance of working closely with Governments to reduce disaster risk through the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015.

59. Despite the consolidation of peace and relative stability in Côte d'Ivoire, Nepal and Timor-Leste, a number of major internal conflicts continue, with large numbers of civilians requiring urgent humanitarian assistance and protection. Forced displacement, violations of the rules of international humanitarian law governing conduct of hostilities, sexual violence and ensuring safe and unhindered humanitarian access remain significant challenges for the humanitarian community.

60. For some 36 million people affected by armed conflict, flight is the only option, either within or across borders. At the end of 2007, the world's refugee population had reached 9.9 million people, more than half of them children. The overall global population of internally displaced persons was about 26 million and rising.

61. The United Nations and its partners have increased their efforts to address the humanitarian situations in Afghanistan, Iraq and the Occupied Palestinian Territories where insecurity hinders access to many vulnerable people. For example, 12 months of restrictions imposed on the movement of commercial and humanitarian goods and people in and out of Gaza have had severe consequences for the well-being of the population, 75 per cent of whom rely on international assistance. Notwithstanding rising insecurity in Afghanistan, particularly in the southern provinces, the World Food Programme was able to reach close to 6.8 million beneficiaries in 2007.

62. The humanitarian community remains actively engaged in a number of countries in Africa, with some of the largest operations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and the Sudan. Darfur remains the world's largest humanitarian operation, with 14,700 humanitarian aid workers delivering assistance to 4.27 million affected individuals. While the situation remains fragile between the North and the South, approximately 1 million displaced persons and refugees have returned to the Southern Sudan.

63. The Central Emergency Response Fund, which had provided predictable funding to sudden-onset and neglected crises since its inception in 2006, exceeded the $1 billion mark in pledges at the donor conference in December 2007, and will be close to its annual grant element target of $450 million in 2008.

Pledges have been received from over 90 Member States. The Fund has distributed over $800 million in over 60 countries. I encourage all Member States to continue to contribute to this effective multilateral relief capacity.

D. Human rights, rule of law, genocide prevention and the responsibility to protect, and democracy and good governance

64. Respecting human rights, providing justice and the rule of law, preventing genocide and delivering on the responsibility to protect, and establishing democracy and good governance are core responsibilities of all Member States and of the United Nations itself. They define what it means to deliver results for a more just world. 2008 is a pivotal year for human rights: it is the sixtieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. I have called on the entire United Nations family to strengthen their advocacy efforts and take concrete steps to integrate human rights into all aspects of the Organization's work. The responsibility falls on us to advance the original vision of the Declaration—a vision encompassing one indivisible set of rights, inalienable to all humankind.

1. Human rights

65. This past year, I was pleased to witness the positive impact of recent institutional reforms in the human rights machinery, including the strengthening of the Human Rights Council, the bolstering of the United Nations rapid response capacity, the streamlining of existing institutions and the adoption of new human rights instruments.

66. The Human Rights Council launched the Universal Periodic Review this year, and examined the record of 32 States. The process is an important advance for the future of the Council and its role in the Organization's human rights machinery. The Council must ensure that assessments are fair, that review processes and methods are transparent and that nations are held accountable for progress, stagnation or regression in the implementation of human rights standards. Failure to do so could lead to distrust and disillusionment, as arose in the final years of the Commission on Human Rights. Given the range and scope of allegations of human rights violations throughout the world, the Council must address all such situations to ensure full credibility.

67. Thanks to the continued strengthening of the Peace Missions Support and Rapid Response Units established in 2006, the Organization was also able to carry out more robust emergency missions to address unforeseen human rights situations in the field. Most recently, it conducted a three-week fact-finding mission to assess allegations of grave human rights violations committed in the post-election period in Kenya and to gather first-hand information from diverse sources.

68. The Rapid Response Unit is one reflection of the increasing human rights presence of the United Nations on the ground. As at December 2007, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights supported 8 regional offices, 11 country offices and 17 human rights components of peace missions with 400 international human rights officers and national staff. The importance of this field presence should not be underestimated, as our experience is showing that the presence of United Nations human rights officers in conflict-prone environments may act as a deterrent to would-be human rights violators.

69. The human rights treaty bodies worked towards further harmonizing their respective working methods, adopting changes that would also complement the Human Rights Council's Universal Periodic Review mechanism. To further ensure streamlining, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women was moved from New York to Geneva.

70. On 13 September 2007, in a milestone move, the General Assembly adopted the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. In May 2008, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto entered into force, providing a full range of reporting, complaint and inquiry mechanisms.

71. We are embarking on a new era in human rights. Never before have we generated such wide international acceptance of and consensus on human rights standards. We have expanded and strengthened our tools and mechanisms for monitoring and encouraging compliance. Now, let us use our institutions and tools to deliver results for all people, everywhere.

2. Rule of law

72. The United Nations has reaffirmed repeatedly the centrality of the rule of law to human development and the maintenance of peace and security. The demand for our assistance in this area continues to grow, with the United Nations system now working in over 80 countries to help States translate international legal standards into national legislation and to support the development of constitutions, justice institutions and legal frameworks. Yet, we continue to face numerous challenges. For example, in many countries, the culture of impunity and lack of accountability, even for the most serious international crimes, gravely undermines the rule of law.

73. This year, the United Nations system made progress in strengthening its rule-of-law capacity, and in enhancing system-wide coordination and coherence, particularly in conflict and post-conflict environments. I have also sought to strengthen the Organization's policy development and coordination capacity by establishing a Rule of Law Unit to support the Rule of Law Coordination and Resource Group, which ensures coherence of rule-of-law activities within the United Nations system. I am pleased to observe that Member States, in General Assembly resolution 62/70, expressed their support for the new rule-of-law arrangements and I anticipate that the re-invigorated common approach that they advance will improve the quality of the rule-of-law assistance that we provide to Member States.

3. Genocide prevention and the responsibility to protect

74. The concept of the responsibility to protect was embraced by the 2005 World Summit and has been endorsed by both the General Assembly and the Security Council. It is sustained by the positive and affirmative vision of sovereignty as responsibility and rests on three pillars: the affirmation of Member States that they have a primary and continuing legal obligation to protect their populations from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity, and from their incitement; the acceptance by Member States of their responsibility to respond in a timely and decisive manner, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, to help protect populations from the four types of crimes described above; and the commitment of the United Nations system to assist States in meeting these obligations. This past year, I instructed the Organization to begin to take the initial steps to ensure that the system has the flexibility and capacity to help Member States meet their commitments. I look forward to seeing this capacity institutionalized towards the end of the year.

4. Democracy and good governance

75. While democracy has made gains in many regions, there have been important setbacks, as witnessed by the failure of some States to conduct free and fair elections, the adoption of states of emergency, increased restrictions on the independence of the media, and crackdowns on political and civil liberties. Experience has shown us that disregard for democratic principles poses serious security, economic and social challenges which often transcend national borders. For this reason, the role of the United Nations in strengthening democratic institutions and practices is inseparable from its work in promoting peace and security, development and human rights.

76. Highlights in the past year of the work of the United Nations in this area included support to the Constituent Assembly process in Nepal and to the electoral authorities of Sierra Leone. Of course, just as democracy entails more than elections, so is electoral assistance only one means by which the United Nations helps promote democracy. The Organization also provided support through programmes fostering good governance practices and democratic institutions.

77. The United Nations Democracy Fund (UNDEF) provides assistance to governmental, non-governmental, national, regional and international organizations, including relevant United Nations departments, offices, funds, programmes and agencies, in funding projects that build and strengthen democratic institutions, promote human rights and ensure the participation of all groups in democratic processes. The Fund has received approximately $90 million to date. It had launched its second call for project proposals in 2007 and received a total of 1,873 applications from 137 countries, 85.9 per cent of which were submitted by civil society organizations. In mid-May 2008, 86 projects were approved.

78. I call on Member States to recommit themselves to promoting democracy on 15 September, the newly established International Day of Democracy at the United Nations.

E. System-wide coherence

79. In the past year, Member States—through the 2007 triennial comprehensive policy review—have renewed their guidance to the United Nations system with a view to its becoming more coherent, efficient and effective at country, regional and global levels. This and other guidance from Member States, including through the ongoing informal consultations in the General Assembly on system-wide coherence, continue to direct our work in this area.

80. I am pleased to report that the “Delivering as one” initiative—launched in January 2007 upon the request of Governments in eight pilot countries—has started to yield some important results and lessons. It has reaffirmed that national ownership and leadership are essential components of increased coherence. It is clear that the United Nations system can maximize its support for national priorities only through the process of working together, leveraging more effectively its respective capacities and expertise. There are encouraging signs that, in the pilot countries, Governments have experienced improved United Nations delivery of programmes and reduced transaction costs.

81. At Headquarters level, the United Nations Development Group continued to develop guidance on national ownership in the programming process, harmonized policies and procedures, training to upgrade the skills of United Nations country teams, and improvement in the selection and accountability of, and support provided to, resident coordinators. It also significantly enhanced coherence of response in post-crisis situations. Another major step towards improved United Nations system coordination was the decision in 2007 to formally make the United Nations Development Group a third pillar of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination in order to ensure complementarity and reduce overlap between the two coordination bodies. This streamlining will result in important improvements in United Nations internal coordination and system-wide coherence, and will ultimately improve United Nations support to Member States.

82. Finally, as part of a continuing effort to ensure efficiency and coherence in communications, the United Nations Communications Group (UNCG) brings together United Nations system organizations, including funds, programmes and specialized agencies, with the Department of Public Information of the United Nations Secretariat and the Executive Office of the Secretary-General. The Groups exist at the country level in over 80 countries. Over the past year, this Group contributed to developing and implementing communications strategies, including the crafting and dissemination of coherent messages and information products, on the Millennium Development Goals, climate change and the sixtieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, among other concerns.

Chapter III

Securing global goods

83. The United Nations is uniquely placed to lead the world in responding to twenty-first century threats that transcend borders, threatening all nations and all peoples. As I scan the immediate horizon, I perceive four issues that fall within this category of challenges: climate change, counter-terrorism, disarmament and non-proliferation, and global health. I am convinced that the United Nations, with its global reach, legitimacy and unique ability to convene both State and non-State actors, has a vital role to play in ensuring that nations come together to secure the associated global goods for future generations.

A. Climate change

84. Climate change has been among my top priorities since I became Secretary-General. I am delighted to report that last year, the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change shared the Nobel Peace Prize with Al Gore, former Vice-President of the United States of America. The Nobel Prize Committee recognized this important body's long-standing commitment to improving our knowledge concerning man-made climate change, and its efforts towards laying the foundations for the measures that are needed to counteract such change.

85. On 24 September 2007, I convened a high-level event on climate change in New York on the margins of the General Assembly, which brought together 80 world leaders to discuss how to address climate change and galvanize support for advancing the negotiations.

86. This meeting set the tone for the United Nations-sponsored climate talks in December of last year where Member States reached an important agreement on climate change, including the adoption of the Bali Road Map setting out the process for developing a new global agreement to help confront climate change. Subsequent negotiations have been designed to develop a shared vision for a long-term global goal of reducing emissions; promote national/international action on mitigation and adaptation; encourage technology development and transfer; and provide developing countries with the financial resources and investment required for addressing environmental challenges. The negotiating process continues this year with an important session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to be held in Poznań, Poland, in December, and is set to culminate in an agreed outcome in Copenhagen in 2009.

87. The Clean Development Mechanism (CDM) provides a good example of how the United Nations can harness the power of the market. The total traded volume in the global carbon market rose from $31 billion in 2006 to $64 billion in 2007. The Clean Development Mechanism now boasts over 1,000 registered projects in 49 countries all over the world. Various United Nations organizations are supporting countries in broadening the geographical reach of the Mechanism, and in increasing the sustainable development benefits in addition to that of producing reductions in emissions.

88. I am pleased to observe the coordinated way in which the United Nations has come together to work with nations on adaptation and on helping to mainstream climate change into policy and development plans. One good example of our work to date is the Nairobi Work Programme on impacts, vulnerability and adaptation to Climate Change coordinated by the secretariat of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. This programme, launched by the intergovernmental process, brings together over 100 United Nations entities and other organizations to promote adaptation assessment and planning, to incorporate adaptation into all relevant policy areas and to foster assistance to developing countries in line with their needs.

89. Another example is the Nairobi Framework to support developing countries' participation in the Clean Development Mechanism (CDM). This joint effort of the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Development Programme, the secretariat of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Economic Commission for Africa, the African Development Bank and the World Bank has made substantial progress. Partner agencies are also working together on the organization of the first-ever African Carbon Forum, which will be held in Dakar in September 2008, providing an excellent opportunity to keep up the positive momentum of the Clean Development Mechanism in Africa.

90. At the United Nations, I have determined that the plan for renovating our New York Headquarters should follow strict environmental guidelines, including the reduction of our carbon footprint. I have asked the chief executives of all United Nations programmes, funds and specialized agencies to move swiftly towards climate neutrality in their operations.

91. We are also redoubling our efforts to communicate the messages on climate change to the public. The message of World Environment Day for 2008, bearing the slogan "Kick the habit! towards a low-carbon economy", has been that our world is in the grip of a dangerous carbon habit which is causing the build-up of significant greenhouse gases in the atmosphere. These in turn are contributing to climate change. The solution requires widespread changes in the behaviour and action of individuals, business and Governments.

B. Global health

92. There is growing political awareness that health is fundamental to economic growth and development, and that threats to health can compromise a country's stability and security.

93. In recent years, there has been an unprecedented rise in public and private funding directed towards health challenges. Bilateral aid has increased substantially, and so have the budgets of major health-related United Nations organizations such as the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund, the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and the World Bank, as well as those of major global health partnerships. Private philanthropy and the corporate sector have scaled up action and become full partners with Governments and non-governmental organizations in the delivery of care in poor countries. Numerous country-led initiatives have been set in motion, spearheaded primarily by Norway, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, France and Canada.

94. Within this new global health sphere, the United Nations system has been able to make significant progress on several fronts. As highlighted in Chapter II, section A, above, these include the fight against diseases like measles and poliomyelitis and specific tropical diseases, as well as malaria and HIV/AIDS. However, significant challenges remain. Inadequate advancements in meeting the health Goals have been largely due to deficient health systems, threats to health security posed by pandemic influenza and other emerging diseases, and profound inequities in health, as well as the failure to protect the poor from ill health and insufficient health expenditures.

95. The growing number of initiatives and partnerships, which offer a critical new opportunity and challenge, are welcome but have thus far failed to generate cohesive and coherent action. The United Nations health-related organizations, namely, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund and UNAIDS, have reached out and partnered with the World Bank, the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation to enhance dialogue and coordination. The creation of this group, the so-called H8, represents an encouraging step towards achieving increased coherence among key players inside and outside the United Nations system.

96. In order to push for decisive and coherent action, I have convened the leaders of United Nations-related entities and prominent non-United Nations figures from foundations, the private sector, civil society and academia to explore new opportunities in global health, discuss the strategic role of the United Nations in shaping the future of global health, and focus on critical priorities, in particular building functioning and affordable health systems, advancing progress on women's health, especially maternal health, and pushing for action on addressing neglected tropical diseases.

97. Upcoming intergovernmental meetings such as the High-level Event on the Millennium Development Goals and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, to be held at Doha in November–December 2008, will offer opportunities to push for action on this front, and I encourage all stakeholders to continue to build on the current momentum in order to finally end the senseless suffering.

C. Countering terrorism

98. The threat of terrorism to international peace, security and development is significant and affects people in every part of the world. The United Nations has itself suffered terrorism-related losses, most recently in the wake of the 11 December 2007 attack on the United Nations offices in Algiers. My thoughts are with the victims and their loved ones, whose sacrifice will be remembered.

99. The two-year review of the implementation of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, which will be held in September 2008, provides us with an opportunity to recommit ourselves to combating this scourge. The Strategy, drafted and adopted by the General Assembly in 2006, lays out concrete measures for responding to the conditions conducive to the spread of terrorism, preventing and combating terrorism in all its forms, strengthening the individual and collective capacity of States and the United Nations to do so, and ensuring the protection of human rights and the rule of law. The adoption of the Strategy has demonstrated the important role that the United Nations can play in curbing this threat, but only its implementation will solidify our relevance in this area. The positive reports coming out of the various meetings of the Assembly on the Strategy inspire me with confidence in our ability to succeed.

100. The main responsibility for implementing the Strategy falls on Member States. Nonetheless, various Secretariat departments, specialized agencies and United Nations funds and programmes contribute to this important endeavour—individually, collectively and with partners. In Tunis, in November 2007, the United Nations, in partnership with the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its Islamic Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, held an International Conference on Terrorism: Dimensions, Threats and Countermeasures. The United Nations also collaborated with Member States and regional organizations in holding, in May 2007, the Vienna Symposium to Discuss Practical Measures to Implement the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy.

101. The United Nations Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force, which brings together 24 entities of the United Nations system, has worked on system-wide implementation efforts and provided implementation support to Member States. The Task Force has established nine working groups in areas of the Strategy where coordination and cooperation across the United Nations system can add value. The topic areas include the link between conflict prevention/resolution and terrorism, radicalization and extremism that lead to terrorism, victims of terrorism, prevention/response to attacks involving weapons of mass destruction, financing of terrorism, use of the Internet for terrorist purposes, protection of vulnerable targets, and protection of human rights while countering terrorism. In addition, the Task Force is also working to enhance the ability of the United Nations to help, upon their request, interested Member States implement the Strategy in an integrated manner via a user-friendly interface with the United Nations system.

102. I have also asked the Department of Safety and Security to focus on prevention and mitigation measures relating to United Nations personnel operating in hostile environments. At the same time, preventive measures depend on the effective cooperation of Member States. In its resolution 59/276 (of 23 December 2004), the General Assembly emphasized that “the primary responsibility for ensuring the safety and security of United Nations staff and premises rests with the host country”. Accordingly, the United Nations is engaged in renewed dialogue to determine where enhanced cooperation and coordination with host-country authorities can be achieved. This work has been given additional impetus by the recurrent statements of extremist groups threatening to target humanitarian organizations. In February of this year, I appointed an Independent Panel on Safety and Security of United Nations Personnel and Premises Worldwide, headed by Lakhdar Brahimi and composed of international experts in the field. Its report, released in June, recognizes that risk management is not consistently understood or applied by all actors. It calls for a review of the size of the United Nations staff presence and the manner in which the system does business in light of security considerations. I am carefully examining the report and will be taking follow-up action. As a first step, and on the recommendation of the report, I have suggested establishing an independent accountability procedure to review the responsibilities of the key individuals and offices concerned in the Algiers attack. I am committed to working towards ensuring a safer and better environment for this Organization in the pursuit of its noble tasks.

103. Strategic partnerships among Member States, the United Nations system, regional and sub-regional organizations and civil society remain crucial in the fight against terrorism. We must continue to work together to implement the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy and, through our efforts, to create a more secure world.

D. Disarmament and non-proliferation

104. The risks inherent in the very existence of weapons of mass destruction, especially nuclear weapons, are universally recognized. I welcome recent initiatives aimed at achieving a world free of nuclear weapons, as well as reductions of nuclear arsenals and reduced reliance on nuclear weapons. However, further reductions in strategic and non-strategic stockpiles, greater transparency, de-alerting and a diminished role for nuclear weapons in security policies are needed.

105. The year 2008 marks the fortieth anniversary of the opening for signature of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. The Treaty must be strengthened and trust in it must be rebuilt, as part of a broader process of reaffirming the rule of law as well as the importance of multilateralism. Preparations for the 2010 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty are proceeding satisfactorily.

106. I support efforts for a peaceful political solution regarding concerns over the nuclear programme of the Islamic Republic of Iran and urge the implementation of all measures to build confidence in its exclusively peaceful nature.

107. I am encouraged by the continued determination and efforts by States to bring the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty into force as soon as possible. I am pleased to report progress in the implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction. States parties have developed a focused programme on national, regional and international measures to improve biosafety and biosecurity. To support these activities, an Implementation Support Unit has been set up within the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat.

108. Efforts continue in the Conference on Disarmament to overcome the long-standing deadlock over its priorities. In January 2008, I urged Members to forestall arms races, reduce tensions and free resources for achieving the Millennium Development Goals. Successful negotiations on a fissile material ban and substantive discussions on preventing the placement of weapons in outer space, nuclear disarmament and security assurances depend on high-level leadership and political support.

109. Controlling conventional weapons remains central to United Nations disarmament efforts. I have reinforced the United Nations Coordinating Action on Small Arms mechanism under which standards on small arms control are now being developed. Strong calls to address the humanitarian impact of cluster munitions have been answered with the adoption in May of the Convention on Cluster Munitions.

110. The revitalization of multilateral disarmament efforts is within reach. Full implementation of existing multilateral disarmament and non-proliferation agreements and the achievement of their universality remain a major challenge. Strengthening existing regional mechanisms and developing effective partnerships, in accordance with chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, would help bolster progress and unlock the current disarmament stalemate.

111. The establishment of the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat in 2007 increased the advocacy potential of the Organization. Under the leadership of its High Representative, the Office has effectively promoted greater awareness of the challenges posed by disarmament and non-proliferation and has enhanced its engagement and cooperation with Member States, intergovernmental organizations and civil society.

Chapter IV

Creating a stronger United Nations through full accountability

112. In order to deliver on the increasing demands for our services, we need a stronger, more effective and modern Organization. Based on mandates agreed by world leaders at the 2005 World Summit and subsequent General Assembly mandates and changes made by the Secretary-General, a large number of wide-ranging reforms are now being implemented.

113. In order to strengthen the Organization's overall accountability framework, I have called for the establishment of a new accountability compact with senior managers. I am committed to ensuring that there is accountability within the Secretariat, flowing both ways between me, to senior managers, and staff. I am also taking steps to strengthen the Secretariat's accountability to Member States for ensuring that the Organization is well managed, upholding individual and collective integrity, and delivering results.

114. I am asking Member States to be accountable to the Organization and to each other, by providing sufficient political, financial and human resources to implement the mandates given and by living up to their intergovernmental commitments.

115. Further, I hope that over the next few years we will all work, the Secretariat and Member States included, on increasing our accountability to the global public, in whose name we all serve, and to those we are assisting at the country level. Accountability goes beyond answering to those who have delegated authority to us: it also means taking into account the interests of those affected by our actions.

A. The Secretariat, the intergovernmental machinery, regional organizations, and global constituencies

116. When I took my oath of office, I promised to breathe new life into the Secretariat. In my address to the General Assembly last September, I spoke of building a stronger United Nations for a better world. I am taking steps to reform the Secretariat, and I am also committed to working with Member States to ensure that our intergovernmental machinery meets the changing and growing demands on the United Nations today.

1. The Secretariat

117. To enable us to do the job expected of us, we must have a strong, empowered Secretariat that has a management infrastructure built around achieving results. For this reason, I proposed a new accountability architecture, including the full implementation of results-based management and enterprise risk management. A results-based management approach requires managers to state clearly what they intend to achieve and to align their staff and financial resources with these goals. It will also require managers themselves to monitor and evaluate their programmes regularly and systematically in order to identify problems and take corrective actions so as to increase the likelihood of delivering the intended results. To this end, the senior managers' compacts, which are shared with staff, continue to provide a transparent means for reflecting goals, highlighting priorities and assessing whether results have been achieved.

118. As the Secretariat becomes less Headquarters-based and more operational, it will require different skill sets among its staff. Anticipated retirements—for example, 23.3 per cent of staff at the Director level will retire in the next three years—offer an opportunity to update the staff profile to better meet emerging needs. To this end, the Secretariat is proactively conducting workforce planning, improving its recruitment processes, and proposing contract terms and conditions of service that will increase the likelihood of attracting and retaining high-calibre staff. Staff mobility is essential to producing a more versatile and multi-skilled workforce which can rise to today's complex challenges. I am committed to ensuring that gender equality is given high priority in our staffing policies.

119. The Secretariat is also making itself more responsive to the needs of the field by reforming its procurement policies and procedures. Comprehensive guidelines and controls will be implemented. Professionalism is being enhanced through intensified training and better use of technology, with strengthened emphasis on ethics and transparency.

120. The new system of the administration of justice approved by the General Assembly in 2007 will further advance the goal of accountability and better management in dealing with internal employment-related disputes. A strengthened, integrated Office of the Ombudsman, which includes a Mediation Division, will form a critical "informal" pillar in this system, identifying and resolving problems at the earliest opportunity, thereby averting time-consuming and costly formal adjudication. The new internal justice system is anticipated to be in place by January 2009.

121. Taking full advantage of information and communications technology (ICT) is central to improving efficiency and effectiveness and strengthening accountability. Since August 2007, the Chief Information Technology Officer has spearheaded the drive for a strong and unified ICT strategy. One important effort under way entails introducing an enterprise resource planning (ERP) system to replace the current Integrated Management Information System. The goal is to build an integrated global information system that supports the effective management of human, financial and physical resources, while also incorporating streamlined processes and best practices. The ERP system, when implemented, will also enable the Organization's planned adoption of, and compliance with, the International Public Sector Accounting Standards.

122. To further enhance performance and responsiveness, I have also placed greater Secretariat-wide emphasis on documentation delivery in a timely, cost-effective manner. In its pursuit of greater efficiencies, the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management of the United Nations Secretariat chaired a meeting of conference managers from the United Nations system in June to explore the feasibility of applying the "Delivering as one" concept to the area of conference servicing and management. In order to meet our multilingual mandate, maximize cost-effectiveness and ensure the highest standards of quality in the delivery of language and conference services, it is crucial for us to join forces with our United Nations system partners to pool scarce conference-servicing resources and to coordinate efforts in the area of recruitment of language staff.

123. Although many of these management reforms are in an early stage and have not yet had time to bear full fruit, the Secretariat is in fact already seeing positive results. For example, the Department of Management's 2007 client satisfaction staff survey showed substantial increases in favourable responses to questions regarding improvements in efficiency of delivery of services (up 11 per cent from 2006), the streamlining and simplification of rules and processes (up 10 per cent from 2006) and the ability to access information from the Department of Management in a timely manner (up 11 per cent from 2006).

2. Intergovernmental machinery

124. The international political environment has changed significantly since the United Nations was founded, and in this context I attach great importance to the reform of the Security Council. I share Member States' growing recognition that there is no perfect solution and welcome their discussions on the possibility of intermediate or interim solutions.

125. I am following with interest efforts by the General Assembly aimed at modernization and at increasing its effectiveness. Holding interactive debates on current issues of critical importance to the international community like climate change, the Millennium Development Goals, management reform, human security and human trafficking has succeeded in stimulating valuable discussion and underscoring the importance of this universal forum.

126. In order to provide more opportunity for direct exchange, in the past year I began to brief the General Assembly periodically on my most recent activities. These informal meetings of the plenary have allowed for an interactive engagement with Member States, thereby providing an important additional tool for enhancing dialogue, transparency and accountability. I intend to continue this important practice.

127. Reforms proposed by Member States at the 2005 World Summit to strengthen the effectiveness of the Economic and Social Council in promoting a global partnership for development continued to be institutionalized in 2008. Most notably, during the high-level segment of its substantive session, the Council held its first Development Cooperation Forum and its second annual ministerial review. The Development Cooperation Forum discussed "how to make development cooperation more coherent and more effective" and developed valuable strategic input to the Doha Review Conference on Financing for Development and the Accra High-level Forum on Aid Effectiveness. During the annual ministerial review, eight countries—developing and developed—reported on the progress they had made towards achieving the goals and targets of the United Nations development agenda. Ministerial round tables addressed the question of how to put the world on a sustainable development path. I welcome and encourage an energized Council and look forward to its recommendations on measures that the international community can take to improve implementation of agreed development goals and promote sustainable development.

3. Cooperation with regional organizations

128. From the highest political level on down to the field, the United Nations and regional organizations are strengthening their partnerships and working more closely than ever in responding to the challenges of peacekeeping, peacemaking and post-conflict peacebuilding.

129. The Ten-Year Capacity-Building Programme frames our growing partnership with the African Union, the importance of which was also reflected in the debate in the Security Council on my report on the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations in the maintenance of international peace and security (S/2008/186). An important illustration is provided today in Darfur, where joint efforts are under way with the African Union both in peacekeeping and in promoting the political process.

130. In Asia, the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations joined forces to respond to the emergency needs of Myanmar following tropical cyclone Nargis. In November 2007, the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference undertook a joint effort to further the fight against terrorism. The Tunis Conference, mentioned in paragraph 100 above, provided an excellent opportunity to discuss and build understanding of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy as implementation efforts pick up. The United Nations also cooperated with the European Commission in implementing the European Union and Central Asia Strategy for a New Partnership, as well as with the Ibero-American General Secretariat in organizing the policy dialogue of Heads of State on social cohesion during the Seventeenth Ibero-American Summit held in Santiago in November 2007.

131. There is clear political recognition that regionalism as a component of multilateralism is necessary and feasible. I am optimistic that an effective sharing of responsibilities for peace and security between international and regional organizations, particularly in Africa, is now within reach.

B. Global constituencies

1. Strengthening partnerships with civil society

132. I am happy to report that not only has civil society's engagement with the work of the United Nations increased but it may also become more results-oriented, as reflected in targeted engagement on key thematic issues like development, human rights and climate change. It has become a well-established practice for the General Assembly to conduct interactive hearings with representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society and the private sector during all major United Nations conferences.

133. The number of civil society organizations involved in development work that were granted consultative status with the Economic and Social Council increased by 136 over the past year, from 3,051 in 2007 to 3,187 at the present time in 2008. Their active participation in multi-stakeholder dialogues on financing for development and sustainable development enriched both discussions and was reflected in the outcomes of intergovernmental meetings in these areas. There are 1,664 non-governmental organizations associated with the Department of Public Information of the United Nations Secretariat that support its mission to make the public around the world better aware of the work of the Organization.

134. Human rights were a major focus of innovative partnerships initiated with civil society. For the first time, the annual DPI/NGO Conference is scheduled to be held outside United Nations Headquarters; the Conference will be held in Paris, home to the signing of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The theme of the September 2008 event is "Reaffirming Human Rights for All: the Universal Declaration at 60". The Holocaust and the United Nations Outreach Programme initiated groundbreaking collaboration with public institutions in arranging four regional seminars designed to enhance the capacity of local staff at United Nations information centres worldwide to help "mobilize civil society for Holocaust remembrance and education, in order help prevent future acts of genocide".

135. A new outreach programme on "Remembrance of Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade" has been established, featuring participation by a number of civil society groups, including academic institutions, collaboration with which is also the focus of initiatives launched this year to invigorate partnership.

136. Collaboration between civil society and the United Nations continued in support of internationally agreed development goals. In the "Stand Up and Speak Out against Poverty" initiative, United Nations information centres worked with the Millennium Campaign Office and civil society to promote awareness of the Millennium Development Goals. An estimated 43 million people participated worldwide.

2. Engaging the business community

137. The business community is an increasingly important partner in achieving United Nations goals, particularly those related to sustainable development, including climate change and peace and conflict. For example, in February 2008, the Organization hosted the Third Investor Summit on Climate Risk, through which public treasuries, institutional investors and financial services firms pledged to invest $10 billion over two years in clean technologies.

138. Almost all United Nations organizations, funds and programmes have staff dedicated to working with business in a wide range of engagements. Additionally, the United Nations Global Compact, through its thousands of business participants located in over 120 countries, is a source of significant avenues for the advancement of United Nations principles in business communities globally, particularly in developing countries.

139. The United Nations has taken concrete steps to increase the effectiveness and accountability of the Organization's growing relationships with business. This February, the Organization launched a review of the "Guidelines between the United Nations and the Business Community" to reflect experiences across the Organization. Also under way is the development of a new United Nations-business website which will better facilitate identification of partners. Additionally, the "Partnership Assessment Tool” and the Business Guide to Partnering with NGOs and the United Nations: Report 2007/2008 were both released in the past year.

140. Achieving United Nations goals, especially the Millennium Development Goals, will require more and deeper collaboration with the private sector. The September 2008 High-level Event on the Goals will include the business community in discussions on necessary steps to be taken to accelerate their achievement. Additional opportunities to increase and enhance engagement with the private sector must be explored at the broad organizational level and also within individual organizations, funds and programmes.

Chapter V

Conclusion

141. The United Nations is situated at the nexus of some of the most important and complex issues facing the world at present. Today, more than ever, thanks to its universal membership and global reach, the United Nations can effect positive global change, making the world a safer, more prosperous and more just place for all people. During my tenure, I am committed to seizing this opportunity and ensuring that we work with all partners to not only deliver results to those most in need but also help the world address global threats through securing global goods. These goals will not be reached, however, unless full accountability becomes both our organizing principle and our operational guideline. We must take decisive action and allow the good of humanity to be our beacon call. I believe we can deliver a better world to future generations, and, indeed, to this generation. I look forward to working with all Member States towards meeting this awesome and crucial challenge.

<sup>a</sup>No new global or regional data are available; data presented are from the 2007 report (A/62/1).

<sup>b</sup>Represented by the urban population living in households with at least one of the four characteristics: lack of access to improved drinking water, lack of access to improved sanitation, overcrowding (three or more persons per room) and dwellings made of non-durable material.

The decrease in the percentage of populations living in slum conditions is mostly due to a change in the definition of adequate sanitation. In 2005, only a proportion of households using pit latrines were considered slum households, whereas in 1990 and 2001, all households using pit latrines had been counted as slum households. The change affects estimates mostly in those countries where the use of pit latrines is more widespread, such as those in Sub-Saharan Africa.

PART ONE

Political and security questions

International peace and security

The year 2008 brought new challenges for international peace and security, as the United Nations worked to address several conflict situations, mainly in Africa, and further incidents of international terrorism, while supporting the efforts of post-conflict countries to sustain peace and stability, rebuild national institutions, and restore economic development. The Security Council debated ways to strengthen collective security, stressing the importance of an effective multilateral system to better address global threats. It also reviewed UN assistance in helping States in conflict reform their security sector within the framework of the rule of law, and strengthening the Organization's role in mediation and settlement of disputes. The Council took measures to strengthen the Department of Political Affairs so as to make it more effective in supporting UN peace efforts in countries emerging from conflict. The Peacebuilding Commission enhanced its involvement in that regard by establishing a country-specific configuration for the Central African Republic, bringing to four the number of countries emerging from conflict under consideration by the Commission. The Commission also conducted biannual reviews of the Burundi and Sierra Leone configurations and conducted missions to Guinea-Bissau to assess that country's needs. During the year, the United Nations maintained 12 political and peacebuilding missions and offices.

The scale and frequency of international terrorist acts increased during the year, especially in Pakistan and Afghanistan, and reached countries previously untouched by the scourge. Concerned at the escalating situation, the Security Council, on 9 December, held a debate on threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist attacks around the world. The Council called upon all Member States to redouble efforts to tackle global terrorism by dedicating attention to bringing to justice the perpetrators, facilitators and masterminds of terrorist acts. The Council pledged to continue following developments in order to organize as efficiently as possible its efforts in combating terrorism, reaffirmed the importance of its resolutions and statements on terrorism, and stressed the need for implementing them. The Counter-Terrorism Committee reported significant progress by Member States in implementation of the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, adopted by the General Assembly in 2006.

The year marked the sixtieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping. The General Assembly, at a special commemorative session on 7 November to observe that event, adopted the Declaration on the Occasion of the Sixtieth Anniversary of United Nations Peacekeeping, in which it paid tribute to the hundreds of thousands of men and women who, in the past 60 years, had served under the UN flag in more than 60 peacekeeping operations, and honoured the memory of more than 2,400 of them who had died in the cause of peace. To strengthen its peacekeeping capacity, the Organization considered strategies for conducting complex peacekeeping operations. It stepped up efforts to enhance the safety and security of peacekeeping personnel, and considered a comprehensive report by the Secretary-General on conduct and discipline among UN peacekeeping personnel and initiatives to improve their welfare. A decrease of 64 per cent in allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by peacekeeping personnel reflected the Organization's concerted efforts to address that issue. At the end of 2008, there were 16 peacekeeping missions, served by 112,307 uniformed and civilian personnel.

Regarding the financial position of UN peacekeeping operations, expenditures increased by 21.7 per cent to $6,265.8 million for the 2007–2008 financial year, compared to $5,148.1 million for the previous reporting period; the increase was due mainly to the start-up of two missions and the rapid expansion of another.

Security sector reform

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session (New York, 10 March–4 April and 3 July) [A/62/19], emphasized that security sector reform was an important aspect of multidimensional peacekeeping operations. The establishment of an effective, professional and accountable security sector was one of the critical elements in the transition from UN peacekeeping to sustainable peace and development, including economic recovery. The Special Committee stressed that the sustainability of security sector reform depended on national ownership, sustained international community support, including bilateral donors, and the engagement and commitment of the host countries and societies involved. The United Nations and the international community should avoid imposing external models of security sector reform and concentrate on strengthening the capacity of the host country to develop, manage and implement reform through inclusive consultation processes at all stages of transition from peacekeeping to peacebuilding and sustainable development. The UN approach to security sector reform should be flexible, adaptable and tailored to the country concerned.

The Special Committee acknowledged the leading role of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) in carrying out security sector reform activities in peacekeeping missions, and the significant contribution the Committee itself could make to security sector reform issues in UN peacekeeping operations. It noted efforts to develop a UN approach to security sector reform, as it pertained to peacekeeping operations, outlined in the Secretary-General's report on the subject (see below), and recognized the need for such an approach to be holistic, coherent and better coordinated to ensure comprehensive implementation in line with national strategies and good distribution of resources and activities, and to avoid duplication.

A security sector reform unit should be established in the Office of Rule of Law and Security Institutions, and the Secretariat should elaborate guidelines and advise on the implementation of an integrated approach to security sector reform in peacekeeping missions in consultation with Member States. The Committee stressed the importance of lessons learned and best practices in that regard.

The Special Committee believed that security sector reform should take place within a broad framework of the rule of law, contribute to the overall strengthening of UN rule-of-law activities in peacekeeping operations, and not be duplicative. To that end, it underlined the importance of coordination to ensure consistency and coherence.

The Special Committee requested that the work on clarifying the relationship between security sector reform and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration be completed. It reiterated the importance of incorporating gender perspectives in security sector reform programmes.

Security Council consideration. On 12 May [meetings 5889 & 5890], the Security Council held a debate on the maintenance of international peace and security: the Council's role in supporting security sector reform. It had before it the Secretary-General's report on the role of the United Nations in supporting this reform [A/62/659-S/2008/39], submitted in response to presidential statement S/PRST/2007/3 [YUN 2007, p. 39] and General Assembly resolution 61/291 [ibid., p. 75]. The report described the evolution of the UN approach to security and the role security sector reform played in contributing to a vision of security based on the rule of law. It reviewed UN system experience in supporting security sector reform and key lessons that had emerged. The report also set out principles that should guide a UN approach to such reform, outlined specific ways in which the Organization might best be placed to support those reforms, and highlighted the centrality of partnerships in that regard.

According to the report, States and societies defined and pursued security according to their particular contexts, histories, cultures and needs; no single model of a security sector existed. Effective and accountable security sectors, however, had a number of common features: a legal and/or constitutional framework providing for the legitimate and accountable use of force in accordance with universally accepted human rights norms and standards, including sanctioning mechanisms for the use of force and setting out the roles and responsibilities of different actors; an institutionalized system of governance and management with mechanisms for the direction and oversight of security, including systems for financial management and review, as well as the protection of human rights; capacities, including structures, personnel, equipment and resources, to provide effective security; mechanisms for interaction among security actors, including modalities for coordination and co-operation among different actors, based on their respective constitutional/legal roles and responsibilities; and a culture of service, which promoted unity, integrity, discipline, impartiality and respect for human rights among security actors and shaped the manner in which they carried out their duties.

The United Nations existed to support the maintenance of international peace and security and to assist Governments and peoples in building a world in which freedom from fear and want was a reality for all. The lessons of the past 60 years had illustrated that those goals were fundamentally intertwined; security, development and human rights were preconditions for sustainable peace. While Member States were the primary providers of security, the UN task was to support national actors in achieving their security, peace and development goals. To that end, the development of effective and accountable security institutions, on the basis of non-discrimination, full respect for human rights, and the rule of law, was essential. The United Nations had been involved for many years in assisting national actors in enhancing or re-establishing security, particularly in the aftermath of conflict. Despite that extensive experience, support for security sector reform remained largely an ad hoc undertaking. The Organization had not elaborated principles and standards to guide its support for national actors in enhancing or re-establishing security. It lacked a system-wide approach for delivering coherent assistance, and its capacity and resources to support national authorities were relatively weak.

A holistic and coherent UN approach to security sector reform was vital to provide a basis for a transparent framework for reform, establish international principles consistent with the UN Charter and human rights laws and standards, and facilitate assistance to national authorities and their international partners engaged in security sector reform. It would also better position the Organization to support national and regional authorities in the facilitation, mobilization and coordination of assistance and resources for security sector reform. Such an approach would increase the effectiveness and efficiency of UN efforts, thereby contributing to the timely withdrawal of UN peace-keeping operations, facilitating early recovery from conflict, and helping build the conditions necessary for sustainable peace and development. It would also ensure that personnel in the field received professional and timely guidance.

Following a review of the lessons learned from the UN system and Member States' experience in supporting national security sector reform, the report set out core principles to guide a UN approach to such reform. The goal should be to support States and societies in developing effective, inclusive and accountable security institutions so as to contribute to international peace and security, sustainable development and the enjoyment of human rights; reform should be undertaken on the basis of a national decision, a Council mandate and/or an Assembly resolution, the UN Charter and human rights laws and standards; support for reform should be anchored on national ownership and the commitment of involved States and societies; and the UN approach should be made flexible, country-, region- and/or environment- and stakeholder-specific, gender-sensitive, and address and prevent sexual and gender-based violence. In addition, a security sector reform framework and a clearly defined strategy were essential in planning and implementing post-conflict activities. The effectiveness of international support for security sector reform would be shaped by the integrity of motive, the level of accountability, the amount of resources provided, coordination of national and international partners' efforts, monitoring and regular evaluation, and specific benchmarks to track and maintain progress.

A number of immediate priorities were recommended for the development of a UN approach to security sector reform in support of national actors: developing UN policies and guidelines; strengthening strategic advisory and specialist capacities; strengthening field capacity for security sector reform; assessing gaps and resource requirements; designating lead entities; enhancing the coordination and delivery of support; building partnerships to provide effective support, expertise and adequate resources to national security sector reform processes; and establishing a UN inter-agency security sector reform support unit to deliver on those priorities.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 May [meeting 5890], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/14 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the statement by its President of 20 February 2007 and emphasizes that security sector reform is an essential element of any stabilization and reconstruction process in post-conflict environments. The Council recognizes that the establishment of an effective, professional and accountable security sector is one of the necessary elements for laying the foundations for peace and sustainable development.

The Council welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General on security sector reform and takes note of his report entitled "Securing peace and development: the role of the United Nations in supporting security sector reform" of 23 January 2008.

The Council commends Slovakia and South Africa for their joint initiative in holding the workshop entitled "International Workshop on Enhancing United Nations Support for Security Sector Reform in Africa: Towards an African Perspective" in Cape Town, South Africa, on 7 and 8 November 2007 and takes note of the letter dated 20 November 2007 from the Permanent Representatives of Slovakia and South Africa to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General. The Council encourages further similar activities.

The Council recognizes that security sector reform is a long-term process and reiterates that it is the sovereign right and primary responsibility of the country concerned to determine its national approach and priorities for security sector reform. It should be a nationally owned process that is rooted in the particular needs and conditions of the country in question.

The Council underlines that the strong support of the United Nations and the international community is also critical in strengthening national capacities, thereby reinforcing national ownership, which is crucial for the sustainability of the process.

The Council recognizes the important role that the United Nations has played in supporting national security sector reform efforts and underlines the need for its continued engagement. In this regard, the Council emphasizes the need to develop a holistic and coherent United Nations approach to security sector reform as recommended by the Secretary-General, in close consultation with Member States.

The Council underlines that United Nations support to security sector reform must take place within a broad framework of the rule of law and should contribute to the overall strengthening of the United Nations rule of law activities as well as wider reconstruction and development efforts. This will require coordination with all relevant United Nations actors, in particular the Rule of Law Coordination and Resource Group, to ensure coherence of approach.

The Council emphasizes the important role that the Peacebuilding Commission, through its integrated peacebuilding strategies, can play in ensuring continuous international support to countries emerging from conflict. The Council also recognizes the importance of continued close cooperation and partnerships with non-United Nations actors, in particular regional, sub-regional and other intergovernmental organizations, including international financial institutions and bilateral donors, as well as non-governmental organizations.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to include, wherever appropriate, recommendations related to security sector reform in his periodic reports on United Nations operations mandated by the Council.

Strengthening collective security

On 19 November [meeting 6017], the Security Council considered the issue of strengthening collective security, having before it a concept paper submitted by Costa Rica [S/2008/697] entitled “Strengthening collective security through general regulation and reduction of armaments: the safest road to peace and development”. Outlining the objectives and challenges, the paper stated that the world would not enjoy development without security, nor security without development, and neither without respect for human rights. Unless those goals were simultaneously advanced, none would succeed. Despite their reaffirmation in the 2005 World Summit Outcome contained in Assembly resolution 60/1 [YUN 2005, p. 48], multilateralism, the notion of collective security and the authority of the Security Council as its primary guarantor had seen their foundations eroded. The international system needed to develop a common vision and recommit to multilateralism and the rule of law. Collective security depended on effective cooperation among the United Nations and regional organizations. Regional arrangements and organizations played a pivotal role in promoting and maintaining international peace and security. A constructive and proactive interaction between regional arrangements and the Council should be developed further. An enhanced system of regional arrangements, duly coordinated, mandated and supported by the United Nations—in particular by the Council—could help prevent and address conflict, including its root causes and triggers. The Council’s responsibility and mandate went beyond maintenance of international peace and security, and included the obligation to promote its establishment and maintenance. Current developments required that consensus on major threats should be built and translated into concrete action, including addressing the root causes of those challenges.

The Council President expressed the view that members had an obligation to reflect upon the role entrusted to the Council to promote international peace and security, and the current meeting provided an opportunity to consider the instruments that could be used to achieve the Charter objectives, including the strengthening of both regional and global multilateral mechanisms and arms control and regulation. The dialogue should also focus on action that would lead to a more rational use of resources, without undermining security, to ensure greater development. It was a particularly opportune moment, as arms races were developing around the world and crises, such as the food, environmental, energy and economic crises, were impeding efforts to improve the lives of those condemned to poverty, ignorance and ill-health. The time had come to recognize the link between the squandering of resources on arms and the need for those resources to advance to greater levels of human development.

Sergio Duarte, the High Representative for Disarmament Affairs, in addressing the Council, said that achieving a sense of collective security was a vital step towards preventing conflict. The strengthening of collective security could build trust between States and pave the way for agreements and cooperation in other fields, steadily tying countries together in shared interests, better understanding and mutual support. No serious discussion on the limitation or elimination of armaments could avoid the topic of improving transparency. Predictable and transparent State behaviour could build confidence and thereby promote collective security. He welcomed the Council’s recognition that progress in disarmament and the regulation of armaments could make important contributions to strengthening international security.

On 19 November, the Security Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2008/43 (see p. 592), stressed the vital importance of an effective multilateral system for better addressing the multifaceted and interconnected challenges and threats confronting the world and achieving progress in peace and security, development and human rights—the pillars of the UN system and the foundations for collective security and well-being. It expressed its support for multilateralism as one of the most important means for resolving security concerns in accordance with international law.

Mediation and settlement of disputes

On 23 September [meeting 5979], the Security Council, as part of its consideration on the maintenance of international peace and security, discussed the mediation and settlement of disputes. The Council extended an invitation, under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure, to former Special Adviser Lakhdar Brahimi to attend the meeting.

The Council had before it a concept paper [S/2008/590] submitted by Burkina Faso, which stated that the settlement of disputes by peaceful means had always been a major concern of the international community. Over time, the increasingly frequent recourse to mediation, conducted by actors with widely varying backgrounds, had made it one of the principal alternatives for the settlement of contemporary conflicts. With over a half century of experience, the United Nations had established effective mechanisms for the prevention and settlement of conflicts through mediation. At the subregional and regional levels, initiatives, mechanisms and institutions were also in place for the governance of the actions of organizations and States in mediation and other peaceful dispute settlement methods. Mediation had a greater likelihood of success at those levels, as the parties to the dispute and the mediator shared the same geographical, historical, economic, social, cultural and demographic background. Therefore, the international community, including the United Nations, should provide support for local processes, especially financial and logistical support. Several non-State structures also offered expertise in mediation and settlement of conflicts. However, while the several actors, mechanisms, structures and activities enriched the conduct of mediation, they could cause complications or even stall the mediation owing to lack of coordination.

In addition to promoting mediation as a method of dispute settlement, the high-level meeting of the Council aimed to: evaluate UN activities and mechanisms in mediation and review the implementation of resolution 1625(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 155] on conflict prevention, particularly in Africa, as well as the effectiveness of other relevant Council resolutions and declarations; examine ways to make UN mediation more effective at the operational and institutional levels; evaluate the functioning and contribution to conflict resolution of subregional and regional mediation mechanisms, and make proposals for enhancing their effectiveness; explore ways to improve the coordination of mediation activities, such as the appointment of joint mediators; provide a forum for exchanging experiences in mediation among key figures, civil society, and specialized centres; and assess the influence of sociocultural factors and ownership of the process. The discussions could also focus on the role, especially of the Council and the Secretary-General, in conducting mediation, and how it could be enhanced; the contribution of regional and subregional organizations; support for regional mediation initiatives conducted by Member States and regional and subregional bodies; and the role of women and civil society in the mediation process.

During the debate, the Council President said that mediation required confidence and coordination between the mediator, the parties to the conflict, local actors and all partners. In crisis mediation, three essential elements should be highlighted: ownership by the major parties of the process to resolve the crisis; a final document satisfying each protagonist and providing answers to fundamental questions regarding the onset of the crisis, while remaining even-handed; and appropriate follow-up mechanisms to allow the parties to overcome obstacles and to strengthen dialogue and confidence.

The Secretary-General, addressing the Council, said that pursuant to the 2005 World Summit Outcome contained in General Assembly resolution 60/1 [YUN 2005, p. 48], a small Mediation Support Unit (MSU) had been established in the Department of Political Affairs to provide operational support to peace processes and be a repository of knowledge for mediators. During 2008, MSU established a standby team of mediation experts that could be deployed anywhere in the world in a matter of days. In the first half of the year, MSU provided support to some 15 peace processes, as well as to the Southern Africa Development Community, the Economic Community of Central African States and the African Union to strengthen their mediation capacities. However, its funding in the regular budget was meagre, with no funds for programme activities. The Secretary-General urged the Council to ensure that mediation efforts had the requisite resources. As past experience suggested that an effective mediation effort throughout the conflict cycle was necessary for effective peacekeeping and peacebuilding, it was critical that the Council provide the same support to enhance the structures, processes, tools and resources required for mediation as for peacekeeping and peacebuilding activities.

Mr. Brahimi told the Council that a mediator should include in the peace process all parties to the conflict. He or she should never act to placate his or her own ego; rather, the person should put the concerns and aspirations of all the people of the country concerned at the forefront. In the case of Afghanistan, the interests of the Afghan people should override those of the United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, neighbours and any other country. However, there should be no misunderstanding: mediation that was inclusive and involved dialogue with all parties did not mean that any offence, by anyone, should be condoned or ignored. The mediators' hand would be significantly strengthened when the principles and approaches they adhered to in conducting the mediation were seen to be supported by all Council and UN Members as a whole. That meant, in particular, that there had to be only one channel of communication with the parties. The mediator, particularly a UN mediator, needed all the help possible, especially from the Council. That help should begin with giving the mediator the time and space needed to work out solutions, overcome prejudices and reconcile competing narratives of the conflict. It meant resisting pressure to initiate competing mediating efforts and standing firm against predetermined or hastily conducted agreements that were imposed from outside or did not address the core issues. The credibility of the United Nations and the world's faith in its relevance suffered greatly when the mediation of conflicts was left unattended for long periods or ignored altogether, as well as when the Council was perceived to be more concerned about the suffering of some than others, selective in the enforcement of its resolutions, or employing double standards. The damage to that credibility on some issues would affect its mediation efforts everywhere. Mr. Brahimi concluded that the Organization's universality, impartiality and consistent adherence to the principles enshrined in its Charter were the most powerful weapons in a UN mediator's arsenal. If the Organization equipped and supported its mediators well, they would be more likely to provide the help the victims of war demanded and achieve the peace the Council sought.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 September [meeting 5979], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/36 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and reaffirms its commitment to the pacific settlement of disputes, including through mediation, in conformity with the Charter, in particular Chapter VI thereof. The Council recalls all its relevant previous statements and resolutions.

The Council underlines the importance of mediation as a means of pacific settlement of disputes and encourages the further use of this mechanism in the settlement of disputes. The Council reaffirms the crucial role of the United Nations in this regard.

The Council affirms that, as the organ with the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, it has a responsibility to promote and support mediation as an important means for the pacific settlement of disputes.

The Council emphasizes the importance of the actions undertaken by the Secretary-General, in using his good offices and his representatives and special envoys, and United Nations mediators in promoting mediation and in the pacific settlement of disputes. The Council takes note of the establishment of the Mediation Support Unit of the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, which provides expertise for supporting the mediation efforts of the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that mediation processes conducted by or under the auspices of the United Nations are guided by the purposes and principles of the Organization and that mediators are experienced, impartial, have a good knowledge of all the stakeholders, facts and circumstances of any dispute to which they have been assigned, and are provided with the necessary support and flexibility to approach mediation according to the specifics of the disputes; to this end, the Council encourages the Secretary-General to consider ways to strengthen the capabilities of the Secretariat.

The Council notes the important contribution of regional and subregional organizations, civil society and other stakeholders to the pacific settlement of disputes, in particular through mediation, and commends them for their efforts. The Council is resolved to strengthen United Nations support to such mediation efforts through improved cooperation, in particular in Africa; the Council encourages other bilateral and multilateral partners to do likewise.

The Council underlines the importance of engaging the potential and the existing capacities and capabilities of regional and subregional organizations in mediation efforts, and welcomes the promotion of regional approaches to the pacific settlement of disputes.

The Council notes that women have an important role to play in the settlement of disputes, stresses the importance of their equal participation and full involvement in all efforts for the maintenance and promotion of peace and security, and calls upon the Secretary-General and the heads of regional and subregional organizations to take into account the gender aspect during the selection of mediators, as well as the approach and perspective that women can render in mediation processes.

The Council highlights the importance of considering peacebuilding and recovery requirements in the mediation process to help to build the foundations for sustainable peace, and stresses that the Peacebuilding Commission has a role to play in the promotion of mediation.

The Council emphasizes the need to ensure the coherence of mediation processes by or under the auspices of the United Nations, through the improved coordination of efforts with other actors, including regional and subregional organizations, in order to enhance the effectiveness of international efforts.

The Council also stresses that no mediation initiative can be viable without the ownership and full involvement of all relevant parties to the dispute throughout the process. The Council reaffirms that conflict prevention and the pacific settlement of disputes should be at the core of mediation efforts.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to submit, within six months of the adoption of the present statement, a report on mediation and its support activities which takes into account experiences of the United Nations and other key actors and makes recommendations for enhancing the effectiveness of United Nations mediation.

Natural resources and conflict

On 25 July [A/63/191], Belgium requested that the item entitled "Natural resources and conflict" be included in the agenda item on the maintenance of international peace and security by the sixty-third session of the General Assembly. Belgium stated that the link between natural resources and conflict was well-documented both at the conceptual level and in the context of specific conflict situations. It referred to the 2007 thematic debate on the issue by the Security Council [YUN 2007, p. 41], and the similar discussion by the Working Group on Lessons Learned of the Peacebuilding Commission on 8 May 2008 [A/63/92-S/2008/417]. Belgium noted that the policy debate on the issue had long been focused on particular countries or narrowed down to specific dimensions. An approach to better understand the different aspects of the issue was to make a distinction between the successive phases of a (potential) conflict. Belgium was convinced that the question of natural resources and conflict was multifaceted and deserved a broad debate. In that regard, the General Assembly offered an inclusive and comprehensive forum for such a debate, the aim of which would be to: stimulate further reflection on how the exploitation of natural resources could play a role in certain conflicts, and on how to ensure that natural resources became a source of development; better understand what the international community could do to assist Governments in that area, and what the responsibilities of the various concerned actors were, including the private sector and regional organizations; and take stock of ongoing initiatives and explore how their effectiveness could be strengthened.

In September [A/63/250], the Assembly's General Committee decided to postpone to a later date its consideration of the question of the inclusion of the item entitled "Natural resources and conflict" in the Assembly's draft agenda.

Conflict prevention

The General Assembly, by decision 62/554 of 15 September, deferred consideration of the item entitled "Prevention of armed conflict" and decided to include it in the draft agenda of its sixty-third (2008) session. On 24 December, the Assembly, by decision 63/552, decided that the item "Prevention of armed conflict" would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Review Summit on armed violence and development. In a 16 October letter [A/63/494], Switzerland transmitted to the Secretary-General the Geneva Declaration on Armed Violence and Development adopted in June 2006 and the Summit Statement adopted at the Review Summit of the Declaration (Geneva, 12 September 2008). The Declaration acknowledged that armed violence and conflict impeded realization of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 51] and that conflict prevention, conflict resolution, violence reduction, human rights, good governance, and peacebuilding were key steps towards reducing poverty, promoting economic growth and improving people's lives.

On 17 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/23 (see p. 635), which took note of the Declaration and the resolve expressed in the Summit Statement to develop goals, targets and measurable indicators on armed violence and development as a complement to the MDGs.

Peacekeeping and prevention of armed conflict

Parliamentary hearing. The 2008 Parliamentary Hearing (New York, 20–21 November) [A/63/729] considered "Towards effective peacekeeping and the prevention of conflict: Delivering on our commitments". The hearing, attended by some 200 parliamentarians from over 60 countries, was conducted in four sessions on the responsibility to protect (Session I), sexual violence against women and children in conflict (Session II), integrating a human security approach into the work of the United Nations (Session III) and major challenges facing UN peacekeeping operations (Session IV). In resolution 63/24 of 18 November (see p. 1536), the General Assembly requested its President to submit a summary of the Hearing to its next session.

Implementation of Security Council resolution 1625(2005)

In response to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2007/31 [YUN 2007, p. 45], the Secretary-General submitted a January report [S/2008/18] on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1625(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 155] on conflict prevention, particularly in Africa. The report examined the Council's role in prevention, including preventive initiatives in Africa and more effective use of sanctions, as well as that of the Secretary-General through such measures as good offices, information-sharing regarding potential conflicts, mediation support and preventive field presence. It also reviewed national preventive capacity-building, including electoral assistance and building capacities for conflict management, building the capacity of regional organizations, and further developing system coherence and coordination on prevention.

The Secretary-General stated that, in recognition of its multidimensional nature, the United Nations was developing increasingly multifaceted approaches to conflict prevention, drawing on the cooperation of different actors. That comprehensive approach included structural prevention to address the root causes of conflict; operational prevention to ensure the effectiveness of early warning mechanisms, mediation, humanitarian access and response, the protection of civilians, and targeted sanctions in the face of immediate crises; and systemic prevention to prevent conflicts from spilling over into other States. The recognition that those different approaches should be linked so as to create a comprehensive conflict-prevention strategy had allowed for a more holistic and systemized approach to the maintenance of international peace and security and international collective security mechanisms. The Council's endorsement of the comprehensive approach to prevention was reflected in its focused activities in Africa, which was indicative of its intention to play a more proactive role in addressing conflict there. As for of the more effective use of sanctions, the Secretary-General stated that greater attention should be paid to implementing the recommendations of arms embargo monitoring groups and holding violators responsible.

It was also imperative that the Council broaden its responses and adopt a more comprehensive approach, including the development of norms and frameworks for ensuring that the activities of the business sector did not exacerbate or fuel conflicts. In that regard, the UN system had been working with private sector partners through the Global Compact [YUN 2000, p. 989] to promote corporate social responsibility. The Compact had developed instruments such as a conflict impact assessment and a risk-management tool to enable companies to measure their impact on the environment and make the requisite positive changes. The Council played a role in advancing that agenda, but more needed to be done to strengthen the international regulatory framework and encourage States to forcefully and constructively promote conflict-sensitive practices in their business sectors. The hardware used in conflict, including guns, tanks and landmines, was cheaply produced and widely sold, making it a hazard to peace. General Assembly recommendations aimed at reducing trafficking in small arms and light weapons had been unevenly and inadequately implemented. The Secretary-General called on Member States to renew their commitment in that regard.

Regarding his role in conflict prevention, the Secretary-General said that he relied on the Department of Political Affairs (DPA), as the operational arm of his mission of good offices, to keep him informed of potential conflict situations and provide strategies to keep tensions from escalating. He had submitted proposals to the Assembly for strengthening DPA, including its regional coverage, through the establishment of regional offices, and he suggested a Regional Office for the Great Lakes and Central Africa. He also proposed enhancing DPA's policy-planning capacity and mediation support function to assist Member States in responding to cross-cutting global issues, such as transnational organized crime networks, corruption and terrorism.

The Council and the Assembly continued to take parallel and supportive action for conflict prevention, but mechanisms needed to be enhanced to ensure regular, systematic briefings of the Council by the Secretariat on disputes or situations likely to endanger international peace and security. The oversight role of the Economic and Social Council was relevant to system coordination in matters of development cooperation and humanitarian assistance. The Security Council should continue to engage the Economic and Social Council and the Human Rights Council in facilitating the flow of information to it from UN funds, programmes and agencies.

The Secretary-General concluded that the United Nations was making progress in conflict prevention, particularly in Africa, including through a better-defined role for the Council. Those efforts had made the UN preventive system more attentive to early signs of rising tensions of potential conflict and more effective at transmitting that information to the Council. However, the gap between the rhetoric and the employment of effective preventive mechanisms had to be closed in order to operationalize prevention throughout the UN system, provide an adaptive system to respond to requests from Member States and regional organizations, support preventive efforts of the Assembly and the Council, and fulfil Member States' preventive mandates.

To enhance its preventive action capacity, the Secretary-General called on the Council to dispatch timely missions to assess situations in the field; increase use of the Arria Formula (Security Council informal consultative arrangement) or similar arrangements for informal discussions; maintain its focus on addressing cross-border threats to peace and security, notably the illicit trade in small arms and drugs and human trafficking; ensure the constructive use of sanctions and use reports of experts to motivate parties to resolve conflicts without violence; broaden the use of sanctions to non-state actors, and in that regard continue its 2007 debate on natural resources and conflict [YUN 2007, p. 41]; and develop a more structured relationship with the African Union (AU) Peace and Security Council, as called for in their 2007 joint communiqué [ibid., p. 110].

The Secretary-General called upon Member States to: strengthen UN preventive diplomacy and mediation support capacities, in particular, initiatives to strengthen DPA, including through expansion of regional field presences in Africa; combat cross-border and transnational threats to stability, including efforts to control the arms trade; and consider the deployment of integrated offices charged with building national capacities for conflict prevention in the aftermath of the drawdown of peacekeeping operations. Member States and the international community were urged to continue to address gender-based violence. Member States should enhance support for the Peacebuilding Commission to ensure that it had the resources to assist all countries eligible to be on its agenda. African States and the international community should fully cooperate in developing the capacities of African regional and subregional organizations to deploy civilian and military assets quickly when needed, including the development of the AU African Standby Force.

Among his proposals, the Secretary-General mentioned: strengthening the Secretariat's capacity to analyse conflict situations and develop recommendations; enhancing the UN regional field presence in support of prevention, particularly in Africa; providing the Council with regular reports and analyses of developments in regions of potential armed conflict, particularly in Africa; instructing the UN system to build on current collaborations, strengthen frameworks and deploy expertise on prevention; enhancing UN cooperation and coordination with regional organizations; presenting specific proposals on regional coordination in a report as requested by the Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2007/7 [ibid., p. 109]; ensuring that the UN system worked closely with the African Peace and Security Architecture, including the Panel of the Wise, and help build long-term AU capacity; supporting UN system efforts to build national and regional capacity, notably in Africa, to address the root causes of conflict, while strengthening institutions that provided channels for peaceful conflict resolution; strengthening the UN ability to promote preventive diplomacy and mediation capability; and strengthening the Secretariat's ability to promote fairness and transparency in electoral processes and other means of supporting the development of post-conflict institutions.

The Council, in resolution 1809(2008) of 16 April (see p. 109), encouraged the continuing involvement of regional and subregional organizations in the peaceful settlement of disputes, including through conflict prevention, confidence-building and mediation efforts. It expressed its determination to strengthen and enhance cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, particularly the AU, in conflict prevention, resolution and management, including good offices, mediation support, effective use of sanctions, electoral assistance and preventive field presence, and in the case of Africa, focusing on support to the AU Panel of the Wise, among others.

United Nations and regional organizations

On 16 April [meeting 5868], the Security Council, during consideration of peace and security in Africa, held a debate on the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the AU, in the maintenance of international peace and security. It had before it a concept paper by South Africa [S/2008/229] and an April report [S/2008/186] by the Secretary-General on the subject, as requested by the Council in presidential statement S/PRST/2007/7 [YUN 2007, p. 109].

The Secretary-General's report highlighted the issues that defined the nature of the collaborative partnership in international peace and security between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the AU; the division of responsibilities under Chapter VIII of the UN Charter on regional arrangements; the multifaceted nature and levels of cooperation with regional organizations; and the challenges and opportunities created by such partnerships. According to the report, the need for greater involvement by regional organizations with the United Nations in conflict prevention, management and resolution in all regions had been recognized. Enhancing that relationship under Chapter VIII should be based on a clearer definition of the basis and processes of such cooperation, as well as understanding and appreciating how such partnerships should be framed to avoid misunderstanding and misperception of their meaning and scope. The challenge was finding ways to replace the current approach with more planned, consistent and reliable arrangements, including sustainable, flexible and predictable funding for long-term planning, deployment and sustainment of a peacekeeping operation undertaken by a regional organization and authorized by the Council.

The Secretary-General made a number of recommendations for addressing common security challenges and for expanding dialogue and cooperation between the UN Security Council and regional organizations, in particular the AU Peace and Security Council. He recommended that the UN Security Council define the role of regional organizations in the maintenance of peace and security, in particular the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts; distinguish between regional organizations for Chapter VIII activities and all other regional organizations' activities, and develop a structure for identifying regional security mechanisms; continue the desk-to-desk dialogues on conflict prevention between the United Nations and regional organizations on cross-cutting issues and extend such a mechanism to the AU; and increase consultations among regional organizations. The United Nations should improve and better coordinate African peacekeeping training initiatives, including through the development of regional centres for military and civilian aspects of conflict prevention and peace support, and the enhancement of the capacity of the AU and subregional organizations in the financial and administrative management of peacekeeping operations. To enhance the predictability, sustainability and flexibility of financing regional organizations undertaking peacekeeping under a UN mandate, an AU-UN panel would be set up within three months to make recommendations on support for regional organizations' peacekeeping operations.

In the field of disarmament and non-proliferation, the United Nations and intergovernmental, regional and subregional organizations should: intensify coordination and cooperation in strengthening national, regional and international capacities in implementing the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy contained in Assembly resolution 60/288 [YUN 2006, p. 66]; and encourage regional and subregional organizations, in particular the AU, to enhance exchange of information and pursue joint planning and implementation of regional and subregional initiatives to address the issue of small arms and light weapons. On conflict prevention and mediation, the Secretary-General recalled his recommendation to strengthen DPA (see p. 47). With regard to peacebuilding support and post-conflict reconstruction, he recommended that the United Nations establish a standing collaborative working group to develop an agenda of consultations on linking UN peacebuilding processes and the Peacebuilding Commission with the work of regional organizations; and ensure, during the peacekeeping phase, that the foundations were laid for sustainable post-conflict peacebuilding, with a focus on strengthening the national reconciliation process and managing the economy. In the area of human rights, the Secretary-General recommended continuing support for establishing human rights components in peacekeeping and political missions, and implementing the provisions of Assembly resolution 61/296 [YUN 2007, p. 304] calling on the United Nations to assist in developing a strategy and policies to support the AU. On humanitarian action, he recommended the incorporation of protection of civilians in armed conflict through the development of an AU policy framework and guidance, and enhancing AU early warning methodology and systems through the development of a multirisk early warning tool.

The Council, in resolution 1809(2008) of 16 April (see p. 109), recognizing the need to enhance the predictability, sustainability and flexibility of financing regional organizations undertaking United Nations-mandated peacekeeping operations, welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal to set up within three months an AU-UN panel to consider ways of supporting such peacekeeping operations and lessons learned.

Conflict diamonds

Kimberley Process. At its 2008 session, the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process (New Delhi, India, 3–6 November) reviewed the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme (KPCS), established in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 55] to stop the trade in conflict diamonds from fuelling armed conflict, protect the legitimate diamond industry and ensure implementation of UN resolutions on trade in conflict diamonds. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/11 [YUN 2007, p. 48], India transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the plenary meeting on behalf of the Chair of the Kimberley Process [A/63/560].

The plenary welcomed Mexico as a KPCS participant. In 2008, Congo resumed trade in rough diamonds, after having been readmitted to KPCS in 2007. As at 6 November 2008, the total number of KPCS participants stood at 49, representing 75 countries. Algeria, Bahrain, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Egypt, Gabon, Kuwait, Mali, Panama, the Philippines, Qatar and Swaziland had expressed interest in joining the Kimberley Process, while Burkina Faso and Panama confirmed their intention to do so. Venezuela voluntarily separated from the Kimberley Process for two years and ceased certifying diamonds for export. It retained the right to participate in Kimberley Process meetings and working groups, and the obligation to report on rough diamond production during that period. KPCS would continue to report on Venezuela's compliance with its minimum standards, and to support Venezuela in developing a plan to implement those standards and to fully reintegrate in KPCS.

Peer review visits were undertaken to five diamond producing and trading centres (Central African Republic, Guinea, Israel, Liberia, United Arab Emirates). The situation in Côte d'Ivoire continued to be monitored, and a joint UN-Kimberley Process mission in April confirmed the continued production of diamonds, particularly at the Bobi-Seguela site, and that Ivorian diamonds seemed to be effectively controlled and "taxed" by elements of the rebel movement Forces nouvelles. The Security Council, in resolution 1842(2008) of 29 October (see p. 194), renewed until 31 October 2009 the measures preventing importation by any State of rough diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire. The Kimberley Process would continue to pursue dialogue with Ivorian authorities regarding preparations for a certification scheme. The Kimberley Process and Ghana continued their constructive engagement. An update review mission concluded that Ghana had made significant progress in addressing weaknesses in internal controls, particularly with regard to the registration of miners and the collection of reliable production statistics. The Kimberley Process continued to mobilize technical assistance to assist Ghana in registering artisanal miners and providing accurate assessment of diamond production. It was also finalizing the footprinting (size frequency distribution diagram) exercise in respect of West African diamond-producing participants. Production footprints had been prepared for Côte d'Ivoire, Togo and Zimbabwe. Statistical protocols were developed to allow comparison of the export footprints with the participants' production footprint. Information technology linkage between participants to improve the quality of KPCS data was also initiated.

KPCS provided technical assistance and funding to develop participants' capacities to implement the Scheme. Kimberley Process participants, industry and civil society supported projects in Angola, the Central African Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania. Funding was also received for specific activities, such as statistical training, satellite monitoring, and the participation of observers in peer review visits. KPCS developed guidelines that recommended interim measures in cases of serious non-compliance with its minimum requirements, listing the guiding principles for determining serious non-compliance and an indicative list of escalating measures, such as targeted statistical analysis, enhanced monitoring and additional verification measures, mobilization of technical assistance, and suspension of export and import operations. Rules and criteria for the selection of the Kimberley Process Vice-Chair, rules and procedures for readmission of former participants, and guiding principles on participation of guests of the Chair in the Kimberley Process were also developed. The Process was working on greater cooperation on implementation and enforcement of issues such as fake certificates, the handling of suspicious shipments, and infringements of KPCS.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/134 [draft: A/63/L.52 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 11].

The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict: breaking the link between the illicit transaction of rough diamonds and armed conflict as a contribution to prevention and settlement of conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the trade in conflict diamonds continues to be a matter of serious international concern, which can be directly linked to the fuelling of armed conflict, the activities of rebel movements aimed at undermining or overthrowing legitimate Governments and the illicit traffic in and proliferation of armaments, especially small arms and light weapons,

Recognizing also the devastating impact of conflicts fuelled by the trade in conflict diamonds on the peace, safety and security of people in affected countries, and the systematic and gross human rights violations that have been perpetrated in such conflicts,

Noting the negative impact of such conflicts on regional stability and the obligations placed upon States by the Charter of the United Nations regarding the maintenance of international peace and security,

Recognizing, therefore, that continued action to curb the trade in conflict diamonds is imperative,

Recalling that the elimination of illicit diamonds from legitimate trade is the primary objective of the Kimberley Process,

Acknowledging that the diamond sector is an important catalyst for achieving poverty reduction and meeting the requirements of the Millennium Development Goals in producing countries,

Bearing in mind the positive benefits of the legitimate diamond trade to producing countries, and underlining the need for continued international action to prevent the problem of conflict diamonds from negatively affecting the trade in legitimate diamonds, which makes a critical contribution to the economies of many of the producing, exporting and importing States, especially developing States,

Noting that the vast majority of rough diamonds produced in the world are from legitimate sources,

Recalling the Charter and all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council related to conflict diamonds, and determined to contribute to and support the implementation of the measures provided for in those resolutions,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 1459(2003) of 28 January 2003, in which the Council strongly supported the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme as a valuable contribution against trafficking in conflict diamonds,

Welcoming the important contribution of the Kimberley Process, which was initiated by African diamond-producing countries,

Noting with satisfaction that the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme continues to have a positive impact in reducing the opportunity for conflict diamonds to play a role in fuelling armed conflict and would help to protect legitimate trade and ensure the effective implementation of the relevant resolutions on trade in conflict diamonds,

Acknowledging that lessons learned from the Kimberley Process are useful for the work of the Peacebuilding Commission in its consideration of the countries included in its agenda, as appropriate,

Recalling its resolutions 55/56 of 1 December 2000, 56/263 of 13 March 2002, 57/302 of 15 April 2003, 58/290 of 14 April 2004, 59/144 of 15 December 2004, 60/182 of 20 December 2005, 61/28 of 4 December 2006 and 62/11 of 26 November 2007, in which it called for the development and implementation as well as a periodic review of proposals for a simple, effective and pragmatic international certification scheme for rough diamonds,

Welcoming, in this regard, the implementation of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme in such a way as not to impede the legitimate trade in diamonds or impose an undue burden on Governments or industry, particularly smaller producers, nor hinder the development of the diamond industry,

Welcoming also the decision of forty-nine Kimberley Process Participants, representing seventy-five countries, including the twenty-seven members of the European Union represented by the European Commission, to address the problem of conflict diamonds by participating in the Process and implementing the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme,

Noting the consensual outcomes of the plenary meeting of the Kimberley Process, held in New Delhi from 3 to 6 November 2008,

Welcoming also the voluntary self-regulation initiatives for the diamond industry announced by the World Diamond Council, and recognizing that a system of such voluntary self-regulation contributes, as described in the Interlaken Declaration of 5 November 2002 on the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for Rough Diamonds, to ensuring the effectiveness of national systems of internal control for rough diamonds,

Noting with appreciation that the Kimberley Process has pursued its deliberations on an inclusive basis, involving concerned stakeholders, including producing, exporting and importing States, the diamond industry and civil society, as well as applicant States and international organizations,

Recognizing that State sovereignty should be fully respected and that the principles of equality, mutual benefits and consensus should be adhered to,

Recognizing also that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, which came into effect on 1 January 2003, will be credible only if all Participants have requisite national legislation coupled with effective and credible internal systems of control designed to eliminate the presence of conflict diamonds in the chain of producing, exporting and importing rough diamonds within their own territories, while taking into account that differences in production methods and trading practices, as well as differences in institutional controls thereof, may require different approaches to meeting minimum standards,

Welcoming the efforts of the Kimberley Process to elaborate new rules and procedural norms for regulating the activities of its working bodies, Participants and observers,

1. Reaffirms its strong and continuing support for the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme and the Kimberley Process as a whole;

2. Recognizes that the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme can help to ensure the effective implementation of relevant resolutions of the Security Council containing sanctions on the trade in conflict diamonds and act as a mechanism for the prevention of future conflicts, and calls for the full implementation of existing Council measures targeting the illicit trade in rough diamonds, particularly conflict diamonds which play a role in fuelling conflict;

6. Acknowledges the progress made by Kimberley Process working groups, Participants and observers during 2008 in fulfilling the objectives set by the Chair to strengthen implementation of the peer review system, increase the transparency and accuracy of statistics, promote research into the traceability of diamonds, promote inclusiveness by broadening the level of involvement by both Governments and civil society in the Certification Scheme, foster a sense of ownership by Participants, improve information and communication flows and enhance the capacity of the Certification Scheme to respond to emerging challenges;

7. Stresses that the widest possible participation in the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme is essential, and encourages all Member States to contribute to the work of the Kimberley Process by seeking membership, participating actively in the Certification Scheme and complying with its undertakings;

10. Notes with satisfaction that, in line with paragraph 14 of its resolution 62/11, a visit led by the representative of the Chair of the Kimberley Process was undertaken to the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, which helped to provide a better understanding of the challenges being experienced by the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela in the diamond mining sector and led to the recommendation that the Process should continue to engage with the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, which has voluntarily separated from the

Kimberley Process Certification Scheme for a period of two years, and to assist and support the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela in developing a plan of action to implement the minimum standards of the Certification Scheme and fully reintegrate into the Scheme;

11. Notes with appreciation the willingness of the Kimberley Process to support and provide technical assistance to those Participants experiencing temporary difficulties in complying with the requirements of the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme, and welcomes the recommendations in this regard of the Process plenary meeting held in New Delhi, which include a provision that such Participants would, if the Participation Committee so determined, retain membership and participate in the Process activities, and continue to be subject to all other obligations under the Certification Scheme;

12. Notes with satisfaction the systematization of the work of the Kimberley Process with respect to continuing to develop transparent and uniform rules and procedures, introducing a mechanism for consultations and coordination within the Process, and adoption by the New Delhi plenary meeting of the rules and criteria for selection of the Vice-Chair of the Process, rules and procedures for readmission of a former Process Participant, and guiding principles on participation of the guests of the Process Chair in the Process;

15. Notes with satisfaction the publication for the first time of Kimberley Process rough diamond trade and production sub-annual data for 2004 to 2007, welcomes the progress made towards the collection and submission of complete and accurate statistical reports on the production of and trade in rough diamonds, and encourages all of the Process Participants to continue to enhance the quality of data, and to respond promptly to Process analyses of these data;

16. Also notes with satisfaction the development, in line with paragraph 7 of its resolution 60/182 and paragraph 7 of its resolution 61/28, of "footprints", size-frequency distribution diagrams, that characterize the diamond production of Côte d'Ivoire, the Marange diamond field in Zimbabwe and Togo and the continued work undertaken for Ghana, and the development of statistical protocols to allow comparison of the export footprints with the established production footprint of the Participants;

21. Requests the Chair of the Kimberley Process to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the Process;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-fourth session the item entitled "The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict".

Strengthening the Department of Political Affairs in conflict prevention

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a report [A/62/521 & Corr.1] on revised estimates relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2008–2009 under sections 1, 3, 28D and 35, related to the strengthening of DPA, stated that preventive diplomacy was a core function of the United Nations and was central to its role. The relevance of the Organization would be judged by how well that central role was performed. Within the United Nations, DPA had primary responsibility for carrying out preventive diplomacy and supporting the Secretary-General's good offices function. While there was strong demand to step up and systematize the Organization's work on prevention, prospects for success were slim unless the chronic under-resourcing of that strategic part of the Secretariat was redressed. The current level of resources for DPA constrained the Organization's ability to deliver on its mandates. The Secretary-General proposed to reconfigure the current structure to make DPA more field-oriented. The unsustainable trend for DPA towards increased responsibilities without an increase in human or financial resources had to be reversed. The growing demand for conflict prevention, preventive diplomacy and the Secretary-General's good offices, as well as the demands on the Department for political advice and a coordinating political role, had overstretched the Department's staff and leadership. Strengthening DPA to better support a more proactive United Nations in conflict prevention would require both additional resources and new ways of working when confronting potential conflict situations, particularly through greater mobility and presence in the field. It would also require improved management and oversight mechanisms.

The Secretary-General proposed: building the capability of the Department's regional Divisions to allow sufficient capacity for improved monitoring and analysis, effective policy formulation, rapid dispatch of assets to support early resolution of conflicts and support for the Secretary-General's good offices; strengthening its policy-planning capacity and mediation support function through the establishment of a Policy, Partnerships and Mediation Support Division to assist Member States on cross-cutting global issues such as transnational organized crime, corruption, democracy and terrorism; increasing the resources of the Electoral Assistance Division to cope with the demand for its services, and the increasing number and complexity of requests for technical assistance and advice; and supporting the Security Council with its expanding workload, as well as certain General Assembly committees, by providing for some Office of Internal Oversight Services positions to support the increased demands placed on the sanctions committees, under the Security Council Affairs Division. Other proposals included the establishment of a network of regional offices to assist Member States and regional organizations with their preventive diplomacy efforts, providing a more agile platform to support preventive diplomacy by the Special Envoys of the Secretary-General, strengthening relations with regional organizations, building local capacity and encouraging regional approaches to conflict prevention. Each office would work closely with UN missions, agencies and programmes, providing a localized hub for conflict prevention activities by the UN system and other regional partners. They would replace single country political missions, which had a more limited focus. Management, executive and oversight functions needed to be tightened by refocusing the work of the Office of the Under-Secretary-General and by reinforcing the capabilities of the Department's Executive Office.

The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to approve the establishment of 96 new posts and the reclassification of four posts under section 3, Political affairs; the establishment of five new posts and the reclassification of one post from D-1 to D-2 under section 1, Overall policymaking, direction and coordination, for the United Nations Liaison Office at Addis Ababa; and appropriate a total amount of $21,036,100, comprising $439,200 under section 1, Overall policymaking, direction and coordination, $14,276,100 under section 3, Political affairs, $4,184,700 under section 28D, Office of Central Support Services, and $2,136,100 under section 35, Staff assessment, offset by a corresponding amount under income section 1, Income from staff assessment, under the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2008–2009.

Report of ACABQ. In January [A/62/7/Add. 32], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended approval of the establishment of 56 additional posts, including the reclassification of four posts (one D-1 to D-2, one P-5 to D-1, one P-3 to P-4 and one P-2 to P-3) under section 3; the establishment of four additional posts, including the reclassification of one post from D-1 to D-2 under section 1, for the United Nations Liaison Office at Addis Ababa; and a reduction of $8,142,700 from the additional estimate of $21,036,100 proposed by the Secretary-General.

Communications. On 7 March [A/C.5/62/24], Antigua and Barbuda and Cuba transmitted to the Secretary-General a letter sent to the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs conveying the views of the Joint Coordination Committee (Group of 77 and China and the Non-Aligned Movement) on the Secretary-General's proposals for strengthening DPA. The Committee, while supporting some elements of the proposals, had important concerns. It was disappointed that the views, priorities and role of developing countries, including their contribution to conflict prevention and resolution, were not adequately reflected in the report. They had particular concerns regarding the establishment and nature of the proposed regional offices, stressing that those offices could only be established with the full support and consent of the host country and all Member States concerned, and with an appropriate mandate by the Assembly. A regional office could not have an extraterritorial mandate (i.e. a mandate extending beyond the countries of that region), and there was no uniform formula for the establishment of the regional offices. The Committee requested the Secretariat to issue a corrigendum to the report, reflecting the comments and concerns of the Member States.

On 12 March [A/C.5/62/25], the Secretary-General conveyed the clarifications to those concerns as provided by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, which he endorsed. Additional questions raised could be addressed through the Fifth Committee, and the Secretariat would provide information as required.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 December [meeting 74], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/63/648/Add.2], adopted resolution 63/261 without vote [agenda item 118].

Peacemaking and peacebuilding

Post-conflict peacebuilding

Post-conflict stabilization

On 20 May [meeting 5895], the Security Council, at the United Kingdom's request, considered the issue of post-conflict peacebuilding, in particular post-conflict stabilization: peace after war. It had before it a concept paper on the subject submitted by the United Kingdom [S/2008/291], which sought to identify the challenges facing the international community in stabilizing countries recovering from conflict and delivering sustainable peace. It stated that nearly 30 per cent of conflicts that ended through negotiated settlements restarted within five years, often because the international community did not get its act together in the critical period immediately following a ceasefire and peace agreement. At that point, crucial needs had to be met, including rapid implementation of the peace agreement to maintain the commitment of the parties, re-establishment of stability and the rule of law, and a demonstrable improvement in the lives of local people. The international community needed to support national and local State institutions in taking responsibility for the recovery effort, but their efforts were often too little, too late and too fragmented. Three gaps were identified that hampered international efforts to help countries emerging from conflict to stabilize: leadership and how to ensure that the actors operated effectively and coherently, building legitimate and competent national ownership and capacity as quickly as possible; putting in place rapidly deployable and skilled civilian capacity; and the provision of more rapid and flexible funding.

The Secretary-General, in his address to the Council, said that lessons from many countries demonstrated that, while each context was different, there were three common and immediate priorities to be addressed: establishing viable political processes to buttress peace agreements and to put in place legitimate national authorities; restoring security and the rule of law, including early development of accountable security services and justice systems; and delivering immediate benefits to the affected population and creating conditions for longer-term development. To strengthen the collective response in the immediate aftermath of conflict and deliver on those priorities, the Organization needed to be coherent and put in place structures, planning and monitoring processes to support that effort throughout the transition to longer-term peacebuilding. Coordination and clarity of leadership were critical to ensuring that each partner brought its distinctive strength to the collective effort. The United Nations also needed sufficient capacity and expertise. The Secretary-General's Special Representatives should be empowered to lead on the ground, including having the means to identify strategic priorities, elaborate plans and mobilize funds with others, in particular development partners. The creation of the Office of Rule of Law and Security Institutions in DPKO reflected the commitment to a team approach to upholding the rule of law, security sector reform and respect for human rights, but there remained a shortage of judges, prison wardens, State administrators and managers—particularly those with knowledge of the countries and systems in which the Organization operated. Not only should they be well equipped when deployed, but should also have start-up funding at their disposal. The Organization had to do better in delivering early peace dividends by scaling up relief and development capacities to enable national authorities to pay their civil servants, restoring agricultural life and initiating employment programmes. Ultimately, all of that depended on early and flexible funding. Bold and innovative steps were required to meet critical priority needs. To facilitate rapid delivery in the earliest phase, the international community should explore approaches such as a common start-up fund. Many of those issues had been identified by the Peacebuilding Commission, which had a key role to play in supporting national actors in achieving their long-term objectives for sustainable peace and development.

The representative of the World Bank said that over the previous 15 years, the World Bank had expanded its work on conflict and fragility, both operationally and analytically, focusing more on peacebuilding, State-building, institutional reforms and partnerships. The Bank had approved a new State-building and peacebuilding fund to address the needs of State and local governance and peacebuilding in fragile situations, with the aim to complement the UN Peacebuilding Fund and other efforts. It had commissioned applied research in areas such as conflict and development and natural resources and conflict, in collaboration with renowned research institutions. Overcoming the problems of countries coming out of conflict or seeking to avoid the breakdown of the State was crucial to the Bank's development mission. With regard to more rapid and flexible funding, large-scale post-conflict multi-donor trust funds could play a critical role during the reconstruction process, as the Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund and the Trust Fund for Timor-Leste had done. The Bank believed that the fiduciary principles accord being prepared by the United Nations Development Group and the Bank would significantly improve the administration of such trust funds and deliver results more rapidly. To be strategic, large-scale post-conflict trust funds should be built upon post-conflict needs assessments, transitional results matrices and sector analysis, but they did not always cater to the start-up phase. A number of other funds, such as the Peacebuilding Fund, could cover that phase without the need for a separate assessment.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 May [meeting 5895], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/16 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and emphasizes the critical importance of post-conflict peacebuilding in laying the foundation for sustainable peace and development after the scourge of war.

The Council recognizes that supporting States to recover from conflict and build sustainable peace is a major challenge facing the international community, and that an effective response requires political, security, humanitarian and development activities to be integrated and coherent, including in the first phase of integrated mission planning.

The Council emphasizes the importance of national ownership and the primary responsibility of national authorities emerging from conflict for peacebuilding and sustainable development, expresses its intention to support those efforts and encourages other actors to do the same.

The Council recalls its resolution 1645(2005) and welcomes the work of the Peacebuilding Commission in advising on the coordination of international peacebuilding activities and resources, and expresses its support for enhancing the role of the Peacebuilding Commission, the Peacebuilding Support Office and the Peacebuilding Fund.

The Council recognizes that, in particular in the immediate aftermath of conflict, affected countries have urgent needs including, but not limited to, the re-establishment of the institutions of government, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of armed forces, security sector reform, transitional justice, reconciliation, re-establishing the rule of law and respect for human rights and economic revitalization. The Council underlines that civilian expertise in post-conflict peacebuilding is essential in helping to meet these needs.

The Council encourages efforts to address the urgent need for rapidly deployable civilian expertise and stresses that the critical role for such expertise is working in cooperation with national authorities to strengthen national capacities.

The Council highlights the need for the United Nations to play a leading role in the field in coordinating international efforts in post-conflict situations. The Council stresses that coordination between national authorities and others involved in longer-term reconstruction and development, including organs of the United Nations system in accordance with their respective mandates, the international financial institutions, as well as with civil society and the business sector, is vital for the success of United Nations and international engagement in post-conflict situations.

The Council stresses the need to ensure that finance is available from the outset for recovery and peacebuilding activities to meet immediate needs, and to lay a solid foundation for longer-term reconstruction and development.

The Council reaffirms the role of regional organizations in the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and the need to strengthen the capacity of regional organizations in helping countries to recover from conflict.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General, the Peacebuilding Commission, international and regional organizations and Member States to consider how to support national efforts in affected countries to secure a sustainable peace more rapidly and effectively, including in the areas of coordination, civilian deployment capabilities and financing. The Council invites the Secretary-General to provide advice within 12 months to the relevant United Nations organs on how best to take forward these issues within the United Nations system and, taking into consideration the views of the Peacebuilding Commission, how to coordinate peacebuilding activities and encourage the mobilization and most effective use of resources for urgent peacebuilding needs.

Communication. In response to the Council's request to advise relevant UN bodies on how to take forward the issues pertaining to securing sustainable peace, the Secretary-General, in a 19 September letter [A/63/374-S/2008/620] to the Peacebuilding Commission Chairperson, indicated his intention to dedicate the requisite efforts and capacities towards that end. In that regard, he had appointed the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacebuilding Support, Jane Holl Lute, to coordinate the exercise, indicate the appropriate timing for the Commission's contribution to that exercise, and represent him at all related Commission deliberations. He hoped that by addressing critical gaps in the UN response to post-conflict situations, the Commission's advisory role would assume greater significance for all UN and non-UN operational activities in the countries concerned.

Disarmament, demobilization and reintegration

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session (New York, 10 March–4 April and 3 July) [A/62/19], requested DPKO to ensure that disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR) programmes were tailored to the specific context, carried out within a broad peacebuilding strategy, including institution-building, and consistent with the host country's national strategies. Together with other UN partners, it should ensure that DDR programmes were developed in line with the integrated DDR standards. The Special Committee noted the Secretariat's efforts to provide support and guidance to DDR programmes in the field, and in piloting integrated DDR units, with the intention of reviewing lessons learned from those units. The Special Committee requested a briefing on progress made on the implementation of DDR standards and programmes, as well as on the activities of the inter-agency working group on those issues. It recognized that the reintegration of ex-combatants was especially challenging and should be planned from the outset in conjunction with disarmament and demobilization programmes, as well as socio-economic development and job creation. It encouraged the inter-agency working group to further develop integrated DDR standards on assessment, planning and the implementation of social and economic reintegration programmes, and called upon donors to provide long-term, timely and sustained support to DDR programmes, ensuring that sufficient funds were allocated to the entire process. The Special Committee stressed the importance of ensuring that all women and children associated with armed forces and groups were included in DDR programmes, and reiterated the importance of including special measures to ensure the early release of children from armed groups and to prevent their re-recruitment.

Other peacebuilding issues

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], reaffirmed the need for DPKO to plan and conduct UN peacekeeping activities in such a manner as to facilitate post-conflict peacebuilding, the prevention of recurrence of armed conflicts and progress towards sustainable peace and development. The Special Committee underlined the importance of coordination between DPKO, the Peacebuilding Support Office, UN funds, programmes and agencies and non-UN partners in peacebuilding efforts. It emphasized the need for a coherent and coordinated approach, building on the strengths of various actors, including UN bodies. The Special Committee underlined the need to formulate peacebuilding strategies and programmes that were integrated with host-nation strategies and programmes to ensure national ownership, and recommended that DPKO explore opportunities for partnerships in post-conflict situations with international financial institutions, such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, and regional arrangements, such as the European Union, with a view to establishing effective cooperation.

The Special Committee underlined the role of the Peacebuilding Commission in developing integrated peacebuilding strategies and marshalling resources for their implementation, ensuring fulfilment of mutual commitments on the part of stakeholders, and promoting dialogue on cross-cutting peacebuilding issues and lessons learned. It welcomed the establishment of inter-agency coordination mechanisms to ensure coordination among UN actors involved in peacebuilding, and encouraged regular interaction among UN partners and with Member States to increase the sharing of knowledge and best practices. It requested DPKO to ensure that lessons learned in the transition from UN peacekeeping operations to integrated offices were applied elsewhere.

The Special Committee recognized that creating and sustaining stability in a post-conflict environment required that the causes of the conflict be addressed and that local rule-of-law capacities be established from the beginning of a UN peacekeeping operation and strengthened. Recognizing the need for greater clarity and specificity in UN peacekeeping mandates on rule-of-law issues, it requested that DPKO ensure that rule-of-law and transitional justice were integrated into the planning of peacekeeping operations. The Special Committee welcomed the progress made in assessing lessons learned and options for rule-of-law strategies in the field for ongoing and future UN peacekeeping operations. It welcomed the development of guidance material for operational rule-of-law issues, and requested the Secretariat to brief Member States whenever guidance material was initiated and to provide information on progress. It called upon DPKO to ensure cooperation and coordination among all mission components in the context of rule of law, underlining the importance of a holistic and coherent UN approach.

The General Assembly, in resolution 63/128 of 11 December (see p. 1450), decided to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-sixth (2011) session the item “Rule of law and transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict situations”.

Peacebuilding Commission

In accordance with Security Council resolutions 1645(2005) and 1646(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 94] and General Assembly resolution 60/180 [ibid.], the Peacebuilding Commission submitted a June report [A/63/92-S/2008/417] on its second session for the period from 23 June 2007 to 22 June 2008. During the session, the Commission consolidated its achievements in Burundi and Sierra Leone and instituted a joint monitoring and tracking mechanism to allow it to review progress in those two countries. It was able to apply some of the lessons learned in the two countries and to build some innovations into the new Guinea-Bissau process, such as dispatching a field mission by the Chair of the Guinea-Bissau configuration, immediately following the country's referral to the Commission and the adoption of a two-track approach on the use of the Peacebuilding Fund. Those initiatives were observed in all configurations and demonstrated the Commission's ability to provide a flexible response as the situation warranted. While progress had been achieved in its existing configurations, the evolving challenges before the Commission required additional and targeted efforts by its members, partners and relevant actors. The Commission would chart the way forward in its engagement with the countries on its agenda and in further refining its role and added value.

The Commission's Working Group on Lessons Learned, at eight informal meetings, focused on the lessons and good practices associated with: the design and monitoring of peacebuilding strategic frameworks in fragile States; constraints placed on fiscal capacities in post-conflict countries; the challenges to local governance and decentralization in post-war contexts; opportunities for enhancing women's participation in peacebuilding; promotion of justice during transition; risks from failing to address internal displacement in post-war settings; and the interplay between the environment, natural resources, conflict and peacebuilding. The Working Group targeted its findings and policy recommendations at the work of the country-specific configurations. In June, the Working Group reviewed the major principles and best practices collected to date within the broader peacebuilding perspective, and its Chair reported to the Organizational Committee on the findings.

To provide integrated strategies for peacebuilding, the Commission continued to pay attention to the countries under its consideration and to support national efforts in the areas of dialogue, reconciliation, capacity-building, institutional reforms, economic recovery and human rights. It intended to enhance its standing by building on its accomplishments and by consolidating efforts in the countries under its consideration so as to minimize the risk of their lapse or relapse into conflict. It would refine the Integrated Peacebuilding Strategy concept, as well as options for future engagement, tailored to the specific country situations. With the assistance of the Peacebuilding Support Office, it would research support for peacebuilding activities in the countries under its consideration. In that context, it noted the need for the Secretariat to support the mapping exercise on peacebuilding activities in those countries, and invited all stakeholders to provide information to the Peacebuilding Support Office.

The Commission, at its first informal ambassadorial-level retreat (18–19 January), discussed the added value of the Commission in addressing peacebuilding challenges and gaps in the overall peace continuum and the development of an understanding on the way forward at the conceptual, methodological and strategic levels. It agreed to continue the peacebuilding strategy and policy discussion to strengthen its capacity to implement its mandates and enhance impact on the ground.

In terms of marshalling resources and enhancing coordination, the Commission acknowledged the importance of official development assistance and trade and investment in post-conflict countries, and was encouraged that several bilateral Commission partners had increased their commitments towards countries under consideration or initiated a new engagement. It would continue to develop methods for mobilizing international and domestic resources and related instruments, such as the early mapping exercise and systematic monitoring and tracking mechanisms. It would also strengthen its involvement in the mobilization of non-financial resources, and cooperation with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, regional development banks and regional or subregional organizations in addressing the specific needs of countries by building on expertise within the United Nations and other organizations. The Commission would create closer strategic ties between its engagements and the use of the Peacebuilding Fund and explore ways to engage in the General Assembly's review of the Fund's terms of reference.

As for enhancing collaboration and outreach, the Commission Chairperson would continue to hold regular meetings with the Presidents of UN principal organs and the Secretary-General, and keep the Organizational Committee informed of those discussions. The Commission would continue to promote implementation of Integrated Peacebuilding Strategies and seek support of relevant actors to that effect. To enhance its convening role, the Commission would encourage inputs from Member States, international and regional organizations and civil society, and disseminate the outcome of its work and lessons learned, including through its website, the Peacebuilding Community of Practice and the Peacebuilding Initiative project of the Program on Humanitarian Policy and Conflict Research.

On 25 April, Côte d'Ivoire's request for placement on the Commission's agenda was conveyed to the Security Council for consideration. The request was also brought to the attention of the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General.

During the year, the Commission carried out activities relevant to countries on its agenda: Burundi (see p. 152), the Central African Republic (see p. 158), Guinea-Bissau (see p. 228) and Sierra Leone (see p. 214).

Organizational Committee

The Peacebuilding Commission's Organizational Committee held formal meetings on 12, 19 and 23 June [PBC/2/OC/SR.6, PBC/2/OC/SR.7 & Add.1]. The Committee discussed at its first meeting the letter from the Security Council President conveying the Council's acceptance of the request by the Central African Republic that the country be placed on the Commission's agenda and inviting the Commission to advise it on the situation there. At subsequent meetings, the Committee considered the Commission's revised draft report on its second session. The Committee also held informal meetings on 16 January, 19 February, 24 March, 17 April, 13 May, 2, 12 and 19 June, 15 September, 29 October, 19 November and 17 December. Among the subjects discussed were: the role of the private sector in peacebuilding; harmoniz-ing Peacebuilding Commission and Peacebuilding Fund activities; forging synergies for peacebuilding; the construction of capable States in Africa, with reports from the task force on the private sector and the Working Group on Lessons Learned; cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); employment/income generation and private sector development in post-conflict countries; and preparations for the review of the terms of reference of the Peacebuilding Fund and for the Secretary-General's report on post-conflict peacebuilding and early recovery.

The Committee considered letters from the Commission Chairperson and Acting Chairperson of 1 February [PBC/2/OC/9] inviting a number of States, UN agencies and intergovernmental bodies to participate in the Guinea-Bissau configuration, and of 24 March [PBC/2/OC/10] concerning the participation of Benin in that configuration; letters of 30 June [PBC/3/OC/5], 20 August [PBC/3/OC/6] and 9 September [PBC/3/OC/7] concerning the participation of States and organizations in the Central African configuration; letters of 27 June [PBC/3/OC/3] concerning the participation of Norway in the Burundi configuration and of 17 July [PBC/3/OC/2] concerning the election of Sweden as Chair of that configuration; and letters of 17 June [PBC/2/OC/13] concerning the participation of Burkina Faso in the Sierra Leone configuration, and of 27 June [PBC/3/OC/4] on the participation of Italy in the Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone configurations.

Organizational Committee membership

Security Council. On 3 January [A/62/684-S/2008/84 & Corr.1], the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that, following informal consultations conducted on the same date, the Council had selected Belgium and South Africa to participate in the Organizational Committee for a term of one year, until the end of 2008.

Economic and Social Council. On 14 January, the Economic and Social Council re-elected Brazil to the Organizational Committee until 22 June (decision 2008/201 A). On 20 June, the Council extended until 11 July the terms of office of Angola, Brazil, the Czech Republic, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Luxembourg and Sri Lanka (decision 2008/201 D). On 11 and 16 July, it further extended those terms of office until 31 December (decision 2008/201 E).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Election by the General Assembly of seven members of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission: term of office

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 60/180 and Security Council resolution 1645(2005), both of 20 December 2005, in which the General Assembly and the Security Council concurrently operationalized the decision by the 2005 World Summit to establish the Peacebuilding Commission as an intergovernmental advisory body,

Recalling in particular paragraphs 4 (a) to (e) and 5 of the above-mentioned resolutions setting out the arrangements for the composition of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission,

1. Decides that, beginning with the election to be held during the sixty-third session, the term of office of the members of the General Assembly on the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission shall begin on 1 January instead of 23 June;

2. Also decides that the term of office of the two members of the General Assembly on the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission due to expire on 22 June 2009, namely Georgia and Jamaica, shall be extended until 31 December 2009;

3. Invites other bodies with members on the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission that have not yet done so to adjust the term of office of their respective members so that the term of office of all members of the Organizational Committee can start on 1 January.

On 22 December, the Assembly elected Benin, Chile, South Africa, Thailand and Uruguay as members of the Committee for a two-year term beginning on 1 January 2009 to fill the vacancies occurring on the expiration of the terms of office of Burundi, Chile, Egypt, El Salvador and Fiji (decision 63/415).

Troop and financial contributors. On 4 April [A/62/795], Ghana informed the General Assembly President that, on the basis of informal consultations held on 26 March, the top 10 contributing countries of military personnel and civilian police had selected Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Nepal and Nigeria to serve on the Organizational Committee for a two-year term starting on 23 June.

On 30 April [A/62/825], the United States, as facilitator of the group of 10 leading financial contributors to the United Nations, informed the Assembly President that Canada, Germany, Japan, the Netherlands and Sweden, from among the 10, would serve for a second term on the Organizational Committee. On 18 December [A/63/632], the United States informed the Secretary-General that the group had decided to extend the term of the five members by six months, from 23 June to 31 December 2010.

On 20 June, the Assembly was informed that the term of office of the members of the troop-contributing countries on the Commission's Organizational Committee, which was due to expire on 22 June, had been extended until 11 July (decision 62/419A). On 11 July, the Assembly was informed, by a letter dated 10 July to the President of the General Assembly, that the term of office of the current members of the troop-contributing countries on the Organizational Committee had been extended until 31 December (decision 62/419B).

On 19 December [A/63/631], Ghana, referring to its 10 July letter confirming that Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Nigeria and Pakistan would represent the top 10 troop-contributing countries on the Committee, stated that it was Ghana's understanding that the question of allocation of regional seats in the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in respect of Committee membership had been resolved, thus paving the way for the election of new members from those bodies by 22 December. It therefore informed the Secretary-General that it had been decided that the term of office of the five countries from the troop-contributing country category would be from 1 January 2009 until 31 December 2009.

Financing of Peacebuilding Commission field missions

In 2007, the Commission's Organizational Committee considered the question of the financing of field missions of the Commission [YUN 2007, p. 54] and mandated its Chairman [A/62/493] to inform the Secretary-General of its request that the agenda item of the General Assembly's sixty-second session entitled "Report of the Peacebuilding Commission" be also allocated to the Fifth Committee for the sole purpose of considering the question of financing field missions of the Commission.

To facilitate the Fifth Committee's review, the Secretary-General submitted a January 2008 note [A/62/670] containing preliminary estimates of field visits to be undertaken by the Commission in 2008 and 2009. It was anticipated that visits would be undertaken to each of the three countries under consideration, in addition to one country in Asia and one in the Americas. Given the potential increase in the number of countries on the Commission's agenda, the Assembly might wish to consider more stable funding for those visits. The preliminary cost estimate was $676,300 for the 2008–2009 biennium. Any future requirements would be considered in the context of the proposed programme budget for the relevant biennium.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a February report [A/62/7/Add.33], recommended that the Assembly concur with the Secretary-General's proposal. The Assembly did so in section II of resolution 62/245 of 3 April (see p. 1551).

Peacebuilding Fund

In response to General Assembly resolution 60/287 [YUN 2006, p. 58], the Secretary-General submitted the second annual report [A/63/218-S/2008/522 & Corr.1] on the Peacebuilding Fund, established in 2006 [ibid.] as a mechanism for extending critical support at the early stages of a peace process. The report provided an update on the Fund's activities and achievements from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008, and highlighted the achievements and emerging lessons that required the attention of the UN system in order to enhance its effectiveness as a strategic instrument for consolidating peace in post-conflict countries.

As at 30 June, the Fund had received pledges of $269.9 million from 44 donors, a $43 million (19 per cent) increase over the 2007 figure, exceeding the $250 million funding target. Of that amount, $238.5 million had been received. The top eight contributors to the Fund were Sweden ($42.3 million), the United Kingdom ($36 million), Norway ($32.1 million), Japan ($20 million), Canada ($18.8 million), the Netherlands ($18.5 million), Ireland ($12.6 million) and Germany ($10 million). Over 20 developing countries had also contributed to the Fund, illustrating its broad donor base. The Fund also benefited from its first private donation, in the amount of $18,933 by a single individual, as well as an additional $8.4 million in interest and investment income as at 31 December 2007. A total of $106.9 million or 44.8 per cent of total Fund deposits had been allocated to support Fund activities in the four countries on the Peacebuilding Commission's agenda (window I countries), one of the five countries declared eligible for window II funding (countries designated by the Secretary-General) and for seven emergency projects under window III funding (emergency projects). The balance of unprogrammed funds available for new Fund countries and pipeline projects stood at $131.6 million (55.2 per cent of total deposits).

Since the creation of the Fund, 37 projects had been approved to support priority plan and emergency window activities in nine post-conflict countries: Burundi, the Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kenya, Liberia and Sierra Leone. Under windows I and II, the level of allocated funds transferred to recipient UN organizations was as follows: Burundi (89 per cent), Guinea-Bissau (98 per cent), Liberia (0.6 per cent) and Sierra Leone (46 per cent). Under the emergency window, seven projects amounting to $5.9 million had been approved.

Under window I funding, Guinea-Bissau was declared eligible for Fund Support on 11 March. Under window II funding, the Central African Republic was declared eligible to receive the Fund's support in January, Comoros on 25 June, Côte d'Ivoire on 19 June, and Guinea on 25 June. The Fund's emergency window supported projects in seven countries (Côte d'Ivoire, the Central African Republic, Guinea, Liberia, Burundi, Haiti, Kenya), with a focus on supporting political dialogue (2 projects), national reconciliation (2 projects), security support (1 project) and support for peace agreements (2 projects).

The thematic priority areas of the Fund included promoting good governance and the rule of law, security sector reform, justice delivery and reforms, promoting and protecting human rights, youth empowerment and employment, tackling poverty and land dispute, return and resettlement of refugees, promoting inclusive national political dialogue, support for peace agreements and ceasefires, democratization and electoral reform, and promoting reconciliation and conflict prevention. The Fund's Advisory Group, at its second meeting in March, reviewed the Fund's first year of full operations and emerging challenges and lessons. The Advisory Group provided guidance on the use of the Fund's windows, funding allocations criteria, emerging challenges and opportunities, the independent evaluation of the Fund in 2008, and ways to improve project performance and delivery. In proposing the Office of Internal Oversight Services as the independent evaluator, the Advisory Group stressed the importance of early evaluation to help strengthen the Fund's methodology, operational capabilities and scope. The evaluation, commissioned in March, would propose enhancements to its modus operandi and functions. On the basis of that evaluation, the Secretary-General planned to review the Fund's terms of reference, in consultation with the Advisory Group and with the advice of the Commission and the General Assembly.

The Secretary-General concluded that the Fund had shown its ability to function as a flexible, stand-alone mechanism. That ability should be preserved while ensuring performance accountability. Frequent interaction with the Commission, in the form of quarterly progress reports and communications, was needed to ensure optimum synergies and that lessons learned from operations were factored into Commission discussions. The Fund's methodology should be flexible enough to provide for a broad range of post-conflict early recovery situations, including those where local capacities needed initial strengthening prior to decentralized resource allocation. Although the emergency window had worked well, it did not meet the demand for larger-scale stand-alone projects. That window's scope, size and use might need to be reviewed to allow the Fund to support larger-scale operations on a case-by-case basis, without the need for setting up an entire window II infrastructure.

UN agency programming modalities and procedures had been key causes of delays in project implementation. Agencies should develop more appropriate mechanisms for early recovery interventions and adapt procedures in line with the Fund's uniqueness. Simplification of national Fund coordination structures, described as too cumbersome in Sierra Leone and Burundi, might be needed. The capacity of the Peacebuilding Support Office to monitor and backstop the Fund at the country level was limited. In view of the rapidly expanding number of Fund countries, additional staff capacity was required to address crucial programme management and planning, monitoring and evaluation needs. In addition, resources were required to build surge capacity to support new and ongoing programmes, monitoring visits, technical advisory services, global training and monitoring and evaluation systems. In-country capacity to manage the Fund portfolio needed to be reviewed to ensure sound project design and implementation. To better support the national steering committees and implementing partners, in-country support budgets should include provision for staff, monitoring and evaluation, training, technical support services and transport. As many new programmes had initial delays due to the workload during Fund start-up, surge capacity should be provided to ensure appropriate in-country capacity to implement the Fund. Such surge capacity should be funded from the Fund's overhead or from other surge mechanisms for early recovery, such as the UNDP Bureau for Crisis Prevention and Recovery. The current policy of covering operational costs entirely from the overhead should be reviewed, in particular for countries with smaller funding envelopes, because it limited the Fund's ability to set up appropriate secretariats to build local capacity. The Fund's Advisory Group should be strengthened by expanding its membership to include the appointment, by the Secretary-General, of additional independent expertise on peacebuilding and early recovery programming. In recognition of the growing importance of regional and subregional organizations in facilitating, brokering and consolidating peace, and in national peacebuilding efforts, consideration should be given to direct Fund support for such activities. An annual pledging conference, as stipulated in the terms of reference, should be held to ensure longer-term donor support.

With regard to the overall activities of its third session [A/64/341-S/2009/444], the Commission reported that, in December, in compliance with the terms of reference of the Fund, the Peacebuilding Support Office initiated a consultative process leading to the revision of those terms of reference.

Special political missions

Evaluation of special political missions

OIOS report. The Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) submitted an April report [E/AC.51/2008/2] on the in-depth evaluation of political affairs: field special political missions led by the Department of Political Affairs (DPA) but supported by the Department of Field Support (DFS). The evaluation examined the efficiency, effectiveness and impact of 10 field special political missions and their activities.

OIOS found that stakeholders generally acknowledged that special political missions played an important role in conflict prevention and peacebuilding. However, it was difficult to ascertain their relative contribution to their mandates or areas of activity due to a number of factors, including the lack of a clear definition and vision of the role of special political missions in UN peacebuilding and conflict prevention efforts, and insufficient coordination and cooperation in their work with other UN actors. There was only limited monitoring, review and self-evaluation by DPA of special political mission performance, with little assessment of their contribution to peacebuilding and conflict prevention. Also hindering the impact of special political missions were poor systems and processes for administrative and substantive support, which were not sufficiently responsive and tailored to each mission's needs and circumstances. Strategic planning and mission deployment were also in need of improvement.

OIOS made four recommendations for enhancing the contribution of special political missions to peacebuilding and conflict prevention. It recommended that DPA, working with other Secretariat departments and the Secretary-General, develop clear guidelines that defined special political missions, their role in UN peacebuilding and conflict prevention, and the responsibilities of Secretariat departments with respect to leadership and support to those missions. DPA was called on to improve initial strategic planning, preparation and deployment of special political missions by ensuring that a clear mission strategy was developed for each mission. DPA and DFS should agree and prepare terms of reference or guidelines that improved cooperation and coordination in special political mission planning and support and that outlined the respective roles, responsibilities and standards for interaction between the Departments to ensure that mission resources were better tailored to circumstances and need. Mechanisms were needed for stronger overall management of DPA, coordination and oversight of special political missions, including policies or processes within the Department for more formalized coordination and knowledge-sharing in mission planning and support, as well as clarification of overall responsibility and accountability within the Department for special political mission performance and results. All relevant departments agreed or agreed in principle with the recommendations.

CPC consideration. The Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its forty-eighth session (9 June–3 July) [A/63/16], recommended that the General Assembly endorse the OIOS recommendations as revised by the Committee. It noted the need to improve the overall management of the special political missions, as well as the intended overall role and goals, the expected mission activities and how those activities would contribute to achieving the mission mandate, and the expected time to achieve the mandate or criteria that might be used in measuring progress and in determining whether the mission accomplished its mandate. The Committee recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to ensure that special political missions and other local actors strengthen their cooperation and coordination in order to achieve the expected outcomes and to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of the work of the United Nations.

By decision 62/545 B of 3 April, the Assembly deferred until its sixty-third (2008) session the agenda item on "Report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the audit of the management of special political missions by the Department of Political Affairs".

Roster of 2008 political missions and offices

On 1 January 2008, 12 UN political missions and offices were in operation: 6 in Africa, 4 in Asia and the Pacific, and 2 in the Middle East. During the year, one mission (the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL)) was closed and one new mission (the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone (UNIPSIL)) was launched; thus, 12 missions and offices were in operation at the end of the year.

In Africa, the mandate of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau was extended until 30 June 2009. On 4 August, the Security Council requested the Secretary-General to establish UNIPSIL, beginning 1 October 2008, for a period of 12 months, replacing UNIOSIL, whose mandate ended on 31 July. The Council noted the Secretary-General's recommendation to extend the mandate of the United Nations Support Office in the Central African Republic until 31 December 2009, and looked forward to receiving his recommendation regarding the establishment of an integrated UN office in the Central African Republic. The Council extended, until 31 December 2009, the mandate of the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi. In addition, on 29 December [S/2008/827], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council had noted his recommendation [S/2008/826] that the mandate of the temporary Liaison Office of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA)-affected areas be extended through 31 December 2009 and the Office upgraded to a special political mission (see p. 170).

With regard to Asia and the Pacific, the Council renewed the mandates of the United Nations Mission in Nepal until 23 January 2009 and the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan until 23 March 2009, and that of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq for a 12-month period beginning on 7 August 2008. In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the United Nations Command continued to implement the maintenance of the 1953 Armistice Agreement [YUN 1953, p. 136].

Threats to international peace and security

International terrorism

On 9 December [meeting 6034], the Security Council held a debate on threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts. According to Croatia, which submitted a concept paper on the subject [S/2008/738], the goal of the debate was to revitalize and strengthen international security in combating the threat of terrorism, including the UN leading role in global counter-terrorism efforts. The paper stated that although important strategic counter-terrorism guidance had been adopted, it was clear that specific follow-up had not occurred in the desired time frame. In that regard, many speakers referred to the lack of guidance and coherence within the United Nations.

The Secretary-General, addressing the Council, said that terrorism was a global scourge, inflicting appalling and morally reprehensible carnage, fomenting distrust between States and peoples, tearing societies apart, undermining institutions and weakening bonds between communities. The attacks in Mumbai, India (see p. 66), were the most recent example of misguided individuals run amok. Terrorism was a leading threat to international peace and security, and combating it had to be one of the main priorities of the international community. The United Nations had a responsibility to lead the international community's efforts to confront that menace. Indeed, the Security Council and the General Assembly had strongly condemned terrorism time and again, and had sought to promote the universal norm that terrorism was never acceptable.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 6034], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/45 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council, underlining that peace and security in the world are indivisible and taking into account the interconnection and interdependence of the world, reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable regardless of their motivations, whenever and by whomsoever committed. It further reaffirms its determination to combat threats to international peace and security caused by acts of terrorism by all possible means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council welcomes recent statements by intergovernmental organizations condemning all forms of terrorism, including suicide bombing and hostage-taking, which build upon the universal condemnation by the international community of unlawful acts of terrorism, including against civilians, that cannot be justified or excused under any circumstances or pursuant to any political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other consideration, and reaffirms the need for Member States to work together urgently to prevent and suppress such acts.

The Council emphasizes the central role of the United Nations in the global struggle against terrorism.

The Council reaffirms the importance of all its resolutions and statements on terrorism, in particular resolutions 1373(2001) and 1624(2005), and stresses the need for their full implementation.

The Council renews its call upon States to become parties as soon as possible to all relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism and to implement those to which they are party.

The Council believes that terrorist safe havens continue to be a significant concern and reaffirms the need for States to strengthen cooperation in order to find, deny safe haven to and bring to justice, on the basis of the principle of extradite or prosecute, any person who supports, facilitates, participates or attempts to participate in the financing, planning, preparation or commission of terrorist acts or provides safe havens.

The Council reaffirms the importance of the work of the committees established pursuant to resolutions 1267(1999), 1373(2001) and 1540(2004) and continues its support and guidance to the committees.

The Council particularly expresses its support for, and commitment to contributing to the implementation of, the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy of 8 September 2006 and welcomes the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 62/272 of 5 September 2008, in which it reaffirmed the Strategy and its four pillars and called for its implementation in an integrated manner and in all its aspects.

The Council emphasizes that enhancing dialogue and broadening understanding among civilizations, in an effort to prevent the indiscriminate targeting of different religions and cultures, and addressing unresolved regional conflicts and the full range of global issues, including development issues, will contribute to international cooperation, which by itself is necessary to sustain the broadest possible fight against terrorism.

The Council condemns in the strongest terms the incitement of terrorist acts and repudiates attempts at the justification or glorification of terrorist acts that may incite further terrorist acts. It reaffirms the importance of countering radicalization and extremism that may lead to terrorism and preventing the exploitation of young people by violent extremists.

The Council, reaffirming that the promotion and protection of human rights for all and the rule of law are essential to an effective counter-terrorism strategy and that effective counter-terrorism measures and the protection of human rights are complementary and mutually reinforcing, reminds States that they must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law.

The Council emphasizes the importance of technical assistance aimed at increasing the capabilities of Member States in the fight against terrorism by addressing their counter-terrorism needs.

The Council believes that the strengthening of mutual trust among States Members of the United Nations will facilitate the creation of conditions for a successful fight against terrorism, and that success in that fight will positively reinforce peace and security in the world.

The Council, deeply concerned at the continuous terrorist attacks around the world, calls upon all States Members of the United Nations to renew the degree of solidarity manifested immediately after the tragic event of 11 September 2001, and to redouble efforts to tackle global terrorism, dedicating significant attention to bringing to justice the perpetrators, facilitators and masterminds of terrorist acts while expressing deep compassion with all victims of terrorism.

The Council will continue to follow developments in order to organize as efficiently as possible its efforts in combating terrorism.

Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy

Review of implementation

On 4 September [meeting 117] and 5 September [meeting 120], the General Assembly conducted the first review of the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, adopted in 2006 in resolution 60/288 [YUN 2006, p. 66]. It had before it a July report [A/62/898] of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy: activities of the UN system in implementing the Strategy, submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 60/228. The report highlighted efforts of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force and provided a partial picture of the Strategy's implementation to date. The report described measures to: address the conditions conducive to terrorism; prevent and combat terrorism; build State capacity to prevent terrorism and strengthen the UN role in that regard; and ensure respect for human rights and the rule of law as the fundamental basis of the fight against terrorism.

The UN system had contributed to implementation in two ways: its departments, specialized agencies, funds and programmes had taken action within their own workplans, both individually and in partnerships; and the system's 24 entities and Interpol had provided a forum for discussing strategic issues and coordinating action. The Task Force had created nine working groups in areas that could benefit from engagement by more than one UN entity.

Within the UN system, the Department of Political Affairs (DPA), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) had contributed to the implementation of the work outlined in the Strategy's first pillar (measures to address conditions conducive to the spread of terrorism), as had the three Task Force working groups on preventing and resolving conflicts, on supporting and highlighting victims of terrorism, and on addressing radicalization and extremism that lead to terrorism. As the lead UN department for peacemaking and preventive diplomacy, DPA had a wide range of activities for reducing conflicts around the world. Since the adoption of the Strategy, it had established the United Nations Regional Centre for Preventive Diplomacy for Central Asia, which began operations in June, to assist the Governments of that region in responding more proactively to cross-border challenges and threats such as terrorism, drug trafficking and organized crime. It also promoted a culture of peace, justice and human development; ethnic, national and religious tolerance; and respect for all religions, beliefs or cultures, as called for in the Strategy. UNESCO supported programmes that advanced human rights and respect for diversity; fostered dialogue and tolerance among civilizations, cultures and peoples; and promoted mutual knowledge and respect. In January, UNESCO and the Alliance of Civilizations signed a memorandum of understanding to promote joint programming and cooperation on outreach activities. In the previous year, 90 countries had received support from UNDP for the rule of law, access to justice and human rights. UNDP had prepared two programmes on global rule of law and justice, and introduced an initiative focusing on the link between poverty and governance. DPKO sought to reduce opportunities for terrorists to sustain their criminal activities through programmes designed to ensure the adoption of fair and accountable criminal justice systems, the promotion of public safety, and the establishment of the rule of law. The Task Force working group on preventing and resolving conflicts undertook efforts to integrate counter-terrorism objectives into UN system work on the prevention and resolution of armed conflict. To date, the working group had drafted initial guidance on counter-terrorism for use by representatives of the Secretary-General and other peacemakers.

In the area of measures to combat terrorism, the UN system had helped Member States draft legal instruments and guidelines establishing standards for preventative action; compiled rosters and databases to centralize information about resources available to prevent and respond to terrorist acts; and assessed the counter-terrorism capacities of Member States. Through its working group on tackling the financing of terrorism, the Task Force was analysing the effectiveness of the measures in a number of countries to combat terrorist-financing and to identify new approaches to address the issue. The working group had convened seven round tables in Vienna and New York to explore views and proposals with outside experts in the areas of banking, intelligence (including financial intelligence), regulation, law enforcement and criminal justice.

In his recommendations for the way forward, the Secretary-General stated that four briefings to the Assembly on the work of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force in connection with the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy had taken place since 2007, the latest on 4 May 2008 in New York. Member States had expressed interest in greater systematization in order to guide the Task Force on its activities and to provide a stronger communication channel with the membership. The UN system would welcome such an agreement, should Member States so agree. The decision regarding the systematization of their interface with the Task Force rested with the membership, but the Secretary-General could provide advice based on the UN system's support capacity. Two aspects were pertinent: systematization should be commensurate with the resources provided by the Assembly, both personnel and financial; and the process of systematization should not constitute the greater share of the Task Force's work, if its coordination and coherence function was to be adequately maintained. Those needs could be met by a number of mechanisms, including regular briefings by the Task Force to the Assembly.

In an effort to operate within existing resources, the Secretary-General relied on voluntary contributions and temporary staff support. However, current arrangements were not sustainable. The Secretary-General would continue to address staffing requirements from within existing resources. Among the requests noted by the Task Force was increased engagement between the UN system and global, regional and subregional organizations, and civil society on the implementation of the Strategy. Global, regional and subregional organizations and civil society provided a resource that had not been tapped by the UN system. Member States, through the governing bodies of those organizations, should encourage cross-regional assistance and cooperation in counter-terrorism so that global, regional and subregional bodies that had developed procedures and expertise in that area could assist those still developing related capacities. The UN system, through the Task Force, if adequately staffed and resourced, could provide a strategic interface with global, regional and subregional bodies and civil society on the Strategy.

The Secretary-General concluded that initial successes in implementing the Counter-Terrorism Strategy should not blur the fact that much remained to be done to dissuade people from resorting to terrorism, deny terrorists the means to carry out their attacks, deter States from supporting terrorism, develop State capacity to defeat terrorism, and defend human rights. Only persistent, concerted and coordinated efforts would provide the opportunity to fully implement the United Nations Counter-Terrorism Strategy and secure a more peaceful world.

On 20 August [A/62/943-S/2008/575], the Permanent Observer of Palestine forwarded to the Security Council President and the Secretary-General a position paper submitted by the Arab Group on the subject. The Group encouraged the establishment of an International Counter-Terrorism Centre under the UN umbrella as envisaged in the Strategy. It stressed the importance of following up on the implementation of the Strategy in a comprehensive and non-selective manner and the pivotal role of the Assembly in addressing the issue of combating terrorism in all its aspects. The Group considered that the institutionalization of the Task Force within the Secretariat with the necessary resources would provide a basis for an organized, constructive and integrated contribution to Member States' efforts in achieving the Strategy's objectives.

The Secretary-General, addressing the Assembly on 4 September, urged Member States to take multilateral counter-terrorism further, guided by three main principles. First, the Organization should be innovative in developing its tools, and not shy away from non-traditional approaches to promoting security. Multilateral counter-terrorism cooperation should be undertaken in an integrated manner across the four pillars of the Strategy and range of actors. The UN system, through the Task Force, was developing that capacity. Second, multilateral counter-terrorism efforts had to be undertaken in partnership with regional and subregional organizations and with civil society. Third, at the international level, those efforts should leverage the Organization's comparative strengths. Bilateral actions might be insufficient to face the needs, whereas the UN collective approach gave multilateral efforts an advantage that should be maximized. The Secretary-General said that he was working to institutionalize the Task Force within the Secretariat and would convene a symposium in New York on supporting victims of terrorism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 September [meeting 120], the General Assembly adopted resolution 62/272 [draft: A/62/L.48] without vote [agenda item 118].

Terrorist attacks in 2008

In 2008, terrorist attacks continued worldwide with increased intensity and frequency, resulting in the deaths of hundreds of innocent civilians and injuries to many others. Those attacks were condemned by the Security Council, Member States and the Secretary-General, who called for increased efforts to combat the threat they posed to international peace and security.

Afghanistan

The Security Council, in a 17 February press statement [SC/9251], condemned the suicide attack in Kandahar, Afghanistan, on the same day, causing numerous deaths. Council members noted with dismay that the attack was one of the deadliest in Afghanistan in recent years and targeted civilians. They urged States to cooperate with the Afghan authorities in bringing the perpetrators to justice. Council members reiterated their concern at the increasing threat to the local population, national security forces, international military and international assistance efforts posed by the Taliban, Al-Qaida, illegal armed groups, criminals and those involved in the narcotics trade.

Council members also condemned the suicide attack on 7 July on the Indian Embassy in Kabul. Council members, in a press statement of the same day [SC/9386], reaffirmed their determination to combat terrorism in all its forms. They urged States to cooperate with the authorities to bring the perpetrators to justice.

Algeria

On 19 August, a terrorist attack occurred in Les Issers (east of Algiers), Algeria, at a gendarmerie training academy, killing 43 persons, including civilians, most of whom were between 18 and 20 years of age. In a statement issued the same day [SG/SM/11755], the Secretary-General condemned the attack and added that violence would not deter Algerians from the path of peace and national reconciliation. He urged the international community to support the Government in combating terrorism. In another statement issued the next day [SG/SM/11756], the Secretary-General condemned the two car bomb attacks in the city of Bouira, which reportedly killed 11 people.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 August [meeting 5962], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/31 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns in the strongest terms the suicide terrorist attack that occurred in Les Issers, Algeria, on 19 August 2008, causing numerous deaths and injuries at a gendarmerie training academy. It expresses its deep sympathy and condolences to the victims of this heinous act of terrorism and to their families, and to the people and Government of Algeria.

The Council underlines the need to bring the perpetrators, organizers, financiers and sponsors of this reprehensible act of terrorism to justice, and urges all States, in accordance with their obligations under international law and resolution 1373(2001) and consistent with resolution 1624(2005), to cooperate actively with the Algerian authorities in this regard.

The Council reaffirms that terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security, and that any acts of terrorism are criminal and unjustifiable, regardless of their motivation, wherever, whenever and by whomsoever committed.

The Council further reaffirms the need to combat by all means, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts. The Council reminds States that they must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism comply with all their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law.

The Council reiterates its determination to combat all forms of terrorism, in accordance with its responsibilities under the Charter.

Guinea-Bissau

On 23 November, an armed attack was perpetrated on the official residence of Guinea-Bissau President Bernardo João Vieira in Bissau. The Secretary-General, in a 24 November press statement [SG/SM/11947], condemned the attack, expressed concern at reports of alleged involvement of elements of the Armed Forces of Guinea-Bissau and called upon them to refrain from any measures that could further destabilize the country. That action, coming soon after the 16 November legislative elections, could have a devastating impact on the country's fragile stability. The Secretary-General called on the authorities to re-establish law and order and to conduct a thorough investigation, with a view to ensuring respect for the rule of law and human rights.

India

In a statement issued the same day [SG/SM/11956], the Secretary-General condemned the attacks, reiterating his conviction that no cause or grievance could justify indiscriminate attacks against civilians. He called for the perpetrators to be brought to justice swiftly. Two days later, the Security Council issued a press statement [SC/9513] calling for those responsible to be brought to justice and reiterating that all acts of terrorism were criminal and unjustifiable. On 2 December [SG/SM/11976], the Secretary-General, after speaking with Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, again expressed his sympathy to the families of the victims and reaffirmed his determination to play a lead role for the United Nations in dealing with that global menace.

The State Duma of the Russian Federation, in a 23 December statement [A/63/660-S/2008/811] transmitted to the Secretary-General, said that its members were appalled by that monstrous act directed against the people of India. They said that there could be no justification for atrocities of terrorist organizations, in whatever ethnic or religious guise. The counter-terrorist coalition of leading world powers should secure the unconditional implementation by all members of the international community of the Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy.

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

In 2008, the United Nations strengthened its efforts to combat and eliminate international terrorism. The General Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report [A/63/173 & Add.1] on measures to eliminate international terrorism, requested, in resolution 63/129 of 11 December (see p. 1441), the Terrorism Prevention Branch of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) to enhance UN capabilities in preventing terrorism, and recognized, in the context of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy [YUN 2006, p. 66] and Security Council resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61], its role in assisting States in becoming parties to and implementing the relevant international conventions and protocols relating to terrorism and in strengthening international cooperation mechanisms in criminal matters related to terrorism. In resolution 63/60 of 2 December (see p. 589), having considered the Secretary-General's report on measures to prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction [A/63/153], the Assembly called upon Member States to support international efforts to prevent terrorists from acquiring such weapons and their means of delivery.

Communications. On 27 February [A/62/711-S/2008/133], Turkey brought to the attention of the Secretary-General the judgement of the Antwerp Court of Appeals in Belgium, acquitting several members of the terrorist Revolutionary People's Liberation Army-Front, which had perpetrated numerous violent acts in Turkey and other European countries. cooperation should be supported within both the UN system and regional organizations. They called upon all UN Member States to comply with international terrorism conventions and related protocols, as well as Security Council resolutions on counter-terrorism. On the same date [A/62/854-S/2008/359], a joint communiqué of the 16 May meeting of the Foreign Ministers of Brazil, China, India and the Russian Federation, in which they emphasized the importance of implementing the UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy in all its aspects and considered that UN Member States should take concerted efforts towards the speedy finalization under UN auspices of a comprehensive convention on international terrorism.

On 23 October [A/63/507-S/2008/675], Iran protested the action taken by the United Kingdom, following a verdict by the British Court of Appeal on 7 May, to remove the name of the so-called “People’s Mojahedin Organization of Iran”, which Iran described as a terrorist group, from Britain’s list of proscribed groups.

On 29 December [S/2008/833], the Philippines requested that the statement made by its representative at the Security Council’s 9 December meeting be circulated as a Council document. In the statement, the Philippines said that delays in the prosecution, trials and judgement of terrorists would send the wrong signal to them and their co-conspirators, and embolden them. It urged the United Nations to take action.

Counter-Terrorism Committee

CTC report on implementation of resolution 1624(2005)

In January [S/2008/29], the Chairman of the Committee established pursuant to Security Council resolution 1373(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 61], known as the Counter-Terrorism Committee (CTC), submitted to the Security Council the Committee’s second report on the implementation of resolution 1624(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 102], which called on States to combat terrorism, including prohibiting by law and preventing incitement to commit terrorist acts. As at 16 July 2007, 88 States had reported to CTC on their implementation of the resolution. Of the 19 States reporting between 7 September 2006 and 16 July 2007, 10 had introduced legal provisions expressly criminalizing incitement, three had established terrorist acts as criminal offences and had introduced provisions criminalizing incitement to commit any offence, and four had no provisions specific to terrorist acts, although such acts generally fell under other criminal offences, to which general anti-incitement provisions applied. Two of those four States were in the process of drafting specific counter-terrorism legislation. Fewer than half of reporting States had expressly criminalized incitement, although most professed to address the problem through general criminal provisions.

The reports indicated that steps were taken to address other aspects of the resolution, including measures to deny safe haven, strengthen the security of international borders, promote dialogue and understanding among civilizations, and counter incitement motivated by extremism and intolerance. Many States described steps taken to ensure that their measures to implement the resolution complied with all obligations under international law. On the basis of the reports received from States and information gathered through visits, the Committee would explore the needs of States for technical assistance on all aspects of the resolution and would facilitate assistance.

CTC reports on implementation of resolution 1373(2001)

In 2008, the CTC Chairman submitted on 20 March and 18 July CTC’s work programmes for the periods from 1 January to 30 June [S/2008/187] and 1 July to 31 December [S/2008/471], respectively. CTC was assisted in its work by the Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate (CTED).

Report of CTED Executive Director (March). The Executive Director of CTED, reporting to the Council on 19 March [meeting 5855], said that, as requested in resolution 1787(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 66], he had reviewed CTED's organization and methods of work, in consultation with CTC members, the UN membership, CTED staff, UN agencies and outside experts. The revised organizational plan [S/2008/80] was endorsed by CTC on 24 January and was before the Council. Part of the review included general progress made in the implementation of resolution 1373(2001). The review was informed by three priorities: the consistency of judgements across various countries and regions; facilitation of technical assistance; and communication. There was a clear need to explain, particularly to the wider UN membership, CTC work and how it could help countries confront terrorism. The principal organizational change to CTED was the establishment, within the Assessment and Technical Assistance Office, of five cross-cutting functional groups in the areas of technical assistance; terrorist financing; border control, arms trafficking and law enforcement; general legal issues; and issues raised by resolution 1624(2005), as well as the human rights aspects of counter-terrorism. Additionally, two smaller units were created: a quality control unit to review CTED documents and to ensure that they were consistent in style and format; and a communications and outreach unit to develop more proactive communications strategies. Regarding methods of work, the revised organizational plan suggested several innovations: a more flexible approach to country visits to allow for focused visits tailored to the situation of the country concerned; a more comprehensive engagement with donors to better match their capabilities with the vulnerabilities identified in CTC dialogue with countries; more active involvement by CTED in the work of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force; and strengthened collaboration and cooperation with the experts of the Security Council Committees established pursuant to resolutions 1267(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 265] and 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544]. The report also highlighted the usefulness of strengthened relations with international, regional and subregional organizations.

The Director was confident that implementing those changes in CTED structure and work would improve its credibility and usefulness. He pointed to two significant Directorate activities: the finalization of the Preliminary Implementation Assessments (PIAs), one for each Member State, on the implementation of resolution 1373(2001)—some 160 of which had been adopted by the Committee and sent to the capitals of the States concerned; and the finalization of the revised "Survey of the implementation of Security Council resolution 1373(2001)", which examined the progress of counter-terrorism efforts in all regions and subregions, difficulties encountered and gaps and vulnerabilities to be addressed.

Report of CTC Chairman (May). On 6 May [meeting 5886], the CTC Chairman, in his briefing to the Council, said that the three subsidiary bodies of the Council established pursuant to resolutions 1267(1999), 1373(2001) and 1540(2004) had continued to jointly implement their common strategy through ongoing cooperation, mostly through their expert groups. He reported on the two major initiatives of CTC's work: the adoption of the new CTED organizational plan by the Council in March (see above) and the adoption of PIAS aimed at intensifying dialogue with Member States on implementing resolution 1373(2001). To date, the Committee had adopted 167 of the 192 PIAS. The Committee also adopted its work programme for 1 January to 30 June. Within the first category of its activities, implementation of resolution 1373(2001), besides adopting the PIAS, CTC commenced consideration of the revised survey of Member States' implementation of that resolution. The survey examined the implementation of counter-terrorism efforts in all regions and subregions, pinpointed areas for further improvements and identified shortfalls and vulnerabilities that needed to be addressed either regionally or globally. CTC organized visits to Member States, a fundamental component in monitoring and promoting implementation of resolution 1373(2001), allowing CTED to gain firsthand experience on the ground. The Committee had concluded on-site visits to Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Niger and Saudi Arabia, and was currently visiting Cambodia, to be followed by the Lao People's Democratic Republic. The visits resulted in a comprehensive assessment of all counter-terrorism measures, enhancing the Committee's understanding of the counter-terrorism measures in place, including challenges, best practices and technical assistance needs or programmes, and strengthening its cooperation with other international organizations.

Regarding the facilitation of technical assistance, CTC and CTED were engaged in dialogue with Member States. CTED reviewed strategies and mechanisms for facilitating technical assistance, with a view to strengthening the Committee's contribution and recording its impact. Its future challenge would be to devise more creative approaches so that the Committee, through CTED, could exercise its brokering role as effectively as possible. The Committee posted on its website the technical assistance matrix to help donors guide their assistance programmes and decision-making, and a directory of assistance enabling recipients to view and identify the programmes that best suited their needs.

With respect to the implementation of resolution 1624(2005), CTC submitted to the Council its second report on progress made by Member States in its implementation (see below). The Committee agreed to explore the technical assistance needs of States for implementation, and to facilitate provision of such assistance, while encouraging States that had not yet reported to do so. The Committee continued to play its part in implementing the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, and CTED was participating in the work of the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force. The Committee continued to cooperate with other parts of the UN system, and in particular with the two other Security Council committees dealing with counter-terrorism.

Report of CTC Chairman (June). In June [S/2008/379], the CTC Chairman, in accordance with Council resolution 1805(2008) (see p. 71), submitted the CTC report on the survey of the implementation of resolution 1373(2001). The purpose for the survey was to present current trends in implementing the resolution, with a view to identifying regional vulnerabilities or areas where groups of States were facing particular implementation difficulties and might benefit from a regional or subregional approach to terrorism. The survey focused on the areas addressed by the resolution, notably counter-terrorism legislation and policies pertaining to counter-terrorist financing, border control, law enforcement, international cooperation and the protection of human rights. It also assessed implementation of the resolution by regions and subregions, and drew conclusions about global progress in key thematic areas.

Report of CTC Chairman (November). On 12 November [meeting 6015], the CTC Chairman, in his briefing to the Security Council, reported that since his June briefing, CTC had accomplished several key initiatives. In May, it adopted a document entitled “Survey of the implementation of Security Council resolution 1373(2001)” (see p. 72), which it submitted to the Council. The report, prepared on the basis of evaluations contained in PIAS, contained priority recommendations for the Committee’s future action. The Committee continued to analyse PIAS, and had so far adopted 188 of them. As the first deadlines for Member States to respond to PIAS had expired, the Committee endorsed a proposal for conducting the stocktaking of each Member State’s implementation of resolution 1373(2001). That process had already started and would be carried out in stages at the sub-committee and Committee levels.

The CTED reorganization plan (see p. 71) established five cross-cutting technical working groups, covering major areas of implementation of resolution 1373(2001), as well as implementation of resolution 1624(2005). The groups presented to the Committee the first results of their work, aimed at revising and harmonizing criteria for technical judgements of elements of resolution 1373(2001), and were completing a document to assist CTED in that task. The Committee continued organizing visits to Member States to monitor and promote implementation of resolution 1373(2001), and had concluded on-site visits to Cambodia, the Lao People’s Democratic Republic, South Africa and Egypt, and a focused visit to Madagascar. It was also engaged in a follow-up visit to Kenya, to be followed by visits to Uganda and the United Kingdom. The Committee approved a new list of visits for the period ending 2010. Member States to be visited would be invited to meet with CTC members informally to present their views on the visit and its outcome before finalization of the report.

The Committee reminded Member States to ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism should comply with international obligations. The Committee explored the technical assistance needs of States to implement resolution 1624(2005), and how to facilitate the provision of such assistance. It encouraged those States that had not yet reported to do so. It also encouraged Member States to become party to and implement the 16 international counter-terrorism instruments, and to play their part in implementing the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy, including participation in the Counter-Terrorism Implementation Task Force.

Reports of States. Between February and July, the CTC Chairman transmitted to the Council President reports submitted by Member States on action they had taken or planned to take to implement resolutions 1373(2001) and 1624(2005), and letters from the Committee requesting follow-up information [S/2008/58–59, S/2008/76–77, S/2008/121, S/2008/314–315 & Corr.1, S/2008/336–337, S/2008/385–386].

Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate

Extension of CTED mandate. On 20 March, the Security Council, in resolution 1805(2008) (see p. 71), extended the CTED mandate until 31 December 2010, and asked it to conduct a review by 30 June 2009 and a comprehensive consideration of its work prior to the expiration of its mandate.

Appointment of CTED Executive Director. On 13 November [S/2008/711], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council President of his intention to extend the appointment of Mike Smith (Australia) as CTED Executive Director until 31 December 2009. The Council approved the appointment on 17 November [S/2008/712].

IAEA action

The General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, at its fifty-second session (Vienna, 29 September–4 October), adopted resolution GC(52)/RES/10 on measures to protect against nuclear terrorism, in which it called upon Member States to provide political, financial and technical support, including in-kind contributions, to improve nuclear and radiological security and prevent nuclear and radiological terrorism, and to provide the Nuclear Security Fund the political and—on a voluntary basis—financial support it needed, in a manner which enabled flexibility.

Peacekeeping operations

In 2008, United Nations peacekeeping reached the milestone of its sixtieth anniversary. To commemorate that event, the General Assembly held a special session on 7 November, at which it adopted a Declaration paying tribute to those who had given their lives in the service of humankind.

During the year, the Assembly and the Security Council continued to oversee the management and operation of UN peacekeeping missions. The Council addressed key issues pertaining to the overall conduct of those operations, reviewed the individual mandates of several ongoing operations and created new ones to deal with new security concerns. The Assembly took action on a number of financial and administrative matters.

The Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) continued to implement the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, whose mandate was to review the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all its aspects.

Sixtieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session (New York, 10 March–4 April and 3 July) [A/62/19], recommended to the General Assembly that it hold a commemorative meeting during its sixty-third (2008) session for the sixtieth anniversary of peacekeeping. The Special Committee recommended a draft declaration for adoption by the Assembly.

On 7 November [meeting 41], the General Assembly held the commemorative meeting. The Assembly President said that current peacekeeping operations—all 20 of them, requiring more than 110,000 personnel—were characterized by their unprecedented scale and complexity. They remained a key measure of the ability of the United Nations to meet its Charter mandate and the expectations of the world's peoples. The annual UN peacekeeping budget was approximately $5.6 billion, representing one half of 1 per cent of global military spending. Because a peacekeeping mandate was not specifically spelled out in the Charter, that work had to evolve through innovative partnerships nurtured by different UN organs. Noting the interaction among different areas of UN responsibilities, he said that the Security Council, the Assembly and the Secretariat enjoyed a close partnership that had grown and responded to ever-changing circumstances over the decades. The broad-based participation had helped to assure the credibility of each intervention. The principles of neutrality, transparency and universality gave them legitimacy and should be defended by all. The restructuring of peacekeeping operations, arising from catastrophic failures in the 1990s and highlighted in the groundbreaking report of the Chairman of the Panel on United Nations Peace Operations (Brahimi report) [YUN 2000, p. 83], should enhance the UN ability to identify, coordinate and sustain increasingly complex operations. The Assembly had the responsibility to ensure that operations were equipped with the tools needed to fulfil their mandates, but, almost without exception, they were still being sent into harm's way with insufficient resources. Troop-contributing countries should have more of a say in determining the resources required to minimize the risk and maximize the chances of success of the operations where their troops were sent. Troop-contributing countries also should be involved at the earliest stage when the Security Council mandated an operation, and in any changes in that mandate. That closer involvement would create more reality checks to ensure that operations were well conceived and administered from the outset.

The Deputy Secretary-General recalled that, sixty years earlier, the Council had dispatched a small group of international military observers to the Middle East to supervise an uneasy ceasefire between the new State of Israel and its neighbours. That first peacekeeping mission was an experiment that the founders of the United Nations had not foreseen. The model proved to be a great success. Peacekeeping had evolved into one of the cornerstones of international diplomacy. Currently, there were more than 100,000 UN peacekeepers deployed in 18 missions across the globe. That scale was unprecedented. Peacekeeping operations had also evolved to meet the changing nature of conflict. Beyond monitoring ceasefires, peacekeepers had wide-ranging mandates: helping post-conflict societies to rebuild; nurturing democratic governance; protecting civilians; disarming ex-combatants; supervising elections; and strengthening institutions. The evolution of peacekeeping did not come without cost. Peacekeepers operated in some of the most austere and challenging environments. Peacekeepers needed clear and achievable mandates, political will and material resources. The Deputy Secretary-General asked the Assembly to pay tribute to the more than 2,500 peacekeepers and other personnel who had given their lives while serving the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November [meeting 41], the General Assembly adopted resolution 63/16 [draft: A/63/L.16 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 31].

Sixtieth anniversary of United Nations peacekeeping

The General Assembly

Adopts the Declaration on the Occasion of the Sixtieth Anniversary of United Nations Peacekeeping, as set out in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Occasion of the Sixtieth Anniversary of United Nations Peacekeeping

We, the States Members of the United Nations, recall with pride the awarding of the 1988 Nobel Peace Prize to the United Nations peacekeeping forces. Today, peacekeeping is the flagship activity of the United Nations, helping to restore peace and stability and bringing hope to millions of people in various regions around the world affected by conflicts. We pay tribute to the hundreds of thousands of men and women who, in the past sixty years, have served under the United Nations flag in more than sixty peacekeeping operations around the world, and we honour the memory of more than 2,400 United Nations peacekeepers who gave their lives in the cause of peace. We also commend the efforts made by United Nations and related personnel who are currently performing their duties in peacekeeping operations.

We reiterate our strong support for all measures undertaken to effectively promote the safety and security of United Nations peacekeeping personnel. We, the States Members of the United Nations, reaffirm our commitment and willingness to provide full support to United Nations peacekeepers, to ensure that they are able to successfully and safely fulfil the tasks entrusted to them.

General aspects of UN peacekeeping

Strengthening operational capacity

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session (New York, 10 March–4 April and 3 July) [A/62/19], stated that there should be adequate capabilities and clear guidelines for peacekeeping missions to carry out their mandated tasks. The Special Committee welcomed the establishment of the post of the Military Adviser at the Assistant Secretary-General level, and requested the Secretary-General to appoint the Adviser urgently. He should also ensure that the military function within DPKO was appropriately and adequately staffed and structured. That matter should be considered in conjunction with reviews of the organization of DPKO and the Department of Field Support (DFS) to avoid duplication and maximize capacity. The Special Committee urged transparency in the recruitment of staff for senior positions in the Office of Military Affairs. The Secretariat should study and review, in consultation with troop-contributing countries, the requirements for generating military police units and personnel from countries providing troops to a mission.

The Special Committee noted the incorporation of the Police Division in the Office of the Rule of Law and Security Institutions, and reaffirmed its support for the inclusion of the Police Adviser as a permanent member of the DPKO senior management team. It looked forward to receiving by July the report on the review of all aspects of the Standing Police Capacity's first year of operation. It noted the Secretariat's intention to relocate the Standing Police Capacity to the UN Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy, and looked forward to the consideration of that matter by the General Assembly's Fifth Committee. Recognizing the need to recruit qualified personnel for police components of UN peacekeeping operations, the Special Committee encouraged the Secretariat to improve recruitment procedures and guidance.

To overcome the contingent-owned equipment and sustainability shortfalls faced by some troop-contributing countries, the Special Committee recommended that DPKO and DFS continue to facilitate enabling arrangements, including through other Member States and bilateral arrangements.

Concerning the need for enhanced, rapidly deployable capacities for UN peacekeeping missions in crisis, the Special Committee decided to reconvene its informal open-ended working group on those capacities to prepare a comprehensive report on feasible options for consideration by the Special Committee at its next substantive session.

The Special Committee reiterated the need for the full implementation of the integrated mission planning process and called for periodic briefings by the Secretariat on the status of the implementation. The integrated mission planning process guidelines should be completed as quickly as possible, and the Secretary-General should designate a high-ranking official to oversee and steer the process.

The Special Committee noted the change in subordination of the Situation Centre. It recognized that several divisions and sections of DPKO and DFS might need seconded military and police expertise to increase efficiency and improve communication between the Secretariat, troop-contributing countries and field missions. The Special Committee noted the internal publication entitled “United Nations peacekeeping operations: principles and guidelines”, bearing in mind that it did not create legal obligations for Member States or their contingents. It believed that further work on the publication should take into account the views of Member States, best practices and lessons learned in the field and be done in an inclusive and transparent manner.

Strategies for complex peacekeeping operations

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], stressed that the UN system and the international community, in particular donor countries, in cooperation with national authorities, should develop and engage in coordination systems focused on immediate needs, as well as long-term reconstruction and poverty reduction. It recognized that better coordination with UN country teams and development actors was important in ensuring greater efficiency in development efforts and addressing urgent development problems.

The Special Committee recognized the specific needs of children in armed conflict, which should be taken into account in peace negotiations and peace arrangements. It recommended the inclusion of specific child protection provisions in the mandates of peacekeeping operations and the deployment of child protection advisers in peacekeeping operations. DPKO should elaborate the role and responsibilities of the advisers within peacekeeping missions and outline modalities for cooperation with UN agencies, funds and programmes, to ensure a comprehensive strategy of prevention and response with respect to violence against children. The Special Committee recommended the designation of a focal point in DPKO to liaise with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on violence against children in order to further the action of peacekeeping in the area of child protection.

The Special Committee urged the Secretariat and troop-contributing countries to continue harmonizing predeployment awareness programmes and applying UN guidelines on medical clearance and medical conditions that precluded deployment. It recommended that full use be made of opportunities for adequately resourced peer education training programmes. The Special Committee commended outreach efforts by peacekeeping operations, in collaboration with the United Nations Population Fund and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, to raise awareness among host communities, and the collaborative efforts to integrate HIV issues in disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes.

Safety and security

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], expressed grave concern at the security environment in many peacekeeping missions. It stated that the liaison arrangements of UN field operations, which were to maintain contact with the parties, should be improved at appropriate levels, especially tactical and operational levels, so as to establish effective immediate responses to safety and security issues. Some troops were being stretched to cover geographic areas that exceeded their capacities, which threatened their security and adversely affected their performance, discipline, and command and control. It called upon DPKO to ensure that UN peacekeeping personnel were deployed in accordance with agreed concepts of operation.

The Special Committee expressed concern over the quality of local security personnel and its possible impact on the safety and security of peacekeeping personnel. It requested DPKO and the Department of Safety and Security to improve the quality of those personnel and to present a policy for screening and verification before hiring. The Special Committee underlined the importance of assuring that all military and police officers deployed in UN peacekeeping missions were under UN security arrangements, including the UN security management system. It requested the Secretariat to report on steps taken to address the issue.

The Special Committee requested DPKO to report before its next session on the use of advanced monitoring and surveillance technologies in UN peacekeeping operations, and the Secretariat to develop modalities for their use with due attention to legal, operational, technical and financial considerations, as well as the consent of the countries concerned with regard to their application in the field.

The Special Committee welcomed the Secretariat's steps to analyse the factors and circumstances contributing to fatalities of UN peacekeeping personnel. It recommended that the Secretariat improve the collection and processing of data from field missions to allow for more thorough analysis of fatalities and serious injuries, and report annually to Member States. The Special Committee stressed the need for the Secretariat to improve relevant policies and procedures to enhance the mechanism for managing crisis situations in peacekeeping operations in a well-coordinated and effective manner. It requested the Secretariat to develop security procedures with regard to setting up UN positions in peacekeeping missions.

Conduct and discipline

Report of Secretary-General. In March [A/62/758], the Secretary-General, responding to section XVI of General Assembly resolution 61/276 [YUN 2007, p. 83] on peacekeeping issues, submitted a comprehensive report on conduct and discipline, including justification of all posts. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its resumed 2005 session [YUN 2005, p. 120], had adopted the framework for a comprehensive strategy to address sexual exploitation and abuse and other forms of serious misconduct in peacekeeping missions. The strategy was intended to address and eliminate all forms of misconduct in peacekeeping missions, particularly sexual exploitation and abuse, by taking measures aimed at: enforcement action in cases of reported misconduct; provision of assistance to victims of sexual exploitation and abuse; and prevention of misconduct. To enable action in relation to each of the three elements, Member States showed commitment to implementing systemic changes relating to the fundamental paradigm that governed such action. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters and those Units in peacekeeping missions had been, since their establishment in 2005, the focal point in DPKO, DFS and the missions for the progressive implementation of the comprehensive strategy to address sexual exploitation and abuse. The report reviewed the functions assigned to the Units, the extent to which their performance of those functions had assisted in implementing the strategy, and elements of the strategy. In addition, a set of operational functions resulting from the strategy was identified, the successful performance of which was dependent on adequate personnel capacity.

While the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters had made progress in the development of a regulatory framework, new guidelines and Standard Operating Procedures were required to address policies recently adopted and changes in implementation modalities of some processes. None of the special political missions had a Conduct and Discipline Unit per se, but had single Conduct and Discipline Officers, since those missions were small in number of personnel and usually lacked police or military components. All Conduct and Discipline Units had international and national support staff to assist in database management, translation of documents, and provision of administrative and logistical support.

The functions performed by the Units at Headquarters and in the field reflected on their role as mechanisms for internal oversight of conduct, discipline and accountability within DPKO/DFS and peacekeeping missions. Their presence and performance of those functions had contributed to the Organization's progress in establishing aspects of a framework of operational policies and procedures that made for coherent and effective responses to misconduct by peacekeepers. Progress had been made to bring about systemic changes, such as revisions to the model memorandum of understanding and victim assistance strategy. While involved in deliberations for strengthening the criminal accountability of UN personnel, legislative bodies were set to consider a framework for providing minimum levels of welfare and recreation facilities to all categories of peacekeeping personnel and adopt a common code of conduct. At the operational level, the establishment of Conduct and Discipline Units was a distinct improvement on former arrangements, which were fragmented and ad hoc. Those Units, as mechanisms for internal monitoring of conduct and discipline answering to heads of mission and DPKO/DFS, had enhanced the ability of heads of mission to take a "holistic approach" to issues of misconduct, and effectively discharge their disciplinary responsibilities. In peacekeeping missions, the more vigorous, coherent and consistent operational activity in disciplinary matters since 2005 had begun to show some signs of improvement. A comparative review of the available records on the total annual number of reports alleging sexual exploitation and abuse suggested that the strategy might be beginning to bear fruit.

The report provided justification of staffing levels, functions, and their impact on conduct and discipline for the Conduct and Discipline Units at Headquarters and in the field. It proposed converting into posts all general temporary assistance positions at Headquarters and in the field for the 2008–2009 budget period, as the functions performed were ongoing and fully integrated into the mandate and operations of DPKO/DFS and the missions, and not temporary in nature. It also proposed the use of uniform nomenclature, (i.e. "Conduct and Discipline Units").

Pending consideration by the Assembly of those suggestions, the proposed 2008–2009 peacekeeping operations support account budget and individual peacekeeping operations budgets included conduct and discipline staffing requirements. Should the Assembly approve the conversion of all conduct and discipline general temporary assistance positions to posts, there would be no financial implications for 2008–2009 for the peacekeeping operations support account or individual peacekeeping missions.

The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly take note of the report and approve the conversion of posts for 2008–2009, as well as uniform nomenclature.

The Assembly, by decision 62/545 C of 20 June, deferred until its sixty-third (2008) session the agenda item "Comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on conduct and discipline, including full justification of all posts".

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], affirmed that any kind of misconduct by peacekeeping personnel was detrimental to the missions and the Organization's image, and had adverse effects on the population of host countries. All peacekeeping personnel had to adhere to all applicable UN rules, regulations, provisions and guidelines for peacekeepers, as well as to national laws and regulations. All acts of misconduct should be investigated and punished in accordance with due process of law, as well as with memorandums of understanding concluded between the United Nations and Member States. The Special Committee requested that the United Nations take appropriate measures to prevent unsubstantiated allegations of misconduct from damaging the credibility of any UN peacekeeping mission or troop-contributing country or UN peacekeeping personnel, and ensure that steps were taken to restore their image and credibility when allegations of misconduct were found to be legally unproven. The Special Committee welcomed the finalization of the revised model memorandum of understanding [YUN 2007, p. 69] and urged its implementation by the Secretariat in respect of existing and new memorandums of understanding.

The Special Committee noted the Secretary-General's 2007 report on strengthening investigations [ibid., p. 1473] and looked forward to the outcome of the Assembly deliberations on it. It noted the Secretary-General's report on the comprehensive review of the welfare and recreation needs of all categories of peacekeeping personnel [A/62/663] (see p. 100), and requested a further report on the matter, detailing the implications of the proposals. The Special Committee was concerned at the delays in housing peacekeeping personnel in appropriate accommodations with adequate protection against the elements, and requested the Secretariat to improve the situation pursuant to the Contingent-Owned Equipment Manual.

Sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations

OIOS report. In a February report on peacekeeping operations in 2007 [A/62/281 (Part II & Add.1)], OIOS reported a 64 per cent decrease over 2006 in allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse. While the numbers still underscored the need for strengthening efforts to prevent misconduct, particularly sexual exploitation and abuse, the decline in allegations reflected positively on the Organization's efforts, following the report of the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Peacekeeping Personnel on a comprehensive strategy to eliminate sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations [YUN 2005, p. 119].

Many variables contributed to an environment conducive to behaviour specifically discouraged under the Secretary-General's bulletin [ST/SGB/2003/13] on sexual exploitation and abuse [YUN 2004, p. 107] and other misconduct. Therefore, while progress was being made, because of the complex and evolving nature of the environment in which the Organization operated, there was no guarantee that status quo efforts would lead to a further decline in misconduct. Any allegation of misconduct, regardless of the type, was an allegation that might adversely impact the credibility and reputation of the Organization and hence its ability to discharge its mandate. For its part, OIOS, in its 2007 report on strengthening investigations [YUN 2007, p. 1473], highlighted proposals for restructuring and strengthening its investigation function to better meet the demand for investigations.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a June report on special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse [A/62/890], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 57/306 [YUN 2003, p. 1237], indicated that 127 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse involving DPKO personnel were reported to OIOS in 2007, a substantial decrease from the 357 cases reported in 2006. The highest number of allegations reported (59) originated at the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, down from the 176 cases reported in 2006.

As at 31 December, investigations of allegations made in 2007 involving 136 UN peacekeeping personnel were completed. Of the 118 investigations of allegations involving military personnel, 113 were determined to be substantiated and 5 unsubstantiated. One Member State reported ongoing criminal proceedings following the repatriation of 111 military personnel, while three others reported action taken against 21 military personnel, comprising three dismissals from service, six reprimands, seven imprisonments, one reduction in rank and imprisonment, and four dismissals from service and imprisonment. Investigations of allegations involving nine civilian personnel determined six to be substantiated and three unsubstantiated. Investigations of allegations were conducted involving nine police and corrections personnel, two of which were determined to be substantiated and seven unsubstantiated.

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], called on the United Nations to continue to implement its policy of zero tolerance of sexual exploitation and abuse in UN peacekeeping operations. Underlining the importance of eliminating all forms of misconduct, the Special Committee remained concerned about new cases of misconduct reported, including sexual exploitation and abuse, and about the number of outstanding allegations still awaiting investigation, and encouraged continued efforts to address that backlog, in accordance with the provisions of the new model memorandum of understanding. It welcomed progress made towards the elimination and prevention of misconduct, including sexual exploitation and abuse, and noted that OIOS had reported a decrease in the number of allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse it had received (see p. 78). It suggested that such data should be disaggregated according to type of misconduct alleged. It welcomed the Assembly's adoption of the strategy on assistance to victims of sexual exploitation by UN personnel [YUN 2007, p. 1519].

Cooperation with troop-contributing countries

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], expressed the view that the relationship between those who planned, mandated and managed UN peacekeeping operations and those who implemented the operations' mandates should be enhanced. Troop-contributing countries, through their experience and expertise, could contribute to the planning process and assist the Security Council in making effective and timely decisions. It called upon the Secretariat to improve information-sharing with troop-contributing countries and to ensure that the Secretary-General's reports on specific operations were circulated to those countries in time for holding meetings with them before discussions among Council members. It encouraged all troop-contributing countries to participate in meetings with the Council and the Secretariat in order to achieve meaningful outcomes, and underscored the importance of better interaction between the Council's Working Group on Peacekeeping Operations and troop-contributing countries, so that the experience and expertise of those countries could be drawn upon when implementing and extending peacekeeping mandates. It encouraged the Working Group to implement the recommendations contained in its 2006 report [YUN 2006, p. 86].

The Special Committee urged the Secretariat to consult with the troop-contributing countries when planning changes in the tasks, rules of engagement, operational concepts or command and control structure that impacted the personnel, equipment, training and logistics requirements, in order to enable them to give advice in the planning process and to ensure that their troops had the capacity to meet the new demands. The Secretariat should also consult with those countries when planning a drawdown of troops in any peacekeeping operation. The drawdown should take place only after consideration of inputs from the troop-contributing countries and bearing in mind the situation on the ground. Existing procedures for interaction between troop-contributing countries, the Secretariat and the Council should be used to their fullest extent.

The Special Committee recognized progress by the Secretariat in increasing cooperation and consultations with troop-contributing countries and looked forward to continued and improved cooperation, including easy access to briefing material in written form. It requested the Secretariat to produce predeployment threat assessments and share them with potential troop-contributing countries. It also recognized the possible benefit from potential troop-contributing countries making reconnaissance visits to new missions before presenting their pledges to those missions, and the need for more cooperation in that regard between DPKO, DFS and the Department of Safety and Security, and more interactions with potential troop-contributing countries from the early stages of planning.

Cooperation with regional organizations

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], noted the Secretariat's establishment of a capacity for partnerships, other than that dedicated to the African Union, to serve as a coordination point for all issues related to cooperation with regional arrangements and other multilateral partners engaged in matters relating to peacekeeping operations. The Committee believed that the new capacity could avoid duplication or competition of efforts among multilateral institutions. It looked forward to continued dialogue with the Secretariat on making the best use of the possibilities for employing regional arrangements' capacities under appropriate circumstances, as envisaged in the 2005 World Summit Outcome [YUN 2005, p. 49]. It reiterated its support for the Secretary-General's proposal to implement modalities for operational cooperation in peacekeeping within regional arrangements.

Women in peacekeeping

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], encouraged DPKO to support local women's peace initiatives and the involvement of women and women's groups in all activities related to the peace process and conflict resolution. In that regard, it recognized the importance of gender advisers to UN missions. The Special Committee underlined the gravity of all acts of sexual and gender-based violence, including sexual exploitation and abuse, and stressed the importance of addressing the needs of all victims of such acts. It emphasized the need for regular training of UN staff and related personnel in gender-sensitive approaches in the context of their responsibilities and mandate, and for responding to cases of sexual and gender-based violence in a culturally sensitive manner and the deployment of UN gender advisers to missions. The Special Committee noted the continuing underrepresentation of women at senior management levels and among uniformed personnel in peacekeeping missions. It urged DPKO to develop a comprehensive strategy for increasing women's participation in all aspects and at all levels of UN peacekeeping operations, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 59/164 on the improvement of the status of women in the UN system [YUN 2004, p. 1429] and Security Council resolution 1325(2000) on women and peace and security [YUN 2000, p. 1113].

Communication. On 16 June [S/2008/402], the United Kingdom transmitted to the Council President the summary report of the Wilton Park conference on "Women targeted or affected by armed conflict: what role for military peacekeepers", organized by the United Nations Development Fund for Women, UN Action Against Sexual Violence in Conflict and DPKO, with the assistance of Canada and the United Kingdom.

On 19 June, the Security Council, in resolution 1820(2008) (see p. 1265), expressed concern about the persistent obstacles and challenges to the participation and full involvement of women in the prevention and resolution of conflict as a result of violence, intimidation and discrimination, which eroded women's capacity and legitimacy to participate in post-conflict public life. It urged the Secretary-General and his Special Envoys to invite women to participate in discussions pertinent to the prevention and resolution of conflict, the maintenance of peace and security, and post-conflict peacebuilding, and encouraged all parties to facilitate the equal and full participation of women at decision-making levels.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in his September report on women and peace and security [S/2008/622] (see also p. 1264), stated that, as at July 2008, women constituted 2.2 per cent of military personnel in UN peacekeeping operations compared to 1 per cent in July 2004, and 7.6 per cent of civilian police personnel compared to 5 per cent in 2004. In those settings where peacekeeping missions were supporting the restructuring of police services (Kosovo, Timor-Leste, Sierra Leone), women civilian police represented more than 15 per cent. As at 30 June 2008, women's representation in DPKO in civilian posts in the Professional and higher categories reached 28.6 per cent, and 26.3 per cent at the D-1 level and above, up from 27.5 and 12 per cent respectively in 2004. In DFS, women accounted for 36.4 per cent of all Professional and higher-level personnel. In field-based operations, women's representation accounted for 23 per cent. The Secretary-General had stepped up efforts to increase the number of women in peacekeeping, in particular at the senior leadership level. As at September 2008, there was one woman Head of Mission (Liberia) and seven Deputy Heads of Mission (Burundi, Chad, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Lebanon, Liberia, Nepal, the Sudan).

The Secretary-General stated that the deployment of women in peacekeeping forces, in police forces and among civilian personnel facilitated engagement with local women, enhanced their access to social and psychological services, including trauma counselling, information-sharing on sexual harassment, abuse and rape, and lowered the incidence of sexual violence and abuse, particularly in camps of internally displaced persons and refugees. Member States endeavoured to enlarge the pool of qualified women eligible for secondment to peacekeeping and peacebuilding missions. Training of military police and civilian peacekeeping personnel on the protection, rights and particular needs of women, as well as the importance of involving women in all peacekeeping functions, received attention from Member States, the United Nations and civil society. DPKO led UN efforts to provide training and improve training materials and tools. The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women developed an interactive website highlighting gender training opportunities for UN peacekeepers. Thirteen full-time gender advisers in UN peacekeeping operations, including integrated missions, provided technical guidance to heads of mission to increase women's participation in implementing the operation's mandate. Five missions had a gender focal point, a staff member who had the gender portfolio in addition to other tasks. DPKO developed guidelines to ensure that gender advisers were serving as catalysts for gender mainstreaming. The United Nations Volunteers programme increased the number of gender specialists from 3 in 2004 to 19 in 2008. DFS and DPKO increased the representation of women among UN uniformed personnel, including by strengthening their outreach to Member States, particularly troop- and police-contributing countries.

In statement S/PRST/2008/39 of 29 October (see p. 1264), the Council President said that the Council remained concerned about the underrepresentation of women at all stages of peace processes and in peacebuilding, and called upon the Secretary-General to appoint more women to pursue good offices on his behalf, particularly as Special Representatives and Special Envoys. It urged Member States and international, regional and subregional organizations to take measures to increase women's participation in conflict prevention, conflict resolution and peacebuilding, and to strengthen the role of women as decision makers in those areas. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to report on the obstacles and challenges to strengthening the participation of women in those areas, including recommendations to address those issues, by October 2009.

Oversight activities

OIOS reported in February [A/62/281 (Part II)] on its peacekeeping oversight activities from 1 January to 31 December 2007. The Office issued 154 oversight reports related to peace operations, which accounted for 54 per cent of all OIOS recommendations. The recommendations highlighted four risk areas: governance, compliance, and financial and operational risks. While overall resources dedicated to peace operations remained at a similar level in 2007 as the year before, a new OIOS presence was established in the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the United Nations Integrated Mission in Timor-Leste, while the presence of the Office in the United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB) was phased out. OIOS also expanded its presence in the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC). The scope of OIOS audits varied widely from relatively routine to complex global or horizontal audits in areas such as fuel management, procurement and management, and direction of special political missions. During the reporting period, the resident audit offices conducted comprehensive risk assessments of mission activities, which would serve as the basis for the 2008 Internal Audit Division audit workplan.

In 2007, the OIOS Investigations Division received 469 allegations pertaining to staff involved in peace operations, comprising 65 per cent of all allegations received by the Division that year. In total, 87 investigation reports were issued in 2007.

In the area of governance risk, OIOS assessed impact on mission operations arising from failure to inform, direct, manage and monitor UN activities. An audit of occupational safety and health in the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) found that DPKO needed to work with the Department of Safety and Security to develop guidelines for the occupational safety and health of civilian personnel in that Mission. The lack of direction provided to the Mission resulted in fragmentation of safety and health programmes. Overall, UNMIL programmes did not meet international standards, nor did they adequately mitigate occupational safety and health risks. As a result, personnel were exposed to high risk of accidents and health problems that could have been averted by meeting minimum standards. In an audit of UNIFIL, OIOS found that the Mission needed to formulate indicators of achievement and performance measures for the political and civilian affairs components of its operations, which were critical to evaluating the effectiveness of operations. Reviews of four missions noted that, while the practice of results-based budgeting was evolving, several areas needed improvement to enhance its utility in peacekeeping missions. Two main issues hindered its full utilization: it was not fully utilized as a management tool in most missions because it was not linked to or integrated into the mission implementation plans; and there was a lack of results-based budgeting capacity at the missions due to staff turnover and a lack of useful results-based budgeting guidance.

As to compliance risk, OIOS, based on its comprehensive audit of the United Nations Mission in Nepal, concluded that policies and procedures on human resources, procurement and logistical support that were specific to launching short-term political missions needed to be developed, considering the limited duration of their mandates and the associated political and reputational risks to the Organization. The absence of such policy adversely affected the deployment of political missions and their mandate implementation. There were also serious internal control shortcomings in the Mission's operational areas, particularly administrative and logistical planning, procurement and asset management. Other examples of compliance risk were found in UNMIL, the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, ONUB, MONUC, the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo and the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti.

Among examples of financial risk, the report noted the OIOS Procurement Task Force's examination of some 40 complaints involving corruption and procurement irregularities in MONUC. The Task Force found numerous cases of vendors and companies having to pay staff as a prerequisite for the award of business contracts, or offering to pay money in exchange for assistance in the procurement process. The Task Force identified extensive efforts by several procurement staff members to solicit payments and bribes from vendors in exchange for preferential treatment and benefits. It also found extensive corruption in the Mission's procurement and an overall collapse of ethical culture. A lack of continuity at the managerial level on the one hand, improper ethics and procurement training, and little rotation of staff on the other, contributed to that development. The Task Force concluded that the Mission should overhaul its procurement operations and provide ethics training, or divest responsibility for procurement to Headquarters or an independent third party. An audit of the management of systems contracts for peacekeeping operations identified various internal control weaknesses, from the planning stage to vendor performance evaluation and payments, which represented high risk of inefficiency and ineffectiveness in operations.

Operational risk involved impact on the mandate arising from failure of internal processes. In an audit of UNDOF, OIOS found that there was little rotation of procurement staff, while good management practice called for periodic rotation to minimize the risk of collusion with vendors. In an audit of air operations of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan, OIOS found that the Mission's air assets, comprising 42 aircraft, were underutilized. OIOS recommended that the Mission conduct a comprehensive review of its air asset requirements and adjust its fleet to ensure cost-effectiveness.

In an April addendum to the report [A/62/281 (Part II)/Add.1], the Secretary-General provided his comments on the OIOS findings.

By decision 62/545 C of 20 June, the Assembly deferred until its sixty-third (2008) session the item on "Report on the activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services for the period from 1 January to 31 December 2007, and the Secretary-General's note transmitting his comments thereon".

Public information in peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly, in Part III of resolution 63/100 B of 5 December (see p. 702) on the role of the Department of Public Information (DPI) in UN peacekeeping operations, commended the DPI role and its network of UN information centres in commemorating the sixtieth anniversary of UN peacekeeping (see p. 74). It requested the Secretariat to ensure the Department's involvement from the planning stage of future peacekeeping operations through interdepartmental consultations and coordination with other Secretariat departments, in particular DPKO and DFS. It requested DPI, DPKO and DFS to continue their cooperation in raising awareness of the new realities, successes and challenges faced by peacekeeping operations, especially multidimensional and complex ones, and the recent surge in UN peacekeeping activities, and welcomed efforts by the three Departments to develop and implement a comprehensive communications strategy on current challenges facing UN peacekeeping. The Assembly also asked DPI and DPKO to cooperate in implementing an outreach programme to explain the Organization's zero-tolerance policy regarding sexual exploitation and abuse and to inform the public of the outcome of all such cases involving peacekeeping personnel.

Comprehensive review of peacekeeping

Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 61/291 [YUN 2007, p. 75], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations and its Working Group continued their comprehensive review of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects [A/62/19]. ### Financial and administrative aspects of peacekeeping operations

The General Assembly considered a number of issues related to financial and administrative aspects of UN peacekeeping operations, including the financial performance of UN peacekeeping operations; the support account for peacekeeping operations; funds for closed missions; consolidation of peacekeeping accounts; financial reports and audited financial statements; procedures for determining reimbursement to Member States for contingent-owned equipment; best practices, management and financing of the UN Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy; restructuring; personnel matters; criminal responsibility of UN staff and experts on mission; welfare and recreational needs of peacekeeping staff; death and disability; training; and staffing of field missions.

Financing

Expenditures for UN peacekeeping operations from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008 rose by 21.7 per cent, from $5,148.1 million in the previous fiscal year to $6,265.8 million [A/63/5 (Vol. II)]. The net increase was mainly due to the start-up of UNAMID and MINURCAT and the expansion of UNIFIL, which were partially offset by the reduced expenditures for UNMIS.

In terms of the overall financial situation during the year, assessments, unpaid assessments and expenditures all increased, with a corresponding decrease in liquidity in active missions totalling $136.8 million. Outstanding unpaid assessments for active peacekeeping missions increased by 44 per cent, from $707.5 million to $1,018.9 million. Unpaid assessments for closed missions did not change significantly. As at 30 June, total unpaid assessments amounted to $1,576.5 million.

Available cash for active missions totalled $1,891.5 million, while liabilities reached $2,224.7 million. For closed missions, available cash totalled $507.5 million, while liabilities were $481.8 million. Closed missions with cash surpluses continued to be the only available source of lending to active peacekeeping missions. New loans totalling $72 million were made during the reporting period, bringing total loans outstanding as at 30 June to $37.6 million.

Notes of Secretary-General. In a January note [A/C.5/62/23], the Secretary-General, further to the information provided in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 85] on approved resources for peacekeeping operations, the United Nations Logistics Base (UNLB) at Brindisi, Italy, and the support account for peacekeeping operations from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008, provided updated information reflecting financing actions taken by the General Assembly during its sixty-second session in respect of MINURCAT and UNAMID, bringing the total to $6,746,805,700.

In May [A/C.5/62/28], in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/233 A [YUN 1994, p. 1338], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee information on the proposed budgetary requirements of each peacekeeping operation, including budget levels for UNLB and the support account for peacekeeping operations, for 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, by category, and with the aggregate total resource requirements amounting to $7,376,102,600.

In August [A/C.5/62/31], the Secretary-General submitted information on approved resources for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, including requirements for UNLB, and the support account for peacekeeping operations, amounting to $7,093,389,000.

Financial performance

In April [A/62/727], the Secretary-General submitted an overview report on the financing of UN peacekeeping operations: budget performance for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 and the budget for 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009. During the former period, total expenditure amounted to $5,156.9 million, against an approved budget of $5,399.1 million, exclusive of voluntary contributions in kind. The budget for peacekeeping operations for the latter period was estimated at $7,368.3 million.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in an April report [A/62/781] on administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of peacekeeping operations, reviewed and commented on the Secretary-General's overview report on budget performance for 2006–2007 and budgets for 2008–2009, as well as the report of the Board of Auditors on peacekeeping operations.

On 20 June (decision 62/545 C), the General Assembly deferred consideration until its sixty-third (2008) session of the Secretary-General's report and the related ACABQ report.

Peacekeeping support account

In March [A/62/766 & Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted the performance report on the budget of the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007. Expenditures for the period amounted to $177,695,400, against approved resources of $189,017,400, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $11,322,000, which was attributable primarily to underexpenditure in respect of non-post resources, offset by additional requirements under post, communications and medical expenditures.

The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly not transfer the amount of $2,014,000 included in the $7,097,000 previously authorized in resolution 61/279 [YUN 2007, p. 97], representing the excess of the authorized level of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund used to finance the requirements of the support account for 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008; apply the total amount of $13,790,000, comprising the unencumbered balance of $5,491,600 and other income of $1,759,000 for the financial year ended 30 June 2007, the support account fund balance from the periods 1996–1997 to 1999–2000 in the amount of $2,138,000, and the excess of the authorized level of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund for the financial period ended 30 June 2007 in the amount of $4,401,400, to the support account requirements for 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007; apply the excess of the authorized level of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund for the financial period ended 30 June 2007 in the amount of $2,014,000 to the support account requirements for 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008; and apply the amount of $469,600, representing the remaining balance of the excess of the authorized level of the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund for the financial period ended 30 June 2007, to the support account requirements for the following year.

In April [A/62/783 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted the budget for the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, amounting to $287,651,700. It provided for a total of 1,278 posts, comprising 1,122 continuing posts, 76 new posts, including 15 transferred from peacekeeping missions, and 80 general temporary assistance positions converted to posts.

The Independent Audit Advisory Committee submitted in May [A/62/814 & Add.1] its comments on the proposed budget for OIOS under the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, with an emphasis on the proposed restructuring of the Investigations Division.

In June [A/62/855], ACABQ provided its observations and recommendations on the financial performance report for 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 and the proposed budget for the support account for peacekeeping operations from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009. The report also addressed the proposed additional resources for DPKO's Office of Military Affairs (see p. 95). ACABQ recommended approval of 54 of the 156 posts proposed by the Secretary-General in his report on the support account budget, and 29 of the 92 additional posts proposed for strengthening the Office of Military Affairs. It recommended that the Assembly approve the staffing and non-staffing resources requested by the Secretary-General, subject to its observations and recommendations, and requested that the adjusted amount be provided to the Assembly. It also recommended approval of the recommendations contained in the performance report for 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/600/Add.1], adopted resolution 62/250 without vote [agenda item 140].

Funds for closed missions

In March [A/62/757], the Secretary-General provided information on the updated financial position of 20 closed peacekeeping missions as at 30 June 2007. The net cash surplus in the accounts of 15 closed missions credited to Member States as at that date amounted to $181,776,000, not including $18,316,000 owed by the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti/United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti/United Nations Civilian Police Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and MINURSO. Five of the closed missions reflected cash deficits totalling $88,036,000, owing to outstanding payments of assessed contributions.

The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly, subject to its approval of his proposal to consolidate the peacekeeping accounts effective 1 July 2008, in accordance with the framework outlined in his updated report on the consolidation of peacekeeping accounts [A/62/726] (see below), decide to return to Member States credits available as at 30 June 2008 in closed peacekeeping missions with cash surpluses.

In April [A/62/816], ACABQ provided its comments on the Secretary-General's report. It also called for fresh proposals to resolve the problem of debts in cash-deficient closed missions.

Consolidation of peacekeeping accounts

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 61/278 [YUN 2007, p. 87], submitted in March an updated comprehensive report [A/62/726] on the consolidation of peacekeeping accounts, including a simulation of options proposed. The Secretary-General's original proposal [YUN 2006, p. 97] was to consolidate retroactively all peacekeeping accounts, of both active and closed missions, except for the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF), the United Nations Operation in the Congo (ONUC), the Peacekeeping Reserve Fund and the strategic deployment stocks, to improve cash management and operational flexibility. The Secretariat still considered that to be the preferred approach—the one that would provide the greatest flexibility in the use of peacekeeping resources with increased reimbursements to troop- and police-contributing Member States while simplifying the administrative processes for financing operations. Consideration was given to the consolidation of the accounts of only the active missions, or alternatively only the closed missions, but no significant benefits of such approaches could be identified.

The proposed consolidation framework envisaged the following: the peacekeeping accounts would be consolidated retroactively, effective 1 July 2008, with the four exceptions; peacekeeping assessments would be consolidated quarterly during each peacekeeping period (July, October, January and April) on the basis of the approved appropriation for each peacekeeping mission and its mandate period, with the provision that assessments should also cover any outstanding unassessed appropriations from prior financial periods; and credits from unencumbered balances, interest and other miscellaneous income would be applied to offset the consolidated assessments of the subsequent fiscal period, similar to the practice under the regular budget, and voluntary contributions would be taken into account. Upon consolidation, all outstanding and unpaid balances would be combined, except for the outstanding amounts for UNEF and ONUC, and the arrears of Belarus and Ukraine before 1996. With regard to amounts in suspense in favour of Member States at the effective date, all unapplied credit balances and overpayments to all peacekeeping missions would be combined and offset in total against the outstanding and unpaid balances at that date; remaining unapplied amounts would be carried forward and applied to the consolidated assessments issued after the implementation date.

The Secretary-General's budget proposals for each peacekeeping mission would continue to be prepared separately; however, there would be a single financing resolution showing the breakdown by mission, and there would be no transfer of appropriations between missions. A consolidated performance report would be presented at the overall peacekeeping budget level and would report the consolidated expenditures compared to the overall total appropriations, as well as expenditures and appropriations by mission, focusing on significant issues emerging from the analysis of the most important drivers of expenditure. Results-based budgeting frameworks would continue to be presented for each mission as addenda to the financial performance report. In light of the overall improvement in liquidity, credits available as at 30 June 2008 in closed peacekeeping missions with cash surpluses should be returned to Member States individually prior to consolidation; the credits would first be applied to reduce a Member State's unpaid assessment, if any, and thereafter be used at the discretion of the Member State. Credits available to be returned totalled $181.8 million as at 30 June 2007.

The Secretary-General said that the proposed consolidation of peacekeeping accounts would permit more consistent and timely reimbursements to troop- and police-contributing countries, since cash in the peacekeeping accounts would be commingled, obviating the need to defer payments for cash-poor missions; enable payments in respect of certain liabilities in closed missions currently deferred due to lack of cash in their respective accounts; enable the return of credits in closed peacekeeping missions with cash surpluses to Member States; facilitate planning and administration for Member States, since the total requirements for the entire financial year would be largely known at the beginning of the financial period, thereby reducing the number of peacekeeping assessments from about 40 per financial period to only four; require a single General Assembly resolution rather than 17 separate resolutions on the financing of peacekeeping operations; improve the overall liquidity of peacekeeping operations, resulting in greater flexibility in the use of peacekeeping resources; simplify the administrative processes; and result in a simplified set of financial statements, as a single consolidated expenditure statement combining expenditures for peacekeeping operations would be prepared and another statement would break down expenditures by mission.

The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to consolidate the peacekeeping accounts effective 1 July 2008 in accordance with the proposed framework.

ACABQ, in its comments [A/62/818] on the Secretary-General's report, stated that it continued to believe that it was for Member States to decide on the matter.

Accounts and auditing

At its resumed sixty-second (2008) session, the General Assembly considered the financial report and audited financial statements for UN peacekeeping operations for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 [A/62/5 (Vol. II)], the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors [A/62/784], and the related ACABQ report [A/62/823].

2. Takes note of the observations and endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Board of Auditors;

5. Commends the Board of Auditors for the quality of its report and the streamlined format thereof;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to indicate an expected time frame for the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors as well as the priorities for their implementation, including the office-holders to be held accountable and measures taken in that regard;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide, in future reports on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning the United Nations peacekeeping operations, a full explanation for delays in the implementation of all outstanding recommendations of the Board.

Reimbursement issues

Reformed procedures for determining reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment

Report of Working Group. On 22 February [A/C.5/62/26], the Chairman of the 2008 Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment transmitted to the Fifth Committee the report on the Group's findings on reimbursement rates for equipment. The Working Group, which was presented with 24 issue papers by various Member States and the Secretariat, addressed the issues for the reimbursement procedure in three areas (major equipment, self-sustainment, medical support services), each dealt with by a sub-working group. According to the report, the overall impact of changes in reimbursement rates and the addition of new services would result in an increase of 2.7 per cent of the contingent-owned equipment portion of the UN peacekeeping budget based on memorandums of understanding. The Working Group conducted a comprehensive review of contingent-owned equipment reimbursement rates for major equipment and the model/procedures for future reviews. It recommended the adoption of proposed revised rates, and that future triennial reviews be conducted in the form of a comprehensive review, using data provided or elected by troop/police contributors.

Report of Secretary-General. In April [A/62/774 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, in his report on the subject, set out the cost implications of implementing the Working Group's recommendations estimated at $57,701,993 for the first year, which would be reported with effect from 1 July 2008 in the context of the individual peacekeeping operations' financial performance reports for the 2008–2009 biennium. The Secretary-General said that the proposed revised standards and administrative procedures and the addition of new categories and subcategories would benefit the Secretariat by improving the structure of the contingent-owned equipment system and provide more transparent and enhanced verification tools. The Secretariat requested Member States to submit national cost data no later than two months prior to the next Working Group meeting.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly approve the new reimbursement rates recommended for major equipment, self-sustainment and medical support services, and adopt the revised format for future triennial reviews of contingent-owned equipment reimbursement rates using actual cost data. In regard to "special cases" major equipment, the Assembly should approve the proposed reimbursement rates for new items and new categories of major equipment; agree to an increase in the threshold value of "special cases" from $500 to $1,000; and adopt the addition to the definition of "special cases". It should also approve the increase from 10 per cent to 20 per cent in the provision to deploy major equipment as overstock in accordance with the quantities authorized in the memorandum of understanding; adopt the predeployment training activities proposed by the Integrated Training Service; agree to the revision of the self-sustainment standard under "accommodation"; adopt the revision of the calculation of mission factors; approve the increase in recreational leave allowance for members of military contingents/formed police units from 7 days to 15; agree to the revision of the self-sustainment subcategory "welfare" and inclusion of "Internet access" as a subcategory with a reimbursement rate of $2.76 per person per month; approve the standards and reimbursement rates for provision of "basic firefighting" and "fire detection and alarm" capabilities in field missions at $0.16 and $0.13 per person per month, respectively; adopt the proposed reimbursement method for medical structures; agree to the revision of standards for "basic first aid" and "high-risk areas"; adopt the definition and reimbursement rates of "fee for service" for medical support services; and approve the revised standards of medical facilities and the equipment list of the aero-medical evacuation and forward surgery modules.

In May [A/62/851], ACABQ recommended approval of the 2008 Working Group's proposals. While agreeing with the recommendation that the overstock of major equipment be increased from 10 to 20 per cent, ACABQ noted that the higher ceiling might result in significant financial implications for the Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], noted the ongoing review by DPKO of technically feasible options for making guidance materials available to troop-contributing countries in the most efficient manner; steps taken to include a best practices officer or focal point in peacekeeping missions, and the importance of developing best practices materials and integrating them into learning processes in staff members' daily work; and it looked forward to being informed on those issues.

Management of peacekeeping assets

United Nations Logistics Base

The General Assembly, at its resumed sixty-second (2008) session, considered the performance report on the UNLB budget for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 [A/62/669]. Expenditure for the period totalled $32,929,200 gross ($30,688,000 net) against a total appropriation of $35,478,700 gross ($32,943,500 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,549,500 gross ($2,555,500 net). The total value from strategic deployment of stocks for the period amounted to $88.2 million, including a $21.9 million rollover from the prior-period fund balance, and $66.3 million corresponding to shipments of strategic deployment stocks at replacement values to peacekeeping and special political missions and to other entities, thereby generating funds for replenishment. Strategic stock replenishment expenditures for the period amounted to $36.8 million. The balance of some $51 million was rolled over to the 2007–2008 period.

The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to decide on the treatment of the unencumbered balance and of other income/adjustments for the period amounting to $2,982,600 from interest income ($2,045,000), other/miscellaneous income ($262,200) and savings on or cancellation of prior-period obligations ($675,400).

The Assembly considered the proposed UNLB budget for 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 [A/62/769] amounting to $45,827,400, an increase of $5,447,800 or 13.5 per cent over the previous financial period and providing for 59 international staff, 206 national staff and 22 temporary positions.

In May [A/62/781/Add.12], ACABQ recommended that the UNLB proposed budget be reduced by $58,400 and that the Assembly appropriate an amount of $45,769,000 gross for the maintenance of the Base for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009.

In June [A/C.5/62/30], the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee a note reflecting the resources to be approved by the Assembly in respect of each peacekeeping mission, including the prorated shares of the support account for peacekeeping operations and UNLB.

Restructuring issues

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], noted the restructuring of DPKO and establishment of DFS [YUN 2007, p. 93], acknowledged the ongoing implementation process on integrating the two Departments, and called upon the Secretariat to fully implement General Assembly resolution 61/279 [ibid., p. 97] in a timely manner. The Special Committee emphasized the importance of preserving unity of command in missions at all levels, as well as coherence in policy and strategy and clear command structures in the field and up to and including at Headquarters. It requested the Secretary-General to ensure a clear chain of command, accountability, coordination and maintenance of an adequate system of checks and balances.

Recognizing the intended role of integrated operational teams in facilitating the horizontal coordination and integration of DPKO and DFS activities, the Special Committee acknowledged the work being done to develop the teams' terms of reference. It requested DPKO and DFS to work in a coordinated manner to provide leadership and support to peacekeeping missions, and to work in such a manner in their relationship with Member States, in particular troop-contributing countries. The Special Committee recommended urgent action to fill all posts, particularly those at senior management level, in accordance with resolution 61/279 [YUN 2007, p. 97].

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in March [A/62/741], issued a preliminary report on the status of implementation of Assembly resolution 61/279, as requested therein, in which he reviewed progress made in restructuring DPKO, including the establishment of DFS and consequent achievements. The two Departments undertook to complete the restructuring process within 12 months; at the time of the report, the Secretariat was more than halfway through the process. The reform had been shaped by the need for greater focus on strategic issues related to mission planning and mandate implementation, and for more effective coordination in cross-cutting areas of activity, such as mission planning, deployment, management and support, as well as crisis response. The restructuring process had been guided by four principles: giving priority to field missions; ensuring unity of command within UN peacekeeping; maintaining simplicity of approach with a focus on objectives, real needs and results; and ensuring transparency and inclusiveness so as to facilitate decision-making, accountability and engagement of all stakeholders. The restructuring process focused on the priority areas of: recruitment and senior appointments; the establishment of integrated and common structures, policies and processes; information management and technology support; outreach and the dissemination of information to all stakeholders on restructuring; development and conduct of training programmes for integrated operational teams; development and implementation of evaluation mechanisms; and office space and co-location.

Recruitment for the additional 152 authorized positions had been a management priority, and 69 positions had been filled, including most senior appointments. Restructuring had involved the establishment of integrated operational teams for coordination between DFS and DPKO, and six of the seven teams had been created within the regional divisions of the Office of Operations, to be staffed by military, police and support specialists. Integration was also enhanced through shared resources, linking management of budgets and human resources. Public information activities were reformed to ensure outreach to primary stakeholders, including staff from both Departments and field missions, in addition to internal and external partners. Efforts were made to co-locate the two Departments: senior management was co-located in 2007 and priority accorded to co-locating the integrated operational teams.

Office of Military Affairs

In March [A/62/752], the Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 61/279, submitted a report on the comprehensive analysis of the Office of Military Affairs in DPKO. In that resolution, the Assembly affirmed its support of the reform proposals to deal with the growing volume and complexity of peacekeeping operations, including proposals for strengthening the Office's leadership capacities and management of the exponential growth in peacekeeping operations. Accordingly, the Office's military leadership was strengthened. Further developments in peacekeeping, such as the support required for increasingly complex operations and the higher threat environments, however, had rendered those adjustments inadequate.

That assessment was reinforced by the results of a comprehensive analysis of the Office of Military Affairs, lessons identified from the Strategic Military Cell established in 2006 to provide guidance to a reinforced UNIFIL, and experts in specialized areas. There was a need within the Secretariat for enhanced military oversight and guidance for complex and challenging missions, where military actions on the ground could have major political consequences at a strategic level, and where the threat to UN military personnel was high. Such enhanced oversight and guidance required additional military officers at the headquarters level to monitor military operations and provide an analysis of military threats, as well as additional leadership experience. In addition, specialist military officers were required to carry out more complex operations, including the collation and analysis of military intelligence, the planning, management and oversight of military maritime, air and aviation capabilities, and the provision of advice to DFS on the planning, support, management and oversight of military operations, particularly in military logistics and communications. All of those capacities were currently lacking in the Office of Military Affairs. On the basis of the lessons identified and the increasingly complex nature of peacekeeping missions, a different form of military headquarters in the Secretariat was needed to provide a higher degree of strategic military planning, guidance, support and oversight.

The DPKO Office of Military Affairs should fulfil three critical military functions in support of peacekeeping operations: possess the breadth and depth of rank and experience to provide the best military advice; conduct strategic and operational planning, including field assessments and contingencies for current and new peacekeeping operations and quickly generate, balance, deploy and rotate the military forces required for missions, and produce military directives and orders, including rules of engagement, to guide and direct the military, and components of field operations; and produce, review and amend the policies needed to underpin peacekeeping operations while looking ahead to develop military capabilities to meet future peacekeeping challenges. In an increasingly complex and challenging peacekeeping environment, a much greater degree of military strategic assessment, oversight, guidance and technical direction, including crisis response, was required. To perform those functions, the Office of Military Affairs had a staff of 67 military officers (13 of whom were assigned on a full-time basis to the integrated operational teams in the Office of Operations) and 5 civilian Professionals, supported by 18 General Service staff. In addition, the Office had to maintain a regular dialogue with 119 troop-contributing countries. The Office therefore lacked the rank, capacity and specialist capabilities to fulfil the functions of a strategic military headquarters within DPKO in both routine and crisis situations.

The proposal for a strengthened Office of Military Affairs would add the expert military capacities found in many military headquarters structures. The leadership and senior management would be enhanced with the addition of three one-star generals at the Principal Officer level to reduce the span of command and control of the Military Adviser, increase the level and availability of military advice, improve interaction with Member States and provide stronger oversight of all military staff functions.

Those changes would substantially increase the degree and quality of military strategic advice, support, guidance and oversight provided to field missions, without changing the existing chain of command; strengthen unity of command by allowing the leadership in the Secretariat and at field missions to make better informed, timely and agreed decisions based on common assessments of situations; address critical gaps, including the need for military specialists and mission start-up capability; and increase Member States' confidence in the leadership and management of the military aspects of peacekeeping operations.

The Secretary-General outlined the new services and units envisaged for the expanded Office, their respective duties and the need for 92 additional posts. He recommended that the Assembly approve the proposals and decide to include $6,399,600 in the requirements for the support account for peacekeeping operations for 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 (see p. 87).

Standing Police Capacity

Special Committee consideration. At its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations discussed police capacities for peacekeeping missions. It took note of the incorporation of the Police Division in the Office of the Rule of Law and Security Institutions, and supported the inclusion of the Police Adviser in the DPKO senior management team. It noted the rapid expansion of the policing functions in the field.

Report of Panel of Experts. In response to General Assembly resolution 62/273 (see p. 82), the Secretary-General, in December [A/63/630], transmitted the report of the Panel of Experts on the Standing Police Capacity's first year of operation, and expressed support for its recommendations. Outlining issues, the Panel made recommendations on core functions, command and control, structure and personnel, support, financial and material assistance to national authorities, recruitment, and conditions of service. The Panel stated that the Police Capacity's established core functions—start-up of the police component for new peacekeeping operations, assistance to and assessment of police components in existing missions, and conducting investigations as requested—were appropriate. With its current structure and capacity, however, it was only able to meet current demand for its services with difficulty. The Panel believed that a system for prioritizing requests for assistance should be in place. The Standing Police Capacity members should participate in technical assessments for anticipated complex operations, along with other representatives from the Police Division, to build joint knowledge of the mission area. When the Standing Police Capacity moved to UNLB, its Chief should continue to report to the UN Police Adviser. The Panel presented two options for the Standing Police Capacity's structure—one which would require 54 staff, to be supported by budget planners, human resource managers, civil engineers, contract managers, and a New York-based focal point to liaise with Headquarters; and a second option with 40 per cent more staff, which would enable the Standing Police Capacity to cover one major or two smaller new operations per year. The Panel recommended that adequate resources be made available to facilitate immediate financial and material assistance to national law enforcement agencies in conjunction with UN police deployment. Particular attention should be given to recruitment of personnel, ensuring that staff had the necessary background, language abilities, training and weapons proficiency.

Personnel matters

The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], expressed concern over the high number of vacancies in peacekeeping missions and requested the Secretariat to accelerate the recruitment of personnel. It underscored the importance of effective interaction between Headquarters and the field to ensure efficient communications and the safety of peacekeeping personnel. In that regard, it encouraged the Secretary-General to employ staff in DPKO and DFS competent in the Secretariat's working languages. Acknowledging the importance of interaction of UN military observers, police and civilian personnel with the local population, it urged DPKO and DFS to make further efforts to recruit staff and experts on mission with language skills relevant to the mission area where they were to be deployed, and to address specific requirements of peacekeeping operations. It affirmed that good command of the official language spoken in the country should be taken into account in selecting and training personnel.

The Special Committee was concerned that the UN death and disability claims process for peacekeeping personnel was overly cumbersome, lengthy and lacking in transparency. It noted that discrepancies existed between the compensation benefits provided to experts on mission and those provided to contingent members.

Criminal accountability of UN staff and experts on mission

Report of Ad Hoc Committee. The Ad Hoc Committee on criminal accountability of United Nations officials and experts on mission, established by the General Assembly in resolution 61/29 [YUN 2006, p. 109], held its second session (New York, 7–9 and 11 April) [A/63/54] to continue consideration of the 2006 report of the Group of Legal Experts [ibid.] on ensuring the accountability of UN staff and experts on mission with respect to criminal acts committed on peacekeeping operations. The Ad Hoc Committee discussed the issues concerning international cooperation contained in the report, in particular facilitating investigations by the host State; facilitating investigations by States other than the host State; administrative investigations by the United Nations; and legislative and other changes. The discussion also addressed specific issues such as timely notification and reporting mechanisms; collecting and securing the integrity of evidence (testimony, material, confidentiality) and use by States of material provided by the United Nations; conduct of on-site investigations (consent and conditions for consent); extradition and mutual legal assistance; the role of the United Nations (independent and professional administrative investigation); the role of experts, including military lawyers and military prosecutors with knowledge of the State's military law; admissibility (of evidence in a foreign jurisdiction); recognition (of administrative investigation by the United Nations); due process; transfer of criminal proceedings; and transfer of prisoners.

Support was expressed for the proposal that States expand their cooperation on the exchange of information, extradition, the serving of sentences and other measures to facilitate the exercise of criminal jurisdiction, including judicial assistance mechanisms. Similarly, cooperation with the United Nations could cover the exchange of information, assistance with respect to procedural issues (such as the gathering of evidence), reporting on the status of investigations and enhancing rule-of-law capacities. Reference was made to the fact that, while criminal investigation remained the primary responsibility of the host State, evidence gathered by the United Nations remained important for subsequent criminal proceedings. Some delegations reiterated the view that it was premature to discuss negotiating an international convention on the topic, as had been proposed by the Group of Legal Experts and supported by the Secretariat in its 2007 note [YUN 2007, p. 101]. Some delegations expressed support, in principle, for a convention requiring Member States to exercise jurisdiction over their na-nationals participating in UN operations. It was noted that, while bilateral agreements existed, their coverage was incomplete and did not usually address judicial cooperation between States and the United Nations.

The Ad Hoc Committee reiterated the recommendation that the Sixth (Legal) Committee, during the sixty-third (2008) session of the General Assembly, establish a working group to continue consideration of the report of the Group of Legal Experts.

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report on the criminal accountability of UN officials and experts on mission [A/63/260 & Add.1], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 62/63 [YUN 2007, p. 102], the Secretary-General provided information from 28 Governments on the extent to which their national laws established jurisdiction, particularly over serious crimes committed by their nationals while serving as UN officials or experts on mission, as well as information from 21 Governments on cooperation among States and with the United Nations in the exchange of information and the facilitation of investigations and prosecution of such individuals. The report contained information by the Secretariat on bringing credible allegations that a crime might have been committed by UN officials to the attention of States against whose nationals such allegations had been made. It provided information on Secretariat activities on ensuring that prospective experts on mission were informed of the expectation that they should meet high standards in their conduct and behaviour, as well as regarding taking other practical measures to strengthen training on UN standards of conduct, including through predeployment and in-mission training.

Working Group consideration. On the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee on criminal accountability of United Nations officials and experts on mission (see above), the Sixth Committee [A/63/437], on 6 October, established a Working Group to continue consideration of the report of the Group of Legal Experts established by the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 59/300 [YUN 2005, p. 122], focusing on its legal aspects and taking into account the views expressed in the Ad Hoc Committee. The Working Group met on 14, 15 and 17 October. On 24 October, the Working Group's Chairperson presented to the Sixth Committee an oral report on its work. The Committee adopted a draft resolution on the subject on 29 October [A/C.6/63/L.10], which was adopted by the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/63/437], adopted resolution 63/119 without vote [agenda item 73].

Welfare and recreational needs

In January [A/62/663], the Secretary-General, responding to the request of the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations at its 2005 resumed session [YUN 2005, p. 120] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 59/300 [ibid., p. 122], submitted a report on the comprehensive review of the welfare and recreational needs of all categories of peacekeeping personnel. The report reviewed the relevant aspects of the conditions of service of various categories of peacekeeping personnel, including international staff members and members of military and police contingents, and described the status of the reforms under consideration or under way, such as classification of duty stations as family or non-family, payment of mission subsistence allowance to staff officers and review of the rates of reimbursement to troop/police contributing countries for, among other things, the welfare category of self-sustainment. It surveyed the current welfare and recreation practices in peacekeeping missions and identified issues concerning the need to improve the welfare of various categories of personnel.

The Secretariat proposed a number of measures to address those issues. It suggested that DFS and DPKO submit Secretariat issue paper No. 8 for the consideration of the Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment at its February session (see p. 92), recommending that the recreational leave allowance be made admissible to contingent personnel for the entirety of 15 days of leave allowed in six months of deployment with a peacekeeping mission. The Departments should review the compensatory time off policy in consultation with the Office of Human Resources Management, elaborate it, and promulgate a revised and consistent policy by means of an administrative issuance.

Another recommendation called for the establishment of a post exchange at the mission and, if feasible, the sector headquarters to accommodate the supply needs of staff and to generate dividends from sales that might be used as income for the mission's welfare fund. A post-exchange contract should be opened for bidding prior to deployment, and appropriate space for a post exchange should be provided in initial engineering plans. DFS, in consultation with DPKO, would revise the existing guidance on the subject. In order to facilitate provision of basic utilities, peacekeeping missions should, where such a need existed, offer fuel and generators to staff on a cost-sharing basis. Similarly, the supply of electricity to private accommodations for a monthly flat rate should be among welfare practices.

Provisions in the model memorandum of understanding on Internet availability were not sufficient to provide personal e-mail access for all contingent personnel, and were generally reserved for senior officers. An Internet facility for personal use by all contingent personnel should be made available on each base. In peacekeeping operations where the local communications infrastructure was inadequate, communications could be facilitated by engaging a private, satellite-based service provider, and in cases where the local infrastructure was available, the missions should facilitate the establishment of calling booths using specialized calling cards. DFS would review the feasibility of providing such facilities on a cost-recovery basis. Concerning travel on leave and for recreational purposes, it was found that some lower-paid categories of peacekeeping personnel were unable to participate in welfare flights due to costs. In order to facilitate the charter by personnel of official aircraft for welfare flights, DFS would re-examine the restriction to a maximum of 30 UN civilian personnel allowed on a UN aircraft, as it precluded a reasonable cost per seat. Contingents should be encouraged to establish leave centres inside or outside the mission area where personnel could spend the leave allowed them for rest and recuperation; facilities such as a television lounge, DVD players, books and indoor and outdoor games should be provided at the leave centres.

Another proposed measure was for DFS and DPKO to submit Secretariat issue paper No. 9 for the consideration of the Working Group, recommending the revision of performance standards in the subcategory of welfare with a view to spelling them out in specific terms. Within the framework of the revised mini-minimum standards of welfare provided elsewhere in the Manual, annex G to the model memorandum of understanding, guidelines to troop/police-contributing countries, should include a description of the minimum welfare and recreation facilities that the troop/police-contributing country would be required to furnish for the peacekeeping mission, in order to qualify for reimbursement for the welfare subcategory. DPs and DPKO would submit to the Working Group on Contingent-Owned Equipment an issue paper on the minimum standards of welfare and recreation facilities to be provided by the troop/police-contributing countries' contingent personnel. In terms of facilities for non-contingent personnel, there was clearly a need for minimum welfare and recreation facilities at duty stations in peacekeeping missions, including "welfare kits", comprising generic equipment, such as an indoor gymnasium, a multi-purpose recreation centre to be used as an indoor lounge, an Internet cafe and bar, provided with games such as table tennis, darts, board games and refreshments, a television set with a VCR/DVD player and accessories, and a library and a prayer/meditation room. An eventual need was seen for welfare officers and units in peacekeeping missions.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly take note of the measures to be undertaken by the Secretariat as part of its effort to improve the welfare of all categories of peacekeeping personnel, as described in the report, and endorse the need for welfare and recreation arrangements for non-contingent personnel.

Death and disability

In April [A/62/805 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 61/276, section X [YUN 2007, p. 81], reported on the status of cases for death and disability for formed police units, military contingents, civilian police officers and military observers processed and currently in process. As at 28 February, 94 cases for military contingents and formed police units (17 for death and 77 for disability) were under processing and 25 cases were under review for civilian police officers and military observers (3 for death and 22 for disability).

The Secretary-General reported on the comprehensive review of the administrative and payment arrangement for such cases. The Secretariat had initiated a review of the procedures for settlement of death and disability claims. As the issues to be discussed were cross-cutting in nature and would impact the work process in several departments, a working group was established to review the current methodology and suggest measures.

The Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/63/550] on the comprehensive review of compensation of death and disability benefits, which updated the status of cases for death and disability for formed police units, military contingents, civilian police officers and military observers processed and in process. As at 30 September, 120 cases for military contingents and formed police units (14 for death and 106 for disability) were being processed, and 23 cases were being reviewed for civilian police officers and military observers (7 for death and 16 for disability). Of those cases, 93 were awaiting further information from Member States, and 50 involved additional information requested from field missions.

In its review of the rules and methodology of the administrative and payment arrangements, the Secretariat examined the issue of equal treatment of members of military contingents, formed police units, military observers and civilian police officers. Under the current system, award for death or disability depended on the nature of deployment of the uniformed personnel. While beneficiaries of deceased military contingent and formed police unit members were awarded a maximum payment of $50,000, beneficiaries of civilian police officers and military observers might receive much more than $50,000, even at the same rank, if their last annual salary less allowances exceeded $25,000. To remedy that situation, the Secretariat recommended an award of $50,000 to all categories of uniformed personnel, and that the General Assembly approve the application of the methodology enumerated in the Secretary-General's 1977 report on death and disability benefits [YUN 1997, p. 61] and followed for contingent/formed police personnel in death and disability cases related to military observers, civilian police officers and other seconded uniformed personnel, so as to standardize the process for all categories of uniformed personnel and enable the quick resolution of most cases.

The Working Group also looked at the possible establishment of a deadline for the completion and submission of board of inquiry reports in cases of suspected gross negligence or wilful misconduct. Death and disability cases for troops/formed police units were processed without waiting for a board of inquiry report when the force commander/police commissioner confirmed that there had been no evidence in the investigation to indicate any gross negligence or wilful misconduct on the part of the contingent/formed police unit member. In such cases, however, a board of inquiry report was mandatory. To standardize the board of inquiry procedures and speed up the process, the Secretariat issued a policy directive and standard operating procedures effective 1 June. Those documents directed the missions to complete the board of inquiry proceedings as soon as possible, preferably within four weeks. In order to ensure the timely completion of board of inquiry proceedings on cases of a highly technical nature or where specialized skills were required, the new policy enabled the Under-Secretaries-Generals of DPKO and DFS to establish a headquarters board of inquiry, drawing on the resources and skills of UN Headquarters and the missions.

The Assembly was requested to approve the application of the methodology and reimbursement rates followed to settle contingent/formed police unit death or disability claims in cases related to the death or disability of military observers/civilian police officers/other seconded uniformed personnel in peacekeeping missions; to establish a uniform death compensation of $50,000 and a proportionate amount for permanent disability or loss of function; and to allow the Secretariat to request appropriate medical/supporting documentation without placing any limit on the number of requests to Member States.

Training

Note of Secretary-General. In a February note [A/62/676], the Secretary-General reported on the preparation of a comprehensive report on training in peacekeeping, as requested by the General Assembly in resolutions 60/266 [YUN 2006, p. 89] and 60/267 [ibid., p. 102]. The report would cover the efficiency and effectiveness of all DPKO training programmes to be implemented by UNLB, and compare them to those provided by other facilities and UN offices.

Since 1 November 2005, all DPKO training elements at Headquarters (police, military and civilian) had been merged to form the Integrated Training Service. For cost-saving reasons, the Service's Training Delivery Section was relocated to UNLB in the 2006–2007 budget year, and was fully staffed from early 2008. Subsequently, since the creation of DFS, a full review of the Service's priorities and focus had been undertaken and a training strategy formulated within DPKO and DFS, and with Member States. The strategy would be implemented over the next year and would include a review of the training needs of Member States, field missions and Headquarters.

As a result of the refocusing of the efforts of the Integrated Training Service, the Secretary-General was unable to submit a report on training in peacekeeping for consideration in 2008. While much work had been done to improve training for peacekeeping operations, further work was needed to finalize and implement the new Integrated Training Service strategy, conduct a comprehensive training needs analysis and validate the findings and recommendations. It was expected that the complete report on training in peacekeeping operations would be submitted to the Assembly at its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

The Assembly, by decision 62/545 C of 20 June, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's note on the comprehensive report on training in peacekeeping until its sixty-third (2009) session.

Special Committee consideration. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, at its 2008 substantive session [A/62/19], reaffirmed the need to ensure that all personnel selected for peacekeeping missions had the required professional background, expertise and training. It noted the Secretariat's work on the development of a UN peacekeeping training strategy, and requested that the strategy be provided to the Special Committee. It also noted the ongoing work of the Integrated Training Service on the development of minimum training standards and training modules, and requested a detailed progress report before its next substantive session. It took note of the recognition process by the Integrated Training Service of courses conducted by peacekeeping and training institutions using the standardized training modules. Noting the suspension of the process, it stressed the need to develop a mechanism for resuming that activity and for expanding and speeding up the recognition process. An integrated mission planning process training package should be put in place and made an integral part of the UN senior mission leadership training. The Special Committee looked forward to receiving more information on steps taken by the Secretariat to enhance predeployment training capacity for police personnel and facilitate bilateral training assistance.

The Special Committee called for the finalization of the first specialized training modules for police and their dissemination to Member States and peacekeeping operations in the six official languages and their distribution, to be supplemented by DPKO training of the trainers courses. It looked forward to receiving a report on the development of the senior mission administrative and resource training.

The Special Committee called upon the Secretariat to develop training standards and operating guidelines for formed police units, in consultation with Member States, and to improve the quality of standardized training modules on the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse in peacekeeping operations, and called upon the Member States to utilize them. DPKO should continue providing information, training materials and training modules on issues related to preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS to be used during predeployment training of peacekeeping personnel. The Special Committee supported the development of an electronic learning tool for generic peacekeeping lessons to be used by Member States' national or multinational peacekeeping training institutions, and encouraged the Integrated Training Service to evaluate the option of web-based training modules for all peacekeeping mission personnel. The Secretariat was encouraged to further contribute to the development of online peacekeeping programmes available in all UN official languages and easily accessible by candidates from developing countries. The Special Committee urged DPKO and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to work together to promote existing electronic learning programmes and to ensure that their training materials were complementary, and encouraged continued wide participation by African, Latin American and Caribbean peacekeepers in the relevant programmes. The Special Committee reiterated its request for DPKO to develop a comprehensive gender training strategy, and looked forward to receiving information on the issue.

Staffing of field missions

On 3 April, by decision 62/545 B, the General Assembly decided to defer until its sixty-third session the Secretary-General's reports on the staffing of field missions, including the use of 300- and 100-series appointments [YUN 2007, p. 103] and on detailed proposals for streamlining UN contractual arrangements [ibid., p. 1507].

On the same date, the Assembly, in resolution 62/248 of 3 April (see p. 1615) on human resources management, having considered those reports, as well as the addendum to the report of the International Civil Service Commission for the year 2006 [ibid., p. 1496] and section II of the ACABQ report [ibid., p. 1510], decided to continue consideration of the issue of contractual arrangements and conditions of service, including in UN field operations, at the main part of its sixty-third (2008) session.

On 20 June, the Assembly, by decision 62/549, continued the suspension of the application of the four-year maximum limit for appointments of limited duration until 31 December 2008; authorized the Secretary-General to reappoint, under the 100-series of the Staff Rules, those mission staff whose service under 300-series contracts reached the four-year limit by 31 December 2008, provided that their functions were reviewed and found necessary and their performance was confirmed as fully satisfactory; and requested the Secretary-General to continue the practice of using 300-series contracts as the primary instrument for the appointment of new staff.

Africa

During 2008, the United Nations maintained its commitment to promoting peace, stability and development in Africa through six United Nations political and peacebuilding missions and seven peacekeeping operations. The Organization faced daunting challenges in helping the countries in conflict situations and those in transition to post-conflict peacebuilding in Central Africa and the Great Lakes region, West Africa and the Horn of Africa return to peace, stability and prosperity. Many countries faced the complex task of bringing rebel groups into the peace process, concluding disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for ex-combatants, promoting national reconciliation and creating conditions for economic and social development.

The Office of the Special Adviser on Africa and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa brought a regional perspective to issues facing the continent, promoted conflict prevention and raised awareness about subregional problems. The United Nations worked closely with the African Union (AU), the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Economic Community of Central African States and other regional organizations and international actors to assist Governments in improving security, ensuring humanitarian access, energizing peace processes and promoting development. The United Nations continued to monitor Security Council-sanctioned arms embargoes in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), the Darfur region of western Sudan and Somalia.

The United Nations Peacebuilding Commission expanded its work to the Central African Republic in addition to its ongoing efforts in Burundi, Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone, where it assisted in electoral processes and facilitated dialogue. By October, 45 Member States had pledged $267 million to the Peacebuilding Fund.

A Security Council mission in June visited Djibouti (for Somalia affairs), the Sudan, Chad, the DRC and Côte d'Ivoire to promote peace and reconciliation.

Central Africa and the Great Lakes region continued to be affected by the activities of armed groups and militias, especially in the eastern part of the DRC. Nonetheless, by year's end, the region made noticeable steps towards resolving long-standing conflicts.

The signing in November 2007 of the Nairobi Communiqué by the DRC and Rwanda and, in January, of the Actes d'engagement—known as the Goma Agreements—by the DRC, the rebel Congrès National pour la Défense du Peuple (CNDP) and other armed groups from North and South Kivu in the eastern DRC laid the ground for finally eliminating the regional threat of—in particular foreign—armed groups active there through a separation of forces and their disarmament and demobilization or brassage (integration into the national armed forces). Little progress, however, was made by the Mixed Technical Commission on Peace and Security of the Amani programme—the framework for implementing the Goma Agreements. In August, violence flared in the eastern DRC, on the border with Rwanda, where 10,000 UN peacekeepers of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) were tasked with protecting 10 million civilians. Following a series of skirmishes, CNDP in late October began a major offensive threatening Goma (the provincial capital of North Kivu), and other ethnic-based rebel groups entered the fray. When CNDP overwhelmed the Forces armées de la République démocratique du Congo, displacing hundreds of thousands of civilians, MONUC reinforced its presence in Goma and surrounding areas. In November, the Security Council authorized an additional 3,085 troops and police for MONUC, including special forces, and increased air assets, so that it might better protect civilians and ensure humanitarian access. As the crisis threatened to spill beyond the borders of the DRC, the Secretary-General met with regional leaders at a special summit in Nairobi in November, also appointing a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes Region to work with the parties and the international community to end the crisis. Following discussions with the Special Envoy, CNDP announced that it would withdraw its forces from the Kanyabayonga-Nyanzale and Kabasha-Kiwanja axes, where fighting had most recently occurred. Meanwhile, the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), which originated in Uganda, continued to operate in the DRC's Province Orientale, bordering the Sudan. At year's end, the Security Council extended MONUC's mandate by another 12 months.

Burundi continued to face serious peace and security challenges, primarily emanating from the stalled implementation of the 2006 Comprehensive Cease-fire Agreement, enduring mistrust among political actors, increased restrictions on public liberties, slow progress in fighting impunity, persistent human rights violations, insecurity and high levels of poverty. The end of the year, however, brought a breakthrough in the peace process, when, at a Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Great Lakes Region (Bujumbura, Burundi, 4 December), the Government of Burundi, the Palipehutu-FNL and attending Heads of State signed a declaration calling for the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Palipehutu-FNL and the political integration of its leadership.

The political situation in the Central African Republic continued to be dominated by preparations for the inclusive political dialogue aimed at ending the recurrent political and security crises in the country—which was finally held in Bangui in December. The overall political, security and socio-economic situation, however, remained fragile, compounded by a weak economy, multifaceted social problems and impunity, with severe security challenges, particularly in the northern and south-eastern parts of the country.

Police and military liaison officers of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) worked with their counterparts of the European Union military operation (EUFOR) there to enhance stability and support human rights and the rule of law. The Mission focused on the training and deployment of the Détachement Intégré de Sécurité—the special Chadian police for maintaining law and order in refugee camps and among displaced civilians within a 10-kilometre radius of the camps in eastern Chad. In December, the Secretary-General recommended the concept of a United Nations force of at least 4,900 peacekeepers to take over from EUFOR in early 2009.

As for Uganda, the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for LRA-affected areas worked to conclude the peace process. However, because the leader of LRA, Joseph Kony, did not sign the final peace agreement, the DRC, Southern Sudan and Uganda launched joint military action against his camps in the eastern DRC. Such military action was intended not to derail the peace process, but rather to pressure LRA into assembling in Ri-Kwangba (Southern Sudan) and signing the final peace agreement.

Welcoming recent steps towards the restoration of peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, the Security Council, in July, terminated several measures imposed in the wake of the 1994 Rwanda genocide to prohibit the sale and supply of arms and related materiel for use in that country. Nonetheless, the border area between Rwanda and the DRC remained a matter of concern due to the violence that reignited in August in the eastern part of the DRC and continued through the following months.

In West Africa, the Secretary-General said that significant progress was made in the consolidation of peace and democratic governance, and UN peace missions in the subregion began to wind down. The United Nations Office for West Africa carried out its revised mandate, including supporting ECOWAS, which was demonstrating increased capacity to address political, social, economic and security issues in the region. However, many challenges remained, such as youth unemployment, rapid urbanization and irregular migration, while others were emerging or increasing in magnitude, including social and economic crises, human and drug trafficking and insecurity in the Sahelian band. Widespread corruption, which weakened State institutions and the rule of law, was a concern. Other threats to stability included the proliferation of small arms and light weapons, the potential eruption of border conflicts, and organized crime, with drug trafficking constituting the most widespread cross-border activity. Furthermore, the scourge of coups d'état had re-emerged in Guinea, Guinea-Bissau and Mauritania. Three high-level missions visited the subregion during the year to assess progress made and challenges facing countries of the subregion.

In Côte d'Ivoire, efforts continued to move the peace process forward through implementation of the 2007 Ouagadougou Agreement and its supplementary accords. The ceasefire monitored by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the French Licorne forces continued to hold, with no major violations of the arms embargo. The partnership between President Laurent Gbagbo and Prime Minister Guillaume Soro remained strong, and the removal of the Green Line dividing the country allowed political leaders and the general population to move freely throughout the country. Although progress was made in preparations for the presidential elections, logistical and technical delays resulted in their postponement to 2009. A fourth supplementary accord to the Ouagadougou Agreement, which clarified issues relating to key processes that had stalled, was signed in December.

The Government of Liberia continued efforts to improve governance and security, combat corruption, regain control of the country's natural resources and build a stronger economy. With the assistance of the United Nations Mission in Liberia and other organizations, further progress was made in consolidating peace, stability and democracy. The Government finalized its first national poverty reduction strategy, and Liberia reached the completion point under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission began public hearings in January and submitted its first report to the Legislature and President Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf in December. Following his visit to Liberia in April, the Secretary-General recommended adjustments to the second phase of the drawdown of the Mission.

The Government of Sierra Leone continued efforts to implement its agenda for peace consolidation and economic recovery. Developments included the approval of a national anti-corruption strategy and the submission of the Constitutional Review Commission report proposing amendments to the 1991 Constitution. The Secretary-General presented the completion strategy for the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone, which entailed the transition to a successor integrated political office—the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone. The transition resulted in the adoption of a Joint Vision of the United Nations Family for Sierra Leone. In December, President Ernest Bai Koroma issued his Agenda for Change, presenting the Government's priorities for the next three years, including the foundation for peacebuilding efforts.

The Special Court for Sierra Leone continued to try those bearing the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international, humanitarian and Sierra Leonean laws committed in the territory since 1996. The trial of the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, resumed in January.

The United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau assisted the Government in its efforts to promote national reconciliation, conduct legislative elections, and combat drug and human trafficking, and organized crime. The political climate remained fragile, despite the Government stability pact signed by the three main political parties in 2007. In July, the African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde withdrew from the pact. Political and institutional tensions over the National Assembly's mandate culminated in August with the appointment of a new Prime Minister and Government. Progress was achieved with the establishment of the National Reconciliation Commission and the National Commission for Human Rights. Nonetheless, instability in the military manifested itself in August, when the authorities uncovered a planned coup d'état, and in November, when unknown assailants attacked the residence of President João Bernardo Vieira, who escaped unharmed. The illicit drug trade remained a concern amid reports that Guinea-Bissau was becoming a strategic link in the transport of illegal narcotics from South America to Europe.

Cameroon and Nigeria continued to cooperate in implementing the 2002 ruling of the International Court of Justice on their land and maritime boundary through the Cameroon-Nigeria Mixed Commission. During the year, the transfer of authority from Nigeria to Cameroon of the remaining zone of the Bakassi peninsula was completed.

Following the death of the President of Guinea, Lansana Conté, a military junta seized power in December. The coup was widely condemned internationally.

The democratic process in Mauritania suffered a setback in August, when the former Chief of Staff of the army seized power from President Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdallahi—the first democratically elected president in the history of the country—placing him under house arrest. The Security Council condemned the coup and demanded the immediate release of the President and the restoration of the legitimate, constitutional, democratic institutions.

The political situation in the Horn of Africa continued to be adversely affected by conflicts and other forms of insecurity within and between States. In the Sudan, the Sudanese Armed Forces, the Sudan People's Liberation Army/Movement and the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) made uneven progress in de-escalating tension in the north-south border area and resuming implementation of the security arrangements set out in the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement. In March, President Omar Al-Bashir of the Sudan and President Idriss Déby Itno of Chad signed the Dakar Agreement, by which the two countries committed themselves to ending their differences. In April, the Security Council renewed the UNMIS mandate for a further 12-month period. On 10 May, Justice and Equality Movement fighters from the Darfur region of the Sudan attacked Omdurman, Sudan, but were repelled by Sudanese Government forces. The Sudan accused Chad of supporting the attack and severed diplomatic ties. In May, tensions between the Sudanese armed forces and the Sudan People's Liberation Army in the town of Abyei erupted into full-scale fighting that continued until 20 May. Following several weeks of consultations, the parties finalized a road map agreement to resolve the situation in Abyei, and referred the dispute over the Abyei borders to the Permanent Court of Arbitration in The Hague. The electoral law was adopted by the National Assembly and signed by President Al-Bashir in July. That same month, the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court requested that the Court issue an arrest warrant against President Al-Bashir on charges of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. Meanwhile, relations between Chad and the Sudan improved, and the two countries exchanged ambassadors in November.

In Northern Darfur, a status-of-forces agreement between the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) and the Sudan was signed on 9 February. Nevertheless, UNAMID deployment progressed slowly and faced significant challenges, including insufficient troops and equipment. In July, a UNAMID patrol was attacked in Darfur, resulting in the death of seven peacekeepers, and a UNAMID officer was killed by unknown gunmen. The Government began a military campaign in September and engaged in further operations in October. Despite a unilateral declaration of a cessation of hostilities by the Government on 12 November, its forces conducted aerial bombings in Northern and Western Darfur during that month. Southern Darfur also experienced an upsurge in violence, as Government patrols were attacked. Inter-tribal fighting continued in Northern and Southern Darfur, and targeted attacks against humanitarian workers hindered the provision of assistance to the civilian population.

In Somalia, coordinated attacks by anti-Government elements took place in Mogadishu, and Ethiopian Army and Transitional Federal Government operations to eradicate those elements increased. In January, an integrated task force headed by the UN Department of Political Affairs deployed an assessment mission to Somalia to develop a comprehensive UN strategy for the country. The assessment outlined a three-track approach consisting of political, security and programmatic dimensions. The Department also led a fact-finding mission to the region in January to update contingency plans for the possible deployment of a UN peacekeeping mission. In March, the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia unveiled its reconciliation strategy, which included proposals to promote peacebuilding and reconciliation between the Government and opposition groups. In May, the Secretary-General's Special Representative initiated the first round of talks in Djibouti between the Transitional Federal Government and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia. On 19 August, the Government and the Alliance signed the Djibouti agreement for the cessation of hostilities. The Somali parties signed an agreement on the cessation of armed confrontation during a third round of talks in Djibouti on 26 October. On the same date, the Government and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia adopted a declaration on the establishment of a unity Government.

Despite those developments, insurgent groups increased attacks on troops of the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) in April and May, resulting in the death of peacekeepers. The acting head of the United Nations Development Programme in Mogadishu was killed by unidentified gunmen on 6 July. On 29 October, suicide bomb attacks targeted the UNDP compound in Hargeysa, as well as the town of Boosasso in northern Somalia; two UN staff members were killed and six others were injured. In June, the Security Council authorized States cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government to enter Somalia's territorial waters to repress acts of piracy and armed robbery.

The Organization's efforts to address the border dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea changed dramatically during the year. In January, the Secretary-General reported that Eritrea continued to induct troops into the Temporary Security Zone between the two countries and maintained its restrictions on the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE). The Security Council extended the UNMEE mandate until 31 July, and demanded that Eritrea resume fuel shipments to the Mission or allow it to import fuel, which had been restricted since December 2007. In February, the Secretariat informed Eritrea of the decision to relocate Mission personnel to Ethiopia, and requested that it extend to the Mission the necessary cooperation. However, the Eritrean Defence Forces hindered the cross-border movement of personnel and equipment. The Secretary-General instructed UNMEE to begin relocating military personnel to their home countries pending a final decision by the Council on the Mission's future. The Council terminated the UNMEE mandate effective 31 July. No progress was made towards the construction of boundary pillars between the two countries in the manner foreseen by the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission. The Commission reported that since it had concluded all administrative matters connected with the termination of its mandate, it considered itself functus officio.

On 11 June, Djibouti stated that Eritrean armed forces had launched unprovoked attacks on Djiboutian army positions the previous day. On 12 June, the Security Council condemned Eritrea's military aggression and called on the parties to commit to a ceasefire. A UN fact-finding mission that visited Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and Djibouti in July and August established that a stalemate had developed between Djibouti and Eritrea that could only be resolved by diplomatic means. It recommended renewing as a matter of priority the Secretary-General's offer of good offices to defuse tensions.

The two parties to the dispute concerning the Territory of Western Sahara—Morocco and the Frente Polisario para la Liberación de Saguía el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente Polisario)—met with the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy for Western Sahara in January and March for the third and fourth rounds of talks, respectively. The parties remained far apart on ways to achieve a solution, but agreed to explore the establishment of family visits by land route, in addition to the programme of air visits, and reiterated their commitment to continue negotiations. In April, the Security Council extended the mandate of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara until 30 April 2009.

The United Nations also addressed the political and humanitarian crises that followed the elections of December 2007 in Kenya and the elections of March 2008 in Zimbabwe.

Promotion of peace in Africa

In 2008, the United Nations remained engaged in the search to resolve the root causes of conflict in Africa and encourage peace and sustainable development on the continent. In April, the Security Council, during consideration of the item on peace and security in Africa, held a debate on the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the African Union (AU), in the maintenance of international peace and security. In June, the Council sent a mission to five African countries. The General Assembly took action on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa in December.

Working Group. The Ad Hoc Working Group on Conflict Prevention and Resolution in Africa, established in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 93] to monitor the implementation of Security Council recommendations relating to its role in conflict prevention and resolution in Africa, continued to contribute to the Council's work by promoting a better understanding of ways to address crises on the continent.

On 30 December [S/2008/836], the Chairman of the Working Group, Dumisani S. Kumalo, transmitted the report on its activities in 2008. At its meeting on 6 March, the Group heard a briefing by the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, B. Lynn Pascoe, on the proposal to strengthen the Department of Political Affairs (DPA). The briefing provided the Group with an opportunity to understand how DPA saw its role in conflict prevention and resolution, and it proposed steps to strengthen the Department. On 1 December, the Group addressed the concept of "responsibility to protect" in order to highlight conflict prevention, a critical component of the responsibility to protect; contribute to the debate on the upcoming report of the Secretary-General on responsibility to protect; and propose recommendations to the Security Council to enhance cooperation in conflict prevention and resolution between the United Nations and regional and subregional organizations.

On 18 December [S/2008/795], the Council agreed that the Group would continue its work until 31 December 2009.

Relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations

On 16 April [meeting 5868], the Security Council met to consider the agenda item on peace and security in Africa, including the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the AU, in maintaining international peace and security. Before the Council was an 8 April concept paper

[S/2008/229], submitted by South Africa; the report of the Secretary-General on the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the AU, in the maintenance of international peace and security [S/2008/186]; and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Security Council resolution 1625(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 155] on conflict prevention, particularly in Africa [S/2008/18] (see p. 43). The meeting was addressed by 24 countries and two international organizations.

The Security Council President, Thabo Mbeki, President of South Africa, speaking in his national capacity, stated that the AU had shown its commitment to resolving African conflicts. The operationalization of the AU Peace and Security Council and the continental early warning systems, post-conflict reconstruction and development, the Panel of the Wise and the African Standby Force were clear indications of that commitment and the basic architecture for addressing peace and security issues on the continent. The availability of resources, however, remained the most important constraint limiting Africa's capacity to give effect to those commitments and help resolve its own conflicts. Because the funding of regional peacekeeping operations was central to defining and streamlining the relationship between the United Nations and the AU, he welcomed the proposal of the Secretary-General to establish an AU-UN panel of distinguished persons to consider the modalities of financing and supporting in other ways the peacekeeping operations undertaken by regional organizations. He also called for a comprehensive review of UN peacekeeping missions in order to improve their effectiveness.

The Secretary-General stated that the African Peace and Security Architecture was being developed through concrete steps ranging from good offices and mediation on border issues to early warning, conflict prevention and building operational capacity. A dedicated team had been established to help operationalize the concept of an African standby force, and the establishment of the secretariat of the AU Panel of the Wise and the launch of the UN mediation standby team of experts had better equipped both organizations for the critical task of mediation.

The Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs noted that conflict prevention remained the most cost-effective and efficient way to promote international peace and security, and the Secretary-General had proposed strengthening DPA to work in that area. To implement Security Council resolution 1625(2005), the Secretary-General had called on the Council to increase its use of the "Arria Formula", which enabled Council members to discuss matters with invited personalities in an informal and closed setting; dispatch missions to the field; carry out lessons-learned exercises to motivate parties to resolve conflicts; and develop a stronger and more structured relationship with the AU Peace and Security Council. He had called for full cooperation in developing the capacities of African regional organizations to deploy both civilian and military assets quickly, including developing an African standby force. As for the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the AU, in the maintenance of international peace and security, the Secretary-General had proposed better support arrangements for further cooperation, and suggested setting up a panel of distinguished persons from the United Nations and the AU to make recommendations on how to help finance peacekeeping operations undertaken by regional organizations.

The Chairperson of the AU Commission, Alpha Oumar Konaré, stressed the importance of building African capacities through consolidating the continental peace and security architecture; strengthening planning capacities; helping develop an early warning system; establishing standby forces capable of deploying a standing rapid intervention force; and refusing to allow lawless zones to exist. In total, some 45 speakers addressed the day-long debate.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 April [meeting 5868], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1809(2008). The draft [S/2008/252] was submitted by South Africa.

General of conducting joint reviews by the United Nations and regional organizations of the state of peace and security and of mediation endeavours, particularly in Africa, where joint mediation is being undertaken,

Cooperation between the AU and the UN system

On 17 April, the UN Security Council and the AU Peace and Security Council held a meeting in New York, during which they explored ways and means of developing a stronger working relationship. Following an exchange of views, the two bodies issued a joint communiqué [S/2008/263] in which they reaffirmed their determination to strengthen AU conflict prevention, management and resolution capacities and post-conflict stabilization capacities.

In a letter of 3 October [A/63/515], the United Republic of Tanzania, in its capacity as AU Chair, forwarded to the General Assembly documents containing decisions, declarations and resolutions adopted by the eleventh ordinary session of the AU Assembly (Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, 30 June–1 July); and decisions adopted by the AU Executive Council at its thirteenth ordinary session (Sharm el-Sheikh, 24–28 June).

By identical letters of 24 December [A/63/666-S/2008/813], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and Security Council the report of the AU-UN panel on modalities for support to AU peacekeeping operations. The panel was established on 12 September in response to Council resolution 1809(2008) (see p. 109). To enhance the predictability, sustainability and flexibility of the financing of United Nations-mandated peace operations undertaken by the AU, the panel recommended the establishment of two new financial mechanisms. The first would be based on United Nations-assessed funding and designed to support specific operations; that should be on a case-by-case basis to support Council-authorized AU peacekeeping operations for a period of up to six months. Initially, at least, that support should be provided mainly in kind. The second, a voluntarily funded multi-donor trust fund, should focus on comprehensive capacity-building for conflict prevention and resolution, as well as for institution-building, and should be designed to attract new and existing donors, while fostering African ownership. The panel also recommended that the AU develop its logistics capacity and explore innovative options, including commercial multifunction contracts.

Security Council mission to Africa

By a letter dated 30 May [S/2008/347], the Security Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council would send a mission to Africa from 31 May to 10 June to visit Djibouti (on Somalia), the Sudan, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Côte d'Ivoire.

Mission report. Following a briefing given to the Council on 18 June [meeting 5915] by the four leaders of the mission—Michel Kafando (Burkina Faso), Jean-Maurice Ripert (France), Dumisani Kumalo (South Africa) and John Sawers (United Kingdom)—the mission issued its report [S/2008/460] on 15 July.

In Djibouti for Somalia affairs, the mission's visit reaffirmed the international community's commitment to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the situation in Somalia through the Transitional Federal Charter, and stressed the importance of broad-based and representative institutions reached through a political process ultimately inclusive of all. The mission was briefed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia and the Chief Security Adviser before meeting with the President of Somalia and the delegation of the Transitional Federal Government; the AU delegation; the opposition group Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia; the UN country team; and members of Somali civil society. The mission recommended, among other things, that the Council continue to consider how it could best support the Secretary-General's Special Representative in his efforts to provide practical assistance to furthering the political progress already made; that the Council consider how it could best lend its support to the agreement initialled by the Transitional Federal Government and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia; and that the Council should consider ways to enhance the international security presence in Somalia, including a peacekeeping operation to take over from the African Union Mission in Somalia, at an appropriate time, subject to continued progress in the political process and improvement in the security situation on the ground, as indicated by resolution 1814(2008) (see p. 275).

In the Sudan, the mission reaffirmed the international community's determination to ensure the implementation of the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301], and the resolution of the situation in Darfur. The mission met in Juba with the First Vice-President; in Darfur with internally displaced persons, representatives of the humanitarian community and the Wali (Governor) of Northern Darfur; and in Khartoum with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Presidential Adviser, the Minister for Investment, representatives of opposition parties, the Chairperson of the Assessment and Evaluation Commission established to monitor the Agreement, and the President of the Sudan. Among its recommendations, the mission proposed that the Council should continue to support the parties in implementing the Agreement, including by improving security arrangements between the parties; that the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) should begin preparations to support the conduct of national elections, in close collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme and the parties to the Agreement; that UNMIS should, consistent with its mandate and in accordance with resolution 1812(2008) (see p. 235), robustly deploy peacekeeping personnel in and around Abyei to support the implementation of the Agreement, including protecting civilians; that the Council should begin consideration of a new resolution to extend the mandate of the United Nations-African Union Hybrid Operation in Darfur after it expired on 31 July; and that the United Nations should urgently appoint a chief mediator to spearhead the UN and AU efforts on Darfur.

In Chad, the mission stressed the Council's commitment to help the authorities protect Darfur refugees, internally displaced persons and other vulnerable populations, and facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic through the deployment of a multidimensional presence there. It also demonstrated the Council's support for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) and the European Union military operation in Chad and the Central African Republic (EUFOR). The mission met with the Governor of Goz Beida, humanitarian agencies and non-governmental organizations, along with the Prime Minister. It also visited two camps, one hosting refugees from Darfur and the other hosting Chadian internally displaced persons. The mission recommended, among other things, that the Council reaffirm its full support to MINURCAT and EUFOR, and encourage the Secretary-General to deploy MINURCAT as quickly as possible; that when the Council examined the arrangements for following up EUFOR, including a possible UN operation, it take fully into account the call from the people in Chad for increased security in the eastern part of the country; that the Council encourage the Government to build upon the 2007 Political Agreement for the reinforcement of the democratic process [YUN 2007, p. 155]; and that the Council continue to call on Chad and the Sudan to implement their commitments under the Dakar Agreement (see p. 268), severing ties with rebel groups operating on both sides of the border.

In the DRC, the mission reaffirmed the Council's support to the Government in its efforts to consolidate peace and stability in the east, promote recovery and development, and implement the Goma and Nairobi processes. It also expressed the Council's concern regarding the humanitarian situation in the east, the continuing prevalence of gender-based violence and human rights abuses, and the recruitment of children, especially by armed groups.

The mission met in Kinshasa with the President, the Government and parliamentary institutions, including opposition representatives; and in Goma with the Governor of North Kivu and the National Coordinator of the Amani Programme for the security, pacification, stabilization and reconstruction of North and South Kivu in line with the Goma Agreements (see p. 120). It visited there as well as the Mugunga II camp of internally displaced persons, and met with civil society representatives. Among its recommendations, the mission proposed that the Council, while continuing to prepare for a future gradual drawdown, should keep the capabilities of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo under review to ensure that they supported the Mission with the necessary force enablers, tactical intelligence and, where feasible, standby special forces to assist the DRC with the implementation of the Goma and Nairobi processes and address the challenges posed by other foreign armed groups; that the Mixed Technical Commission on Peace and Security—the framework for implementing the Goma Agreements—should make rapid progress on reaching an agreement on the modalities and timelines for disengagement and brassage, with the full cooperation of the Congolese armed groups; and that the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups should present themselves without any further delay or preconditions for disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration. The mission also encouraged the Governments of the DRC and Rwanda to continue implementing their commitments under the Nairobi Communiqué [YUN 2007, p. 127] to make sure that all conditions were in place to allow that process to advance. The Government and the judiciary should take appropriate measures against the armed groups that continued to prey on the local population and perpetrate acts of sexual violence; and the Government should take further steps to end the recruitment of children, in particular by armed groups.

In Côte d'Ivoire, the mission acknowledged the progress made in implementing the Ouagadougou Political Agreement [YUN 2007, p. 175] under the Facilitation of the President of Burkina Faso. It noted a relaxed political and security environment marked by renewed confidence of all stakeholders in the Agreement, and a significant acceleration of the preparations for the elections. The mission met with the President; a delegation from the Forces nouvelles; the Special Representative of the Facilitator; the Chairman of the Independent Electoral Commission; the Chiefs of Staff of the Defence and Security Forces and of the Forces nouvelles; and others from Government and civil society. The mission recommended, among other things, that the Council continue to support the implementation of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, as well as the role of the Facilitator and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire, including for the certification of all stages of the electoral process; and that the Council encourage all parties to adhere to the agreed timeline leading to open, free, fair and transparent elections on 30 November, and implement in earnest all outstanding tasks under the Ouagadougou Agreement.

Office of the Special Adviser on Africa

In 2008, the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa (OSAA), established by General Assembly resolution 57/7 [YUN 2002, p. 910], continued to enhance international support for Africa's development and security through its advocacy and analytical work; assist the Secretary-General in improving coherence and coordination of UN system support to Africa; and facilitate global intergovernmental deliberations on Africa, in particular relating to the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) [YUN 2001, p. 900]. At a conference in May in New York on "The governance dimension of the Millennium Development Goals in Africa", OSAA organized a panel discussion on the "Challenges of Increased Aid to Africa". At issue were measures for African and donor countries and international organizations that would help ensure the effective use of scaled-up aid and strengthen its positive impact on growth and poverty reduction. Also in May, at the Tokyo International Conference on Africa's Development (TICAD IV) (Yokohama, Japan) (see p. 1015), the Office chaired the group on peace and good governance. In September, OSAA organized a high-level meeting in New York on Africa's development to recommit the international community to development and review the implementation of all commitments made to and by Africa. It also co-organized a side event on "Governance Challenges in Africa". The Office also issued studies on small-scale enterprise development and foreign direct investment in Africa and on the private sector's institutional response to NEPAD.

African peacekeeping capacity

At its 2008 substantive session (New York, 10 March–4 April and 3 July) [A/62/19], the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations discussed the enhancement of African peacekeeping capacities. Stressing the need for coherent and effective coordination of support to the AU, the Committee reiterated the AU lead and ownership of its 10-year capacity-building plan [YUN 2006, p. 340], including donor coordination, and requested the Secretariat to continue to assist in such coordination and help broaden the donor base. The Committee reaffirmed that the provision of logistical and financial reserves to facilitate the AU's rapid deployment capabilities was of primary importance. It also emphasized the importance of implementing the joint action plan for UN support to the AU in peacekeeping in the short, medium and long terms, focusing primarily on collaboration in the areas of conflict prevention and peacekeeping, in particular assistance to the development of an African standby force. The Committee reiterated its recommendation that the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) continue to support the AU in ensuring commonality of procedures for joint planning and coordination with subregional economic communities. Finally, it requested that the established multidisciplinary AU peacekeeping support team continue to serve as a coordinating point for all issues in DPKO related to cooperation with the AU, and that the Committee be informed regularly about its functioning and mandate, particularly with regard to providing technical support to the regional and subregional capacities.

Implementation of Secretary-General's 1998 recommendations on promotion of peace

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 61/230 [YUN 2006, p. 117], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/63/212] on the implementation of the recommendations contained in his 1998 report on the causes of conflict and promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [YUN 1998, p. 66]. The report reviewed major peace and security developments in Africa during the past year, underlining the concerns being addressed by Africa and the international community in order to restore and maintain peace and rebuild post-conflict countries. It also reviewed progress in relation to the short-term steps and actions proposed in the previous report [YUN 2007, p. 112] to support efforts towards a conflict-free Africa, pending a substantive review of new challenges and threats to long-term peace and sustainable development. The report focused on the international response to conflict situations through prevention and mediation; peacekeeping (in Chad and the Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, the Darfur region in the Sudan, the DRC, Ethiopia and Eritrea, Liberia, Somalia and Western Sahara); and peacebuilding (in Burundi, the Central African Republic, Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone). It also discussed strengthening the response of the UN system to peace and security needs through support for African regional and subregional organizations, including enhanced capacity-building in support of the AU, cooperation with subregional organizations and cooperation between the Security Council and the AU Peace and Security Council; reducing the proliferation of small arms and ending the culture of violence; and generating employment in post-conflict countries. The report concluded that despite a decade of achievements, the international community would have to press forward with increased dedication, together with African regional organizations, to assure lasting peace and development in the face of growing global challenges.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 September [meeting 121], the General Assembly adopted resolution 62/275 [draft A/62/L.47 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 64 (b)].

Implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa

Recognizing, in particular, the importance of strengthening the capacity of the African Union and subregional organizations to address the causes of conflict in Africa,

Noting that despite the positive trends and advances in obtaining durable peace in Africa, the conditions required for sustainable development have yet to be consolidated throughout the continent and that there is therefore an urgent need to develop African human and institutional capacities, particularly in countries emerging from conflict,

Noting also that conflict prevention and the consolidation of peace would benefit from the coordinated, sustained and integrated efforts of the United Nations system and Member States, and regional and subregional organizations, as well as international and regional financial institutions,

Underlining the need to address the negative implications of the illegal exploitation of natural resources in all its aspects for peace, security and development in Africa, and underlining also the fact that the illicit trade in natural resources is a matter of serious international concern, which can be directly linked to the fuelling of armed conflicts and the illicit trade in and proliferation of arms, especially small arms and light weapons,

1. Takes note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations contained in his report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, and welcomes recent institutional developments in addressing such causes and other efforts in conflict prevention, peacemaking, peacekeeping and peacebuilding undertaken by African countries, African regional organizations and the United Nations system;

2. Welcomes the progress made, in particular by the African Union and the subregional organizations, in the prevention, management and resolution of conflict and in post-conflict peacebuilding in a number of African countries, and calls for intensified efforts and a coordinated approach between national Governments, the African Union, subregional organizations, the United Nations system and partners with a view to achieving further progress towards the goal of a conflict-free Africa;

enhanced mediation capacity, including through the Panel of the Wise;

8. Notes with appreciation the establishment of the multidisciplinary African Union Peacekeeping Support Team within the Department for Peacekeeping Operations at the Secretariat, and reaffirms the need for the United Nations and other development partners to increase their support for the African Union, including through existing forums for cooperation with Africa, in order to enhance its capacity and effectiveness in the planning, deployment and management of peacekeeping operations, including in the advanced training of African peacekeepers, and in peace-building activities, and encourages the donor community to provide further support to the African Union, including through the replenishment of its Peace Fund;

9. Calls for a holistic and coordinated approach at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to improve the effectiveness of mechanisms for conflict prevention and resolution, crisis management, peacemaking, peacekeeping and post-conflict peacebuilding efforts in Africa, and reaffirms the need for observing such an approach in the design and implementation of all programmes within the context of the ten-year capacity-building programme;

10. Stresses the critical importance of a regional approach to conflict prevention, in particular with respect to cross-border issues such as disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, the prevention of illegal exploitation of natural resources and trafficking in high-value commodities and the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects, and in this regard emphasizes the central role of the African Union and the subregional organizations in addressing such issues;

11. Reaffirms its commitment to address the special needs of Africa, where some progress can be noted but where some countries remain off track in meeting the Millennium Development Goals by 2015, in order to enable it to enter the mainstream of the world economy, and to strengthen cooperation with the New Partnership for Africa's Development by providing coherent support for the programmes drawn up by African leaders within that framework, including by mobilizing internal and external financial resources and facilitating approval of such programmes by the multilateral financial institutions;

17. Notes with concern the tragic plight of children in conflict situations in Africa, in particular the phenomenon of child soldiers, as well as other grave violations against children, and stresses the need for the protection of children in armed conflicts, post-conflict counselling, rehabilitation and education, with due regard to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

18. Takes note of the conclusions of the expert group meeting on "Youth in Africa: participation of youth as partners in peace and development in post-conflict countries", held in Namibia in November 2006, and calls upon the United Nations system and Member States to adopt strategies to include youth as central stakeholders and key actors in the rehabilitation, reconciliation and rebuilding of war-torn communities and in contributing to sustainable development in their countries;

19. Recognizes the important role of the good offices of the Secretary-General in Africa, and encourages the Secretary-General to continue to use mediation as often as possible to help to solve conflicts peacefully, taking due consideration of the work performed by the African Union and the subregional organizations in that regard;

22. Welcomes African-led initiatives to strengthen political, economic and corporate governance, such as the African Peer Review Mechanism, encourages even more African countries to join this process, and calls upon the United Nations system and Member States to assist African Member States and regional and subregional organizations in their efforts to enhance good governance, including the promotion of the rule of law and the holding of free and fair elections;

23. Recognizes the role of the Peacebuilding Commission in ensuring that national ownership of the peacebuilding process in countries emerging from conflict is observed and that nationally identified priorities are at the core of international and regional efforts in post-conflict peacebuilding in the countries under consideration, notes the important steps taken by the Commission in engaging with Sierra Leone, Burundi, Guinea-Bissau and the Central African Republic through integrated peacebuilding strategies, calls for sustained regional and international commitment to the implementation of these strategies and their design process, recalls the adoption of the Sierra Leone Peacebuilding Cooperation Framework and the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding for Burundi, and calls for their implementation;

24. Calls upon the United Nations system and invites Member States to assist African countries emerging from conflict in their efforts to build national capacities of governance, including the rehabilitation of the security sector, disarmament, demobilization and the reintegration of ex-combatants, provision for the safe return of internally displaced persons and refugees, the launch of income-generation activities, particularly for youth and women, and the delivery of basic public services;

25. Stresses the importance of effectively addressing challenges that continue to hamper the achievement of peace, stability and sustainable development on the continent, inter alia, the increased prevalence of infectious disease such as HIV/AIDS, the effects of global warming and climate change, the extremely high rates of youth unemployment, human trafficking, massive displacements of people, the illegal exploitation of natural resources, the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, the emergence of terrorist networks and the increased activity of transnational organized crime, and in this regard encourages the United Nations system and Member States to assist African countries to effectively address these challenges;

26. Also stresses the importance of creating an environment conducive to national reconciliation and social and economic recovery in countries emerging from conflict;

Central Africa and Great Lakes region

Great Lakes region

Political and security situation

In 2008, Central Africa and the Great Lakes region continued to be affected by armed groups and militias. Despite the signing of the Nairobi communiqué in November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 127], which set out a common approach to ending the threat to peace and security in both countries, and in the Great Lakes region, relations between the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and Rwanda remained challenging. In March, the Security Council took action to address the presence of armed groups and militias in the eastern DRC, which was perpetuating a climate of insecurity. It demanded that Rwandan armed groups operating in that area, including the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda and ex-Rwandan Armed Forces (ex-FAR)/Interahamwe turn themselves in to Congolese authorities and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) for disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 March [meeting 5852], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1804(2008). The draft [S/2008/171] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 1649(2005) of 21 December 2005, 1771(2007) of 10 August 2007, 1794(2007) of 21 December 2007 and 1797(2008) of 30 January 2008, and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Great Lakes region,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Republic of Rwanda as well as all States in the region,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued presence of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups referred to in the joint communiqué of the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Republic of Rwanda signed at Nairobi on 9 November 2007 ("the Nairobi communiqué") operating in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which continues to pose a serious threat to the peace and security of the entire Great Lakes region,

Deploring the persistence of violations of human rights and international humanitarian law carried out by the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups operating in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, condemning in particular sexual violence perpetrated by those groups, and recalling its resolution 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 on women and peace and security, its resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 on children and armed conflict and the conclusions on children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo endorsed by it,

Recognizing the commitment and sustained efforts of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Republic of Rwanda, other countries of the region and their international partners to solve their common security concerns and achieve and sustain regional peace and stability, as expressed in particular in the Nairobi communiqué and the conclusions of the high-level meeting of the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission, held in Addis Ababa on 4 and 5 December 2007,

Recalling the signing at Nairobi on 15 December 2006 of the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region, and underscoring the commitments not to support rebel armed groups and to cooperate with a view to disarming and dismantling existing rebel armed groups,

Welcoming the decision of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to hold a meeting in Kisangani to address the issue of the presence of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Supporting the ongoing efforts of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to promote the voluntary disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of these groups,

Expressing its grave concern at the continued presence of other armed groups and militias in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which perpetuates a climate of insecurity in the whole region, underscoring that the statements of commitment (Actes d'engagement) signed at Goma on 23 January 2008, together with the Nairobi communiqué, represent a major step towards the restoration of lasting peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, calling upon the signatories to the Goma statements of commitment to take immediate action in support thereof, and expressing its intention to continue to monitor closely their implementation,

1. Demands that all members of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups operating in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo immediately lay down their arms and present themselves without any further delay or preconditions to the Congolese authorities and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for their disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration;

2. Demands also that the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups operating in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo immediately stop recruiting and using children, release all children associated with them and put an end to gender-based violence, particularly rape and other forms of sexual abuse, and all other forms of violence, and stresses the need for those responsible to be brought to justice;

3. Recalls the mandate of the Mission to facilitate the voluntary demobilization and repatriation of disarmed foreign combatants and their dependants, and to use all necessary means, within the limits of its capacity and in the areas where its units are deployed, to support operations led by the integrated brigades of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to disarming the recalcitrant armed groups in order to ensure their participation in the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration process;

4. Calls upon the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Republic of Rwanda to intensify their cooperation to implement their commitments under the Nairobi communiqué, in particular with a view to creating the conditions conducive to the repatriation of demobilized combatants;

5. Recalls that the targeted measures, including a travel ban and an asset freeze imposed by paragraphs 13 and 15 of resolution 1596(2005) of 18 April 2005 were extended by resolution 1649(2005) and resolution 1698(2006) of 31 July 2006 to apply, in particular, to political and military leaders of armed groups operating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo who impede the disarmament and the voluntary repatriation or resettlement of combatants belonging to those groups, and stresses that those measures are applicable to leaders of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups designated in accordance with the provisions of those resolutions;

6. Undertakes to consider, in its forthcoming review of the measures described in paragraph 5 above, expanding their applicability, as appropriate and taking into account participation in or contribution to the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration process, to other members of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe or other Rwandan armed groups operating in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo or to persons providing other forms of assistance to them;

7. Stresses that the arms embargo imposed by resolution 1493(2003) of 28 July 2003, as expanded by resolution 1596(2005), prohibits the provision of arms and any related materiel or technical training and assistance to all foreign armed groups and illegal Congolese militias in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan

Armed Forces/Interahamwe and other Rwandan armed groups;

8. Calls upon Member States to consider taking the measures necessary to prevent the provision by their nationals or from their territories of any financial, technical or other forms of support to or for the benefit of the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, the ex-Rwandan Armed Forces/Interahamwe or other Rwandan armed groups operating in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

9. Reiterates its call upon all States to intensify cooperation with and render all necessary assistance to the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communication. In a letter of 14 March [S/2008/180] to the Security Council, Rwanda welcomed the fact that at last, 14 years after the 1994 genocide, the Security Council had adopted resolution 1804(2008), targeting the authors of that genocide—the ex-FAR/Interahamwe, currently known as the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR), and the Rassemblement Uni pour la Démocratie-Urunana (RUD-Urunana), among others. Rwanda welcomed the Council's determination to end the threat posed by those groups to the security and sovereignty of Rwanda, the DRC and the entire Great Lakes region. Rwanda expressed its determination to continue cooperation with the DRC and other partners in ending the threat posed by those armed groups; reiterated its welcome and encouragement to all members of Rwandan armed groups who wished to repatriate; and called on the DRC and MONUC to help them do so safely and expeditiously. Rwanda would continue to guarantee returnees safety, security and the enjoyment of all the rights to which Rwandans were constitutionally entitled.

Meanwhile, relations between the DRC and Uganda continued to improve. The Joint Permanent Commission established by the two countries met regularly. On 11 May, at a meeting in Dar-es-Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, the President of the DRC, Joseph Kabila, and the President of Uganda, Yoweri Museveni, agreed to maintain the status quo along their common border while the Joint Border Marking Committee carried out its work. They also agreed to consider elevating their diplomatic representation to the ambassadorial level, and renewed their determination to end the threat posed by the Allied Democratic Forces and the National Army for the Liberation of Uganda (ADF/NALU).

Following those and subsequent discussions, as well as a meeting of the Chiefs of Staff from the DRC, Uganda and Southern Sudan in Kampala, Uganda, on 2 June, the DRC indicated its intention to conduct military operations against the Ugandan rebel group the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA). On 30 May, MONUC and the DRC armed forces (FARDC) had signed a joint directive for operations against LRA, which focused on protecting civilians, containing LRA, and facilitating the voluntary disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of LRA elements.

Follow-up to second International Conference on the Great Lakes Region

At the second International Conference on the Great Lakes Region (Nairobi, December 2006) [YUN 2006, p. 124], 11 countries signed the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region, pledging to pursue peace, security, political stability and development.

Communication. In a letter dated 22 February [S/2008/125], Uganda, in its capacity as Chair of the Great Lakes Region Initiative, communicated to the Security Council a 15 December 2007 statement of Liberata Mulamula, Executive Secretary of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region—the intergovernmental organization coordinating the implementation of the Pact—on the first anniversary of the signing of the Pact, commemorating positive developments and outlining remaining challenges.

The Executive Secretariat of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region held the second meeting of parliamentarians of the Great Lakes region (Bujumbura, Burundi, 3–4 March), during which it was decided to formalize the establishment of a regional forum of parliamentarians before the next meeting in November. The Executive Secretariat also organized a regional workshop (Bujumbura, 25–28 March) on the integration of gender in the implementation of the Pact. In April, the Conference Secretariat launched a series of planning workshops in the region to review the Pact's programmes of action and protocols, and to develop road maps for implementation.

The Pact entered into force on 21 June following ratification by eight of the 11 core countries of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region. Under the terms of the Pact, Governments committed themselves to addressing the key security, governance, development, humanitarian and social challenges from a regional perspective.

At the second Regional Inter-Ministerial Committee Meeting of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region (Brazzaville, Congo, 21–22 May), the Ministers commended the Government of the DRC for its efforts to implement the Nairobi Communiqué, and called on the ex-FAR/Interahamwe to seize the opportunity to voluntarily disarm and return to Rwanda.

Special Envoy on the Great Lakes region

Appointment and activity. Following large-scale hostilities in the latter half of the year between the Government of the DRC and the rebel group Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP), led by Laurent Nkunda, the Secretary-General, on 9 December, appointed former Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo as his Special Envoy on the Great Lakes region. The Extraordinary Summit of the AU and the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region (Nairobi, Kenya, 7 November), which endorsed the appointment, proposed that the Special Envoy should also represent the AU and the Great Lakes region as a facilitator and be joined in those tasks by former Tanzanian President Benjamin Mkapa—a choice that the Secretary-General endorsed. In November and December, the two facilitators met with the presidents of Angola, the Congo, the DRC, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, as well as with the leader of CNDP. Following those meetings, a dialogue between the DRC and CNDP opened on 8 December in Nairobi. Relations between the DRC and Rwanda warmed, and their cooperation was enhanced. Although CNDP had threatened Goma in November, the prospect of a military takeover of the town had considerably receded. CNDP remained unwilling at the end of the year, however, to sign a formal recommitment to its unilateral cessation of hostilities. CNDP also accused the DRC of incursions into areas that it had called on MONUC to occupy after it had vacated them. (For more information on the situation in the eastern DRC, see p. 125.)

Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions

At its twenty-seventh ministerial meeting (Luanda, Angola, 13–15 May) [A/63/82-S/2008/360], the 11-member United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa reviewed the geopolitical and security situation in Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad and the DRC. The persistence of tensions, the deterioration of the security situation and the resurgence of armed confrontations, along with the corresponding humanitarian and human rights situation, gave the Committee cause for concern.

The Committee condemned the attacks in Burundi perpetrated by the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération (Palipehutu-FNL) against innocent populations in the capital, Bujumbura, in violation of the 2006 ceasefire agreement [YUN 2006, p. 153], and urged the Government, Palipehutu-FNL and all other political actors to give priority to dialogue with a view to finding solutions to all outstanding problems and take all steps necessary for the full implementation of the agreement.

Social tensions in Cameroon had reduced due to improvements in the population's purchasing power following the reduction of tariffs on essential commodities and the increase in Government employees' salaries. The Committee expressed concern, however, at criminal "roadblocking" in some border areas, and called on security forces to continue to combat that phenomenon, in concert with neighbouring countries. It also welcomed Cameroon's contribution to the deployment of the European Union operation (EUFOR) and the Central African Multinational Force in the Republic of Chad and the Central African Republic. It appealed to donors to provide Cameroon with the support needed to deal with the refugee influx in the north, as a result of developments in Chad, and in order to ensure that refugees could return promptly to their home countries.

Regarding the Central African Republic, the Committee noted with satisfaction the ceasefire and peace agreement of 9 May between the Government and the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la démocratie. It expressed concern, however, at the insecurity caused by ongoing banditry in the north, and at acts of violence against civilians, as well as at the presence of Ugandan rebel LRA elements in the south-east, along with the use of that region of the country as a crossing to neighbouring countries. The Committee encouraged the Government to pursue its efforts to combat impunity and reduce the number of extrajudicial killings, as recommended to the United Nations Human Rights Council by the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions following his visit to the country (see p. 803).

The Committee expressed concern at the deterioration of relations between Chad and the Sudan, and called on both nations to re-establish dialogue towards implementing the Dakar Agreement of 13 March (see p. 268). In cooperation with Chad, the Committee appealed to the international community to resolve the Darfur crisis, and requested the United Nations to reactivate the United Nations Development Programme Small Arms Project, a disarmament project that ceased to operate in 2006. It also called for measures to strengthen the capacity of security services in the subregion to combat the proliferation of small arms and light weapons, and for the establishment of appropriate border patrol mechanisms in the subregion.

The Committee welcomed the Goma statement of commitment and the Amani programme for peace, pacification, stability and development in the provinces of North and South Kivu, signed by the Government of the DRC and rebel armed groups on 23 January, and urged all parties to work towards their prompt implementation (see below). It also welcomed the Nairobi Communiqué signed on 9 November 2007 by the DRC and Rwanda [YUN 2007, p. 127], as well as the round table held in Kinshasa from 18 to 20 February 2008 on security sector reform in the DRC and the start of judicial reform. The Committee expressed concern at the deteriorating security situation in the eastern DRC, particularly in the Ituri region, and called on the armed groups to turn in their weapons and participate unconditionally in the disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and rehabilitation process.

On 2 December, by resolution 63/78 (see p. 647), the General Assembly reaffirmed its support for efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels in order to ease tensions and conflicts in Central Africa and to further peace, stability and sustainable development in the subregion.

(For information on the Committee's review of the promotion of disarmament and arms limitation in Central Africa and the report of the Secretary-General on the Committee's activities, see p. 646.)

Democratic Republic of the Congo

The year began with renewed hope when the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), the rebel Congrès national pour la défense du peuple (CNDP) and other armed groups from the Kivus in the eastern DRC signed in January statements of commitment—the Actes d'engagement, known as the Goma Agreements—providing for a ceasefire and the separation of forces, and for the rebels to either disarm and demobilize or be integrated into the national armed forces through brassage (intermixing). However, little progress was made in disarming the many disparate armed groups plaguing the region.

In August, the largest UN peacekeeping operation, the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), found itself challenged when violence reignited in the volatile eastern region, on the border with Rwanda. The situation worsened in late October, when CNDP, led by Laurent Nkunda, undertook a major offensive threatening Goma, the provincial capital of North Kivu. Mr. Nkunda's forces quickly overwhelmed the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC) and displaced hundreds of thousands of civilians. MONUC peacekeepers, finding themselves lodged between warring groups, protected civilians where they could, while the Government army they were there to support was virtually incapacitated.

The United Nations set in motion a series of actions to address the conflict. MONUC quickly reconfigured its forces throughout the east, reinforcing its presence in Goma and surrounding areas. In November, following a visit to the DRC, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations urged the Security Council to send more troops to the Mission. The Council agreed to authorize an additional 3,100 troops and police. The Secretary-General also called for the deployment of a multinational force as a bridging measure until MONUC could be reinforced. He met with regional leaders in Nairobi in November, as the crisis threatened to spill beyond the borders of the DRC; and he appointed Olusegun Obasanjo, the former President of Nigeria, as his Special Envoy on the Great Lakes Region to work with the parties on finding a lasting peace. The Security Council, on 22 December, extended the mandate of MONUC by one year, and called on the Mission to make protecting civilians a priority.

Political developments and MONUC activities

The Conference on Peace, Security and Development in North and South Kivu was held in Goma, DRC, from 6 to 25 January with the engagement of and support from MONUC and international partners. In all, 1,250 delegates attended, including representatives of Congolese armed groups, local communities, local authorities, political parties and civil society. They worked in two seminars, one for North Kivu and one for South Kivu. At each seminar, four committees were set up to consider issues relating to peace, security, social and humanitarian affairs and development. A key outcome of the Conference was the adoption, on 23 January, of two statements of commitment (Actes d'engagement) for North and South Kivu signed by all participating Congolese armed groups, including CNDP and Banyamulenge insurgents from South Kivu, represented by the Forces républicaines fédéralistes. The statements—the so-called Goma Agreements—committed the armed groups to accepting a ceasefire monitored by MONUC; agreeing that all militias should undergo disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; and facilitating the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. The Government committed itself to presenting to Parliament a measure renewing the amnesty law, which had expired in 2003, and extending it to cover recent acts of war and insurrection. The amnesty would not, however, apply to war crimes, crimes against humanity or genocide. The statements did not address several key issues, including the timeline for disarming the armed groups and modalities for brassage. The signatories agreed to establish a Mixed Technical Commission on Peace and Security to address those issues and to monitor implementation. It was agreed that the Commission would comprise representatives of the Government, the armed groups and international partners.

Secretary-General statement (January). On 23 January, the Secretary-General, in a press statement [SG/SM/11385-AFR/1647], congratulated the Government of the DRC as well as the organizers and participants in the Conference on Peace, Security and Development in North and South Kivu on its successful conclusion. The commitment of the armed groups of North and South Kivu to end all hostilities, as outlined in the statements of commitment signed by those groups and the Government on 23 January, represented an important step towards restoring lasting peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, and a complement to the Nairobi Communiqué of 9 November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 127].

MONUC electoral assistance. On 30 January, by resolution 1797(2008) (see below), the Security Council authorized MONUC to provide assistance to the authorities of the DRC, including the National Independent Electoral Commission, in the organization, preparation and conduct of local elections. The Council had before it the twenty-fourth report of the Secretary-General on MONUC [YUN 2007, p. 125] and a letter of the Secretary-General of 30 November 2007 [ibid., p. 126] to the Council President providing preliminary estimates on the cost and financial requirements for MONUC's support to the elections, expected to be held in the latter half of 2008.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 January [meeting 5828], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1797(2008). The draft [S/2008/50] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1756(2007) of 15 May 2007 and 1794(2007) of 21 December 2007,

Reaffirming its commitment to continue to contribute to the consolidation of peace and stability in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the post-transition period, in particular through the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Recalling the importance of elections, including the forthcoming local elections, for the longer-term restoration of peace and stability, national reconciliation and the establishment of the rule of law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Encouraging international partners to continue to support the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Welcoming the letter of the Secretary-General dated 11 October 2007 and the letter dated 30 November 2007 and the recommendations contained in the twenty-fourth report of the Secretary-General on the Mission, of 14 November 2007 with respect to assistance by the Mission to the Congolese authorities in the organization, preparation and conduct of local elections,

1. Authorizes the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in close coordination with international partners and the United Nations country team, to provide assistance to the Congolese authorities, including the National Independent Electoral Commission, in the organization, preparation and conduct of local elections, as recommended in the letter of the Secretary-General dated 11 October 2007 and the letter dated 30 November 2007;

2. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

At the same meeting, following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/2 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council congratulates President Kabila and the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, as well as the organizers of and participants in the Conference on Peace, Security and Development in North and South Kivu, on the success of the Conference, held in Goma from 6 to 23 January 2008.

The Council is particularly pleased that the armed groups in North and South Kivu have undertaken to observe a complete and immediate ceasefire, to begin the withdrawal of their forces with a view to their brassage or their disarmament, demobilization and reintegration under the national programme for that process, and to abide strictly by the rules of international humanitarian and human rights law, set out in the statements of commitment (Actes d'engagement) which they signed with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo on 23 January 2008.

The Council commends the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for ordering a ceasefire in accordance with the statements of commitment. Within the framework of the fight against impunity, while noting the Government's pledge to seek parliamentary approval of an amnesty law covering acts of war and insurrection, the Council welcomes the exclusion of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity from the scope of this amnesty.

The Council urges all the parties to the agreements to respect the ceasefire and to implement the other commitments they have undertaken effectively and in good faith. In this connection, it emphasizes the importance of the work to be carried out by the joint commissions provided for in the statements of commitment, and encourages the international community, including the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to support that process. It also encourages the Mission to support the implementation of the statements of commitment, within the limits of its capacity and in accordance with its mandate, including with regard to the protection of civilians.

The Council also welcomes the resolutions adopted at the Goma Conference and calls upon the appropriate authorities to act on the recommendations addressed to them. It underscores the need for the Congolese authorities and all political and social stakeholders in North and South Kivu to continue, through dialogue, to seek long-term and comprehensive ways to address the root causes of instability.

The Council reiterates the importance of the commitments undertaken by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Government of the Republic of Rwanda in their joint communiqué on a common approach to end the threat posed by illegal armed groups in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to peace and stability in both countries and the Great Lakes region, signed at Nairobi on 9 November 2007. It calls upon the two Governments to continue to implement fully the joint communiqué, in particular by promptly taking appropriate measures to induce the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda and other foreign armed groups to lay down their arms without preconditions and return to their home countries.

The Council encourages the international community, in particular the eastern neighbours of the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the Great Lakes region, to fully support the new dynamic launched by the Goma Conference and the Nairobi joint communiqué, which together represent a major step towards the restoration of lasting peace and stability in the Great Lakes region.

Arrest on ICC warrant. On 6 February, Mathieu Ngudjolo Chui, a colonel in FARDC, alleged former leader of the Front des nationalistes et intégrationnistes (FNI) and war criminal, was arrested in connection with crimes against humanity in Ituri and transferred to the International Criminal Court—the first time that the Congolese authorities, at the Court's request, made an arrest.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In an April report [S/2008/218] on MONUC submitted to the Security Council pursuant to resolution 1794(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 128], the Secretary-General said that important steps had been taken towards achieving the benchmarks outlined in his previous report [ibid., p. 125] regarding the elimination of the threat posed by national and foreign armed groups to the eastern part of the DRC and neighbouring countries, and the stabilization of sensitive areas, particularly in the east.

To support the work of the Mixed Technical Commission on Peace and Security, an ad hoc ceasefire monitoring mechanism, chaired by MONUC, became operational on 10 February. As at 15 March, the mechanism had received 108 reports of violations, of which 64 had been verified, 30 had been confirmed as non-violations and 14 remained under investigation. Most violations were reported in North Kivu, involving FARDC, CNDP, the Coalition of Congolese Patriotic Resistance and Mayi-Mayi groups. In February, President Kabila issued executive orders which established the framework for “Amani”, the Government programme created following the Goma Agreements for the security, pacification, stabilization and reconstruction of North and South Kivu. He issued additional executive orders on 24 March outlining the composition and structure of the commission on peace and security, which would be jointly chaired by the Government and the International Facilitation (AU, International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, European Union, United Nations, United States).

In accordance with the Nairobi Communiqué signed by the Governments of the DRC and Rwanda on 9 November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 127], President Kabila, on 11 February 2008, issued a presidential decree creating a steering committee for the implementation of the Government's plan to eradicate foreign armed groups from the territory of the DRC. The Nairobi Communiqué had led to a renewed focus on disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and resettlement or repatriation. MONUC was assisting the Government in developing its implementation plan in that regard and supporting the efforts of the DRC and Rwanda towards their common goal of repatriating or relocating the estimated 6,000 ex-Rwandan Armed Forces (FAR)/Interahamwe elements in the DRC. MONUC had relocated its disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement or reintegration section to Goma, and was supporting the efforts of the DRC to sensitize the political and military leadership of the ex-FAR/Interahamwe.

The political and security situation in Bas-Congo had sharply deteriorated. Tensions in the province increased early in January, following clashes between the national police and the Bundu Dia Kongo (BDK) politico-religious movement, which had challenged State authority throughout the province, calling for greater fiscal decentralization, regional autonomy and self-determination, while also reviving residual electoral disputes and demanding that the Government respect its right to cultural and religious freedoms. BDK, which had a record of threatening and attacking public officials, staging violent demonstrations and taking other provocative actions, had called for the holding of a conference on peace and development in Bas-Congo. The Government considered BDK to be seditious, and believed that its activities were intended to undermine the Constitution. During a visit to Matadi on 27 February, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Alan Doss, urged local authorities and BDK to exercise restraint and work towards a peaceful resolution of the tensions.

Three days after the Government launched operations to restore State authority in the most sensitive areas in Bas-Congo on 28 February, MONUC dispatched a formed police unit together with an infantry company and several teams of military observers to assess the situation, protect civilians and cooperate with provincial authorities.

Progress towards institutional reform was slow, and the Government made little headway in implementing its programme for 2007–2011 or the governance contract. Little was achieved in the decentralization process mandated by the Constitution, or in the President's five declared priority areas of health, education, water and electricity, infrastructure and employment.

The overall security situation remained fragile. Kinshasa and other provinces witnessed a surge in violent crime, attributed in large part to unpaid demobilized former combatants along with military and police personnel. The security situation in Ituri improved following the third phase of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, which targeted elements of the Forces de résistance patriotique d'Ituri (FRPI), FNI and the Mouvement révolutionnaire congolais. In Djugu and Irumu territories, however, FNI and FRPI splinter groups that refused to disarm were creating insecurity. MONUC and FARDC continued joint operations against FRPI, which was reportedly recruiting new combatants and being resupplied with weapons, while the movement of CNDP and Mayi-Mayi combatants from North Kivu into the brassage centre in Kamina complicated the security situation in Katanga.

The humanitarian situation in the Kivus remained a source of concern. With a displaced population of some 800,000, North Kivu continued to have the highest concentration of internally displaced persons in the DRC. The Goma process notwithstanding, insecurity persisted among internally displaced persons and local communities. As at 15 March, only tentative population returns had been observed. Forced recruitment by all armed groups signatories to the statements of commitment had deepened the sense of insecurity and led to additional displacements. A series of earthquakes in the region in February further aggravated the situation.

Meanwhile, MONUC developed a security and stabilization strategy to lay the groundwork for the Mission's eventual orderly withdrawal, in particular from the eastern part of the DRC. To implement the strategy, MONUC had strengthened its civilian, police and military presence in the east. The strategy focused on political and military actions to encourage remaining armed groups to disband; political measures to encourage the fulfilment of commitments made within the Goma process; basic first steps to ensure the return of State authority to areas formerly controlled by armed groups; and support for the return and reintegration of war-affected populations.

MONUC continued to provide operational support to FARDC aimed at stabilizing sensitive areas and expanding State authority, both of which were critical elements of the benchmarks. The extent of that support was undermined, however, by the ad hoc nature of the requests of FARDC, which were routinely incomplete and delivered with limited warning and usually without preparatory liaison. The Mission also provided security for the delivery of humanitarian assistance and for the return and the reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons.

The human rights situation remained precarious and a cause for concern. Elements of Congolese and foreign armed groups, as well as members of the national security forces, continued to carry out arbitrary executions and commit acts of rape, torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment. A MONUC human rights investigative team concluded that on 16 and 17 January, in the vicinity of Kalonge, North Kivu, CNDP elements executed at least 30 civilians. On 2 January, in Musizero, North Kivu, soldiers of the FARDC second integrated brigade allegedly killed eight people, including three children. MONUC was hindered in its monitoring of the intelligence services, however, by systematic refusal to grant access to many detention centres, as a state of almost total impunity for serious offences continued to prevail.

Sexual violence—prevalent throughout the DRC—and gender-based violence remained major areas of concern for MONUC and the UN country team. MONUC concentrated on reinforcing the Congolese capacity to prevent sexual violence, assist victims and end impunity for perpetrators. Progress in security sector reform, however, had been modest.

The Secretary-General observed that while the statements of commitment that emerged from the Goma conference were an important step forward, the significant number of verified ceasefire violations was a matter of concern. He encouraged the Governments of the DRC and Rwanda, as well as the international community, to maintain momentum in implementing the Nairobi Communiqué and the provisions of Security Council resolution 1804(2008) (see p. 116) in order to jointly address the problems posed by Rwandan armed groups in the eastern part of the DRC. He also urged the Congolese authorities to refrain from disproportionate use of force, which contributed to instability and posed the risk of grave humanitarian consequences. The Secretary-General further urged the Government, assisted by its international partners, to redouble its efforts to consolidate democracy, enhance governance, combat corruption, respect human rights and establish the rule of law at the national and local levels.

Report of Secretary-General (July). Reporting on major developments [S/2008/433] since his last report, the Secretary-General stated that the overall security situation remained tenuous. In North Kivu, there was a reduction in the number of ceasefire violations documented by MONUC, but attacks against civilian targets—including non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and UN agencies, funds and programmes—increased. FDLR and the coalition of Patrotes résistants congolais (PARECO) continued to attack FARDC positions near Lake Edward in the Northern Rutshuru area. Other security incidents were reportedly linked to efforts by armed groups to extend areas under their control before disengagement. CNDP had allegedly continued recruitment and training of combatants, while the prospects of reintegration benefits appeared to have resuscitated or prompted the emergence of little-known or insignificant groups, who had stepped up recruitment. In Goma, attacks on individuals, armed robberies and assassinations had increased.

Insecurity in South Kivu increased, notably in outlying territories, and armed robberies of international NGOs and transport vehicles had taken place. The Mission's increased patrols and escorts for humanitarian actors and NGOs helped stem the increase in armed attacks; however, the re-recruitment of demobilized ex-combatants and other elements by armed groups continued to contribute to instability.

Elsewhere in the east, attacks by LRA on local populations had increased in and around the Garamba Park area as well as along the DRC-Southern Sudan-Central African Republic border areas, where the population had been subjected to looting, rape and abduction. In Orientale Province, seasonal cross-border movement of M'Bororo tribes into the DRC, and their increasingly aggressive posture, had further strained relations with local populations.

In Bas-Congo, the security situation had improved since the violent clashes between the national police and BDK members in February and March. In Burundi, large-scale hostilities resumed in April between the Burundian National Defence Forces and Palipehutu-FNL, raising concerns of a possible spill-over effect into South Kivu, especially in light of unconfirmed reports of collaboration between FNL and FDLR.

As for the implementation of the Goma and Nairobi processes, the Secretary-General reported that the Mixed Technical Commission on Peace and Security had been inaugurated in Goma on 3 April by the Minister of State for the Interior in the presence of the Special Representative and representatives of the International Facilitation. Co-chaired by the Government and MONUC, the Commission focused initially on procedural issues, adopting a calendar setting out its objectives and agreeing on its provincial structures. The Amani programme had launched a comprehensive sensitization campaign to inform combatants and civilian populations about the Goma Agreements, as well as to prepare armed elements for the brassage or disarmament, demobilization and reintegration phases. Important issues remained to be resolved, however, and practical arrangements needed to be put in place. Armed groups, in particular CNDP, had insisted that those phases take place in the Kivus, while the Government maintained that they should be carried out outside the Kivus.

Encouraging progress had been made in implementing the Nairobi Communiqué. In line with its commitments, the Government had adopted a multi-dimensional approach to encourage the disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration or relocation of FDLR elements away from the DRC-Rwanda border area. The approach combined direct dialogue with certain ex-FAR/Interahamwe leaders—including leaders of the Rassemblement Uni pour la Démocratie-Urunana (RUD-Urunana)—with other sensitization efforts and increased military pressure. On 26 May, the Government convened a conference in Kisangani with leaders of the RUD faction of FDLR and the Rassemblement Populaire Rwandais (RPR). The discussions secured agreement on a road map in which FDLR-RUD and RPR recognized the Nairobi Communiqué as a framework for the peaceful repatriation of their combatants and confirmed their commitment to voluntary disarmament, repatriation or relocation under security guarantees from the Government and the international community. The FDLR-FOCA (Forces combattantes abacunguzi)—reportedly under the control of radical, Europe-based leaders such as Callixte Mbarushimana and Ignace Murwanashyaka—however, rejected both the Kisangani Conference and the road map. The Government also faced difficulties due to resistance from the provinces to the temporary resettlement of FDLR elements.

The UN strategy for security and stabilization of the eastern DRC involved supporting the Congolese follow-up to the Goma conference; the extension of State authority in the east and eventual return and reintegration of ex-combatants; and—in terms of security—increasing patrolling and monitoring of the ceasefire. It also involved increasing military pressure on FDLR in areas where the latter controlled commercial activities and the illegal exploitation of natural resources. Efforts to encourage the voluntary disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration of FDLR elements had been revitalized. MONUC also supported Government efforts to encourage FDLR leaders in Europe to agree to disarmament, demobilization, repatriation, resettlement and reintegration. That appeared to have yielded some progress with respect to the group's RUD-Urunana faction, but extremist FDLR leaders continued to resist peaceful resolution of the problem posed by FDLR's continued presence in the DRC.

With regard to the deployment and military posture of the Mission, the Secretary-General reported that former UN Military Adviser General Maurice Baril, accompanied by a small team from the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support, undertook a military evaluation mission of MONUC from 19 to 29 April. It concluded that the Division Headquarters in Kisangani no longer provided an optimal command and control structure, particularly with respect to the Mission's military action to support the Nairobi and Goma processes in the Kivus. Consequently, the Division Headquarters would be reconfigured to establish a forward Force headquarters in Goma, as operational demands in the Kivus represented the Force's main effort. The Baril mission also concluded that the Force's robust rules of engagement and the measures outlined in the Secretary-General's third special report [YUN 2004, p. 127] remained fully applicable to the current situation; acknowledged that, to fulfil its mandate, MONUC required a high degree of mobility and flexibility on the part of its contingents; and affirmed that a willingness to use appropriate force in accordance with the rules of engagement was also required, both to protect civilians and to support the Nairobi and Goma processes, including through joint military operations with FARDC.

The Secretary-General observed that despite considerable effort invested in the Mixed Technical Commission on Peace and Security, the lack of progress on core issues and increased tensions on the ground risked paralysing the Goma process. There was a need for the parties to take concrete action consistent with the spirit of the Goma conference. While the ceasefire had largely held, recent clashes were a growing source of concern, along with continued recruitment by armed groups. He urged the Governments of the DRC and Rwanda, as well as the international community, to maintain momentum in implementing the Nairobi Communiqué and the provisions of resolution 1804(2008). The outcome of the Kisangani conference had provided an opportunity for diminishing the threat posed by FDLR through peaceful means. An effective FARDC, respectful of human rights and international humanitarian law, was essential for peace and stability throughout the country, and the establishment of a rapid reaction force, as foreseen by the Government, would help to enhance the operational capacity of FARDC in addressing the threat posed by the armed groups. The Secretary-General urged the Government and its international partners to recognize the Nairobi and Goma processes and the establishment of a rapid reaction force as mutually reinforcing actions. He also stated his concern at the growing threat to regional security posed by LRA, which had recently resumed abductions and attacks on civilians along the DRC-Southern Sudan-Central African Republic border areas. While MONUC would continue to work with the Government of the DRC to protect civilians and undertake to contain LRA in the Garamba Park area within the limits of its present capacities, the Mission would require additional capacity if tasked with further support to FARDC, beyond the current activities envisaged to respond to the threat posed by LRA.

Appointment. On 2 September [S/2008/591], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of his intention to appoint Lieutenant General Vicente Diaz de Villegas (Spain) as Force Commander of MONUC to replace Lieutenant General Babacar Gaye (Senegal), whose tour of service was ending on 22 September, of which the Council took note on 3 September [S/2008/592].

Resurgence of violence in eastern DRC

Midway through the year, efforts to stabilize the eastern DRC witnessed significant setbacks. In June, CNDP, together with the Forces républicaines fédéralistes (FRF), withdrew from the Mixed Technical Commission on Peace and Security. CNDP indicated that its demands were not being addressed, including guarantees for the protection of the Tutsi community once CNDP forces had been dismantled; the security of CNDP soldiers going into brassage; and the safe return of refugees from Burundi, Rwanda and Tanzania. Large-scale hostilities between FARDC and CNDP erupted on 28 August. The fighting, which spread throughout North Kivu, exacerbated the humanitarian crisis, displacing over 250,000 people and bringing the number of internally displaced persons in the eastern part of the country to more than 1.35 million. Throughout the fighting from August to November, MONUC, in accordance with its mandate, supported the efforts of FARDC to repel CNDP offensives, and sought to secure major population centres and axes. In the face of the major CNDP offensive, however, FARDC abandoned positions held jointly with MONUC.

In September, seven members of the UN family were killed in the crash of a humanitarian aircraft in South Kivu.

Security Council statement (September). In a press statement of 12 September [SC/9445], the Security Council expressed concern over the fighting between FARDC and armed elements of CNDP as a violation of the Goma Agreements, by which CNDP and other armed groups in North and South Kivu had undertaken to observe a complete and immediate ceasefire; begin the withdrawal of their forces with a view to their brassage or their disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; and abide strictly by the rules of international humanitarian and human rights law. The Council urged CNDP to immediately cease its offensive operations; return to its positions held until 28 August; surrender military equipment taken from FARDC in the fighting; and re-engage constructively in the Goma peace process, including participation in the Mixed Technical Commission. The Council also condemned acts of hostility against MONUC.

Hostilities and ceasefire (September–October).

In September, following CNDP advances around Sake, MONUC supported FARDC in pushing CNDP back to its pre-28 August positions. By mid-October, FARDC succeeded in recapturing Ntamugenga and captured Tongo, which had been in CNDP-controlled territory. At the same time, CNDP launched attacks on FARDC positions along the Goma-Rutshuru axis and captured the military camp of Rumangabo. MONUC applied immediate pressure on both sides, after which FARDC pulled back from Tongo, and CNDP withdrew temporarily from Rumangabo.

On 2 October, CNDP leader Laurent Nkunda called for the “liberation” of the Congo, further heightening anxieties, for which he was condemned by the international community, national actors and the population. Exchanges of fire across the border between Rwanda and the DRC further compounded the crisis in the area.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 October [meeting 5998], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/38 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern at the resurgence of violence in the eastern provinces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and its potential regional implications. It is alarmed by the humanitarian consequences of the recent fighting and urges all parties to immediately respect a ceasefire.

The Council expresses its deep concern over continued threats to the safety of the civilian population and to the conduct of humanitarian operations. The Council strongly condemns the continuing recruitment and use of children by armed groups as well as the continued prevalence of sexual and gender-based violence in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It urges all parties to comply fully with their obligations under international law, including international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law.

The Council reiterates the need to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It once again calls upon all armed groups to immediately lay down their arms and present themselves without any further delay or preconditions to Congolese authorities and the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for their disarmament, repatriation, resettlement and/or reintegration, as appropriate.

The Council reaffirms that the Goma and Nairobi processes constitute the framework within which long-term stability in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo should be pursued. The Council urges all the parties to the Goma and Nairobi agreements to implement their commitments effectively and in good faith. In this respect, the Council strongly condemns the recent declarations by Mr. Laurent Nkunda calling for a national rebellion.

The Council reiterates its strong support for the Mission in helping to restore peace in the Kivus and encourages the Mission to reinforce its action to ensure the protection of civilians. The Council expresses its full support for the disengagement plan elaborated by the Mission and accepted by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and urges all parties to abide by it.

The Council welcomes the intention of the Mission to reconfigure its forces and optimize their deployment so as to enhance its efficiency within the existing mandate and troop ceiling. The Council takes note of the additional capacities for the Mission requested by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council requests the Secretary-General to present a full analysis of the situation and recommendations in his next report to the Council.

The Council urges the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to take effective steps to ensure that there is no cooperation between elements of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda. The Council also calls upon the Governments in the region to cease all support to the armed groups in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council urges the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Government of the Republic of Rwanda to urgently engage in efforts to settle their differences, including by reactivating the Joint Verification Mechanism, and calls upon them to implement fully the Nairobi communiqué of 9 November 2007. The Council encourages the Secretary-General to step up his efforts to facilitate dialogue between Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council strongly condemns the recent attacks by the Lord's Resistance Army, including the abduction by the Lord's Resistance Army of 159 schoolchildren in villages in Orientale Province. The Council recalls the International Criminal Court indictments against members of the Lord's Resistance Army leadership on charges of, among other things, enlistment of children through abduction, as a war crime.

In a major offensive operation that started on 26 October, CNDP recaptured the FARDC camp at Rumangabo and took control of Rugari, Kalengera, Burare, Rutshuru and the main road between Goma and Rutshuru, advancing to within a few kilometres of Goma before declaring a unilateral ceasefire on 29 October. Retreating rogue elements of FARDC, however, caused major insecurity within Goma following the unilateral ceasefire declaration of CNDP. In response, MONUC began to reinforce its military presence in Goma and the surrounding area in order to protect civilians. In view of the near total disintegration of FARDC in the face of advancing CNDP troops, MONUC was the only organized force in Goma and was compelled to step in to substitute for the role of the national security forces.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 6006], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/40 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns the recent offensive by the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and demands that it bring its operations to an end. The Council welcomes the announcement by Mr. Laurent Nkunda of an immediate ceasefire and looks to Mr. Nkunda to ensure its effective and durable implementation, and the re-engagement of the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple in the Goma process. The Council expresses its grave concern about the dramatic humanitarian consequences of the recent fighting. The Council urges all parties to respect fully their obligations under international law to protect civilians, to ensure access to the population in need and to guarantee the safety and security of humanitarian personnel. The Council affirms that any attack against the civilian population, including at major population centres, is totally unacceptable.

The Council urges all the signatories to the Goma and Nairobi processes to implement their commitments effectively and in good faith. In this respect, the Council calls upon the authorities of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to take concrete steps to defuse tensions and to restore stability in the region. The Council strongly supports the efforts of the Secretary-General to facilitate the dialogue between the leaders of the two countries and encourages him to send a special envoy tasked with this mission as soon as possible.

The Council urges the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to take effective steps to ensure that there is no cooperation between elements of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda. The Council also calls upon the Governments of the region to cease all support to the armed groups in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Council expresses its concern at the reports of heavy weapons fire across the Democratic Republic of the Congo-Rwanda border. The Council reiterates its determination to continue to monitor closely the implementation of the arms embargo and other measures as set out in its resolution 1807(2008).

The Council expresses its full support for the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and condemns all attacks, regardless of their perpetrators, launched against the Mission in the past days. The Council calls upon the Mission to continue to implement fully its mandate, in all its aspects, in particular by robust actions to protect civilians at risk and to deter any attempt by any armed group to threaten the political process.

The Council duly notes the reinforcement of the Mission requested by the Secretariat. The Council will study expeditiously that request in view of the developments of the situation on the ground.

Appointments. On 31 October [S/2008/681], in light of events unfolding in the MONUC area and upon the resignation of Lieutenant General Diaz de Villegas, the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to reappoint Lieutenant General Babacar Gaye (Senegal) as Interim Force Commander of MONUC for a period of up to six months, of which the Council took note that same day [S/2008/682].

On 3 November [S/2008/684], to facilitate dialogue between the leaders of the DRC and Rwanda, the Secretary-General informed the Council of his intention to appoint Olusegun Obasanjo (Nigeria) his Special Envoy for the eastern DRC, of which the Council took note on 5 November [S/2008/685].

Continuation of hostilities

The unilateral ceasefire declared by CNDP on 29 October remained in place until 4 November, when the coalition of Congolese Patriotic Resistance (PARECO) and Mayi-Mayi militia launched an attack against CNDP at Kiwanja, north of Rutshuru. CNDP captured Kiwanja after intense fighting on 4 and 5 November. MONUC later conducted a preliminary investigation of the reported killing of civilians during the fighting, and ascertained that a number of people had been killed during the crossfire between CNDP and PARECO/Mayi-Mayi. There were also indications that, following the withdrawal of PARECO/Mayi-Mayi, many more civilians were killed when CNDP took control of Kiwanja.

On 11 November, clashes between CNDP and FARDC occurred in and around Kibati, north of Goma. Also on 11 November, fighting between FARDC and CNDP began further north, in Rutshuru territory, with CNDP forces gaining control of Ndeko and Rwindi. Meanwhile, MONUC itself was directly targeted by retreating FARDC elements in Ntamugenga and Rwindi on 27 and 28 October, and in the Kanyabayonga area on 12 and 13 November.

Together with international partners, the United Nations undertook intensive political efforts to arrest the deterioration of the situation. On 7 November, the Secretary-General travelled to Nairobi to participate in a regional summit on the situation, convened under the auspices of the AU and the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region. In a joint statement adopted on 7 November, summit participants called on all armed groups in North Kivu to observe an immediate ceasefire. On 16 November, the Secretary-General's Special Envoy, Mr Obasanjo, met with Laurent Nkunda, and insisted on the importance of an immediate return to a durable ceasefire, backed by an effective monitoring mechanism. He secured the latter's agreement with respect to the recommendations of the Nairobi joint statement, and his recommitment to the principles of the Goma statements of commitment and the 2007 Nairobi Communiqué. On 18 November, CNDP announced that it was withdrawing its forces from the Kanyabayonga-Nyanzale and Kabasha-Kiwanja axes, where fighting had most recently occurred, and requested MONUC to deploy in those areas.

Reinforcement of MONUC. By a letter of 31 October [S/2008/703], the Secretary-General provided to the Security Council an explanatory note by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations on the additional requirements for MONUC in light of the persistent crisis in the eastern DRC, particularly around the city of Goma, which was deteriorating rapidly, with the humanitarian situation increasingly dire. The additional capacities, which would entail an increase of 2,785 troops in the MONUC authorized military strength and 300 police officers in its formed police unit strength, were intended to give MONUC the quick-response capability that it lacked; adequate mobility to enable it to move troops to any crisis point in a timely manner; the capability to carry out essential engineering work in sensitive areas where civilian engineering contractors could not operate; and necessary surveillance capabilities in terms of equipment and personnel.

By resolution 1843(2008) of 20 November (see below), the Council authorized the increase of troops and police officers until 31 December 2008.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 6018], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1843(2008). The draft [S/2008/716] was submitted by Belgium, Costa Rica, Croatia, France, Italy, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1756(2007) of 15 May 2007 and 1794(2007) of 21 December 2007 and the statement by its President of 29 October 2008,

Expressing its strong support for the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in its efforts to restore peace in the Kivus, and taking note of the letter dated 31 October 2008 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council requesting additional capacities for the Mission in order to ensure the effective implementation of its mandate,

Recalling that, under resolution 1794(2007), the mandate of the Mission expires on 31 December 2008, and looking forward to the report and recommendations of the Secretary-General regarding the mandate and reconfiguration of the Mission,

Reaffirming its commitment to respect the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Reiterating its condemnation of the resurgence of violence in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and demanding that all parties immediately respect a ceasefire,

Welcoming the appointment of the former President of Nigeria, Mr. Olusegun Obasanjo, by the Secretary-General as his Special Envoy for the Great Lakes Region, and calling upon all parties to the conflict to cooperate with him in finding an urgent political solution to the crisis,

Expressing its extreme concern at the deteriorating humanitarian situation and, in particular, the targeted attacks against the civilian population, sexual violence, recruitment of child soldiers and summary executions, and considering that this situation should be addressed as a matter of urgency,

Urging all parties to ensure timely, safe and unhindered access of all humanitarian actors and to comply fully with their obligations under international law, including international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law,

Determining that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to authorize, as recommended by the Secretary-General in his letter dated 31 October 2008 to the President of the Security Council, a temporary increase of the authorized military strength of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo of up to 2,785 military personnel, and the strength of its formed police unit of up to 300 personnel;

2. Authorizes the immediate deployment of those additional capacities until 31 December 2008, and expresses its intention to extend this authorization on the occasion of the renewal of the mandate of the Mission, underlining that the duration of stay of the additional forces will depend on the security situation in the Kivus;

3. Stresses that this temporary increase in personnel aims at enabling the Mission to reinforce its capacity to protect civilians, to reconfigure its structure and forces and to optimize their deployment;

4. Underscores the importance of the Mission implementing its mandate in full, including through robust rules of engagement;

5. Emphasizes that the Mission will be reviewed in view of the recent developments by 31 December 2008;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further developments

The implementation of the 2007 Nairobi Communiqué also stalled in regard to the continued presence of FDLR in the eastern part of the DRC. The repatriation of FDLR elements dropped significantly as a result of the deteriorating situation there. On 17 September, MONUC and FARDC approved a new plan of military operations against FDLR, targeting its sources of revenue, such as road barriers and mines under its control. FARDC earmarked 10 of the 12 battalions trained by MONUC for that operation. With the resumption of hostilities, however, the Government redeployed the 10 battalions for operations against CNDP.

In Ituri there was a resurgence of armed groups, while further north, in Haut Uélé Orientale province, the security situation deteriorated markedly following LRA attacks against civilians. A MONUC investigation in the province revealed that, from 17 September to 4 October, LRA abducted some 177 children and killed an estimated 76 adults. MONUC also provided logistical support, training and planning assistance to FARDC-led operations aimed at containing and isolating LRA in the Garamba Park area.

Communications. By a letter of 8 October [S/2008/641], the DRC transmitted to the Security Council a report of resumption of hostilities on the part of Rwanda. By a 10 October letter [S/2008/644], the DRC transmitted to the Council an information note allegedly proving the presence of Rwandan troops in Rumangabo and a series of photographs allegedly proving Rwanda's involvement in clashes in North Kivu. By a letter of 13 October [S/2008/646], the DRC transmitted to the Council an inventory of objects allegedly abandoned by elements of the Rwandan Defence Forces at the Rumangabo theatre of operations and a series of photographs allegedly proving the involvement of Rwanda. In all instances, the DRC called on the Council to take action.

By a letter of 14 October [S/2008/649], Rwanda brought to the Council's attention a note from Rwanda to the DRC of the same date including a detailed account of collaboration of FARDC and ex-FAR/Interahamwe/FDLR. That collaboration was said to be unacceptable and tantamount to arming and therefore strengthening those genocidal forces, contrary to the letter and spirit of the Lusaka Agreement, the Pretoria Agreement, the Nairobi Communiqué, resolution 1804(2008) and the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region, as well as contrary to the Tripartite Plus arrangements to which both countries subscribed. The letter expressed concern about reported atrocious acts by DRC security agencies in the form of abducting, torturing and even killing innocent Rwandans in the eastern DRC, and demanded that the association with the very forces that were the root cause of instability in the region cease. By a letter of 15 October [S/2008/652], Rwanda requested the Council to condemn alleged FARDC collaboration, co-location, rearmament and combined military operations with ex-FAR/Interahamwe/FDLR, to sanction FARDC commanders and to stop all MONUC support to FARDC until there was a verified end to FARDC/FDLR co-location and collaboration.

By a letter of 4 November [S/2008/686] to the Council, Rwanda brought to its attention a statement on efforts to resolve the crisis in the eastern DRC. The key issue that needed to be dealt with by the international community and that could not be handled by Rwanda and the DRC alone was the continued presence of ex-FAR/Interahamwe/FDLR on Congolese soil. The two Governments had agreed to participate in a regional meeting bringing together all stakeholders to review solutions to the root causes of the crisis; and within that regional framework Rwanda remained committed to contributing to a lasting solution in order to achieve a peaceful and stable region.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In November, in his fourth special report on MONUC to the Security Council [S/2008/728], the Secretary-General set forth major developments since July, most significantly the escalation of violence in the eastern DRC. He also reviewed the implementation of the Mission's mandate pursuant to resolution 1794(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 128], and made recommendations on the configuration of the Mission and the additional resources it required in order to effectively carry out its mandate.

While the security situation remained stable in the DRC apart from the violence in the east, little progress had been achieved in the key peace consolidation tasks, including the delivery of basic services and the extension of State authority. Preparations for local elections continued, but key legislation, without which the necessary preparatory work could not proceed, had yet to be adopted, risking further delays in the conduct of the elections. Despite some improvement in cooperation between MONUC and national authorities on human rights issues, the human rights situation in the DRC remained a cause for concern. FARDC and national police elements had been responsible for many serious human rights violations, including arbitrary executions, rape, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. Congolese and foreign armed groups, in particular CNDP, PARECO, Mayi-Mayi Mongol, FDLR and LRA, had also perpetrated serious human rights abuses with impunity, including mass killings, torture, abductions, the forced recruitment of children, forced displacement, the destruction of camps for internally displaced persons, forced labour and sexual slavery and other forms of sexual violence. The overall humanitarian situation remained fragile, with vital health, nutrition and food security indicators still at emergency thresholds in many parts of the country.

The Secretary-General observed that deficiencies of FARDC and the challenges encountered by an overstretched MONUC attempting to address the renewed hostilities in the Kivus had opened a debate among many stakeholders about the Mission's mandate. After discussing how MONUC deployment and reconfiguration, with units from other sectors reinforcing those in the Kivus, were addressing its capacity constraints, the Secretary-General outlined the additional capabilities that would give MONUC the force reserve and quick-response capacity that it lacked; ensure that it was able to move troops to any crisis point in a timely manner; enable it to carry out essential engineering work in sensitive areas where civilian engineering contractors could not operate; and provide it with the necessary surveillance capabilities in terms of equipment and personnel. Acknowledging that the situation in the eastern part of the DRC would have been far worse without the presence of the Mission and its role in the protection of tens of thousands of civilians, the facilitation of humanitarian assistance and the prevention of major human rights abuses, the Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the MONUC mandate until 31 December 2009.

Extension of MONUC mandate. By resolution 1856(2008) (see below), the Security Council extended the mandate of the Mission until 31 December 2009, while reinforcing its strength and refocusing its mandate. It authorized the continuation until that date of up to 19,815 military personnel, 760 military observers, 391 police personnel and 1,050 personnel of formed police units. MONUC would also have the mandate of protecting civilians, humanitarian personnel and UN personnel and facilities; disarming, demobilizing and monitoring resources of foreign and Congolese armed groups; training and mentoring FARDC in support of security sector reform; helping to secure the territory of the DRC; and supporting the strengthening of democratic institutions and the rule of law.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 6055], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1856(2008). The draft [S/2008/800] was submitted by Belgium, France and the United Kingdom.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular resolutions 1794(2007) of 21 December 2007 and 1843(2008) of 20 November 2008 and the statements by its President of 21 October 2008 and 29 October 2008,

Reaffirming its commitment to the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Stressing the primary responsibility of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for ensuring security in its territory and protecting its civilians with respect for the rule of law, human rights and international humanitarian law,

Condemning the repeated offensive military actions by the Congrès national pour la défense du peuple in the past months, which have caused massive displacement of populations in North Kivu as well as cross-border movements of refugees and which have also involved the Coalition des patriotes résistants congolais and other illegal armed groups, and condemning also the attacks by the Lord's Resistance Army in Orientale Province, as well as the resumption of hostilities by illegal armed groups in Ituri,

Underlining that a major obstacle to lasting peace in the Kivus is the presence and activities of illegal armed groups on Congolese territory, including the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda, as acknowledged in its resolution 1804(2008) of 13 March 2008, which represent one of the primary causes for the conflict in the region,

Taking note of the final declaration of the Nairobi summit organized on 7 November 2008 by President Mwai Kibaki, acting Chairman of the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region, and President Jakaya Kikwete, President-in-office of the African Union, and the communiqué of the extraordinary summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Southern African Development Community, held in Sandton, South Africa, on 9 November 2008, welcoming the appointment of facilitators, including the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the Great Lakes Region, the former President of Nigeria, Mr. Olusegun Obasanjo, and the former President of the United Republic of Tanzania, Mr. Benjamin Mkapa, inviting these facilitators to keep the Security Council informed of their activities, and encouraging the countries of the region to maintain this high level of commitment on the crisis in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and to act to assist efforts to resolve the conflict,

Recalling the joint communiqué of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Government of the Republic of Rwanda signed at Nairobi on 9 November 2007 and the Acte d'engagement which emerged from the Conference on Peace, Security and Development in North and South Kivu, held in Goma from 6 to 23 January 2008, and reaffirming that the Goma and Nairobi processes are the appropriate framework for stabilizing the situation in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Emphasizing the responsibility of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Governments of the region to prevent the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo imposed by Council resolution 1807(2008) of 31 March 2008 or in support of activities of armed groups present in the region in accordance with the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region, urging them to take effective measures to prevent cross-border support to any illegal armed group in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and welcoming the progress made in high-level bilateral talks between the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda,

Recalling the importance of urgently carrying out comprehensive and lasting security sector reform and of permanently disarming, demobilizing, resettling or repatriating, as appropriate, and reintegrating Congolese and foreign armed groups for the long-term stabilization of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and the contribution made by international partners in this field,

Recognizing the link between the illegal exploitation of natural resources, the illicit trade in such resources and the proliferation of and trafficking in arms as one of the ma-

major factors fuelling and exacerbating conflicts in the Great Lakes region of Africa, and in particular in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Expressing its extreme concern at the deteriorating humanitarian and human rights situation, condemning in particular the targeted attacks against the civilian population, sexual violence, recruitment of child soldiers and summary executions, stressing the urgent need for the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in cooperation with the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and other relevant actors, to end those violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, in particular those carried out by the militias and armed groups and by elements of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Congolese National Police and other security and intelligence services, and to bring the perpetrators, as well as the senior commanders under whom they serve, to justice, and calling upon Member States to assist in this regard and to continue to provide medical, humanitarian and other assistance to victims,

Recalling its resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 and 1820(2008) of 19 June 2008 on women and peace and security, its resolution 1502(2003) of 26 August 2003 on the protection of United Nations personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, its resolution 1674(2006) of 28 April 2006 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict and its resolution 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 on children and armed conflict, and recalling the conclusions of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict pertaining to parties to the armed conflict of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Condemning the continuing illicit flow of weapons within and into the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and declaring its determination to continue to monitor closely the implementation of the arms embargo and other measures set out in its resolution 1807(2008),

Underscoring the long-term, sustainable efforts needed from the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and its international partners to consolidate democracy and promote the rule of law, good governance, recovery and development,

Expressing its full support for the Mission, condemning all attacks against United Nations peacekeepers and humanitarian personnel, regardless of the perpetrators, and emphasizing that those responsible for such attacks must be brought to justice,

Recognizing that the temporary increase of the capacities of the Mission authorized by its resolution 1843(2008) aims at enabling the Mission to reorganize and, in particular, reconfigure its structure and forces and optimize their deployment, allowing the constitution of a quick-reaction capability to provide greater flexibility to deploy as needed to strengthen efforts to protect civilians and provide additional security in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Recognizing that effective coordination between the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Mission on security matters in the areas of conflict, as well as the accelerated building of credible, cohesive and disciplined Congolese armed forces, is essential for the implementation of the mandate of the Mission,

Taking note of the fourth special report of the Secretary-General on the Mission, of 21 November 2008, and of the recommendations contained therein,

Determining that the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continues to pose a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to extend the deployment of the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo until 31 December 2009, and authorizes the continuation until that date of up to 19,815 military personnel, 760 military observers, 391 police personnel and 1,050 personnel of formed police units;

3. Decides that the Mission shall, from the adoption of the present resolution, have the following mandate, in this order of priority, working in close cooperation with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo:

8. Underscores the importance of the Mission implementing the mandate described in the present resolution in full, including through robust rules of engagement, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the concept of operations and rules of engagement of the Mission are updated by 31 January 2009 to bring them fully in line with the provisions of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council and troop-contributing countries;

20. Urges all Governments in the region, in particular those of Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda and Uganda, to resolve in a constructive manner their shared security and border problems, to prevent the use of their respective territories in support of violations of the arms embargo reaffirmed by resolution 1807(2008) or in support of activities of armed groups present in the region, and to abide by their commitments to establish bilateral diplomatic relations made at the meeting of the Tripartite Plus Joint Commission of September 2007;

21. Urges all States, especially those in the region, to take appropriate steps to end the illicit trade in natural resources, including, if necessary, through judicial means, and, where necessary, to report to the Council, encourages, in particular, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to work with specialist organizations, international financial institutions and the Mission, as well as the countries of the region, to establish a plan for an effective and transparent control over the exploitation of natural resources, including by conducting a mapping exercise of the main sites of illegal exploitation;

22. Requests the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, with the support of the international community and the Mission, to develop and implement as a matter of urgency a comprehensive national security sector reform strategy, including based on the outcome of the round table on the security sector, held in February 2008, in order to establish professional security organizations in the areas of defence, police and the administration of justice that protect civilians, are well managed, and act in accordance with the Constitution and with respect for the rule of law, human rights and international humanitarian law, urges the Government to ensure the sustainability of the support given by its partners in this area, in particular by giving priority to the reform of the administration and command structures of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and all its other security forces, and reiterates its call upon the Congolese authorities to establish a vetting mechanism to take into account, when they select candidates for official positions, including key posts in the armed forces, national police and other security services, the past actions of the candidates in terms of respect for international humanitarian law and human rights;

23. Demands that all parties ensure timely, safe and unhindered access of all humanitarian actors and comply fully with their obligations under international law, including international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law;

24. Demands also, recalling its resolution 1698(2006) of 31 July 2006, that all armed groups, in particular the forces of Mr. Laurent Nkunda, the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda and the Lord's Resistance Army immediately stop recruiting and using children and release all children associated with them;

26. Requests the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative, to continue to coordinate all the activities of the United Nations system in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

27. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. By a letter of 10 November [S/2008/701], the DRC transmitted to the Security Council statistics on the repatriation of Rwandan refugees to North Kivu for 2008 and a record of repatriation of Rwandan refugees to North Kivu from January 1999 to November 2008. By a letter of 20 November [S/2008/724], the DRC transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Council an inquiry concerning relieving General Karake Karenzi, commander of the Rwandan contingent operating under the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), of his duties. The DRC held him responsible for the massacres perpetrated in Manono, Katanga Province, in 1999, and for the clashes in the town of Kisangani, Eastern Province, in 2000.

Year-end developments. In a later report [S/2009/160], the Secretary-General noted that developments in the eastern part of the DRC and the Great Lakes region had significantly reshaped the political and military landscape in North Kivu. Although the situation remained fragile, concerted actions by the Government of the DRC and neighbouring countries had presented opportunities for effectively addressing the issue of armed groups, one of the main causes of conflict in the eastern part of the country. On 5 December, at the conclusion of the third meeting of the "Four plus Four" Commission—a bilateral mechanism established in October by the DRC and Rwanda aimed at normalizing their relations—the two countries announced their agreement on a joint military plan to address the continued presence of FDLR in the eastern part of the DRC. They also pledged to take concrete steps towards the restoration of full-fledged mutual diplomatic relations.

On 14 December, FARDC, the Ugandan armed forces and the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) launched a joint operation in Haut Uélé against LRA. Ugandan and Congolese officials announced that the operation was effective in destroying several LRA bases, cutting off food and ammunition supplies and disrupting the movement's command-and-control structure. In Ituri, the situation remained volatile in November, with the launch of several attacks against FARDC by FRPI in Irumu territory. In December, however, FARDC, supported by MONUC, was able to re-occupy some of the villages that had been captured by FRPI.

Following the Extraordinary Summit of the leaders of the Great Lakes region (Nairobi, 7 November), at which it was agreed that the Special Envoy for the Great Lakes Region and his co-facilitator would focus on a comprehensive peace in the eastern part of the DRC and the root causes of the conflict (see p. 119), the co-facilitation launched, on 8 December, a dialogue between the Government and CNDP in Nairobi that served as a confidence-building mechanism between the parties.

Children and armed conflict

In November, as requested by resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report [S/2008/693] on children and armed conflict in the DRC, conveying progress in ending the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations being committed against war-affected children. Covering major developments since the previous report [YUN 2007, p. 130], the report noted a decrease in the number of allegations of grave violations against children, but indicated that children were still the primary victims of the ongoing conflict in affected areas. Recruitment and use of children by armed forces and groups continued, particularly in connection with outbreaks of hostilities. The report also raised concerns about the re-recruitment of children, due in part to insufficient support from earlier disarmament, demobilization and reintegration processes.

Widespread incidents of rape and other sexual violence against girls and boys remained a concern. Both State and non-State parties were responsible for violations. There had been some progress in implementing a national action plan on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of children, as well as follow-up and a programmatic response to the most grave violations—killing or maiming children; recruiting or using child soldiers; attacks against schools or hospitals; rape or other grave sexual violence against children; abducting children; and denying humanitarian access for children. The Government was committed to addressing impunity for violations against children, as demonstrated by the prosecutions of perpetrators by military and civil judicial mechanisms. The Secretary-General urged all parties to implement the recommendations of his previous reports along with the conclusions and recommendations of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict [YUN 2006, p. 920; YUN 2007, pp. 131, 790].

In December, the Working Group established by resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863] submitted its conclusions on children and armed conflict in the DRC [S/AC.51/2009/3], which contained the Group's exchange of views on the Secretary-General's report. The Group recommended that the Council urge the Government to ensure that the integration of forces from CNDP, the Mayi-Mayi militias and other armed groups into FARDC did not lead to any new recruitment and use of children in FARDC, and that it was used as an opportunity to obtain the release of all children associated with those armed groups; and to adopt and implement a comprehensive national strategy to prevent, respond to and combat sexual violence. The Group also agreed that letters should be addressed to the World Bank and donors requesting funding to support reintegration activities for child soldiers; prioritizing the situation of girls; and urging support for the Government in implementing a comprehensive national strategy to prevent, respond to and combat sexual violence.

Arms embargo

The Security Council Committee on the DRC, established pursuant to resolution 1533(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 137] to review and monitor the arms embargo on armed groups imposed by resolution 1493(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 130], reported [S/2008/832] on its activities from 1 January to 31 December 2008, during which it held six informal consultations. In February, by resolution 1799(2008) (see p. 136), the Council extended the arms embargo and related sanctions until 31 March 2008. Pursuant to resolution 1807(2008) (ibid.), by which the Council in March extended the arms embargo and related sanctions until 31 December 2008, the Committee received seven notifications from States in advance of the shipment of arms or related materiel for the DRC, or the provision of assistance, advice or training related to military activities in the DRC.

Group of Experts

The Group of Experts on the DRC, established pursuant to Security Council resolution 1533(2004) to gather and analyse information on the flow of arms and related materiel, as well as arms networks, in violation of the measures imposed by paragraph 20 of resolution 1493(2003), submitted three reports during the year [S/2008/43, S/2008/772, S/2008/773].

As requested by resolution 1799(2008) (see p. 136) and resolution 1807(2008) (ibid.), respectively, the Secretary-General, on 20 February [S/2008/120], re-appointed the Group of Experts for a period expiring on 31 March; while on 9 May [S/2008/312], he appointed five new experts to constitute the Group for a period ending on 31 December 2008, replacing two of those with new appointments on 6 August [S/2008/526].

Report of Group of Experts (February). In February [S/2008/43], the Security Council Committee on the DRC submitted to the Council the final report of the Group of Experts, as requested in resolution 1771(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 133]. The report presented two case studies concerning the illegal armed groups that posed the most serious threat to peace and security in the eastern DRC—the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda-Forces combattantes abacunguzi (FDLR-FOCA) and the military wing of CNDP, respectively. At issue were their leadership structure, arms supplies, cross-border recruitment, financing, and recruitment and use of children, as well as associated illegal armed groups. In addition, the report conveyed the results of investigations concerning potential violations of the arms embargo by the Government of the DRC and UN Member States. It discussed the monitoring of targeted travel and financial sanctions imposed against individuals and entities.

It also outlined the role of the exploitation of natural resources in the financing of illegal armed groups.

The Group recommended that the Security Council Committee inform the Group and MONUC of notifications that the Committee received pursuant to paragraph 4 of Security Council resolution 1771(2007) concerning the supplies of arms and related materiel for the DRC as well as technical training and assistance; that the Committee request the Government of the DRC to enhance the arms embargo monitoring capacity of MONUC by notifying MONUC of all incoming shipments of military supplies in a timely fashion; and that the Security Council request the Government and its international cooperation partners to reactivate an effective process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of members of illegal armed groups. It also recommended that the Committee encourage the Government of the DRC and its international cooperation partners to establish sufficient customs storage facilities and equip its customs administration and law-enforcement institutions with appropriate operational equipment; encourage the Governments of the DRC and neighbouring States to establish closer cooperation among their respective customs authorities with a view to improving implementation of the arms embargo and targeted travel and finance measures; request the Governments of the DRC and regional States to prevent cross-border recruitment of child soldiers; request child protection organizations in the Great Lakes region to strengthen their cooperation in the field to prevent cross-border recruitment of child soldiers; request Member States to circulate to their relevant authorities the list of individuals and entities subject to targeted sanctions; and request Member States to ensure that individuals and entities under their jurisdiction that purchased minerals and precious stones from districts in the DRC with a strong rebel presence conduct due diligence to ensure that their purchases did not profit illegal armed groups.

23. Decides also to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Group of Experts (July). In August [S/2008/772], the Security Council Committee on the DRC submitted to the Council the interim (July) report of the Group of Experts, as requested in resolution 1807(2008). The report presented two case studies concerning FDLR-FOCA and CNDP, respectively. It focused on their military support and recruitment, along with their financing. The report also addressed other armed groups and their recruitment of children; human rights violations involving the targeting of children and women; natural resources and the financing of illegal armed groups; flights into the DRC carrying weapons; and the monitoring of targeted sanctions against listed individuals and entities. The Group expressed its concern that if sufficient safeguards were not put in place, funding from the Amani programme could be used for recruitment and weapons purchases.

FARDC remained one of the main suppliers of weapons and ammunition to armed groups in the region, and numerous sources had informed the Group of arms transfers from FARDC to illegal armed groups. It had received numerous reports indicating that problems with the national demobilization process had allowed militia to re-recruit and rearm demobilized combatants. The Group believed that reforms were needed in both taxation and in the revenue-collecting bodies active along the borders, since prohibitive taxes and tariffs, combined with weak State institutions, had driven a large part of all trade—both inside and outside the DRC—underground, generating large amounts of bribes for administrative officials at all border posts in the country. The Group recommended that greater accountability by the Government for arms storage be incorporated into security sector reform; that customs posts be electronically linked and that the Government boost the structure of its Office de gestion du fret maritime, which registered customs declarations in Mombasa, Kenya, for goods being imported to or exported from the DRC; and that dry ports in Bunagana as well as Ishasha and Kasindi—other important customs posts in North Kivu—be completed. The Group was working with MONUC to raise awareness of its monitoring mandate with respect to the arms embargo, and to obtain documents from Member States regarding bank transfers, phone records and arms exports.

Report of Group of Experts (November). In December [S/2008/773], the Security Council Committee on the DRC submitted to the Council the final (November) report of the Group of Experts, as requested in resolution 1807(2008). The report continued with its case-study approach, focusing on the North and South Kivu provinces, in analysing CNDP with regard to its political support, financing, military support and recruitment, Bunagana border post control, individual financiers, exploitation of natural resources, and support by the Government of Rwanda; and on FDLR-FOCA with regard to its political leadership in Europe, financing through natural resources and collaboration with FARDC. The report also discussed other armed groups; the role of natural resources in contributing to the financing of illegal armed groups; arms supply to non-governmental armed groups; civil aviation and logistics; the recruitment and use of children by armed groups; serious violations of international law targeting women and children; and compliance with the sanctions regime.

Among its recommendations, the Group proposed that the Sanctions Committee enforce compliance with the arms embargo by writing officially to Member States that had not responded to the requests and questions of the Group, and note their compliance status; consider political leadership in non-governmental armed groups as inherent support to those groups; request the authorities of the DRC to issue clear directives to its troops that collaboration and cohabitation with FDLR and PARECO were prohibited; and remind the Government of Rwanda of its obligations under the Nairobi Communiqué to prevent any form of support to CNDP and the entry into and exit from its territory and that of its members. The Group also recommended that the Security Council clarify the role that MONUC should play with regard to collecting information on the support of armed groups. Further, it proposed that the Committee encourage the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to provide clear guidance to the civilian staff and contingents of MONUC on their obligations regarding the arms embargo; request the Government of the DRC to promote stockpile security, accountability and management of arms and ammunition; and request MONUC to improve its database of small arms and light weapons. The Group further recommended that the Security Council consider requesting MONUC to establish border-monitoring teams, in particular at the Bunagana and Kasindi border crossings. It also proposed that the Committee address a letter to the Government of the DRC requesting the full implementation of child protection verification procedures; encourage MONUC and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) to increase coordination among child protection partners, with a view to creating a unified database on demobilized children; call on MONUC to share information with the Group on child recruitment and the targeting of women and children in situations of armed conflict; call on Member States to work with local and international NGOs to develop a map of mineral-rich zones and armed groups in order to create awareness and remove uncertainty among commercial entities with respect to the origin of minerals purchased from areas controlled by armed groups; urge Member States to ensure that exporters and consumers of Congolese mineral products under their jurisdiction conducted due diligence on their suppliers regarding the origin of their products; and request the DRC to take concrete steps towards improving the safety and security of its airspace.

In response to the report, the Security Council extended the arms embargo and related sanctions until 30 November 2009.

Communication. By a letter of 15 December [S/2008/791] to the Security Council, Rwanda responded to allegations contained in the final report of the Group of Experts [S/2008/773] concerning the Government's support of CNDP.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

MONUC

The United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC), established by Security Council resolution 1279(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 92], continued to discharge its mandate, as enhanced by Council resolutions 1565(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 129], 1756(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 119] and 1856(2008) (p. 130). MONUC, headquartered in the DRC capital, Kinshasa, was headed by Alan Doss (United Kingdom), the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the DRC.

Sexual exploitation and abuse. In the context of its peace operations oversight activities during the year, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) [A/63/302 (Part II)] substantiated reports that four members of a national contingent in MONUC sexually exploited and abused local minors and young women, and that one contingent member had assaulted a civilian. Oros found that the contingent commander had failed to exercise appropriate command and control responsibilities, which directly contributed to the sexual exploitation and abuse. While Oros could not substantiate misconduct reports against 29 contingent members, it recommended that the concerned troop-contributing country further investigate reports against 32 other contingent members. Following the recommendations of Oros, the Department of Field Support referred the case to the concerned troop-contributing country for appropriate action.

Financing

In June, the General Assembly considered the performance report [A/62/737] on the MONUC budget for the period 1 July 2006–30 June 2007, which showed expenditures of $1,085,127,900 against an appropriation of $1,091,242,800, leaving an unencumbered balance of $6,114,900. The Assembly also had before it the proposed budget [A/62/755] for MONUC for the period 1 July 2008–30 June 2009, amounting to $1,191,372,300. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended [A/62/781/Add.8] that the unencumbered balance of $6,114,900, as well as other income and adjustments of $55,462,400 for the period 2006–2007, be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the Assembly. ACABQ further recommended a reduction of $3,695,900 in the proposed 2008–2009 budget, with an appropriation of $1,187,676,400 for that period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/62/869], adopted resolution 62/256 without vote [agenda item 144].

Burundi

In 2008, Burundi continued to face serious peace and security challenges, primarily emanating from the stalled implementation of the 2006 Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement, enduring mistrust among political actors, increased restrictions on public liberties, slow progress in fighting impunity, persistent human rights violations, insecurity and high levels of poverty. The end of the year, however, brought a significant breakthrough in the peace process, when, at a Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Great Lakes Region (Bujumbura, Burundi, 4 December), the Government of Burundi, the rebel Party for the Liberation of the Hutu People-Forces nationales de Libération (Palipehutu-FNL) and attending Heads of State signed a Declaration calling for the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Palipehutu-FNL and the political integration of its leadership. The United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB) continued to support the country in efforts to achieve sustainable peace.

Political and security situation

The overall political, security and humanitarian situation in Burundi deteriorated significantly in the first months of the year. Large-scale hostilities resumed in April between the national security forces and Palipehutu-FNL, while renewed friction between political parties led to another political crisis, paralysing the work of Parliament and the broad-based Government appointed in November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 141]. Additional causes for concern included population displacements as a consequence of the hostilities; continued widespread violations of human rights perpetrated by the national security forces; lack of progress on transitional justice; and potential food insecurity.

Steps towards ending the stalemate in the peace process initially gained momentum early in the year, as the South African Facilitator convened a meeting (Cape Town, South Africa, 22–23 February) of regional and international bilateral and multilateral stakeholders to discuss the Burundi peace process. The meeting agreed on a common approach to support the conclusion of the peace process, based on a road map of sequenced steps: the Programme of Action to Take Further the Peace Process in Burundi. The Programme of Action envisaged the implementation of the 2006 Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 153] and the conclusion of the peace process by the end of 2008. The first phase entailed the conclusion of disarmament and demobilization following the return of FNL by 1 April to the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism established to implement the Agreement [ibid., p. 148], and the return of the FNL leadership to Burundi by 1 May. The second phase envisaged the integration of FNL members into national institutions as well as their socio-economic reintegration at the community level.

The Programme of Action was endorsed by the Government of Burundi late in February and by FNL on 1 March. On 16 March, the FNL leadership, Government representatives and the Political Directorate (comprising the Executive Representative of the Secretary-General for Burundi, representatives of the Facilitation and the Regional Peace Initiative, representatives of the AU and the EU, and the Ambassadors of South Africa and the United Republic of Tanzania to Burundi) met and reaffirmed their commitment to the implementation of the Agreement of Principles of June 2006 and the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. Following technical negotiations, an agreement was concluded by FNL and the AU on 17 March outlining the security and logistical arrangements to be provided by the AU Special Task Force in Burundi to returning FNL members. FNL did not, however, return to the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism on 1 April as stipulated in the Programme of Action, arguing that the existing legal framework granting its members provisional immunity was not sufficient and that a new law, to be adopted by Parliament, was required as a precondition for their return. Public assurances given by the President on 11 March and at meetings with the Political Directorate, to the effect that the law and decree were still valid, did not convince FNL leaders.

On 17 April, FNL issued a communiqué stating that it reserved the right to defend itself should the Government attack its positions. Fighting broke out on the same day, as FNL reportedly carried out attacks on positions of the Forces de défense nationale in the capital. Subsequent aerial bombings conducted by the national defence forces reportedly destroyed FNL bases north of Bujumbura and repelled further attacks on the capital. FNL rejected responsibility for the violence, blaming the Government for the attacks and underlining its commitment to the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. The Government considered the attacks a deliberate breach of the ceasefire, and on 18 April issued a communiqué accusing FNL of using the question of provisional immunity as a pretext for thwarting the peace process. National actors and international stakeholders expressed concern over unconfirmed reports that FNL was receiving support from the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda (FDLR).

Even before the resumption of hostilities, the security situation had progressively deteriorated, with Bujumbura particularly affected by increased banditry. The political consensus that had led to the formation of a broad-based Government in November 2007 faced numerous challenges. Those included contestations by the Front pour la démocratie au Burundi (FRODEBU) of the distribution of responsibilities among the members of the new Government and the exclusion of several party members by the ruling party, the Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie-Forces pour la défense de la démocratie (CNDD-FDD). On 8 March, simultaneous grenade attacks targeted the residences of four signatories of an open letter, including the recently excluded former First Vice-President of the National Assembly, who had requested of the Secretary-General political and security assistance in light of what they had perceived to be credible threats to their lives from alleged militias established by the national security services. The work of the National Assembly remained paralysed throughout the parliamentary session that concluded on 30 April.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 April [meeting 5876], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/10 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its serious concern at the recent confrontations between the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération and the National Defence Forces of Burundi, following attacks by the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération, and the resulting loss of lives.

The Council condemns the use of violence, and again calls upon the two parties to scrupulously respect the ceasefire concluded on 7 September 2006. It urges the Parti pour la libération du peuple hutu-Forces nationales de libération to return immediately and without preconditions to the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism and calls upon both parties to resume their dialogue to overcome the obstacles that hinder the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement and delay the conclusion of the peace process in Burundi.

The Council reiterates its support for the Regional Peace Initiative on Burundi, the South African Facilitation and other partners of Burundi, and encourages them to sustain their commitment to bring the parties to overcome the current crisis and implement the Programme of Action to Take Further the Peace Process in Burundi, adopted at the meeting held in Cape Town, South Africa, on 22 and 23 February 2008. It supports a proactive role of the Political Directorate in that regard.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to play a robust political role in support of the peace process and to keep the Council closely informed of developments in Burundi, including in the context of his reports to the Council on the United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi.

The Council stresses that any attempt to jeopardize peace in Burundi through violent means is unacceptable, and expresses its intention to consider possible additional measures, as appropriate, in support of peace and stability in Burundi.

On 6 May, in a letter to the Tanzanian Foreign Minister, FNL indicated its intention to return to the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism and the Political Directorate within 10 days. FNL also requested protection from Tanzanian troops that were part of the African Union Special Task Force upon their return to Burundi.

Report of Secretary-General (May). In his third report on BINUB [S/2008/330], submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1791(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 142], the Secretary-General reviewed developments since his last report [ibid., p. 140]. He summarized peace consolidation challenges, including efforts to enhance democratic governance despite the deterioration in the political and security situation; tensions between the Government and the media; security sector reform and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; lack of progress in implementing civilian disarmament; the human rights situation, including escalating violations committed by the police and new cases of torture and summary executions attributed to the national intelligence services, as well as widespread sexual violence against women and children; justice sector reform; transitional justice mechanisms; grave violations of children's rights; and structural poverty and stagnating development standards.

The Secretary-General observed that unless the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement was put back on track, the new cycle of violence could undo all the gains since the signing of the Arusha Agreement in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 143]. The resumed fighting and the ongoing political instability were raising concerns among national and international stakeholders about possible spillover into neighbouring countries. The Secretary-General stated that in the event of further delays in the implementation of the Programme of Action, the Security Council should consider taking additional measures in consultation with the Regional Peace Initiative, the AU and other regional mechanisms. As a precautionary measure, and in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 1719(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 153], he had requested BINUB and MONUC to undertake contingency planning should the situation deteriorate further. Considering that the Tripartite Steering Committee for National Consultations on Transitional Justice Mechanisms was facing internal difficulties, particularly the Burundian members' non-compliance with the framework agreement governing its work—another cause for concern—and that corrective actions were needed to permit the Committee to credibly implement its mandate, the Secretary-General intended to revert shortly to the Security Council with a separate report on the implementation of resolution 1606(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 207].

Security Council press statement. Following a 22 May briefing [meeting 5897] on the situation in Burundi by the Executive Representative of the Secretary-General, Youssef Mahmoud, the Security Council reiterated [SC/9339-AFR/1703] its concern at the confrontation between Palipehutu-FNL and the national defence forces, following attacks by FNL in violation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. It stressed the need for a cessation of hostilities and urged the parties to implement fully the Agreement. The Council noted with satisfaction that an FNL delegation had returned to Bujumbura and that the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism had resumed its work. It expressed support and encouragement for the efforts of the Political Directorate of the Facilitator, and of the regional initiative to back the peace process, but emphasized its concern at the political tension and the paralysis of the National Assembly. The Council called on all political parties to find a solution to the impasse and return to the spirit of reconciliation and dialogue that had led to a successful transition. It urged the Government to fulfil its commitment to protect all Burundians, regardless of their political affiliation, and to prevent impunity for perpetrators of violence and violations of human rights, while adhering to the rule of law.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his fourth report on BINUB [S/2008/745], the Secretary-General said that the Political Directorate and the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism convened on 19 May in Bujumbura. Although the Government and Palipehutu-FNL issued a joint declaration on 26 May, in which they agreed to put an end to the hostilities that had erupted in April, the peace process drifted towards a deepening stalemate.

On 2 June, Government and Palipehutu-FNL delegates to the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism adopted a joint operational plan outlining the demobilization and integration calendar for Palipehutu-FNL combatants. Also in June, the Political Directorate, including representatives of the Government and Palipehutu-FNL, met with the Group of Special Envoys for Burundi in Magaliesberg. The parties and the Group issued the Magaliesberg Communiqué, in which the Government and Palipehutu-FNL reaffirmed their commitment to seek common and comprehensive solutions to the impediments that had stymied past efforts towards the implementation of the peace process. By 21 July, about 2,100 Palipehutu-FNL elements had arrived at the first assembly area, in Rugazi commune, Bubanza Province; however, the Government publicly deplored the extremely low ratio of weapons to combatants and the absence of a list verifying the 21,000 combatants that Palipehutu-FNL claimed to have. Controversy ensued after Palipehutu-FNL Chairman Agathon Rwasa—who had returned to Burundi at the end of May—made public his letter of 27 July addressed to the South African Facilitator requesting that approximately half of all senior civilian and military positions in Government institutions be allocated to Palipehutu-FNL.

On 18 August, President Nkurunziza and Palipehutu-FNL Chairman Rwasa met in the presence of the Facilitator of the Burundi Peace Process, South African Minister of Defence Charles Nqakula, and committed to biweekly closed-door meetings. On 18 and 19 August, however, the President issued two decrees, establishing a commission to examine the combatant status of the alleged Palipehutu-FNL dissidents at Randa and Buramata communes, Bubanza Province, and officially recognizing them as Palipehutu-FNL deserters. That prompted Palipehutu-FNL, which had disowned the group, to publicly accuse the Government of sabotaging the peace process. Meanwhile, Chairman Rwasa sent a letter to the President on 26 August accusing the ruling party, CNDD-FDD, of assassination plots against himself and other senior Palipehutu-FNL leaders.

Despite those tensions, the Palipehutu-FNL Chairman met the President in Ngozi on 29 August, accompanied by the Facilitator and the Political Directorate. Their meeting resulted in the Ngozi Declaration, in which the responsibility of both leaders in resolving outstanding issues was clarified. Three issues were judged as potentially inconsistent with the Constitution, and the help of the Political Directorate was sought: recognition of Palipehutu-FNL as a political party under its current name; participation of Palipehutu-FNL as a parliamentary observer; and accommodation of Palipehutu-FNL members in the executive branch of the Government.

On 17 September, the Palipehutu-FNL Chairman submitted a memorandum to the Political Directorate stating that his movement would not comply with demobilization requirements prior to being registered as a political party under its current name. He proposed to exempt Palipehutu-FNL from having to comply with the Constitution regarding its name until after the 2010 elections, at which time a constitutional reform might be undertaken that would allow it to maintain its name. Separate Political Directorate meetings with President Nkurunziza and Chairman Rwasa on 26 September confirmed that the leaders remained deadlocked on the issues of political accommodation and military integration. No progress was made despite messages from the Regional Peace Initiative conveyed to President Nkurunziza and Chairman Rwasa on 6 November that the 31 December deadline for completing the implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement would have to be observed; the Government would have to accommodate Palipehutu-FNL in national institutions in conformity with the law; Palipehutu-FNL should spare no effort to send its combatants to assembly areas for the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process; and Palipehutu-FNL would have to forgo the ethnic connotation in its name. In a disturbing development, reports of both Palipehutu-FNL and Government defence forces taking up new military positions were confirmed, contributing to public fears in western provinces about possible renewed armed clashes.

In other political developments, the paralysis affecting the work of the executive and legislative branches of Government over the previous year ended with the exclusion of 22 dissenting CNDD-FDD parliamentarians from the National Assembly, as the Constitutional Court ruled on 6 June that the continued presence in Parliament of those parliamentarians was unconstitutional because they no longer represented any elected political group or party. Their replacement by parliamentarians loyal to CNDD-FDD re-established the ruling party's simple majority. As a result, legislative activities resumed and an unprecedented number of laws were adopted, although the political opposition and some international observers questioned the Constitutional Court's ruling, and raised questions about the independence of the judiciary.

On 18 June, President Nkurunziza established by decree the Permanent National Independent Electoral Commission, which was welcomed by the country's political actors who, however, deplored the lack of consultation. The second parliamentary plenary session, which took place from June to August, was productive, adopting 20 laws, including two related directly to peace consolidation: the laws on the establishment of the National Security Council and the National Council on Unity and Reconciliation. In July, however, two of the 22 former CNDD-FDD parliamentarians who had been removed from their seats were arrested for allegedly threatening State security; a third was arrested in October on charges of assaulting a magistrate. On 6 October, the Ministry of the Interior issued an order regulating meetings and demonstrations of political parties and other associations. Between August and November, a number of members of the political opposition were arrested, along with several civil society and media representatives.

The Secretary-General urged the Government and Palipehutu-FNL to spare no efforts in making the necessary difficult compromises on issues that had hindered the implementation of the Agreement; called on both parties to heed the recent messages of the leaders of the Regional Peace Initiative; and urged Palipehutu-FNL to release the children associated with the movement immediately and unconditionally. Expressing concern about the increasing number of arrests of members of the political opposition and representatives of civil society and the media, the Secretary-General urged the authorities to respect the right to freedom of expression and assembly enshrined in the Constitution; and called on the authorities to allow peaceful assemblies, to desist from detaining persons for expressing their beliefs or opinions, and to guarantee due process and fair judicial review for all detainees. Finally, he recommended that the Security Council extend BINUB's mandate for an additional 12-month period following the expiration of its current mandate on 31 December 2008, while stressing that in light of the evolving situation on the ground, it would be important for the Council to conduct a review of the mandate by June 2009. By resolution 1858(2008), the Council followed this recommendation (see below).

Year-end developments. A later report [S/2009/270] of the Secretary-General covered significant breakthroughs in the peace process towards the end of the year. At the Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Great Lakes Region (Bujumbura, Burundi, 4 December), the Government of Burundi, Palipehutu-FNL and attending Heads of State signed a Declaration in which Palipehutu-FNL agreed to consult its membership, by 31 December, on changing the movement's name in compliance with Burundian law. The Declaration also called for the commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Palipehutu-FNL and the political integration of its leadership. The President of Burundi, who committed himself to reserving 33 civil service posts for senior members of the movement, also reiterated his commitment to release FNL prisoners.

The Presidency requested the Palipehutu-FNL Chairman to submit by 24 December a list of members of the movement to be considered for the proposed posts, although Palipehutu-FNL maintained that the Government should first consult it on the level of those posts. On 12 December, the President issued a decree outlining the mandate and organization of the Electoral Commission that superseded the initial decree issued in June. The new decree introduced measures significantly increasing the prerogatives of the Executive over the Commission.

Despite the repeal in November of the order by the Minister of the Interior significantly limiting the activities of political parties and associations, restrictions on the freedom of assembly of opposition political parties imposed by local administrators affiliated with the ruling CNDD-FDD party persisted.

Security Council consideration. On 11 December [meeting 6037], the Security Council was briefed by Charles Nqakula, Facilitator of the Burundi Peace Process, and Anders Lidén, Chairman of the Burundi configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission.

Peacebuilding Commission

Reporting on its second session [A/63/92-S/2008/417], the Peacebuilding Commission said that on 6 February, the Burundi configuration agreed on an annual workplan, focusing on fulfilling the engagements reflected in the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding in Burundi [YUN 2007, p. 52] and in the Monitoring and Tracking Mechanism, monitoring the peacebuilding process, and providing advice to relevant stakeholders. The Chair of the configuration participated in a meeting (Cape Town, South Africa, 22–23 February) of special envoys for Burundi, which agreed on the Programme of Action to Take Further the Burundi Peace Process. In March [A/62/760-S/2008/192], the Chairpersons of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Commission's Burundi configuration transmitted to the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Burundi configuration [PBC/2/BDI/7] at its Cape Town meeting. In discussions held on 28 and 29 February, the Chair of the configuration sensitized the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund on the objectives of the Strategic Framework and the engagement between Burundi and the Commission. A configuration delegation travelled to Burundi (10–15 May) on a field mission to obtain information about the situation and to review preparations for the first biannual review of the Strategic Framework.

Among its conclusions, the Commission expressed concern over the withdrawal of Palipehutu-FNL from the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism. It commended the renewed efforts of the South African Facilitation to get Palipehutu-FNL to resume its participation in the Mechanism. The Commission also noted the establishment of a Political Directorate, to be based in Bujumbura, to facilitate dialogue on political obstacles during implementation of the Agreement, promote trust between the parties and help implement political arrangements. The Commission recommended that the Government explore ways to resolve politically its differences with Palipehutu-FNL leaders, take measures to build confidence, and create conditions for the return of Palipehutu-FNL, its reintegration into national institutions, and the resumption of its participation in the Mechanism and in the Directorate. The Government and stakeholders should continue dialogue to resolve differences and work through national democratic institutions to ease tensions. The South African Facilitation, the Regional Peace Initiative, the AU and the Political Directorate should continue to help ensure the implementation of the Agreement within the 30 June time frame, and allow the Directorate to monitor political and socio-economic reintegration, as stipulated in the programme of action for July–December. The Secretary-General should play a robust political role in support of the peace process, in coordination with regional and international partners. The Security Council should monitor the situation, in particular implementation of the Agreement, and consider appropriate actions for its effective implementation. The Assembly and the Economic and Social Council should support the programme of action and the efforts by the Facilitation and the Regional Peace Initiative. Donors and other partners should support the Government's efforts, including the financing of incentives for the socio-economic reintegration of FNL and other demobilized combatants.

Biannual review of Strategic Framework (June). On 23 June, the Commission considered the first report [PBC/2/BDI/10] reviewing progress in the implementation of the Strategic Framework. The report analysed trends and evaluated progress in the five main challenge areas: promotion of good governance; implementation of the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement; the security sector; justice, promotion of human rights and action to combat impunity; and the land-use issue and socio-economic recovery. It also assessed mutual commitments as defined in the Strategic Framework. According to the report, the Government, the Commission and stakeholders had made a considerable effort to implement the commitments and contributions to peacebuilding. However, the complexity and dynamic character of the challenge required a more continuous commitment to overcome the principal peacebuilding risks. It made a number of recommendations (see below) for strengthening commitments and set out actions to be taken by different stakeholders.

The Commission, in its review [PCB/2/BDI/9] of the first biannual report, welcomed the progress made in the priority areas set out in the Strategic Framework and the matrix of the Mechanism, in particular steps taken to reinforce governance, including the establishment of the framework for dialogue and the operationalization of the Anti-Corruption Brigade and Court. Among its recommendations, the Government was requested to submit a draft law on succession to the National Assembly. It should seek assistance to address the deficiencies in the electoral legal framework observed in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 208] and present by December a revised draft legal framework reflecting Burundi's political reality, consensus and support. The electoral commission should be operational by early 2009 in order to manage the 2010 and subsequent elections. The international community should help the Government identify resources and provide financial and technical support. The Government should develop a comprehensive security sector reform plan, including independent parliamentary oversight of the national defence and police forces and the intelligence service, with emphasis on professionalism and political neutrality. It should ensure that the defence force was provided for and that personnel requirements were commensurate with defence needs. In the area of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, the Government should ensure that economic and social opportunities, including community-based programmes, were available to former combatants to enable them to reintegrate into communities. The Government should work with BINUB, civil society and other stakeholders to assist the Tripartite Steering Committee in launching national consultations on establishing transitional justice mechanisms. The Government should pursue perpetrators of violence against women and children and submit to the National Assembly a comprehensive law to eradicate gender-based violence, as well as a draft law establishing a national human rights commission. The National Assembly should adopt, as a priority, the revised draft criminal code. Concerning land use and socio-economic recovery, the Government should facilitate dialogue and consultation on land reform, the mechanisms for resolving land disputes and the harmonization of approaches. The Commission would continue to mobilize the required international support. The Government should implement integrated community-based strategies for refugees and returnees, with a focus on women and children, and coordinate international assistance through the Partners Coordination Group. The Commission would give priority to socio-economic recovery; it would focus on the possible effects of the global food crisis and rising fuel costs on the country's already fragile socio-economic situation to ensure that it did not undermine the peace consolidation efforts.

On 23 June [A/62/888-S/2008/442], the Acting Chairperson of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Chairman of the Burundi configuration drew the attention of the Presidents of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council to the recommendations of the biannual review, particularly the recommendation pertaining to the mobilization and coordination of international assistance.

The Commission, reporting on its third session [A/64/341-S/2009/444], stated that, following the mission (21–23 October) to Burundi by the Chair of the Burundi configuration to discuss with stakeholders opportunities for and challenges of mutual engagement, the configuration adopted a workplan focusing on support to the peace process, notably in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of Palipehutu-FNL; assistance to Burundi in creating an environment for free, fair and transparent national elections in 2010; support to refugees; and land issues and the socio-economic reintegration of ex-combatants. The Commission agreed to give priority to improving its impact on the ground, and efficient communication on the Strategic Framework and its relationship with complementary tools, such as support from the Peacebuilding Fund and the Burundi poverty reduction strategy paper. On 12 December, the Burundi configuration addressed developments in the peace process with the participation of the Facilitator of the peace process, who briefed members on the outcome of the Great Lakes Region Summit meeting (4 December) (see p. 150) and on the challenges relating to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration and the political integration of Palipehutu-FNL. Members of the configuration confirmed their support for efforts to address those challenges and their readiness to contribute to funding for disarmament.

The Commission, on 16 December [PBC/3/BDI/1], adopted the conclusions of the Burundi configuration, welcoming the setting-up by the Government and the World Bank of the Transitional Demobilization and Reintegration Project for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration, and calling for additional contributions to the Project's Trust Fund. It called on the international community to extend logistical, material and financial support for establishing designated assembly areas for cantonment and other preparatory tasks for the immediate commencement of the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. It urged Palipehutu-FNL to release all children associated with it, and called for international support for speedy reunification with their families and their reintegration and rehabilitation. The Commission encouraged the Government to develop a longer-term strategy for the sustainable socio-economic reintegration of combatants and others, including previously demobilized combatants, soldiers and police.

On 22 December, the Security Council, in resolution 1858(2008) (see p. 150), took note of the June biannual review of the implementation of the Strategic Framework.

(For further information on the Peacebuilding Commission, see p. 54.)

Children and armed conflict

In February [S/AC.51/2008/6], the Chairman of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict transmitted the conclusions adopted by the Group with respect to the Secretary-General's 2007 report on children and armed conflict in Burundi [YUN 2007, p. 144]. The Group expressed concern regarding delays in implementing the Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement; the suspension of participation of Palipehutu-FNL in the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism; the failure to formally release children associated with Palipehutu-FNL, and reports of further child recruitment and use by Palipehutu-FNL; and the alarming increase in cases of rape and other grave sexual violence committed against children, especially girls, and the prevailing impunity concerning those cases, despite positive steps taken by the Government to address the situation and prosecute perpetrators. The Group insisted on the need for further international support to assist disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes for children and other programmes designed to improve child protection and awareness-raising on the rights of the child.

BINUB

The United Nations Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB), established by Security Council resolution 1719(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 153] to support the Government in its effort towards long-term peace and stability and coordinate the work of the UN agencies in the country, focused on peace consolidation and democratic governance; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants; security sector reform; promotion and protection of human rights; measures to end impunity through a truth and reconciliation commission and special tribunal; and donor and UN agency coordination. Headquartered in the capital, Bujumbura, BINUB was headed by the Secretary-General's Executive Representative for Burundi, Youssef Mahmoud (Tunisia).

Financing

In December, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's October report [A/63/346/Add.3] on proposed resource requirements for BINUB totalling $37,898,400 for 2009, as well as the related ACABQ report [A/63/593]. On 24 December, in section XI of resolution 63/263 (see p. 1548), the Assembly endorsed ACABQ's recommendations and approved budgets totalling $429,497,600 for the 27 special political missions, including BINUB.

ONUB

The United Nations Operation in Burundi (ONUB), established in 2004 by Security Council resolution 1545(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 145], concluded its mandate on 31 December 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 157] and was replaced by BINUB on 1 January 2007.

Financing

In January, the Secretary-General submitted the performance report [A/62/668] on the ONUB budget for the period 1 July 2006–30 June 2007, with expenditures of $118,534,100 against an appropriation of $128,536,700, making for an unencumbered balance of $10,002,600, together with other income of $20,727,200. In April, ACABQ recommended [A/62/781/Add.2] that the amount of $24,337,000, representing net cash available in the Special Account of the Operation as at 30 June 2007, be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the General Assembly, and endorsed the recommendation of the Secretary-General that a decision be deferred to the sixty-third session of the Assembly on the treatment of the amount of $6,392,800, representing a cash shortfall in the Special Account of the Operation as at 30 June 2007 from the total amount of $30,729,800.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/866], adopted resolution 62/253 without vote [agenda item 141].

In November, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/63/551] on ONUB financing providing details on the final disposition of its assets, with a total inventory value of $59,152,442 as at 3 November. Of that amount, $51,336,500 in assets had been transferred to other missions or for temporary storage at the United Nations Logistics Base at Brindisi, Italy; $1,936,200 in assets had been sold; $2,799,400 in assets had been donated to the Government of Burundi; and $3,080,300 in assets had been written off or lost. The Secretary-General requested that the General Assembly take note of the report.

On 24 December (decision 63/552), the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on ONUB financing would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-third (2009) session.

Central African Republic

The political situation in the Central African Republic in 2008 continued to be dominated by intensified preparations for the inclusive political dialogue, aimed at ending the recurrent political and security crises in the country, which was held in the capital, Bangui, in December. The overall political, security and socio-economic situation, however, remained fragile, and was compounded by a weak economy, multifaceted social problems and impunity, along with severe security challenges, particularly in the northern and south-eastern parts of the country. The United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA) continued to assist the Government in its efforts to consolidate peace in the country. In June, the Peacebuilding Commission added the country to its agenda and established the Central African Republic configuration.

Political and security situation

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his report [S/2008/410] on the situation in the Central African Republic and on BONUCA activities from January to June, submitted in response to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2001/25 [YUN 2001, p. 156], the Secretary-General noted that the Dialogue Preparatory Committee had completed its work and, on 25 April, submitted its report to President François Bozizé. Facilitated by BONUCA and the International Organization of la Francophonie, and presided over by the Centre for Humanitarian Dialogue, the Committee brought together the country's main political, social and rebel groups for substantive discussions on political and governance issues, the security situation and political-military groups, and socio-economic development. In line with the Committee's recommendations, President Bozizé, on 8 June, set up a 15-member committee to help organize the dialogue.

On 9 May, the Government concluded a peace agreement with the Armée populaire pour la restauration de la démocratie (APRD) rebel movement, the last of the country's three major rebel groups to sign a peace agreement. The agreement, signed in Libreville under the auspices of President Omar Bongo Ondimba of Gabon, provided for an immediate cessation of hostilities, the cantonment of APRD fighters in their current positions, the rehabilitation of conflict-affected areas, and the creation of security conditions for the holding of the inclusive political dialogue. It also foresaw the adoption of a general amnesty law.

The Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the Central African Republic, François Lonseny Fall, continuing his efforts to facilitate preparations for the dialogue, met with the APRD leadership in February to persuade APRD to participate in the Preparatory Committee. The Special Representative also continued to consult closely with the Committee of External Partners, based in Bangui, and with the leadership of the subregional peacekeeping force for the Central African Republic, the Multinational Force of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (FOMUC). BONUCA organized training on dialogue and negotiation for members of the Dialogue Preparatory Committee, and facilitated the establishment of the operations of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT).

The security situation remained relatively stable in Bangui, despite isolated cases of criminal activity. Elsewhere, apart from localized clashes, there was a decrease in the intensity of conflict between Government forces and rebel groups in the north. However, acts of indiscipline and lawlessness among defence and security forces, especially in their relations with the general population, continued to increase. Two new security phenomena were vigilante groups defending against highway bandits in the north-western provinces of Ouham, Ouham-Pendé and Nana-Grébizi; and well-armed and -equipped poachers active in the Vakaga and Haute-Kotto prefectures. A new zone of tension emerged in the south-east of the country, into which armed elements—believed to be renegades from Uganda's LRA—had reportedly infiltrated from their bases in southern Sudan. The security situation improved significantly in the north-eastern provinces of Vakaga and Bamingui-Bangoran following the deployment, in March, of the European Union Force (EUFOR) and the peace agreement signed in 2007 between the Government and the rebel group Union des forces démocratiques pour le rassemblement (UFDR) [YUN 2007, p. 146].

Overall political and operational command for FOMUC was scheduled to be transferred from the Economic and Monetary Community of Central Africa (CEMAC) to the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) as at 1 July 2008, pursuant to the decision of the ECCAS Council of Ministers taken at its meeting in Libreville, Gabon, on 25 and 26 February.

The majority of the population in the north-west and north-east continued to live in fear and insecurity owing to the activities of Government armed forces, rebel groups and criminal gangs. Crime had also become a major impediment to social and economic stability, engendering massive population displacements and inhibiting the free movement of persons and humanitarian operations. Following attacks against the relatively peaceful south-eastern region in February and early March, reportedly by LRA infiltrators, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs organized a joint assessment mission from 22 to 25 March with UNICEF, BONUCA and the UN Department of Safety and Security to evaluate the security and human rights situation, as well as the status of protection of civilians.

Following meetings with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, who visited the country from 27 to 31 May, APRD and UFDR leaders agreed to release all children participating in their movements for eventual reintegration in communities. BONUCA also continued to provide civic education training, promoting the ideals of peace, democratic values and fundamental rights and freedoms.

The Secretary-General observed that Government efforts to improve respect for human rights needed to be intensified and made irreversible as a first step in curbing the culture of impunity. Urging the authorities to do more to strengthen respect for the rule of law through the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to deal decisively with impunity, the Secretary-General also called on the international community to provide assistance to the country in restoring its judicial sector.

Comprehensive Peace Agreement. On 21 June, the Central African Republic, APRD and UFDR signed the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in Libreville.

On 27 June, following a briefing by the Secretary-General's Special Representative on the situation in the Central African Republic, the Security Council, in a press statement [SC/9380-AFR/1721], welcomed that agreement and called on all other political-military groups in the country to join it. The Council commended President Bongo of Gabon and Colonel Muammar Al-Qadhafi of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya for the assistance they provided to the parties in order to reach the comprehensive peace agreement and the agreements of Sirte (February 2007) [YUN 2007, p. 146], Birao (April 2007) [ibid.] and Libreville (June 2008). It called on the Government and the rebel movements to implement fully those agreements and to convene, as soon as possible, the inclusive political dialogue.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In his report [S/2008/733] covering the June to November period, the Secretary-General stated that the political situation had been dominated by efforts to create a conducive environment for the convening of an inclusive political dialogue as a crucial first step towards national reconciliation and stabilization. The Libreville Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed on 21 June between the Government and the APRD and UFDR rebel groups called for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, along with amnesty for rebel fighters and their leaders. The withdrawal of APRD and the coalition of opposition parties, Union des forces vives de la nation (UFVN), from the dialogue process in response to the draft amnesty laws tabled by the Government before an extraordinary session of the National Assembly, however, prompted the Secretary-General's Special Representative to engage in intensive consultations with national stakeholders and regional and international partners, with a view to breaking the deadlock and reviving the stalled peace process. To facilitate the resolution of the political deadlock, the Secretary-General met twice with President Bozizé to encourage him to take the necessary measures to facilitate the holding of the dialogue as soon as possible.

On 29 September, the National Assembly adopted a single consolidated general amnesty law covering offences committed by Government security and defence forces and rebel elements from 15 March 2003 to the date of the promulgation of the law by President Bozizé on 13 October—except for crimes falling within the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court. APRD and UFVN, however, rejected the law, describing the conditions set out therein as unrealistic and unhelpful for the reconciliation process. The Follow-up Committee to the Libreville Comprehensive Peace Agreement referred the matter to President Bongo of Gabon, in his capacity as mediator of the Central African Republic peace process. Meanwhile, President Bozizé expanded the membership of the Dialogue Organizing Committee to include opposition and rebel movements; and the Government released from prison 12 rebel leaders and fighters in compliance with the Amnesty Law—a gesture welcomed by the President of APRD, who instructed his field commanders to identify sites for cantonment of rebel fighters. Despite the progress made towards the holding of the dialogue, the Secretary-General remained concerned that new rebel groups, including splinter factions from existing groups, had emerged; they considered themselves as being left out of the peace process and could constitute a new threat to peace and stability.

The security situation in Bangui and its surrounding areas remained relatively calm, as in the north-eastern prefectures of Vakaga and Bamingui-Bangoran—traditional strongholds of UFDR—where, however, splinter groups had emerged. Intermittent clashes occurred in the north-western and north-central parts of the country between Government forces and various rebel groups, especially APRD. While bandit activity decreased with the beginning of the rainy season, vigilante activities in Ouham-Pendé Prefecture evolved into armed militias supporting the Government, giving rise to reprisal attacks by APRD against local populations. The absence of State authority in the south-eastern prefecture of Haut-Mbomou was a concern, as were poachers in the eastern and north-eastern prefectures of Vakaga and Haute-Kotto.

In July, the operational responsibilities for the sub-regional peace force in the Central African Republic, FOMUC, were transferred from the six-member CEMAC to the 10-member ECCAS. Its regional peace force, the Mission de consolidation de la paix en Centrafrique (MICOPAX), was mandated in September by the Follow-up Committee to the Libreville Comprehensive Peace Agreement to supervise the implementation of an immediate ceasefire. Among other training initiatives, BONUCA provided capacity-building support to enhance the operational capabilities of 87 police officers and 40 gendarmes through training in criminal investigations, information-gathering, professional standards and ethics. It also continued to support MINURCAT in implementing its mandate in the Central African Republic.

In June, the Peacebuilding Fund approved for funding a priority plan addressing the immediate needs of the country in security sector reform, good governance and the rule of law, and revitalization of communities affected by conflict. The Secretary-General reported that he had allocated $10 million from the Fund for those priorities. The Peacebuilding Support Office and the Multi-Donor Trust Fund of the United Nations Development Programme fielded two missions to support implementation. A National Steering Committee, co-chaired by the Minister of State for Planning, the Economy and International Cooperation and the Special Representative, selected nine projects for a total amount of over $5.4 million to be implemented with national partners.

The Secretary-General renewed his appeal to all national stakeholders, in particular the Government and the armed groups, to work together within the framework of the signed peace agreements and to address their differences by peaceful means. BONUCA having published its first public report on the human rights situation in the country in October, the Secretary-General also urged the authorities to strengthen the rule of law and promote good governance by ensuring the promotion and protection of human rights and addressing the culture of impunity, with a view to its eradication.

Security Council consideration. On 2 December [meeting 6027], the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Mr. Fall, and the Chair of the Peacebuilding Commission's Central African Republic configuration, Jan Grauls, briefed the Security Council on the situation in the country.

Year-end developments. The inclusive political dialogue was held in Bangui from 8 to 20 December with the participation of representatives of the presidential majority, the democratic opposition, other political parties, civil society, Government authorities and the armed political groups. UN representatives and regional and international partners of the Central African Republic also attended. The dialogue provided an occasion for reviewing the main problems that had afflicted the country since independence and for proposing solutions aimed at breaking the cycle of crises that the country had been experiencing. Three committees focused on: political matters and governance; the security situation and armed groups; and socio-economic development. Recommendations adopted in a plenary session included establishing a new Government gathering the entities participating in the dialogue; an independent electoral commission to prepare the 2010 elections; a steering committee on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration; a high court of justice; and a follow-up committee on implementing the recommendations of the dialogue.

BONUCA

The mission of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in the Central African Republic (BONUCA), established by the Security Council in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 162], was to support Government efforts to consolidate peace and national reconciliation, strengthen democratic institutions and facilitate international mobilization of political support and resources for national reconstruction and economic recovery. In addition, the Office was tasked with promoting public awareness of human rights and monitoring developments in that field. BONUCA was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, François Lonseny Fall (Guinea).

Extension of mandate. In his November report [S/2008/733], the Secretary-General recommended to the Security Council that the mandate of BONUCA be extended for an additional year, from 1 January to 31 December 2009, considering it crucial for the authorities of the Central African Republic to receive the necessary support in implementing the conclusions of the forthcoming inclusive political dialogue. He also announced his intention to prepare proposals for an integrated UN presence in the country.

On 23 December [S/2008/809], the Council took note of the Secretary-General's recommendation. It also acknowledged the need to establish an integrated UN office in the Central African Republic, and looked forward to the Secretary-General's recommendations in that regard by 28 February 2009.

Financing

In October [A/63/346/Add.3], the Secretary-General submitted requirements for BONUCA for 2009 amounting to $8,818,100, as well as estimated over-expenditures in 2008 in the amount of $490,200. In December [A/63/593], ACABQ endorsed the resources requested, subject to its observations and recommendations. On 24 December, in section XI of resolution 63/263 (see p. 1548), the General Assembly endorsed the ACABQ recommendations and approved budgets totalling $429,497,600 for the 27 special political missions, including BONUCA.

Peacebuilding Commission

The President of the Security Council, on 30 May [A/62/864-S/2008/383], referred the Peacebuilding Commission's Chairperson to the 6 March request by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and Francophonie of the Central African Republic that the country be placed on the Commission's agenda. The President stated that the Council supported the request, and invited the Commission to provide advice and recommendations on: the situation in the Central African Republic, particularly in the establishment and conduct of an inclusive political dialogue; action by national authorities and support from the international community to develop an effective, accountable and sustainable national security sector system; and the restoration of the rule of law, including respect for human rights and good governance. The Commission could play a critical role in enhancing coordination and coherence within the UN system and among the wider international community in consolidating the Central African Republic's peacebuilding efforts.

Responding on 17 June [A/62/889-S/2008/419], the Commission Chairperson informed the Council President that the Commission's Organizational Committee had agreed both to the request and to establish a country-specific configuration, to be chaired by Belgium. The Commission would establish, in consultation with the country's authorities, the priorities and programme of work of the Central African Republic configuration, and would inform the Council of its preliminary findings and any progress in its consideration of the situation in the country.

In a 27 June press statement [SC/9380], the Security Council welcomed the inclusion of the Central African Republic in the Commission's agenda and the creation of a country-specific configuration. To support that work, the Council requested the Secretary-General to make recommendations on how the mandate of BONUCA and the Secretary-General's Special Representative, as well as the configuration of BONUCA and the UN country team, should be revised.

In the overall report on its third session [A/64/341-S/2009/444], the Commission stated that, in July, the Central African Republic configuration Chairperson conducted an exploratory mission to Bangui to establish contacts with national authorities and other stakeholders. The Commission endorsed the peacebuilding priorities set out by the Central African Republic at the 8 October meeting of the Central African Republic configuration: reform of the security sector, including disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR); good governance and the rule of law; and socio-economic advancement through the implementation of development hubs. The Commission also identified the successful conclusion of the inclusive political dialogue and the implementation of its recommendations as a cross-cutting priority.

Report of Commission mission. The Commission undertook a mission to the Central African Republic (30 October–6 November) to discuss with the Government and other stakeholders the main peacebuilding priorities and challenges, the actions being undertaken by the Government to address those challenges, and the nature and scope of international support needed. It visited sites of ongoing projects that were relevant to peacebuilding and exchanged views on the activities of the Peacebuilding Fund with the National Steering Committee.

The mission, in its December report [PBC/3/CAF/3], found that expectations remained high with regard to the engagement of the Central African Republic with the Commission, and the Commission's role in focusing international attention on the country's needs. However, the relationship between the activities of the Peacebuilding Fund and those of the Commission remained confusing for many interlocutors. The delegation clarified the difference between them, particularly as the $10 million allocated by the Fund for the country was financing programmes and activities on the ground. The delegation emphasized the Government's primary responsibility for achieving progress on the peacebuilding priorities and the need for concurrent progress on all of them to avoid additional tensions among the population. The delegation realized the importance of concurrently addressing the priority areas, and highlighted the Commission's challenge to coordinate the action of all stakeholders to ensure not only progress, but also careful sequencing of the various actions and projects. All three priorities were either covered or about to be covered by individual frameworks and/or programmes. In the area of security sector reform, a detailed timeline of implementable actions was established. UNDP finalized a DDR plan and launched a comprehensive project to strengthen the rule of law through justice and security. The delegation concluded that integration of the UN presence on the ground would ensure better coherence among the actors and support the Commission in fulfilling the objectives of better coordination and sequencing. The delegation agreed to discuss with UNDP the Government's request that the remainder of the first allocation from the Peacebuilding Fund be used for implementing the DDR strategy. The delegation was struck by the overarching need to strengthen support for national capacity-building through additional assistance and other innovative ways, as a shortage of qualified personnel at all levels was hampering the transition from humanitarian intervention to sustainable development, which could jeopardize the Government's capacity to deliver basic social and other services throughout the country.

(For further information on the Peacebuilding Commission, see p. 54.)

Chad and Central African Republic

In Chad and the Central African Republic, the police and military liaison officers of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) in 2008 worked with the EU-led military force (EUFOR Chad/Central African Republic) to enhance stability and support human rights and the rule of law. The Mission focused on the training and deployment of the Détachement Intégré de Sécurité (DIS), the special Chadian police for maintaining law and order in refugee camps and among displaced civilians within a 10-kilometre radius of the camps in eastern Chad. The fragility of the situation in Chad was demonstrated in February, when a coalition of Chadian rebel groups operating under the name Résistance nationale launched an attack on the capital. In December, the Secretary-General recommended the concept of a UN force of at least 4,900 peacekeepers to take over from EUFOR by 15 March 2009.

Political and security situation

Security Council press statement. In September 2007, by resolution 1778(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 153], the Security Council authorized the deployment of MINURCAT and EUFOR Chad/Central African Republic in eastern Chad and north-eastern Central African Republic to contribute to the protection of civilian populations and facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance. On 7 January [SC/9221-AFR/1643], following a briefing by the Secretariat on the preparations for deploying those missions, the Council welcomed the progress made and encouraged contributors to make available to MINURCAT and EUFOR the personnel and resources required for implementing their mandates.

Appointment. By a letter of 25 January [S/2008/52], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he intended to appoint Victor da Silva Angelo (Portugal) as his Special Representative and Head of MINURCAT. The Council took note of that intention on 29 January [S/2008/53]. He took up his duties on 7 March.

Attack on N'Djamena. Following rising tensions at the end of 2007 between Chad and the Sudan [YUN 2007, p. 156], the situation in the area along the border with Darfur further deteriorated on 30 January following reports that a Chadian National Armed Forces (FANT) aircraft had been shot down in Western Darfur by members of Chadian armed opposition groups. At the same time, Chadian military helicopters reportedly bombed suspected rebel positions in eastern Chad. Subsequently, the rebel movements claimed that they had seized control of Oum Hadjer, located between Abéché and the capital, N'Djamena.

On 31 January, Résistance nationale forces advanced from bases in the Chadian-Sudanese border region in a column of an estimated 200 to 300 vehicles. That same day, all non-essential UN personnel were evacuated to Douala, Cameroon, with the support of France and the logistical assistance of MONUC. On the night of 1–2 February, the rebel forces entered N'Djamena and surrounded the presidential palace and other strategic locations throughout the city. Heavy fighting erupted, but Government troops managed to push the rebel forces back, consolidating their positions in the capital by 5 February.

Communication. In a letter of 3 February [S/2008/69] to the Security Council, Chad solicited the support of the Council in the face of an attempt to overthrow the Government.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 February [meeting 5830], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/3 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its grave concern regarding the situation in Chad.

The Council supports the decision of the African Union of 2 February 2008 strongly condemning the attacks perpetrated by armed groups against the Government of Chad, demanding to put an immediate end to the violence and calling upon all the countries of the region to respect the unity and territorial integrity of the member States of the African Union.

The Council welcomes in particular the decision of the African Union to mandate the Leader of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Colonel Muammar Al-Qadhafi, and President Denis Sassou Nguesso of the Republic of the Congo to engage the Chadian parties with a view to ending the fighting and to initiate efforts aimed at seeking a lasting solution to the crisis.

The Council strongly condemns these attacks and all attempts at destabilization by force, and recalls its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, territorial integrity and political independence of Chad.

The Council urges all States in the region to abide fully by the obligations they have entered into with regard to respect for and securing of their common border, in particular under the Tripoli Agreement of 8 February 2006, the Riyadh Agreement of 3 May 2007 and the Sirte Agreement of 25 October 2007.

The Council calls upon the States of the region to deepen their cooperation with a view to putting an end to the activities of armed groups and their attempt to seize power by force.

The Council calls upon Member States to provide support, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, as requested by the Government of Chad.

The Council expresses its concern regarding the direct threat that the combats pose for the safety of the civilian population, including internally displaced persons and refugees.

The Council reaffirms its full support for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad and the European Union operation (EUFOR Chad/Central African Republic), whose deployment in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic was authorized by resolution 1778(2007), to contribute to the protection of vulnerable civilian populations and to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance.

The Council expresses its concern over the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, United Nations personnel and European Union personnel and material deployed in Chad. It underlines that all parties have a responsibility to ensure the protection of all these personnel and of the diplomatic personnel present in Chad.

Communication. By a letter of 4 March [S/2008/139], the United Republic of Tanzania transmitted to the Security Council a communiqué on the situation in Chad adopted by the AU Peace and Security Council at its 110th meeting (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 18 February). The AU called on all the Chadian parties to unconditionally renounce the use of force and engage in constructive dialogue to find a peaceful solution to the problems facing the country. It also stressed the need for the urgent deployment of MINURCAT and EUFOR in order to facilitate humanitarian efforts.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his April report on MINURCAT [S/2008/215], submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1778(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 153], the Secretary-General covered major events since his last report [ibid., p. 155].

By 22 February, all MINURCAT international staff had redeployed to the capital from Cameroon and resumed their normal activities. On 13 March, during the eleventh summit of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (Dakar, Senegal, 13–14 March), which was attended by the Secretary-General, President Idriss Déby of Chad and President Omar al-Bashir of the Sudan signed a new agreement in which they agreed to reconcile, normalize their relations and contribute to peace and stability in the two countries and in the region. They asked the international community to take all necessary measures to put in place a peace and security force in order to guarantee and observe the mixed operations aimed at securing their common border. In addition, the parties agreed to the establishment of a contact group to monitor the implementation of the agreement; to cease supporting the activities of armed groups; and to ensure that their respective territories were not used for the destabilization of one or the other State.

Also on 13 March, however, Chad issued a communiqué stating that rebel groups supported by the Sudan had crossed the border from the Sudan into Chad, near Moudeina. On 14 March, a second group was reported closer to Abéché, with FANT units reportedly redeploying in anticipation of movements in the Sudan in the border area near Adré. Nonetheless, on the same day, Chad lifted the state of emergency it had imposed in mid-February.

Meanwhile, MINURCAT and EUFOR further consolidated their relationship with the Government of Chad through the Coordination nationale d'appui à la force internationale, headed by the Special Representative of President Déby for MINURCAT and EUFOR. In late January, MINURCAT, jointly with Chadian police authorities and EUFOR, identified potential sites for the police headquarters in Abéché, six stations in the main towns, 12 posts and the respective infrastructure and equipment needs. A police familiarization programme to initiate a continuous MINURCAT police presence in Abéché started on 25 February with a team of eight officers deployed on a rotating basis, and contributed to enhancing MINURCAT visibility in eastern Chad.

From 18 to 24 January, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) conducted a mission to N'Djamena to discuss with the authorities, the UN country team, the EU and other partners potential MINURCAT justice and corrections activities and their planning and implementation. The Mission determined that there was a need to harmonize formal and traditional justice mechanisms, and to build the capacities of traditional and formal justice officials. Also identified as key issues were the training of prison staff and the improvement of correction infrastructure.

Of the authorized MINURCAT strength of 50 military liaison officers, 15 were deployed, focusing their activities on establishing a comprehensive liaison network with key stakeholders. While the EU Council launched the military bridging operation EUFOR Chad/Central African Republic on 28 January, the security situation and delays related to EUFOR force generation did not allow the planned deployment in that month of up to 25 military liaison officers. However, the senior military liaison officer and an advance military liaison officer team deployed to the EUFOR operational headquarters in Paris and EUFOR headquarters in Abéché. As at 15 March, more than 1,500 EUFOR personnel were present in Chad and the Central African Republic, including 200 in north-eastern Central African Republic, constituting almost half of the total authorized strength. The Secretary-General observed that the attainment of full EUFOR initial operational capacity would enable MINURCAT to deploy and undertake its mandated activities.

The Secretary-General said that the attempt by Chadian armed groups to capture N'Djamena, the continuing instability in the Chad/Sudan border area, as well as the cross-border movement of armed groups, underscored the need for a comprehensive approach in addressing the situation in Chad. The internal crisis in Chad, the situation facing refugees and internally displaced persons in eastern Chad and the Central African Republic, the tensions between Chad and the Sudan and the situation in Darfur needed to be addressed simultaneously in a coordinated effort that took into account the root causes and regional aspects of the internal conflicts. Neither MINURCAT nor EUFOR, however, were ideally mandated to address those issues. The parties themselves would have to demonstrate the political will and commitment necessary to resolve the underlying political and security challenges. The Secretary-General also expressed concern about the highly volatile security situation in Chad and the Central African Republic, which would continue to have an impact on the much-needed assistance provided by the humanitarian community to the populations at risk.

Attacks by armed groups. The security situation in the border areas of Chad and the Central African Republic with Darfur remained fragile and unpredictable. On 11 June, following reports that Chadian rebel groups had crossed the border in Moudeina, FANT bombed suspected rebel groups. Fighting erupted between FANT and Chadian rebel groups around the Koukou Angarana and Goz Amer refugee camps on 12 June. The following day, Chadian rebel groups briefly took control of Goz Beida. They looted offices of aid agencies, including the premises of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), and set ablaze a fuel depot. Aid workers sought refuge in the EUFOR camp during the attack. On 15 June, Chadian rebel groups briefly took control of Am Dam, some 120 kilometres south of Abéché. On 16 June, rebel groups briefly took the town of Biltine, 90 kilometres north of Abéché. The next day, they attacked several towns during their retreat towards the Chad-Sudan border. Also on 17 June, Chad reported that Sudanese army helicopters had attacked the town of Adé, a charge that the Sudan denied.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 June [meeting 5913], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/22 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns in the strongest terms the attacks conducted by Chadian armed groups since 11 June 2008.

The Council condemns all attempts at destabilization by force, and reiterates its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, territorial integrity and political independence of Chad. It demands that armed groups cease violence immediately and urges all parties to respect the Sirte Agreement of 25 October 2007.

The Council calls upon States in the region to implement their commitments under the Dakar Agreement of 13 March 2008 and prior agreements, and to cooperate with a view to putting an end to the activities of armed groups in the region and their attempts to seize power by force.

The Council conveys its deep concern at the direct threat that the activities of armed groups pose for the safety of the civilian population and the conduct of humanitarian operations, and urges all parties to comply fully with their obligations under international humanitarian law.

The Council expresses its full support for the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad and the European Union operation (EUFOR Chad/Central African Republic) deployed in Chad and the Central African Republic to contribute to the protection of vulnerable civilian populations and to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance, and calls upon all parties to guarantee the security and freedom of movement of their personnel and associated personnel.

The Council encourages the Chadian authorities to persevere in promoting political dialogue, with respect for the constitutional framework, as initiated by the agreement of 13 August 2007.

The Council stands ready to consider appropriate measures against those groups and individuals that constitute a threat to the stability of the region or violate international humanitarian law.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In his July report [S/2008/444] on MINURCAT, the Secretary-General said that while the dialogue between the Government and the political parties had been revived within the framework of the 13 August 2007 agreement [YUN 2007, p. 155], no progress had been made towards the opening of similar dialogue with the Chadian Armed Opposition Group, which continued to pursue the military option. Members of the opposition coalition—the Coordination des partis politiques pour la défense de la Constitution—expressed doubts about President Déby's intention to begin an inclusive political dialogue. In April, the President designated a new Government, including four former political opponents appointed as the Ministers of Justice, Defence, Agriculture and Territorial Administration. Those positive steps towards a broad-based Government enjoyed considerable national support. In May, Prime Minister Saleh Abbas announced that Government emissaries had entered into direct negotiations with Chadian armed opposition groups to bring them back into the framework of the peace agreement signed on 25 October 2007 in Sirte, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya between the Government and the main such groups, including the Union des forces pour le développement et la démocratie (UFDD), the Rassemblement des forces pour le changement (RFC) and the Union des forces pour la démocratie et le développement fondamental (UFDDF) [YUN 2007, p. 156].

In the Central African Republic, MINURCAT continued to work closely with BONUCA and the UN country team to support police sector reform and the restoration of State authority in the Vakaga region in the north-eastern part of the country. Challenges in Chad affecting the full deployment of UN police and Integrated Security Detachment (DIS) officers included the absence of infrastructure for office and living space; inadequate logistical support for the training facilities and delays in refurbishing of the National Police Academy; limited ground and air transportation; the absence of a legal framework establishing DIS due to the delay in signing the memorandum of understanding between Chad and MINURCAT on DIS; and the delay in selecting the first batch of 220 police officers and gendarmes that would integrate with DIS.

From 15 to 23 April, an inter-agency planning mission led by DPKO visited Chad to assess the justice and corrections system as it related to the mandated activities of MINURCAT. The mission included representatives of UNHCR, UNDP, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), UNICEF and the European Commission. The team noted that eastern Chad was marked by barely functioning justice institutions, with a lack of judges and prosecutors and serious gaps in court infrastructure, as well as an almost complete absence of defence lawyers. With regard to arrests and detention-related activities of DIS, the team outlined a three-pronged approach including tracking of the cases of those detained or arrested by DIS, support for Chad's mobile court system and support to key prisons. Following the planning mission, MINURCAT undertook three joint assessment exercises with the prison authorities to consider cost-effective ways to improve the prison infrastructure and the general prison conditions in some areas. It also developed four quick-impact projects to address needs in terms of general infrastructure, security, improved accommodation, sanitary facilities and health service delivery in the Abéché, Goz Beida and N'Djamena prisons.

The Secretary-General remained concerned by the repeated cycles of rebel incursions into Chad and the continuing insecurity, which had impeded humanitarian access, particularly since the killing of the Director of Save the Children on 1 May.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In September [S/2008/601], the Secretary-General reported that progress had been achieved in regard to the 13 August 2007 agreement on electoral reforms. In June, the Committee established to follow up the implementation of that agreement submitted to the Government draft bills on the electoral law and the establishment of the independent electoral commission. In July, the Ministry of Economy and Planning began a cartographic census, to be completed in early 2009 and followed by a demographic census for updating the voter registration list. Also in that month, eight additional political parties signed the 13 August agreement, bringing the number of signatory parties to 91 out of 101 registered political parties in Chad. Five of the new signatory parties belonged to the presidential majority and three to opposition parties. Progress in the implementation of the Sirte Agreement, however, remained limited.

On 18 August, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya brokered an agreement between Chad and RFC dissidents under which the latter signed the Sirte Agreement. Despite progress on that front, in August, the Mouvement pour la justice et la démocratie au Tchad, an armed group from the northern part of the country, joined the Alliance Nationale under the UFDD leader, Mahamat Nouri. Also that month, Timan Erdimi, the leader of RFC, reportedly announced that contacts were under way with other armed opposition groups to reinforce the Alliance's military capacity.

In August, the National Commission of Inquiry submitted its report on the February attack on N'Djamena. It found that both rebel groups and FANT were responsible for violating human rights during the attack, including through arbitrary execution, torture, rape and the disproportionate use of force. The Commission recommended establishing a committee, to include the international community, to follow up on its findings and recommendations. On 15 August, a Chadian court sentenced former President Hissène Habré to death in absentia for allegedly providing financial, material and moral support to rebels who attacked the capital in February. Eleven rebel leaders involved in the February attacks were also sentenced to death in absentia.

The Secretary-General noted that the security situation, particularly in eastern Chad, remained volatile. The number of skirmishes between FANT and armed opposition groups decreased, but carjackings, armed robberies and crime targeting national and international humanitarian staff continued.

The MINURCAT Police Commissioner, Major General Gerardo Chaumont (Argentina), took up his duties in Chad on 9 August. MINURCAT rehabilitated the DIS training centre at the National Police Academy and conducted a training course for 231 DIS elements. The memorandum of understanding between the Government and MINURCAT on UN support for DIS was signed on 14 August, although the presidential decree establishing the Detachment had yet to be signed. MINURCAT judicial advisory and corrections units established relations with national counterparts, and carried out four needs assessments in Abéché, Goz Beida and N'Djamena prisons. MINURCAT initiated a high-level visit to Kerfi with the Governor of the region of Dar Sila, and representatives of the Co-ordination nationale d'appui à la force internationale au Tchad, UN agencies and NGOs. The team met with local authorities and representatives to assess the situation following inter-ethnic clashes in July. As a result of the visit, leaders of the Mouro and Dadjo ethnic groups, which participated in the clashes, agreed to work together in developing the region.

In view of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113], and resolution 1820(2008), (see p. 1265), MINURCAT undertook a number of sensitization activities for UN police and DIS personnel to combat violence against women and girls, especially with regard to their protection in refugee camps and internally displaced persons sites. It conducted similar activities for civil society organizations, local authorities and law enforcement agencies. The Mission also drafted a code of conduct for the prevention of gender-based violence.

The Secretary-General also reported that the deployment of EUFOR had been completed and the force comprised 3,300 troops, of whom approximately 200 were located in the Central African Republic. Patrols across the area and high-visibility operations were being carried out.

UN-EU midterm review. Regarding arrangements for following up the EUFOR presence at the end of its one-year mandate, including a possible UN operation, the Secretary-General reported, as requested by the Security Council in resolution 1778(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 153], that a UN-EU team visited Chad and the Central African Republic from 18 to 24 June. The team consisted of representatives of DPKO, the Departments of Field Support, Political Affairs and Safety and Security, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), UNHCR, OHCHR and MINURCAT, as well as the EU, the European Commission and EUFOR.

In Chad, while EUFOR was beginning to have a positive effect in deterring security threats, MINURCAT was still at the early stages of its deployment into the eastern part of the country, and DIS had not yet begun to deploy. Humanitarian access had decreased as security conditions had forced aid workers to limit operations. Some parties had called on the United Nations to create a border-monitoring mechanism to deter the cross-border activities of armed opposition groups. After careful assessment, the Secretariat concluded that monitoring—let alone securing—the border between Chad, the Sudan and the Central African Republic was a virtually impossible task. It would be extremely manpower-intensive, and there would be no guarantee that monitoring cross-border activities in one area would not simply push them to another area. The only solution to insecurity created by the Chadian armed opposition groups was for those groups to give up their quest to take power by force and to engage in dialogue with the Government to address their grievances.

In the Central African Republic, the main security threats consisted of common and petty crimes, road-blocks and banditry; the team did not assess an immediate threat of spillover of the Darfur conflict into the area. EUFOR activities included limited patrolling in and around Birao and securing the airstrip. Nonetheless, Government representatives requested that the United Nations take over from EUFOR in order to address possible cross-border violence from Darfur.

Expanded MINURCAT mandate. The Secretary-General also reported that the Secretariat had developed recommendations for an enhanced MINURCAT mandate that would include a military force to take over from EUFOR at the end of its mandate on 15 March 2009, along with others for the use of the Mission's good offices to assist the Government and relevant stakeholders in addressing the underlying causes of insecurity in eastern Chad related to the safe and voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons. The enhanced mandate of MINURCAT would concentrate on eastern Chad, with a limited military contingent in the north-eastern part of the Central African Republic. The Secretary-General outlined the conceived Mission's force and support requirements, support of DIS, peace aspects and financial implications.

The Secretary-General had dispatched the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Edmond Mulet, to Chad and the Central African Republic to discuss the possible UN operation. In Chad, President Déby had agreed to the deployment of a military UN follow-on operation to replace EUFOR, and requested that such an operation remain within the framework of Security Council resolution 1778(2007) to address the spillover of the Darfur crisis and help create conditions for the return of refugees and internally displaced persons. In the Central African Republic, President Bozizé had requested that such an operation replace EUFOR, highlighted the peculiar security situation in the northern part of the country and stated that the operation could play a deterrent role and minimize the possibility of a security vacuum that could derail the peace processes.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council consider establishing a UN military force of up to 6,000 troops and logistic enablers to take over from EUFOR. He also called on Member States with the necessary capabilities to work with DPKO in establishing an "over the horizon" standby presence with appropriate support capability that could be deployed expeditiously to back up the Mission's mandate should the security situation exceed the capabilities of a UN peacekeeping operation. He further recommended that the Council consider leaving in draft form the resolution authorizing the deployment of the force until such time as the Secretariat had firm commitments of troops and other critical mission support elements from Member States. In the meantime, the United Nations would explore with the EU the possibility of a limited extension of EUFOR to cover any potential gap between the end of its mandate and the arrival of the new UN force, should the United Nations face force-generation difficulties.

On 24 September, by resolution 1834(2008) (see below), the Security Council extended the mandate of MINURCAT until 15 March 2009, and stated its intention to authorize the deployment of a UN military force to follow up EUFOR in Chad and the Central African Republic.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 September [meeting 5981], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1834(2008). The draft [S/2008/616] was submitted by Belgium, Costa Rica, Croatia, France, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the United States.

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communication. In a letter of 28 October [S/2008/679] to the Security Council, Chad asserted that certain passages in the September report of the Secretary-General did not accurately reflect its viewpoints on the question of an extended MINURCAT operation with a military component. Chad held that the mandate of the operation was essentially humanitarian, aimed at protecting civilians and improving security for the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The operation was not a conventional peacekeeping one implying some kind of “neutrality”, “impartiality” or “good offices” within the framework of any type of peace agreement; its main objective was to respond to the hopes for security placed in it by the humanitarian organizations that were at the origin of the appeal for that operation and by the affected populations in eastern Chad: refugees, displaced persons and host civilian populations. The force should not exceed 3,000 troops and, to effectively implement its mandate, it should be better equipped than EUFOR.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his December report [S/2008/760] on MINURCAT, the Secretary-General said that on 15 September, President Idriss Déby issued a decree reappointing or reassigning new governors in all 22 regions of the country, and appointing new préfets and secrétaires généraux in all 60 departments. On 9 October, the President issued a decree restructuring the territorial administration, including the establishment of four new administrative regions. Limited progress was made towards the implementation of electoral reforms. The Government had yet to approve and submit to the Parliament, for its formal consideration, draft bills related to the electoral law and the establishment of the National Electoral Commission, as provided for under the agreement of 13 August on electoral reform.

Although there were no major political developments related to the mandate of MINURCAT in the north-eastern part of the Central African Republic, the Sam Oundja refugee camp in that region, with a population of some 3,000 refugees from Darfur, was attacked on 8 November by an unidentified armed group. Subsequently, EUFOR evacuated nine humanitarian workers to Birao.

In Chad, the security situation remained unchanged. Carjackings, armed robberies and crimes targeting humanitarian workers, Chadian citizens and refugees continued. On 15 November, EUFOR reported that two Sudanese helicopters had fired on its road patrol, near Birak in eastern Chad, destroying two vehicles. In an effort to mitigate the continuing threat from unexploded ordnance and other explosive remnants of war scattered across eastern Chad as a result of conflicts going back to the 1980s, a UN mine-action team was deployed to MINURCAT headquarters in midyear to coordinate and monitor clearance of those devices. Eastern Chad faced a humanitarian challenge—exacerbated by attacks of heavily armed bandits—with over 290,000 Sudanese refugees, more than 180,000 internally displaced persons and a further 700,000 individuals among the host communities who were in need of food, water and health care.

As at 24 November, MINURCAT comprised 863 personnel, including 236 UN police officers and 46 military liaison officers. On 27 September, President Déby signed the decree formally establishing DIS. Shortly thereafter, the Chadian authorities presented to MINURCAT a list appointing 71 DIS commanders and specifying their assignments. On 16 October, the President signed a second decree appointing the Commander of DIS together with two Deputy Commanders (for operations and administration). MINURCAT completed the training of 109 new DIS officers. The major logistical challenge affecting UN police and DIS deployment having been the acute shortage of suitable accommodation and infrastructure, and skilled labour to undertake construction work, MINURCAT built four of five planned police stations for UN police and DIS.

(For information on Chad and the Sudan, see p. 267.)

Children and armed conflict

Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], the Secretary-General in August presented to the Security Council the second country report on children and armed conflict in Chad [S/2008/532]. The report, covering the period from July 2007 to June 2008, focused on six grave violations perpetrated against children in Chad, namely: recruiting or using child soldiers; killing and maiming of children; rape or other grave sexual violence against children; denial of humanitarian access to children; attacks against schools and hospitals; and the abduction of children. Those violations were situated in the volatile political, military and security context of continued armed conflict between the armed forces and rebel groups, the presence in eastern Chad of foreign rebel groups, cross-border raids by the Janjaweed, and continuing inter-ethnic tensions mainly between Arab and non-Arab communities.

All parties reportedly continued to recruit and use children. Unexploded ordnance and landmines were of concern, especially in the north. Rape and other sexual violence were said to be common, girls being the major victims. A significant and increasing number of incidents targeting humanitarian personnel and assets by parties to the conflict was reported. No direct attacks on schools were said to have occurred, but there were two attacks against schoolteachers in the Goz Beida area. Children had also been abducted as a result of the conflict.

The beginning of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration activities was seen as a positive step in addressing violations of child rights. All parties were urged to implement the recommendations set out in the Secretary-General's first report, along with the subsequent conclusions and recommendations of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict [YUN 2007, p. 157], and to comply with the resolutions of the Council on children and armed conflict to halt the child rights violations and abuses for which they had been cited. They were also urged to develop action plans to identify and release children from their ranks, in the framework of resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863] and on the basis of the criteria established for action plans.

MINURCAT

The mandate of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT), established by Security Council resolution 1778(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 153], was to help create the security conditions conducive to a voluntary, secure and sustainable return of refugees and displaced persons, including by contributing to the protection of refugees, displaced persons and civilians in danger; to facilitate the provision of humanitarian assistance in eastern Chad and the north-eastern Central African Republic; and to create favourable conditions for the reconstruction and development of those areas. Victor da Silva Angelo (Portugal) was the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of MINURCAT.

Expanded MINURCAT mandate. In resolution 1834(2008) (see p. 164), the Security Council requested an update on the planning and preparations for the transfer of authority from EUFOR—of which 3,300 troops were deployed in the area of operation—to a UN military force on 15 March 2009, including options on the size, structure and mandate of the proposed military presence in the Central African Republic. For that purpose, a UN technical assessment mission comprising representatives of DPKO, the Departments of Field Support and Safety and Security, as well as OCHA, UNHCR, OHCHR and MINURCAT, visited Chad and the Central African Republic from 6 to 13 October, in consequence of which the proposed plan for the force was further refined.

In view of concerns expressed by Chad regarding the UN force structure and composition and its areas of deployment, the Military Adviser for Peacekeeping Operations, Lieutenant General Chikadibia Obiakor, visited Chad from 12 to 14 November to consult the national authorities on the refined concept of operations for the new force. Meeting with the Secretary-General in Doha on 29 November, President Déby agreed to the deployment of a UN force of some 4,900 troops.

As the most immediate and constant threat to the civilian population and humanitarian operations lay in attacks by heavily armed bandits, the UN force would comprise some 4,900 troops, including three battalions in eastern Chad and a battalion-size mobile reserve force supported by 18 helicopters. In the Central African Republic, the Secretary-General recommended a small military liaison team of approximately 15 officers.

In consultation with the Headquarters Integrated Mission Task Force, including OCHA, UNDP, UNHCR, OHCHR and MINURCAT, the following benchmarks were developed for the exit strategy of MINURCAT: voluntary return and resettlement in secure conditions of a critical mass of internally displaced persons; demilitarization of refugee and internally displaced person camps; capacity of local authorities to provide the necessary security for refugees, internally displaced persons, civilians and humanitarian workers; ability of national law enforcement agencies to maintain law and order with respect for international human rights standards; progress of an independent and effective judiciary in eastern Chad helping to end impunity; and a strengthened prison system in eastern Chad based on a human rights approach to prison management. The benchmarks would be reviewed as the situation evolved and would form basis of the Mission's implementation plan.

Underscoring that the minimum requirement for the follow-on UN force was some 4,900 troops, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council for its consideration and authorization his proposals for the UN force presence in Chad and north-eastern Central African Republic.

The financial implications for establishing the force on a full-cost basis for a 12-month period were estimated at some $530.1 million [S/2008/760/Add.1].

Financing of MINURCAT

In April [A/62/804], the Secretary-General submitted the budget for MINURCAT for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 in the amount of $307,835,700. In June [A/62/781/Add.15], ACABQ recommended a reduced amount of $301,124,200.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/602/Add.1], adopted resolution 62/233 B without vote [agenda item 164].

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-third session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad".

Uganda

Political and security situation

In March, the Chief Mediator of the peace process between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), Riek Machar Teny, Vice-President of the Government of Southern Sudan, and the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the LRA-affected areas, former President of Mozambique Joaquim Albert Chissano, helped the parties conclude their negotiations and sign agreements on all the various agenda items. However, because the leader of LRA, Joseph Kony, did not sign the final peace agreement providing the capstone for the various agreements, the DRC, Southern Sudan and Uganda launched joint military action against his camps in the eastern DRC. According to the three countries, that military action was not intended to derail the peace process, but rather to pressure Mr. Kony into assembling, with his rebel forces, in Ri-Kwangba (Southern Sudan), and signing the final peace agreement.

By a letter of 23 June [S/2008/414] to the Security Council, the Secretary-General transmitted a communication from the Chief Mediator transmitted to him by the Special Envoy. In that communication, which reported on the status of the peace talks, the Chief Mediator stated that: efforts should continue to bring LRA back to the peace process; a door should be left open for diplomatic action that would restore dialogue with LRA in Juba even if other actions were contemplated; implementation of certain aspects of the Juba Agreements [YUN 2007, pp. 160 & 161], especially humanitarian and socio-economic interventions in LRA-affected areas, should begin; work should continue on establishing new justice institutions; the mediation process and certain mechanisms that had already been established should be sustained; and the process should continue to be adequately resourced to ensure that those affected by the conflict were assisted in returning to their communities. That would also enable the Mediator, the Facilitator and other stakeholders to ensure their preparedness to deal with the demobilization of LRA when the group returned to the process.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 6058], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/48 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council is grateful for the efforts undertaken by Mr. Joaquim Chissano, former President of Mozambique, as the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the Lord's Resistance Army-affected areas. The Council expresses its appreciation for his briefing of 17 December 2008, and agrees with his recommendation that the peace efforts should continue. The Council welcomes President Chissano's readiness to continue in his role for a further period.

The Council reiterates its welcome of the Final Peace Agreement, negotiated between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army and reached through the Juba peace process. The Council commends the Government of Uganda for its continued commitment to the Agreement and its investment in the peace process.

The Council condemns the repeated failure of Mr. Joseph Kony to sign the Final Peace Agreement. It calls upon the Lord's Resistance Army to sign and honour the Agreement immediately and to begin the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration to ensure a peaceful, political solution.

The Council strongly condemns the recent attacks by the Lord's Resistance Army in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Southern Sudan, which pose a continuing threat to regional security. It demands that the Lord's Resistance Army cease its recruitment and use of children and that it release immediately all women, children and other non-combatants, in accordance with Council resolution 1612(2005). The Council reiterates its deep concern at the long-running and brutal insurgency by the Lord's Resistance Army, which has caused the death, abduction and displacement of thousands of innocent civilians in Uganda, the Sudan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

The Council recalls the International Criminal Court arrest warrants for certain leaders of the Lord's Resistance Army on charges of, among other things, war crimes and crimes against humanity, including murder, rape and the enlistment of children through abduction. The Council recalls the statement by its President of 22 June 2006, and reaffirms that it attaches vital importance to promoting justice and the rule of law, including respect for human rights, as an indispensable element for lasting peace. The Council reaffirms that ending impunity is essential for a society recovering from conflict to come to terms with past abuses committed against civilians and to prevent their recurrence.

The Council commends the States in the region for their increased cooperation and welcomes the joint efforts they have made to address the security threat posed by the Lord's Resistance Army. The Council calls upon these States to ensure that all actions are carried out in accordance with international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law and to take appropriate measures to protect civilians. The Council encourages these States to keep the United Nations missions in the region informed about their actions.

The Council welcomes the re-establishment of peace and security in northern Uganda. It encourages the Government of Uganda, with the support of international partners, to honour its commitment to accelerate reconciliation, recovery and development in that region through rapid implementation of its Peace, Recovery and Development Plan for Northern Uganda and relevant agenda items in the Final Peace Agreement and to disburse anticipated financing for the Peace, Recovery and Development Plan without delay.

The Council will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Extension of Special Envoy. In a letter of 23 December [S/2008/826] to the Security Council, the Secretary-General reported that the political process, suspended in early December by the Chief Mediator, might resume shortly. Uganda remained committed to the continuation of the peace process, and the door remained open for Mr. Kony to sign the final peace agreement. In the meantime, as a direct result of the successes in the peace process, security had returned to northern Uganda, economic activities had gradually been resumed, and internally displaced persons had returned home. Consequently, the Secretary-General recommended that the mandate of the Office of the Special Envoy be extended for an additional year, until 31 December 2009, to allow him to continue his efforts towards achieving a durable peace in northern Uganda.

The Office would continue to: assist the Special Envoy in developing a relationship of mutual trust among the parties and the mediation and in building their confidence in the political process; assist the Special Envoy in coordinating the efforts of the regional players, donors and civil society organizations involved; follow up on the peace talks on behalf of the Special Envoy and promote a peaceful agreement between Uganda and LRA through the support of African ambassadors; coordinate the activities of the five African ambassadors/guarantors of the peace process (DRC, Kenya, Mozambique, South Africa, United Republic of Tanzania); serve as a focal point for the Special Envoy's regional activities, including the co-ordination of all international activities in support of the talks; liaise with all stakeholders in Uganda and in the region; monitor and analyse internal and regional political and security developments in Uganda and neighbouring countries; coordinate the activities of the unit in Juba; and maintain close consultation with MONUC and UNMIS on security and military issues in connection with the Special Envoy's mandate.

In a letter of 29 December [S/2008/827] to the Secretary-General, the Security Council took note of that information and recommendation.

Children and armed conflict

In June, in response to the request of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict for an update on the implementation of the recommendation contained in paragraph 11 of its conclusions issued pursuant to his 2007 report on children and armed conflict in Uganda [YUN 2007, p. 161], the Secretary-General submitted to the Council an additional report on children and armed conflict in Uganda [S/2008/409] that also highlighted recent incidents of cross-border recruitment and the use of children from the Central African Republic, the DRC and Southern Sudan by LRA.

Owing to the apparent absence of LRA from Ugandan territory, there had been no recent cases of recruitment and use of Ugandan children, or other grave violations against children attributable to LRA. Children and women, however, were still present in LRA ranks, and there had been no movement on their release. There were reports alleging that LRA had been recruiting children from the Central African Republic, the DRC and Southern Sudan, abducting them from school and even killing them. Further discussions on how best to monitor and report on the violations committed against children by LRA would be held with the United Nations Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting in Uganda, the DRC, the Central African Republic and the Sudan, taking into account the regional cross-border dimension of the problem. The Task Forces should be requested to develop, in cooperation with MONUC, a strategy for increased regional joint capability to monitor and report on cross-border recruitment and the use of children by LRA. The latter was urged to provide a complete list of names and ages of the women and children remaining in its ranks for verification, and to effect their immediate release.

Rwanda

Political and security situation

The border area between Rwanda and the DRC remained an area of concern, as violence reignited in August in the volatile eastern region of the DRC, on the border with Rwanda, and a cross-border incident between the two countries highlighted the threat of a wider regional conflict (see p. 126). In addition, the Security Council, by resolution 1804(2008), took action to address the presence of Rwandan armed groups in the DRC (see p. 116).

End of arms embargo

Welcoming recent steps towards the restoration of peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, the Security Council terminated several measures imposed in the wake of the devastating 1994 Rwanda genocide to prohibit the sale and supply of arms and related materiel for use in that country. It also dissolved, by resolution 1823(2008) (below), the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 285] to monitor the arms embargo concerning Rwanda.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 July [meeting 5931], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1823(2008). The draft [S/2008/432] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 918(1994) of 17 May 1994, 1005(1995) of 17 July 1995, 1011(1995) of 16 August 1995, 1013(1995) of 7 September 1995, 1053(1996) of 23 April 1996, 1161(1998) of 9 April 1998 and 1749(2007) of 28 March 2007,

Stressing also the need for States in the region to ensure that arms and related materiel delivered to them are not diverted to or used by illegal armed groups,

Recalling the joint communiqué of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Government of the Republic of Rwanda signed at Nairobi on 9 November 2007 and the outcome of the Conference on Peace, Security and Development in North and South Kivu, held in Goma, Democratic Republic of the Congo, from 6 to 23 January 2008, which together represent a major step towards the restoration of lasting peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, and looking forward to their full implementation,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region, and stressing the importance of its full implementation,

Reiterating its call upon the States of the region to deepen further their cooperation with a view to consolidating peace in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to terminate the prohibitions imposed by paragraphs 9 and 10 of resolution 1011(1995);

2. Decides also to dissolve the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 918(1994) concerning Rwanda.

West Africa

Regional issues

Peace consolidation in West Africa

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a Security Council request to report on the fulfilment of the revised mandate of the United Nations Office for West Africa (UNOWA) every six months [YUN 2007, p. 168], the Secretary-General in June submitted a report [S/2008/426] covering the period from 1 January to 30 June 2008, which also addressed the recommendations made in his March 2007 report on cross-border issues in West Africa [YUN 2007, p. 165]. The Secretary-General said that significant progress was made in West Africa in the consolidation of peace and democratic governance, and UN peace missions had begun to wind down. Two countries in the subregion—Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone—had been placed on the agenda of the United Nations Peacebuilding Commission, and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) was demonstrating increased capacity to tackle political, social, economic and security problems. However, many challenges remained, such as youth unemployment, rapid urbanization and irregular migration, while others were emerging or increasing in proportion, including social and economic crises, human and drug trafficking, and insecurity in the Sahelian band. In order to assess and raise awareness of progress made and challenges facing countries of the subregion, particularly with regard to electoral processes, rising food prices and climate change, three high-level missions were undertaken: the Secretary-General embarked on a four-nation visit to Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana and Liberia (19–23 April); the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs visited eight countries in the subregion (9–21 May); and the Secretary-General's Special Adviser on conflict visited the Sahel region (Burkina Faso, Mali, the Niger) from 1 to 6 June.

The Secretary-General said that the socio-economic landscape of West Africa was becoming a growing threat to peace and security. Half of the population was living below the poverty line, and with an annual growth rate of 2.3 per cent, the population in the subregion was expected to double by 2050, further exacerbating pressure on land and other resources and leading to greater social and political instability. Youth unemployment, with 65 per cent of some 270 million people under the age of 30 years either unemployed or underemployed, remained a concern. Meanwhile, the food crisis had become a security risk which, if not effectively addressed, could trigger violent demonstrations, strikes and other manifestations of civil unrest, such as the street protests in Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Senegal, or destabilize countries struggling to recover from conflict or experiencing political difficulties. The report also highlighted the vulnerability of the subregion to climate change and disruptive weather patterns; rapid urbanization of cities; pollution of the urban environment; toxic waste; and rising food prices.

Significant advances with regard to governance had been made, and democracy and peace were slowly yet firmly taking root. However, that progress was jeopardized by widespread corruption, which contributed to weakening State institutions and the rule of law, and in its worst form led to human rights abuses and the outbreak of conflict. New corruption practices had flourished with the discovery of natural resources, and transparent and accountable oversight of resource management was needed if all segments of society were to reap the benefits of national wealth. The resolution of long-standing conflicts had put an end to mass human rights violations, but those continued on a smaller scale due largely to the prevailing culture of impunity. The establishment of transitional justice mechanisms had borne results, yet more work was needed to ensure accountability for past and ongoing human rights violations. Elections were highlighted as potentially destabilizing processes that threatened fragile countries. In light of the elections scheduled during the year in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea and Guinea-Bissau, efforts needed to be made to ensure credible electoral processes and to avoid violence and instability.

A key challenge for many post-conflict and transitional countries in the subregion was security sector reform. Despite efforts to improve oversight of the security sector, restructure and train security forces, and increase engagement of the international community, security forces in a number of West African countries continued to be a source of aggravation for the population. Widespread bribery and extortion at illegal checkpoints and roadblocks restricted the free movement of goods and people, impeding economic development and integration. Persisting discontent over poor living conditions, inadequate compensation and limited employment opportunities for former combatants had led disgruntled security forces to engage in more lucrative criminal activity.

On cross-border issues, the Secretary-General said that due to their fragile economies and weak Governments, West African societies were particularly vulnerable to corruption and lawlessness. Some countries of the Sahel region, such as Guinea and Guinea-Bissau, had become fertile ground for organized crime. Drug trafficking constituted the most widespread cross-border activity, and in some cases, drug trafficking networks had permeated Government structures and security forces. Other areas of concern included human trafficking, which affected women, children and migrants and was a growing trend; the estimated 10 million light weapons circulating throughout the region and the continuing proliferation of small arms; the potential eruption of border conflicts, particularly where international borders had yet to be delimited and demarcated; and the crisis in the Sahel region, particularly northern Niger and Mali, which was emerging as one of the most pressing threats to peace and security in West Africa. In addition to being home to rebel activity, the region had proven to be a breeding ground for cross-border crime. Drug trafficking, arms smuggling and irregular migration, particularly along the trans-Saharan caravan routes, were on the rise. The increasingly blurred lines between criminal, rebel and terrorist activities further complicated efforts to address the situation.

The Secretary-General observed that most West African countries were in a period of transition from conflict to peace consolidation, and remained fragile and vulnerable to outbreaks of renewed violence. UNOWA would continue to play an active role in mobilizing support to the subregion, focusing its activities on capacity-building, peace consolidation and cross-border challenges. In particular, the Office would engage in building the capacity of countries and their institutions in areas such as security sector reform, good governance and the rule of law, with attention given to cooperation with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to facilitate peaceful electoral processes. On security sector reform, UNOWA would undertake consultations to facilitate the adoption of an ECOWAS strategy by emphasizing the importance of a subregional approach to the issue. UNOWA would strengthen its collaboration with ECOWAS to enhance the effectiveness of early warning systems and other conflict-prevention mechanisms; raise awareness on cross-border threats to peace and security; and, with regard to sensitive border areas, promote the peaceful settlement of disputes and recommend confidence-building measures such as joint military patrols and regular consultations with affected populations to minimize violent incidents. The Office would also intensify its efforts, in cooperation with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and other institutions, to combat cross-border crime. On the food crisis, UNOWA would raise awareness of the problem and promote concerted solutions addressing short- and long-term needs through sustained engagement with Governments, UN agencies and civil society.

Year-end developments. In a later report [S/2009/39], the Secretary-General said that the problems of youth unemployment, food insecurity and rapid urbanization, as well as the challenges posed by corruption, irregular migration, human and drug trafficking, and the proliferation of small arms and light weapons had been compounded by the adverse impact of the global financial and food crises on West African countries. Large segments of the population were forced to reduce consumption or exclude certain food items from their diets. The financial crisis and threat of a global recession raised concerns about its impact on African economies, prospects for meeting the Millennium Development Goals and the potential reduction in foreign direct investment and remittances from abroad. Transnational organized crime, particularly drug trafficking, was becoming a major concern. Several countries had reported important seizures of narcotics on their territory, unauthorized aeroplane landings most likely linked to drug trafficking, and arrests of European, Latin American and West African nationals involved in illicit trafficking. In a positive development, in Liberia, national law enforcement agencies and United Nations Mission in Liberia police conducted an operation that resulted in the eradication of some 400,000 cannabis plants. Meanwhile, the scourge of coups d'état had re-emerged, as evidenced by the 6 August military coup against the President of Mauritania, Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdellahi; the 23 November attack on the residence of the President of Guinea-Bissau, João Bernardo Vieira; and the move by a group of military officers in Guinea on 23 December to seize power after the death of President Lansana Conté. West Africa was also affected by severe flooding in the course of the rainy season, resulting in hundreds of deaths and damage to infrastructure, property and crops in several countries.

UNOWA

UNOWA was established by the Secretary-General in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 162] and extended for three years from 1 January 2005 to 31 December 2007 on the recommendation of the Secretary-General [YUN 2004, p. 170] and the concurrence of the Security Council [YUN 2005, p. 224]. Following a 2006 midterm review of the Office [YUN 2006, p. 175], and subsequent recommendations by an independent consultant, the functions and activities of UNOWA were revised in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 168], and the Council extended its mandate until 31 December 2010 [ibid.]. General Lamine Cissé (Senegal) continued to serve as Officer-in-Charge for UNOWA through March 2008. UNOWA maintained its headquarters in Dakar, Senegal.

Appointment. In February, by an exchange of letters with the Security Council President [S/2008/127, S/2008/128], the Secretary-General appointed Said Djinnit (Algeria) as his Special Representative for West Africa and Head of UNOWA. He took up his functions on 1 April, replacing Mr. Cissé.

Activities

During the year, UNOWA activities focused on eight main areas: strengthening the capacity of ECOWAS; subregional cooperation; UN inter-institutional cooperation; governance; cross-border issues; human rights and gender; food security and humanitarian assistance; and support to the Cameroon–Nigeria Mixed Commission. The Office convened high-level meetings with the heads of UN peace missions in West Africa to exchange views on the situation in the subregion and emerging threats to peace, including the food crisis, developments in the Sahelian band in light of increasing cross-border organized crime, deteriorating security in northern areas of the subregion, and the situation in Guinea and its potential impact on the Mano River region.

Strengthening the capacity of ECOWAS to help prevent, manage and resolve conflicts remained a UNOWA priority. UNOWA–ECOWAS cooperation advanced and was evidenced by a joint mission (Conakry, Guinea, 4–6 February) to attend a meeting of the national electoral commissions of ECOWAS member States, which led to the establishment of a subregional network of electoral commissions; joint missions to several West African countries to address threats to peace and security; and the participation of UNOWA military advisers in planning conferences for a command post exercise of the ECOWAS standby force (Bamako, Mali, 15–21 June). UNOWA organized the first meeting of the task force of the ECOWAS Gender Development Centre (Dakar, 31 January–1 February), which adopted the task force's workplan and terms of reference. UNOWA also worked to engage ECOWAS on the ongoing food crisis, and encouraged the adoption by West African countries of an integrated approach to the problem. In a tripartite effort, UNOWA, ECOWAS and UNODC worked to address the threat of cross-border crime and drug trafficking, and organized the Ministerial Conference on Drug Trafficking as a Security Threat to West Africa (Praia, Cape Verde, 28–29 October) (see p. 228).

In other activities, UNOWA led a Department of Political Affairs assessment mission to Guinea (14–21 March); attended the meeting of the Mano River Union (MRU) Council of Ministers and the summit of MRU Heads of State and Government (14–15 May); facilitated the visit of a delegation from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) to operationalize OHCHR's new regional office for West Africa in Dakar; and organized an experts' workshop (26–27 June) to facilitate a harmonized and integrated approach to human rights and gender. The Office continued to host the West African office of the Youth Employment Network [YUN 2007, p. 167], which resumed its study of youth employment initiatives in West African countries. UNOWA participated in an experts' meeting (Dakar, 7–9 October) to assist the ECOWAS early warning system in designing a Web-based forum for the exchange of information among key subregional stakeholders, including political and human rights experts. It also facilitated linkages among UN system institutions in the subregion, and on 10 July and 6 October, convened information-sharing and coordination meetings of heads of Dakar-based UN agencies.

In support of the Cameroon–Nigeria Mixed Commission, UNOWA chaired the March and June meetings of the Commission, which resulted in the finalization of the maritime boundary line between Cameroon and Nigeria; an agreement to provide information on offshore oil and gas resources; plans for the upcoming transfer of authority in the Zone of the Bakassi peninsula; and a discussion on further confidence-building measures.

Financing

In a report issued in October [A/63/346/Add.3] dealing with estimated requirements for special political missions grouped under thematic cluster III (United Nations offices, peacebuilding support offices, integrated offices and commissions), the Secretary-General proposed resource requirements for UNOWA in the amount of $5,788,600 for the period 1 January to 31 December 2009, which ACABQ recommended for approval [A/63/593].

On 24 December, in section XI of resolution 63/263, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ and approved the budgets for 27 special political missions, including the UNOWA budget, under section 3, Political affairs, of the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium (see p. 1548).

Other regional developments

During the year, ECOWAS continued efforts to realize its peace consolidation strategy, particularly in improving regional security, controlling small arms proliferation and drug trafficking, and articulating a conflict prevention framework as envisaged during the 2004 Security Council mission to the region [YUN 2004, p. 169]. Other priority areas included general aspects of development and the creation of an ECOWAS Emergency Strategic Intervention Unit to address natural disasters and other emergency humanitarian situations. At a meeting of the ECOWAS Mediation and Security Council (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 16 January), members adopted the ECOWAS Conflict Prevention Framework, which would provide the ECOWAS Commission and its member States with a common mechanism for early reaction to issues relating to good governance, conflict prevention and resolution, and the inclusion of those themes in ECOWAS programmes. On 7 February, the heads of institutions responsible for managing elections in ECOWAS member States met in Conakry, Guinea, and established the ECOWAS Network of Electoral Commissions for cooperation in improving electoral laws and practices, the exchange of experiences and best practices, and the pooling and sharing of electoral resources to ensure cost-effectiveness. In May, ECOWAS convened meetings of its Small Arms Programme

(ECOSAP) to improve collaboration among member States on border management to control the movement of small arms and light weapons. At the end of a seven-day ECOWAS Command Post Exercise to assess the status of the troops pledged for the 6,500-strong ECOWAS Standby Force (ESF), and their operational readiness, equipment and training level (Bamako, Mali, 21 June), organizers and partners said that the exercise had achieved the set objectives. In October, ECOWAS approved a 10-day field-training exercise in 2009 for the logistic component of ESF to evaluate its capacity to support peace operations. In other activities, the ECOWAS Heads of State and Government, at their thirty-third ordinary summit (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 18 January), adopted a poverty reduction strategy document and the ECOWAS Common Approach on Migration, a regional mechanism for addressing the challenges of intra-community mobility and migration to third countries; ECOWAS co-hosted a conference on “African Youth and Employment” (Accra, Ghana, 5 September); and it convened an experts meeting on Drug Trafficking as a Security Threat to West Africa (Praia, Cape Verde, 26–27 October). In other developments, the Security Council, on 16 April, held a debate on the “Relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations, in particular the African Union, in the maintenance of international peace and security”.

Côte d’Ivoire

In 2008, the United Nations, the Economic Community of West African States, the African Union and the international community supported Government efforts to move the peace process forward in Côte d’Ivoire through implementation of the 2007 Ouagadougou Agreement and its supplementary accords [YUN 2007, pp. 174 & 184]. The United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire assisted the Government in the removal of the Green Line (former zone of confidence), the completion of the mobile courts operations, preparations for the presidential elections scheduled for 30 November, and the continued stability of the political and security environment. The partnership between President Laurent Gbagbo and Prime Minister Guillaume Soro remained strong. The lifting of the Green Line allowed political party leaders and the general population to move freely throughout the country. The Security Council mission that visited the country in June noted a relaxed political and security environment marked by a renewed confidence in the Agreement. However, obstacles hampered progress in the disarmament of former combatants, the dismantling of militias and other key aspects of the peace process. Due to accumulated logistical and technical delays, the authorities postponed the elections until 2009. In December, a fourth supplementary accord to the Agreement was signed, which clarified issues related to security sector reform and the restoration of State administration throughout the country.

The Panel of Experts continued to monitor implementation of the arms, travel and diamond sanctions imposed on Côte d’Ivoire. In October, the Security Council decided to renew the sanctions on arms and diamonds, as well as the travel measures, for a further 12 months.

Implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement

In 2008, efforts continued to move the peace process forward through implementation of the 2007 Ouagadougou Agreement, its supplementary agreements and resolution 1721(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 197], which provided a road map for the transition period. The lifting of the Green Line, which replaced the abolished zone of confidence that had separated troops belonging to the National Armed Forces of Côte d’Ivoire—deployed in the Government-controlled south of the country—from those of the rebel movement (Forces nouvelles)—deployed in the north [YUN 2007, p. 176]—continued under the control of the Integrated Command Centre (CCI) [ibid., p. 182], established to implement the military and security aspects of the Agreement and manned by Government and Forces nouvelles personnel. The United Nations Operation in Côte d’Ivoire (UNOCI) carried out the functions under its revised mandate [YUN 2007, p. 170] and was supported by the Licorne (French forces), whose deployment was endorsed by Security Council resolution 1464(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 168].

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his January report [S/2008/1] on UNOCI, the Secretary-General said that the overall security situation in the country had improved owing to the favourable political environment engendered by the Ouagadougou Agreement, which addressed issues that had blocked the identification of the population, the preparation of the voter list, the disarmament process, the restructuring of the armed forces and the restoration of State authority throughout the country. The national armed forces and the armed forces of the Forces nouvelles had demonstrated a willingness to collaborate, providing security for confidence-building events, such as the visits of President Gbagbo to the northern part of the country and of Prime Minister Soro to the presidential stronghold of Gagnoa. Since the establishment of the Green Line (former zone of confidence), no violations had been recorded and the overall risk of a resumption of hostilities between the two forces was assessed as low. The performance of CCI had improved and Ivorian mixed police units continued to maintain law and order with the support of UNOCI police officers. Eight of the 17 observation points along the Green Line had been removed in accordance with the Agreement to halve the number of posts every two months. However, the Centre faced difficulties in fulfilling its mandate, as a result of financial constraints and its limited planning and operational capacities. Other factors of instability remained a threat to the peace process, such as the lack of progress towards the unification of the national defence and security forces and the dismantling and disarmament of militias in the western part of the country. Criminality was on the rise in several areas of the country, and incidents of extortion and denial of freedom of movement perpetrated by both the national armed forces and the Forces nouvelles continued to be reported.

Despite those challenges, the Secretary-General noted that the November 2007 signing of the second and third agreements [YUN 2007, p. 184] supplementary to the Ouagadougou Agreement—one designating the technical operator for the identification of the population and the other establishing new timelines for implementing the Agreement—gave new impetus to the peace process. With regard to voter registration, it was expected that the Government would be able to expedite the process once a consensual modus operandi for identification and the establishment of the voter rolls had been finalized. UNOCI set up a small certification support cell that was developing criteria and benchmarks for the conduct of the certification exercise, to be agreed upon with the Facilitator and Burkina Faso President Blaise Compaoré, in consultation with other partners. The mobile courts operations to identify the population, which commenced in September 2007 [ibid., p. 182], progressed without any major security incidents. As at 24 December, the mobile courts had granted 93,027 duplicate birth certificates nationwide. However, of the 55 technical teams deployed, only 33 were operational, and the geographical coverage of the mobile teams was limited to 47 of the country's 727 communes. Meanwhile, the redeployment of UNOCI forces from the former zone of confidence was ongoing. The force would be spread throughout the country to support CCI in providing security for the redeployment of State administration; the identification of the population; the disarmament and dismantling of militias; the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants; and preparations for the elections. In order to increase the mobility of its troops, UNOCI would reduce the number of its camps from 44 to 24. Six camps had already been dismantled, and 18 more were expected to be vacated in early 2008. Four new camps would be established at Divo and Issia in the west, Dabakala in the north and Adzope, near Abidjan, in the south. UNOCI's police component continued to provide advice and training to the national police and gendarmerie in the Government-controlled areas, and would assist CCI in conducting an assessment of their needs in the context of the envisaged reform of the security sector. The Licorne (French forces) continued to maintain its full, quick-reaction capacity to support UNOCI, and France reaffirmed its commitment to maintaining the force in the country.

The Secretary-General said that the direct involvement of President Gbagbo and Prime Minister Soro in resolving key issues demonstrated the value of their partnership and the importance of a consensual approach and Ivorian ownership of the peace process. He took note of their efforts to consult with members of the political opposition on implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, and the intention of the Facilitator to convene more frequent meetings of the standing consultative forum to encourage dialogue. He also called on the international consultative organ established by resolution 1765(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 180] to play a more proactive role in supporting the parties in the implementation of the Agreement, including by providing advice and helping to overcome obstacles. On the conduct of the elections, he stated that while the United Nations would not organize the elections as it had done in other countries, his Special Representative would conduct the certification of all stages of the electoral process in an impartial manner, in consultation with the parties, the Facilitator and international partners. As only limited progress was made in restoring State authority and disarming militias and combatants, he recommended that the Security Council extend the UNOCI mandate for a 12-month period, until 15 January 2009, and that the strength of the Operation be maintained until the benchmarks set out in his May 2007 report [ibid., p. 176] were achieved.

On 15 January, by resolution 1795(2008) (see below), the Security Council renewed the mandates of UNOCI and the French forces supporting it until 30 July, and requested the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of key steps of the peace process three weeks prior to that date.

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Technical assessment mission (March)

The Secretary-General reported [S/2008/250] that at the request of his Special Representative, a technical assessment mission visited Côte d'Ivoire from 3 to 12 March to assess the progress made towards preparing for the elections and to assist UNOCI in developing proposals on the role the Operation should play in supporting the remaining tasks of the Ouagadougou Agreement. The assessment mission, comprising UN representatives from the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Department of Political Affairs and the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, met with international and Ivorian stakeholders, including President Gbagbo, Prime Minister Soro, the Chiefs of Staff of the Ivorian defence and security forces and of the Forces nouvelles, representatives of political parties, and the heads of national institutions responsible for implementing key processes under the Agreement. The mission noted an improvement in the overall political and security environment. It confirmed that all parties were interested in holding national elections in 2008, were convinced that the Agreement had ended the armed conflict and believed that the lingering political crisis could be resolved only through the holding of elections. The road to the elections, on the other hand, was fraught with technical challenges and security and political risks. In addition, most of the key election-related processes were plagued by funding gaps. At the technical level, the electoral timelines were problematic. The third supplementary agreement envisaged that presidential elections would be held by the end of the first semester of 2008; all parties recognized that that was no longer technically feasible. There were also concerns that the identification of the population might become contentious. Although feedback on the mobile court operations from Ivorian stakeholders was positive, the opposition party Rassemblement des républicains complained that many Ivorians had not been able to access the mobile courts—primarily in the west—owing to the presence of militias, even if they were dormant. On security aspects, most parties insisted that disarmament must precede the elections. The Forces nouvelles maintained that they would canton their combatants and place their weapons in storage, in accordance with the third supplementary agreement, once the civic service and reintegration programmes were in place. However, the civic service programme was still only a concept, and donors insisted that they would fund reintegration programmes only if they were involved in their design and implementation. While the Chiefs of Staff of the defence and security forces and of the Forces nouvelles had developed a proposal for a unified transition army that would be composed of mixed units responsible for providing security to the electoral process, the proposal had yet to be approved by the President and Prime Minister. Moreover, decisions on the ranks and salaries of the Forces nouvelles elements that would rejoin the army were still pending. Meanwhile, reintegration of the Forces nouvelles elements into the national police and gendarmerie stalled following the police and gendarmerie commanders' rejection of the proposal by the Facilitator to include 4,000 Forces nouvelles personnel in those forces. Other security concerns included the possibility of civil unrest emanating from the population's frustration with the slow progress of the peace process; the continuing exploitation by armed groups in the north; and the threat of dormant militias being mobilized during the elections. In that regard, the Chief of Staff of the defence and security forces, along with the police and gendarmerie commanders, reiterated the request for the Security Council to grant an exception to the arms embargo to allow the import of riot control gear and side weapons for the police and of spare parts for the military transport helicopter.

On the role of UNOCI in supporting the remaining tasks under the Agreement, the assessment mission identified seven areas on which UNOCI would focus: helping the parties address challenges and minimize risks identified in the report; supporting efforts by the parties and the Facilitator to keep the peace process on track; contributing to a secure environment for the elections; contributing to enhancing the credibility of the electoral process; providing logistical support for the elections; assisting national institutions in carrying out key tasks that had to be completed before the elections; and devising a public information strategy to sensitize the Ivorian players about the UNOCI role in the peace process. The UNOCI military and police components would devise, respectively, contingency plans for stabilization interventions to prevent acts of violence aimed at disrupting the peace process and for the redeployment of the UNOCI riot control capabilities to high-risk areas, including the western part of the country, Bouaké and Abidjan. On disarmament, UNOCI would support an accelerated implementation of the cantonment of forces and work with the Facilitator to encourage the parties to agree on an arrangement for the control of weapons placed under storage. The assessment mission also reported on support to persons affected by the conflict, efforts to create a positive political environment through the media, the monitoring of the human rights situation, the economic recovery process and financial support for the implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement.

Other political and security developments

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his April report [S/2008/250] on Côte d'Ivoire, the Secretary-General said that the security situation remained stable yet fragile, owing to the lack of progress in disarming the Forces nouvelles and in dismantling the militias in the west. Violent crimes, particularly armed robberies in the western part of the country, were a major concern. Several individuals were arrested in association with a December 2007 attack against Forces nouvelles personnel in Bouaké. Supporters of Sergeant Ibrahim Coulibaly, a former member of the Forces nouvelles, were accused of the attacks, and criminal investigations were ongoing. In another incident, 11 individuals allegedly associated with Mr. Coulibaly were arrested in Abidjan for plotting a coup. On 30 January 2008, the prosecutor of the military court in Abidjan issued an international arrest warrant against Mr. Coulibaly, who was accused of conspiracy against the State. Although demonstrations in Abidjan and San Pedro on 31 March and 1 April against the rising cost of living turned violent and disrupted the mobile courts operations, the demonstrations stopped after the Government announced emergency measures to curb taxes on food and basic services for a three-month period.

As the security and political climate continued to improve, political parties increased their activities throughout the country. On 1 February, the Rassemblement des républicains held its convention in Abidjan and designated its leader, Alassane Ouattara, as the party's candidate for the presidential elections. The ruling party, the Front populaire ivoirien, held a rally in Bouaké, the stronghold of the Forces nouvelles, with the participation of the Minister for Defence, who was also the chairman of President Gbagbo's campaign for the presidential election. The party also started a campaign tour in the north on 31 March. During a two-day visit to Abidjan (5-6 March), the ECOWAS Commission President announced that his organization would support the electoral process financially and deploy electoral observers. The partnership between President Gbagbo and Prime Minister Soro remained strong and they continued to consult with regional leaders on progress made in the implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement.

On 14 January and 21 March, the Facilitator of the peace process, President Compaoré, convened meetings of the Evaluation and Monitoring Committee (CEA) of the Ouagadougou Agreement established to monitor the implementation of the Agreement and address any obstacles. The international consultative organ, comprising the international partners of Côte d'Ivoire, including UNOCI, participated in the meetings. In January, participants stressed the need to prioritize the electoral process and for the United Nations to elaborate, in consultation with the Government, the parameters and modus operandi of the Secretary-General's Special Representative in the certification of all stages of the electoral process. At the March meeting, participants recommended that the decrees related to the modalities for voter registration and for the collaboration between the technical operator (the French company SAGEM) and the National Institute of Statistics, as well as the SAGEM contract to produce national identity cards and voter cards, be concluded as soon as possible in order to facilitate announcing a date for the elections. They also recommended the acceleration of the cantonment of combatants; the immediate start of the disarmament and dismantling of militias; and the Government's provision of appropriate funding for the cantonment operations and reintegration of ex-combatants.

The report also summarized the status of implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, including building the capacity of CCI, which stood at 544 out of the authorized maximum of 568 Forces nouvelles and national defence and security personnel. UNOCI continued redeploying its troops from the former zone of confidence in order to reinforce its presence in the west and the north and to make additional troops available to support CCI; UNOCI had removed all except 2 of the 17 observation posts it had established along the Green Line. The commanders of the two armed forces made efforts to begin their respective cantonment. On 24 January, the Chief of Staff of the defence and security forces announced that 12,000 of his soldiers had been cantoned and registered, and had deposited their weapons in storage. The cantonment of Forces nouvelles, however, had not progressed significantly. As at 1 April, only 109 elements had been cantoned due to logistical and financial constraints, as well as the lack of a clearly defined reintegration programme. While the national programme for reinsertion and community rehabilitation, which was expected to absorb 6,000 ex-combatants, had facilitated the registration and profiling of Forces nouvelles personnel, the programme faced funding and operational challenges. The civic service programme, intended to absorb 20,000 former combatants and 20,000 youth at risk, had yet to be launched and would cost approximately $90 million. The Government requested CCI to start the disarmament and dismantling of militias by 18 February, and UNOCI built and equipped four weapons collections points, which were handed over to the authorities on 17 March. The process remained stalled due to the absence of arrangements for conducting the operation and lack of an agreement between the Government and militia leaders on the payment of salaries and reintegration arrangements for the militia. On 20 February, President Gbagbo signed a decree establishing a working group to develop a framework for the organization, composition and functioning of the new national defence and security forces. On 5 January, the Facilitator presented a proposal on the numbers of Forces nouvelles to be integrated into the new national defence forces, which included 5,000 to join the armed forces, 600 security auxiliaries trained by UNOCI to be integrated into the police and gendarmerie, and 3,400 additional personnel to be assigned to CCI. Although the parties had not formally responded to the Facilitator's proposals, they formed the basis for discussion by the working group.

The restoration of State administration throughout the country was hampered by various constraints. Out of the 24,437 civil servants who had been displaced during the conflict, only 6,094 had yet to return to their posts, but a funding shortfall of some $20.7 million to complete the redeployment exercise hindered progress. The redeployment of finance and customs officials faced challenges, such as the absence of a comprehensive plan for redeploying the law enforcement, legal, judicial and corrections personnel needed to provide support to the officials. In addition, the judiciary could not be redeployed prior to the completion of the mobile courts operations, as 50 per cent of the country's judges were involved in that exercise. In that connection, the mobile courts were expected to complete their operations by the end of April. Some 111 mobile courts were involved in the identification of the population, and as at 8 April, the number of duplicate birth certificates issued since the first wave of mobile courts operations in 2006 totalled 565,854. On 20 February, the Government adopted the technical specifications for the issuing of identity cards and voter cards; the contract between the Government and SAGEM was signed on 27 March. However, the division of responsibilities between SAGEM and the National Institute of Statistics, which traditionally produced the cards and was expected to conduct the identification and registration process jointly with SAGEM, had yet to be defined.

In other aspects of the electoral process, the Independent Electoral Commission (IEC), with assistance from UNOCI, completed the mapping of 90 per cent of the 10,453 proposed polling stations using global positioning technology. The Secretary-General's Special Representative elaborated a framework for certifying all stages of the electoral process that included benchmarks to assess the existence of a secure environment during the period leading to the elections; the full participation of the population and the candidates in the process; the inclusiveness of the electoral process; the equitable access of all candidates to the media and media neutrality; the credibility of the electoral lists and their acceptance by all parties; and the results of the election, as determined through a transparent counting process and accepted by all or challenged peacefully through appropriate channels. The benchmarks were defined in consultation with all national and international partners. The legal framework for the electoral process, along with an ordinance modifying the electoral code and a decree on the modalities for the establishment of the new voters list, had yet to be finalized. The Secretary-General observed that the Ouagadougou Agreement had built upon the progress made by previous agreements, bringing Côte d'Ivoire closer to national elections. Its most significant achievement included the positive, albeit fragile, political and security environment that prevailed throughout the country, the incipient recovery of the economy and the advances made in the identification of the population. He welcomed the consensus among the parties to hold the elections in 2008 and said that the UN system would continue to put at the disposal of the national stakeholders and institutions resources such as technical expertise, logistical assistance and capacity-building support.

Electoral process

The Secretary-General reported [S/2008/451] that on 14 April, on the recommendation of the IEC and agreed to by all political parties and civil society, President Gbagbo issued a decree setting 30 November as the date of the first round of presidential elections. As the lifting of the zone of confidence allowed political party leaders and the general population to move freely throughout the country, significant efforts were made to reinvigorate political party structures and increase outreach activities in preparation for the elections, including rallies by political parties throughout Côte d'Ivoire. The political parties and civil society discussed the implementation of key aspects of the Ouagadougou Agreement and supplementary agreements. The ruling party, the Front populaire ivoirien, advocated for the disarmament of combatants and the transfer of administrative authority to the préfets, sous-préfets and customs officers redeployed in the north, while the opposition alliance, the Rassemblement des houphouëtistes pour la démocratie et la paix, dispatched teams throughout the country to sensitize the population on the identification process and the upcoming registration of voters. The President of Côte d'Ivoire's Economic and Social Council, Laurent Dona Fologo, previously a member of former President Henri Konan Bédié's Parti démocratique de Côte d'Ivoire, formed a new political party, the Rassemblement pour la paix, le progrès et le partage, and announced his support for President Gbagbo in the elections.

During his visit to Côte d'Ivoire (23–24 April), the Secretary-General welcomed the consensus reached by the parties on the election date and witnessed the signing of two documents that advanced the electoral process: an agreement between the Government and international donors, under which the latter committed $43 million to support the electoral process, and the Code of Good Conduct during the electoral period, endorsed by 37 political parties.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 April [meeting 5880], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/11 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls that it endorsed the Ouagadougou Political Agreement as well as its supplementary agreements.

The Council warmly welcomes the approval by the Ivorian authorities of the proposal by the Independent Electoral Commission to organize presidential elections on 30 November 2008. It underlines that this announcement, supported by all Ivorian parties, and the signing by President Laurent Gbagbo of related decrees, constitute an important step forward. The Council encourages the Ivorian parties to redouble their efforts to meet this commitment, and the international community to bring continued support to this effect.

The Council commends the Facilitator, President Blaise Compaoré of Burkina Faso, for his continued efforts to support the peace process in Côte d'Ivoire, in particular through the Ouagadougou Political Agreement follow-up and consultation mechanisms. This support to the actions of President Laurent Gbagbo and Prime Minister Guillaume Soro, with the active engagement of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire, Mr. Choi Young-Jin, has been instrumental towards achieving the establishment of a consensus among all political parties to hold presidential elections in 2008.

The Council reaffirms its full support to the Special Representative and recalls that he shall certify that all stages of the electoral process provide all the necessary guarantees for the holding of open, free, fair and transparent presidential and legislative elections in accordance with international standards, consistent with paragraph 9 of resolution 1795(2008). It fully supports, in particular, the five-criteria framework elaborated by Mr. Choi in this regard and welcomed by the Ivorian parties.

The Council welcomes the visit of the Secretary-General to Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire from 22 to 24 April 2008 and is encouraged by the signing, under the auspices of the Secretary-General, of a Code of Good Conduct for elections by all political parties.

The Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of 15 April 2008. It encourages the Ivorian parties to build on the ongoing mobile courts process for the identification of the Ivorian population and the registration of voters. The Council looks forward to the publication of the electoral list as a crucial step in the electoral process.

The Council calls upon the parties to make concrete progress to promote political stability and security, in particular in the context of the forthcoming presidential elections, in such key areas as the disarmament and dismantling of militias, the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme, the storage of weapons, the unification and restructuring of the defence and security forces and the full restoration of State authority throughout the country.

The Council takes note with appreciation of the support of bilateral and multilateral donors, in particular the Economic Community of West African States, the African Union and the European Union. It calls upon donors and the Government of Côte d'Ivoire to make further efforts to finance the electoral process, including through the trust fund established by the United Nations Development Programme to that effect, and calls upon the authorities of Côte d'Ivoire to engage fully with the donors. It also encourages the international community to enhance its financial support for the facilitation.

The Council expresses its appreciation for the role played by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, supported by the French forces, in contributing to bring the security needed for the peace process and the logistical support required for the preparation of the elections. It welcomes the assessment made by the Secretary-General on the troop level of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire in his report. The Council will review by 30 July 2008 the mandates of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the French forces supporting it, as well as the troop level of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, in accordance with paragraph 8 of resolution 1795(2008).

The Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it regularly informed of the situation, including on the logistical support that the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire will provide for the elections.

Following the confirmation of the 30 November date for the presidential election, IEC announced an electoral timetable that conformed to the Constitution and the revised electoral code. The provisional electoral list would be published on 31 August, with the definitive list for both the presidential and legislative elections published on 15 November. IEC would submit the polling report within three days of the first round of elections to the Constitutional Council, which would have up to seven days to issue a statement on the election results. If no presidential candidate won decisively, a second round of elections would take place within 15 days of the proclaimed results. Legislative elections would take place 45 days after the announced results of the presidential elections.

In other preparatory activity, local electoral commissions, which would play a critical role in supervising the identification process and in organizing the elections, were being installed throughout the country and, as at 1 July, some 369 out of 415 commissions had been established. UNOCI assisted IEC with a review of the 11,000 polling stations that were used during the 2000 elections, and was using its geographic information system technology in the planning process. The UNOCI certification support cell developed a modus operandi for the certification process. Field reports, together with formal and informal consultations with the Facilitator and national and international partners, would serve as the basis for the certification of the electoral process.

Permanent Consultative Framework meeting (May). On 9 May, the Facilitator convened the third meeting of the Permanent Consultative Framework of the Ouagadougou Agreement, comprising the main political leaders: President Gbagbo, Prime Minister Soro and the opposition leaders, Mr. Bédié and Alasane Dramane Ouattara, President of the Rassemblement des républicains. The final communiqué called for a rapid launch of the identification operation and reconstitution of civil registers, the immediate dismantling of the militias and commencement of the civic service programme. The meeting decided that the mobile court operations would continue beyond the 15 May deadline.

Security Council mission

The Security Council mission in Côte d'Ivoire was led by Ambassador Michel Kafando (Burkina Faso), who briefed the Security Council on the mission on 18 June [meeting 5915] (see p. 111). On 15 July, the mission reported [S/2008/460] that it met with the main political players, including President Gbagbo, and with military and administrative authorities, the facilitators of the political process, the leadership of UNOCI and other representatives of the UN system, civil society, the IEC Chairman and representatives of the National Institute of Statistics and of SAGEM, the technical operator for the identification and voter registration. The mission noted a relaxed political and security environment in Côte d'Ivoire, marked by a renewed confidence by all stakeholders in the Ouagadougou Agreement and a significant acceleration of the preparations for the elections. The mission stressed the responsibility of IEC, SAGEM and the National Institute of Statistics in ensuring the transparency of the voter lists and, in order to support the Special Representative in his task, requested the two technical operators involved in the preparation of the voters' lists to submit on a regular basis, through IEC, all information and documentation that could inform the Special Representative's certification mandate. It also encouraged the Special Representative to continue to sensitize Ivorians on his framework for the certification of the electoral process.

On security aspects, progress was made with the completion of the cantonment of the national defence and security forces and the launching of the process in the areas controlled by the Forces nouvelles. It was estimated that the cantonment process would be completed within five months and in time for the elections. Other positive developments included the lifting of the zone of confidence, the gradual removal of observation points along the Green Line, and the free movement of parties throughout the territory, conducting electoral campaigns and sensitization in the peace process. However, the likely impact of the disarmament of former combatants, dismantling of the militias and reunification of the army on the overall security of the electoral process was a concern. In light of the limited progress achieved in those areas, the Rassemblement des républicains and civil society urged the Security Council to maintain the sanctions regime and the arms embargo until the peace process had become irreversible and the key processes of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, dismantling of the militias and reunification of the army were completed. On the other hand, the four Generals representing the impartial forces (Licorne and UNOCI), the national defence and security forces and the Forces nouvelles emphasized the excellent working relations among their units since the signing of the Ouagadougou Agreement; stressed the progress made by CCI in overseeing the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, dismantling of militias and reunification of the army; and minimized the security risks facing the electoral process. A security plan for the electoral process was being developed by the leadership of the national defence and security forces, the Forces nouvelles, CCI and the impartial forces, based on a thorough threat assessment, and provided for an enhanced cooperation with the defence and security forces of neighbouring States. The Licorne Force Commander pointed to the responsibility of the political leaders, who had yet to agree on the quotas for reintegrating former Forces nouvelles elements into the new army and on the modus operandi for reinserting former combatants, including the civic service programme. All interlocutors concurred that it would be appropriate to defer any decision on the reunification of the army to the new President and administration. They also called for the Security Council to maintain the troop levels of UNOCI and the Licorne until the elections.

During his meeting with the Security Council mission, President Gbagbo reiterated his intention to organize the presidential election on 30 November, despite the difficulties encountered, mainly resulting from a lack of funding. He stressed the need for the technical operators to ensure that they meet the deadline for the elections, and as the relevant decrees had been adopted and the Government at the end of May had made a first payment to SAGEM, he considered that the onus was on them to expedite the preparation of the elections. He was confident that security was no longer an issue for the electoral process, given the presence on the ground of UNOCI and the Licorne forces, and stressed that the focus should be on mobilizing financial resources to assist the Government to meet its obligations to SAGEM and to support the cantonment of former combatants.

The Security Council mission urged the State media to play a greater role in supporting the peace process by promoting dialogue and organizing political debates ahead of the elections. It encouraged key political leaders and the Facilitator to ensure that the peace process remained inclusive, and in particular, to consider the concerns expressed by civil society regarding the transparency of the Ouagadougou political process, while also urging civil society to assume ownership of the process. On the human rights situation, it urged the national defence and security forces, the Forces nouvelles and the impartial forces to address the trend of sexual and gender-based violence in the country. The mission concluded the report with a series of recommendations addressed to the Security Council, to UNOCI and the Licorne forces and to the Ivorian parties.

Extension of UNOCI mandate

Report of Secretary-General (July). In his July report [S/2008/451] on UNOCI and the status of implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, the Secretary-General said that significant progress had been made in identifying the population when the mobile courts operation ended in May. Some 627,923 declaratory judgements in lieu of birth certificates had been issued, including 533,789 documents to Ivorian nationals, which would serve as identity papers for registration on the voter's roll. In addition, the decree on the modus operandi for the production and issuance of national identity cards and the registration of voters, which clarified the modalities of cooperation between the two operators, SAGEM and the National Institute of Statistics, was promulgated on 19 June.

On the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process, the cantonment of the Forces nouvelles continued. As at 1 July, some 6,285 Forces nouvelles elements had been cantoned, out of which 3,980 chose to be demobilized and 1,305 volunteered to join the new national armed forces. However, only 86 weapons, of which 10 were serviceable, had been collected and stored under the custody of the Forces nouvelles. In June, the Ministry of Defence established a disarmament monitoring committee to address obstacles facing the cantonment process, such as the absence of reintegration programmes for foreign combatants and the inability of the Government to pay the agreed $214 monthly allowance to each cantoned combatant for a three-month period. Meanwhile, both the national programme for reinsertion and community rehabilitation and the national civic service programme faced financial challenges, with the latter expected to cost $80 million in 2008, of which the Government had budgeted $24 million. No progress was made in the disarmament and dismantling of militias. Militia leaders rejected the Government proposal that the 1,019 armed militia elements remaining in the west would be absorbed by the national civic service programme, and continued to demand payment of the safety net package received by the first group of militias disarmed in Guiglo in July 2006. The unification of the armed forces remained stalled over the issue of the ranks and numbers of the Forces nouvelles to be integrated into the new national armed forces.

While the overall security situation remained stable, recurrent protests by cantoned Forces nouvelles combatants underscored the risks of setbacks if adequate resources were not provided to support key aspects of the peace process. Other security concerns included increasing criminality in the area of the country controlled by the Forces nouvelles and the instability of the western part of the country. Redeployment of the UNOCI military force from the former zone of confidence continued, with efforts to consolidate its camps from 44 to 24 and increase force mobility. Twenty out of the planned 24 camps had been dismantled. A new deployment location was established in the north, while efforts were continuing to establish three new camps in Divo and Issia in the west and Adzopé in the south, where there had been no UNOCI presence.

The Secretary-General observed that notwithstanding the positive developments, Côte d'Ivoire still faced significant challenges. The continued existence of militias and the lack of credibility of the cantonment of former combatants with weapons stored under secure and verifiable arrangements could pose risks to the electoral process. In view of the parties' decision to defer until after the elections key aspects of the Ou-gadougou Agreement, including the unification of the armed forces and effective disarmament, he encouraged the national defence and security forces and the Forces nouvelles to jointly develop a comprehensive plan for the security of the elections, in consultation with the Facilitator and the impartial forces. In order to ensure that demobilized combatants were constructive participants in the electoral process, he encouraged all stakeholders to expedite projects for reinserting ex-combatants, ex-militias and youth-at-risk in the months leading to the elections. He added that UNOCI, with the Ivorian authorities and the Licorne force, was assessing the security threats that might impact the electoral process and was moving forward on comprehensive security contingency planning. In that connection, and as the key benchmarks to trigger the beginning of the withdrawal of UNOCI remained incomplete, he recommended the extension of the UNOCI mandate, at its current strength, for a six-month period until 31 January 2009. A comprehensive assessment and further recommendations on troop levels would be submitted after the announcement of the results of the elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Further political and security developments

Report of Secretary-General (October). In his eighteenth report on UNOCI [S/2008/645], the Secretary-General said that the political atmosphere in Côte d'Ivoire remained positive and, in preparation for the elections, political parties intensified their information and sensitization campaign activities throughout the country. In August, at its national convention in Yamoussoukro, the ruling Front populaire ivoirien political party nominated President Gbagbo as its candidate for the presidential election. The opposition Parti démocratique de Côte d'Ivoire conducted a one-week sensitization campaign in the Vallée du Bandama region, while the party's leader and presidential candidate, former President Bédié, toured the north for six days. The Rassemblement des républicains held its national convention in Yamoussoukro in October and designated Alassane Ouattara as the party's presidential candidate. Civil society groups intensified their activities, including the adoption of a code of conduct to govern their activities during the electoral period and the creation of a mechanism for monitoring implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement. On 10 July and 15–17 September, the Facilitator convened meetings of CEA. In July, the meeting discussed ways of addressing the logistical constraints impeding the launch of the identification and voter registration processes, and in September participants focused on measures to resolve the long-standing issue of the ranks and numbers of Forces nouvelles personnel to be integrated into the new army.

While the overall security situation remained stable, worrying security concerns included demonstrations by disgruntled personnel of the Forces nouvelles and the national defence and security forces; tensions between communities over land and other issues, especially in the west; and strikes and demonstrations to protest against the rising cost of living in urban areas. An atmosphere of insecurity remained in the western part of the country, as well as in parts of the former zone of confidence, owing to continuing indiscriminate attacks by highway robbers, coupled with violence, including the rape of women. UNOCI prepared a comprehensive assessment of the security situation in the electoral period, including a detailed threat analysis, as well as measures to minimize election-related security risks and threats. Existing resources and arrangements would contribute towards minimizing those security risks and threats. Nonetheless, UNOCI indicated that, should the need arise, it would recommend resorting to the inter-mission reinforcement arrangements provided under resolution 1609(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 236] during the period before or after the elections. In consultation with the leadership of the defence and security forces and the Forces nouvelles, UNOCI developed a security plan for the elections. UNOCI troops continued to patrol in the country and, jointly with the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), along the Ivorian-Libarian border.

On the status of implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, UNOCI, on 30 July, dismantled the last observation post along the Green Line, and thereby the Green Line that replaced the zone of confidence ceased to exist. Mixed police units patrolled the former zone of confidence, even though their operational capacity remained limited due to inadequate equipment and financial support. CCI built up its capacity with support from UNOCI and the Licorne force. Out of an authorized strength of 668 personnel, CCI comprised 458 Government and Forces nouvelles military personnel: 214 elements based at the headquarters in Yamoussoukro, and 244 deployed in the former zone of confidence as part of the mixed police units and supporting elements. On the cantonment, demobilization and reintegration of combatants, as at 1 October, 11,364 Forces nouvelles personnel had been cantoned, out of a total of 34,678 combatants declared by the group; only 10 weapons and some ammunition were collected. Ongoing financial problems compelled the national programme for reinsertion and community rehabilitation to scale down its programmes and close most of its offices around the country. In addition, while the national civic service programme had increased its capacity, it would be unable to absorb the expected caseload of 15,000 former combatants by the end of October owing to a lack of agreement between the Government and the Forces nouvelles. Positive developments included the launch by several donors of programmes for reinserting former combatants and youth at risk and the approval by the Peacebuilding Support Office of $4 million to fund 1,000 microprojects for the short-term reinsertion of more than 5,000 combatants. On disarming and dismantling the militias, the registration and profiling of the militias in the western part of the country were completed, but the Government had not yet determined the arrangements for disarming, dismantling and reintegrating militia personnel. Progress was made in redeploying Government officials who were displaced from the north during the conflict. Challenges such as Forces nouvelles zone commanders reluctant to relinquish their authority in the areas under their control, logistical and financial constraints, and delays in re-establishing the judicial system and an adequate police presence, however, hampered the work of redeployed State officials.

On the electoral process, several decrees were issued in September, including those outlining the modalities of the voting exercise and specifications for electoral materials, as well as a 14 September presidential decree stipulating that voter registration would be conducted over a 45-day period. Supplementary mobile courts, deployed in August to issue duplicate birth certificates to applicants in areas not adequately covered during the main operation, concluded their work on 25 September. The identification of the population and the voter registration processes were launched on 15 September and, as at 1 October, some 5,849 voters had been registered. Although the pace of voter registration and identification was expected to increase as more teams were deployed throughout the country, the process was not likely to be completed within the 45-day period as stipulated by the decree. Tasks to be accomplished included the setting-up of coordination centres; the establishment of registration sites; the operationalization of identification kits; the selection, training and deployment of identification agents; and the launching of a sensitization campaign. As at 1 October, IEC reported that 43 of the 70 coordination centres were operational, and all 35,000 identification agents had been recruited and were being trained and deployed. UNOCI and UN agencies supported the registration process by providing technical expertise, logistical assistance and equipment. The UNOCI certification cell was closely monitoring key aspects of the electoral process and collecting information that would enable the Special Representative to exercise his certification mandate. UNOCI also established a small cell to coordinate the deployment of international observers. Delays in voter identification and registration had proven greater than expected, with a potential impact on the electoral timeline.

The Secretary-General said that with the launching of the voter registration process the peace process had crossed a critical milestone. Highlighting the success of the mobile courts operations and the consensus reached by the parties to resolve arising issues, he observed that it was imperative to carry out the issuance of identity cards and voter registration in an equally credible and transparent manner. He added that the Special Representative, in the exercise of his certification mandate, would not be focusing on finding fault with the process, but would pursue a constructive approach aimed at anticipating problems and assisting the parties and the electoral authorities to address them in a manner that would preserve the credibility of the elections. He expressed concern about the lack of progress in the redeployment of State authority in the north, the disappointing results of efforts to collect and store the weapons of former combatants, the stalled process of the dismantling and disarming the militias, and the continued existence of youth groups that tended to resort to politically motivated violence.

Security Council consideration. On 27 October [meeting 6001], the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Choi Young-Jin, briefed the Security Council on the identification of the population and the elections, particularly the challenges facing the identification process.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 November [meeting 6014], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/42 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes that, as mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General of 13 October 2008, the peace process has crossed a critical milestone with the launching of the identification and voter registration operations on 15 September 2008. However, it also notes that the delays that have occurred since the launch of the identification and voter registration processes on 15

September 2008 have proven greater than expected. It notes that the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Côte d'Ivoire indicated on 27 October 2008 that, if the elections scheduled for 30 November 2008 were delayed, they were likely to be delayed by several months, due mainly to logistical difficulties. The Council expresses its deep concern about a possible third consecutive delay since the signing of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement, which could put the entire Ivorian peace process at risk.

The Council commends the Facilitator for convening a meeting of the Permanent Consultative Framework of the Ouagadougou Political Agreement on 10 November 2008, in order for the Ivorian political actors to address all the main difficulties of the electoral process, and, in particular, with a view to finding an agreement on the new electoral time frame. It urges all the Ivorian political actors to cooperate fully with the Facilitator, with the support of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, and to demonstrate their political determination to fulfil the commitments made in the Ouagadougou Political Agreement and within the framework of its follow-up mechanisms.

The Council further urges, to this end, the President of the Independent Electoral Commission, which is in charge of the organization of the elections, to share publicly this new timeline, including, in particular, the full roll-out of the identification process and certain other stages, such as the publication of the provisional and final versions of the electoral list, the production and distribution of identity and voter cards and the date of the presidential elections. It emphasizes that all political actors must pay particular attention to the accumulating logistical delay.

The Council urges the Ivorian parties to take immediately and as a priority the concrete steps necessary to complete the identification and voter registration operations in a credible and transparent manner before the end of January 2009. It expresses its determination to bring its full support to a credible electoral process in Côte d'Ivoire, on the understanding that the presidential elections will be organized before the end of spring 2009. The Council recalls that all political parties agreed to abide by the Code of Good Conduct for Elections that they signed under the auspices of the Secretary-General on 24 April 2008.

The Council recalls that, pursuant to resolutions 1572(2004) and 1842(2008), any threat to the electoral process in Côte d'Ivoire shall constitute a threat to the peace and national reconciliation process and it reaffirms its determination to impose targeted measures against any person designated by its sanctions committee concerning Côte d'Ivoire as being responsible for these threats. The Council expresses its willingness to review the sanctions regime at the latest three months after the presidential elections.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to keep it informed of the evolution of the situation. It reaffirms its full support for the efforts of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and his certification mandate, including the explicit certification of the electoral list. It expresses its intention to take the progress of the electoral process fully into consideration when it reviews the mandate of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire and the French forces supporting it, before 31 January 2009.

Postponement of elections (November). On 10 November, the Facilitator convened the fourth meeting of the Permanent Consultative Framework of the Ouagadougou Agreement, which determined that it was no longer feasible to hold presidential elections by 30 November due to the accumulated logistical and technical delays. The Consultative Framework requested IEC to establish, before 31 December, a timeline for the identification of the population and voter registration, on the basis of which the parties would agree on a new date for the first round of the presidential elections. In a letter dated 11 November [S/2008/694], Burkina Faso, as the Facilitator, transmitted to the Security Council the press statement on the meeting.

Year-end developments

Technical assessment mission (December)

The Secretary-General reported [S/2009/21] that a technical assessment mission, which visited Côte d'Ivoire from 10 to 14 December to review UNOCI's role in the peace process, received briefings from UNOCI, the UN country team and the French Licorne force, and consulted with the Facilitator and a wide spectrum of national and international stakeholders. It also consulted with senior French officials in Paris on 15 December. On the electoral process, the mission was informed that the completion of the voter registration process by the end of February 2009 would depend on the ability of the Government to immediately disburse $15 million, required to deploy the remaining 4,000 identification and voter registration teams throughout Côte d'Ivoire. At the end of the identification and voter registration process, IEC would produce a provisional list of voters, following which a new election date would be set. All stakeholders assessed that, once IEC produced the final list of voters, an incompressible period of two to three months should be added to the election timeline for producing and distributing identification and voter cards. Consequently, the assessment mission determined that, while all parties remained committed to holding the elections in the first half of 2009, additional delays could not be excluded. In support of the electoral process, UNOCI would call upon IEC to share a new electoral timeline with the parties and the international community, outlining all stages of the process. UNOCI would also monitor compliance by the parties with the code of good conduct for the elections; support civil society organizations in holding national consensus days in early 2009; safeguard the peace process and the result of the elections; mobilize the donor community to provide financial support for Government efforts to implement the remaining electoral tasks; advocate for the Government to disburse the funds needed by the institutions involved in the electoral process in a timely manner; assist the parties to develop an integrated security plan for the elections, delineating the responsibilities of the national defence and security forces, the Forces nouvelles and the impartial forces; provide technical and logistical support for the electoral process; and monitor the progress made.

On security-related issues, all stakeholders agreed that the parties should—prior to the elections—expedite the disarmament of former combatants and the dismantling of the militias and launch the reunification and restructuring of the national defence and security forces, including through the reintegration of eligible elements of the Forces nouvelles. However, the assessment mission confirmed that the operational capabilities of the institutions responsible to plan and implement those processes—CCI, the national programme for reinsertion and community rehabilitation and the civic service programme—depended on enhanced support from the Government and international partners. It also noted that 300 Forces nouvelles elements assigned in November to the mixed police units to provide security for the identification and voter registration process in Abidjan returned to Bouaké on 3 December citing non-payment of their allowances by CCI, and that the 600 police auxiliaries trained by UNOCI had neither been integrated into the national security services nor equipped to assist in securing the north of the country. The assessment mission called for the establishment of mechanisms to control the weapons surrendered by former combatants and the development of a more comprehensive framework governing the future of the security sector.

While all stakeholders were of the view that UNOCI's capabilities should be retained in order for it to contribute to maintaining a secure environment for the implementation of the Ouagadougou Agreement, the assessment mission and UNOCI agreed that it would be possible to adjust the UNOCI troop level and posture, taking into account the security threats, such as the existence of armed militias and violent youth; the absence of effective disarmament of former combatants; the uncompleted redeployment of State administration; the risk of localized clashes in the north and the west; the limited freedom of movement due to checkpoints and roadblocks; and the fact that the elections could be a catalyst for violence. The assessment mission proposed a reduction of UNOCI by one battalion, from 8,115 to 7,450 troop personnel, on the understanding that the force's mobility would be enhanced with adequate air capabilities, and taking into account the continued support of the French forces to UNOCI in terms of quick-reaction capabilities. The UNOCI force would be positioned in fewer, yet more concentrated positions, from which sufficient troop numbers could be rapidly deployed as airborne quick-reaction detachments. The assessment mission proposed benchmarks as preconditions for a more substantial drawdown of the force, which included the completion of credible disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants and dismantling of militias; successful completion of the elections; commencement of security sector reform; and restoration of State authority throughout the country.

Fourth supplementary accord to Ouagadougou Agreement

The Secretary-General reported [S/2009/21] that on 22 December President Gbagbo and Prime Minister Soro had signed a fourth supplementary accord to the Ouagadougou Agreement, which clarified the modalities and timeline for conducting, before the elections, the disarmament of the former combatants of the Forces nouvelles and the dismantling of the militias; the launching of the reunification of the defence and security forces; and the completion, by 15 January 2009, of the redeployment of State administration throughout the country, including the corps préfectoral (local authorities), the judiciary and the fiscal and customs administrations. Under the agreement, some 4,000 Forces nouvelles personnel were expected to immediately, but temporarily, join the police and gendarmerie to provide security during the electoral process, while 5,000 Forces nouvelles elements would join the unified army within two years. The agreement also provided for the disarmament of Forces nouvelles former combatants and pro-Government militias at least two months before the elections, with payment by the Government of a $1,000 demobilization package to those declared eligible by CCI. As most of the key processes under the Ouagadougou Agreement remained plagued by considerable funding gaps, the agreement also provided for the immediate redeployment of the tax and customs administration in the Centre-North-West zone on the basis of a single exchequer in order to give the Government access to the tax revenue that was not being collected in the north to finance some elements of the peace process. On 30 December, Burkina Faso transmitted to the Security Council the text of the agreement, together with a press release issued from the Facilitator's office on 22 December [S/2008/834].

On the electoral process, the Secretary-General said that the identification and voter registration process expanded to Abidjan on 29 September, Bouaké on 18 November and 57 additional districts in December. The process was completed in Abidjan on 14 December, where nearly 2.1 million people were identified.

Nationwide, approximately 2.8 million people were identified and by late December some 3,000 sites had opened. Nonetheless, the process continued to be hindered by logistical, financial and procedural challenges. The inventory of 351,888 civil registers identified thus far was published on 15 December, and the reconstitution of the registers was scheduled to conclude in February 2009.

Although the security situation remained generally stable, frequent demonstrations by military units demanding payment of allowances were reported both in areas controlled by the Forces nouvelles and by the Government. Disruptions of the identification of the population and voter registration operations were also reported. Meanwhile, inter-community clashes over land issues between returning internally displaced persons and local communities were reported in Abidjan district, Bondoukou, Yocoboué and several villages in the Bas Sassandra region, which resulted in at least 19 persons killed, 43 injured and 400 displaced. Other reported security incidents included roadside robberies, killings, ambushes, burglaries and sexual violence, including rape. Efforts by law enforcement agencies to curb criminality continued to be hampered by logistical, financial and human resource constraints and by the proliferation of arms in the country. In a positive development, UNOCI, on 14 November, received a visit from the leadership of the Student Federation, which confirmed its commitment to support the peace process. UNOCI would continue its dialogue with the Federation and other youth groups.

As at 15 December, the strength of CCI was 518 military personnel drawn from Government forces and the Forces nouvelles. Although the Centre's communications capacity and mobility improved somewhat, its operations continued to be hampered by financial and logistical constraints. In order to secure the identification and voter registration operations, more than 220 Government forces were deployed to the north, while Forces nouvelles elements deployed to the south returned to their bases in the north on 3 December. UNOCI and the Licorne force continued to maintain a support capacity within CCI to provide logistical support and assist the Centre in its planning and coordination activities. Progress in dismantling the militias remained slow, and the institutions in charge of the reintegration and reinsertion of former combatants and militias continued to face financial and logistical constraints. In other activity, a joint assessment between UNMIL, UNOCI and the United Nations Development Programme, focusing on militias in Liberia, concluded that between 1,500 and 2,000 Liberian ex-combatants remained at the border with Liberia and needed to be closely monitored.

As at 15 December, UNOCI military strength stood at 8,020 personnel, including 7,741 troops, 191 military observers and 88 staff officers, against an authorized strength of 8,115. Licorne, with 1,800 personnel, continued to maintain a quick-reaction capability to support UNOCI. The ongoing redeployment process of UNOCI troops at 24 camps would be completed in February 2009. UNOCI's police strength stood at 1,137 personnel against an authorized ceiling of 1,200, including 387 officers and 750 personnel in six formed police units.

The Secretary-General observed that timely implementation of the fourth supplementary agreement was critical to avoid further delays to the presidential elections, which were linked to the completion of the disarmament of the former combatants of the Forces nouvelles and the dismantling of militias. In order to safeguard the progress achieved by the parties, it was necessary to address the accumulated technical and logistical delays. He urged IEC to make public, as soon as possible, a new and realistic electoral timeline.

Children and armed conflict

The Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict, established by resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], submitted in February its conclusions on children and armed conflict in Côte d'Ivoire [S/AC.51/2008/5 & Corr.1], which contained the Group's exchange of views on the Secretary-General's 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 185]. The Group noted that the parties to the conflict in Côte d'Ivoire were no longer mentioned in the annexes to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict [ibid., p. 790] as recruiting or using children and expressed its intent to pay further attention to the adherence of the parties to their commitments to halt the recruitment and use of children. The Group made recommendations addressed to the Ivorian President and Prime Minister, the UN Secretary-General, the Secretary-General of the Forces nouvelles and the leaders of the Front pour la libération du Grand Ouest, the Alliance patriotique de l'ethnie Wé, the Union patriotique de résistance du Grand Ouest and the Mouvement ivoirien de libération de l'ouest de la Côte d'Ivoire. It also requested that the World Bank and donors provide resources to strengthen reintegration programmes for demobilized children, and support the Government in preparing and implementing a national action plan to fight violence against children, including rape and other sexual violence. The Working Group submitted a report on its activities to the Security Council in July [S/2008/455] (see p. 852). The Secretary-General reported [S/2009/21] that UNOCI continued to incorporate child protection concerns across the Operation. During 2008, UNOCI conducted 204 training and sensitization sessions targeting a variety of partners within Côte d'Ivoire and benefiting 6,068 UNOCI personnel. UNOCI also intensified its advocacy with the parties to the conflict to move forward on measures to address sexual violence against children, including the adoption of a national action plan for children in armed conflict.

UN Peacebuilding Fund

In his April report [S/2008/250], the Secretary-General said that a $700,000 assistance package was provided through the emergency window of the United Nations Peacebuilding Fund to support the facilitation efforts of President Blaise Compaoré (Burkina Faso), in his capacity as Chairman of ECOWAS. On 30 April [S/2008/451], the Fund approved an extension of the emergency project to support the Ivorian direct dialogue and increased the contribution from $700,000 to $1 million. The Fund was established in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 58] as a mechanism for extending critical support at the early stages of a peace process. Its "three-window architecture" comprised window I for countries on the agenda of the Peacebuilding Commission; window II for countries designated by the Secretary-General; and window III, or the emergency window, for urgent peacebuilding activities. On 19 June, the Secretary-General declared Côte d'Ivoire eligible to receive funds under the second window of the Fund. Consequently, the United Nations and the Government developed a priority plan to address urgent peacebuilding needs. On 14 July, some $5 million was approved, with $4 million allocated to support reinsertion projects, while $1 million would sustain the facilitation efforts by the Office of the Special Representative of the Facilitator in Abidjan [S/2008/645].

Peacebuilding Commission action. On 25 April [A/63/92-S/2008/417], the Peacebuilding Commission conveyed to the Security Council for consideration the Government's request for placement on the Commission's agenda. The request was also brought to the attention of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Secretary-General.

Sanctions

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 187] concerning Côte d'Ivoire continued to monitor implementation of the arms embargo, travel restrictions and assets freeze on designated individuals and entities imposed by that resolution, and the ban on the import of all rough diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire, pursuant to resolution 1643(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 251], as renewed by resolution 1782(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 188]. In 2008, the Committee held five informal consultations. In June [S/2008/366], Security Council members elected Jan Grauls (Belgium) to serve as the Committee's Chairman, and Italy and South Africa to continue to serve as Vice-Chairmen for the period ending 31 December 2008.

In a report on its 2008 activities [S/2008/829], the Committee Chairman said that on 16 June, the Committee approved an arms embargo exemption request pursuant to resolution 1572(2004), and on 21 October updated the list of individuals subject to the travel ban and assets freeze imposed by resolutions 1572(2004) and 1643(2005). The Committee also considered 10 monthly arms embargo and media monitoring reports prepared by UNOCI; the midterm and final reports of the Group of Experts on Côte d'Ivoire, which assessed compliance with the sanctions; and four quarterly UNOCI human rights reports. On 30 October, the Committee received a report from Mali on the implementation of Security Council resolutions 1572(2004) and 1643(2005).

Appointments. On 16 December [S/2008/793], the Secretary-General, as requested in resolution 1842(2008) (see p. 194), informed the Council of the appointment of Grégoire Bafouatika (Congo), James Bevan (United Kingdom), Noora Jamsheer (Bahrain) and El Hadi Salah (Algeria) to the Group of Experts on Côte d'Ivoire. He later informed the Council of the appointment of Joel Hernando Salek (Colombia) as the fifth expert [S/2009/5].

Report of Group of Experts (April). In accordance with resolutions 1572(2004) and 1782(2007), the Group of Experts monitoring the effectiveness of the sanctions, in a midterm report issued in April [S/2008/235], examined cooperation with stakeholders; monitoring of the embargo; verification of the air fleet capacity; military assistance; arms; defence-related expenditures and natural resources; the diamond embargo; and individual sanctions. On the embargo inspections, the Group observed that there was a decrease in the number of denials for access by the national armed forces and the Forces nouvelles, and an increase in the number of inspections over the course of each month, even though access to some strategic sites, such as port areas, remained limited. Since the establishment of the inspection mechanism, none of the sites held by the Republican Guard had ever been inspected by UNOCI because the authorities had systematically denied access to the sites, claiming that UNOCI had no mandate to perform the inspections. Experts were also concerned by the modus operandi adopted by UNOCI, particularly the notice given to the military authorities of inspections by UNOCI, which varied between 72 hours and six days. The Group believed that the effectiveness of the monitoring of the embargo on arms and related materiel had been, and continued to be, diminished by the inability to perform spontaneous inspections.

The Group identified other concerns, including the fact that national legislation had not been adopted, nor had any administrative measures been prescribed, to ensure compliance with the sanctions; national authorities had not sensitized customs staff to be vigilant and not allow the export and import of prohibited goods; UNOCI had not informed Ivorian customs of the items subject to the embargo—which was a prerequisite for instituting checks on the nature of embargoed materials; and between 2000 and 2006, there had been a significant amount of transit cargo—defined by the Group as cargo not intended for domestic consumption in Côte d'Ivoire, yet passing through its territory directed to neighbouring countries—totalling some 6.1 million tons. The Group also noted, with regard to transit cargo, that no customs authorities had been deployed to the borders of Côte d'Ivoire within the territories under the control of the Forces nouvelles; cargo declared to customs authorities as “in transit” to another country was manifested and declared in customs documentation for transit, yet not inspected by customs authorities upon arrival in Côte d'Ivoire; and there was no monitoring or inspection by the customs authority at border areas to determine whether any seals remained intact at the point of export. Consequently, the Group was concerned that transit cargo might be diverted for domestic use in Côte d'Ivoire.

The Group pursued its enquiries on the use of aircraft belonging to the air force, monitored the possible presence of foreign technicians who could provide technical assistance, and verified movement of aircraft on international and domestic routes. It also deemed it necessary to sensitize UNOCI Air Operations personnel and the UNOCI Togolese battalion posted at the Abidjan air force base to exercise vigilance on the activities at that location and notify the Group of any suspicious activity. On military assistance, the Group gathered credible information indicating that since the establishment of the sanctions regime in 2004, members of the national defence and security forces and Forces nouvelles had been receiving military training in other States, in violation of Security Council resolution 1572(2004). The training courses were ongoing, ranging in duration from five months to four years.

On the arms embargo, the Group said that the evolution of the general situation in Côte d'Ivoire, the lack of strategic needs for new military equipment and the investigations of the Group into the issue could explain the absence of information on recent imports of military equipment. However, the possibility of such violations could not be ruled out. The Group indicated that it was not in a position to reach any conclusions regarding cases of possible embargo violations directly involving the security forces, and that it would conduct further investigations. With regard to deliveries by air to Côte d'Ivoire of items classified as "10.43 kg of dynamite/explosive", although the consignee was a company involved in the oil exploration/production industry, the Group deemed that such imports constituted a violation of the sanctions regime. The Group provided updates on the cases dealing with Tusk Trading Pty Ltd, Imperial Armour and the inspections of goods shipped by Yssouf Diabaté, who was arrested in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 205].

On the diamond embargo, the Group sought to identify as many case studies as possible in the diamond-producing countries and in the trading centres, because Ivorian diamonds continued to be exported through the neighbouring countries and surfaced through the major trading centres. On the status of internal controls applied by Ghana, particularly the registration of galamsey (illegal miners), in discussions with the Precious Minerals Marketing Company Limited and the Minerals Commission, the Group found that no progress had been made on the identification and registration of galamsey. As a result, there could be no assurances that illegally mined foreign diamonds were not entering the Ghanaian system and subsequently sent to the international trading centres. Mali remained a concern as one of the probable major exit points for Ivorian diamonds in violation of the sanctions regime. The Malian authorities could not provide the Group with any production data nor detail any measures to monitor production. In addition, the Government had not taken any measures to prevent diamonds of foreign origin from entering the country in spite of the sanctions. However, Malian customs authorities informed the Group of a consignment of 31 rough diamonds, which they seized after an individual applied in December 2007 to export them through Bamako airport, purporting that they were of Malian origin. In other activity, the Group collected information that led it to identify individuals linked to illicit trade in rough diamonds in the major diamond-trading centre in Antwerp, Belgium, and was in possession of information that conflict diamonds from Côte d'Ivoire were transiting through Dubai, United Arab Emirates.

The Group made recommendations pertaining to customs, arms and military assistance, and diamonds, including, among others, the dissemination of information specific to embargoed goods to Ivorian customs inspection staff on the part of UNOCI and the Ivorian customs management; the establishment by UNOCI of a specific monitoring unit; the dedication by UNOCI and Ivorian authorities of special monitoring procedures specific to transit cargo, maximizing the utilization of the X-ray container scanner at the port of Abidjan; and the diligent inspection by the UNOCI embargo cell of the seized ammunition related to the case of Mr. Diabaté. The Group also urged the Kimberley Process (see p. 44) to send its Technical Group to Bamako to examine the seized diamond shipment and provide its opinion about their origin.

Report of Group of Experts (October). In October, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1572(2004) transmitted to the Council President the final report of the Group of Experts [S/2008/598] on the situation in Côte d'Ivoire, in accordance with resolution 1782(2007). The report examined cooperation with stakeholders; the situation in Côte d'Ivoire; embargo inspections; customs; aviation; military assistance; arms; defence-related expenditures and natural resources; the diamond embargo; and individual sanctions. Although the Group reported that meetings with various Ivorian authorities were conducted in a cordial atmosphere, it also observed that the requisite information was not always readily forthcoming from the customs and the Ministries of Economy and Finance, Defence and the Interior. During its visits, the Group received full cooperation from some States, yet experienced reluctant cooperation or refusals to share information from others. None of the neighbouring States clearly articulated to the Group measures taken to implement the sanctions. Investigations were hampered by the lack of responses from States and private individuals and entities, while private companies, banking institutions and State institutions investigating financial crimes were often reluctant to share information with the Group, despite assurances of confidentiality. The report listed the States, international agencies and private companies that did not respond to the Group's request for information.

On customs matters, the Group found that the capacity of the UNOCI embargo cell was limited because only one customs officer was employed as a consultant in the cell, and efforts to track the movement of imported sanctioned goods were ineffective and labour-intensive. The Group concluded that the embargo cell had conducted no substantive inspections within the customs environment, and that embargo controls could be easily circumvented by determined individuals and companies. The Group recommended that UNOCI accept the Ivorian customs' offer to form a joint "special monitoring unit", and that UNOCI communicate information about a wider range of embargoed goods—particularly those which had a potential dual use in the military environment—to the embargo staff performing the inspections and to Ivorian customs.

Despite the low ratio of denials for weapons inspections—three out of 572 between January and August—the Group said that the effectiveness of inspections remained limited. The list of scheduled inspections was still communicated to the military authorities in advance, no attempts to conduct unannounced inspections were recorded in 2008, and no inspection of sensitive sites, such as those of the “presidential perimeter”, had been scheduled by UNOCI since January. Moreover, UNOCI inspection statistics did not properly reflect the state of monitoring of the embargo. Inspections deemed “successful” were based on permitted access and whether the operations were undertaken without any expression of hostility. No qualitative consideration of the state or quantities of the equipment presented to the inspection unit were taken into account, and no mention other than “successful” or “denied” was used to define the result of the inspections.

On transit cargo, no significant progress had been made on the Group’s request for UNOCI to implement procedures to utilize the scanner for transit goods travelling by road and no X-ray scanning of transit cargo was being carried out. Concerned that goods imported for transit through Côte d’Ivoire were not inspected in any way, the Group concluded that the potential for importation and diversion of sanctioned cargo continued to pose a great risk. In addition, Ivorian customs had made no visible effort to adapt the transit system in the context of the sanctions, or to mitigate risks associated with the geographical challenges.

On the redeployment of Ivorian customs authorities to the borders, the Group travelled to northern Côte d’Ivoire in June and noted a limited deployment of 13 customs officers and an equivalent number of Forces nouvelles personnel designated as customs officers at the border crossing of Ouangolodougou, on the border of Burkina Faso. Members of the Forces nouvelles previously posted in the border area remained there and continued to exercise the same level of authority they had prior to the redeployment, preventing the Ivorian customs authorities from performing their duties, including inspections and examinations. The Forces nouvelles personnel had little or no customs knowledge, were insufficiently trained and were unqualified to work as customs officers. The remaining border crossings with neighbouring countries in the centre, north and west region remained under the control of the Forces nouvelles, with no Ivorian customs authorities present. In July, the Group had requested a written status report on their redeployment, yet had not received any response. Meanwhile, exploitation of natural resources in the centre, north and west zone by various companies, mostly foreign, continued at a regular pace.

On the arms embargo, the Group was unable to conclude whether there had been any violation of the sanctions regime by the two parties. However, it gathered several indications that movements of small volumes of weapons occurred, and due to their frequency, the possibility of violations could not be excluded. The Group obtained confirmation that explosive goods were regularly imported into the country, reportedly for industrial purposes, as relevant Ivorian authorities had granted import licences without informing the importing company that such transfers were prohibited under the embargo on military equipment and related materiel. The Group considered the need for law enforcement and riot control equipment expressed by the national police, the gendarmerie and CCI. More detailed elements were needed to establish the veracity of figures provided by the Director-General of the national police on estimated equipment requirements, and the Group believed that the equipment needs prepared by the gendarmerie were excessive, especially the Kalashnikov assault rifles and ammunition, which should be limited to military activities.

On the diamond embargo, the Group invited the experts of the Kimberley Process to conduct a joint mission to assess the production and illicit export of diamonds from Côte d’Ivoire. The Ministry of Mines estimated that between 5,000 and 10,000 miners were active in Séguéla, while less than 5,000 miners were in the village of Tortiya. Following the mission, the report of the Kimberley Process estimated total production capacity in Côte d’Ivoire at between 114,000 and 188,500 carats per year, and the Group estimated its annual value at between $12.5 million and $20.7 million. The Group also established that most of the diamonds produced in Séguéla and Tortiya left the country via Sikasso to Bamako, Mali.

In conclusion, the Group recommended the strengthening of the UNOCI monitoring capacity by adding to the embargo cell a significant number of international customs officers with sanctions experience; surveillance by the impartial forces of all airports, landing strips and heliports capable of receiving flights originating in foreign countries; the establishment by UNOCI of standard operating procedures for securing any previously unaccounted-for military equipment recovered; and the organization by UNOCI of sensitization sessions for private companies that used in their commercial and industrial activities non-military goods subject to the embargo. On diamonds, the Group recommended that the Kimberley Process assist the Ivorian Government in instituting a basic control mechanism to govern the diamond trade and assist the Guinean Government in strengthening its internal control systems, including enhanced customs vigilance at the borders and ports of entry. It also urged the Malian authorities to seize the diamonds under detention by Malian customs at Bamako airport, conduct a comprehensive investigation of the case and sensitize their officials to be vigilant about the cross-border trade of diamonds.

UNOCI

The United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI) was established in 2004 by Security Council resolution 1528(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 173] to replace the United Nations Mission in Côte d'Ivoire and ECOWAS forces. Its mandate was to monitor the ceasefire and the movement of armed groups; assist in disarmament, demobilization, reintegration, repatriation and resettlement; protect UN personnel and civilians; support implementation of the peace process; and provide assistance in the monitoring of human rights, public information and law and order. The UNOCI mandate was revised in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 170] to include supporting the work of the Integrated Command Centre (CCI), monitoring the cessation of hostilities and movement of armed groups, and providing other security-related assistance. UNOCI was supported by the French Licorne forces. Headquartered in Abidjan, UNOCI was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Choi Young-Jin (Republic of Korea). The Security Council, by resolution 1826(2008) (see p. 184), extended the UNOCI mandate until 31 January 2009.

During 2008, the Secretary-General submitted reports to the Security Council on developments in Côte d'Ivoire and the activities of UNOCI in January [S/2008/1], April [S/2008/250], July [S/2008/451], and October [S/2008/645], with a later report covering the remainder of the year [S/2009/21]. In addition to political and security aspects, the reports summarized UNOCI activities in addressing the humanitarian and human rights situation in the country, as well as other issues such as economic recovery, reconstruction and development, HIV/AIDS, media monitoring and public information, the promotion of gender mainstreaming, child protection and the safety and security of personnel.

On personnel conduct and discipline matters, investigations continued with regard to the 2007 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by UNOCI military personnel stationed in the Bouaké area [YUN 2007, p. 190]. The Secretary-General reported in January that, in the interim, the contingent concerned was redeployed to Duékoué, in the western part of the country. In a press conference on 30 May, following the release of a Save the Children, United Kingdom report entitled No One to Turn To, which focused on the underreporting of sexual exploitation and abuse of children committed by peacekeepers and humanitarian workers in peacekeeping operations, including in Côte d'Ivoire, the Secretary-General's Special Representative emphasized the need for all allegations to be brought immediately to the attention of UNOCI so that full investigations could take place and those found guilty could face appropriate sanctions. A preliminary investigation by the United Nations Office of Internal Oversight Services to assess the credibility of the allegations in the report, which concerned the rape of a 12-year-old girl, was ongoing. UNOCI continued to sensitize its military, police and civilian personnel on the Secretary-General's zero-tolerance policy for sexual exploitation and abuse, and to consult with staff on the prohibition of discrimination, harassment—including sexual harassment—and abuse of authority [ST/SGB/2008/5].

Financing

In June, at its resumed sixty-second (2008) session, the General Assembly considered the performance report on the UNOCI budget for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 [A/62/642], showing actual expenditures of $450,769,600 against a total appropriation of $472,889,300, as well as the proposed UNOCI budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 [A/62/750] in the amount of $477,058,000, gross, together with the related ACABQ report [A/62/781/Add.13]. The proposed budget provided for the deployment of 200 military observers, 7,915 military contingent personnel, 450 UN police officers, 750 formed police unit personnel, 498 international staff, 709 national staff, 301 United Nations Volunteers and 8 Government-provided personnel, as well as 5 international and 7 national temporary positions. ACABQ recommended reductions in the amount of $98,100 and the approval of an amount of $476,959,900.

On 20 June, the General Assembly took note of the performance report on the 2006–2007 UNOCI budget and appropriated $497,455,100 for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 (resolution 62/254) (below).

Liberia

In 2008, the Government of Liberia continued efforts to improve governance and security, combat corruption, regain control and management over the country's natural resources and build a stronger economy. With the assistance of the United Nations Mission in Liberia and other international and regional organizations, further progress was made in consolidating peace, stability and democracy. In March, the Government finalized its first national poverty reduction strategy, and Liberia reached the decision point under the enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. Implementation of the new poverty reduction strategy, addressing high unemployment, and reform of rule-of-law institutions and the security sector, in particular the Liberian National Police, were identified as critical areas to be addressed. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission began public hearings in January. At the opening of the hearings, President Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf apologized to the people of Liberia on behalf of all Governments of Liberia for the acts that contributed to the conflict. The Commission sent its first report to the Legislature and President in December. Following his visit to Liberia in April and a review by a technical assessment team in May, the Secretary-General recommended adjustments to the second phase of the drawdown of the Mission.

The Panel of Experts established to assess implementation of the arms and travel measures imposed on Liberia removed 10 individuals from the travel-ban list. In December, the Security Council renewed the travel and arms restrictions for a further 12 months. The trial of former President Charles Taylor resumed in The Hague, Netherlands, on 7 January, after a six-month delay to allow time for counsel to prepare his defence.

Peacebuilding efforts and UNMIL activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his sixteenth progress report on the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) [S/2008/183], the Secretary-General reviewed developments in the country and progress made in the drawdown phase of the Mission's consolidation, drawdown and withdrawal plan since his August 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 195]. He said that the Government continued to focus on priorities such as ensuring economic recovery; obtaining forgiveness of the country's debt; fighting corruption; implementing its interim poverty reduction strategy; revitalizing the agricultural sector; restoring basic services; rehabilitating basic infrastructure; and renovating and building schools, clinics, hospitals and administrative buildings. The Government also made progress in implementing the Governance and Economic Management Assistance Programme, reforming the security sector, regaining control and efficient management of its natural resources, strengthening the capacity of its institutions, and consolidating State authority throughout the country.

The overall political situation remained stable and, in further efforts to foster political and ethnic reconciliation, President Johnson-Sirleaf attended a national peace festival in Monrovia on 2 January, where together with George Weah, the former presidential candidate for the Congress for Democratic Change, she highlighted the need for national reconciliation. On 28 January, the President announced her intention to pardon George Koukou, former Speaker of the National Transitional Legislative Assembly, who was on trial for treason. On the same date, in her State of the Republic address to the legislature, the President stated that the country had an economic growth rate of 9 per cent and that revenue collection for the first 11 months of 2007 totalled $163.3 million, which surpassed the projected annual target of $152.5 million. In addition, the World Bank and the African Development Bank had cleared over $671 million of Liberia's $4.8 billion debt arrears, and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) had agreed to a financing arrangement that would forgive $920 million of the country's debts. During his visit to Liberia in February, United States President George W. Bush pledged the continued support of his Government for peacekeeping and reconstruction efforts, as well as the security sector reform programme. His Government would also provide 1 million textbooks for schoolchildren and desks and chairs for 10,000 students for the next academic year. In other activity, UNMIL supported Government efforts to restructure the political party system. On 18 and 19 March, in collaboration with other partners, the Mission facilitated a two-day workshop on political party system reform for representatives of political parties and members of the legislature. Meanwhile, at the Special Court for Sierra Leone in The Hague, the trial of former Liberian President Charles Taylor resumed on 7 January after a six-month delay to allow him to prepare his defence (see p. 219).

Relations between the executive branch of the Government and the legislature continued to improve. The legislature passed several important bills, including the Governance Commission Act, and four other Acts were under review. The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives began public hearings to investigate allegations made by former House Speaker Edwin Snowe that members of the House had received $5,000 inducements from the executive branch of Government to sign a resolution calling for his removal. At the hearing of 3 March, Mr. Snowe provided audio recordings in which four legislators allegedly admitted receiving such funds. The trials of both Mr. Snowe, indicted for the theft of $1 million of public funds from the Liberia Petroleum Refining Company during his tenure as Managing Director, and of Charles Gyude Bryant, former Chairman of the National Transitional Government charged with economic sabotage for misappropriating $1.3 million, were ongoing. In March, the Minister of Justice announced that the Government had failed to reach an out-of-court settlement with Mr. Bryant to discontinue his trial in exchange for the return of the misappropriated funds.

The overall security situation remained generally calm and stable; however, violent protests by various groups and civil disturbances on rubber plantations continued. The Mission assisted the National Security Council with the development of a national security strategy and operational plan. The strategy focused on coordinating information among law enforcement and security agencies, as well as strengthening community and police cooperation through information-sharing. The security situation along the borders with Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone remained stable. UNMIL conducted several operations to deter the cross-border movement of weapons and recruitment of mercenaries, to reassure the local population and to foster better coordination among security agencies deployed along the border areas. The Mission continued to provide security to the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Efforts to rebuild the national police continued, and some 3,662 officers had graduated from the national police academy. Several advanced programmes designed to strengthen the supervisory and specialized capacities of personnel of the national police and the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization were completed. Although 90 per cent of national police officers authorized to be deployed to the counties had been deployed, county operations were hampered by the lack of basic infrastructure and police equipment. Assistance from UNMIL quick-impact projects supported the reconstruction and rehabilitation of 11 police stations and the construction of a new immigration office. The United States continued to lead international support for the training and restructuring of the 2,000-strong armed forces; as at 11 January, the number of trained recruits totalled 1,124.

On the reintegration of ex-combatants, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the National Commission on Disarmament, Demobilization, Reintegration and Rehabilitation, in collaboration with UNMIL, continued to implement a one-year reintegration and rehabilitation programme for a final group of 8,700 ex-combatants that had commenced in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 199]. Since 2005, UNMIL had collected and destroyed 884 weapons, 1,754 pieces of unexploded ordnance, 108,838 rounds of ammunition and 12,002 assorted spares and miscellaneous parts.

Progress in restoring and consolidating State authority throughout the country was slow. Logistical and capacity constraints of implementing parties led to delays in rehabilitating county administrative buildings. The UN country team and UNMIL were assisting the Institute for Statistics and Geo-Information Services with its preparations to conduct a national census in March, which would be the first census conducted by the Government since 1984. UNMIL would also provide logistical support to facilitate the census process.

In efforts to regain control over and efficiently manage the country's natural resources, the Forestry Development Authority signed a management contract with a Swiss firm aimed at discouraging the illegal production of timber and ensuring that exported forest products met international standards. In order to reorganize the diamond sector, the Government converted the Government Diamonds Office into the Office of Precious Minerals, and the Presidential Task Force on Diamonds became the Liberian Diamond Board. It also completed a draft mineral policy and was working towards the establishment of a mining cadastre system. UNMIL supported Government efforts to re-establish its control and provide social services on Liberia's rubber plantations.

While the human rights situation improved, efforts to promote and protect human rights were hindered by deficiencies in the justice system such as recurring absenteeism and reports of corrupt practices involving judicial and law enforcement officials; detention facilities that were below minimum human rights standards; large numbers of pretrial detainees awaiting trial for extended periods; and insufficient numbers of qualified corrections officers. The reform of the judicial and corrections system continued to be slow owing to the lack of infrastructure, inadequate numbers of qualified officers, lack of capacity to process cases, poor case management, inadequately trained court staff, low salaries, lack of a legal and judicial reform policy framework, and a legal regime that allowed only Liberian citizens to be legal practitioners or judges. UNMIL worked with the Ministry of Justice and the Supreme Court to address those deficiencies.

The Secretary-General observed that despite encouraging developments, a number of tasks critical to the sustainability of peace and stability remained to be fully implemented, including the reform of the legal and judicial system, the reintegration of war-affected populations and the extension of the rule of law throughout the country. In addition to significant challenges such as pervasive poverty, food insecurity, high unemployment, massive illiteracy, poor infrastructure and the inadequate delivery of basic services, corruption was still a major concern. He appealed to donors to support the equipment and deployment needs of the national police, to international partners to support the Government in its efforts to overhaul the judicial and corrections system and to the international community to provide funding for the Truth and Reconciliation Commission to complete its work. On the diamond industry, he urged the Government to establish a computerized data bank for mining licences, to review incentives and remuneration for the field staff of the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy and to ensure that banking channels were used for all diamond transactions. With regard to the drawdown of UNMIL, the Secretary-General noted that the Mission would continue to monitor progress in meeting the benchmarks and indicators.

Security Council consideration (April). In her briefing of 14 April to the Security Council on the situation in Liberia [meeting 5864], the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Ellen Margrethe Løj, highlighted three critical areas that needed to be addressed for further progress in the country and to enable UNMIL to successfully draw down: the reform of the security sector, not least the reform of the national police; the reform of rule-of-law institutions; and the effective implementation of the new poverty reduction strategy and task of addressing high unemployment. She said that the incidence of gender-based violence, particularly rape, was unacceptable, yet she was encouraged that with the support of UNMIL and the UN country team, the Government was finalizing the national gender policy. It had also established a special court to prosecute rape cases and developed a national action plan against gender-based violence to deter rape.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In his seventeenth report [S/2008/553] on UNMIL, the Secretary-General, who visited Liberia on 21 and 22 April, reviewed major developments in the country and presented recommendations for adjustments to the second phase of the UNMIL drawdown. The political situation remained stable and key economic and social indicators continued to improve.

The security situation remained stable yet fragile, as the prevalence of law-and-order incidents, including mob justice and random violence, underlined the tenuous state of the security environment. Other threats to sustained peace and stability included violent disturbances in many of the rubber plantations; demonstrations by former personnel of the security forces; student protests; violent criminal activities, particularly armed robbery and rape; and the high number of young people who were unemployed. Frequent ethnic tensions and land disputes between communities, as well as between communities and commercial enterprises, continued to be of concern. Other potential sources of instability included the illegal exploitation of resources by ex-combatants in economic enclaves and inaccessible mining areas, and drug and light weapons trafficking in the subregion. In May, UNMIL, the national police, the Drug Enforcement Agency and other national security agencies began a joint operation aimed at combating the cultivation and trafficking of marijuana. The drug posed a threat to internal security, since some of it was consumed by individuals who would go on to commit crimes, while the rest was believed to be trafficked across the porous borders into neighbouring countries. In that connection, the control and management of the borders remained a concern; of the 176 points of entry into the country, only 36 were considered official.

Further progress was made in the reform of the security sector. The President approved the national security strategy, which incorporated the country's security architecture with a regulatory framework. Basic training for the last batch of 500 recruits and training for 29 officer candidates for the armed forces began in June. It was hoped that the training tempo would be sustained in order for the new army to be fully trained before late 2009 to enable it to begin joint exercises and training with UNMIL troops. Training and development of the national police also continued, yet was hampered by various challenges. It became evident due to funding challenges that the first 200 officers of the planned 500-strong emergency response unit might not be fully operational by July 2009 as indicated in the Mission's benchmark. Disciplinary problems and misconduct within the national police force also raised concerns and led to the establishment of a Professional Standards Division. On the administration of justice countrywide, a positive development was the launch on 17 June of a Judicial Institute to provide sustained training for judicial officials.

The plan for the drawdown of UNMIL proposed in the Secretary-General's August 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 195] provided for a three-year implementation time frame with built-in hold and review periods to assess the security situation and core benchmarks, and to adjust the pace or depth of the troop and police adjustments as necessary. As part of the review, from 12 to 24 May, the Government, UNMIL and the UN country team conducted a joint security assessment in all 15 counties to determine the level of security threats and evaluate the capacity of national and local institutions to respond. The joint security assessment teams confirmed that in most of the counties there had been no significant change in the security threat level since the Secretary-General's August 2007 report, while in a few counties the security situation had deteriorated. It was only in the north-western counties that the situation was assessed as relatively benign. The main threats to peace and stability emanated from law and order maintenance issues, such as the weak operational capacity of the security and rule-of-law institutions and the public's loss of confidence in those institutions. Other factors were the competition over natural resources, the potential regional instability and food insecurity, which was a new element. Consequently, none of the assessment teams recommended the total withdrawal of UNMIL military or police personnel from their locations. On the basis of those findings and taking into account progress made in the core benchmarks, UNMIL, together with a technical assessment mission led by the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations, undertook a detailed review of phase 2 of the UNMIL force and police drawdown plans.

Following consultations with UNMIL and the technical assessment mission, the Secretary-General recommended that phase 2 of the drawdown of the military component, which would run from October 2008 to September 2009, should involve the repatriation of a further 1,460 military personnel, thereby reducing UNMIL troop strength to 10,231 personnel by September 2009. While the troop reduction represented a larger number than in his previous proposal for the second stage, the Secretary-General was confident that UNMIL would be able to continue to discharge its mandate of providing the necessary security umbrella throughout the country to enable the Government to continue its reform and restructuring programme. During phase 3, which would run from October 2009 to December 2010, a further reduction of 2,100 troops was envisaged, bringing the strength of UNMIL to 8,131 troops in December 2010. The plan also took cognizance of the Mission's security responsibilities along the borders, providing contingency plans for dealing with potential fallout from external developments, as well as UNMIL's obligations under resolution 1609(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 236] to reinforce the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire if necessary. The Mission would continue to provide security to the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

On the police component, the Secretary-General said that the strengthening of the national police and the establishment of the emergency response unit had not progressed as well as envisaged. Therefore, it was not possible to reduce the tasks being undertaken by UNMIL formed police units in the Monrovia area and transfer those units to other key "hotspots", such as Harper, Lofa, Sinoe and Zwedru. The inability to fulfil the core assumptions meant that more support would be needed from UN police advisers during the next mandate period than previously envisaged. Additional support was required to provide the necessary strategic advice, training, mentoring and institutional capacity-building in specialized policing fields to the national police, which would still need support from UN police for its regular activities, including joint patrolling.

In view of those developments, and the increasing challenges related to the maintenance of law and order, the Secretary-General proposed an increase in the number of formed police units from five to seven (from 605 to 845 personnel), with effect from September 2008; no reductions should be made to the police advisory component between September 2008 and September 2009. He added that he intended to make internal adjustments in the strength of the UN police to accommodate eight additional correction officers, which would bring the police component strength to 1,375 personnel (845 formed police unit personnel, 32 correction officers and 498 police advisers). For the period from October 2009 to December 2010, a reduction of 132 UN police advisers was proposed, bringing the police strength to 1,243 personnel at the end of the drawdown period in December 2010. The Secretary-General recommended the extension of UNMIL for a 12-month period, until 30 September 2009.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

9. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Year-end developments. The Secretary-General reported [S/2009/86] that the relationship between the legislative and executive branches continued to improve, allowing for the adoption of several key bills, including the Defence Act and the Anti-Corruption Commission Act. However, other important draft bills were pending, due to the suspension of the Senate's President pro tempore. The leadership dispute in the Senate hampered the work of the legislature during the second half of the year. The allocation of $15 million from the UN Peacebuilding Fund was fully programmed in support of the priority projects of the Government, and a peacebuilding office was established in December within the Ministry of Internal Affairs to develop national capacity and ownership of the peacebuilding process.

The security situation remained stable, yet was characterized by an underlying fragility. In October, UNMIL quelled violent disturbances involving ex-combatants in Grand Cape Mount, Grand Gedeh and Nimba counties caused by misunderstandings regarding reintegration benefits and the intended beneficiaries of a programme to assist the final caseload of former combatants who had not benefited from reintegration opportunities. The situation along the borders remained calm yet unpredictable. The death of President Lansana Conté in December and the subsequent military coup in Guinea (see p. 231) contributed to the uncertainty of the security environment, owing to the long-standing cross-border relationships and ethnic affinities between the peoples of the two countries, which had played a significant role during the Liberian civil conflict. The postponement of the elections in Côte d'Ivoire and limited progress in the Ivorian disarmament process, including the dismantling of the militias in the west of that country, also exacerbated the fragile situation in the region. A joint assessment by the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire (UNOCI), UNMIL and UNDP concluded that approximately 1,500 to 2,000 Liberian ex-combatants remained in Côte d'Ivoire near the Liberian border and needed to be closely monitored. The level of border monitoring was increased, including through joint operations of UNMIL with the security forces of Sierra Leone and Guinea, as well as with UNOCI.

On security sector reform, the United States continued to lead international support for the building of the new armed forces, which reached their planned strength of 2,000 troops in August, when the last batch of recruits completed basic training. The first battalion was activated at the same time, followed by the second in December. Meanwhile, there had been a number of incidents of indiscipline and failure to respect the rule of law by soldiers of the armed forces. Progress was also made in the reform and strengthening of the national police, in particular with the formulation of a five-year national police strategic plan, providing a comprehensive development framework. Although many challenges remained, development of the 500-strong police emergency response unit progressed. On strengthening the judicial, legal and corrections institutions, the convening of the National Rule of Law Retreat in September was a major step forward, as it was the first time the three branches of Government engaged in dialogue regarding rule-of-law issues. While the launch of the Judicial Training Institute in June was an important step in addressing the shortage of qualified staff, particularly public defenders, the Institute had yet to become fully operational, primarily because of lack of funding. The corrections sector was still characterized by weak infrastructure and low budgetary allocation. The sector was additionally strained by massive overcrowding in most facilities, and there were several incidents of prison breaks. The most serious was the riot and subsequent escape in December of 163 prisoners from Monrovia Central Prison, of which 85 remained at large.

Truth and Reconciliation Commission

The Secretary-General reported [S/2008/183] that the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, established by the Transitional Government in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 263], made significant progress in implementing its mandate. The Commission began nationwide public hearings in Monrovia on 8 January to inquire into human rights violations during the country's 14-year civil war. President Johnson-Sirleaf addressed the opening of the hearings, apologized to the people of Liberia on behalf of all Governments of Liberia for the acts that contributed to the conflict, and called on Liberians to respond positively to Commission requests to attend hearings and provide truthful testimonies. The Commission completed public hearings in Monrovia on 31 January and began holding hearings in the counties. UNMIL worked closely with the Commission to ensure the successful completion of its mandate, and organized a series of outreach events and radio programmes to promote reconciliation and support the Commission's work. The Commission also held public hearings (St. Paul, Minnesota, United States, 10–14 June) at Hamline University, which focused on the experience of Liberians in the diaspora.

The Secretary-General subsequently reported [S/2008/553] that the Commission had completed its public hearings in all 15 counties and commenced thematic hearings in July. Although the Commission had previously requested a three-month extension of its mandate, on 15 July it asked the legislature for nine months, until 30 June 2009. On 11 and 12 August, Alhaji G.V. Kromah, the former head of the disbanded United Liberation Movement appeared before the Commission, testifying under the theme "Understanding the Conflict Through its Principal Events and Actors". He expressed remorse for his role in the conflict.

In later developments [S/2009/86], the Commission on 13 October released the findings of its conflict mapping survey, which identified land and property disputes as key threats to Liberia's fragile peace. The first volume of its report, containing an overview of the root causes of the conflict, was sent to the Legislature and the President in December.

Other developments. In the trial of Mr. Taylor, the Special Court for Sierra Leone began hearing the testimony of a prominent witness in the case, former Liberian Vice-President Moses Blah, on 14 May. On 1 September, the Special Court received a request from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission for an audience with former Liberian President Charles Taylor, who refused the request. On 30 October, Mr. Taylor's son, the United States national Charles Taylor Jr., was convicted by a jury in Miami, Florida, United States, for torture committed when he was the head of an anti-terrorist unit in Liberia during his father's presidency.

UNMIL

The United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), established by Security Council resolution 1509(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 194], was mandated to support the implementation of the 2003 Agreement on Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities [ibid., p. 189] and the peace process; protect UN staff, facilities and civilians; support humanitarian and human rights activities; and assist in national security reform, including national police training and the formation of a new, restructured military. By resolution 1638(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 267], the Council enhanced the mandate to include the apprehension and detention of former President Charles Taylor in the event of his return to Liberia, as well as his transfer to the Special Court for Sierra Leone. By resolution 1750(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 194], the Council decided that the Mission's mandate should include the provision of administrative and related support and security, on a cost-reimbursable basis, for activities conducted in Liberia by the Special Court for Sierra Leone with the consent of the Liberian Government. By resolution 1836(2008) (see p. 201), the Council approved the Secretary-General's recommendation to reduce the military component of UNMIL by an additional 1,460 personnel between October 2008 and March 2009 and to immediately increase its police component by 240 officers.

During 2008, the Secretary-General submitted reports to the Security Council on developments in Liberia and the activities of UNMIL in March [S/2008/183] and in August [S/2008/553], with a later report covering the remainder of the year [S/2009/86]. In addition to political and security aspects, the reports summarized UNMIL activities to address the humanitarian and human rights situation, as well as efforts to assist in national recovery, reconstruction and development. Throughout the year, the Mission also provided HIV/

AIDS awareness training and sensitization to its personnel and promoted gender mainstreaming in its activities. UNMIL continued to be headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Liberia, Ellen Margrethe Løj (Denmark), maintaining its headquarters in the capital, Monrovia.

Appointment. In an exchange of letters with the Security Council President on 16 October [S/2008/665] and 20 October [S/2008/666], the Secretary-General appointed Lieutenant General A. T. M. Zahirul Alam (Bangladesh) as Force Commander of UNMIL to replace Lieutenant Chikadibia Obiakor (Nigeria), whose tour ended on 18 July.

Financing

In June, at its resumed sixty-second (2008) session, the General Assembly considered the performance report on the UNMIL budget for 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 [A/62/648], showing actual expenditures amounting to $676,202,000 against a total appropriation of $714,613,300 and the proposed budget for 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 [A/62/764] of $603,708,000, gross, together with the related ACABQ report [A/62/781/Add.10]. The proposed budget provided for the deployment of 215 military observers, 11,602 military contingent personnel, 582 UN police officers, 605 formed police unit personnel, 549 international staff, 1,049 national staff inclusive of 57 national officers, and 251 United Nations Volunteers. ACABQ recommended approving the proposed budget for 2008–2009 in the amount of $603,708,000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/876], adopted resolution 62/263 without vote [agenda item 152].

Sanctions

The Security Council received several reports on the implementation of sanctions imposed on Liberia, pursuant to Council resolutions 1521(2003)

[YUN 2003, p. 208] and 1792(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 206], which banned arms and related materiel, military training and international travel by individuals who constituted a threat to the peace process in Liberia and the subregion. Financial sanctions were also imposed on the former President of Liberia, Charles Taylor, his immediate family and senior officials of the former Taylor regime by resolution 1532(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 204]. The Council terminated the sanctions on round logs and timber products in 2006 by resolution 1689(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 226] and on diamonds in 2007 by resolution 1753(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 202].

Appointments. In a letter dated 8 February [S/2008/85], the Secretary-General, as requested in resolution 1792(2007), informed the Council of the re-appointment of Wynet V. Smith (Canada) to the Panel of Experts concerning Liberia, as well as the appointment of Guy Lamb (South Africa) and Thomas R. Creal (United States) to replace two of the panelists previously appointed, Dimieari Von Kemedi and Rajiva Bushan [YUN 2007, p. 202], who were unable to continue their service. On 14 July [S/2008/459], the Secretary-General informed the Council of the appointment of Ms. Smith, Nelson Alusala (Kenya) and Mr. Creal to the Panel of Experts. Under resolution 1792(2007), the Panel was mandated to conduct an assessment mission to Liberia and neighbouring States in order to report on the implementation of resolution 1521(2003) and any violations of the sanctions imposed by that resolution and by resolution 1532(2004); the impact and effectiveness of the measures imposed; the implementation of forestry legislation; the Government's compliance with the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme; and the progress in the timber and diamond sectors since the lifting of the sanctions.

Implementation of sanctions regime

Report of Expert Panel (June). In June, the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 208] concerning Liberia transmitted to the Council a report [S/2008/371] of the Panel of Experts concerning Liberia that contained an assessment of the arms embargo, as well as the travel-ban and asset-freeze measures on designated individuals and entities. On the arms embargo, the Panel found that while there were no serious violations, a series of minor violations took place, mainly involving the small-scale transfer of ammunition and single-barrel rifles by individuals from Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea into Liberia. A related problem was Liberia's antiquated and transient approach to firearms control. On 23 January, the Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) approved an application from the United States and Liberian Governments for an exemption from the embargo for arms, ammunition and equipment to train the newly established emergency response unit of the national police. The delivery of Chinese arms, ammunition and policing equipment to the special security services were completed in the early part of the year. However, further deliveries of exempted arms and related materiel by China and the United States took place without notification to the sanctions Committee upon delivery of those consignments, as required by resolution 1792(2007). Moreover, the Liberian Government had not marked the arms and ammunition in question, as required by resolution 1683(2006). The Panel made recommendations for the Ministry of Justice to resolve the uncertainty surrounding the status of its firearms-control policy and legislation; the Government to make arrangements for marking the firearms received from China and the United States; the sanctions Committee to stipulate the manner in which arms and ammunition were to be marked, as no standardized approach was being employed; the United States Embassy in Monrovia to permit the UNMIL Firearm Inspection Team to periodically inspect the exempted arms and related materiel that had been transferred to Liberia; and the Government to ensure that officers required to carry firearms were trained and vetted and border control officials were provided with improved training and resources to enable them to effectively carry out their duties. In addition, all ammunition transferred to the Government of Liberia under exemptions should be marked during the manufacturing stage.

On the travel ban, the Panel visited Monrovia's Roberts International Airport and scrutinized passenger ledgers for the period from 1 September 2007 to 5 May 2008, finding no evidence of violations. It noted that the existence of the Security Council travel ban against certain Liberians and foreign nationals was widely acknowledged, yet was also subject to some criticism among Liberians. The names on the current lists, however, were not so widely known. Officials at many points of entry indicated that, where appropriate, they sought to enforce the travel ban. Yet many Government officials did not understand that Liberia's role in implementing the ban was only to prevent the entry into Liberia of foreign nationals on the list, not to prevent the departure of Liberian citizens. In addition, there were resource, administrative and technical challenges to the enforcement of the travel ban, including out-of-date and missing information, such as valid passport numbers. The Panel also found that the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization was not provided with updated versions of the travel-ban list. Five individuals were removed from the travel-ban list during the reporting period. The Panel recommended the safe storage of the passenger ledgers at Roberts International Airport and the introduction of quality-control processes with respect to recording passenger data. It also recommended that States provide the sanctions Committee with complete and up-to-date information, including photographs, of all individuals on the travel-ban list. The Liberian Government should distribute the list throughout Liberia, thus contributing to a more effective implementation of the travel ban.

The Panel reported that the Government cited the 1986 Constitution as the reason Liberia had not frozen any assets as required by Council resolution 1532(2004). Several high-ranking Liberian legislators and legal scholars, as well as legal advisers to the Ministry of Justice, however, said that Liberian laws provided for such action in accordance with due process, and that the asset-freeze measure of resolution 1532(2004) could be executed without new legislation or executive order. The Panel conducted an investigation of the financial records of parties named on the asset-freeze list and proved that there were assets available for freezing. Tracing of the flow of funds indicated that Gus Kouwenhoven received at least $7 million, yet only $51,692 had been frozen; Edwin Snowe received more than $1 million, yet no assets had been frozen; and Joseph Wong Kiia Tai received more than $8.5 million, with no assets frozen. Funds traced via diverted tax revenues to former President Taylor, as a sample test only, were approximately $20 million, with no assets frozen. The Panel received responses from seven of 25 States and territories requested to provide an update on frozen assets of persons on the list. As at 15 May, the aggregate worldwide assets frozen totalled just over $8.37 million, which was far short of the several hundred million dollars noted by some investigative reporters and the Prosecutor of the Sierra Leone Special Court. It was the Panel's opinion that techniques were available for States to move forward with a more comprehensive implementation of resolution 1532(2004). The Panel recommended a review of the asset-freeze list and modification of the names, with an emphasis on the parties related to Charles Taylor and individuals that had served or were serving as alter egos for him, or had been unjustly enriched. A revision of the business list that was more reflective of companies that had received monies was also recommended, as well as the establishment of a strong team of technical experts to assist Liberia.

On the diamond sector, the Panel said that diamond exploration and mining activities were on the increase. Ten companies had licences for diamond exploration; five applications for new diamond-related mineral exploration licences had been forwarded to the Inter-Ministerial Concessions Committee for consideration; and three of nine existing mineral development agreements were for diamond exploration companies. The Government made significant progress in implementing the Kimberley Process Certification Scheme and its own system of internal controls. Overall, the Government Diamond Office was functioning well. Since the lifting of sanctions on rough diamonds, the Office had issued 43 Kimberley Process certificates, and 39 shipments of rough diamonds had been legally exported as at 15 May. However, a number of challenges and causes for concern remained. Office staff had issued one certificate to an unlicensed exporter, and of the two imports of rough diamonds processed, neither had proceeded properly through the system of internal controls. In addition, statistics gathered by the Office indicated the absence of large and valuable stones from exported shipments, and there were concerns that diamonds were being exported without entering the official system. A setback occurred in February, when a fire at the building housing the Office left it without a roof, and the ensuing rains that flooded the database room damaged the computers that stored the database, affecting the functioning of the Office for a month. Meanwhile, the system of Regional Diamond Offices was not operating as effectively as it could and there was a need for customs, the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy and the national police to cooperate more fully to improve the enforcement of mining law and internal controls. The Panel made a series of recommendations addressed to the Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy, the Government Diamond Office, the Kimberley Process and its working groups, donors and the Government, including to request another Kimberley Process review visit within the next year given the challenges it faced in implementation.

The Forestry Development Authority (FDA) continued to make progress in implementing the National Forestry Reform Law, including approval by the FDA Board of Directors of the National Forest Management Strategy, the preparation of forest management guidelines and the development of the code of forest harvesting practices. Nonetheless, some areas required improvement and others were causes for concern. The Panel did not have sufficient information on the protected-area network to assess progress, and the demarcation of East Nimba Reserve in February had led to conflict between FDA staff and local residents. On the process of awarding contracts for commercial logging concessions, some 44 logging companies had been pre-qualified for bidding on contracts, six timber sales contracts had been tendered and FDA had forwarded recommendations for awarding contracts to three companies to the Inter-Ministerial Concessions Committee. Three forest management contracts had been advertised and bids submitted, and evaluation and due diligence of the 13 bids were under way. The chain-of-custody contract was signed. The Panel made several recommendations for implementation by FDA and for the Government to make a decision about the outstanding recommendation of the third-phase Forest Concession Review Committee and the pre-qualification panel regarding debarment of logging companies. It called on the Liberia Forest Initiative to establish benchmarks for evaluating the willingness and capacity of FDA to implement the new legal framework in order to help it determine where funding needs might be required.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

7. Reiterates its request to the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, within its capabilities and areas of deployment, and without prejudice to its mandate, to assist the Committee and the Panel of Experts by passing to the Committee and the Panel any information relevant to the implementation of the measures in paragraphs 2 and 4 of resolution 1521(2003) in the context of enhanced coordination among United Nations missions and offices in West Africa;

8. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Expert Panel (December). On 12 December, the sanctions Committee Chairman transmitted the report of the Panel of Experts [S/2008/785] to the Security Council. On the diamond industry, the Panel reported that between 5 September 2007 and 30 September 2008, the Government of Liberia authorized exports of over 64,000 carats of rough diamonds valued at $11.9 million. Between 1 January and 30 September 2008, it earned more than $277,000 in export fees and more than $663,150 in licence fees. The Ministry of Lands, Mines and Energy had undertaken more awareness-raising activities and worked with customs officials to ensure that export and import controls functioned more effectively. However, the Government Diamond Office had yet to put in place a system for protecting its digital data files. Regional harmonization efforts were under way and were crucial to addressing common challenges of countries in the subregion. The Panel reiterated its recommendation for the Kimberley Process to develop and adopt guidelines regarding problematic and suspicious shipments. It also urged the Security Council to direct UNMIL to provide support to the Government in its efforts to complete security sector reforms and re-establish control over its natural resources—including diamonds and timber.

Although gains were made in implementing the National Forestry Reform Law, including the FDA's submission to the National Legislature of legislation on community rights regarding forest lands, progress in the commercial sector was more uneven. The Panel found that FDA actions did not comply with some important requirements of the National Forestry Reform Law and with its regulations on the awarding of contracts for commercial timber concessions. A major concern was the change made to the payment terms for three forest-management contracts after the conclusions of negotiations, which could result in the loss of $50 million in revenue for the Government over the course of the 25-year period of the contracts. The Panel observed that concerted efforts would be required to ensure that the forestry reform process continued and the forestry sector could contribute to development on a long-term basis. It urged the Government to reassess its strategy for allocating commercial timber concessions, and to ensure that FDA and other ministries and agencies followed the legal framework that was meant to ensure that financially and technically capable companies applied for timber concessions.

The sanctions Committee on Liberia delisted Charles Bright, Moussa Cisse and Montgomery Dolo from the travel-ban list in May. Charles Taylor Jr. was convicted in October in a federal court in Miami, United States, on torture, firearms and conspiracy charges. Allegations were made that a number of individuals travelled in contravention of the travel ban, and the Panel was attempting to verify that information. Officials in some States in the region continued to claim that they were unaware of the travel-ban list and stressed that their ability to enforce it was limited, due to the porosity of their borders and lack of capacity. The Panel recommended that the Government and other States in the region be more diligent in their application of the travel ban, particularly given the allegations of designated individuals being engaged in recruitment.

The sanctions Committee on Liberia delisted Charles Bright from the asset-freeze list, while another designated individual submitted a request for delisting. The Panel anticipated more petitions for delisting. In their discussions on targeted sanctions, experts and Government implementers recognized the need for the asset-freeze sanctions to evolve. The Panel recommended that the Security Council task an appropriate UN body to serve as the central depository and hub of all asset information and tracing of monies related to Council sanctions. The United Nations could also be tasked with maintaining a repository of information and expertise to assist in tracing the movement of assets from State to State. It also recommended following up with scheduled visits to each of the States that approved the Panel's conducting an on-site visit to banks for a review of the financial records.

As Liberia's borders remained porous and had multiple informal entry points, the Panel noted that the potential for trafficking in arms and ammunition between Côte d'Ivoire and Liberia was great. On the border between Guinea and Liberia, minor cases of transfers of single-barrel ammunition continued. Previously approved exemptions of arms and ammunition for training of the emergency response unit and for the armed forces were delivered, and the sanctions Committee approved an exemption for more materials for the police emergency response unit. Although all imported weapons were marked in conformity with Security Council resolution 1683(2006), the markings were of inferior quality because of the tool used and were susceptible to rust. The Panel recommended that States given exemptions to export weapons notify the Committee in advance of the consignment reaching the port of entry in Liberia, thereby allowing for inspection to take place before the consignment was transferred into storage. It also called for the Government to strengthen the capacity of its law enforcement agencies responsible for monitoring the country's borders, the close monitoring by the authorities of allegations of recruitment of potential fighters along the border between Côte d'Ivoire and Liberia, and the acquisition of more effective weapon-marking machines, preferably of the laser-marking type, whose marks could withstand weathering and obliteration.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 6051], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1854(2008). The draft [S/2008/797] was submitted by the United States.

Security Council Committee. The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1521(2003) concerning Liberia submitted a report [S/2009/236] on its activities in 2008. During the year, the Committee held one formal meeting and 10 informal consultations. The Committee considered and approved five requests for exceptions to the arms embargo: to transfer ammunition from UNMIL formed police units to UN police trainers for the fire-arms training of vetted officers of the police training academy; to enable the United States Government to provide training to the Liberian Special Security Service, and equipment and training to the emergency response unit; to ship weapons and ammunition for training national police officers recruited to serve in the emergency response unit; and to ship equipment for the repair and maintenance of previously approved arms used for training the armed forces.

The Committee considered five requests for travel-ban waivers, of which one was granted. It also received and approved two notifications, regarding the intention of the Italian Government to authorize access to hitherto frozen funds in order to recover expenses of an entity included on the asset-freeze list. The Committee considered 11 requests for delisting from its travel-ban list and asset-freeze list. Three of those requests were received from States (in connection with seven individuals), and four were submitted through the focal point process as set out in resolution 1730(2006). The Committee agreed to delist 10 individuals and observed that the removal of the names was illustrative of the continuing trend towards the conditioned removal of sanctions related to Liberia, which began with the termination of sanctions on timber imports from Liberia in June 2006 and on rough diamond imports from Liberia in April 2007. The delistings were effected through requests from both States and the focal point for delisting, which demonstrated the effectiveness of both channels to pursue delistings set out in the Committee's guidelines. The Committee did not consider two de-listing requests received from the focal point, as the designating State did not support the requests. The Committee removed the tenth individual, Gus Kouwenhoven, from its travel-ban and asset-freeze lists on 15 December [SC/9538], retaining the names of 47 of the 57 persons listed as at 31 December 2007.

The Committee did not receive any additional replies from States on actions taken to implement the sanctions in resolution 1521(2003); thus the number of replies received remained at 17. No additional replies were received from States on action taken to trace and freeze funds, other financial assets and economic resources described in resolution 1532(2004); the number of replies remained at 15.

Sierra Leone

In 2008, the Government of Sierra Leone continued efforts to implement its agenda for peace consolidation and economic recovery. At his first presidential retreat, President Ernest Bai Koroma discussed his vision and strategies for moving the country forward and secured the commitment of each minister to allow their performance to be periodically monitored and assessed. Other developments included the appointment of a public service reform Director, the launch of the Justice Sector Reform Strategy and Investment Plan, the approval of a national anti-corruption strategy and the submission of the Constitutional Review Commission report, which proposed 136 amendments to the 1991 Constitution. Successful local council elections were conducted in July. The United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone continued to support Government efforts to consolidate peace. The Secretary-General presented the completion strategy for the Office, including the gradual drawdown of the mission, termination of its mandate by 30 September and transition to a successor integrated political office. His recommendations on the mandate, structure and strength of the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone were endorsed by the Security Council in August and the transition culminated in the adoption of a Joint Vision of the United Nations Family for Sierra Leone that brought together the political mandate of the Office with the development and humanitarian mandates of other UN system bodies. In December, President Koroma issued his Agenda for Change, which presented the priorities of the Government over the next three years and set out the foundation for peacebuilding. A high-level stakeholders' consultation was held in May to garner support for the Sierra Leone Peacebuilding Cooperation Framework. During the year, some 47 per cent of the $35 million allocated to Sierra Leone through the Peacebuilding Fund had been committed through seven projects.

Peacebuilding efforts

Peace consolidation process and UNIOSIL activities

UNIOSIL completion strategy. In response to Security Council resolution 1793(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 214], the Secretary-General, in a letter of 31 January [S/2008/63], outlined the completion strategy for the United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL), which entailed a 20 per cent reduction in staff by 31 March; a continued mission at 80 per cent of the strength as at 21 December 2007 until 30 June 2008; and the termination of the UNIOSIL mandate by 30 September 2008. To determine the number of staff required to perform the remaining tasks, UNIOSIL conducted a section-by-section assessment of the personnel required to implement those tasks, which included assisting the Government in its efforts to reform the Constitution; enhance democratic governance; strengthen the security, judicial and corrections sectors; promote human rights; strengthen women's participation in the political process; and address the root causes of the conflict as identified by the report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission [YUN 2004, p. 219].

On the basis of the mission-wide review, it was determined that UNIOSIL could be downsized by 62 posts, including 15 international staff members, 43 national staff and 4 UN Volunteers, which represented 20 per cent of its authorized staffing complement. UNIOSIL was streamlining tasks within each section to ensure that the mission retained the requisite capacity to effectively perform its tasks. The mission would also transfer some of its activities to relevant UN agencies. Until the expiration of its mandate on 30 September, UNIOSIL would implement the following key tasks: assist the Government in conducting local government elections scheduled for 5 July; monitor the security situation and strengthen the capacity of the national security sector; promote transparency and accountability, including good governance, and combat corruption; monitor and promote human rights and the rule of law; promote a culture of peace, dialogue and participation through UN Radio; implement resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] and promote the empowerment of women and their participation in decision-making; and facilitate the work of the Peacebuilding Commission.

Following the local government elections in July, UNIOSIL would gradually draw down its remaining personnel, beginning with substantive personnel, while the administrative and logistical staff needed to complete the liquidation process would withdraw last. Any additional proposals on the mission's drawdown, as well as on the mandate, structure and strength of the follow-on integrated political office discussed in the Secretary-General's December 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 211] would be submitted in his April report on UNIOSIL.

On 28 February [S/2008/137], the Security Council took note of the UNIOSIL completion strategy and requested the Secretary-General to provide further information in his April report on the planned drawdown of UNIOSIL between the local elections in July and their completion in September; specific proposals on the mandate, structure and strength of the successor integrated political office; and plans for the UN police/military adviser team element.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his sixth report on UNIOSIL [S/2008/281], the Secretary-General said that the Government of Sierra Leone made efforts to implement its agenda for peace consolidation and economic recovery. On 12 and 13 January, at his first presidential retreat for cabinet Ministers, deputy Ministers and other key Government officials, President Koroma discussed his vision and strategies for moving the country forward, focusing on six priority areas: energy and water supply; transportation by road, air and water; youth unemployment; economic growth sectors, including agriculture, mining, tourism, and fisheries and marine resources; social services, including education, health care and housing; and capacity development in the public and private sectors, in local government and in the justice system.

Political tension between supporters of the ruling All People's Congress party (APC) and the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) continued to be a concern. In January, SLPP adopted a resolution calling on the Government to immediately dissolve the National Electoral Commission and remove the Chairperson before the local council elections on 5 July. It also condemned the dismissal by the APC Government of public officials perceived to be supporters of SLPP. On 13 February, the High Court of Sierra Leone dismissed the case brought by SLPP in December 2007, which challenged the decision of the National Electoral Commission to invalidate votes cast in 477 polling stations during the presidential run-off elections on 8 September 2007. The Court ruled that it had no jurisdiction under the 1991 Constitution to consider any proceedings concerning the election of a president. On 5 April, the National Electoral Commission announced that APC had won all four seats in the parliamentary by-elections held on 29 March to fill vacancies that had arisen following the appointment of the incumbents to ministerial posts. The by-elections were well organized and ran smoothly.

The security situation in the country, including along the borders with Guinea and Liberia, remained calm. Although the territorial dispute between Guinea and Sierra Leone over the border town of Yenga was still not settled, the Sierra Leonean Government expressed its commitment to resolve the issue. The main threats to stability included the high numbers of unemployed young people, poor economic and social conditions exacerbated by the rising price of food commodities and gasoline, and unresolved political and ethnic tensions. UNIOSIL worked with the United Kingdom Department for International Development (DFID) to strengthen the Sierra Leone police by providing it with training, mentoring, management development, and technical and policy advice. The mission had supported the police election planning secretariat to prepare for the March by-elections and was assisting the police in developing a security operational plan and budget for the local council elections in July.

UNIOSIL continued to support the efforts of the United Kingdom, through the International Military Advisory and Training Team and DFID, to reform and restructure the Sierra Leone Armed Forces. Following a comprehensive review undertaken by the Ministry of Defence, the Government approved a further reduction of the armed forces, from 10,500 to 8,500 troops, to be completed by 2010. Meanwhile, the armed forces continued to face financial and logistical challenges, including the inadequate supply of fuel to operate vehicles and generators. In addition, military personnel and their families were still living in overcrowded, substandard conditions at the main barracks in Freetown, with limited access to safe drinking water and proper sanitation. Efforts were under way to upgrade the three military barracks in Freetown with funds from the UN Peacebuilding Fund.

In preparation for the local council elections on 5 July, UNIOSIL provided technical assistance to the National Electoral Commission. The elections would cover the five city councils of Bo, Freetown, Kenema, Koidu-New Sembehun and Makeni, the Bonthe Township Municipal Council, and 13 district councils. In efforts to enhance the role of women in the political process, UNIOSIL encouraged political parties to promote gender equality and youth empowerment by increasing the number of women candidates in the elections. It also convened a series of meetings with a wide range of stakeholders to explore ways to increase women's representation in the elections, which resulted in the establishment of a national steering committee and a five-month workplan with benchmarks. UNIOSIL facilitated the establishment of a working group to coordinate technical and capacity-building support to Parliament, while the development of a capacity development programme for parliamentarians was also under way. President Koroma appointed a Director for Public Service Reform, and on 19 February launched the Sierra Leone Justice Sector Reform Strategy and Investment Plan 2008–2010, which focused on creating safe communities, providing access to justice, strengthening the rule of law and improving the delivery of justice. A Justice Sector Coordination Office was established to facilitate the day-to-day implementation of the strategy. UNDP set up temporary courts to assist in clearing long-outstanding cases and helped to refurbish and equip court facilities.

On efforts to fight corruption, the Anti-Corruption Commission developed a strategic workplan, established a Department of Investigation, Intelligence and Prosecution and relocated anti-corruption prosecutors from the Office of the Attorney General to the Commission. In February, the Cabinet approved a national anti-corruption strategy, which was supported by UNIOSIL and other international partners. On 17 April, the Commission arrested Francis Gabbidon for alleged offences under the Anti-Corruption Act of 2000 during his tenure as Ombudsman from 2000 to 2007.

On 10 January, the Constitutional Review Commission, established by the Government in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 234] to revise the Constitution, submitted to President Koroma its report, which proposed 136 amendments, 15 of which were amendments to “entrenched” provisions that would require approval by national referendum. Several recommendations made by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and provisions relating to the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms were not included. In promoting respect for human rights, gains were made in building the capacity of the national Human Rights Commission to monitor, protect and promote human rights and to review the status of implementation of the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Some progress was also made in building the capacity of State institutions to address the root causes of the conflict.

On the drawdown of UNIOSIL, the Secretary-General said that the 20 per cent reduction of the mission had been completed, bringing its staffing strength from 309 to 247 civilian staff. UNIOSIL would reduce its remaining civilian staff through attrition, including reassignment of personnel to other peacekeeping operations and expiration of staff contracts. It was estimated that 60 support personnel would be needed to complete the liquidation of UNIOSIL, which was expected to take place between October and December. He observed that UNIOSIL had made significant progress in supporting Government efforts to consolidate peace, including strengthening the capacity of the security sector, promoting respect for human rights and the rule of law, building the capacity of the National Electoral Commission to conduct elections and making arrangements for the handover of UN Radio. As the sustained commitment of the United Nations in Sierra Leone would continue to be required following the drawdown of UNIOSIL in September, he recommended that the Security Council approve the establishment of an integrated UN peacebuilding office to succeed UNIOSIL for an initial one-year period. The mandate, structure and strength of the office were outlined in the report (see below).

Security Council consideration (May). Briefing the Security Council on the situation in Sierra Leone on 7 May [meeting 5887], the Assistant Secretary-General for Rule of Law and Security Institutions in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, Dmitry Titov, focused on the preparations for the local elections, the challenges facing the security sector, the socio-economic conditions in the country, human rights and rule-of-law issues, peacebuilding support activities and the proposed mandate, structure and strength of the post-UNIOSIL office.

The Chairman of the Peacebuilding Commission's country-specific meetings on Sierra Leone, Frank Majoor, briefed the Council on the advocacy and resource-mobilization efforts of the Commission and the findings of his visit to Sierra Leone (21–25 April). He said that the Commission's engagement with Sierra Leone focused on three objectives: generating support for the implementation of the commitments contained in the Peacebuilding Cooperation Framework, broadening the donor base, and triggering new activities or scaling up existing ones in peacebuilding priority areas.

Appointment. On 27 May, the Secretary-General appointed Michael von der Schulenburg (Germany) as the Acting Executive Representative in Sierra Leone and Head of UNIOSIL.

Establishment of UN Peacebuilding Office

In response to Security Council resolution 1793(2007), the Secretary-General, in his April report [S/2008/281], submitted proposals on the mandate, structure and strength of the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone (UNIPSIL), which would succeed UNIOSIL in October following the expiration of its mandate. The UNIPSIL mandate included assisting Government efforts in the following areas: providing political support to national and local efforts for identifying and resolving tensions and threats of potential conflict; completing and consolidating good governance reforms; reviewing the 1991 Constitution and key legislation; strengthening the justice sector, Parliament and key governance institutions; supporting security sector reform; promoting the effective functioning of local government; implementing the Peacebuilding Cooperation Framework and the work of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Peacebuilding Fund; observing and analysing the human rights situation with a view to strengthening national human rights institutions and practices, including implementation of the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission; sustaining efforts for the political and economic empowerment of youth and women; supporting gender mainstreaming into peace consolidation efforts; promoting collaboration and coordination among all partners; promoting a culture of peace and dialogue, including by providing support to the envisaged independent public broadcasting station; and continuing cooperation with other peace operations in the subregion to promote regional peace.

UNIPSIL would be led by the UN Department of Political Affairs (DPA), with UNDP support, in close consultation with the UN country team, the Peacebuilding Support Office and other stakeholders. The Office would be headed by the Secretary-General's Executive Representative, with a staff of 19 professional officers, assisted by 3 national administrative assistants, 24 operational support staff (16 international and 8 national) and 20 helicopter support staff (4 international and 16 national). The helicopter service was particularly important given that local means of transport from the international airport at Lungi to the mainland in Freetown did not comply with international or UN standards and that an air capacity for medical evacuation would continue to be a requirement. UNIPSIL would comprise a small front office and three substantive sections focusing on the key areas of the mandate: peace and governance; human rights and the rule of law; and youth and gender empowerment. Its structure would allow for the collocation of UN political and development personnel, who would utilize the joint resources of the integrated office and the UN country team to implement the UNIPSIL mandate. The Secretary-General indicated that the ability of UNIPSIL to effectively implement its mandate would be contingent on the availability of requisite logistical capacity and resources, as well as operational support from the Department of Field Support.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

8. Emphasizes the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding, as recognized in resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000 and 1820(2008) of 19 June 2008, underlines that a gender perspective should be taken into account in implementing all aspects of the mandate of the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone, and encourages the Office to work with the Government of Sierra Leone in this regard;

9. Requests that the Secretary-General keep the Security Council informed, every four months, on the implementation of the mandate of the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone and the present resolution, with the first report due by 31 January 2009;

10. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

In his first report on UNIPSIL [S/2009/59], the Secretary-General said that the transition from UNIOSIL to UNIPSIL proceeded as planned, with extensive consultations among UN system entities, culminating in the adoption of a Joint Vision of the United Nations Family for Sierra Leone. The Joint Vision brought together the political mandate of UNIPSIL with the development and humanitarian mandates of UN agencies, funds and programmes, and defined the contribution of the UN system in the implementation of the President's Agenda for Change and the Sierra Leone poverty reduction strategy. In addition to the overall objective of assisting the Government in consolidating peace, the Joint Vision identified four priorities: the economic integration of the rural areas; the engagement of unemployed youth; equitable access to health care; and the enhancement of good governance.

Further peace process developments

The Secretary-General reported [S/2009/59] that the political situation remained stable. The interaction between the two major parties, SLPP and APC, was largely constructive. The Government made the fight against corruption a key element in its reform platform. On 15 October, it established a Commission of Inquiry to examine the use of donor funds by the previous SLPP administration. UNIPSIL encouraged the resumption of political dialogue through the revival of the All Political Parties Association and the rejuvenation of the Political Parties Registration Commission. Chieftaincy disputes remained a major challenge for the political and legal processes.

On 1 December, President Koroma issued his Agenda for Change, which presented the policies and priorities of the Government for a three-year period and set out the foundation for peacebuilding. Funding required to achieve the objectives outlined in the Agenda was estimated at $2.1 billion. To enhance democratic institutions, UNIPSIL, UNDP and other partners formed a working group that coordinated international assistance to Parliament. Eight regional retreats were organized for 124 parliamentarians and paramount chiefs between October and December. UNDP and the Inter-Parliamentary Union sponsored a meeting of African parliamentarians and support staff from neighbouring countries on the role of Parliament. Meanwhile, decentralization frameworks and institutions were in place and successful local council elections were held in July. UNDP and the UN Capital Development Fund also supported local capacity-building efforts.

Cocaine trafficking represented the greatest single threat to security. An immediate concern was the increasing use of Sierra Leone as a trans-shipment point for the trafficking of illegal narcotics from South America to Europe. Another security challenge was piracy. The Government planned to work with its neighbours to establish joint sea patrols.

In other developments, the Government and UNIPSIL agreed on a road map for the transfer of UN Radio to an independent public broadcaster. UNIPSIL provided technical support for draft legislation establishing the new broadcast service. It also continued to assist the Government in implementing the Truth and Reconciliation Commission recommendations. In December, the Child Rights Act was formally launched. The Secretary-General appealed to States and the international community to extend support to Sierra Leone, in particular to the implementation of the President's Agenda for Change.

Peacebuilding Commission

Reporting on its second session [A/63/92-S/2008/417], the Peacebuilding Commission stated that, on 17 January, the Sierra Leone configuration agreed on a workplan for resource mobilization, outreach and advocacy for the Peacebuilding Cooperation Framework adopted in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 53]. The Chair of the configuration visited Washington, D.C., London, Brussels, Berlin and The Hague and later met with representatives of the private sector, foundations and international financial institutions about the Framework. On 7 May, the Chair briefed the Security Council on recent developments and made recommendations for continuing the UN integrated presence in the country.

Stakeholder consultation. A high-level consultation on Sierra Leone (New York, 19 May) [PBC/2/SLE/5] underscored the importance of providing international support through direct budget support, sector-wide programmes and multi-donor funding mechanisms to ensure national ownership. It made recommendations related to aid coordination policy and a national youth employment and empowerment strategy, along with initiatives to foster national reconciliation, inter-party dialogue and participation of youth and women in the electoral process in the lead-up to the 5 July elections (see p. 214).

Mission to Sierra Leone (June). The Commission sent a delegation to Sierra Leone headed by the Chair of the configuration (1–7 June) [PBC/2/SLE/7]. The mission addressed youth employment and empowerment, local elections, the 2008–2010 poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP) and donor coordination, energy sector development, justice and security sector reform, capacity-building and subregional issues. It recommended that the next PRSP be conflict-sensitive, linked to the Framework, and have clear objectives. The Government was urged to hold consultations with stakeholders on the report of the Constitutional Review Commission; follow up on the decisions of the Presidential Summit of the Mano River Union (14–15 May); convene ministerial and sectoral meetings on issues of common concern, especially security; finalize decisions on aid coordination and develop an aid policy; increase domestic revenue-generation to reduce aid dependency; and strengthen national ownership and sustainability of reform initiatives. The United Nations and international partners were called on to strengthen support for implementing the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's recommendations and establishing the Commission's Follow-up Committee within the National Human Rights Commission. The Peacebuilding Commission should support the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in coordinating Government leadership in the peacebuilding process; provide greater support for Government advocacy and resource mobilization; and advocate with UN bodies to ensure support for the Commission.

Biannual reviews of Cooperation Framework. The Sierra Leone configuration held biannual reviews of the implementation of the Framework on 19 June and 15 December. It had before it June [PBC/2/SLE/9 & PBC/2/SLE/8] and December reports [PBC/3/SLE/3 & PBC/3/SLE/2] containing conclusions and recommendations concerning the Framework.

In identical letters of 20 June [A/62/887-S/2008/416] to the General Assembly, Security Council and Economic and Social Council, and a 15 December [A/63/802-S/2008/850] to the Assembly and Security Council, the Chairs of the Peacebuilding Commission and the Sierra Leone configuration drew attention to the recommendations addressed to the international community for follow-up. In a later report [A/64/341-S/2009/444], the Commission confirmed that the recommendations and conclusions on the implementation of the Framework were transmitted to all stakeholders.

(For further information on the Peacebuilding Commission, see p. 54).

UNIOSIL

The United Nations Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL), established by Security Council resolution 1620(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 282], was mandated to assist the Government in strengthening the capacity of State institutions, rule of law, human rights and the security sector; developing economic empowerment initiatives for youth; improving transparency and good governance and building capacity to hold free and fair elections in 2007, as well as to liaise with the Sierra Leonean security sector; coordinate with UN missions and regional organizations in West Africa to address cross-border issues; and coordinate with the Special Court for Sierra Leone. The United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone succeeded UNIOSIL in October following the expiration of its mandate on 30 September 2008. In 2008, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council the UNIOSIL completion strategy [S/2008/63] and an April report on developments in Sierra Leone and the activities of UNIOSIL [S/2008/281]. In addition to political and security aspects, the report summarized UNIOSIL activities relating to humanitarian issues, human rights and the rule of law, public information/UN Radio, socio-economic matters, implementation of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) and gender mainstreaming, and support to the Special Court for Sierra Leone, as well as the Peacebuilding Commission.

Financing of missions

UNIPSIL

In an October report [A/63/346/Add.3] dealing with estimated requirements for special political missions grouped under thematic cluster III (United Nations offices, peacebuilding support offices, integrated offices and commissions), the Secretary-General proposed resource requirements for UNIPSIL in the amount of $15,204,000 for the period 1 January to 31 December 2009, which ACABQ recommended for approval [A/63/593]. The requirements of some $3,451,000 for UNIPSIL start-up operations for the period 1 October to 31 December 2008 were accommodated by utilizing the estimated unencumbered balance of the appropriation for UNIOSIL.

On 24 December, in section XI of resolution 63/263, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ and approved the budgets for 27 special political missions, including the UNIPSIL budget, under section 3, Political affairs, of the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium (see p. 1548).

UNAMSIL

In June, the General Assembly considered a report of the Secretary-General providing details on the final disposition of the assets of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) [A/62/756], which had a total inventory value of $61,909,000 and were disposed of as at 31 December 2007. ACABQ [A/62/781/Add.4] noted that the final closure of UNAMSIL accounts would take place in 2009, at which time the final performance report would be submitted for consideration by the Assembly. It recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report on the final disposition of UNAMSIL assets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/879], adopted resolution 62/266 without vote [agenda item 154].

Financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 1270(1999) of 22 October 1999, by which the Council established the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council revised and extended the mandate of the Mission, the latest of which was resolution 1610(2005) of 30 June 2005, by which the Council extended the mandate of the Mission for a final period of six months until 31 December 2005,

Special Court for Sierra Leone

The Special Court for Sierra Leone, jointly established by the Government of Sierra Leone and the United Nations in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 164], pursuant to Security Council resolution 1315(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 205], continued in 2008 to try those bearing the greatest responsibility for violations of international humanitarian and Sierra Leonean laws committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since November 1996. The trials of two cases were ongoing during the year: the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) trial, in the first trial chamber, and the trial of former Liberian President Charles Taylor in the second trial chamber. In addition, the Appeals Chambers delivered judgements pertaining to the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) and the Civil Defence Forces (CDF) trials, which were completed in 2007.

On 21 and 22 February 2008, the Special Court convened an international meeting of experts at its Freetown headquarters to discuss residual issues that required consideration with regard to the Special Court's dissolution in 2010. The conference was attended by representatives of the Special Court's Management Committee, the Government of Sierra Leone, UN Member States, international tribunals, national and international non-governmental organizations, and the international donor community. A conference report highlighted issues requiring action. In December, an updated Completion Strategy was presented to the Management Committee. As the Special Court neared the completion of its mandate, it continued downsizing its personnel and would remain reliant on the contribution of gratis personnel to fill key positions.

RUF trial. In the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) trial, which had adjourned in June 2007 to allow Trial Chamber I to focus on the CDF Trial Judgement [YUN 2007, p. 219], the Issa Sesay defence recommenced and continued through two additional trial sessions, from 4 October to 27 November 2007 and from 10 January to 13 March 2008. Although it closed its case on 13 March, the Sesay defence was permitted to call one additional witness as the Chamber granted the defence application to issue a subpoena for Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, former President of Sierra Leone. Mr. Kabbah testified publicly on 16 May. On 10 April, Morris Kallon commenced his defence case and testified personally from 11 to 21 April. The defence case for Augustine Gbao began on 2 June and concluded on 24 June after calling eight witnesses. Final trial briefs were submitted by Mr. Gbao, Mr. Kallon and the Prosecution on 29 July, and by Mr. Sesay on 31 July. The Trial Chamber heard closing arguments on 5 August. During the 2007–2008 reporting period, Trial Chamber I issued 63 decisions and orders in the RUF trial, bringing the number of decisions and orders issued by the Chamber since the commencement of the trial to 217.

Trial of Charles Taylor. The hearing of evidence in the trial of former Liberian President Charles Taylor commenced on 7 January, after the Chamber in August 2007 had granted his counsel additional time to prepare the case [ibid.]. During the first trial session from January to March, the Prosecution presented the testimony of 21 witnesses, including 4 experts, 7 victims and 10 insider witnesses. In total, the Prosecution called some 91 witnesses.

AFRC appeal. In the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) trial, Alex Tamba Brima, Brima Bazzy Kamara and Santigie Borbor Kanu appealed the Court's 2007 judgement [ibid., p. 218], which found them guilty of seven counts of war crimes and four counts of crimes against humanity, imposing sentences of 50 years of imprisonment for Mssrs. Brima and Kanu and 45 years for Mr. Kamara. On 22 February 2008, the Appeals Chamber issued its judgement, dismissing the appeals of the convicted persons, granting the Prosecution's appeal that acts of forced marriage constituted "other inhumane acts"—a crime against humanity—and upholding the sentences.

CDF appeal. In the Civil Defence Forces (CDF) trial, the judgement issued in August 2007 [ibid., p. 219] found Mssrs. Moinina Fofana and Allieu Kondewa guilty of four counts of murder, cruel treatment, pillage and collective punishment, and Mr. Kondewa also guilty of enlisting children under the age of 15 into an armed group. In October, Mssrs. Fofana and Kondewa were sentenced to six years and eight years of imprisonment, respectively. On 28 May 2008, the Appeals Chamber delivered its judgment after hearing oral arguments on 12 and 13 March. The Appeals Chamber reversed the acquittal of Mssrs. Fofana and Kondewa on murder and other inhumane acts as crimes against humanity, found them guilty of those crimes, revised the concurrent sentences imposed by the Trial Chamber and entered new concurrent sentences for a total term of imprisonment of 15 years for Mr. Fofana and 20 years for Mr. Kondewa.

Sanctions

The Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1132(1997) [YUN 1997, p. 135] concerning Sierra Leone submitted a report [S/2009/94] covering its 2008 activities in monitoring and implementing the 1998 embargo on the sale or supply of arms to Sierra Leone and the travel ban on leading members of the former military junta in Sierra Leone and of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), imposed by resolution 1171(1998) [YUN 1998, p. 169].

During 2008, the Committee held one session of informal consultations. On 30 May it considered a letter dated 1 May from Sierra Leone with recommendations for the revision of the Committee's travel-ban list in light of the overall security, judicial, political and other developments in the country. It also urged the Committee, in its review of the notification provision for arms exports imposed by resolution 1171(1998), to consider the ECOWAS Convention on Small Arms and Light Weapons, Their Ammunition and Other Related Materials, which Sierra Leone had ratified; the adoption by the General Assembly of the International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons [YUN 2005, p. 621]; and the UN Register of Conventional Arms, to which Sierra Leone had been contributing. Subsequently, on 9 June, the Committee decided to delist 24 individuals from the travel ban [SC/9350]. In a reply of 25 June, the Chairman informed Sierra Leone of the Committee's decision to remove the names. With regard to the review of the notification requirements for the delivery of arms or related materiel to Sierra Leone, Committee members were of the view that decisions on the arms embargo fell within the purview of the Security Council, and therefore had decided to convey the 1 May 2008 letter to the Council. During the reporting period, no violations or alleged violations of the sanctions regime were brought to the attention of the Committee.

In other activity, the Chairman, on 7 January, informed the Registrar of the Special Court for Sierra Leone that, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1793(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 214], the travel of any witnesses required to appear at trial before the Special Court was exempt from the travel-ban restrictions. In that connection, with regard to the Registrar's 31 December 2007 request for a waiver of the travel restrictions for a witness in the trial of Charles Taylor, advance approval by the Committee was not required. The Chairman had also sought the agreement of the Special Court on notification procedures for the travel of listed individuals pursuant to paragraph 8 of resolution 1793(2007). In a reply of 15 January 2008, the Registrar confirmed to the Committee the notification procedures to be followed in connection with the travel of any individuals included on the Committee's travel-ban list whose presence was required before the Special Court.

The Committee observed that six individuals remained on the travel-ban list: the former leader of the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council (AFRC) junta and five others who had been indicted by the Special Court. The delisting of 24 individuals was made possible in part by the improved security situation in Sierra Leone and by the prevailing stability in the subregion due to the commitment of leaders of the Mano River Union countries to a peaceful resolution of issues. In light of those developments and Sierra Leone's suggestion on the review of the notification provision for arms exports, the Committee Chairman encouraged members of the Committee and the Security Council to continue consultations to determine the appropriate time to streamline the legal basis for the sanctions.

Guinea-Bissau

In 2008, the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau continued to assist the Government in its efforts to promote national reconciliation, organize legislative elections and combat drug and human trafficking and organized crime. The political climate remained fragile, despite the political and government stability pact signed by the three main political parties in 2007. Political and institutional tensions between President João Bernardo Vieira and the National Assembly concerning the mandate of the Assembly culminated in August with the appointment of a new Prime Minister and Government. An amnesty bill passed in April exempted those involved in political-military crimes prior to October 2004 from legal prosecution, and established the National Reconciliation Commission. Progress was achieved with the establishment of the National Commission for Human Rights; a financial agreement between the European Community and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, which supported the creation of a special anti-narcotics unit within the judiciary police; and the calm and orderly conduct of legislative elections in November. Nonetheless, relations between two of the three signatories to the stability pact continued to deteriorate, and in July, the African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde withdrew from the pact. Instability in the military manifested itself in August, when the authorities uncovered a planned coup d'état, and in November, when unknown assailants attacked the residence of President Vieira, who escaped unharmed. The illicit drug trade remained a concern amid reports that Guinea-Bissau was becoming a strategic link in the transport of illegal narcotics from South America to Europe. The Economic Commission of West African States convened a ministerial conference on drug trafficking to help design a regional action plan and prepare a draft political declaration. In light of the work of the Peacebuilding Commission in Guinea-Bissau, the Economic and Social Council terminated the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau.

Political and security developments and UNOGBIS activities

Report of Secretary-General (March). In his report [S/2008/181] on developments in the country and activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS), the Secretary-General noted that the political climate continued to be fragile, despite the political and government stability pact signed by the three main political parties in March 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 222] and the National Assembly's approval of the Government programme and the 2007 and 2008 budgets in December 2007 [ibid., p. 230]. On 29 February, the President of the African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde (PAIGC), Carlos Gomes Jr., announced the withdrawal of the Party's political confidence in the Prime Minister, Martinho N'Dafa Cabi, over issues of internal discipline. Following the Assembly's unanimous approval of draft legislation granting amnesty to those involved in political-military motivated crimes against the security of the State up to 6 October 2004 [ibid.], proponents of the law, including President João Bernardo Vieira and the Chief of the General Staff, General Batista Tagme Na Waie, argued that it would facilitate reconciliation and pave the way for security sector reform. Civil society organizations, while recognizing the positive impact it might have on national reconciliation, stated that there should have been broader involvement of civil society in the debate and that the issues of truth and restorative justice were not sufficiently addressed. The draft law was submitted for review to the parliamentary permanent special commission on human rights, legal and constitutional affairs. Controversy also surrounded the re-election on 26 January of the President of the Supreme Court, Maria do Céu Monteiro, by an electoral college consisting of nine Supreme Court judges, due to the interpretation of two pieces of legislation, one of which provided for a restricted electoral college, while the other, a more recent law of 2002, provided for a wider electoral college consisting of 100 judges from the various judicial institutions. Ms. Monteiro's main rival, Supreme Court Judge Emílio Kafft Kosta, boycotted the election, but his protest to the election commission was rejected. Critics stated that the election was a blow to the rule of law and complained of political interference in the process.

On UN electoral assistance, UNDP finalized a project document to provide support for the 2008–2010 electoral cycle, including the 2008 legislative elections and presidential elections scheduled for 2010. UNDP proposed a budget of $4.7 million for the legislative elections, of which some $1.2 million had been secured. However, the budget did not include the payment of arrears ($1.7 million) owed to electoral commissions from past elections, the cost of voter registration in the diaspora and salaries of Government officials in charge of the electoral process, amounting to $2 million. Although the authorities had yet to set a date for the legislative elections, in comments broadcasted at the end of January, General Na Waie warned politicians to respect the results of the elections or face arrest. The National Civil Society Movement for Peace, Democracy and Development urged the military not to interfere in political and legal matters and called on the international community to closely follow political and social developments in the country. Under the capacity-building programme for parliamentarians, the Netherlands Development Organization (SNV) and UNOGBIS organized training in conflict transformation skills for 15 parliamentarians, while 14 parliamentarians attended a leadership training workshop facilitated by SNV. In February, UNOGBIS and SNV facilitated a workshop on conflict transformation for 11 senior political and military advisers nominated by the Offices of the President and the Prime Minister, the leaders of the parliamentary parties—PAIGC, the Social Renewal Party (PRS) and the United Social Democratic Party (PUSD)—and General Na Waie.

On military and security aspects, the security sector reform programme was launched on 23 January. General Na Waie expressed support for the restructuring and modernization of the armed forces, yet warned that the reforms should not result in the impoverishment of the beneficiaries, as such a situation could make them vulnerable to manipulation. A €7.7 million financial convention between the European Commission and the Government for the security sector reform/disarmament, demobilization and reintegration project was signed on 22 January. The Lisbon International Conference on Drug Trafficking in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 228] raised $6.7 million of the $19 million required for the anti-narcotics programme developed by the Government with the assistance of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), which would allow for the implementation of emergency action plans for 2008. On 22 January, at a debriefing and follow-up meeting organized by UNOGBIS and attended by Government representatives, international partners and UNODC representatives, it was agreed that the Minister of Justice and UNODC should urgently find an efficient strategic framework for implementing the narcotics programme. The judicial police, UNODC and UNOGBIS experts visited a number of facilities in Bissau and in the surrounding areas to identify suitable venues for the installation of a temporary detention centre. In addition to the two senior advisers assigned to Bissau in November 2007, UNODC would appoint a project manager by March 2008 to coordinate its expanding activities in Guinea-Bissau. Meanwhile, the International Federation for Human Rights dispatched a team to Guinea-Bissau (7–16 January) to look into reports of a deteriorating environment for human rights and press freedom, particularly with regard to reporting on drug issues, following allegations that journalists had been threatened for reporting on suspected drug trafficking activities in the country. In other security developments, a mission from the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs visited Guinea-Bissau (21–25 January) to assess the progress made by the National Commission against the Proliferation of Small Arms and Light Weapons towards developing a plan of action, which included a pilot project. In January, the authorities arrested two Mauritians in Bissau who were wanted by Mauritania for the alleged murder of four French citizens in Mauritania. The Mauritians, who claimed to be members of Al-Qaida, were extradited to Mauritania. On 25 February, Guinea-Bissau and Spain signed an agreement to jointly conduct air and sea patrols along Guinea-Bissau's maritime borders with a view to combating human trafficking.

The Secretary-General observed that the Government had made tangible progress in engaging the international community in its efforts to implement reforms necessary for sustainable political and economic stabilization. As Guinea-Bissau had been placed on the Peacebuilding Commission's agenda and declared eligible for funding from the Peacebuilding Fund, he urged the Government and its partners to move the process forward, particularly in setting up the national steering committee and implementing quick-impact projects. On the legislative elections, he encouraged the authorities to set a date for the polls as a first step towards creating a climate of confidence in the credibility of the process and urged the international community to provide resources for the elections, including resources to cover the arrears from past elections. He further appealed to the international community to provide enhanced support and training for Guinea-Bissau's law enforcement and criminal justice system within the wider framework of security sector reform and the fight against organized crime, drug trafficking and terrorism.

Security Council consideration (March). Briefing the Security Council on 26 March [meeting 5860], the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Shola Omoregie (Nigeria), said that the previous evening, President Vieira had announced that the legislative elections would be held on 16 November, but preparations for the elections were moving forward slowly.

The Chair of the Guinea-Bissau Configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission, Maria Luiza Ribeiro Viotti, briefed the Council on progress made by the Commission and on the way forward. In order to develop the strategic framework, the Commission would conduct a field mission to the country in April.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In his report [S/2008/395] on Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities, the Secretary-General said that the political environment was marked by tensions between President Vieira and the National Assembly over the mandate of the Assembly, which was expected to end on 21 April. The Constitution provided for a four-year mandate for the Assembly beginning on the date of the announcement of the results of legislative elections, while the electoral law set the dates for the elections between 23 October and 25 November of the year when the legislature's mandate ended. If elections were held on 16 November, as was promulgated by a 25 March decree by President Vieira, and the mandate of the 2004–2008 legislature ended on 21 April in accordance with the Constitution, there would be an institutional vacuum of more than six months between the end of the Assembly's mandate and the elections. At the request of PRS, the National Assembly convened a debate on 27 March and adopted a resolution to extend the Assembly's mandate until the results of the legislative elections were announced. Supporters invoked a National Assembly internal regulation stipulating that the mandate of parliamentarians commenced with the first session after the elections and ended after the announcement of the results of the following elections; those opposed considered the resolution's adoption unconstitutional and sought the legal opinion of the Supreme Court of Justice. President Vieira and other political actors questioned the resolution's legality as it passed without the mandatory two-thirds majority and would come into effect without the President's assent, thereby usurping his constitutional powers of promulgation. The President held separate consultations with members of political parties, followed on 15 April by a meeting of the Council of State aiming to seek a consensual solution. On 16 April, an extraordinary session of the National Assembly adopted an exceptional transitional constitutional bill extending the mandate of the Assembly until the announcement of the results of the elections, which President Vieira promulgated on 18 April. However, opposition parties and civil society expressed concerns that the President had signed the bill under pressure from the military, and decried continued interference in politics by the armed forces. Following a 28 April request by parliamentarians for an advisory opinion on the exceptional transitional constitutional bill, the Supreme Court confirmed on 17 May that legal consultations were taking place with, among others, the Prosecutor General and the Speaker of the National Assembly. On 18 April, President Vieira signed the amnesty bill exempting those involved in political-military crimes prior to October 2004 from legal prosecution, restoring the political and civil rights of those who lost them as a consequence of past crises, and formalizing the creation of a National Reconciliation Commission, which among its other functions would provide monetary compensation to those who had incurred injuries or material losses due to past political-military conflicts.

Following the announcement of the date of the elections and the presentation of the electoral budget, estimated at $8.6 million, the mobilization of financial resources became a major challenge. In April, the European Union (EU) announced a contribution of €600,000 towards the elections, while ECOWAS agreed in June to contribute $500,000. However, after UNDP presented a revised electoral budget of $15.6 million, it was decided that the option to use biometric voter registration was too expensive and no longer feasible if the 16 November election date was to be maintained. In June it was announced that the Government would use manual voter registration in the 2008 elections, and that preparations for biometric voter registration for the 2010 presidential elections could start as early as January 2009. Meanwhile, UNOGBIS produced 13 radio programmes focused on the elections, reconciliation, gender issues and the fight against drug trafficking. In June, a series of programmes were broadcast on Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] and the participation of women in the electoral process.

The security situation was affected by the political instability and the presence of armed groups involved in robbing entire villages, although paradoxically the crime rate remained low. In a 13 April incident, however, the headquarters of the judicial police in Bissau was attacked and vandalized by approximately 20 agents of the public order police, which led to 21 prison inmates being set free. One judicial police officer, in custody for the killing of a public order police officer, was led away and killed, and his body was put on public display. Prime Minister Cabi and the Ministers of Justice and of the Interior condemned the incident and announced the creation of a commission of inquiry to investigate and hold those responsible accountable. The Secretary-General's Special Representative met with the authorities to ensure that the incident did not trigger further crises and to promote a quick resolution of the situation, in part to prevent compromising the anti-narcotics operations of the judicial police. On 5 May, the International Contact Group on Guinea-Bissau met in Praia, condemned the clashes between the security forces and called on the Government to put in place strong law enforcement mechanisms to fight impunity. The Group also agreed to establish a local contact group comprising its representatives in Bissau, under the co-presidency of Portugal and ECOWAS. In other security developments, the UNODC Special Adviser on anti-narcotics and organized crime assumed his duties in Bissau in May; the first meeting of the national committee for the implementation of the anti-narcotics operational plan was held in the Ministry of Justice on 23 May; and the Deputy Prosecutor General interviewed the Prime Minister on 14 May about his public claim that he was aware of the involvement of several people in drug trafficking activities.

The Government released the results of the UNDP-financed census of the armed forces, which resulted in the issuance of identity cards to all 4,458 active personnel. The security sector reform programme envisaged a reduction of the size of the armed forces to 3,440 personnel. Preparations were under way with EU assistance to conduct a census in June of veterans of the liberation war. In April, an EU civilian and military team of security and defence experts arrived in Guinea-Bissau to prepare the logistical and technical conditions for the deployment of 15 EU civilian and military personnel in the country, which would provide technical assistance in security sector reform to the security and defence services. A delegation from the ECOWAS Committee of Chiefs of Defence Staff undertook a fact-finding mission (14–16 April) to Guinea-Bissau to ascertain the state of the military barracks and the living condition of military personnel, and to meet with national authorities to discuss the political and socio-economic situation and the status of the security sector reform effort. The delegation called on ECOWAS and the United Nations to scale up their mobilization of donor support for the implementation of programmes to benefit civilian and military segments of the population. In that connection, a resource-mapping exercise on donor support for the security sector was organized (New York, 22–23 May). Discussions highlighted the need to further support the Government financially, materially and technically and to fill gaps in the areas of law enforcement and criminal justice.

The Secretary-General said that the disclosure by the authorities of knowledge of individuals involved in drug trafficking and organized crime underscored the need for the international community to take strong action in support of the Government to address those issues. He urged the authorities to take advantage of international instruments to tackle the phenomenon, which had regional and international implications. He renewed his appeal to the international community to provide budgetary assistance to Guinea-Bissau, particularly for the legislative elections, and recommended the strengthening of the resources and capacity of UNOGBIS and the UN country team to enable them to support the peacebuilding process fully and effectively.

Security Council consideration (June). In his briefing to the Council of 25 June [meeting 5925], the Special Representative said that the country had seen a slight improvement in its economic performance indicators and that it could become eligible for IMF debt relief instruments if the indicators continued to improve, which would reduce the volume of the country's debt-service payments.

The UNODC Executive Director said that drug trafficking was not only a serious issue in Guinea-Bissau, but also an acute threat that transnational organized crime posed to security in West Africa. He provided an update on UNODC assistance to Guinea-Bissau and Government efforts to strengthen the legal basis for fighting drugs and crime and to establish management structures for the implementation of the anti-narcotic and organized crime emergency plan.

Report of Secretary-General (September). In his report [S/2008/628] on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities, the Secretary-General said that the political situation was marked by a deepening political malaise, as well as military tension and instability. Relations between PAIGC and PRS—two of the three signatories to the political and government stability pact—continued to deteriorate, with both seeking to control key ministerial posts. Relations between the leaders of PAIGC, Carlos Gomes Jr., and Prime Minister Cabi also deteriorated as both contested the leadership of the party during its congress, won by Mr. Gomes. Tensions mounted when Prime Minister Cabi in July signed a decree, without reference to the Finance Minister of PAIGC, appointing PRS candidates to the posts of Directors-General of the Treasury, Revenue and Taxes and Customs, which prompted allegations among his critics in his party that he was favouring PRS. PAIGC withdrew from the stability pact on 28 July, while PRS and PUSD, the other two signatories, decided to remain in the pact. On 1 August, the Supreme Court ruled that the exceptional transitional constitutional law extending the National Assembly's mandate beyond 21 April was unconstitutional. Consequently, President Vieira dissolved Parliament on 5 August, dismissed the Government and appointed a new Prime Minister, Carlos Correia, to set up a caretaker Government. The Government was drawn largely from PAIGC, yet included two PUSD ministers, five PRS members and one member of the United People's Alliance. PRS distanced itself from the new Government, arguing that it had not been consulted about the appointment of its members, whom it considered dissidents.

On the electoral process, President Vieira and Prime Minister Correia gave assurances that legislative elections would be held on 16 November as scheduled. The manual voter registration exercise was carried out between 3 and 29 July. Despite the difficulties posed by the rainy season and logistical problems, the results were excellent. Some 578,974 of an estimated electorate of 611,875 were registered, corresponding to 94.6 per cent of the estimated total. The provisional lists would be published at various polling sectors, and voters would be allowed two weeks to file amendments and complaints; the definitive list was expected to be ready by 17 October. A European electoral observer mission that visited Guinea-Bissau in June to assess the political, logistical and security conditions in advance of the November polls noted that the conditions were in place to deploy an estimated 50 EU electoral observers. The AU sent an assessment mission from 18 to 21 August, while ECOWAS would be sending a team of observers. UNOGBIS would be coordinating those international observers who would not operate under the EU umbrella.

Instability in the military emerged in August when the authorities reported that they had uncovered an attempted coup d'état, allegedly organized by the Navy Chief of Staff, Rear Admiral José Américo Bubo Na Tchuto, that was to be carried out on 1 August. Although the Rear Admiral was suspended and kept under house arrest, he escaped and was arrested on 12 August in the Gambia. The Gambian authorities requested UN assistance to return him to Guinea-Bissau. The leader of PRS, former President Kumba Yalá, returned to Guinea-Bissau on 7 July after a one-year absence and announced that he had converted to Islam, assuming the name Mohamed Yalá Embaló, yet left the country on 8 August in the wake of the discovery of the coup attempt. Meanwhile, progress was made in security sector reform on 20 August, when 30 senior military officers were transferred from active service to reserve status at a ceremony marking the start of the security sector reform programme. The 30 officers would attend briefings in Nigeria before taking part in a one-year reinsertion programme in Brazil financed by ECOWAS. UNOGBIS, UNDP and other partners organized a workshop for public law-and-order institutions aimed at strengthening collaboration and working relationships among them.

The World Bank announced a $5 million grant from the Global Food Crisis Response Programme trust funds to mitigate the losses to the budget resulting from tax exemptions on rice and fuel imports and as a contribution to the Government's emergency plan for the 2008–2009 agricultural campaign. Another concern was the health sector, as a cholera epidemic that had been affecting the country since May had resulted in 6,126 reported cases, with 119 deaths as at 14 September. WHO and UNICEF were working with the Ministry of Health to combat the epidemic.

The Secretary-General reiterated his call to the Security Council to take strong action and to consider establishing a panel of experts to investigate the identity and activities of those involved in drug trafficking and organized crime in Guinea-Bissau, with the possibility of punitive, targeted sanctions that would reverse the growth in drug trafficking. On the reports of a coup plot by elements in the military, he called on all political actors not to use the military to advance their individual agendas and on the military to continue to honour its professional and republican tradition to protect and defend the State.

Security Council consideration (October). In his briefing of 7 October [meeting 5988] to the Council, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, B. Lynn Pascoe, said that preparations for the polls were on track as 23 parties and two coalitions had submitted applications to the Supreme Court by the 18 September deadline, which meant that 27 of the 34 registered parties would be participating in the elections.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 October [meeting 5995], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/37 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its previous statements on Guinea-Bissau and takes note of the latest report of the Secretary-General on developments in Guinea-Bissau and on the activities of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau. The Council reaffirms its support for the continuing efforts to consolidate peace in that country.

The Council welcomes the commitment of the Government of Guinea-Bissau to hold legislative elections on 16 November 2008, as well as the technical and financial support towards the elections provided by the international community, including by Angola, Brazil, Portugal, the Economic Community of West African States, the European Union, the Peacebuilding Fund and the United Nations Development Programme. It calls upon donors to continue to provide financial resources to support the electoral process.

The Council calls upon the Government of Guinea-Bissau and all actors, including political parties, the security forces and civil society, to ensure an environment conducive to transparent, free and fair elections and to respect the results of the polls.

The Council notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding in Guinea-Bissau by the Guinea-Bissau configuration of the Peacebuilding Commission on 1 October 2008, and notes the importance of the rapid and effective implementation of quick-impact projects financed by the Peacebuilding Fund. The Council looks forward to the establishment of the monitoring and tracking mechanism of the Strategic Framework.

The Council reiterates the importance of security sector reform in Guinea-Bissau, encourages the Government of Guinea-Bissau to sustain its efforts in implementing the national security sector reform programme, and underscores the need for the international community to provide further coordinated assistance for its implementation.

The Council remains seriously concerned by the continued growth in drug trafficking as well as organized crime, which threatens peace and security in Guinea-Bissau and in the subregion. The Council underlines the responsibility that the Government of Guinea-Bissau has for tackling this issue and calls upon the international community to cooperate actively with Guinea-Bissau in this regard, particularly in providing continued support for building the capacity of national law enforcement and judicial authorities. The Council requests that the Secretary-General provide in his next report further details of the measures required to deal with these challenges.

The Council welcomes the initiative of the Economic Community of West African States to convene a regional conference on combating drug trafficking in Praia on 28 and 29 October 2008, and looks forward to the resulting regional plan of action.

The Council expresses its concern about the consequences of rising food and fuel prices and welcomes the support of the World Bank to address this crisis. The Council encourages the Government of Guinea-Bissau to continue its dialogue and cooperation with the international financial institutions. The Council is also concerned about the cholera epidemic and calls upon the Government and its partners to continue and strengthen the efforts to secure its eradication.

The Council recognizes and commends the important role played by the Representative of the Secretary-General in Guinea-Bissau and the staff of the United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau, as well as by the United Nations country team, towards helping to consolidate peace, democracy, the rule of law and development, and expresses its appreciation for their activities. The Council looks forward to receiving recommendations from the Secretary-General on how the United Nations presence in Guinea-Bissau should be reconfigured to support peacebuilding more effectively.

Elections. The Secretary-General reported [S/2008/751] that preparations for the elections were generally smooth. On 4 October, the Supreme Court announced its approval of the candidates of 21 political parties and 2 political coalitions. The official political campaign commenced on 25 October and ended on 14 November. During the first few days, the most notable campaign activity was that of the Republican Party for Independence and Development (PRID), a new party launched in September by former Prime Minister Aristides Gomes, which was supported mainly by former members of the breakaway wing of PAIGC. PAIGC launched its political campaign on a platform of commitment to moving Guinea-Bissau forward through reform programmes, including security sector reform, with an emphasis on downsizing, restructuring and modernizing the armed forces. The leader of PRS, former President Mohamed Yalá Embaló, returned to Guinea-Bissau from Morocco amid popular support at rallies in the east of the country, where he made his first campaign stop. Of the 21 registered parties and two coalitions, only nine parties actively participated in the campaign, while the others, mainly due to lack of funding, appeared to restrict their campaigns to the officially sanctioned media of radio and television. UNOGBIS, in partnership with the Faculty of Law, trained 36 representatives of 20 political parties on electoral law and supported the drafting of a Women's Political Platform Declaration signed by women of the various political parties. The platform developed a policy statement identifying the major concerns and constraints affecting women. UNOGBIS also organized a three-day seminar for local journalists to provide them with technical information and skills on the coverage of the electoral process.

On 16 November, the voting took place in a calm and orderly manner in almost all 2,705 polling stations. There was a high voter turnout, around 72 per cent according to the observers, who applauded the fairly equal participation of male and female voters. The voting and counting processes were also considered transparent and followed the established guidelines in 92 per cent of the observed procedures. On 26 November, the Electoral Commission announced the provisional results of the elections. PAIGC gained the most overall support, securing 227,036 votes and 67 of the 100 seats in the National Assembly, while PRS won 115,409 votes and obtained 28 seats; and PRID won 34,305 votes and 3 seats. The New Democracy Party and the Democratic Alliance won 10,721 and 6,321 votes respectively, and obtained one seat each. The Electoral Commission noted that only 10 women were elected as compared to the 12 elected in 2004.

On 20 November, the Security Council welcomed the holding of the elections, as scheduled, in an orderly and peaceful manner, and called on political parties and leaders to respect the results and to resolve any concerns through peaceful means [SC/9506].

Attack against residence of the President

During the early hours of 23 November, unknown assailants attacked the residence of President Vieira with rocket-propelled grenades and gunfire

[S/2008/751]. The residence sustained considerable damage, particularly the President's living quarters, indicating that the violence was aimed at assassinating him. While the President and his family escaped unhurt, tensions mounted as fears for his security increased dramatically. Within hours of the attack, the Special Representative consulted with the President, Prime Minister Correia, the Ministers of the Interior and Defence and other officials on immediate measures to ensure the security of the President and to stabilize the situation. He convened a meeting of the Ambassadors and representatives of international organizations accredited to Guinea-Bissau, which resulted in the issuance of a strongly worded press statement declaring the solidarity of the international community with the President and warning the armed forces against any further destabilizing act. Later in the day, the Chief of the General Staff arrested five members of the military on suspicion of being implicated in the attack, while investigations continued.

On the same day [SG/SM/11947], the Secretary-General condemned the attack, noted with concern reports of the alleged involvement of elements of the armed forces and called for the authorities to re-establish law and order and to conduct a thorough investigation.

On 25 November [SC/9510], the Security Council condemned the attack, called on the Government to bring to justice those responsible for the attack, and urged all parties to resolve any disputes through political and peaceful means.

Communication. In a letter dated 26 November [S/2008/740], Portugal transmitted to the Security Council, on behalf of the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries (CPLP), the Declaration on Guinea-Bissau adopted by CPLP in Lisbon on 25 November, which condemned the attack against the residence of the President and encouraged the local formation of the International Contact Group for Guinea-Bissau to convene as soon as possible, with the objective of assessing the views of the various national and international actors in Guinea-Bissau. CPLP further proposed the adoption of a CPLP programme for the stability of Guinea-Bissau based on three main pillars: a decisive and effective fight against drug trafficking; the deepening of the security sector reform; and the mobilization of international resources for the development of Guinea-Bissau.

Further political and security developments

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his report on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS activities [S/2008/751], the Secretary-General said that the period under review was marked by an increase in the tempo of preparations for the legislative elections and heightened military and security tensions. In September and October, a number of security incidents were reported that were linked to foreign residents allegedly involved in organized crime, one of which led to the death of a Nigerian citizen who was assassinated in one of Bissau's most popular commercial centres. The incidence of general petty theft and crime registered a slight increase, although the overall crime rate, especially targeting foreigners, remained minimal. During the weekend of 17 to 19 October, a reshuffle in the presidential security team and a simultaneous change in the security guards assigned to the Chief of the Defence Staff took place in the wake of speculation about an alleged interference in military matters by the former Navy Chief of Staff, Rear Admiral Na Tchuto, who had fled to the Gambia after being accused of leading a failed coup in August. By 20 October, the situation was brought back under control by General Na Waie. On 27 October, the non-governmental organization Landmine Action launched its report on the landmine impact survey, which provided the basis for elaborating the Guinea-Bissau strategic anti-mine action plan for 2009–2011. According to the study, 80 of the 264 communities visited were mined, with 11, 13 and 56 of them being considered of high, medium and low priority, respectively.

Following a request from the Minister of Defence for a strengthening of UN technical support and backstopping on security sector reform, the Secretary-General deployed an inter-agency assessment mission to Guinea-Bissau (13–24 October) to assess the context of security sector reform and assist the Special Representative in formulating a response to the Government's request. The mission noted that the security sector reform process, while rooted in a participatory process between national counterparts and international partners, lacked clear strategic vision in the medium to long term, which raised questions about the long-term sustainability and ownership of the reform processes beyond the leadership and policy level of the Ministries of Defence, Interior and Justice. The mission was concerned by the lack of sensitization and involvement of civil society, the media and other key stakeholders. It noted that weak Government capacity and the lack of institutional infrastructure and planning resources constrained the process. The mission made recommendations for the review and formulation of existing and new legislation and the strengthening of national and international coordination.

In October, the Minister of Justice and the UNODC Executive Director launched a project aimed at strengthening the capacity of the justice sector in fighting drug trafficking through the creation of a specialized pool of prosecutors and judges. In a 13 November discussion with the Special Representative, Prime Minister Correia expressed his conviction that the anti-narcotics effort should not only take account of Guinea-Bissau as a transit point, but should also focus on tackling the points of origin and destination of drug-trafficking activities. He supported the view that tougher measures, including targeted sanctions against proven drug traffickers, drug-trafficking syndicates and their accomplices, would be a significant step forward.

Progress was made in the human rights sector on 6 November, when the Council of Ministers approved the law establishing the National Commission for Human Rights, a Government body that would be responsible for vigilance, early warning, monitoring and investigation of human rights issues. The Commission would comprise 30 members drawn from public and private entities, headed by a president, and would have as observers representatives of the Ministries of Justice and the Interior, the Prosecutor General's office, civil society, religious bodies, political parties, the Institute for Women and Children, the media and trade unions.

In other activity, UNOGBIS, in collaboration with other UN system entities and its partners from the Forum for the Humanitarian Situation in Prisons, visited detention centres in Bissau on 7 October to raise awareness on the rights of detainees and to support the national authorities in ensuring respect for the dignity inherent in human beings even if deprived of freedom. During the visits, several human rights violations were verified, namely the existence of detention centres with inadequate facilities and lacking minimum living standards. Several recommendations were made, including the creation and promotion of weekly medical assistance for detainees in all prison facilities in the country; the establishment of additional centres and specific measures for vulnerable groups such as women, children and adolescents; the adoption of mechanisms for the provision of water and food in the prison centres of the judicial police; and the closure of the underground detention cells of the Primeira and Segunda Esquadra police stations in Bissau.

In response to the Security Council's request [YUN 2007, p. 227] for recommendations on the reconfiguration of the UN presence, the Secretary-General said that a Headquarters-based integration task force on Guinea-Bissau was established in October to begin discussions on an integrated UN presence in the country. Since the legislative elections had been successfully held, a technical mission would be conducted in early 2009 for consultation with national authorities, regional and international partners and members of the UN system operating in Bissau, with a view to proposing options for an integrated UN presence. He commended the Government's commitment to implementing a reform agenda and recommended that the Council continue to support the implementation of the security sector reform programme. On the fight against drug trafficking, he appealed to ECOWAS member States, as well as Security Council members and the international community, to monitor and support the timely implementation of the regional action plan that resulted from the Ministerial Conference on Drug Trafficking (see below). He also called on the international community to enhance its support and assistance to the Government to reinforce the national capacity to combat drug trafficking. In response to a request from the Government on 21 November, the Secretary-General recommended the extension of the UNOGBIS mandate for an additional year, until 31 December 2009.

Ministerial Conference on Drug Trafficking. ECOWAS, with the support of UNODC, UNOWA and UNOGBIS, and the facilitation of the Government of Cape Verde, convened the Ministerial Conference on Drug Trafficking as a Threat to West Africa (Praia, 28–29 October), which brought together experts and policymakers, as well as regional, international and UN system entities, to help design a regional action plan and prepare a draft political declaration. The draft action plan presented a comprehensive set of actions and mechanisms to combat drug trafficking in West Africa. The action plan and political declaration were adopted on 19 December by the thirty-fifth ordinary session of the ECOWAS Authority of Heads of State and Government.

Year-end developments. In a later report [S/2009/169], the Secretary-General said that while the country had taken modest steps to improve its democratic and governance profile, the political and security environment remained tense. Following the armed attack against the residence of President Vieira on 23 November, the challenges of securing and protecting the President remained a major source of concern internally and for regional and international partners. An ECOWAS mission (25 November), the President of Cape Verde and the Special Envoy of the President of Angola (14 December), and the Special Envoy of the AU Chairman (9–11 December) visited Bissau for talks with stakeholders, including the Secretary-General's former Special Representative, and to assess the political and security situation. After the attack, Prime Minister Correia established a Commission of Inquiry to carry out a parallel investigation into the case. It was reported that military authorities in Bissau had handed over to the civilian authorities seven military personnel alleged to have been involved in the 23 November attack. The Government requested the extradition of the alleged ringleader, Navy Sergeant N'tchami Yalá, who was detained in Senegal. The UNOGBIS human rights unit monitored and reported on the hearings for the suspects allegedly involved in the attack with regard to the rule of law and human rights standards conducive to a fair trial. Although UNOGBIS had been invited to participate as an observer, it did not attend the hearings as there was no provision for observers in the national penal code. A joint delegation of the Defence and Security Reconciliation Committee and the Political Platform for Women began a series of visits to all barracks in the country to discuss peace and reconciliation.

The economic situation remained fragile and the country faced severe cash flow difficulties. In December, IMF extended the emergency post-conflict assistance programme, running from January to December 2008, until the end of June 2009.

Ad Hoc Advisory Group. In its May report [E/2008/55], the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Guinea-Bissau provided an overview of its work since its establishment in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 920], highlighted its main accomplishments and key recommendations, and concluded with observations about Guinea-Bissau that might be useful to the Peacebuilding Commission. The Group also recommended the termination of its mandate. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 2008/30 of 25 July (see p. 1019), terminated the Group's mandate and invited the Peacebuilding Commission to consider the Group's work and to draw upon the lessons learned from that experience.

Peacebuilding Commission

The Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission, in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 230], decided to place Guinea-Bissau on the Commission's agenda, and established a country-specific configuration under the leadership of Brazil [A/62/686-S/2008/87]. On 25 March [A/62/768-S/2008/208], the Commission Chairperson reported on action taken, including the conduct of an exploratory mission to Guinea-Bissau [PBC/2/GNB/6]; a mapping of resources and gaps for peacebuilding in the country; and a presentation by the Government on the country's priorities for peacebuilding. After being advised by the Guinea-Bissau configuration, the Secretary-General announced the eligibility of Guinea-Bissau to the Peacebuilding Fund. On 2 April, the Commission presented a background note [PBC/2/GNB/5] on the situation in Guinea-Bissau to assist in the discussions on the development of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding in the country.

Report of Peacebuilding Commission. In a report of 15 May [PBC/2/GNB/7] on its mission to Guinea-Bissau (6–11 April), the Peacebuilding Commission found that many problems faced by the country stemmed from the prevailing institutional fragility of the State, constraining the Government from effectively managing key aspects of public, political, security and development policies and from delivering basic services to its population, which set the conditions for political instability and increased vulnerability of the already fragile State. The delegation identified the following key areas for priority action: elections; security sector reform; rule of law and the fight against drug trafficking; illegal migration and other forms of transnational organized crime activities; public administration reform; reactivation of the economy; and rebuilding of the infrastructure, particularly in the energy sector. Given the urgency and magnitude of the problems faced by Guinea-Bissau, the mission concluded that the peacebuilding strategy should be based on a two-track approach, combining strategic planning with quick-impact projects. The delegation specified three criteria for assistance: contribution to promoting stability; contribution to sustained socioeconomic growth and development; and contribution to job creation.

Peacebuilding Fund. Following the approval of an interim priority plan, the Secretary-General, on 28 April, allocated a Peacebuilding Fund funding envelope of $6 million to Guinea-Bissau [A/63/92-S/2008/417]. That initial disbursement, in support of projects in the fields of judicial police, army barracks, youth employment and elections, was the first tranche of the Fund allocation. A second tranche would be allocated after the adoption of the strategic framework. On 31 July, the Commission informally adopted the Strategic Framework [PBC/3/GNB/3], subject to a final review by the Government.

Conclusions and recommendations. Following the change of Government in August, the Chair of the Guinea-Bissau configuration undertook a fact-finding visit to the country (10–12 September) to gain a perspective on the political developments and explore options for the Commission's engagement, including the timing for the adoption of the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding. On the basis of that visit and a meeting of the Commission (New York, 17 September), the Commission provided its conclusions and recommendations on the situation in Guinea-Bissau on 24 September [PBC/3/GNB/1]. On 5 December, the Chairperson of the Peacebuilding Commission transmitted in identical letters to the General Assembly and Security Council [A/63/597-S/2008/762] the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission on the situation in Guinea-Bissau [PBC/3/GNB/4], which referred to the successful holding of legislative elections on 16 November, the Commission's contribution to the electoral process, and threats to the consolidation of peace and democracy following the attack against the residence of the President on 23 November. After extensive consultations with members of the Guinea-Bissau configuration, Government authorities, civil society and international and regional organizations, the Strategic Framework for Peacebuilding in the country was adopted on 1 October. Consultations were under way on creating a monitoring mechanism to assess progress in the implementation of the Framework.

UNOGBIS

The United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNOGBIS), a political mission established in 1999 by decision of the Secretary-General and supported by Security Council resolution 1233(1999) [YUN 1999, p. 140], was extended until 31 December 2008 [YUN 2007, p. 231]. Its mandate was revised by resolution 1580(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 229] in the face of intensified political turmoil and uncertainty, and in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 230] to allow the Office to contribute to mobilizing international support for national efforts to eliminate drug trafficking. The Office was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Shola Omoregie (Nigeria). During 2008, the Secretary-General submitted reports on developments in Guinea-Bissau and UNOGBIS in March [S/2008/181], June [S/2008/395], September [S/2008/628] and December [S/2008/751].

Revision of mandate. In a letter dated 10 December [S/2008/777], the Secretary-General said that UNOGBIS continued to support national efforts to stabilize the country, focusing on efforts to promote peacebuilding and national reconciliation, and co-operated with national authorities in addressing the growing threat of drug trafficking and organized crime. Activities leading up to the holding of elections on 16 November included resource mobilization, civic education and the strengthening of the capacities of women's groups. UNOGBIS coordinated the work of international electoral observers and played a lead role in coordinating the country's engagement with the Peacebuilding Commission. A UNDP-financed census of the armed forces carried out in March was a milestone in the security sector reform process. UNOGBIS also facilitated an inter-agency security sector reform assessment mission in October aimed at proposing a UN integrated action plan to support the implementation of the security sector reform programme.

Following a request by the Government on 21 November for an additional year of assistance from the Office to support national efforts to consolidate peace, the Secretary-General recommended the extension of the UNOGBIS mandate until 31 December 2009, with a slightly revised mandate. Accordingly, UNOGBIS activities for 2009 would focus on: assisting the Peacebuilding Commission in its engagement with Guinea-Bissau; strengthening the capacities of national institutions; supporting an inclusive national reconciliation and political dialogue; supporting the implementation of security sector reform; extending cooperation to national authorities in their efforts to combat drug trafficking and organized crime; assisting with the promotion and institutionalization of respect for the rule of law and human rights; incorporating a gender perspective into peacebuilding; facilitating efforts to curb the proliferation of small arms and light weapons and contributing to the collection of those held illicitly; and enhancing cooperation with the AU, CPLP, ECOWAS, the EU and other partners in efforts towards the stabilization of Guinea-Bissau.

In follow-up to his letter of 28 November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 230], in which he indicated his intention to submit recommendations to the Security Council on transforming UNOGBIS into an integrated mission after the holding of successful legislative elections, the Secretary-General said that a technical assessment mission would be deployed to Guinea-Bissau in the first quarter of 2009 to consult with the Government and the UN country team on integration-related strategies. Following the mission, he would submit recommendations to the Council for action. On 22 December [S/2008/778], the Council extended the UNOGBIS mandate until 30 June 2009, took note of the information and proposal in the Secretary-General's letter and requested that he submit recommendations on the establishment of an integrated UN Office by 15 June 2009.

Financing

In an October report [A/63/346/Add.3], dealing with estimated requirements for special political missions grouped under thematic cluster III (United Nations offices, peacebuilding support offices, integrated offices and commissions), the Secretary-General proposed resource requirements for UNOGBIS in the amount of $4,833,000 for the period 1 January to 31 December 2009, which ACABQ recommended for approval [A/63/593].

On 24 December, in section XI of resolution 63/263, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ and approved the budgets for 27 special political missions, including the UNOGBIS budget, under section 3, Political affairs, of the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium (see p. 1548).

Cameroon–Nigeria

In 2008, Cameroon and Nigeria continued to cooperate to advance progress in implementing the 2002 ruling of the International Court of Justice (ICJ)

[YUN 2002, p. 1265] on the land and maritime boundary between them through the Cameroon–Nigeria Mixed Commission.

Cameroon–Nigeria Mixed Commission

The Cameroon–Nigeria Mixed Commission—the mechanism established by the Secretary-General in 2002 at the request of the Presidents of Cameroon and Nigeria to facilitate the peaceful implementation of the ICJ ruling of 10 October 2002 on the border dispute between them [YUN 2003, p. 8]—was chaired by the new Special Representative of the Secretary-General for West Africa, Said Djinnit (Algeria). The Commission was responsible for the demarcation of the land and maritime boundaries between the two countries; the withdrawal of civil administration, military and police forces and transfer of authority in relevant areas along the boundary; the demilitarization of the Bakassi peninsula; the protection of the rights of the affected populations; the development of projects to promote joint economic ventures and cross-border cooperation; and the reactivation of the five-member Lake Chad Basin Commission (Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Niger, Nigeria), created in 1964 for the regulation and planning of the uses of the Lake and other natural resources of the conventional basin. By the end of 2007, all four sections of the ICJ ruling—comprising the withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Lake Chad area in December 2003, the withdrawal and transfer of authority along the land border in July 2004, the agreement on the modalities of withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Bakassi peninsula in June 2006, and the agreement on the delineation of the maritime boundary in May 2007—had been resolved to the satisfaction of the two countries [YUN 2007, p. 232]. A UN team based in Dakar, Senegal, provided substantive, technical and logistical support to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies. The United Nations Office for West Africa also provided support to the work of the Mixed Commission.

In 2008, the activities of the Commission focused on: supporting the demarcation of the land boundary and delineation of the remaining maritime boundary, including the determination of the maritime tripoint between Cameroon, Equatorial Guinea and Nigeria; accelerating the land demarcation exercise and addressing the needs of affected populations; completing the withdrawal and transfer of authority from all relevant areas in the Bakassi peninsula, as per the Greentree Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 252]; and recommending confidence-building measures and environmental safeguards necessary to ensure the sustainability of good relations of neighbourliness.

Activities

Progress report. In a letter dated 3 December [S/2008/756], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of the latest activities undertaken by the Mixed Commission as it continued to support and facilitate the peaceful implementation of the ICJ ruling. He said that since his previous report [YUN 2007, p. 232], the Commission had been able to facilitate the process smoothly and peacefully, and to keep an open dialogue between the two countries. In follow-up to the delineation of the maritime boundary in 2007, the boundary line was transposed onto an agreed map in March 2008. On 14 August, the transfer of authority from Nigeria to Cameroon of the remaining “Zone” of the Bakassi peninsula was successfully completed, marking a milestone in the implementation of the ICJ ruling and the peaceful resolution of the boundary dispute. In preparation for the handover, the follow-up Committee, which was established to monitor the implementation of the Greentree Agreement, held regular meetings preceded by field visits. The UN civilian observers monitoring the situation in areas of withdrawal and transfer of authority in the Lake Chad area, along the boundary, and in the Bakassi peninsula concluded that the prevailing situation concerning the rights of affected populations was satisfactory. Meanwhile, the Commission supported the formulation of confidence-building measures to ensure the security and welfare of those populations and promote initiatives to enhance trust between the two Governments and their people. Initiatives on social amenities within the Lake Chad area continued to be promoted, and support for resource mobilization for the Lake Chad Basin Commission was provided during the year.

On the demarcation of the 1,950 kilometre land boundary, the Commission expected to complete two of four field assessments along the boundary by the end of 2008, amounting to a total assessed boundary length of approximately 1,250 kilometres, at least 180 kilometres of which required further clarification. With regard to the physical demarcation, the majority of preliminary mapping and preliminary large-scale mapping through satellite imagery had been completed, as had the contract that provided survey control stations used to carry out the final survey of the constructed pillars. The first quality assurance contract was completed in 2008. The Secretary-General expressed his intention to continue the activities of the Mixed Commission and to request resources from the regular budget for the support team of the Commission to help advance implementation of the ICJ ruling.

On 9 December [S/2008/757], the Security Council took note of the Secretary-General’s letter and urged Commission members to work with international donors to seek voluntary contributions.

Financing

In an October report [A/63/346/Add.3] dealing with estimated requirements for special political missions grouped under thematic cluster III (United Nations offices, peacebuilding support offices, integrated offices and commissions), the Secretary-General proposed resource requirements for the Mixed Commission in the amount of $8,099,800 for the period 1 January to 31 December 2009, which ACABQ recommended for approval [A/63/593].

On 24 December, in section XI of resolution 63/263, the Assembly endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ and approved the budgets for 27 special political missions, including the Commission’s budget, under section 3, Political affairs, of the programme budget for the 2008–2009 biennium (see p. 1548).

Guinea

Following the death on 22 December of the President of Guinea, General Lansana Conté, who had ruled the country since 1984, the Secretary-General on 23 December extended his condolences and respect to the family of the President and to the Government and people of Guinea [SG/SM/12018]. He acknowledged President Conté’s long-standing commitment to the maintenance of peace and unity in Guinea and the promotion of stability and regional cooperation in the Mano River Basin. He also stressed the need for a peaceful and democratic transfer of power in accordance with the Constitution and urged the armed forces and all stakeholders to respect the democratic process.

Nonetheless, on the same date, a military junta—the National Council for Democracy and Development—led by Captain Moussa Dadis Camara seized power in Guinea. The coup was widely condemned internationally.

Mauritania

In 2008, the democratic process in Mauritania suffered a major setback. In a 6 August coup, General Mohamed Ould Abdel Aziz, the former army Chief of Staff and head of the Presidential Guard, took power from Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdallahi, who in 2007 had become the first democratically elected president in the history of the country. President Abdallahi was held under house arrest at the presidential palace in the capital, Nouakchott. The Secretary-General on the same day regretted the overthrow of the Government of President Abdallahi, noted that the Government was elected in a multi-party democratic election, and called for respect for the rule of law and for the immediate restoration of constitutional order [SG/SM/11732].

Security Council consideration. On 19 August [meeting 5960], the representative of Mauritania briefed the Council on the situation in the country and the conditions under which the 6 August “corrective change” took place, including: abuses and terrorist attacks; corruption, underhanded dealings, vote-buying and the diversion of public funds; a dispute with the majority party in Parliament on carrying out duties that were recognized by the Constitution; and the firing of all the country’s military leaders. He asserted that the change could not be qualified as a coup d’état.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 19 August [meeting 5960], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/30 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns the overthrow by the Mauritanian military of the democratically elected Government of Mauritania and welcomes the statements condemning the coup by the African Union, the European Union and other members of the international community.

The Council opposes any attempt to change government through unconstitutional means.

The Council condemns the actions of the State Council, in particular its move to seize the powers of the presidency.

The Council demands the immediate release of President Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdallahi and the restoration of the legitimate, constitutional, democratic institutions immediately.

The Council recognizes the important role played by the African Union as well as the support of regional and international partners, including the Secretary-General of the United Nations, through his Special Representative for West Africa, Mr. Said Djinnit, and calls upon all to assist in restoring constitutional order in Mauritania.

The Council will monitor developments in this situation.

Statement by Secretary-General. On 22 December [SG/SM/12017], the Secretary-General welcomed the release of President Abdallahi from house arrest and called again for the prompt restoration of constitutional order.

the line remained incomplete. On 14 May, tensions between the two forces in Abyei erupted into full-scale fighting that continued until 20 May. Following several weeks of consultations, the parties finalized a road map agreement for the peaceful resolution of the situation, which was endorsed by the presidency of the Government on 8 June. The dispute over the Abyei borders was referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague. On 10 May, Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) fighters from the Darfur region of the Sudan attacked the city of Omdurman, across the Nile from the Sudanese capital, Khartoum, and were repelled by Government forces. The fifth national census in the Sudan was conducted from 22 April to 6 May. The electoral law was adopted by the National Assembly on 7 July and was signed by President Omar Al-Bashir on 14 July. On the same date, the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court requested that the Court issue an arrest warrant against the President on charges of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. The Prosecutor’s request affected the political landscape within the Sudan, as well as regional politics and the role of the United Nations in the country. The United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), however, continued to support implementation of the Peace Agreement, facilitate the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, assist in humanitarian and demining operations, and promote human rights. In April, the Security Council renewed the UNMIS mandate until 30 April 2009 and asked the Mission to provide technical and logistical support to the parties in demarcating the north-south border.

Relations between Chad and the Sudan remained volatile. On 13 March, President Idriss Déby Itno of Chad and President Al-Bashir signed the Dakar Agreement, by which the two countries committed to ending their differences. On 10 May, however, the Sudan accused Chad of supporting the JEM attack on Omdurman and severed diplomatic ties. Relations between Chad and the Sudan later improved, and the two countries exchanged ambassadors on 9 November.

Implementation of Comprehensive Peace Agreement

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his January report on the Sudan [S/2008/64], submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1590(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 304] and covering developments since his October 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 240], the Secretary-General said that the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF), the Sudan People’s Liberation Army (SPLA) and the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS) made progress on de-escalating tension in the north-south border area and resuming implementa-

Sudan

In 2008, uneven progress was made in implementing the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement between the Sudan People’s Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A) and the Government of National Unity. Re-deployment of Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF) north of the 1956 boundary line and of the SPLA south of tion of the security arrangements set out in the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301]. On 9 January, SAF announced that it had completed its redeployment from the south in accordance with the agreed deadline. According to figures verified by UNMIS, however, 88 per cent of some 46,000 SAF troops had been redeployed as at 15 January, including voluntarily demobilized soldiers, who made up 16.2 per cent of the total. SPLA troops continued their redeployment from Blue Nile and Southern Kordofan states; redeployment remained at 8.5 per cent of the stated strength of some 59,000. SPLA-aligned forces at Debab and Abu Matariq also began redeployment towards Southern Sudan, but stopped in contested areas around the disputed line of 1 January 1956. The strength of the Joint Integrated Units, composed of members of SAF and SPLA, reached 82.2 per cent of the authorized 39,000 personnel.

UNMIS continued to provide technical support to the Government of National Unity and the Government of Southern Sudan to enhance their human rights capacity; monitor the human rights situation and developments regarding the rule of law; and monitor and follow up on reports of threats against civilians. With regard to electoral assistance, UNMIS continued to track preparations for a census and met regularly with international partners on planning for such assistance, but operational planning was hampered by a lack of progress in enacting the electoral law. UNMIS increased its engagement with the Northern and Southern Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commissions. The first phase of the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Plan, signed by the Presidency in November 2007, would begin in 2008 and cover 45,000 ex-combatants each from SAF and SPLA. To date, UNMIS mine-action teams had opened more than 21,000 kilometres of roads; cleared 15.5 million square metres of suspected dangerous areas; and destroyed some 5,300 anti-personnel mines, 2,400 anti-tank mines, 637,000 pieces of unexploded ordnance and 360,000 small arms and ammunition. As at 14 January, 95 per cent of the authorized UNMIS force strength (9,267 of a total of 9,716) was deployed, including 544 military observers, 191 staff officers and 8,532 troops. UNMIS police advisers numbered 645 and were deployed in 21 sites in the Mission area.

The Secretary-General observed that major challenges to the full implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement remained. He urged the parties to begin the demarcation of the north-south boundary and to advance the formation of Joint Integrated Units. The strategic assessment of UNMIS, which was requested by the Council in resolution 1784(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 241], indicated the need for a review of the strength of the Mission's military component; clarification of its mandate with regard to border demarcation, census and elections, as well as a review of resources to meet those needs; greater integration of activities in the area of rule of law and security institutions, and reliable funding for those activities; and consideration of a new security sector reform mandate. The assessment also pointed to a need to review disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, and returns issues. It recommended a review of Mission functions related to humanitarian coordination to ensure a smooth transition to the recovery and development phase.

Communication. On 15 February [S/2008/119], the Sudan requested the Security Council to retain on the list of matters of which it was seized the item entitled "Letter dated 20 February 1958 from the representative of the Sudan addressed to the Secretary-General (S/3963)" [YUN 1958, p. 83], which dealt with the issue of the Sudan-Egypt border.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his report of 22 April on the Sudan [S/2008/267], the Secretary-General said that in order to complete the interim period of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in a timely manner, a number of remaining milestones needed to be met, including final redeployment of armed forces; the formation of Joint Integrated Units; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants; border demarcation; the resolution of the Abyei issue; preparations for the upcoming census and elections; and wealth-sharing concerns, including division of the oil revenues derived from the disputed area of Abyei. The Technical Ad Hoc Border Committee established new timelines, stating that its demarcation work in the western and eastern sectors of the border would start by the end of June, while work in the central sector would not start before September. Differences between the parties in the interpretation of the north-south border line continued to hamper the monitoring and verification of redeployed forces, with disagreement over the status of SAF at Abyei, and SPLA forces at Kharasana and the assembly area at White Lake/Jau. Although the formation and training of Joint Integrated Units continued, recurring security incidents highlighted their fragile cohesion. Following clashes in Kapoeta in Eastern Equatoria state on 11 and 12 March, the SAF element of the local Joint Integrated Unit was relocated to Torit. However, in Khorflus in Upper Nile state on 7 and 8 March, the local Unit stabilized a tense situation after fighting occurred between SPLA and Southern Sudan Police elements. The failure of the Presidency to resolve the Abyei issue, including the appointment of a local administration, continued to mar overall implementation of the Agreement.

On 11 February, the Presidency decreed 15–30 April as the dates for the national census; public information campaigns about the census began in February, with uneven coverage. On 13 April, the Government of Southern Sudan announced a delay in the census, citing inadequate refugee return and the exclusion of religion and ethnicity from the questionnaire. Following emergency consultations in the Government of National Unity, the Presidency decided that the census would begin on 22 April.

The overall security situation in the UNMIS area of responsibility remained relatively calm, but the continued presence of SAF and SPLA military personnel around the oilfields and other areas along the disputed 1956 borderline remained a source of tension. A road accident on 7 February in Balom involving an SAF truck and vehicles carrying the Commissioner from Abeimnom and his escort resulted in a firefight between SPLA and local Misseriya tribal militia, injuring several people. Both sides in the Abyei region imposed restrictions on UNMIS, including denial of security clearances for air patrols, making monitoring or verification of reported incidents difficult. The two parties lifted UN movement restrictions for 14 days, beginning on 5 April, but the lifting of restrictions was only applied to limited locations and did not allow verification of troops in critical areas such as Muglad, Grinti/Meiram or Heglig. The frequency of incursions into Southern Sudan by splinter groups of the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) increased during the reporting period. The groups attacked villages and local populations in Western Equatoria state, sometimes resulting in deaths.

In response to resolution 1784(2007), in February a joint technical assessment mission composed of representatives from UNMIS, the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and other departments and agencies conducted a review of the UNMIS mandate. The mission found that the mandate was sufficiently broad to allow UNMIS to support the peace process in a wide range of tasks. The major challenges for UNMIS in supporting implementation of the Peace Agreement were related to the need for the parties to demonstrate the political will necessary to move forward in implementing their commitments. In that regard, UNMIS should enhance its efforts to build trust with the parties and broaden consent for its role.

UNMIS completed a number of its core monitoring and verification tasks, but conditions were not yet in place to reduce its military presence. The Mission established a Joint Integrated Unit support cell to assist the Joint Defence Board—the national body responsible for Joint Integrated Unit development—in identifying requirements and to coordinate international assistance to the Units. It made significant progress in the establishment of electoral capacity at its headquarters in Khartoum and at the Juba field office, and its international partners continued to meet on planning for electoral assistance. The Secretary-General requested UNMIS and the UN country team to jointly develop a conflict management strategy for the 1 January 1956 border areas, and directed that the Assistance Liaison Unit be restructured to reflect the transition to recovery and development, while maintaining support for humanitarian activities.

Regarding disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, the Secretary-General said that SAF and SPLA forces were unlikely to be significantly reduced until greater confidence was established between the parties. The Northern and Southern Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commissions indicated their intent to demobilize and reintegrate, in 2008, up to 50,000 personnel, mainly veterans and special needs groups; and demobilize, between 2008 and 2011, approximately 132,000 combatants who had been absorbed into SAF and SPLA since the signing of the Peace Agreement. The Secretary-General proposed a number of prerequisites that might serve as benchmarks to be met before the United Nations began operations to support the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of SAF and SPLA.

The Secretary-General welcomed recent cooperation between the Governments of National Unity and of Southern Sudan in preparing an agenda for economic recovery and development, but remained concerned that progress in key areas of the Peace Agreement was still lacking. He urged both parties to resolve remaining differences and enable a peaceful census with maximum coverage. He observed that the next phase of the Agreement's implementation required a reorientation of UNMIS priorities and activities, including increased exercise of the Mission's good offices, confidence-building and conflict management; reorientation for peacekeeping activities around the 1 January 1956 border area; reallocation of resources to anticipated hot spots; support for a visible peace dividend throughout the country; and a stronger engagement with state authorities in Southern Sudan. He recommended that the Security Council, in its renewal of the UNMIS mandate, authorize the Mission to: provide technical and logistical support to the border demarcation process; provide support to the corrections system and authorize the deployment of up to 40 seconded corrections officers; monitor the activities of LRA elements in Southern Sudan; and liaise with the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), the AU-UN Joint Mediation Support Team and neighbouring UN missions to ensure their support for implementing the Agreement.

19. Expresses its concern at the persistence of localized conflict and violence, especially in the border area, mostly affecting civilians and with the potential for escalation; urges in this regard full cooperation of the National Congress Party and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement in carrying out the obligations of the Government of National Unity for the protection of civilians in armed conflict, in accordance with resolution 1674(2006); and supports the intention of the Mission to strengthen its conflict management capacity by developing and executing an integrated strategy to support local conflict resolution mechanisms, in order to maximize protection of civilians;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance in the Mission with the United Nations zero tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse and to keep the Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to take appropriate preventive action, including predeployment awareness training, and other action to ensure full accountability in cases of such conduct involving their personnel;

26. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Attack on Omdurman. On 9 May, the Sudan informed the diplomatic community in Khartoum that the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) was advancing with some 200–300 armed vehicles from Northern Darfur towards the city of El Obeid in Northern Kordofan, aiming to attack the capital. On 10 May, JEM fighters, crossing 1,200 kilometres from Darfur, attacked Omdurman, adjacent to Khartoum. Media and local sources reported that JEM elements took over the Omdurman police station, killing six police officers. After a day of skirmishes, Government forces repelled the JEM fighters. According to the National Intelligence and Security Service of the Sudan, 79 members of Government security forces, 57 civilians and 329 JEM members were killed in the fighting. The Government also reported that 20–30 JEM vehicles were destroyed and some 200 JEM personnel were arrested. It imposed a curfew on 10 May in Omdurman and Khartoum; the curfew was lifted on 11 May in Khartoum but remained in place until 12 May in Omdurman, as Government forces conducted house-to-house searches for JEM fighters and weapons.

The Sudan accused Chad of supporting the JEM attack, and on 10 May severed diplomatic ties with Chad. Chad issued a statement on 11 May denying any involvement. On 13 May, the National Assembly convened an extraordinary session to condemn the attack. SPLM, the National Umma Party (NUP) and the Democratic Unionist Party (DUP) also condemned it, calling for a political solution in Darfur and a fair trial for all those arrested in connection with the attack.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 May [meeting 5891], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/15 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council strongly condemns the attacks of 10 May perpetrated by the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) against the Sudanese Government in Omdurman, and urges all parties to cease violence immediately, respect their obligations under international humanitarian law and commit to a peaceful resolution of all outstanding issues.

The Security Council urges restraint by all parties, and in particular, warns that no retaliatory action should be taken against civilian populations, or that has an impact on stability in the region.

The Security Council reiterates the urgent need for all parties to engage fully and constructively in the political process. The Security Council calls upon the States of the region to implement their commitments under the Dakar Accord, and to cooperate with a view to putting an end to the activities of armed groups and their attempts to seize power by force.

The Security Council strongly condemns all attempts at destabilization by force, and reaffirms its commitment to the sovereignty, unity, independence and territorial integrity of Sudan.

Clashes in Abyei. On 14 May, long-standing tensions in the disputed town of Abyei erupted into full-scale fighting following the killing of an SAF soldier at an SPLA checkpoint on 13 May. The fighting, which ended on 20 May, resulted in 89 fatalities, the displacement of more than 50,000 civilians, the destruction of most of Abyei town and the evacuation of UN and NGO civilian staff from the area. Representatives of both parties characterized the clashes as the most serious crisis since the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement in 2005.

Security Council mission

The Security Council mission to Africa (see p. 111) briefed the Council on 18 June [meeting 5915]. In its report of 15 July [S/2008/460], the mission to the Sudan (3–5 June) stated that it met with President Omar Al-Bashir, First Vice-President Salva Kiir Mayardit, Foreign Affairs Minister Deng Alor, Presidential Adviser Nafie Ali Nafie, representatives of opposition parties and of the humanitarian community in Northern Darfur, and a delegation of internally displaced persons in Northern Darfur.

In Juba, the First Vice-President stressed that the Sudan should be considered from a strategic perspective, and that allowing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement to collapse would endanger the entire continent of Africa. He suggested steps that the United Nations could take to improve the implementation of the Agreement, protection of civilians by UNMIS, the functionality of institutions established under the Agreement and the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process. The mission stated its willingness to consider the issue of a strengthened mandate for UNMIS when it returned to New York.

Government officials informed the mission that a subcommittee had been established to determine the way forward with regard to Abyei. The subcommittee agreed on four key areas, dealing with the return of displaced persons, granting UNMIS full access to the Abyei area, the establishment of a temporary administration in Abyei and engaging an international body to overcome the impasse regarding border demarcation. The mission stressed the urgency of resolving the Abyei crisis and making decisive progress on other outstanding areas of the Peace Agreement. It stated that the Abyei incident would not have occurred if the Agreement had been implemented on schedule.

President Al-Bashir reaffirmed his Government's commitment to the implementation of the Peace Agreement and stated that all the institutions necessary to implement the Agreement had been formed. He indicated that the resolution of the Abyei issue was the top priority with respect to the Agreement, and said that it would soon be settled through ongoing consultations between the National Congress Party (NCP) and SPLM. The mission was encouraged to hear that progress was being made but expressed concern over the continuing violence in Darfur (see p. 244), which was affecting the humanitarian situation. It reiterated its condemnation of the 10 May attack by JEM, and urged the President to exercise restraint in responding to the attack. The President stressed that the Government had a right to self-defence in the context of the attack on Omdurman, and stated that Chad had allowed JEM to gather in Chad and cross the border to attack the Sudanese capital. In a letter of 9 June [S/2008/373], the President transmitted to the Security Council his statement of 5 June to the mission.

The mission recommended that the Council continue to support the parties in implementing the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, including by improving security arrangements between the parties. UNMIS should begin preparations to support the conduct of national elections, in close collaboration with UNDP and the parties to the Agreement. Consistent with its mandate and in accordance with Security Council resolution 1812(2008) (see p. 235), UNMIS should robustly deploy peacekeeping personnel in and around Abyei to support implementation of the Agreement, including protection of civilians.

Further developments

Abyei road map. Following several weeks of consultations, the parties finalized a road map agreement on Abyei, which was endorsed by the Presidency of the Government of National Unity on 8 June. The road map comprised four points. First, the parties agreed to the deployment of new Joint Integrated Units and police units, the subsequent redeployment of SAF and SPLA forces out of the Abyei area and freedom of movement for UNMIS within the area. Secondly, they agreed that the civilian population should return to the area once security arrangements were in place, and a civil administration headed by SPLM and deputized by NCP should be set up within the agreed interim boundaries. Thirdly, oil revenues from the Abyei area were to be shared according to the provisions of the Peace Agreement, with both parties contributing an agreed percentage to a fund for the development of the areas along the north-south border. Finally, the parties agreed to resort to arbitration to resolve the dispute over the findings of the Abyei Boundaries Commission, and committed themselves to implement the decision of an international arbitration tribunal.

A presidential decree of 15 June established the administration within the agreed provisional geographical boundaries, gave the Abyei area special status under the Presidency, and defined its administrative parameters and powers. By 18 June, the deployment of Joint Integrated Units to Abyei, made up of 613 SAF and SPLA troops, was completed, and preparations for police deployment were under way.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 June [meeting 5923], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/24 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the road map for the return of internally displaced persons and the implementation of the Abyei Protocol ("the road map") signed by the National Congress Party and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement on 8 June 2008. The Council emphasizes that the peaceful resolution of the situation in Abyei is vital to the effective implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and peace in the region. The Council welcomes the agreements in the road map, including its provisions regarding revenue-sharing and the interim boundaries in Abyei. The Council urges the parties to use the opportunity created by the signing of the road map to resolve all outstanding issues related to implementation of the Agreement and welcomes the commitment of the parties to take unresolved issues to arbitration as necessary.

The Council deeply regrets the recent outbreak of fighting in Abyei, the ensuing displacement of civilians and the obstruction to the freedom of movement of the United Nations Mission in the Sudan. The Council urges the parties to facilitate immediate humanitarian support for the displaced citizens and support for their voluntary return as soon as an interim administration and the agreed security arrangements are in place.

The Council encourages the parties to fully implement the road map within the agreed timelines, in particular with the establishment of an Abyei Area Administration; deployment of a new Joint Integrated Unit battalion; ensuring free movement for forces of the Mission in the Abyei area and access to the north and south of the Abyei area to carry out its mandate to support implementation of the Agreement; and redeployment of the Sudanese Armed Forces and Sudan People's Liberation Movement troops outside the interim Abyei administrative area agreed to by the parties.

The Council calls upon the Mission, within its mandate and in accordance with Council resolution 1812(2008), to robustly deploy, as appropriate, peacekeeping personnel in and around Abyei to help to reduce tensions and prevent the escalation of conflict in support of implementation of the Agreement. The Council requests the Secretary-General to examine the root causes of and the role played by the Mission in connection with the violence between the parties in Abyei in May 2008 and to consider what follow-up steps may be appropriate for the Mission.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In July [S/2008/485], the Secretary-General reported that SPLA and SAF began withdrawing from the Abyei area on 30 June and 4 July, respectively, and UNMIS enjoyed freedom of movement throughout the area. The parties decided to refer the dispute over the boundaries of Abyei to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague. UNMIS was supporting the implementation of the road map, and core UN civilian staff in Abyei were providing good offices and planning for the return of an expanded UN presence. Despite those positive developments, tensions in the Abyei area remained high. One UN military observer was shot on 7 July during an altercation between an SAF monitor and SPLA at a market located 30 kilometres south of Abyei, and was in critical condition.

The second SPLM National Convention was held in Juba from 15 to 21 May. On 20 May President Al-Bashir and NUP leader Sadiq Al-Mahdi signed a national agreement covering issues such as democratic transformation, civil liberties and Darfur. On 14 July, International Criminal Court (ICC) Prosecutor Luis Moreno Ocampo requested that the Court issue an arrest warrant for President Al-Bashir on charges of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes; the request would be reviewed by the Court's Pretrial Chamber (see p. 259).

As at 8 July, the total redeployment of SAF troops verified by UNMIS and accepted by the Ceasefire Joint Monitoring Commission stood at 97 per cent of the 46,403 troops initially stated as being present south of the current borderline. For SPLA, verified and accepted redeployment stood at 10 per cent of 59,168 troops initially stated as being present north of the line. The low percentage of SPLA forces redeployed, especially from Southern Kordofan, continued to be a source of tension, as its forces remained in areas that SAF contended were north of the 1 January 1956 line. UNMIS verified 33,385 Joint Integrated Unit troops, representing 90.5 per cent of the stated strength of 36,866 and 84.2 per cent of the total authorized strength of 39,639.

The Sudan's fifth national census was conducted from 22 April to 6 May, with public support in most parts of the country. Government officials reported a coverage rate of 85 per cent in Western Darfur and 90 per cent in Northern and Southern Darfur. The Director of the National Bureau for Statistics claimed, on 6 May, that most states had achieved a 100 per cent completion rate, with a coverage rate of 90 per cent throughout the Sudan. Throughout the process, UNMIS provided extensive logistical and transportation support, and assisted in retrieving census forms from the states. Census results were expected to be released by the fourth quarter of 2008. The Cabinet finally approved the electoral law on 27 June and forwarded it to the National Assembly, which adopted it on 7 July. The President signed the law on 14 July. The National Elections Commission was to be established within one month of the enactment of the law.

UNMIS worked closely with officials of Greater Equatoria to facilitate peace and reconciliation talks between the Bari and the Mundari tribes and facilitated the implementation of an agreed transfer of the Wanding area from Jonglei to Upper Nile. Progress was made towards achieving the benchmarks for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration set out by the Secretary-General in his April report. Following approval of the national reintegration policy by the National Council for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Coordination, the parties signed a national multi-year project document on disarmament, demobilization and reintegration at a conference co-chaired by Japan and UNDP (Geneva, 25 June). The Northern and Southern Sudan Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Commissions established technical coordination committees to develop joint operations plans. The two Commissions began joint programme activities in Blue Nile state, resulting in the demobilization of 88 children formerly associated with SPLA. Despite those achievements, many challenges remained, including the need for the Sudanese authorities and UNMIS to finalize the joint operational plan.

The Secretary-General urged both parties to complete their redeployment out of the interim Abyei area as quickly as possible. He appealed to the parties to agree quickly on their nomination of the new civil administration and to work together to ensure the conditions necessary for the return of displaced persons. Regarding the demarcation of the 1 January 1956 boundary, the Secretary-General expressed concern about the high degree of militarization along the border and reports of troop movements by both parties in the three transitional areas of Abyei, Blue Nile, and Southern Kordofan. He urged both sides to expedite the redeployment of forces in accordance with the Peace Agreement; begin demarcation of the 1 January 1956 boundary line; and resolve the status of disputed areas.

Report of Secretary-General (October). In October [S/2008/662], the Secretary-General reported progress in implementing the security arrangements under the Abyei road map agreement. As at 4 October, almost all SAF and SPLA personnel had left the road map area as required, with two exceptions: a small, unverified group of SAF personnel providing security at Diffra oilfields in the outer ring; and SPLA military police patrolling the Agok area. UNMIS pressed the parties to withdraw those forces in accordance with the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the road map. The new Abyei Joint Integrated Unit, composed of 640 personnel trained by UNMIS, became operational in August and was assuming control of military positions as SAF and SPLA departed. Preparations for the deployment of two further companies to Diffra and Agok were ongoing. The Joint Integrated Police Unit was deployed and was policing Abyei town. The first group of 168 personnel of the Unit arrived in early August, comprising 150 regular police (103 from the south and 47 from the north) and 18 officers (2 from the south and 16 from the north). UNMIS provided transport and supplies, and conducted a basic training course for the Unit's personnel. The arrival of the second group, consisting of 33 Government police personnel and 49 Southern Sudan police personnel, brought the strength of the Police Unit to 250.

On 8 August, the Presidency appointed Arop Mayak Mony Tock of SPLM as Chief Administrator for the Abyei Interim Administration and Rahama Abdelrahman al-Nour (NCP) as his Deputy, in accordance with the road map and the Peace Agreement. On 6 October, President Al-Bashir appointed the remaining members of the Abyei Executive and Area Councils. As at 1 October, between 12,000 and 16,000 persons out of some 50,000 displaced had returned to the Abyei area. The UNMIS Force Commander led an inquiry into the events in Abyei in May, as requested by the Ceasefire Political Commission, and produced a draft report. The Secretary-General urged the parties to finalize the report and, based on its findings, take action against those responsible for the violence, looting and displacement of the civilian population of Abyei and the surrounding area.

As at 4 October, total redeployment of SAF troops verified by UNMIS and accepted by the Ceasefire Joint Monitoring Commission stood at 96.9 per cent of the 46,403 troops initially stated as being present south of the current border line. For SPLA, redeployment stood at 10.6 per cent of the 59,168 troops initially stated as being present north of the line. The Joint Integrated Units reached 84.7 per cent of their mandated strength of 39,639 troops, with SAF soldiers comprising 52.4 per cent and SPLA 47.6 per cent of the total. However, the Units still lacked communication equipment, transport, administrative facilities, habitation, water and sanitation; and financial and logistical supply lines had yet to be unified.

Despite the adoption of the electoral law in July, other electoral preparations made little progress. The Political Parties Affairs Council had not been formed, and aspects of the broader legal framework needed to be brought into conformity with the Bill of Rights of the National Constitution of the Sudan.

The security situation in the UNMIS area of operations improved during the reporting period. In Abyei, the situation stabilized as road map implementation continued. In Southern Kordofan, reports of inter-ethnic violence declined, but the build-up of SAF and SPLA forces in the north-south border area remained a concern. Renewed clashes with LRA were reported, ending a period of relative calm. On 18 September, suspected LRA elements allegedly attacked an SPLA detachment near Yambio in Western Equatoria. It was reported that one SPLA soldier and three LRA rebels were killed, villagers were abducted and houses were looted and burned.

Restrictions on UNMIS freedom of movement were lifted in many areas and monitoring and verification denials decreased significantly, but some limitations remained, particularly in Sector VI (Abyei). In August, DPKO and the Department of Field Support (DFS) conducted a joint review of UNMIS military capabilities. Subject to budgetary approval, the study recommended the deployment of one additional company in Sector I (Juba), three in Sector IV (Kadugli) and two in Sector VI (Abyei). Sector V (Damazin) would be downsized from a four-company to a three-company battalion, with the fourth company being redeployed to protect the El Obeid Logistics Base. Implementation of the review would require an increase in the strength of UNMIS from 9,375 to 9,975 troops, which was within the mandated strength of 10,000 under Security Council resolution 1590(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 304].

A DPKO fact-finding team visited the Sudan from 9 to 12 August in the wake of questions regarding UNMIS actions during the Abyei crisis in May. The team found that, while most of Abyei's population left before the fighting reached its peak, UNMIS protected a large group of people inside its compound. It recommended that the Mission review its overall deployment, with a view to reinforcing Sector VI (Abyei) and other possible flashpoints, and develop an effective conflict-management strategy. The team's recommendations were incorporated into planning and reflected in the military capability review.

UNMIS continued to work with the parties to advance plans for starting the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. On 9 September, the National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Coordination Council agreed to conduct a pilot programme for 700 to 1,000 beneficiaries. UNMIS, through the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), began reintegration activities for 88 children who were demobilized in May. Reintegration activities were ongoing for children previously demobilized in Khartoum, Gedaref and Southern Kordofan states. In eastern Sudan, UNDP supported the demobilization of 1,700 former combatants.

Sporadic spontaneous returns continued, but organized repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs) came to a complete halt as hazardous road conditions, incompatible school calendars in asylum countries and the beginning of the planting season contributed to an unfavourable climate for further returns. By mid-September, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reported a total for organized and assisted refugee repatriation of 137,620 people, of whom 60,655 arrived in 2008. Since the signing of the Peace Agreement in 2005, the grand total, including spontaneous returns, had reached 294,450.

Humanitarian programmes progressed in the areas of road construction, mine clearance, vaccination and the training of teachers, lawyers, police and Government officials. More than 85,000 IDPs were assisted in the first half of the year, and 3.4 million received food assistance. The Government in July signed the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) 2009–2012, and UN agencies were translating it into programmes that would start in 2009. On 16 August, UNMIS received a written request for electoral assistance from the Government of Southern Sudan and confirmed its intention to provide assistance in line with its mandate. A parallel request from authorities in Khartoum was expected, and assistance would be forthcoming. To date, UNMIS mine-action teams had cleared 2,107 of the 3,956 areas identified as dangerous, and opened 27,155 kilometres of road.

The Secretary-General observed that the lack of mutual trust and confidence between NCP and SPLM remained the main challenge to the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, and urged the leaders to improve their relationship in the spirit of the Agreement. He urged the Presidency to agree on the Border Commission's technical report, which was expected to be submitted by mid-October to ensure the start of the demarcation process. He urged the parties to lift all remaining restrictions of movement for UNMIS, and urged close coordination between the Ceasefire Political Commission and the Joint Defence Board to ensure that the Commission's decisions were implemented without delay. The Government was urged to cooperate with ICC and put in place an effective national judicial and political process.

Year-end developments. In a later report [S/2009/61], the Secretary-General said that the overall security situation in the UNMIS area of operations was relatively stable, but remained fragile and unpredictable in certain areas. On 12 December, a firefight broke out between members of the Joint Integrated Unit and the Joint Integrated Police Unit in Abyei town, killing one and injuring nine. The situation was calmed following immediate intervention by the commanders of the Units, the Chief Administrator, the Secretary-General's Special Representative and the Area Joint Military Committee. The Joint Integrated Unit redeployed to its new headquarters north of Abyei town. The personnel of both Units were disarmed, except for those on duty, and UNMIS began patrolling the town with armoured personnel carriers. Following the refusal by LRA leader Joseph Kony to sign the Juba Final Peace Agreement on 29 November, Ugandan, Congolese and Southern Sudanese forces launched a joint operation on 14 December against LRA positions in the northern Democratic Republic of the Congo. SPLA subsequently deployed forces along the border to prevent spillover from the fighting.

Tribal conflict remained a security problem throughout Southern Sudan. In Warrab state, 16 died in clashes between Lou Areik and Apuk Padoy on 20 October. On 8 December, Dinka Lou Areik and Dinka Apuk Bol clashed in Adhaul village, killing six. On 10 November, a dispute among armed civilians in Unbill escalated into widespread fighting among clans, displacing more than 7,500 households.

Regarding the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement, the Secretary-General reported that the Chief Administrator of Abyei, Arop Moyak Monytoc, the Deputy Chief Administrator, Rahama Abderahman Al-Nour, and five other members of the Abyei Area Administration took office on 11 November. The return of some 50,000 civilians displaced during fighting in the Abyei area in May was slow, with up to 10,000 returning to the Abyei area north of the Kiir River, and about 5,000 each to Abyei town and villages north of the river between July and December. An estimated two thirds of the returned population fled again during the incident of 12 December in Abyei.

SAF and SPLA failed to meet the deadline of 12 December agreed by the Ceasefire Joint Monitoring Commission for the withdrawal of their remaining forces in Diffra and Agok. At the Commission meeting of 17 December, the parties agreed to 15 January 2009 as the new deadline. On 19 December, 39 SPLA military police were withdrawn from Agok to the south of the Abyei road map area, along with some 226 armed personnel of various Southern Sudan security forces. On 1 November, 30 personnel of the Joint Integrated Unit from Balom deployed to Banjideed to provide security along migration routes. Following the incident of 12 December, all Units were withdrawn from Abyei town and 257 Joint Integrated Police Unit personnel were tasked with maintaining law and order there.

On 30 October, the presiding officer of the Permanent Court of the Arbitration Tribunal for the Abyei dispute accepted his appointment, thereby formally establishing the Tribunal. On 19 November, the Ceasefire Political Commission and the Joint Defence Board held their first joint session, attended by the Secretary-General's Special Representative. On 26 November, the UNMIS Force Commander presented to the Ceasefire Political Commission the report of the Ceasefire Joint Monitoring Commission on the May violence in Abyei; the co-chairpersons of the Ceasefire Political Commission vowed to implement the recommendations of the report. The National Elections Commission was sworn in on 25 November, but more time would be required for it to reach the operational capacity to complete election preparations. The Political Parties Affairs Council, required to register political parties, was established in late November.

Regarding the political situation, SPLM and nine southern political parties met in Juba from 8 to 13 November, the first south-south dialogue since 2005. The parties reserved the right to reject census results; reiterated the importance of adhering to the elections schedule set by the Peace Agreement; urged the Government of National Unity to provide the logistics and funding necessary to complete border demarcation before the general elections; and called for the National Assembly to enact the Southern Sudan Referendum Law immediately. On 16 October, NCP, SPLM, the Umma Party, the Democratic Unionist Party (DUP) and other national parties attended the first session of the Sudan People's Forum in Khartoum, with hopes of resolving the Darfur conflict and other major national issues. The meeting reconvened the following day in Kenana (White Nile state) under the chairmanship of President Al-Bashir and established a 13-member presidential council and seven subcommittees chaired by eminent political and civil society actors.

In November, UNMIS facilitated the first round table of political parties in Western Equatoria state. Nine parties participated, including SPLM and NCP, marking the first time the parties discussed the electoral law, the political parties act and the role of political parties throughout the election cycle. UNMIS also facilitated a Dinka Malual/Misseriya Humr reconciliation conference in Northern Bahr el Ghazal (11–14 November); participants agreed that unarmed Misseriya pastoralists should have unhindered access to grazing areas and water points in the south. As at 17 December, 99.7 per cent of UNMIS military personnel (9,346 out of 9,375) were deployed in the Sudan, including 622 military observers, 190 staff officers and 8,534 troops. Movement restrictions continued to hamper UNMIS monitoring and verification in some parts of its area of operation. As at 1 December, UNMIS had deployed 84 per cent of its mandated police strength (677 police advisers, including 60 women) to 22 sites throughout the mission area.

Spontaneous returns of IDPs and refugees declined towards the end of the year, as major religious holidays and impassable overland routes discouraged extensive relocation. In 2008, 129,950 IDPs and refugees returned through United Nations or other organized programmes, and 325,438 returned spontaneously.

Children and armed conflict

In February [S/AC.51/2008/7], the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict submitted its conclusions on parties in the armed conflict in the Sudan, having examined the Secretary-General's 2007 report on children and armed conflict in the Sudan [YUN 2007, p. 244] on 18 September 2007. The Group recommended that the Security Council address letters on that issue to the Government of National Unity, the Secretary-General and the President of the AU Peace and Security Council. It issued a public statement in which it condemned the recruitment of children and other violations and abuses, especially gender-based and sexual violence against children in the Sudan. It urged all parties to protect the civilian population, especially children; release all children within their ranks; refrain from new child recruitment; respect the neutrality of refugee camps, IDP settlements, schools and medical facilities; end and prevent rape and other gender-based violence by members of their groups; and allow unimpeded and secure access for humanitarian assistance to children. The Group further agreed to address letters to the UNICEF Executive Director, the World Bank and donors.

UNMIS

The United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), established by Security Council resolution 1590(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 304], continued to support implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement signed by the Government of the Sudan and SPLM/A; facilitate and coordinate the voluntary return of refugees and IDPs, and humanitarian assistance; assist with demining; and protect and promote human rights. UNMIS was headed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the Sudan, Ashraf Jehangir Qazi (Pakistan). In April, the Council extended the UNMIS mandate until 30 April 2009.

As at 31 December, UNMIS comprised 8,726 troops, 620 military observers and 679 police personnel.

Appointment. By an exchange of letters between the Secretary-General and the Security Council on 20 and 23 May [S/2008/339, S/2008/340], Major General Paban Thapa (Nepal) was appointed UNMIS Force Commander, replacing Lieutenant General Jasbir Singh Lidder (India).

Financing

In March [A/62/749], the Secretary-General submitted the performance report on the UNMIS budget for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007. In April [A/62/785 & Corr.1], he submitted the proposed UNMIS budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, which amounted to $838,265,900.

In June [A/62/781/Add.16], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly appropriate $820,720,600 for the 12-month period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, $17,545,300 less than the amount proposed by the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/880], adopted resolution 62/267 without vote [agenda item 155].

Darfur

The security situation in the Darfur region of the Sudan deteriorated, even as deployment of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) continued. In January, Chadian regular forces targeted Chadian rebels in Darfur in air attacks, and a convoy of vehicles carrying rations for UNAMID personnel in Western Darfur was attacked by the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF). In February, SAF and allied militia attacked Abu Suruj, a former Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) stronghold, and other areas in Western Darfur. The Government started a military campaign in Northern Darfur in September and engaged in further military operations in October. Despite a unilateral declaration of a cessation of hostilities by the Government on 12 November, its forces conducted aerial bombings in Northern and Western Darfur during that month. Southern Darfur also experienced an upsurge in violence, as Government patrols were attacked. Inter-tribal fighting continued in Northern and Southern Darfur, and targeted attacks against humanitarian workers and their assets hindered the provision of assistance to the civilian population.

On 16 November, the Sudan extended until 31 January 2010 fast-track measures facilitating humanitarian aid to Darfur based on a joint communiqué between the Sudan and the United Nations. A status-of-forces agreement between UNAMID and the Sudan was signed on 9 February. Nevertheless, UNAMID deployment progressed slowly and faced significant challenges, including insufficient troops and equipment. In July, a UNAMID patrol was attacked in Darfur, resulting in the death of seven peacekeepers, and a UNAMID officer was killed by unknown gunmen. At year's end, UNAMID strength stood at 63 per cent of the authorized total of military personnel. On 30 June, the Secretary-General appointed Djibrill Yipènè Bassolé (Burkina Faso) as the Joint African Union-United Nations Chief Mediator for Darfur.

On 1 February [S/2008/130], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he had extended the appointment of his Special Envoy for Darfur, Jan Eliasson, until 30 June.

Political and security situation

Security Council consideration. On 9 January [meeting 5817], the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, briefed the Security Council on challenges and impediments to the deployment of UNAMID, established in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 251], and on the security situation in Darfur. He reported that a number of outstanding issues undermining UNAMID deployment were directly dependent on the outcome of discussions with the Government of the Sudan. Regarding the composition of the UNAMID military component, the Government expressed its objections to the deployment of units from Thailand and Nepal, and verbally rejected a combined Nordic engineering unit. The Government had agreed that it would be ready to begin consultations on the status-of-forces agreement on 13 December 2007, but no interlocutor had been made available for such discussions. UNAMID was also unable to finalize the agreement with the Government on a suitable piece of land in El Geneina for the Operation. However, the Government released impounded communications equipment and was permitting UNAMID to use the El Obeid logistics hub as a staging area.

Mr. Guéhenno stated that UNAMID was functioning as a 're-hatted' version of the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS), with few additional troops or police having arrived in the mission area since the transfer of authority from AMIS to UNAMID on 31 December 2007 [ibid., p. 259]. New UNAMID units needed to be deployed more rapidly if the Operation was to have an impact on the Darfur situation in the first half of 2008. Advance parties of Egyptian and Ethiopian infantry battalions were expected to be in Darfur by the end of February, pending the resolution of outstanding issues, and the remainder of the Chinese engineering unit was expected by March. Most of the enabling units were expected to deploy before June, and five remaining battalions were scheduled to deploy in the latter half of the year. Deployment challenges were compounded by shortfalls in critical areas, including the provision of transportation and aviation assets.

As UNAMID deployment accelerated, the security situation in Darfur deteriorated dramatically. On 2 January, JEM seized the Government-controlled towns of Sirba and Abu Suruj. In the press and in discussions with UN officials in the field, JEM leader Khalil Ibrahim repeatedly threatened to attack the Western Darfur state capital, El Geneina. The Secretary-General had condemned the acts of aggression by JEM.

On 7 January, a UNAMID convoy of more than 20 clearly marked vehicles carrying rations for UNAMID personnel in Western Darfur was attacked by SAF using light weapons and rocket-propelled grenades as it travelled from Um Baru to Tine; the convoy's movements had been confirmed with the Government and rebel movements in advance. A civilian Sudanese driver suffered gunshot wounds. UNAMID troops elected not to return fire and took up a defensive position. The convoy reached Tine and the driver received medical treatment there.

Statement by Secretary-General. In a press statement of 8 January [SG/SM/11362], the Secretary-General condemned the attack of 7 January and stressed that, for the Operation to be able to perform its mandated functions, the Government had to provide unequivocal guarantees that there would be no recurrence of such activities by its forces.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 January [meeting 5818], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/1 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns in the strongest possible terms the attack on 7 January 2008 by elements of the Sudanese Armed Forces, as confirmed by the African Union United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID), on a UNAMID supply convoy. The Council stresses that any attack on or threat against UNAMID is unacceptable, and demands that there be no recurrence of attacks on UNAMID. The Council welcomes the commitment of the Government of the Sudan to undertake a complete and full investigation into the incident, together with the United Nations and the African Union.

The Council welcomes the transition of authority from the African Union peacekeeping operation, the African Union Mission in the Sudan, to UNAMID, which occurred on 31 December 2007. The Council commends the Mission for its prompt action to begin to re-establish peace and security in Darfur.

The Council calls upon the Government of the Sudan to expedite full compliance with Council resolution 1769(2007), including by concluding all the necessary arrangements for the expeditious deployment of an effective UNAMID force.

The Council further urges the Government of the Sudan and all armed groups to respect an immediate and complete ceasefire and demands that all parties cooperate fully with the deployment of UNAMID and respect its security and freedom of movement.

The Council reiterates that an inclusive political settlement and the successful deployment of UNAMID are essential for re-establishing peace and stability in Darfur. The Council urges all parties, including rebel groups, to engage fully and constructively in the political process under the leadership of the United Nations Special Envoy for Darfur, Mr. Jan Eliasson, and the African Union Special Envoy for Darfur, Mr. Salim Ahmed Salim, who have the full support of the Council. The Council expresses its readiness to take action against any party that impedes the peace process, humanitarian aid or the deployment of UNAMID. The Council also recognizes that due process must take its course.

The Council expresses concern about the deterioration of security and humanitarian conditions in Darfur and calls upon the United Nations and all Member States to facilitate the rapid and complete deployment of UNAMID. The Council urges capable Member States to contribute the helicopter and transportation units necessary to ensure the successful implementation of the mandate of UNAMID.

Report of Secretary-General (February). The Secretary-General, in his February report on UNAMID deployment [S/2008/98], said that during a visit to the Sudan in January by his Special Envoy and the AU Special Envoy, Salim Ahmed Salim, two of the five major movement groupings—the United Resistance Front (URF) and SLM/A-Unity—expressed their readiness to enter pre-negotiation talks under UN and AU auspices. The Special Envoys were consulting with representatives of SLM/A-Abdul Shafie, JEM-Khalil Ibrahim and SLM/A-Abdul Wahid in an effort to obtain a similar commitment. The format for the participation of Minni Minawi, a signatory of the 2006 Darfur Peace Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 274], remained unresolved.

Regarding the security situation, the Secretary-General reported that Chadian regular forces targeted Chadian rebels in Darfur in air attacks early in January. On 6 January, the Chadian Air Force bombed the villages of Gokar and Wadi Rady, about 25 kilometres south of El Geneina; six Chadian rebels were killed and four were seriously wounded. A total of 283 humanitarian staff based in the areas north and south of El Geneina that were affected by the fighting were forced to relocate to El Geneina and other areas in Darfur, effectively halting aid to the civilian population. Government forces on 13 January arrested a member of the JEM splinter faction Collective Leadership. On 17 January, following dialogue between UNAMID and the Sudanese authorities, all JEM members were released.

The top UNAMID leadership was fully deployed with the arrival in the Sudan on 18 January of the Deputy Joint Special Representative for Operations and Management. On 31 January, the strength of UNAMID stood at 9,126 uniformed personnel, including 7,476 military personnel, 1,510 police officers, and one formed police unit. A total of 1,256 civilians, representing 23 per cent of the authorized strength, were deployed. Eighty per cent of the force headquarters staff positions were filled, and 80 to 90 per cent of sector headquarters staffing, military observer posts and liaison officer posts were filled. UNAMID police absorbed 1,380 police officers from AMIS as well as 124 light and heavy support package personnel. Due to lack of office space at the current headquarters, UNAMID personnel were split over four sites across El Fasher, impeding efficiency. Reconfiguration of the force to be able to meet its mandated tasks was hampered by the slow pace of transfer of equipment from AMIS; in that regard, the AU liquidation team was working with UNAMID to ensure the transfer of key assets. Negotiations between UNAMID and the Government on the status-of-forces agreement resumed on 14 January in Khartoum; the agreement was signed by the AU-UN Joint Special Representative for Darfur, Rodolphe Adada, and the Sudanese Foreign Minister, Deng Alor, on 9 February.

The deployment of UNAMID continued to face challenges in generating critical capabilities and securing land and clearance for goods and equipment. The Operation was still short of pledges for one heavy and one medium ground transport unit; three military utility aviation units, consisting of 18 helicopters; and two attack helicopters in addition to the four pledged by Ethiopia. Many countries that were willing to contribute formed police units did not have the logistical capabilities required to fulfil the mandated tasks. At the same time, the United Nations and the AU were working with troop- and police-contributing countries to accelerate the pace of pre-deployment preparations.

The Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations visited the region (21–29 January) to discuss with Government officials the outstanding issues related to UNAMID deployment and to survey development conditions. On 27 January, he met with the AU Commissioner for Peace and Security, Said Djinnit, and the Under-Secretary of State of the Sudan, Mutrif Siddiq, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. The meeting confirmed the need for enhanced cooperation between the AU and the United Nations and the Government with respect to UNAMID deployment.

Hostilities between Government and JEM-Khalil Ibrahim forces in Western Darfur and the continued build-up of their forces in the area severely undermined humanitarian conditions and access to civilians in need of assistance. The Secretary-General urged all parties to cooperate with the efforts of the Special Envoys to convene negotiations as soon as possible; reiterated his call on all parties to refrain from the use of force and begin negotiations; condemned cross-border attacks; and urged Chad and the Sudan to respect each other's territorial sovereignty and implement existing non-aggression agreements. He appealed to all UNAMID troop and police contributors to expedite the deployment of the units and assets pledged to the Operation. Member States were urged to provide the outstanding enabling units, including air assets, to permit UNAMID to achieve full operating capability.

Attacks in Western Darfur. On 8 February, SAF and allied militia attacked Abu Suruj, a former JEM stronghold located north of El Geneina in Western Darfur. The Government-led attack included hundreds of militia, over 130 vehicles, three attack helicopters, and at least one Antonov aircraft. Much of Abu Suruj was burned down during the attack, and thousands of civilians fled the fighting towards Chad and other areas. In an assessment conducted by UNAMID and humanitarian agencies on 12 February, Abu Suruj residents informed the assessment team that approximately 28 civilians had been killed in the attack, and that JEM forces had fled prior to the hostilities. Also on 8 February, a joint Government and militia force attacked Sirba, near Abu Suruj, killing approximately 42 civilians, including a tribal leader. Local residents reported that several thousand civilians fled Sirba during the attack, and indicated that almost half of the town was burned to the ground. Seleia, located north-east of Sirba, was bombed by Government aircraft that evening. In a press statement of 9 February [SG/SM/11406], the Secretary-General said that UNAMID had received preliminary reports confirming that an estimated 200 casualties resulted from the fighting. Condemning the attacks, he stressed that all parties had to adhere to international humanitarian law, which prohibited attacks against civilians.

The Government offensive resumed on 18 February, when SAF and allied militia attacked JEM and SLM/A-Abdul Wahid positions in Aro Sharow, Kandare and Kurlongo, situated in the Jebel Moon area of Western Darfur. During the attacks, SAF aircraft dropped at least five bombs in Aro Sharow and an additional eight bombs on Kandare and Kurlongo. Those areas hosted displaced civilians from the offensive of 8 February.

A major build-up of Government forces around Jebel Moon followed the attacks of 18 February, including SAF, allied militia, heavy artillery and aircraft. Heavy fighting ensued for several days, with the Government directing its assault at the JEM and SML/A-Abdul Wahid forces that controlled the area. On 22 February, JEM and SLM/A-Abdul Wahid commanders called UNAMID senior leadership and humanitarian agencies, seeking UNAMID intervention to provide safe passage to civilians trapped by the fighting. Government officials subsequently indicated to the Joint Special Representative that they would be willing to identify a staging area in one of their controlled areas from which women and children could proceed to a safe area. The United Nations Humanitarian Coordinator for the Sudan estimated that there were nearly 20,000 civilians in the area. Although direct confrontation between the parties had largely ended by 25 February, reported troop movements to the area suggested that renewed violence was likely.

Reports of Secretary-General (March–May). In March [S/2008/196], the Secretary-General reported that on 29 February, a Government patrol was ambushed at Amr Gedid, approximately 80 kilometres north of Nyala, by SLM/A-Unity forces. Five Government soldiers were reportedly killed and eight injured. On the same day, a Government police patrol was attacked by a group of militia in Domaya, 7 kilometres north-west of Nyala, resulting in the deaths of two Government soldiers and the wounding of 14 others. On 1 March, a commercial convoy of 43 trucks and fuel tankers accompanied by a Government police escort was ambushed by SLM/A-Unity forces near Gabat Hamada, 85 kilometres north of Nyala; six Government soldiers were reportedly killed and six wounded. Government authorities in Nyala stated that a military and police convoy dispatched to the area recovered one of the four stolen tankers.

Incidents of inter-tribal fighting occurred in both Northern and Southern Darfur. On 27 February, a group of approximately 160 men on horses and camels from the Rizeigat and Salamat tribes attacked Habbaniya tribesmen in the town of El Sunita in Southern Darfur. Twenty-one people were reported killed, a number of civilians were injured, and parts of El Sunita were set ablaze. Six of the attackers were also reported to have been killed, and 21 captured. On 28 February, the Habbaniya retaliated, killing 60 people east of Gereida. In Northern Darfur, fighting between the Zaghawa and Beni Hussein tribes was reported to have displaced approximately 300 people.

Targeted attacks against humanitarian workers and their assets continued to constrain humanitarian operations. During the first two months of 2008, 54 vehicles were hijacked, including two UNAMID vehicles and 32 trucks contracted to the World Food Programme (WFP); 18 WFP-contracted drivers remained missing. During the same period, 14 humanitarian premises were attacked by armed persons and four humanitarian compounds were destroyed and looted during the surge in violence north of El Geneina. Since JEM's attack on the northern corridor of Western Darfur in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 259], the Government had denied humanitarian agencies access to areas north of Seraf Jidad, cutting off assistance to some 160,000 people. The Government indicated that access would not be granted until it regained control. An estimated 12,000 civilians, including humanitarian workers, fled into Chad as a result of the attacks of 8 February on Abu Suruj, Sirba and Seleia, and one aid worker was killed. During the attacks of 18 February, the Government banned all humanitarian flights to the north of El Geneina. As fighting subsided in some areas, humanitarian missions were able to visit Kondobe, Sirba, Abu Suruj, Seraf Jidad and Seleia.

With the deployment of the senior UNAMID leadership and a sizeable portion of international and civilian staff in place, a number of substantive units began their work. Mine-action teams began their operations in the Kutum area in Northern Darfur, clearing two bombs dropped by aircraft, followed by a mine-action assessment of approximately 40 square kilometres. The lack of sufficient military engineer units hindered construction of the Operation's infrastructure. With limited means, UNAMID was upgrading, expanding or relocating 32 camps in Darfur and establishing two additional camps. The 135-person advance party of the Chinese engineer company was permanently based at the UNAMID supercamp in Nyala, where it was developing the infrastructure for the Operation. The military component conducted several hundred short- and long-range patrols throughout Darfur on a monthly basis. Core elements of the Joint Operations, Mission Analysis and Logistics Centres were established in February.

The consultations of the AU-UN Special Envoys and the Joint Mediation Support Team saw an increased engagement of the five Darfur movement groups—JEM, SLM/A-Abdul Shafie, SLM/A-Abdul Wahid, SLM/A-Unity and the United Resistance Front (URF)—and the Government of National Unity. However, the security situation in Chad and in Western Darfur limited the ability of the mediators to conduct consultations with the movements, and the movements' ability to hold consultations among themselves. The Joint Mediation Support Team, UNAMID and the Darfur-Darfur Dialogue and Consultation worked together to finalize a plan of action and strategy for including civil society organizations, IDPs and tribal leaders in the political process. The Special Envoys held informal consultations with partners on 17 and 18 March in Geneva on the way forward.

The Secretary-General observed that tensions between Chad and the Sudan were having a destabilizing effect on Darfur. He called on both countries to stop supporting the other's rebel groups and address instability in the border area. He urged all parties to abandon military confrontation, commit themselves to the political process and provide full support and cooperation to the efforts led by the Special Envoys.

In response to Security Council resolution 1769(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 251], by which the Council authorized the establishment of UNAMID, the Secretary-General in April submitted a report [S/2008/249] on developments in Darfur, progress made in the implementation of the Operation, and the status of the political process between January and March. He said that at the end of the reporting period, SAF was still engaging JEM and elements of SLM/A in and around Jebel Moon. On 19 March, JEM reportedly ambushed an SAF convoy 65 kilometres north of El Geneina, killing 19 Government soldiers. Hostilities between rebel factions also occurred. Heavy fighting was reported on 19 March in Shurum, located 80 kilometres south-east of Nyala, between members of the SLM/A-Minni Minawi and SLM-Free Will factions, during which nine people were killed. UNAMID increased its patrol presence in the northern corridor of Western Darfur state, and plans were made to deploy a permanent contingent as soon as possible. On 19 March, the Deputy Joint Special Representative and the military Chief of Staff visited Seleia to explore options for a more permanent UNAMID deployment in the area.

Military operations conducted by SAF and militias in the northern corridor of Western Darfur during the first three months of the year caused dozens of civilian fatalities and the displacement of an estimated 60,000 people. More than 90,000 people had been displaced across Darfur. By the end of March, thousands of people had returned to their places of origin, especially in Abu Suruj and Sirba, but many more remained displaced. Humanitarian access was constrained by insecurity, restrictions created by the parties and subsequent limitations on the use of air assets. Operations were also constrained by targeted attacks against humanitarian workers and their assets. During the reporting period, 73 vehicles were hijacked, including 3 UNAMID vehicles and 45 trucks contracted by WFP.

Regarding UNAMID deployment, the equipment and vehicles of the Bangladesh multi-role logistics company and Nigerian level II hospital arrived in the Sudan and were expected to reach Nyala and El Geneina, respectively, in April, with their personnel following in May. The Secretary-General and President Al-Bashir discussed UNAMID deployment on the margins of the eleventh summit of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (oic) (Dakar, Senegal, 13–14 March). They agreed that UNAMID would accept one additional battalion from Egypt and another from Ethiopia, following which the deployment of the Thai and Nepalese units would be expedited. The Force Commander made clear the priority of bringing the 10 UNAMID battalions up to UN standards in terms of troop numbers and self-sustainment capability. While the contributing countries were able to generate the required number of troops, many were finding it difficult to procure the necessary equipment. The Government agreed in principle to the right of UNAMID to conduct night flights, but it continued to restrict the Operation's flying hours.

In May [S/2008/304], the Secretary-General reported that significant clashes occurred between the rebel movements and Government forces, as well as armed factions of the rebel movements, especially in the states of Western and Southern Darfur. On 12 April, JEM attacked an SAF post at Kush Kush, located 15 kilometres north-west of Seleia; SAF retaliated by conducting air attacks and shelling JEM positions near Seleia. Sixty-two civilians were killed in the attacks. On the same day, SLM/A-Abdul Wahid attacked SAF in the Kass area south of Jebel Marra, reportedly killing 17 Government police officers. On 16 April, SLM/A-Minni Minawi and SLM/A-Free Will clashed east of Nyala, resulting in three reported fatalities. Tribal fighting over livestock continued between the Habbaniya and Salamat in Southern Darfur. On 17 April, several hundred Habbaniya on horseback and 31 vehicles clashed with the Salamat, resulting in 31 Habbaniya fatalities. Six Salamat were reportedly killed. Tension arose in El Fasher between SAF and Government-allied militia, reportedly due to the Government's failure to pay the militia their expected salaries. The militia looted the El Fasher market on 6 April, resulting in one civilian death. On 29 April, one woman was killed and property and livestock were destroyed during SAF aerial attacks and fighting between Government and rebel forces in the SLM/A-controlled area of El Hashim and Heles, north of Kutum in Northern Darfur. On 2 May, UNAMID airlifted eight civilians wounded in an SAF air attack on the village of Umm Sidir in Northern Darfur the previous day, which had also left two men dead. On 4 May, three people were killed and one was seriously injured when an unidentified aircraft bombed the villages of Ein Bessar and Hatan in Northern Darfur. The same day, an unidentified aircraft bombed Shegeg Karo village, killing 12 people and wounding 27. On 5 May, the Government denied UNAMID permission to evacuate the wounded civilians from Shegeg Karo.

On 29 April, a convoy of three commercial vehicles carrying two UNAMID containers of equipment from El Obeid to Nyala was hijacked near Abu Karinka, Southern Darfur, by 30 unidentified armed men in two vehicles. UNAMID immediately notified the Government and began patrols and an aerial search for the missing trucks and cargo. UNAMID leadership requested the assistance of the Government in addressing the backlog of UNAMID cargo at Port Sudan, streamlining the customs clearance process and ensuring security along the main transportation routes. UNAMID was augmenting inland road transport with cargo airlifts from El Obeid to El Fasher. Regarding recruitment, 40 international staff selected for UNAMID appointment declined the offer and many short-listed candidates failed to confirm interest in being interviewed for posts, citing reasons related to the harsh living and working conditions in Darfur. A team from DPKO and the Department of Field Support (DFS) visited the Sudan in April to identify ways to expedite deployment. The team and UNAMID developed an enhanced deployment plan, which aimed at achieving 80 per cent deployment of the authorized strength of the Operation by the end of 2008. To achieve that target, the rotations of the 10 infantry battalions already deployed had to meet the UN standard for strength and equipment; six new battalions—including two from Ethiopia, two from Egypt, one from Senegal and one from Thailand—and two new companies from Nepal would have to deploy; vital enabling units, including engineer, transportation, logistics and medical units, should deploy before the rainy season; and 11 additional formed police units should deploy. Agreements for land were finalized for building supercamps at El Fasher, Nyala, Zalingei and El Geneina, as well as a camp for substantive personnel at El Geneina. The schedule for AMIS liquidation was developed, verification of assets continued, and a coordination mechanism for land and other third-party claims was established. It was anticipated that the handover of former AMIS equipment and assets to UNAMID would be completed in June, but other AMIS liquidation processes, including land and claims issues, were likely to continue beyond that date.

UNAMID increased significantly its patrolling and investigation activities, including joint military and police patrols in Western Darfur's northern corridor, where large numbers of civilians were displaced during the fighting in February. UNAMID police entered the second phase of a three-phase patrolling plan for the camps for internally displaced persons, expanding the duration of its daily patrols to cover the period from 8 a.m. to midnight. At the end of April, UNAMID was implementing more than 50 quick-impact projects, totalling more than $1 million, in cooperation with community partners, universities, the UN country team and international agencies.

The Special Envoys undertook two missions to the Sudan in April, during which they urged the parties to cease hostilities, improve the security environment, and intensify their preparations for substantive talks.

Security Council mission. The Security Council mission (see p. 111) that visited five African countries from 31 May to 10 June [S/2008/460] met with the Governor of Northern Darfur and with representatives of the humanitarian community there. It also met with representatives of internally displaced persons living in the Zam Zam camp in Northern Darfur, and assured them that the Council would do everything in its power to improve their circumstances. In a meeting with the mission on 4 June, the Sudanese Minister for Foreign Affairs, Deng Alor, indicated that the Government remained committed to the ceasefire and to resolving the situation through the political process, and asked for the international community's continued assistance in bringing the parties to the negotiating table. The mission stated that the Darfur crisis was its principal focus, and asked that the understanding reached between the Secretary-General and President Al-Bashir with regard to the deployment of Thai and Nepalese troops under UNAMID be confirmed in writing. It stressed the need for the Government of National Unity to abide by the agreements reached with the Darfur humanitarian community, particularly the 2007 joint communiqué on the facilitation of humanitarian activities [YUN 2007, p. 248], and the importance of the Government's full cooperation with ICC.

Presidential Adviser Nafie Ali Nafie informed the mission that the Government had shown flexibility in the implementation of resolution 1769(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 251]. The mission welcomed the Government's improved coordination with UNAMID, but stressed that there were still areas in which greater cooperation was needed. In particular, the mission asked for the removal of all limitations on the freedom of movement of UNAMID, including its ability to use Darfur airports 24 hours per day. The Adviser confirmed the understanding reached by President Al-Bashir and the Secretary-General on the deployment of the Thai and Nepalese units following the arrival of the Ethiopian and Egyptian battalions.

President Al-Bashir reiterated to the mission his Government's commitment to the political process, as well as his conviction that the military option could not lead to a durable solution. The Government had delivered on its commitment regarding UNAMID deployment, and he urged all stakeholders to contribute to the assets still missing in the UNAMID force. He confirmed the Sudan's commitment to facilitating the work of the humanitarian community in Darfur, and indicated that the joint communiqué on the issue was being implemented. The President also confirmed that the Government was willing to provide escorts for UNAMID supply convoys if so requested. As to allowing UNAMID flights to operate at night, he encouraged the United Nations to improve the airports and road infrastructure in Darfur, which the Government could not afford to do.

The mission recommended that the Council renew its demand that all parties in Darfur cease hostilities and engage in the political process, and stand ready to take action against any party that undermined the peace process. The United Nations should take forward President Al-Bashir's agreements regarding the deployment of the Thai and Nepalese troops as soon as Egyptian and Ethiopian troops arrived; the protection of UN land convoys; the upgrading of Darfur airports; and the operation of UN flights 24 hours per day. The United Nations should appoint a chief mediator to spearhead AU-UN efforts on Darfur. The Government and all other parties to the conflict should cooperate with ICC, consistent with resolution 1593(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 324] and bearing in mind presidential statement S/PRST/2008/21 (see p. 259).

Report of Secretary-General (June). In June [S/2008/400], the Secretary-General said that following the JEM attack on Omdurman on 10 May, UNAMID reported movement of JEM personnel throughout Darfur, including 19 JEM vehicles arriving in El Daein in Southern Darfur on 12 May and 27 vehicles moving from the Dar El Salam area to Daba Tuga in Northern Darfur on 12 and 13 May. On 15 May, the Government issued a decree, initiated and signed by Minni Minawi, to establish a committee to "remove the negative consequences of the Omdurman attack on Darfur civilians" in cooperation with legal and security bodies. The Government pursued JEM elements in Darfur, and at least 11 civilians were reportedly arrested in El Geneina and surrounding IDP camps by the National Intelligence and Security Service at the end of May.

Clashes continued between tribal groups, between rebel movements, and between rebel movements and the Government and its affiliated forces. On 8 and 15 May, fighting broke out between Zaghawa and Birgit groups south-east of Nyala, resulting in the deaths of at least seven people. On 15 and 19 May, fighting between SLA-Minni Minawi and SLA-Free Will factions reportedly resulted in the deaths of five SLA-Minni Minawi combatants and 13 civilians. On 21 May, Janjaweed militia members attacked a vehicle transporting SLA-Minni Minawi soldiers near the Kabkabiya market in Northern Darfur, killing one SLA-Minni Minawi combatant. SLA-Unity expressed support for the JEM attack on Omdurman and, on 26 May, made a public threat to attack Khartoum.

Regarding UNAMID deployment, the Secretary-General said that the plan to achieve 80 per cent of deployment by the end of 2008 was based on the assumption that the Operation's engineering capability would be reinforced immediately. To that end, a multi-pronged strategy was being pursued, consisting of the accelerated deployment of engineer units; the temporary transfer of UNMIS engineer assets to UNAMID; a request for UNAMID troop contributors to swap one company from each incoming battalion with a pioneer company with light engineering capability; and building the capacity of local Sudanese construction companies. The JEM attack on Omdurman on 10 May delayed the deployment of new troops to Darfur and rotations of troops already present. Nevertheless, the rotation of the South African battalion was completed on 16 May; a Nigerian battalion also completed rotation on 20 May, but not at the UN standard strength. The slow movement of equipment from Port Sudan to Darfur was due largely to insecurity, in addition to lengthy customs clearances and the limited number of local contractors. The deployment of formed police units and their equipment was also delayed.

The Special Envoys held informal consultations (Geneva, 4–5 June) with regional and international partners to assess the political situation and discuss ways to take the mediation process forward. The Envoys called for the parties to exercise maximum restraint, abstain from further military action and engage in the political process. They stressed the need for the normalization of relations between Chad and the Sudan and for progress on implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301].

Appointment. On 30 June [S/2008/438], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he, jointly with the AU Commission Chairperson, had appointed Djibrill Yipènè Bassolé (Burkina Faso) as the Joint African Union-United Nations Chief Mediator for Darfur. Mr. Bassolé would conduct full-time mediation efforts; the Special Envoys would remain available for advice and engagement. The Security Council took note of the appointment on 3 July [S/2008/439].

Report of Secretary-General (July). In July [S/2008/443], the Secretary-General reported on progress made in the implementation of UNAMID and the status of the political process in Darfur between April and June. In response to the instability in Western Darfur, UNAMID developed a plan to conduct at least three long- and short-range patrols, together with two night patrols to IDP camps throughout the sector each week. UNAMID was patrolling IDP camps from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., with a view to providing a 24-hour presence. Progress was hampered, however, by the lack of reliable personal radios and the limited presence of formed police units.

Clashes between SLA-Minni Minawi and SLA-Free Will forces in Northern and Southern Darfur resulted in the displacement of more than 90,000 civilians during the reporting period. Shootings and the burning of the market and IDP dwellings in Tawila by Government troops on 13 May, in retaliation for the killing of a soldier, temporarily displaced some 20,000 persons. Owing to the violence targeting the humanitarian community, food aid was halved starting on 1 May. In addition, a very poor crop harvest in Southern and Northern Darfur led to an expanded 'hunger season', with the supply of cereals and other food items dramatically reduced. Bureaucratic restrictions also hindered the 16,500 aid workers in Darfur in providing essential humanitarian assistance.

Following the signing of the status-of-forces agreement on 9 February, the UNAMID leadership met regularly with senior Government officials and engaged them on issues related to UNAMID deployment. On 16 June, the Government agreed to extend airport operations by two hours; create a local technical committee to address technical problems; cooperate on the security of convoys and supply routes; and expedite customs clearances and issuance of visas. The Assistant Secretaries-General for Peacekeeping Operations and Field Support, joined by the AU-UN Joint Special Representative for Darfur, met with the AU Commissioner for Peace and Security, Ramtane Lamamra, to discuss deployment issues in the margins of the thirteenth Ordinary Session of the Executive Council of the African Union (Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, 24–28 June). Those officials then met jointly with a team from the Government of the Sudan. During the discussions, the Sudanese representatives reiterated the Government's commitment to UNAMID deployment. The AU-UN team emphasized the importance of Government cooperation and support in the following key areas: expeditious movement of contingent-owned equipment into Darfur, including the provision of security for convoys; the provision of land for camps; and the facilitation of engineering activities. UNAMID contingent-owned equipment convoys would be permitted to take place every 24 hours from El Obeid to Darfur, an increase from the previous provision for one convoy every 48 hours.

Despite the efforts of the two Special Envoys, the 2007 road map for the political process in Darfur [YUN 2007, p. 251] reached an impasse. The prospect for peace talks decreased due to the fragmentation of the movements, including the dissolution of URF into three separate groups; the deteriorating security situation; the absence of trust and cohesion between and within the parties; the renewed crisis between Chad and the Sudan (see p. 267); and the absence of political will to cease hostilities and resume negotiations. Implementation of the 2006 Darfur Peace Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 274] continued to be largely ignored by the parties on the ground, and was further hindered by the refusal of non-signatories to recognize the mechanisms put in place by the Agreement.

The Secretary-General observed that UNAMID deployment was far behind schedule, and sexual and gender-based violence continued with impunity. Heightened insecurity and banditry hampered the provision of humanitarian assistance to nearly 2.5 million people, and the international community struggled to perform even the most basic work to protect civilians.

Attacks against UNAMID. On 8 July, a UNAMID patrol was attacked near Shangil Tobaya, Northern Darfur, resulting in the death of seven peacekeepers and the wounding of 22. The deliberate and well-organized attack was the most serious since the start of the Operation. In a 9 July press statement [SG/SM/11690], the Secretary-General condemned the attack and called on the Government to do its utmost to identify the perpetrators and bring them to justice. He called on all parties to respect their agreements, redouble efforts to ensure the safety of the peacekeeping force, and reach a settlement to the Darfur crisis.

On 10 July, a UNAMID night patrol was struck by hostile fire 4 kilometres from the UNAMID company site in Masteri; there were no casualties. On 11 July, rocket-propelled grenades were fired near the UNAMID camp in Zam Zam. On 16 July, a UNAMID officer commanding the For Baranga protection force southwest of El Geneina was shot and killed by unknown armed men.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 5935], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/27 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns in the strongest possible terms the attack on 8 July 2008 on a military and police convoy of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) in Um Hakibah by 200 fighters on horses and in 40 vehicles, using sophisticated weaponry and tactics, which resulted in the death of 7 peacekeepers and a further 22 United Nations/African Union personnel being wounded. This unacceptable act of extreme violence is the largest attack on UNAMID since the transfer of authority from the African Union Mission in the Sudan on 31 December 2007. The Council is particularly concerned that the attack was premeditated, deliberate and intended to inflict casualties.

The Council welcomes the United Nations investigation under way and the Government of the Sudan's statement that it would assist the United Nations investigation. It calls upon the Government of the Sudan to do its utmost to ensure that the perpetrators of the attack are swiftly identified and brought to justice. The Council underlines its determination to take action against those responsible after hearing the outcome of the investigation by UNAMID.

The Council expresses its condolences to the Governments of Rwanda, Ghana and Uganda for the deaths of their peacekeepers and to the families of the victims. It commends the dedication of UNAMID personnel. The Council stresses that any attack or threat against UNAMID is unacceptable, and demands that there be no recurrence. It underlines that attacks on United Nations peacekeepers during an armed conflict can constitute war crimes under applicable international law and calls upon all parties to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law.

The Council calls upon all parties to agree to a cessation of hostilities, to engage fully and constructively in the political process under the leadership of the new Joint African Union United Nations Chief Mediator for Darfur, Mr. Djibrill Yipènè Bassolé, and to cooperate fully with the deployment of UNAMID and respect its security and freedom of movement.

The Council further calls upon the United Nations and all parties to facilitate the rapid and complete deployment of UNAMID, and upon capable Member States to contribute the helicopter and transportation units necessary to ensure the successful implementation of the mandate of UNAMID.

On 31 July [meeting 5947], the Security Council adopted resolution 1828(2008) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/2008/506] was submitted by the United Kingdom.

In favour: Belgium, Burkina Faso, China, Costa Rica, Croatia, France, Indonesia, Italy, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Panama, Russian Federation, South Africa, United Kingdom, Viet Nam.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

Speaking after the vote, the United States said that it had abstained because the language added to the resolution would send the wrong signal to President Al-Bashir and undermine efforts to bring him and others to justice.

Report of Secretary-General (August). In August [S/2008/558], the Secretary-General reported that a series of deadly attacks against UNAMID peacekeepers, a decline in the overall security situation and uncertainty regarding the implications of the request of 14 July by the ICC Prosecutor for an arrest warrant against President Al-Bashir led the United Nations to take heightened security precautions, including the classification of Darfur as a phase IV security environment and a temporary relocation of non-essential staff. Nevertheless, UNAMID stepped up patrols in rural areas of Sector West to reduce threats and boost the confidence of the population, particularly farmers.

Aerial bombardments increased in Darfur following the attack of 10 May on Omdurman by JEM. On 19 July, 15 bombs were reportedly dropped on the villages surrounding Jebel Moon, where JEM forces were reportedly stationed; further air attacks were reported on 22 July. Aerial attacks were also reported in the area controlled by SLM/A-Abdul Wahid 40 kilometres south-west of El Fasher, including bombings of Gollo on 5 and 21 July. On 15, 17 and 20 July, air attacks on SLM/A-Unity and JEM positions were conducted in Jebel Adulla in Southern Darfur. The attacks marked an escalation in the intensity of the conflict between the Government and the rebel factions not signatories to the Darfur Peace Agreement.

From 2 to 5 July, a 35-vehicle convoy staffed by 20 UNAMID police advisers and 18 UNAMID transport staff and technicians delivered vehicles, fuel and equipment from the El Obeid Logistics Base to El Fasher with an escort provided by the Government, the second such convoy to leave El Obeid in July. UNAMID policing activities were temporarily suspended in mid-July due to the security situation and the move to security phase IV. The situation later stabilized, however, and on 20 July, the UNAMID Police Commissioner authorized a return to normal activities.

Following the crash of an IL-76 aircraft in Khartoum on 30 June, the Government banned all flights of Ilyushin and Antonov aircraft, with the exception of UNAMID and UNMIS flights, provided the aircraft were not more than 20 years old and were contracted from outside the Sudan. Despite the UNAMID exception, the ban resulted in some delays in the movement of cargo, including emergency food rations for UNAMID personnel. The transportation of equipment required by contractors to complete work in the supercamps was also delayed until 24 July, when the Government provided authorization to move the materials. The Sudanese Civil Aviation Authority visited Darfur airports late in July, paving the way for UNAMID to expand parking and apron spaces, as well as undertake other rehabilitation work at the three airports in Darfur.

Further developments

Report of Secretary-General (October). In response to resolution 1828(2008), the Secretary-General in October submitted a report [S/2008/659] on UNAMID deployment, the political process, the security and humanitarian situation, and compliance by all parties with their international obligations. The report covered the period from August to early October.

The security and humanitarian situation remained precarious, especially in Northern Darfur and in IDP camps. On 12 August, the SLA-Abdul Wahid faction reported a Government offensive in the Wadi Atrun area of Northern Kordofan, allegedly resulting in seven deaths. The Government acknowledged the deployment of its forces to the area but said that no fighting had occurred. On 16 August, the faction again reported a Government attack on rebel bases in Abu Hamra and Kafod, allegedly resulting in the death of two combatants. On 25 August, heavily armed Government security forces surrounded the Kalma IDP camp south of Nyala, which accommodated some 80,000 people, with approximately 60 vehicles; the Government launched the operation to search for weapons and other contraband. The security forces were confronted by a crowd of internally displaced persons and opened fire. In the ensuing skirmish, 32 people were killed and at least 85 were injured. UNAMID deployed a team of military, police and medical personnel that evacuated the wounded to a medical facility in Nyala. Following the incident, 18 SPLM officials in the Government of National Unity and four local legislators resigned from their posts in protest. UNAMID took up the incident with Government agencies and the Humanitarian Aid Commission. On 10 September, the Government announced the establishment of a ministerial-level Security Task Force on Darfur to improve the humanitarian and security situation in IDP camps, and requested the participation of UNAMID and the UN Resident/Humanitarian Coordinator.

The Government began a new military campaign in Northern Darfur in September. On 6 and 7 September, it launched air strikes, followed by ground operations north of Kutum and east of Jebel Marra, respectively, involving attack helicopters and 50 to 100 vehicles. The Government stated that the operations were an effort to secure the main convoy routes for humanitarian access; nevertheless, its forces engaged SLA-Unity, SLA-Abdul Wahid, and the URF (JEM Collective) groups in combat. On 13 and 14 September, combined SAF, militia and Central Reserve Police forces in up to 150 vehicles launched another major offensive into eastern Jebel Marra. The Government also bombed suspected rebel strongholds, including in Karbala, Jebel Adoula, and the Umo and Jebel Moon areas, reportedly killing 12 people. Clashes between the SLA-Minni Minawi and the SLA-Free Will factions—both signatories of the Darfur Peace Agreement—continued north of El Fasher. Tribal conflict dominated the security situation in Southern Darfur, with up to 150 casualties reported as a result of fighting between the Rezeigat and Messerayah tribes.

The newly appointed AU-UN Joint Chief Mediator for Darfur, Djibrill Bassolé, arrived in the Sudan on 25 August. The Government pledged to cooperate with the Chief Mediator and expressed its determination to seek a speedy political solution to the Darfur crisis. The Chief Mediator met with representatives of rebel movements, IDPs, tribal leaders, and NGOs in El Fasher, Nyala and El Geneina. He urged the parties to lay down their arms and engage in dialogue, and encouraged the Government to take forward the Sudan People's Initiative announced in July. The Chief Mediator also met with the leaders of rebel groups and discussed measures to improve security and resume peace talks with the Government. Movement representatives, IDPs and tribal leaders reiterated their demands for power-sharing and security. On 19 September, UNAMID facilitated a meeting between Vice-President Osman Taha and Minni Minawi; they agreed on a cessation of hostilities and reaffirmed their commitment to the Darfur Peace Agreement.

Regarding UNAMID deployment, the Secretary-General said that a considerable number of military units, as well as two formed police units, would be deployed to Darfur during the remainder of the year. The units expected to deploy in October would include the 348-strong main body of the Bangladeshi multi-role logistics company; 148 members of the Egyptian Transport Unit; the 40-personnel advance party of the Pakistani engineer company; and most of the first Ethiopian and Egyptian battalions, composed of 440 and 632 troops, respectively. Deployment of formed police units from Nepal and Indonesia was also expected to be completed in October. The 10 infantry battalions already deployed would begin their rotations in October. In addition, three formed police units would be deployed by the end of the year.

UNAMID put in place additional commercial contracts for road, rail, and air transportation of contingent-owned and UN equipment directly into Darfur from Port Sudan. DFS and DPKO worked with the Friends of UNAMID group to arrange airlifts of troops and contingent-owned equipment directly from troop-contributing countries into Darfur. In addition, selected contributors were asked to undertake either self-deployment of all contingent-owned equipment and personnel in the region or the direct airlift of such equipment to Darfur. In response to a DFS request, the Government, in a letter of 26 September, agreed to provide blanket clearance for arriving flights carrying contingent-owned equipment. The arrangement would first be applied to airlift equipment for the Pakistani Level III Hospital, which would be operational before the end of the year. In the progress report submitted by the Government to the AU Commission on 17 September, the Sudanese authorities confirmed in writing their acceptance of the Thai battalion and Nepalese units that were expected to deploy in 2009.

Restrictions imposed by the Government and the various movements repeatedly undermined the Operation's freedom of movement. On 11 August, a UNAMID helicopter came under fire while flying from El Geneina to Kulbus, sustaining minor damage; another UNAMID helicopter came under fire south of Jebel Moon. JEM apologized for the second incident, acknowledging that it mistakenly identified the white helicopter as a Government aircraft. On 14 September, a UNAMID helicopter was fired upon by unknown perpetrators while flying from Shangil Tobayi to Tawilla. On 29 September, a helicopter operated by a UNAMID contractor crashed near Nyala, resulting in the death of the four people on board.

A tripartite meeting between the Government, the AU Commission and the United Nations (Khartoum, 7 October), attended by the Under-Secretary-General for Field Support, Susana Malcorra, discussed the steps taken by each of the parties to expedite UNAMID deployment and ensure its functioning. The parties agreed to address issues related to freedom of movement; air operations and flight clearances; railway rehabilitation; visa processing; customs clearance; Government liaison; military deployment; and the use of local construction capacity. The Government instructed the armed forces and civil aviation authorities to ensure that Government helicopters were no longer painted white, in order to distinguish them from UNAMID helicopters and those used for international humanitarian activities. It was agreed that UNAMID and the Sudanese Civil Aviation Authority would contribute to the review of the crash on 29 September of a helicopter operated by a UNAMID contractor. The Government approved the rehabilitation of the El Fasher and Nyala airports and the new airport in El Geneina, and the United Nations committed itself to expediting those efforts. The Government approved the use of Darfur airports by UNAMID from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., and circulated instructions to that effect to the Civil Aviation and National Security authorities, as well as the walis, or governors, in Darfur. It was agreed to gradually implement operations taking place around the clock, with UNAMID contributing the necessary equipment and support. Regarding UNAMID convoys, the Government confirmed that it would escort any such convoy as frequently as every 48 hours; that the frequency of convoys would be increased to one every 24 hours as long as they comprised at least 30 vehicles; and that the frequency would be increased to one every 24 hours in due course. The United Nations agreed to support Government efforts to rehabilitate portions of the railway. The Government agreed that UNAMID equipment, goods and materials would undergo customs clearance one time only, at their point of entry. It confirmed the establishment of a liaison office in El Fasher that would ensure local implementation of national-level decisions. The United Nations, the AU and the Government agreed to support the possible self-deployment of the second battalions from Egypt and Ethiopia.

The high-level committee on the facilitation of humanitarian activities in Darfur met on 20 August and reaffirmed the imperative to continue to deliver services in accordance with humanitarian principles. Despite an assurance from the Government to facilitate humanitarian access, local Sudanese authorities continued to impose bureaucratic constraints on humanitarian organizations.

Government decree. On 25 November [S/2008/739], the Sudan transmitted to the Security Council the decision of 16 November of its Ministry of Humanitarian Affairs to extend until 31 January 2010 fast-track measures facilitating humanitarian aid.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In his December report on UNAMID deployment [S/2008/781], the Secretary-General said that in October, Government forces, supported by militia, launched operations aimed at reinforcing their positions and driving SLA-Unity forces from their areas of control. Those operations led UNAMID to identify "no go areas" for UN personnel, particularly east of Jebel Marra in Northern Darfur. In Muhajeria and surrounding areas in Southern Darfur, seven armed tribal clashes reportedly took place from 5 to 11 October pitting Ma'aliya, Messeriya and Birgid tribes against members of the Zaghawa tribe. At least 41 men and three children were killed, seven women were reportedly raped, cultivated land was burned and livestock was looted. Despite the unilateral declaration of a cessation of hostilities by the Government on 12 November (see below), aerial bombings were reportedly conducted in different locations in Northern Darfur between 12 and 15 November and in Western Darfur on 17 November. On 16 November, Government troops were ambushed in the Graida area in Southern Darfur. On the same day, Government police forces came under gunfire while conducting routine patrols between the cities of Buram and Joghana, resulting in the death of two officers. UNAMID investigated reports of aerial attacks by the Government carried out on 21 and 22 November in Abu Dangel, Southern Darfur, and confirmed the presence of unexploded ordnance. In addition to conducting its mandated tasks, UNAMID was implementing a security enhancement plan designed to mitigate security risks to staff. The Darfur Integrated Security Task Force, created following the incident of 25 August at Kalma camp, met for the first time on 26 November in Khartoum. UNAMID and the Government agreed to hold regular monthly meetings, starting in January 2009.

The Sudan People's Forum (SPF) was launched by President Al-Bashir in October. It was attended by senior leaders of all main political parties, with the exception of the Popular Congress Party and the Sudan Communist Party, and included representatives from Darfur, with the exception of Darfur armed movements. Among the issues discussed were security, power-sharing and wealth-sharing. The Forum concluded on 12 November with the President's announcement of an immediate unilateral ceasefire subject to the establishment of a ceasefire-monitoring mechanism, as well as a programme for disarming militia groups and a community police service for IDP camps. The President agreed in principle to compensation for the victims of the conflict. He also agreed to end hostile propaganda and to discuss with the people of Darfur an increase in the number of states in Darfur from the current three. The issues of a single Darfur region and a Vice-President for Darfur were deferred. Some armed movements, including JEM, rejected the SPF conclusions, including the unilateral ceasefire.

The Joint Chief Mediator conducted extensive consultations with the parties. The Government and the rebel movements pledged to work closely with him on a framework agreement that would encompass the timing, venue, format and agenda for talks, as well as a commitment to a cessation of hostilities. In October and November, the Joint Chief Mediator also met with other stakeholders, including the Government of Qatar and the countries of the region. On 15 November, he briefed the AU Peace and Security Council, stressing the importance of improved relations between Chad and the Sudan. The Chief Mediator emphasized the need for all Member States to influence the parties to move towards a solution to the conflict. On 10 October, a joint delegation of Qatar, the AU and the League of Arab States (LAS) visited Darfur to discuss the possibility of peace talks in Doha, Qatar.

On 13 October, SAF and SLA-Minni Minawi signed a memorandum of understanding on political and military coordination in El Fasher. Referred to as the El Fasher Declaration, the memorandum outlined joint activities with a view to looking into possible compensation for the deaths and damage resulting from the hostilities in East Jebel Marra; coordinating security arrangements in Darfur; encouraging and protecting trade and humanitarian access; and bringing non-signatories of the Darfur Peace Agreement into the political process. In line with the memorandum, President Al-Bashir issued a decree incorporating the Peace Agreement into the interim Constitution, which was to be finalized and submitted for adoption by the National Assembly.

UNAMID continued to operate in a phase IV security environment, characterized by high levels of banditry, carjacking, military engagements and deadly attacks on UNAMID forces. In an attack on 29 October, a UNAMID peacekeeper was killed and another injured while guarding a water-point near the Kassab IDP camp in Kutum, Northern Darfur. On 9 November, one peacekeeper was injured and a vehicle was taken in an ambush of a UNAMID convoy. UNAMID continued to provide a round-the-clock presence near the Kalma IDP camp and established a mission-wide integrated approach to IDP protection. The Operation approved 56 quick-impact projects totalling $1.2 million. It continued to face some restrictions on its freedom of movement. On 24 October, a Government patrol stopped a UNAMID patrol in El Geneina and subsequently ordered UNAMID to stop conducting night patrols in the town.

As at 30 November, the strength of UNAMID uniformed personnel stood at 12,482, including 9,941 military and 2,541 police personnel. The number of civilian personnel totalled 2,962, or 53 per cent of full capacity, consisting of 770 international staff, 1,933 national staff and 259 United Nations Volunteers (UNVs). Since 1 January, 58 staff had left UNAMID through resignations, reassignments and expiration of appointments, and 98 selected candidates had rejected recruitment offers. A total of 1,363 military and police personnel arrived in Darfur in October and November. In mid-October, 325 members of the Bangladeshi multirole logistics unit arrived in Nyala. In mid-November, 148 members of the Egyptian transport unit also arrived in Nyala. In Northern Darfur, 490 personnel of the first Egyptian battalion were deployed to Um Kadada in late November. Two formed police units, consisting of 140 personnel each from Nepal and Indonesia, arrived in October and were deployed to Nyala and El Fasher, respectively. The rotation of the 10 former AMIS infantry battalions would be completed in January 2009. Of those battalions, two were deployed at the UN standard strength of 800 personnel, six would reach UN standard strength by the end of December and two would be upgraded to standard strength in early 2009. With the deployment of additional IL-76 aircraft, it was anticipated that UNAMID would clear the backlog of contingent-owned equipment at the logistics base in El Obeid by January 2009. DFS and UNAMID were deploying additional L100-class aircraft to speed up the delivery of contingent-owned equipment to the airfield in El Geneina. Engineering work for the Nyala supercamp was scheduled to be completed by the end of 2008, and the El Fasher and El Geneina supercamps were scheduled to be completed by the end of January 2009.

At the second meeting of the Tripartite Committee (Khartoum, 16 November) [S/2008/714], UNAMID informed the Government that the four tactical helicopters pledged by Ethiopia might be deployed sooner than previously anticipated. The Government agreed to work with UNAMID to put in place any interim arrangements and undertake any preparation required for the deployment of the helicopters. It also agreed to meet with UNAMID to discuss the allocation of a frequency for a UN broadcast radio system for Darfur.

The Secretary-General observed that the Operation continued to face enormous challenges. Pledges for a multirole logistics unit, a medium transport unit, a heavy transport unit, an aerial reconnaissance unit, light tactical helicopters and 18 medium-utility helicopters were still outstanding. He appealed again to those in a position to provide mission-critical capabilities to do so. He welcomed President Al-Bashir's unilateral declaration of a cessation of hostilities, but was disappointed that military activity by the Government continued. He called on all parties to use restraint and renew their commitment to an immediate and unconditional cessation of hostilities. He welcomed the Government's extension of the joint communiqué on humanitarian access and urged it to do more to ensure that the agreements were fulfilled. He called on the Government to comply with its obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law, particularly with regard to civilians. Regarding the application of 14 July by the ICC Prosecutor for an arrest warrant against President Al-Bashir (see p. 259), the Secretary-General said that the United Nations respected the independence of the Court and its judicial process, and stressed the importance of full compliance by all parties with the Court's actions.

Year-end developments. In a later report on UNAMID deployment [S/2009/83], the Secretary-General described the security and humanitarian situation in Darfur in December. The Government reported that two large columns of JEM rebels crossed the border from Chad into Northern Darfur on 11 December, precipitating SAF troop reinforcements and aerial bombardments of strategic locations intended to avert a JEM offensive into Southern Darfur and beyond. Tribal fighting remained a key destabilizing factor in Southern Darfur. On 4 December, 20 Fallata men were allegedly killed by Habbaniya tribesmen in Al-Tomat. On 11 December, 28 members of the Habbaniya tribe were reportedly killed when approximately 700 armed men from the Salamat and Fallata tribes launched a counter-attack on Wad Hagam in Southern Darfur. On 25 December, 150 armed men believed to be from the Salamat and Fallata tribes attacked the Habbaniya and Abu Darak nomadic communities in Wad Hagam; five civilians were reportedly killed during the attack. From 25

December, UNAMID provided support to the reconciliation conference between the tribes initiated by local government. Clashes between the North Gimir and South Gimir tribes in Antakina village, Southern Darfur, between 6 and 8 December resulted in the death of approximately 20 people. The clashes arose from long-standing disputes over land jurisdiction and local authority between the groups.

In Zalingei, Western Darfur, tension increased between armed nomads and IDPs around the Hassa Hissa IDP camp. On 1 December, two internally displaced persons were shot and injured by an armed nomad, who was then beaten by IDPs and killed. The reaction of armed nomads resulted in the shooting of three IDPs, including one child, on 2 December. The rapid deployment of UNAMID and SAF, and close cooperation between UNAMID and the local authorities, contributed to the resolution of the conflict and prevented its further escalation. Incidents involving unexploded ordnance injured two children in Gokar, Western Darfur, on 14 December; and killed one child and injured two others in Kera, Northern Darfur, on 16 December.

In 2008, some 317,000 people were displaced in Darfur, compared with 300,000 in 2007, bringing the total number of displaced individuals in Darfur above 2.7 million. As a result of continued violence, humanitarian organizations had to rely increasingly on air assets; restrictions on air operations, however, prevented the free movement of life-saving assistance. The number of attacks on humanitarian aid workers nearly doubled in 2008 compared with the previous year: 277 humanitarian vehicles were hijacked, compared with 137 in 2007; 218 humanitarian personnel were abducted, compared with 147 in 2007; 192 humanitarian premises were attacked, compared with 93 in 2007; and 36 staff members were wounded, compared with 24 the previous year. In 2008, 11 UNAMID staff members were killed and four remained missing. On 27 December, a UNAMID staff member lost his life due to injuries sustained during a car-jacking incident in El Fasher. The Secretary-General reported that, despite enormous difficulties, including the volatile security situation, UNAMID reached the goal of 60 per cent of military deployment on 31 December.

Activities of ICC Prosecutor

Briefing by ICC Prosecutor (June). In his briefing to the Security Council on 5 June [meeting 5905], the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court (icc), Luis Moreno-Ocampo, said that three years after the Security Council, by resolution 1593(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 324], referred the Darfur situation to the Court, massive crimes were still being committed in Darfur. The Prosecutor had collected compelling evidence that would identify those most responsible for crimes against civilians in Darfur, and would present a second case to the ICC judges in July. Despite claims by the Sudan that it would investigate and prosecute perpetrators, the Office of the Prosecutor found no trace of Sudanese proceedings in relation to crimes in Darfur over the previous three years. Although the Sudan had the legal obligation and the ability to arrest and surrender Ahmad Harun and Ali Kushayb, for whom ICC in 2007 issued arrest warrants for crimes against humanity and war crimes [YUN 2007, p. 259], the Government did not recognize the Court's jurisdiction and was not complying with resolution 1593(2005). Mr. Harun was attacking people in IDP camps; as Minister of State for Humanitarian Affairs, he was hindering humanitarian aid; and as a member of the UNAMID oversight committee, he was affecting the deployment and safety of peacekeepers. The Council had to make clear that the two fugitive indictees and those who protected them would not benefit from leniency from the international community. In a new investigation, the Prosecutor's Office collected evidence showing a pattern of attacks against civilians, particularly the 2.5 million forcibly displaced into camps. Evidence showed an organized campaign by Sudanese officials to attack civilians, with the objective of destroying entire communities. In IDP camps, crimes and insecurity were organized. Instead of being disarmed, Janjaweed militias were integrated into the Sudanese security apparatus and stationed near camps, where rapes of women and usurpation of land was systematic. Sudanese officials were facilitating the settlement of groups affiliated with Janjaweed militias on Fur, Masalit and Zaghawa land. The evidence showed that the commission of crimes on such a scale throughout Darfur over a five-year period required the sustained mobilization of the entire Sudanese State apparatus. A third investigation into crimes committed against peacekeepers and aid workers focused on the 2007 attacks on AMIS peacekeepers in Haskanita, Southern Darfur [ibid., p. 255]. In July, the Prosecutor would present to the ICC judges his evidence on those most responsible for the crimes committed in Darfur. He asked the Security Council to issue a presidential statement requesting the Government to stop the crimes, to arrest Messrs. Harun and Kushayb, and to comply with resolution 1593(2005).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 June [meeting 5912], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/21 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council takes note of the seventh briefing by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court on 5 June 2008 pursuant to resolution 1593(2005).

The Council recalls its decision, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, taken in resolution 1593(2005), that the Government of the Sudan and all other parties to the conflict in Darfur shall cooperate fully with and provide any necessary assistance to the International Criminal Court and the Prosecutor pursuant to that resolution, while stressing the principle of complementarity of the Court.

The Council takes note of the efforts made by the Prosecutor to bring to justice the perpetrators of war crimes and crimes against humanity in Darfur and, in particular, notes the follow-up by the Court with the Government of the Sudan, including the transmittal by the Registry of the Court to the Government of the Sudan of arrest warrants on 16 June 2007 and the opening by the Prosecutor of other investigations on crimes committed by various parties in Darfur.

In this respect, the Council urges the Government of the Sudan and all other parties to the conflict in Darfur to cooperate fully with the Court, consistent with resolution 1593(2005), in order to put an end to impunity for the crimes committed in Darfur.

Application for arrest warrant. The Secretary-General reported on 23 July [S/2008/485] that on 14 July, the ICC Prosecutor requested that the Court issue an arrest warrant for President Al-Bashir on charges of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes under the Statute of the Court. The request would be reviewed by the Court's Pretrial Chamber.

On 16 July, President Al-Bashir tasked a committee chaired by First Vice-President Salva Kiir to develop the Sudan's diplomatic and legal position on the crisis. A Special Prosecutor was appointed by the Ministry of Justice on 3 August to investigate allegations of human rights abuses committed in Darfur since 2003. Also in August, the President launched the Sudan People's Initiative, which sought to form a national position on resolving the Darfur crisis by reaching out to all political parties. The Government assured the United Nations that it would continue to cooperate with both UNMIS and UNAMID. However, senior Government officials issued public warnings of possible serious consequences for UNMIS if the President was indicted; the Secretary-General and his Special Representative received similar warnings directly. The United Nations reiterated to the Government that it would respect the independence of the judicial process and that UNMIS would remain committed to implementing its mandate in support of the peace process.

Communications. In a letter of 14 July [S/2008/465] to the Security Council, the AU forwarded a decision adopted by the eleventh ordinary session of the AU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, 30 June–1 July) on the report of the Commission on the Abuse of the Principle of Universal Jurisdiction. The Assembly resolved, among other things, that the abuse of the principle of universal jurisdiction could endanger international law, order and security; the political nature and abuse of the principle by judges from some non-African States against African leaders, particularly Rwanda, was a violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of those States; the misuse of indictments against African leaders had a destabilizing effect; and such warrants should not be executed in AU member States. It requested the AU Chairperson to present the matter to the Security Council and General Assembly for consideration, and asked UN Member States to impose a moratorium on the execution of warrants until all related legal and political issues were fully discussed between the AU, the European Union (EU) and the United Nations.

On 16 July, the National Assembly of the Sudan adopted two resolutions that were transmitted to the Security Council on 24 July [S/2008/488]: resolution No. 1, by which the Assembly rejected the indictment by the ICC Prosecutor against Sudanese senior officials, including the President; and resolution No. 2, by which it rejected the ratification of the 1998 Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court establishing the Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209] and the Sudan's signing of the Statute in 2000.

An extraordinary session of the LAS Council (Cairo, Egypt, 19 July) adopted a resolution concerning the ICC Prosecutor's application for an arrest warrant for President Al-Bashir. In the resolution, which was transmitted to the Security Council on 25 July [S/2008/505], the LAS Council affirmed its respect for the sovereignty of the Sudan and the competence and independence of its judiciary. It rejected the "unbalanced position" of the ICC Prosecutor and any attempt to politicize the principles of international justice and use them to diminish the sovereignty, unity, security, stability or national symbols of States. The UN Security Council was asked to not allow any party, operation or process the opportunity to undermine efforts to resolve the Darfur crisis by political means or create a climate of instability in the Sudan.

On 21 July [S/2008/481], the AU forwarded to the Security Council a communiqué adopted by the one hundred and forty-second meeting of the AU Peace and Security Council, held the same day in Addis Ababa, in relation to the ICC Prosecutor's application. The Peace and Security Council expressed its conviction that approval of the application by the Court's Pre-Trial Chamber could undermine ongoing efforts to resolve the Darfur conflict and promote peace and reconciliation in the Sudan, and might lead to further suffering for the people of the Sudan and greater destabilization, with far-reaching consequences for the country and the region. It requested the UN Security Council, in accordance with article 16 of the Rome Statute, to defer the process initiated by ICC. The Peace and Security Council invited the AU Commission to set up an independent, high-level panel, composed of distinguished Africans, to examine the situation and make recommendations to the Council on how to address the issues of accountability and impunity, as well as reconciliation. It urged the Government of the Sudan to investigate human rights violations in Darfur and bring perpetrators to justice. The Peace and Security Council extended the UNAMID mandate for a further 12-month period and requested the UN Security Council to do the same (see p. 252). It also urged the Government to extend unreserved cooperation to UNAMID and the international community to provide the necessary support for the Operation. The Peace and Security Council expressed its support to the Joint AU-UN Chief Mediator and urged all Sudanese parties to cooperate with him.

On the same date, the Sudanese Minister of Justice, Abdulbasit Sabdarat, made a statement before the AU Peace and Security Council in connection with the application of 14 July; the statement was transmitted to the Secretary-General and the Security Council in identical letters of 29 July [S/2008/500]. The Minister said that the application for the arrest warrant was based on false pretences and hearsay, and was politically motivated and unjustified. The accusations against the President undermined, pre-empted and endangered the efforts of the AU, the United Nations and the Sudanese Government to resolve the Darfur conflict and implement the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and the 2006 Eastern Sudan Peace Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 264]. The Prosecutor had compromised the principles of international law, including the principle of complementarity enshrined in the Rome Statute, and his actions represented a flagrant intervention into the internal affairs of the Sudan. The Government asked the Peace and Security Council to condemn and reject the application of 14 July and the unfounded accusations made by the ICC Prosecutor; reaffirm the decision of the eleventh ordinary session of the AU Assembly of Heads of State and Government (see above); and call on the UN Security Council to halt the process before ICC and give full effect to the principle of complementarity.

In a letter of 22 July to the Security Council [S/2008/483], Uganda, on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) Group in New York, stated that OIC was concerned about the effect of the Chief Prosecutor's request on the peace and reconciliation efforts in the Sudan. The action to indict President Al-Bashir would adversely affect the ongoing peace initiatives, including Security Council resolution 1769(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 251], by which UNAMID was established, and would complicate the implementation of the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement [YUN 2005, p. 301] in Southern Sudan and the stabilization of Darfur. OIC therefore sought the intervention of the Security Council under article 16 of the Rome Statute to defer any possible indictment against President Al-Bashir.

On 5 August, Senegal transmitted to the Security Council [S/2008/525] and to the Secretary-General and the General Assembly [A/63/230] the final communiqué of the emergency expanded ministerial meeting of the OIC Executive Committee (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 4 August), which discussed the ICC Prosecutor's attempt to seek the indictment of President Al-Bashir. The meeting expressed its solidarity with the Sudan under President Al-Bashir's leadership and considered the Prosecutor's application for indictment unwarranted and unacceptable. It urged the Security Council to suspend the application indefinitely, and called on OIC member States and the international community to intensify their engagement for peacebuilding efforts in Darfur and to reinforce UNAMID.

On 18 August [S/2008/559], LAS transmitted to the Security Council a package of measures aimed at finding a political settlement of the Darfur issue. The package, which was agreed to between the Government of the Sudan and the LAS Secretary-General in Khartoum on 21 July, stated that efforts to implement the political solution initiative of the Sudanese national forces had to be reactivated. The role of UNAMID should be enhanced and its mandated duty of protecting civilians should be facilitated. The package stated that the Sudanese judiciary should continue to consider criminal cases on the basis of investigations by existing or future judicial committees. The Government affirmed its commitment to dealing with the remnants of conflict in Darfur in accordance with the law. Under the package, the Security Council would halt the proceedings taken under resolution 1593(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 324], by which it referred the situation in Darfur since 1 July 2002 to the ICC Prosecutor.

On 15 October [S/2008/656], Lebanon, in its capacity as Chairman of the Arab Group, and on behalf of LAS, transmitted to the Security Council the resolution adopted by the Special Session of the LAS Council of Ministers of Justice (Cairo, Egypt, 12 October) regarding the ICC Prosecutor's application. The Council of Ministers maintained that the application had no sound legal basis. It rejected any attempt to politicize the principles of international justice, as well as double standards in the application of legal principles derived from international law.

A letter of 13 November [S/2008/713] contained five decisions issued by the Sudanese Minister of Justice regarding the legal process concerning Darfur. By a decision of 3 August, General Counsel Nimr Ibrahim Muhammad was appointed Special Prosecutor for the crimes committed in Darfur beginning in 2003; three Senior Counsels were appointed to a committee to assist him. By decisions Nos. 20, 21 and 22 of 16 September, Committees of the Wise to assist the Special Prosecutor were established in Southern, Northern and Western Darfur states, respectively. By decision No. 23 of 16 September, a 12-member High-level National Committee to assist the Special Prosecutor was established.

Briefing by ICC Prosecutor (December). Briefing the Security Council on 3 December [meeting 6028], the ICC Prosecutor discussed, among other matters, his request for an arrest warrant against President Al-Bashir. The evidence showed that in March 2003, President Al-Bashir ordered attacks against the Fur, Masalit and Zaghawa ethnic groups and triggered attacks in villages and IDP camps; at least 35,000 people were killed, and thousands of women and girls were raped. The 2.5 million people in camps were being subjected to living conditions calculated to bring about their destruction. In response to the application, Presidential Adviser Bona Malwal said on 25 July that with the indictment of President Al-Bashir, the Government could not be responsible for the well-being of foreign forces in Darfur; other officials, including the President, made statements threatening the victims and against the men and women deployed under the authority of the Council. The Prosecutor said that such threats should be seen as a confirmation of criminal intentions.

On 20 November, the Prosecutor said, he had presented to ICC Pre-Trial Chamber I the case against three rebel commanders allegedly responsible for the war crime of directing attacks against AMIS peacekeepers in Haskanita, Southern Darfur, in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 255], which killed 12 peacekeepers. In response to the application, five rebel groups stated that they were ready to collaborate with ICC and hand over any member requested by the Court. The Government, however, had not heeded the Council President's statement S/PRST/2008/21 of 16 June (see p. 259). Genocide and rape in and around IDP camps continued, villages continued to be bombed, humanitarian assistance was still hindered, and more than 5,000 displaced persons died each month. On 10 September, the Office of the Prosecutor sent a letter to the Government requesting information on national investigations or prosecutions planned or under way concerning the attacks of 25 August on the Kalma IDP camp, but no response was received. On 7 October, President Al-Bashir publicly stated that mass rape did not exist. A Government report of 17 September circulated to the AU and the United Nations confirmed that there had been no national proceedings in the Sudan in relation to the crimes being investigated by the Court. Over the previous five years, the Sudan tried and completed only seven cases. Mr. Harun, for whom an arrest warrant was issued in 2007 [YUN

2007, p. 259], continued to hold the post of Minister of State for Humanitarian Affairs, in charge of the people he had displaced; President Al-Bashir publicly declared that he would not hand over the Minister to ICC because Mr. Harun was implementing his instructions.

The Prosecutor stated that so-called suspected ICC witnesses were being arrested and tried for treason. President Al-Bashir continued to implement his plan to destroy entire ethnic groups, and his criminal behaviour included providing immunity and concealing crimes. He was using the diplomatic apparatus to campaign against ICC, and was trying to convince organizations and the Security Council that they had to protect him. If the ICC judges decided to issue an arrest warrant against President Al-Bashir, united and consistent action would be needed to ensure the execution of the warrant. The President's criminal actions should not be ignored, and the international community could not be part of any cover-up of genocide or crimes against humanity.

Following the Prosecutor's briefing, South Africa said that in light of the steps being taken by the AU, as described in the communiqué of 21 July of the AU Peace and Security Council, and others to ensure that peace and justice were mutually reinforcing in Darfur, it continued to hope that the Security Council would take the necessary time to discuss and decide on deferment of the potential case against President Al-Bashir under article 16 of the Rome Statute. It reaffirmed the appeal expressed in presidential statement S/PRST/2008/21 that all parties to the Darfur conflict cooperate fully with ICC. South Africa also asked whether Security Council discussion of article 16 as it applied to the case would be understood as an attempt by the Council to protect those involved or cover up what was happening in the Sudan. The Prosecutor responded to South Africa by providing further details about his investigation of the crimes committed in Darfur.

Sanctions

The Security Council, by resolution 1556(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 240], imposed an arms embargo on all non-governmental entities and individuals, including the Janjaweed, operating in Darfur. By resolution 1591(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 319], the Council imposed a travel ban and assets freeze, and established a Committee to oversee implementation of the sanctions against individuals to be designated by the Committee. The Secretary-General was requested to appoint a Panel of Experts for six months to assist the work of the Council and the Committee. The Panel of Experts, established in June 2005 [ibid., p. 322], was mandated to assist the Committee in monitoring implementation of the arms embargo and sanctions; make recommendations to the Committee on possible Council actions; and provide information on individuals who impeded the peace process, committed violations of international law, or were responsible for offensive military overflights.

Appointment. On 28 January [S/2008/48], the Secretary-General appointed a fifth expert to serve on the Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1591(2005) until 15 October. The four other members of the Panel were appointed in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 262].

Extension of Panel of Experts. On 15 October, by resolution 1841(2008) (see below), the Security Council extended until 15 October 2009 the mandate of the Panel of Experts and requested it to submit during 2009 an interim report and a final report with its findings and recommendations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 October [meeting 5996], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1841(2008). The draft [S/2008/648] was submitted by the United States.

ment has not been fully implemented by the signatories and has not been signed by all parties to the conflict in Darfur,

1. Decides to extend until 15 October 2009 the mandate of the current Panel of Experts, originally appointed pursuant to resolution 1591(2005) and previously extended by resolutions 1651(2005), 1665(2006), 1713(2006) and 1779(2007), and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures;

2. Requests the Panel of Experts to provide, no later than 29 March 2009, a midterm briefing on its work and, no later than ninety days after the adoption of the present resolution, an interim report to the Security Council Committee established pursuant to paragraph 3 (a) of resolution 1591(2005), and a final report no later than thirty days prior to the termination of its mandate to the Security Council, with its findings and recommendations;

3. Also requests the Panel of Experts to coordinate its activities, as appropriate, with the operations of the African Union United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) and with international efforts to promote the political process in Darfur, and to assess in its interim and final reports progress towards reducing violations by all parties of the measures imposed by paragraphs 7 and 8 of resolution 1556(2004) and paragraph 7 of resolution 1591(2005) and progress towards reducing impediments to the political process, threats to stability in Darfur and the region and other violations of the above mentioned resolutions;

4. Urges all States, relevant United Nations bodies, the African Union and other interested parties to cooperate fully with the Committee and the Panel of Experts, in particular by supplying any information at their disposal on the implementation of the measures imposed by resolutions 1556(2004) and 1591(2005);

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Panel of Experts. On 7 November [S/2008/647], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1591(2005) transmitted to the Council the final report of the Panel of Experts on the Sudan, in response to Security Council resolution 1779(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 261]. The report, which was presented to the Committee on 10 October, contained the Panel's findings and recommendations for the period from 28 September 2007 to 19 September 2008. The Panel noted that flagrant violations of the arms embargo by all Darfur parties continued, allowing both the Government and the armed groups to conduct offensive military operations inside and outside Darfur. Attempts to bring the warring parties to the negotiating table or to broker ceasefires had failed. The Darfur armed groups had further fragmented and insecurity had increased. Offensive military overflights continued with impunity and both the major armed groups and the Sudanese army continued to carry out attacks. The replacement of AMIS peacekeeping forces with the new UNAMID force did not produce the security dividends expected. Ten months into its deployment, UNAMID proved incapable of defending itself or the civilian population, and it could not fulfil its obligations to monitor the arms embargo.

Within the context of continued violations of the embargo, the Darfur conflict expanded into the wider region. Armed groups from Darfur reached the capitals of both Chad and the Sudan, and a proxy war was being carried out between the Sudan and Chad through non-State actors in and around Darfur. Opposition groups were armed on their respective territories with the support and encouragement of the two Governments and their respective military and intelligence branches. Arms and military materiel delivered to Chad and the Sudan outside of the provisions of the embargo were diverted into Darfur and fuelled the conflict. The consequences of the violations and regional escalation of the conflict most acutely affected the civilian population. Humanitarian access continued to decrease across the three Darfur states as insecurity increased. Violations of international human rights and humanitarian law continued and violators operated in a culture of impunity. The civilian population displaced into refugee and IDP camps as a result of the conflict continued to grow, and attacks escalated in the camps themselves.

In its recommendations, the Panel reiterated its 2006 recommendation [YUN 2006, p. 294] that the Security Council expand the arms embargo to all of the Sudan, and that it also include Chad and northern parts of the Central African Republic. Monitoring should be carried out at airports, seaports and road links throughout the territory subject to an extended embargo comprising additional territory in Chad and the Central African Republic. Limitations imposed by the Sudan on the access of UNMIS, UNAMID and the Panel of Experts to material, including flight logs, should be removed, and the system should allow for unanticipated cargo spot checks. Arms embargo monitoring should be incorporated within UNAMID, UNMIS, the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) and the European Union-led military force in Chad and the Central African Republic (EUFOR); dedicated arms embargo cells should be created within those missions; and cooperation mechanisms among the missions should be created for embargo monitoring and verification. The Panel reiterated its recommendation that countries trading military goods and services with the Sudan implement a requirement for end-use certification, and recommended the voluntary cessation of sales of arms and related materiel to the Sudan where it could be proven that the end use of previous deliveries had violated the embargo. It also recommended imposing targeted sanctions on SAF and Ministry of Defence leaders when military equipment supplied with end-user certification was proven to have been used in Darfur. The Sudan should be required to remove from the region all identified post-embargo military equipment, weapons and munitions, and aircraft transported into Darfur in violation of the embargo. The Council should enhance the Panel's capacity to conduct in-depth investigations into violations of an extended embargo and to liaise with regional peacekeeping missions.

Appointment. On 26 November [S/2008/743], the Secretary-General appointed five persons to serve on the Panel of Experts until 15 October 2009.

Report of Sanctions Committee. On 31 December [S/2008/840], the Sanctions Committee Chairman transmitted to the Security Council a report on activities in 2008. The Committee held eight informal consultations and submitted four reports to the Council. It received no additional replies from Member States on steps taken to implement the sanctions; thus, the total number of replies received remained 13. During its informal consultations on 10 October, the Committee discussed with members of the Panel of Experts the findings and recommendations contained in the Panel's final report under resolution 1779(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 260] and agreed to implement some of the recommendations or elements thereof. On 20 November, the Chairman sent a letter to the Sudan concerning arms embargo notification and compliance; offensive military overflights; Government aircraft that could be confused with aircraft owned by international organizations, including the United Nations; the Panel's work on the ground; and the travel ban and assets freeze. The Government responded on 22 December.

UNAMID

The African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID) was established in 2007 by Security Council resolution 1769(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 251] as the first AU-UN hybrid operation. It incorporated the African Union Mission in the Sudan (AMIS), which had been deployed in Darfur since 2004. The core mandate of UNAMID was to protect civilians, but other tasks included contributing to security for humanitarian assistance, monitoring the implementation of agreements, assisting the political process, promoting human rights and the rule of law, and monitoring the situation along the Sudan's borders with Chad and the Central African Republic. UNAMID deployment continued to be hindered by a deteriorating security situation, poor transportation infrastructure within the Sudan, and a range of diplomatic and political issues. The Operation lacked a number of key assets, including transport units, aircraft and, in some cases, basic accommodations. As at 31 December, UNAMID strength stood at 12,369 military personnel—63 per cent of the authorized total—and 2,767 police. In July, the Security Council, by resolution 1828(2008), extended the UNAMID mandate for a further 12-month period ending on 31 July 2009 (see p. 252).

Financing

In April [A/62/791 & Corr.1, 2], the Secretary-General submitted the proposed UNAMID budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, amounting to $1,699,710,000. The budget provided for the deployment of 240 military observers, 19,315 military contingent personnel, 3,772 UN police officers, 2,660 formed police unit personnel, 1,554 international staff and 3,455 national staff. In May [A/62/781/Add.14], ACABQ recommended that the General Assembly approve the appropriation in the amount proposed by the Secretary-General, subject to the submission of a report by the Secretary-General no later than 30 November on progress in the implementation of the budget. It also recommended assessment of $849,855,000 for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2008.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/601/Add.1], adopted resolution 62/232 B without vote [agenda item 161].

In November [A/63/535], the Secretary-General submitted the UNAMID performance report for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008. The report discussed the UNAMID mandate and resource performance, and provided an analysis of variances. Expenditures for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008 totalled $1,056,478,600 gross ($1,049,786,300 net) against an apportionment of $1,275,653,700 gross ($1,264,273,500 net). The resulting unencumbered balance of $219,175,100 gross ($214,487,200

net) represented, in gross terms, 17.2 per cent of the total apportionment. The Secretary-General recommended that the General Assembly decide on the treatment of the unencumbered balance with respect to the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008 and of other income for the period ended 30 June 2008 in the amount of $6,268,100.

In a November progress report on the 2008–2009 UNAMID budget [A/63/544], the Secretary-General provided information on the status of budget implementation as at 30 September, including progress in the implementation of requests made by the General Assembly and ACABQ recommendations endorsed by the Assembly; and updated information on resource requirements, including the revised UNAMID deployment plan and projected expenditures for the period ending 30 June 2009. The projected expenditure for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 amounted to $1,499,710,000 gross. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly assess $649,855,000 for the maintenance of the Operation for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2009, in addition to the amount of $849,855,000 assessed for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2008 under Assembly resolution 62/232 B (see above).

ACABQ, in a December report [A/63/606 & Corr.1], set out recommendations that would entail a reduction of $100 million in the amount to be assessed on Member States for the maintenance of UNAMID for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2009. Accordingly, it recommended that the Assembly assess $549,855,000 for the maintenance of the Operation for that period. With regard to UNAMID financing for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008, ACABQ recommended that the unencumbered balance of $219,175,100 and other income/adjustments in the amount of $6,268,100 be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the Assembly.

Chad–Sudan

In a press statement of 7 January [SC/9221], the Security Council expressed its concern at the recent upsurge of activities of illegal armed groups in western Darfur and in eastern Chad, and at the resulting tension between the two countries. The Council called on the Sudan and Chad to exercise restraint and pursue dialogue and cooperation, and called on all parties in the Sudan and Chad to respect their commitments, in particular in the 2006 Tripoli Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 297], the 2007 Riyadh Agreement [YUN 2007, p. 266] and the 2007 Sirte Agreement [ibid., p. 156].

Communications (January–March). In a letter of 9 January to the Security Council [S/2008/20], the Sudan said that the President of Chad, Idriss Déby Itno, in a speech delivered on 5 January in N'Djamena, Chad, publicly declared that Chadian forces would attack positions inside the Sudan. On 6 January, the Chadian air force bombed the Sudanese villages of Juwkar and Wadi Rati 35 kilometres from Geneina, injuring seven people, five of whom later died. The Sudan described previous Chadian violations of Sudanese airspace, including those that took place on 6 and 20 October 2007; 19, 27 and 28 November 2007; 28 December 2007; and 1 January 2008. The Sudan emphasized that allowing Chad to continue its aggression would undermine efforts to resolve the question of Darfur and would jeopardize the security and peace of the entire region.

On 15 January [S/2008/21], Chad denied Sudanese allegations that sought to portray Chad as an aggressor against the Sudan, where in fact the Sudan was disregarding its commitments with respect to dialogue, peace and security, particularly those contained in the 2006 Tripoli Agreement and the 2007 Riyadh Agreement. Chad had the right to defend itself under Article 51 of the UN Charter. The Sudan had not stopped organizing and arming hostile groups in its territory to destabilize Chad, and was secretly plotting to install a compliant regime in N'Djamena prior to the deployment of the EU operation (EUFOR) there.

On 5 February [S/2008/75], Chad stated that the situation in the country could be further aggravated by new armed attacks from the Sudan aimed at overthrowing democratically established institutions. The attacks, which began on 3 February in Adé and Adré from the direction of the Sudanese border, threatened to compromise efforts to find a solution to acts of aggression against Chad.

On 5 March [S/2008/160], the Sudan stated that, on 3 March, a military jeep carrying non-African soldiers crossed the Sudanese border from Chad and opened fire on the Sudanese observer unit in the village of Umm Jaradil in Western Darfur. The observer unit returned fire, hitting the vehicle; the people on board fled on foot into Chadian territory. Later, three other jeeps supported by a military helicopter arrived from Chad. A soldier and a number of civilians were wounded in the ensuing confrontation with the Sudanese military unit.

Dakar Agreement. On 13 March, President Déby of Chad and President Al-Bashir of the Sudan, under the auspices of President Abdoulaye Wade of Senegal, signed an agreement in Dakar, Senegal, in which they committed to ending the differences between the two countries, normalizing relations and helping to achieve peace and stability in their countries and the region. The parties also agreed to form a Contact Group under the joint chairmanship of the Congo, Eritrea and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to follow up on and implement the provisions of the Agreement and monitor any breaches. On 14 March [SG/SM/11464], the Secretary-General commended the Governments of Chad and the Sudan on the Agreement and called on the two countries to remain steadfast in their resolve to restore peace and stability along their shared border.

Communications (March–May). In a letter of 19 March to the Security Council [S/2008/207], the Sudan stated that on 18 March, Chad facilitated the entry of Bahr Idris Abu Girda of the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) into the Sudan from N'Djamena to engage in military and subversive operations against the Sudan. Chad was providing Sudanese rebel groups with weapons, including anti-aircraft guns, missile launchers and 500 vehicles. Chadian authorities were also coordinating various movements and groups to launch an attack, including coordination and liaison between JEM officials in Chad and Ahmad Mojan of the SLA-Unity group. The Sudan said that on 18 March, SAF members were ambushed by JEM elements travelling from Chadian territory in an area near Gradia, north-east of El Geneina in Western Darfur; a number of SAF members were wounded or killed.

On 21 March [S/2008/193], Chad categorically denied the information contained in the Sudan's letter, and regretted such disinformation, intended to undermine the implementation of the Dakar Agreement. Preparations were being made to revitalize heavily rearmed groups supported by the Janjaweed to engage again in acts to destabilize and overthrow the legitimate authorities of Chad.

On 27 March [S/2008/212 & Corr.1], the Sudan stated that Chad had violated the Dakar Agreement and previous agreements by sponsoring, between 22 and 24 March, a meeting of Darfur rebel groups in the Abu Nabaq area, 15 kilometres west of the Sudanese city of Kubus; participants included JEM head Khalil Ibrahim and Chadian General 'Abd al-Rahim Bahr. The meeting's objective was to tighten coordination between the Government of Chad and rebel movements in Darfur. On 25 March, Chad began to supply vehicles and ammunition through rebel movement leaders in the Chadian cities of Abashi and Gereida in preparation for attacks against locations in Darfur and Kordofan. In response, Chad, on 28 March [S/2008/217], expressed its indignation that the Sudan had seized upon the pretext described in the letter to reactivate its campaign of destabilization and aggression against Chad, in disregard of the Dakar Agreement.

On 31 March [S/2008/216], the Sudan stated that President Déby was personally supervising coordination with JEM in order to attack Dongola and other cities in the northern province of the Sudan. To that end, JEM received from Chad 156 vehicles, ammunition and heavy weapons, including air defence missiles. The Sudan said that plans included attacks in Western Darfur.

On 1 April [S/2008/222], Chad stated that on that day heavily equipped armed groups with allegiance to the Sudan and supported by the Janjaweed had crossed the border from the Sudan and attacked Adé in Chad. Chad said that it would be judicious to strengthen the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) to increase its security impact in the area.

On 14 April [S/2008/255], the Sudan informed the Security Council that on 12 April, a JEM force launched an attack from inside Chadian territory on the area of Jabal Kushkush, situated 5 kilometres inside Sudanese territory, with 50 vehicles, infantry and horsemen. Other groups from Chad launched a second attack the same day. Three members of the Sudanese armed forces were killed and 31 were wounded in the attacks.

On 5 May [S/2008/305], the Sudan said that Chad gave direct military aid, consisting of three large trucks loaded with military equipment, three fuel tankers and three vehicles, to JEM in Darfur. On 7 May [S/2008/308], Chad replied that the Sudan repeated baseless accusations intended to excuse action by the Sudan to destabilize Chad, which had no involvement whatsoever in any action by Darfur rebels.

Attack on Omdurman. On 10 May, JEM fighters travelling in 300 armed pickup trucks attacked Omdurman, adjacent to the Sudanese capital, Khartoum. The attack was repelled by Government forces (see p. 236). The Sudan accused Chad of supporting the JEM attack, and President Al-Bashir announced on State television that the Sudan had severed diplomatic ties with Chad. Chad issued a statement on 11 May denying any involvement.

In a letter of 11 May to the Security Council [S/2008/325], the Sudan stated that the JEM attack on Omdurman was planned, financed and carried out by Chad, using a proxy force of mercenaries and foreigners, and was irrefutable confirmation of the information that the Sudan had conveyed to the Council in previous letters.

The Sudan boycotted a meeting of the Dakar Agreement Contact Group (Tripoli, Libya, 12–13 May). Members of the group in attendance (Chad, Congo, Eritrea, Gabon, Libya, Senegal) issued a communiqué on 12 May calling on all parties to exercise restraint. The Security Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2008/15 of 13 May (see p. 237), condemned the attacks, urged all parties to cease violence and called on the States of the region to implement their commitments under the Dakar Agreement.

In a letter of 15 May [S/2008/332], Chad, referring to the Sudan's letter of 11 May, stressed that Chad was in no way implicated in the attack on Omdurman by JEM, a movement in Darfur struggling against the Government.

Communication. On 17 June [S/2008/398], Chad informed the Security Council that the Sudan had that day launched a ground and air attack on Adé and Bakout, situated near the Chad-Sudan border. Chad asked the Council to condemn the belligerent and unacceptable conduct of the Sudan and urge it to stop its aggression against Chad.

Further developments

In July [S/2008/443], the Secretary-General reported that tensions remained high along the Chad-Sudan border, particularly in the period following the attack of 10 May on Omdurman. On 13 June, forces of the Chadian Armed Opposition Groups (CAOG) seized the towns of Goz Beida and Adé in Chad, but were driven out by Chadian regular forces the following day. The efforts of the Dakar Agreement Contact Group to lessen tensions between the Sudan and Chad, as well as the work of the Chairman of the AU Commission, Jean Ping, were vital in promoting dialogue between the two countries. The group last met on 9 June in Brazzaville, Congo, and would meet again on 17 July in Dakar, Senegal.

In August [S/2008/558], the Secretary-General said that relations between Chad and the Sudan had improved. During a meeting of the Dakar Agreement Contact Group (Dakar, 17 July), it was announced that, in response to an appeal made by President Wade of Senegal, President Al-Bashir had accepted a resumption of diplomatic relations with Chad. In resolution 1828(2008) of 31 July (see p. 252), the Security Council called on Chad and the Sudan to abide by their obligations under the Dakar Agreement, the 2006 Tripoli Agreement [YUN 2006, p. 297] and subsequent bilateral agreements, including by ending support for rebel groups.

In October [S/2008/659], the Secretary-General reported that the resumption of diplomatic relations between the Sudan and Chad was announced at the 12 September meeting of the Contact Group (Asmara, Eritrea). In December [S/2008/781], he stated that Chad and the Sudan exchanged ambassadors on 9 November, and both countries sent representatives to participate in the Dakar Agreement Contact Group meeting in N'Djamena on 15 November.

Somalia

The security situation remained volatile throughout Somalia in 2008, despite some progress on the political front. In January, a UN assessment mission to Somalia outlined an approach for a comprehensive UN strategy for the country including political, security and programmatic dimensions. The Department of Peacekeeping Operations led a fact-finding mission to the region in January to update contingency plans for the possible deployment of a UN peacekeeping mission in Somalia. In February, AU Chairperson Alpha Oumar Konaré requested the United Nations to provide a support package for the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) amounting to some $817.5 million. In response, the Secretary-General's Special Representative and the country team increased political mediation and programmatic support to the Transitional Federal Government and Somali stakeholders. In May, the Special Representative initiated talks in Djibouti between the Government of Somalia and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia. On 9 June, the parties signed the Djibouti agreement on the cessation of hostilities. During a third round of talks in Djibouti on 26 October, the parties signed an agreement on the cessation of armed confrontation. On the same date, the Government and the Alliance adopted a declaration on the establishment of a unity Government and an inclusive Parliament.

Despite those positive developments, insurgent groups increased attacks on AMISOM troops in April and May, resulting in the death of peacekeepers. The acting head of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in Mogadishu was killed by unidentified gunmen on 6 July. On 29 October, suicide bomb attacks targeted the UNDP compound in Hargeysa and the town of Boosasso, killing two UN staff members and wounding six others. Meanwhile, piracy off the Somali coast greatly increased. In June, the Security Council authorized States cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government to enter Somalia's territorial waters to repress acts of piracy and armed robbery. In November, the Council imposed financial sanctions on individuals engaging in acts that threatened Somalia's peace, security and stability.

National reconciliation process and security situation

Political and security developments

AU Peace and Security Council decision. The one hundred and fifth meeting of the AU Peace and Security Council (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 18 January) issued a communiqué containing its decision on the situation in Somalia. Among other measures, the Council extended the mandate of the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM), which was authorized in 2007 by the AU Peace and Security Council [YUN 2007, p. 268] and the UN Security Council by resolution 1744(2007) [ibid., p. 269], for a further six months. It appealed to AU member States to provide the required troops and other personnel to reach the authorized strength of the Mission, as well as financial and logistical support to facilitate its deployment. The Peace and Security Council stressed the need for the deployment of a UN peacekeeping operation in Somalia that would take over AMISOM and support the long-term stabilization and post-conflict reconstruction of the country, and reiterated its appeal to the Security Council to take steps for the early deployment of such an operation. AU member States and the international community were called on to provide support to enhance the capacity of Somali institutions, including the Transitional Federal Government and its security and defence forces. The UN Security Council was urged to review the arms embargo imposed by resolution 733(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 199] in order to enable the Government to establish effective security and defence forces, while maintaining the embargo on elements aiming to undermine peace and reconciliation in Somalia.

Briefing by AU Permanent Observer. The AU Permanent Observer, Lila Ratsifandrihamanana, addressing the Security Council on 15 February [meeting 5837], said that despite constraints facing AMISOM, it continued to provide medical services and water to the population residing near its headquarters in Mogadishu, Somalia, and to receive for storage and destruction weapons surrendered by various armed elements. The AMISOM budget amounted to $622 million per year, but little more than $32 million had been contributed, mainly from China, the EU, Italy, LAS and Sweden. The United States continued to provide significant logistical support to the Ugandan contingent, as well as communications equipment for the Mission's strategic headquarters in Addis Ababa. Of 8,000 troops authorized by the AU Peace and Security Council, only two Ugandan battalions and an advance team of 192 Burundian soldiers were on the ground in Mogadishu. The AU would convene a high-level international meeting to refocus international attention on Somalia and mobilize support for the reconciliation process.

Following the Permanent Observer's briefing, Somalia urged the Council to accelerate the implementation of presidential statement S/PRST/2007/49 [YUN 2007, p. 280], in which the Council reiterated its request that the Secretary-General develop contingency plans for the possible deployment of a UN peacekeeping operation to succeed AMISOM, as set out in resolution 1772(2007) [ibid., p. 276].

Communication. In a letter of 20 February to the Secretary-General annexed to the Secretary-General's March report on the situation in Somalia (see below), the AU Chairperson, Alpha Oumar Konaré, requested that the United Nations put in place a financial, logistical and technical support package for AMISOM, amounting to some $817,500,000. The letter contained a note detailing immediate requirements that were not funded, and described the deployment situation: only three battalions out of nine authorized had deployed; the fourth was not expected to be fully deployed until the end of May. The AU was not certain that troops pledged by Ghana and Nigeria would deploy in the required time frame without a more robust Mission support package. The United Nations was requested to consider providing logistical support in procurement and project management for the upgrading of AMISOM mission headquarters to UN minimum operating safety standard criteria; establishment of a main logistics base in Mombasa, Kenya, in Djibouti, or in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, and a forward base in Mogadishu; procurement and provision of long-term fuel and ration contracts; enhancement of voice and data communications systems; establishment of a transit camp near Mogadishu airport; provision of essential AU police communications equipment, armoured vehicles and accommodation infrastructure; transportation and deployment of AMISOM troops and equipment; provision of one fixed-wing aircraft to transport personnel within the mission area and to Nairobi, Kenya; and enhancement of the AMISOM hospital to UN level II standard. As the AU administration was not resourced to cope with the operational tempo required for peacekeeping on such a large scale, the AU was seeking UN assistance in the area of mission support. Specifically, the United Nations was asked to provide staff on loan in the critical areas of Chief of Mission support, procurement, budget, finance, internal oversight, contingent-owned equipment, contract management, and a security adviser to the Head of Mission.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to presidential statement S/PRST/2001/30 [YUN 2001, p. 210], the Secretary-General in March submitted a report [S/2008/178 & Corr.1,2] on the situation in Somalia, covering developments since his previous report [YUN 2007, p. 278]. On 6 January, Prime Minister Nur Hassan Hussein announced the appointment of a new cabinet comprising 18 Ministers and 5 Deputy Ministers. Of the 18 ministerial posts, nine were selected from within Parliament. The other nine Ministers were to be selected from outside Parliament; six of those Ministers had been appointed and the remaining three were left to the opposition in exile. Following the relocation of the Government from Baidoa to Mogadishu on 20 January, the Prime Minister made public statements on his Government's willingness to restore security, uphold press freedom, and promote national reconciliation. On 10 January, Parliament endorsed the Cabinet and its proposed programme of work, which focused on reconciliation, peace and security, strengthening institutions, the Constitution and electoral issues. The Government hoped to establish a Somali State with functional governance institutions and a multiparty system. Before the end of the transition period, it intended to enact an electoral bill; set up a national census commission; establish a national electoral commission; enact a bill regulating the formation and registration of political parties; and establish a commission for the delimitation of regional, State and district boundaries. The Secretary-General's Special Representative for Somalia, Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah, focused his efforts on building greater cohesion among members of the international community involved in Somalia. The EU and other international partners, together with the UN country team and the United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), intensified efforts to strengthen coordination for international assistance to the Transitional Federal Government. A six-month start-up package worth $14 million was developed to strengthen the transitional federal institutions.

The security situation remained volatile throughout Somalia, despite significant regional variations. Criminal elements engaged in trafficking in human beings, weapons and drugs; unauthorized collection of taxes and levies; and abduction, kidnapping and extortion. In the north, the border dispute between the self-declared independent republic of Somaliland and the semi-autonomous region of Puntland remained a security concern, aggravated by kidnappings and acts of piracy, especially in Puntland. In southern and central Somalia, the Union of Islamic Courts (UIC) and other anti-Government elements continued to conduct insurgency operations in Mogadishu, Kismaayo, Baidoa and other areas, targeting mainly the Ethiopian armed forces and the forces of the Transitional Federal Government, police stations and Government authorities. The security situation in Mogadishu was characterized by coordinated attacks by anti-Government elements and an increase in Ethiopian army and Transitional Federal Government operations to eradicate those elements. Insurgents occasionally targeted AMISOM and the United Nations.

An 850-strong Burundian battalion completed its deployment in Mogadishu on 20 January. Mission strength stood at 2,613 personnel. AMISOM continued to provide security and conduct patrols for the protection of the airport, seaport and presidential palace. The AU continued to face serious constraints, particularly with regard to finance, logistics and force generation. Sweden pledged to provide the mission with a level-II hospital. Other financial support came from the EU, China, Italy, LAS and the United Kingdom. The United States and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) pledged to provide airlift facilities to troop-contributing countries, and Nigeria pledged a contribution of $2 million. The pledges, however, fell short of projected requirements. The United Nations deployed a team of military and civilian experts to AU headquarters to increase AMISOM planning and implementation capacity.

Two complementary missions to Somalia were conducted during the reporting period, and their findings were annexed to the report. A task force on Somalia, headed by the UN Department of Political Affairs (DPA), was established in New York and deployed an assessment mission to Somalia in January to develop a comprehensive UN strategy for Somalia. The task force's assessment set out the most critical factors driving the conflict and outlined an integrated, three-track approach including political, security and programmatic (humanitarian, recovery and development) dimensions that could form the basis for a strategy led by the Special Representative. It included recommendations for integrating the three tracks; strengthening the capacity of UNPOS and the UN country team; developing a viable security component; establishing a mechanism linking the United Nations, international partners and Somali authorities; relocating the UN headquarters for activities in Somalia to the country; and improving UN human rights capacity.

In accordance with presidential statement S/PRST/2007/49 [YUN 2007, p. 280] and resolution 1772(2007) [ibid., p. 276], DPKO led an interdepartmental fact-finding mission to the region (7–25 January) to consult with stakeholders and assess the security situation on the ground, with a view to updating contingency plans for the possible deployment of a UN peacekeeping operation in Somalia, and provide recommendations for further UN support to AMISOM. The mission developed four scenarios leading to the deployment of a possible UN peacekeeping operation. Under scenario 1, UN political and programmatic support to Somalia would be facilitated through a substantial relocation of UN staff from Nairobi to Somalia. The Secretary-General had requested the UN Department of Safety and Security to develop viable options to meet that objective, and the Security Council could consider establishing a maritime task force to formalize the unilateral initiatives being undertaken by individual States. Under scenario 2, UNPOS headquarters would be relocated to Mogadishu to strengthen UN political support to the peace process. Under scenario 3, an impartial stabilization force composed of an estimated 8,000 troops and police officers would be deployed to allow the withdrawal of Ethiopian forces, prevent a security vacuum and provide impetus to the political dialogue. Under scenario 4, a UN peacekeeping operation would be deployed. A force of 15 to 21 infantry battalions would be required, and the number of military personnel could total 27,000, with a police component of up to 1,500 officers.

On 10 January, the Secretary-General's Special Representative met with the leadership of the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia (ARS) in Asmara, Eritrea; ARS expressed its support for an approach that addressed the grievances of the parties to the conflict.

As a follow-up to the December 2007 briefing by the Special Representative to the Security Council [YUN 2007, p. 280], the United Kingdom facilitated a meeting on security challenges and options for Somalia (London, 9 January 2008). The meeting considered options for the strengthening of AMISOM; the deployment of a UN peacekeeping force; the possible deployment of a multinational force as a bridging mechanism between the current situation and a UN peacekeeping mission; and a political settlement without the need for an international force.

Regarding the humanitarian situation, the Secretary-General said that nearly 300,000 people had left the capital since October 2007 following an upsurge of fighting between the Transitional Federal Government and anti-Government elements. The delivery of humanitarian assistance was confronted with access and operational challenges. A major relief effort continued in a key centre of the crisis along the Mogadishu-Afgooye corridor, where 200,000 internally displaced persons lived. The effort included food distribution, the transportation of 2 million litres of clean water per day, construction of latrines, vaccination campaigns and the setting-up of schools.

The Secretary-General observed that the political situation in the country provided a unique opportunity for proactive international engagement to support domestic initiatives. The security situation, however, remained a concern, as did the dire humanitarian condition of the Somali people. He reiterated his call for the leaders of the Transitional Federal Government to implement the recommendations of the National Reconciliation Congress of 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 275], including the development of a road map for the completion of the tasks provided for in the Transitional Federal Charter [YUN 2003, pp. 247 & 248] and the implementation of the National Security and Stabilization Plan. The Secretary-General called on all parties to cease hostilities, engage in the search for peace, protect the civilian population and abstain from harming humanitarian workers and other expatriates. He called on Somalis to renounce violence and adhere to the Transitional Federal Charter.

The Secretary-General endorsed the three-track approach of the strategic assessment as the basis for UN engagement. He had asked the Department of Safety and Security, in consultation with DPKO and the Department of Field Support (DFS), to develop security options for relocating UNPOS and the country team headquarters from Nairobi to Mogadishu. In addition to AMISOM and a possible UN peacekeeping force, the international community should consider other options, including the deployment of a robust multinational force for a specific period to secure a specific area, which could pave the way for the withdrawal of foreign forces. The Secretary-General called for the establishment of a capacity within UNPOS to monitor and enhance human rights protection.

Reconciliation strategy. On 14 March, the Transitional Federal Government unveiled its reconciliation strategy, which included two components: promoting peacebuilding at the community level and proposing reconciliation between the Government and the opposition based within and outside Somalia. On 23 March, Prime Minister Hussein met with the leadership of the Hawiye Traditional and Unity Council to present a proposed strategy paper detailing the reconciliation programme and invited civil society representatives to play a role in the reconciliation process. With the exception of the Al-Shabaab group, which stated that it would not engage with the Government, the strategy was met with mostly positive reactions from other Somali stakeholders, particularly ARS. The Special Representative invited ARS leaders to engage in preliminary discussions on their role in the peace process as a prelude to face-to-face talks with the Government. In a letter of 6 May, he informed members of the Somali diaspora of his efforts to secure peace and called for their support. A high-level ARS delegation, including its Chairman, Sheikh Sharif Sheikh Ahmed, and the Chairman of its Central Committee, Sharif Hassan Sheikh Aden, met with the Special Representative and other members of the international community (Nairobi, 28 March–5 April). The delegation agreed to discuss the peace agenda advocated by the Government. It welcomed the UN facilitation role and signed a related memorandum of understanding on 4 April. Opposition leaders stressed the need for the international community to give priority to achieving sustainable peace in Somalia and recognize the responsibility to deploy a neutral force that would be accepted by Somalis. They identified the presence of Ethiopian forces in Somalia and ongoing human rights violations as key areas to be addressed by the international community. Following the meeting, ARS leaders consulted with their constituents within Somalia and abroad to secure their support for further talks with the Government.

Communication. On 23 April [S/2008/309], the Secretary-General responded to the letter of 20 February from the AU Chairperson (see p. 272) setting out the requirements for enhancing AMISOM deployment and requesting further UN support to the AU in meeting those requirements. The Secretary-General said that the United Nations firmly supported the AU view that significant progress had been made in facilitating a credible and inclusive political process, and that the international community could do more to support Somali efforts to bring lasting peace and security. The Special Representative and the UN country team were stepping up the provision of the political mediation and programmatic support necessary for the Transitional Federal Government and Somali stakeholders to engage in a viable process towards a political agreement, while building up the necessary governance and security infrastructure. Once sufficient progress was made in the political and security agreements necessary for the deployment of a UN operation, the Secretary-General would be in a position to make the appropriate recommendations to the Security Council. In the meantime, the Secretariat would continue to provide technical planning support to the AU for AMISOM deployment and to update contingency planning for such an operation. The United Nations agreed that the AU required additional international assistance to enhance AMISOM effectiveness. As requested in the letter of 20 February, the first area of UN assistance would focus on building AU capacity to address the support challenges related to the deployment and sustainment of AMISOM through the provision of additional UN technical advisers to the AMISOM planning team in Addis Ababa, particularly in the areas of procurement, finance and logistics. Attached to the Secretary-General's letter was a list of additional technical advisers that the United Nations would be ready to provide to the AU, pending budgetary approval by the General Assembly.

The second area of assistance would focus on enhancing coordination between the AU, donors and troop-contributing countries to ensure that sufficient funding and support was secured for the requirements of AMISOM and for those of troop-contributing countries. The Secretary-General suggested that the AU and the United Nations hold a high-level donor conference to highlight the needs of AMISOM and solicit additional donor contributions. He also suggested that, at the time of the conference, the two organizations establish a standing coordination mechanism to ensure the continuous updating of the AMISOM concept of operations and requirements, and develop a programme of meetings with troop-contributors and donors to follow up on outstanding requirements. The Secretary-General believed that his proposals represented the most effective way in which the United Nations could help the AU meet its challenges in supporting AMISOM.

Air strike. On 1 May, the United States launched an air strike on Dhusamareeb in the Galgaduud region, killing Sheikh Aden Hashi Ayrow, the military commander of Al-Shabaab. On 4 May, residents of Galgaduud demonstrated against the air strike and Al-Shabaab issued threats of revenge. Following the incident, aid workers were interrogated on suspicion of being spies for the United States, and the United Nations was obliged to introduce restrictions on the movement of United States citizens employed by the United Nations in Somalia.

20. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Djibouti talks (May–June). On 12 May, the Special Representative initiated a first round of talks in Djibouti between the Transitional Federal Government and ARS. On 15 May, the two sides committed to a peaceful resolution of the conflict and signed a joint declaration calling on their supporters to facilitate unhindered humanitarian access and the delivery of assistance. The ARS Chairman acknowledged Eritrea's support for ARS but accused it of attempting to divide the group. He urged the Eritrean Government to engage with the true leadership of ARS and restated the ARS call for the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops, whom he accused of violating human rights. A second round of talks began in Djibouti on 31 May, coinciding with the visit of the Security Council mission to Africa. Council members encouraged the parties to engage in credible dialogue and reiterated their readiness to support any agreement.

On 9 June, the Transitional Federal Government and ARS reached a political agreement that was initiated by both parties and provided for a cessation of hostilities for an initial 90-day period, starting 30 days from the signing of the agreement. It also provided for submission of a joint request to the Security Council to authorize and deploy, within four months, an international stabilization force from non-neighbouring friendly States. Under the agreement, the Government would act in accordance with Ethiopia's decision to withdraw its troops following the deployment of a sufficient number of UN forces; ARS would dissociate itself from any armed groups or individuals that did not adhere to the agreement; and both parties would ensure unhindered humanitarian access. The parties decided to establish, within 15 days of the signing of the agreement, a joint security committee, chaired by the United Nations, to follow up on the implementation of agreed security arrangements; and a high-level committee, also chaired by the United Nations, to address political, justice and reconciliation issues. The agreement called for the convening of a conference before the end of July to further discuss those issues, and of an international conference within the next six months to support the reconstruction and development of Somalia. While hardliners within the opposition condemned the agreement, ARS leaders reiterated their commitment to it and expressed a desire for an early withdrawal of Ethiopian troops. Prime Minister Hussein invited opposition leaders who had not participated in the Djibouti talks to join the political process.

Statement by Secretary-General. Welcoming the agreement, the Secretary-General, in a press statement of 10 June [SG/SM/11629], said that he would remain engaged through the efforts of his Special Representative, and called on the international community to provide diplomatic and financial support for the implementation of the agreement.

Security Council mission

The Security Council mission to Africa (see p. 111) briefed the Council on 18 June [meeting 5915]. In its report of 15 July [S/2008/460], the mission stated that in Djibouti for talks on Somalia (2–3 June) it received briefings by the Special Representative, Ahmedou Ould Abdallah, and the Chief Security Adviser, Jean Lausberg. It met with the President of Somalia, Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed, and the delegation of the Transitional Federal Government, including the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Ali Ahmed Jama; an AU delegation, led by the Commissioner for Peace and Security, Ramtane Lamamra; ARS, led by its Chairman, Sheikh Sharif Sheikh Ahmed; the UN country team; and members of civil society.

President Yusuf reiterated his commitment to the ongoing dialogue in Djibouti (see above) and stressed that he wanted to lead his country to peace and stability. He appealed to the Security Council to lift the arms embargo on Somalia to allow the Transitional National Government to build its security apparatus; deploy a UN peacekeeping operation to take over from AMISOM; and assist in addressing piracy. Regarding the remaining steps anticipated in the transitional road map, the President appealed for assistance in drafting a new Constitution and conducting a census in preparation for the elections, as stipulated in the Transitional Federal Charter. The mission stressed the need for political and security agreements and the appropriate conditions on the ground before any deployment of a UN peacekeeping mission. It encouraged the participation of women in the political process and stressed the importance of ending impunity, protecting human rights and ensuring unhindered access for humanitarian relief. The Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that the Government was committed to investigating any accusations of human rights abuses and prosecuting guilty parties.

The AU Commissioner for Peace and Security stressed that the situation in Somalia was a threat to international peace and security, owing to piracy, violations of the arms embargo, and the illegal exploitation and abuse of Somalia's natural resources. The mission urged the AU to work closely with the Special Representative on the political front and reach out to the parties that were not yet engaged in the Djibouti dialogue.

ARS set out the principles through which it believed the crisis could be resolved, namely, peace and restoration of Somalia's sovereignty through dialogue; the legitimate right under international law to resist occupation; the withdrawal of Ethiopian forces; peace as a unifying element; rejection of violence and terrorism; Islam as the only guarantee for peace, stability and social justice; and access to humanitarian assistance. It appealed to the Council to ensure the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops; investigate war crimes and establish a war crimes tribunal; end massacres and killings in the country, including in places of worship; and provide emergency relief assistance. The mission stressed that the only basis for withdrawal of Ethiopian troops and the deployment of a UN peacekeeping mission was a political agreement that could be presented to the international community.

The mission recommended that the Security Council continue to consider ways to support the Special Representative in his efforts to further political progress. It also recommended that it consider how best to support the agreement of 9 June between the Transitional Federal Government and ARS (see p. 278); and ways to enhance the international security presence, including the deployment of a peacekeeping operation to take over from AMISOM at an appropriate time.

Further developments

Killing of UNDP official. On 6 July, the acting head of the UNDP office in Mogadishu, Ali Osman Ahmed, was killed by unidentified gunmen as he exited a mosque. Mr. Ahmed's brother and son were among those wounded in the attack. In a press statement of 7 July [SG/SM/11685], the Secretary-General condemned the killing and encouraged all Somalis to work together towards peace and reconciliation.

The Security Council, in a press statement of 8 July [SC/9388], condemned the killing and reaffirmed the imperative to respect the safety and security of UN and humanitarian personnel. The Council called on all Somalis to prevent such attacks from occurring in the future and to work together through peaceful dialogue.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In July [S/2008/466], the Secretary-General reported that the general security situation in Somalia remained volatile. Criminal activities in southern and central areas and in Puntland increased significantly, exacerbated by weak law enforcement capacity. The authorities of Somaliland and Puntland continued to build up their military presence around the disputed area of Las Aanod. The build-up created a security vacuum elsewhere in Puntland, which, along with the lack of payments to police and militias working for the Government, led to increases in piracy along the coastline, kidnapping and threats of hostage-taking. As a result, the security level in Puntland was upgraded to phase IV. Clashes between Union of Islamic Courts (UIC) militants, Al-Shabaab and Ethiopian-backed Government forces became more frequent in and around Baidoa and along the Mogadishu-Afgooye-Baidoa highway. The absence of Government control in Beletweyne and Wajid, held by UIC, permitted banditry and criminality to thrive, leading to the relocation of all international staff. In Baidoa, five incidents involving roadside improvised explosive devices occurred in May. Following reports of the killing of 21 civilians in April, threats of retaliation were made against Ethiopian troops. On 20 May, gunmen kidnapped two Italian nationals and their Somali colleague from an Italian aid organization compound in the Lower Shabelle region. In early April, two Kenyan and two British teachers were executed by anti-Government elements in Beletweyne. Most international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) evacuated their international staff. On 7 June, a British Broadcasting Corporation reporter was killed in Kismaayo by unknown gunmen, bringing to nine the number of journalists killed since 2007.

Insurgent groups increased attacks on AMISOM troops in April and May. On 8 April, a suicide car bomb exploded at an AMISOM position in Mogadishu, killing one Burundian soldier. On 23 May, a roadside bomb exploded in Mogadishu, injuring four Ugandan peacekeepers. The AU continued to face financial, logistical and force-generation constraints in completing the deployment of AMISOM, which consisted of one Burundian and two Ugandan battalions in Mogadishu, totalling 2,650 troops. On 22 June, the AU signed an umbrella memorandum of understanding with UNOPS in Nairobi for the procurement of equipment for its future mission headquarters in Mogadishu. Italy disbursed €10 million in support of AMISOM activities involving the development of a concept of operations for the Somali police.

On 30 April, the International Contact Group on Somalia met in Oslo, Norway, to discuss the political process, as well as the security and humanitarian situations. It called on all parties to respect international humanitarian law, and agreed that the chairmanship of the group should pass to the Special Representative in order to strengthen the UN leadership role in the peace process.

On 20 May, the three political parties of Somaliland—the ruling National Democratic Union Party and the opposition Peace, Unity and Development Party and Justice and Welfare Party—and the newly established Electoral Commission agreed on dates for local and presidential elections, which would be held on 15 December 2008 and 15 March 2009, respectively. International partners, including Denmark, Norway, the United Kingdom, the United States and the EU, expressed their commitment to support democracy in Somaliland and fund the elections. Presidential and parliamentary elections in Puntland were scheduled for January 2009.

Humanitarian conditions worsened dramatically owing to the ongoing conflict, increasing food prices, a deepening drought and civil insecurity. The number of people in need of humanitarian assistance increased by 40 per cent from January, to 2.6 million, representing 35 per cent of the population. At the same time, actions against the aid community were increasing. On 17 May, the Somali head of the NGO Horn Relief was murdered in Kismaayo. Fifteen aid workers had been killed since January.

In response to resolution 1814(2008), the Secretary-General provided an update regarding the establishment of the necessary security arrangement for the relocation of UNPOS and the UN country team to Mogadishu, as recommended in his March report. The United Nations was developing the modalities for establishing an integrated planning team, which would support the work of the Integrated Task Force on Somalia and conduct an inter-agency security assessment mission to the region by the end of the third quarter of 2008. Deployment of staff to Mogadishu would require the downgrading of the security level there from phase V to phase IV. Increased UN deployment to Baidoa would be possible without a change from the current security phase IV, but would depend on the adoption of robust mitigating measures.

Extension of AMISOM authorization. The AU Peace and Security Council, meeting on 29 June, condemned in a communiqué threats and acts of violence against AMISOM. It extended the AMISOM mandate for an additional six-month period, beginning on 17 July, and decided that the mission would support the implementation of the agreement of 9 June between the Transitional Federal Government and ARS. The Peace and Security Council appealed to member States to provide the troops and other personnel required to enable AMISOM to reach its authorized strength, and reiterated its appeal for financial and logistical support to complete deployment of the Mission.

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Djibouti agreement. The Secretary-General reported [S/2008/709] significant progress in the discussions between the Transitional Federal Government and ARS towards the implementation of the agreement initialled by the two parties on 9 June. From 16 to 19 August, the parties met in Djibouti, where they endorsed the terms of reference of the High-Level Committee and the Joint Security Committee provided for in the agreement. On 19 August, the Djibouti agreement was signed in the presence of members of the international community.

The Joint Security Committee was co-chaired by the United Nations and the AU, and its meetings were attended by commanders of the security forces of the Transitional Federal Government and field commanders of ARS, whose Commander-in-Chief, Omar Hershi, led the delegation. The responsibilities of the Committee included recommending the modalities and time frame of the phased withdrawal of Ethiopian forces and implementing a cessation of armed confrontation between the Government and ARS. It was also responsible for establishing a joint force of the Government and ARS to observe, verify and monitor compliance with the agreement, facilitate humanitarian access and assistance, investigate reported breaches of the agreement and find solutions in the event of a breach. In addition, the Committee would prepare recommendations for the restructuring and reform of the Somali armed forces. It was envisaged that AMISOM, working with the joint Somali security force, would assist in the monitoring and verification of the ceasefire; bridge the gap before the deployment of an international stabilization force; provide protection for both parties; secure the main lines of communication; and build the capacity of the Somali security force, particularly the police. The leaders of the two delegations to the Committee on 18 August signed a final communiqué that called for the deployment of a UN peacekeeping force. The Committee agreed on modalities for the implementation its mandate, including: observing a ceasefire and cessation of hostilities between the Government and ARS and disengaging the parties' combatants; facilitating the deployment of a UN peacekeeping force; establishing liaison between the two parties and preventing armed confrontation; and demolishing illegal checkpoints that hindered humanitarian aid.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 4 September [meeting 5970], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/33 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the signing in Djibouti on 19 August 2008 of a peace and reconciliation agreement between the Transitional Federal Government and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia ("the Djibouti agreement"), the preliminary work undertaken by the High Level Committee and the Joint Security Committee set up under the agreement, as well as recent political developments. The Council expresses its determination that the agreement should provide the basis for lasting peace, security and stability for the people of Somalia, including the ultimate withdrawal of foreign forces. The Council commends the efforts deployed by the Transitional Federal Government and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia to this end and their commitment to peace.

The Council reaffirms its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia.

The Council extends its gratitude to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia, Mr.

Ahmedou Ould Abdallah, and to the United Nations Political Office for Somalia for mediating dialogue between the parties and garnering support for the political process. The Council further expresses its gratitude to the Government of Djibouti for hosting talks between the parties.

The Council calls upon the parties to meet all elements of the agreement in full. In particular, the Council underlines the crucial importance of the parties taking all necessary measures to ensure, without delay, unhindered humanitarian access and assistance to the Somali people, and of the parties and their allies terminating all acts of armed confrontation. The Council states its support for the implementation of the agreement and its intention to review that implementation continuously.

The Council reiterates its strong support for the African Union Mission in Somalia and again urges the international community to provide financial resources, personnel, equipment and services for the full deployment of the Mission.

The Council takes note of the parties' request in the Djibouti agreement that the United Nations, within a period of 120 days, authorize and deploy an international stabilization force. The Council further notes, in this regard, the communiqués issued by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union on 29 June, 8 August and 20 August 2008.

The Security Council, acknowledging recent positive political developments in the wake of the Djibouti agreement as confirmed by Mr. Ould Abdallah, reaffirms its willingness, as set out in its resolution 1814(2008), to consider, at an appropriate time, a United Nations peacekeeping operation to take over from the Mission, subject to progress in the political process and improvement in the security situation on the ground.

The Council recalls the Secretary-General's contingency planning for a United Nations integrated peacekeeping mission in Somalia, which recommends that plans be put in place for the deployment of an international stabilization force, within the framework of the approach presented by the Secretary-General in his report of 14 March 2008.

In this regard, the Council requests that the Secretary-General elaborate on his contingency plans and provide, in consultation with the parties and other relevant stakeholders, a detailed and consolidated description of a feasible multinational force, its mandate and derived tasks, to include, inter alia, the size and geographical scope of that force, progressively deployed, and further provide a detailed concept of operations for a feasible United Nations peacekeeping operation.

The Council further requests the Secretary-General urgently to identify and approach States that might contribute the financial resources, personnel, equipment and services required, stands ready to support the Secretary-General in this regard, and calls upon States to respond favourably.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the Djibouti agreement by the parties, including an update on the conditions on the ground, as well as on his planning, including discussions with potential contributing States, within 60 days.

Government dismissals and Addis Ababa agreement. On 29 July, Prime Minister Hussein dismissed the Mayor of Mogadishu and Governor of Benadir Region, Mohammed Dheere, on charges of mismanagement of public funds. On 2 August, 10 cabinet members allied with President Yusuf resigned in protest of the dismissal. President Yusuf subsequently reinstated the Mayor, which exacerbated tensions within the Government. On 3 August, the Prime Minister nominated five new ministers and a deputy minister to replace those who had resigned.

On 25 August, the leadership of the Transitional Federal Government—including the President, the Prime Minister and the Speaker of Parliament—met in Addis Ababa and reached an agreement under the auspices of the Ethiopian Government. The agreement provided for the reconstitution of the Benadir regional administration; the proper collection and administration of revenue; capacity-building for the Ministry of Finance and the customs, airport and seaport administrations; and the redeployment of Ethiopian troops outside the capital. A motion of no confidence against the Prime Minister was defeated in Parliament on 1 September. Members of the Transitional Federal Parliament voted on 6 September against reinstating the cabinet members who had resigned; a Parliament committee examined the issue and upheld its earlier decision not to reinstate them.

Terrorist attacks. On 29 October, five suicide bomb attacks occurred in the towns of Hargeysa and Boosasso in northern Somalia. In Hargeysa the attacks targeted the UNDP compound, the Ethiopian consulate and local government offices. Two UN staff members were killed and six others injured. The Security Council, in presidential statement S/PRST/2008/41 (see p. 68), condemned the attack in the strongest terms.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In November [S/2008/709], the Secretary-General reported on a number of political developments. The second meeting of the Joint Security Committee (Djibouti, 17–19 September), established in August through the Djibouti agreement (see p. 281), focused on planning for the implementation of the cessation of armed confrontation; the time frame and locations of the withdrawal of Ethiopian forces; and the possible formation of a joint security force. The Committee drafted a ceasefire declaration and an implementation document. The parties, however, requested more time to consult their constituencies, particularly the commanders on the ground, before signing the documents. A communiqué issued on 21 September indicated that Committee members were given 15 days to carry out consultations before proceeding with joint sessions to finalize detailed military modalities, pending the issuance of the ceasefire declaration.

The parties signed an agreement on the cessation of armed confrontation during a third round of talks (Djibouti, 26 October). Under the agreement, a ceasefire would become effective on 5 November; the relocation of Ethiopian troops from Mogadishu and Beletweyne would begin on 21 November and would be completed in accordance with the Djibouti agreement; and AMISOM forces, with the assistance of joint Somali security forces, would provide security in areas vacated by Ethiopian troops. The Joint Security Committee would operate from within Somalia by the end of November.

The Special Representative addressed the twenty-ninth Extraordinary Meeting of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) Council of Ministers on the situation in Somalia (Nairobi, 28 October). In a declaration of 29 October, IGAD urged the parties to implement the ceasefire agreement of 26 October. It requested that the Transitional Federal Government appoint a new cabinet and establish a new Benadir administration within 15 days, finalize the drafting of the Constitution and enact an electoral and political parties law. It established a facilitator to help monitor the implementation of its decisions.

In Somaliland, the authorities launched a nationwide media campaign for voter registration in preparation for the presidential elections on 29 March 2009. All registered parties reiterated their commitment to uphold the rule of law and the Constitution, and maintain peace and stability. Presidential and parliamentary elections in Puntland were scheduled for 9 January 2009.

The security situation in south-central Somalia deteriorated dramatically between July and October. The Monitoring Group on Somalia noted persistent violations of the arms embargo in an environment of general lawlessness and lack of accountability. Continuous fighting between anti-Government elements and Government-backed Ethiopian forces occurred in different locations throughout the country, resulting in a heavy loss of civilian lives. Beletweyne was evacuated by the Ethiopian armed forces as a result of discussions with ARS fighters on the ground following the signing of the Djibouti agreement. The Government did not have the capacity to defend and control the entire country, and was unable to pay salaries to the police and troops. As a result, about 40 per cent of the police officers trained by the United Nations left the police force owing to the non-payment of salaries. The international community, which had supported the Government in maintaining its security, withheld support due to allegations of human rights violations by some Government forces, as well as a lack of transparency and accountability for the funding provided. The Secretary-General said that it was essential that security institutions be strengthened through the provision of necessary resources.

The fighting increasingly threatened UN activities. Mortar attacks on airfields and roadblocks within Somalia prevented UN and NGO humanitarian workers from discharging their duties. The risk of UN staff being targeted in another major terrorist attack in the country or at the United Nations Office at Nairobi was growing. The threat of attack issued by Al-Shabaab against all flights into Mogadishu International Airport from 16 September, and the subsequent mortar attack on an aircraft at that airport, pointed to the deterioration of the security situation in Mogadishu.

In response to Security Council presidential statement S/PRST/2008/33 of 4 September (see p. 281), the Secretary-General tasked DPKO to develop the concept of a feasible international stabilization force to support the implementation of the Djibouti agreement, taking into account the presence of AMISOM. In September, a DPKO team visited Addis Ababa to develop a description of such a force jointly with the AU. It was proposed that a feasible stabilization force would be composed of a headquarters and two multinational force brigades, operating under unified command. The force's area of operations would be limited to Mogadishu. It would adopt a phased approach, in which it would be deployed to Mogadishu (Phase One); monitor and verify withdrawal of the Ethiopian armed forces from Mogadishu (Phase Two); and focus on stabilization operations in Mogadishu to create space for the Transitional Federal Government to consolidate its authority, support relocation of the United Nations to Mogadishu and facilitate the conduct of a UN technical assessment mission (Phase Three). In Phase Four, a UN peacekeeping operation would take over from the international stabilization force, subject to political progress and improvements in the security situation, and following a Security Council resolution. DPKO developed a list of countries that were considered to have the capacity to provide a lead contingent, troops, funding or equipment for the envisaged force. The Secretary-General sent letters to the leaders of those countries, appealing to them to take the lead role, or contribute troops, funds or equipment for the force.

In November, AMISOM consisted of two Burundian battalions and two Ugandan battalions, amounting to 3,400 troops in Mogadishu. The second Burundian battalion was deployed to Somalia between 11 and 13 October. AMISOM estimated that to reach its mandated strength, approximately $200 million would be required for 2009, excluding bilateral support to troops.

Meeting for the first time under the chairmanship of the Special Representative (Djibouti, 16 September), the International Contact Group on Somalia urged the parties to agree on measures for implementing the cessation of armed confrontation, and to allow the withdrawal of Ethiopian forces and the deployment of the stabilization force requested in the agreement. The Group expressed its support for the implementation of agreements reached in the meetings of the Committees. It condemned the continuing violence and called on all parties to cease hostilities and allow free and unhindered access for humanitarian aid. The Group urged all parties to join the political process; work through the Committees provided for in the Djibouti agreement; and agree on plans and mechanisms to support the delivery of much-needed humanitarian assistance.

Sweden hosted a preparatory meeting for an International Donor Conference on Recovery and Development for Somalia (Stockholm, Sweden, 20–21 October), as provided for in the Djibouti agreement. The Special Representative chaired the meeting, which was attended by representatives of the Transitional Federal Government, ARS and the donor community. As at 1 October, approximately $164.7 million had been mobilized for recovery and development activities across Somalia, representing 58 per cent of what was required to meet UN transition plan targets for 2008. Meanwhile, the humanitarian situation continued to deteriorate. According to a food security assessment carried out in August, the number of people in need of livelihood and humanitarian support had increased by 77 per cent, from 1.8 million to 3.2 million people since January. The humanitarian crisis was expanding to the north, where at least 350,000 persons were in need of humanitarian assistance or livelihood support.

The Secretary-General urged all Somalis to join the Djibouti process, implement it faithfully and commit unconditionally to peace. He observed that the Addis Ababa agreement of 25 August had to be implemented quickly to establish a credible and efficient administration in Mogadishu and its region.

Joint declaration. At a meeting of the High-Level Committee on 26 October, the Transitional Federal Government and ARS adopted a joint declaration on the establishment of a unity Government and inclusive Parliament, in line with the commitments made under the Djibouti agreement. In November, the High-Level Committee agreed on further modalities to enhance political cooperation, and the two parties established a working group to engage on details of the unity structures. The Joint Security Committee developed detailed proposals to strengthen the work of the High-Level Committee, particularly with regard to the implementation of the agreement on the cessation of armed confrontation, also signed on 26 October. The Joint Security Committee established a working group for the integration and realignment of the police, and agreed to develop plans for the formation of interim joint security forces and command structures. It also agreed to establish a verification and monitoring mission, with headquarters in Mogadishu, to promote a comprehensive ceasefire. Lack of financial and logistical support, however, delayed progress in all areas. In a workshop facilitated by UNDP (Nairobi, Kenya, 20–24 November), the Joint Security Committee decided to develop a 10,000-strong civilian police force under Somali law and with international standards.

Security Council consideration. Addressing the Security Council on 20 November [meeting 6020], the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Haile Menkerios, said that the withdrawal of Ethiopian forces from locations in Beletweyne and Mogadishu began on 17 November, as agreed in the cessation of hostilities agreement of 26 October. The Ethiopian command handed over its main base in Mogadishu to AMISOM, and field commanders of both the Transitional Federal Government and ARS were organizing their forces for the implementation of the agreement. Hard-line groups, including Al-Shabaab, expanded their operations within south-central Somalia, and militia groups gained military control in the Lower Juba and Lower Shebelle regions, including the city of Merka, where Government authority was absent.

Raisedon Zenenga, Director of the Africa II Division of DPKO, briefed the Council on actions taken by DPKO with respect to presidential statement S/PRST/2008/33 of 4 September (see p. 281), which asked the Secretary-General to approach States that might contribute financial resources, personnel, equipment and services for the envisaged multinational force. On 18 September, DPKO convened a meeting with Council members to seek their suggestions and support regarding the mobilization of countries that could contribute to the force. The Secretary-General on 24 October wrote to 50 countries identified as potential contributors. Many countries indicated that they would need more time to respond. Seven responses had been received: one Member State offered to contribute equipment, airlift capacity or funding, and four advised that they were unable to contribute troops. Two of the three organizations approached expressed readiness to help facilitate funding from their member States. The remaining 45 countries and one organization approached had yet to respond. On 17 November, the Secretariat convened a meeting of the 50 Member States and three organizations approached, providing additional information based on the inquiries received.

Year-end developments

In a later report [S/2009/132], the Secretary-General said that in November, Ethiopia announced its intention to start withdrawing its forces from Somalia by the end of the year. In early December, ARS members, led by Sheikh Sharif Sheikh Ahmed, returned to Mogadishu for the first time in two years to begin implementation of the Djibouti agreement. The delegation was warmly received by representatives of the Transitional Federal Government, ARS supporters and the local population. In a statement delivered on 29 December before Parliament and cabinet members in Baidoa, President Yusuf announced that he was resigning to avoid being seen as an “obstacle to peace”. Following his resignation, the Speaker of Parliament, Sheikh Adan Madobe, became acting President, in line with the Transitional Federal Charter, which empowered Parliament to elect a new President within 30 days.

UNDP suspended mine-action activities in south-central Somalia late in 2008 due to the security situation. Security constraints also continued to hamper humanitarian operations across much of the country. In 2008, 34 aid workers were killed and 26 were abducted. Nevertheless, WFP shipped nearly 260,000 tons of food to Somalia, nearly four times the amount shipped in 2007, reaching more than 1.5 million Somalis with food aid every month.

Communications. In a letter of 19 December [S/2008/804] to the Security Council, the Secretary-General said that only 14 countries out of the 50 approached responded to his request for contributions to the multinational force envisaged in presidential statement S/PRST/2008/33; sufficient troop pledges to allow deployment of such a force were unlikely to materialize. The complex security challenges in Somalia could not be addressed within the capabilities of a typical UN peacekeeping force, and a multinational force was the right tool for stabilizing Mogadishu. The Secretary-General presented alternative options that could be undertaken immediately to support the Djibouti peace process and contribute to the conditions required for deploying a UN peacekeeping operation. That included requesting the AU to maintain AMISOM troops on the ground following the withdrawal of Ethiopian forces at the end of 2008, coupled with measures to reinforce the mission; providing international training for the joint police and military forces of the Government and ARS established by the Djibouti process; building the capacity of rule-of-law and security institutions; establishing a maritime task force or adding to the current anti-piracy operations (see below) a quick-reaction component; and continuing preparations for the deployment of a UN peacekeeping operation at the appropriate time.

In a letter of 31 December [S/2008/846], the Secretary-General informed the Council that the Secretariat had initiated action to provide logistics support for AMISOM. He noted that, given the lead time required to put in place the appropriate servicing arrangements, the United Nations might need to rely on existing arrangements to ensure the uninterrupted provision of logistics support.

Piracy and armed robbery against vessels off the coast of Somalia

Communications. On 23 April [S/2008/271], Spain informed the Security Council that on 20 April, the Spanish fishing boat Playa de Bakio was captured by unidentified persons some 230 miles off the coast of Somalia. The vessel carried a crew of 26, of whom 13 were Spanish nationals and the other 13 were from Ghana, Madagascar, Senegal and Seychelles. The assailants used rocket-propelled grenades that damaged the vessel without affecting its seaworthiness or causing injuries. The boat was anchored near the Somali port of Hobyo, and the crew members were being held against their will. Spain immediately contacted the highest authorities of the Transitional Federal Government, who demonstrated their solidarity and cooperation with a view to the prompt release of the abducted sailors and vessel. Spain also contacted the AU and other organizations and Governments, and dispatched a detachment of the Spanish navy to the region to monitor developments. Spain stressed the need for the international community to take joint action under UN auspices in order to prevent and punish such acts, which jeopardized the delivery of humanitarian assistance, contributed to destabilizing the region and threatened the safety of international maritime traffic.

On 1 May [S/2008/292], Spain informed the Council that the Playa de Bakio was released on 27 April together with its crew members, all of whom were unharmed. Spain said that it supported the initiatives under discussion in the Council to strengthen cooperation among States and international organizations to combat piracy and armed robbery, in cooperation with the Somali authorities. Any maritime security initiative should be accompanied by a coordinated international technical assistance effort for Somalia and neighbouring States.

In identical letters of 8 May [A/62/841-S/2008/310] addressed to the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Secretary-General, Canada, Denmark, Greece, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, the Republic of Korea and Spain stated that acts of piracy and armed robbery against commercial and humanitarian ships in the waters off Somalia were jeopardizing the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and contributing to destabilizing the region. They also posed a major threat to the safety of international maritime traffic and, thereby, to international peace and security. Initiatives in place to address the problem were insufficient. In a letter of 27 February to the Council, the Transitional Federal Government requested urgent assistance from the Council in securing the international and territorial waters off the coast of Somalia. In accordance with the UN Charter, the Council was working on initiatives that would entail calling on States and regional organizations to take action to protect shipping involved with the delivery of humanitarian aid and United Nations-authorized activities; stressing respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Somalia; and authorizing States to enter Somalia's territorial waters to deter, prevent and suppress acts of piracy using all means necessary. In the medium- and long-term, the international community should address the challenge of ensuring peace and stability in Somalia itself, without which piracy and armed robbery in the region's waters could not be effectively tackled.

On 12 May [S/2008/323], Somalia said that the Transitional Federal Government did not have the capacity to interdict pirates or secure the waters off its coast. It therefore called on States and regional organizations to take action to protect shipping involved in the transportation of humanitarian aid and United Nations-authorized activities. The Government stressed that Somalia's sovereignty and territorial integrity should be fully respected, and called on States and interested organizations to provide technical assistance. In that regard, the Government had granted a number of States authorization to enter Somali territorial seas in order to deal with threats to shipping. It supported the adoption by the Council of a resolution under Chapter VII of the Charter to authorize States cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government to enter Somalia's territorial sea and use all necessary means to identify, deter, prevent and repress acts of piracy and armed robbery. The Government urged the Council to act favourably and quickly on the draft resolution on piracy (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 June [meeting 5902], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1816(2008). The draft [S/2008/351] was submitted by 16 Member States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions and the statements by its President concerning the situation in Somalia,

Gravely concerned by the threat that acts of piracy and armed robbery against vessels pose to the prompt, safe and effective delivery of humanitarian aid to Somalia, the safety of commercial maritime routes and to international navigation,

Expressing its concerns at the quarterly reports from the International Maritime Organization since 2005, which provide evidence of continuing piracy and armed robbery, in particular in the waters off the coast of Somalia,

Affirming that international law, as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 ("the Convention"), sets out the legal framework applicable to combating piracy and armed robbery, as well as other ocean activities,

Reaffirming the relevant provisions of international law with respect to the repression of piracy, including the Convention, and recalling that they provide guiding principles for cooperation to the fullest possible extent in the repression of piracy on the high seas or in any other place outside the jurisdiction of any State, including but not limited to boarding, searching and seizing vessels engaged in or suspected of engaging in acts of piracy, and to apprehending persons engaged in such acts with a view to such persons being prosecuted,

Reaffirming its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia,

Taking into account the crisis situation in Somalia and the lack of capacity of the Transitional Federal Government to interdict pirates or patrol and secure either the international sea lanes off the coast of Somalia or Somalia's territorial waters,

Deploing the recent incidents of attacks upon and hijacking of vessels in the territorial waters and on the high seas off the coast of Somalia, including attacks upon and hijackings of vessels operated by the World Food Programme and numerous commercial vessels, and the serious adverse impact of these attacks on the prompt, safe and effective delivery of food aid and other humanitarian assistance to the people of Somalia and the grave dangers they pose to vessels, crews, passengers and cargo,

Taking note of the letters dated 5 July and 18 September 2007 from the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization to the Secretary-General of the United Nations regarding the piracy problems off the coast of Somalia, and of resolution A.1002(25) adopted by the Assembly of the International Maritime Organization on 29 November 2007, in which Governments were strongly urged to increase their efforts to prevent and repress, within the provisions of international law, acts of piracy and armed robbery against vessels, irrespective of where such acts occur, and recalling the joint communiqué issued by the International Maritime Organization and the World Food Programme on 10 July 2007,

Taking note also of the letter dated 9 November 2007 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council reporting that the Transitional Federal Government needs and would welcome international assistance to address the problem,

Taking note further of the letter dated 27 February 2008 from the Permanent Representative of Somalia to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council conveying the consent of the Transitional Federal Government to the Council for urgent assistance in securing the territorial and international waters off the coast of Somalia for the safe conduct of shipping and navigation,

Determining that the incidents of piracy and armed robbery against vessels in the territorial waters of Somalia and the high seas off the coast of Somalia exacerbate the situation in Somalia which continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns and deplors all acts of piracy and armed robbery against vessels in territorial waters and the high seas off the coast of Somalia;

2. Urges States whose naval vessels and military aircraft operate on the high seas and airspace off the coast of Somalia to be vigilant to acts of piracy and armed robbery, and in this context encourages, in particular, States interested in the use of commercial maritime routes off the coast of Somalia to increase and coordinate their efforts to deter acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea in cooperation with the Transitional Federal Government;

3. Urges all States to cooperate with each other, with the International Maritime Organization and, as appropriate, with the relevant regional organizations in connection with, and share information about, acts of piracy and armed robbery in the territorial waters and on the high seas off the coast of Somalia, and to render assistance to vessels threatened by or under attack by pirates or armed robbers, in accordance with relevant international law;

4. Urges States to work in cooperation with interested organizations, including the International Maritime Organization, to ensure that vessels entitled to fly their flag receive appropriate guidance and training on avoidance, evasion and defensive techniques and to avoid the area whenever possible;

5. Calls upon States and interested organizations, including the International Maritime Organization, to provide technical assistance to Somalia and nearby coastal States, upon their request, to enhance the capacity of these States to ensure coastal and maritime security, including combating piracy and armed robbery off the Somali and nearby coastlines;

6. Affirms that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and further elaborated upon in paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1425(2002) of 22 July 2002 do not apply to supplies of technical assistance to Somalia solely for the purposes set out in paragraph 5 above, which have been exempted from those measures in accordance with the procedure set out in paragraphs 11 (b) and 12 of resolution 1772(2007) of 20 August 2007;

7. Decides that, for a period of six months from the date of the present resolution, States cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, for which advance notification has been provided by the Transitional Federal Government to the Secretary-General, may:

(a) Enter the territorial waters of Somalia for the purpose of repressing acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea, in a manner consistent with such action permitted on the high seas with respect to piracy under relevant international law; and

(b) Use, within the territorial waters of Somalia, in a manner consistent with action permitted on the high seas with respect to piracy under relevant international law, all necessary means to repress acts of piracy and armed robbery;

8. Requests that cooperating States take appropriate steps to ensure that the activities they undertake pursuant to the authorization in paragraph 7 above do not have the practical effect of denying or impairing the right of innocent passage to the ships of any third State;

9. Affirms that the authorization provided in the present resolution applies only with respect to the situation in Somalia and shall not affect the rights or obligations or responsibilities of Member States under international law, including any rights or obligations under the Convention, with respect to any other situation, and underscores in particular that it shall not be considered as establishing customary international law, and affirms further that this authorization has been provided only following receipt of the letter dated 27 February 2008 from the Permanent Representative of Somalia to the United Nations addressed to the President of the Security Council conveying the consent of the Transitional Federal Government;

10. Calls upon States to coordinate their actions with other participating States taken pursuant to paragraphs 5 and 7 above;

11. Calls upon all States, and in particular flag, port and coastal States, States of the nationality of victims and perpetrators of piracy and armed robbery, and other States with relevant jurisdiction under international law and national legislation, to cooperate in determining jurisdiction and in the investigation and prosecution of persons responsible for acts of piracy and armed robbery off the coast of Somalia, consistent with applicable international law, including international human rights law, and to render assistance by, among other actions, providing disposition and logistics assistance with respect to persons under their jurisdiction and control, such as victims and witnesses and persons detained as a result of operations conducted under the present resolution;

12. Requests States cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government to inform the Security Council within three months of the progress of actions undertaken in the exercise of the authority provided in paragraph 7 above;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within five months of the adoption of the present resolution on the implementation of the present resolution and on the situation with respect to piracy and armed robbery in territorial waters and the high seas off the coast of Somalia;

14. Requests the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization to brief the Council on the basis of cases brought to his attention by the agreement of all affected coastal States, and duly taking into account the existing bilateral and regional cooperative arrangements, on the situation with respect to piracy and armed robbery;

15. Expresses its intention to review the situation and consider, as appropriate, renewing the authority provided in paragraph 7 above for additional periods upon the request of the Transitional Federal Government;

16. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Report of Secretary-General. In July [S/2008/466], the Secretary-General reported that the authorities of Somaliland and Puntland had built up their military presences around the disputed area of Las Aanod. The build-up had created a security vacuum elsewhere in Puntland, which, along with the lack of payments to police and militias working for the Government, had led to increased piracy. As at 15 July, 14 piracy incidents had taken place off the north-eastern coastline of Somalia in 2008, making its territorial waters one of the most dangerous places in the world. Denmark, France and the Netherlands had provided military escorts for humanitarian vessels, and the United Nations was working with the AU, the EU and other organizations on implementing resolution 1816(2008).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 October [meeting 5987], the Council unanimously adopted resolution 1838(2008). The draft [S/2008/633] was submitted by 19 Member States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1814(2008) of 15 May 2008 and 1816(2008) of 2 June 2008,

Gravely concerned by the recent proliferation of acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea against vessels off the coast of Somalia, and by the serious threat it poses to the prompt, safe and effective delivery of humanitarian aid to Somalia, to international navigation and the safety of commercial maritime routes, and to fishing activities conducted in conformity with international law,

Noting with concern that increasingly violent acts of piracy are carried out with heavier weaponry, in a larger area off the coast of Somalia, using long-range assets such as mother ships, and demonstrating more sophisticated organization and methods of attack,

Reaffirming that international law, as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 ("the Convention"), sets out the legal framework applicable to combating piracy and armed robbery at sea, as well as other ocean activities,

Commending the contribution made by some States since November 2007 to protect the World Food Programme maritime convoys, and the establishment by the European Union of a coordination unit with the task of supporting the surveillance and protection activities carried out by some member States of the European Union off the coast of Somalia, and the ongoing planning process towards a possible European Union naval operation, as well as other international or national initiatives taken with a view to implementing resolutions 1814(2008) and 1816(2008),

Noting recent humanitarian reports that as many as three and a half million Somalis will be dependent on humanitarian food aid by the end of the year, and that maritime contractors for the World Food Programme will not deliver food aid to Somalia without naval warship escorts, expressing its determination to ensure long-term security of World Food Programme deliveries to Somalia, and recalling that in resolution 1814(2008) it requested the Secretary-General to provide his support for efforts to protect World Food Programme maritime convoys,

Reaffirming its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia,

Taking note of the letter dated 1 September 2008 from the President of Somalia to the Secretary-General expressing the appreciation of the Transitional Federal Government to the Security Council for its assistance and expressing the willingness of the Transitional Federal Government to consider working with other States, as well as regional organizations, to provide advance notifications additional to those already provided, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 1816(2008), to combat piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia,

Recalling that in the statement by its President of 4 September 2008 it welcomed the signing of a peace and reconciliation agreement in Djibouti and commended the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia, Mr. Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah, for his ongoing efforts, and emphasizing the importance of promoting a comprehensive and lasting settlement in Somalia,

Recalling also that in the statement by its President of 4 September it took note of the parties' request in the Djibouti agreement that the United Nations, within a period of one hundred and twenty days, authorize and deploy an international stabilization force, and looking forward to the report of the Secretary-General, due sixty days from its passage, in particular a detailed and consolidated description of a feasible multinational force, as well as a detailed concept of operations for a feasible United Nations peace-keeping operation,

Emphasizing that peace and stability, the strengthening of State institutions, economic and social development and respect for human rights and the rule of law are necessary to create the conditions for a full eradication of piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia,

Determining that the incidents of piracy and armed robbery against vessels in the territorial waters of Somalia and the high seas off the coast of Somalia exacerbate the situation in Somalia which continues to constitute a threat against international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates that it condemns and deplores all acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea against vessels off the coast of Somalia;

2. Calls upon States interested in the security of maritime activities to take part actively in the fight against piracy on the high seas off the coast of Somalia, in particular by deploying naval vessels and military aircraft, in accordance with international law, as reflected in the Convention;

3. Calls upon States whose naval vessels and military aircraft operate on the high seas and airspace off the coast of Somalia to use on the high seas and airspace off the coast of Somalia the necessary means, in conformity with international law, as reflected in the Convention, for the repression of acts of piracy;

4. Urges States that have the capacity to do so to cooperate with the Transitional Federal Government in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea in conformity with the provisions of resolution 1816(2008);

5. Urges States and regional organizations, in conformity with the provisions of resolution 1814(2008), to continue to take action to protect the World Food Programme maritime convoys, which is vital to bring humanitarian assistance to the affected populations in Somalia;

6. Urges States, as requested, in particular, in International Maritime Organization resolution A.1002(25) of 29 November 2007, to issue to ships entitled to fly their flag, as necessary, advice and guidance on appropriate precautionary measures to protect themselves from attack or actions to take if under attack or the threat of attack when sailing in waters off the coast of Somalia;

7. Calls upon States and regional organizations to coordinate their actions pursuant to paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 above;

8. Affirms that the provisions of the present resolution apply only with respect to the situation in Somalia and shall not affect the rights or obligations or responsibilities of Member States under international law, including any rights or obligations under the Convention, with respect to any situation, and underscores in particular that the present resolution shall not be considered as establishing customary international law;

9. Looks forward to the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 13 of resolution 1816(2008), and expresses its intention to review the situation with respect to piracy and armed robbery at sea against vessels off the coast of Somalia with a view, in particular upon the request of the Transitional Federal Government, to renewing the authority provided in paragraph of resolution 1816(2008) for an additional period;

10. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Further developments

In his November report [S/2008/709], the Secretary-General provided an update on the implementation of resolution 1816(2008) of 2 June (see p. 286). The Secretariat received confirmation from Somalia that Canada, Denmark, France, India, the Russian Federation, Spain and the United States were cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government in fighting piracy. It also received letters from Canada, Denmark, France, Spain and the United States confirming that they had deployed maritime units off the coast of Somalia to fight piracy and armed robbery against ships, in keeping with resolution 1816(2008). On 22 August, the United States led the establishment of a maritime security patrol area in international waters off the Somali coast. The area, which was intended to act as a buffer between the Somali coast and the shipping lanes off southern Yemen, was patrolled by three United States vessels, as well as vessels from Canada, France and the United Kingdom. Meanwhile, Canada and the Netherlands were supporting WFP by providing a naval escort to ships carrying food aid from Mombasa to Mogadishu. NATO deployed seven ships from its Standing Maritime Group 2 to protect ships carrying humanitarian aid and eligible merchant vessels.

On 15 September, the EU General Affairs Council established a coordination unit tasked with supporting the surveillance and protection activities carried out by some EU member States off the coast of Somalia. The Council approved a plan for implementing the military coordination action, which would comprise a coordination cell based in London, as well as a strategic military option for a possible naval operation, which the EU intended to launch by December. The EU also proposed that DPKO play a role in coordinating the growing number of Member States and organizations conducting maritime operations off the Somali coast.

The Secretary-General said that the activities of individuals engaged in piracy and armed robbery were weakening the Transitional Federal Government and the Puntland authorities. Since January, about 65 merchant ships, with about 200 crew members each, had been hijacked, particularly in the sea area bordering Puntland. It was estimated that, since the beginning of 2008, $25–30 million had been paid in ransom to pirates. The Secretary-General called on the international community to address the legal issues relating to persons apprehended while engaged in acts of piracy and armed robbery against ships. The United Nations would continue to work with the International Maritime Organization (IMO) to monitor the implementation of resolutions 1816(2008) and 1838(2008).

Briefing by IMO Secretary-General. On 20 November [meeting 6020], the IMO Secretary-General, Efthimios Mitropoulos, briefed the Security Council on the escalating incidents of piracy and armed robbery in the waters off Somalia and in the Gulf of Aden. More than 120 attacks had been reported in 2008, resulting in more than 35 ships having been seized by pirates and more than 600 seafarers kidnapped and held for ransom. At the time of the briefing, 14 ships and some 280 seafarers were being held hostage in Somalia; two seafarers had lost their lives in similar instances. The concerns of IMO were threefold: protecting seafarers, fishermen and passengers on ships sailing off the coast of Somalia and in the Gulf of Aden; ensuring the delivery of humanitarian aid to Somalia by WFP-chartered ships; and preserving the integrity of the shipping lane through the Gulf of Aden, which served more than 12 per cent of the total volume of oil transported by sea, as well as commodities carried by bulk carriers and finished goods transported by container ships. The IMO Secretary-General said that his organization would appreciate action by the Security Council to: extend the provisions of resolution 1816(2008) that allowed States cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government in the fight against piracy to enter Somalia's territorial waters to repress such acts and use all necessary means to do so; call on interested States to take part in the fight against piracy and armed robbery; strengthen the provisions of resolutions 1816(2008) and 1838(2008) with respect to clear rules of engagement to disrupt pirate activities; and urge States to establish legal jurisdiction to bring alleged offenders to justice. IMO was doing everything possible to increase awareness of the problem; advise ships to take avoidance, evasion and defensive measures; and assist countries in the region in building capacity to contribute to overall efforts, including through legislation. A coordinated international and national response was necessary for the safety and well-being of seafarers, the delivery of humanitarian aid, the protection of the marine environment and the continuation of operation of the shipping industry.

Somalia renewed its request for the Council's help in securing the international and territorial waters off its coast. It urged the renewal for one year of the authorization provided to those cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government, as stipulated in resolution 1816(2008), as well as other assistance that the Council might deem necessary. Somalia appealed to the Council, other nations and international organizations to support anti-piracy efforts.

Communication. In a letter of 26 November [A/63/580] to the General Assembly, Egypt and Yemen stated that they had organized a consultative meeting of Arab coastal countries of the Red Sea to address the issue of piracy off the coast of Somalia (Cairo, 20 November). The meeting was attended by Djibouti, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and the Sudan, as well as representatives of the Transitional Federal Government and LAS.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 6026], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1846(2008). The draft [S/2008/748] was submitted by 19 Member States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the situation in Somalia, especially resolutions 1814(2008) of 15 May 2008, 1816(2008) of 2 June 2008 and 1838(2008) of 7 October 2008,

Continuing to be gravely concerned by the threat that piracy and armed robbery at sea against vessels pose to the prompt, safe and effective delivery of humanitarian aid to Somalia, to international navigation and the safety of commercial maritime routes, and to other vulnerable ships, including fishing activities in conformity with international law,

Reaffirming its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia,

Further reaffirming that international law, as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 ("the Convention"), sets out the legal framework applicable to combating piracy and armed robbery at sea, as well as other ocean activities,

Taking into account the crisis situation in Somalia and the lack of capacity of the Transitional Federal Government to interdict pirates or patrol and secure either the international sea lanes off the coast of Somalia or Somalia's territorial waters,

Taking note of the requests of the Transitional Federal Government for international assistance to counter piracy off its coasts, including the letter dated 1 September 2008 from the President of Somalia to the Secretary-General expressing the appreciation of the Transitional Federal Government to the Security Council for its assistance and expressing the willingness of the Transitional Federal Government to consider working with other States and regional organizations to combat piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, the letter dated 20 November 2008 conveying the request of the Transitional Federal Government that the provisions of resolution 1816(2008) be renewed, and the request made by the Permanent Representative of Somalia to the United Nations before the Council on 20 November 2008 that the renewal be for an additional twelve months,

Taking note also of the letters from the Transitional Federal Government to the Secretary-General providing advance notification with respect to States cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia and from other Member States to the Council to inform the Council of their actions, as requested in paragraphs 7 and 12 of resolution 1816(2008), and encouraging those cooperating States, for which advance notification has been provided by the Transitional Federal Government to the Secretary-General, to continue their respective efforts,

Expressing again its determination to ensure the long-term security of World Food Programme maritime deliveries to Somalia,

Recalling that in its resolution 1838(2008) it commended the contribution made by some States since November 2007 to protect the World Food Programme maritime convoys, and the establishment by the European Union of a coordination unit with the task of supporting the surveillance and protection activities carried out by some member States of the European Union off the coast of Somalia, as well as other international or national initiatives taken with a view to implementing resolutions 1814(2008) and 1816(2008),

Welcoming the signing on 19 August 2008 of a peace and reconciliation agreement between the Transitional Federal Government and the Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia ("the Djibouti agreement"), as well as their signing of a joint ceasefire agreement on 26 October 2008, noting that the Djibouti agreement calls for the United Nations to authorize and deploy an international stabilization force, and taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 17 November 2008 on the situation in Somalia, including his recommendations in this regard,

Commending the key role played by the African Union Mission in Somalia in facilitating the delivery of humanitarian assistance to Somalia through the port of Mogadishu and the contribution that the Mission has made towards the goal of establishing lasting peace and stability in Somalia, and recognizing specifically the important contributions of the Governments of Uganda and Burundi to Somalia,

Welcoming the organization of a ministerial meeting of the Council in December 2008 to examine ways to improve international coordination in the fight against piracy and armed robbery off the coast of Somalia and to ensure that the international community has the proper authorities and tools at its disposal to assist it in these efforts,

Determining that the incidents of piracy and armed robbery against vessels in the territorial waters of Somalia and the high seas off the coast of Somalia exacerbate the situation in Somalia, which continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates that it condemns and deplores all acts of piracy and armed robbery against vessels in territorial waters and the high seas off the coast of Somalia;

2. Expresses its concern over the finding contained in the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia of 20 November 2008 that escalating ransom payments are fuelling the growth of piracy off the coast of Somalia;

3. Welcomes the efforts of the International Maritime Organization to update its guidance and recommendations to the shipping industry and to Governments for preventing and suppressing piracy and armed robbery at sea and to provide this guidance as soon as practicable to all Member States and to the international shipping community operating off the coast of Somalia;

4. Calls upon States, in cooperation with the shipping industry, the insurance industry and the International Maritime Organization, to issue to ships entitled to fly their flag appropriate advice and guidance on avoidance, evasion and defensive techniques and measures to take if under the threat of attack or attack when sailing in the waters off the coast of Somalia;

5. Calls upon States and interested organizations, including the International Maritime Organization, to provide technical assistance to Somalia and nearby coastal States upon their request to enhance the capacity of these States to ensure coastal and maritime security, including combating piracy and armed robbery at sea off the Somali and nearby coastlines;

6. Welcomes initiatives by Canada, Denmark, France, India, the Netherlands, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America and by regional and international organizations to counter piracy off the coast of Somalia pursuant to resolutions 1814(2008), 1816(2008) and 1838(2008), the decision by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to counter piracy off the Somalia coast, including by escorting vessels of the World Food Programme, and, in particular, the decision by the European Union on 10 November 2008 to launch, for a period of twelve months from December 2008, a naval operation to protect World Food Programme maritime convoys bringing humanitarian assistance to Somalia and other vulnerable ships and to repress acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia;

7. Calls upon States and regional organizations to coordinate, including by sharing information through bilateral channels or the United Nations, their efforts to deter acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia in cooperation with each other, the International Maritime Organization, the international shipping community, flag States and the Transitional Federal Government;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it a report, no later than three months after the adoption of the present resolution, on ways to ensure the long-term security of international navigation off the coast of Somalia, including the long-term security of World Food Programme maritime deliveries to Somalia and a possible coordination and leadership role for the United Nations in this regard to rally Member States and regional organizations to counter piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia;

9. Calls upon States and regional organizations that have the capacity to do so to take part actively in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, in particular, consistent with the present resolution and relevant international law, by deploying naval vessels and military aircraft, and through seizure and disposition of boats, vessels, arms and other related equipment used in the commission of piracy and armed robbery off the coast of Somalia or for which there are reasonable grounds for suspecting such use;

10. Decides that, for a period of twelve months from the date of the present resolution, States and regional organizations cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, for which advance notification has been provided by the Transitional Federal Government to the Secretary-General, may:

(a) Enter into the territorial waters of Somalia for the purpose of repressing acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea, in a manner consistent with such action permitted on the high seas with respect to piracy under relevant international law; and

(b) Use, within the territorial waters of Somalia, in a manner consistent with such action permitted on the high seas with respect to piracy under relevant international law, all necessary means to repress acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea;

11. Affirms that the authorizations provided in the present resolution apply only with respect to the situation in Somalia and shall not affect the rights or obligations or responsibilities of Member States under international law, including any rights or obligations under the Convention, with respect to any other situation, and underscores in particular that the present resolution shall not be considered as establishing customary international law, and affirms further that such authorizations have been provided only following receipt of the letter dated 20 November 2008 conveying the consent of the Transitional Federal Government;

12. Affirms also that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and further elaborated upon in paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1425(2002) of 22 July 2002 do not apply to supplies of technical assistance to Somalia solely for the purposes set out in paragraph 5 above, which have been exempted from those measures in accordance with the procedure set out in paragraphs 11 (b) and 12 of resolution 1772(2007) of 20 August 2007;

13. Requests that cooperating States take appropriate steps to ensure that the activities they undertake pursuant to the authorization in paragraph 10 above do not have the practical effect of denying or impairing the right of innocent passage to the ships of any third State;

14. Calls upon all States, and in particular flag, port and coastal States, States of the nationality of victims and perpetrators of piracy and armed robbery, and other States with relevant jurisdiction under international law and national legislation, to cooperate in determining jurisdiction and in the investigation and prosecution of persons responsible for acts of piracy and armed robbery off the coast of Somalia, consistent with applicable international law, including international human rights law, and to render assistance by, among other actions, providing disposition and logistics assistance with respect to persons under their jurisdiction and control, such as victims and witnesses and persons detained as a result of operations conducted under the present resolution;

15. Notes that the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation of 10 March 1988 provides for parties to create criminal offences, establish jurisdiction and accept delivery of persons responsible for or suspected of seizing or exercising control over a ship by force or threat thereof or any other form of intimidation; urges States parties to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation to fully implement their obligations under said Convention and cooperate with the Secretary-General and the International Maritime Organization to build judicial capacity for the successful prosecution of persons suspected of piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia;

16. Requests States and regional organizations cooperating with the Transitional Federal Government to inform the Council and the Secretary-General within nine months of the progress of actions undertaken in the exercise of the authority provided in paragraph 10 above;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council within eleven months of the adoption of the present resolution on the implementation of the resolution and on the situation with respect to piracy and armed robbery in territorial waters and the high seas off the coast of Somalia;

18. Requests the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization to brief the Council on the basis of cases brought to his attention by the agreement of all affected coastal States, and duly taking into account the existing bilateral and regional cooperative arrangements, on the situation with respect to piracy and armed robbery;

19. Expresses its intention to review the situation and consider, as appropriate, renewing the authority provided in paragraph 10 above for additional periods upon the request of the Transitional Federal Government;

20. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communication. In a letter of 12 December to the Security Council [S/2008/786], Cuba, on behalf of the Non-Aligned Movement, condemned all acts of piracy and armed robbery against vessels in the territorial waters and seas off the coast of Somalia, also stressing the need for a political settlement in the country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 6046], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1851(2008). The draft [S/2008/789] was submitted by Belgium, Croatia, France, Greece, Liberia, the Republic of Korea, Spain and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the situation in Somalia, especially resolutions 1814(2008) of 15 May 2008, 1816(2008) of 2 June 2008, 1838(2008) of 7 October 2008, 1844(2008) of 20 November 2008 and 1846(2008) of 2 December 2008,

Continuing to be gravely concerned by the dramatic increase in the incidents of piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia in the last six months, and by the threat that piracy and armed robbery at sea against vessels pose to the prompt, safe and effective delivery of humanitarian aid to Somalia, and noting that pirate attacks off the coast of Somalia have become more sophisticated and daring and have expanded in their geographical scope, notably evidenced by the hijacking of the M/V Sirius Star 500 nautical miles off the coast of Kenya and subsequent unsuccessful attempts well east of the United Republic of Tanzania,

Reaffirming its respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia, including Somalia's rights with respect to offshore natural resources, including fisheries, in accordance with international law,

Further reaffirming that international law, as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982, sets out the legal framework applicable to combating piracy and armed robbery at sea, as well as other ocean activities,

Again taking into account the crisis situation in Somalia, and the lack of capacity of the Transitional Federal Government to interdict, or upon interdiction to prosecute pirates or to patrol and secure the waters off the coast of Somalia, including the international sea lanes and Somalia's territorial waters,

Noting the several requests of the Transitional Federal Government for international assistance to counter piracy off the coast of Somalia, including the letter dated 9 December 2008 from the President of Somalia requesting the international community to assist the Transitional Federal Government in taking all necessary measures to interdict those who use Somali territory and airspace to plan, facilitate or undertake acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea, and the letter dated 1 September 2008 from the President of Somalia to the Secretary-General expressing the appreciation of the Transitional Federal Government to the Security Council for its assistance and expressing the willingness of the Transitional Federal Government to consider working with other States and regional organizations to combat piracy and armed robbery off the coast of Somalia,

Welcoming the launching of the European Union operation Atalanta to combat piracy off the coast of Somalia and to protect vulnerable ships bound for Somalia, as well as the efforts of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and other States acting in a national capacity in cooperation with the Transitional Federal Government to suppress piracy off the coast of Somalia,

Also welcoming the recent initiatives of the Governments of Egypt and Kenya, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Somalia and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to achieve effective measures to remedy the causes, capabilities and incidents of piracy and armed robbery off the coast of Somalia, and emphasizing the need for current and future counter-piracy operations to effectively coordinate their activities,

Noting with concern that the lack of capacity, domestic legislation and clarity about how to dispose of pirates after their capture has hindered more robust international action against the pirates off the coast of Somalia and in some cases has led to pirates being released without facing justice, and reiterating that the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation of 10 March 1988 provides for parties to create criminal offences, establish jurisdiction and accept delivery of persons responsible for or suspected of seizing or exercising control over a ship by force or threat thereof or any other form of intimidation,

Welcoming the report of 20 November 2008 of the Monitoring Group on Somalia, and noting the role that piracy may play in financing embargo violations by armed groups,

Determining that the incidents of piracy and armed robbery at sea in the waters off the coast of Somalia exacerbate the situation in Somalia which continues to constitute a threat to international peace and security in the region,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates that it condemns and deplores all acts of piracy and armed robbery against vessels in waters off the coast of Somalia;

2. Calls upon States and regional and international organizations that have the capacity to do so to take part actively in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, in particular, consistent with the present resolution, resolution 1846(2008) and international law, by deploying naval vessels and military aircraft and through seizure and disposition of boats, vessels, arms and other related equipment used in the commission of piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, or for which there are reasonable grounds for suspecting such use;

3. Invites all States and regional organizations fighting piracy off the coast of Somalia to conclude special agreements or arrangements with countries willing to take custody of pirates in order to embark law enforcement officials ("shipriders") from the latter countries, in particular countries in the region, to facilitate the investigation and prosecution of persons detained as a result of operations conducted under the present resolution for acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, provided that the advance consent of the Transitional Federal Government is obtained for the exercise of third State jurisdiction by shipriders in Somali territorial waters and that such agreements or arrangements do not prejudice the effective implementation of the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation;

4. Encourages all States and regional organizations fighting piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia to establish an international cooperation mechanism to act as a common point of contact between and among States, regional organizations and international organizations on all aspects of combating piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia; and recalls that future recommendations on ways to ensure the long-term security of international navigation off the coast of Somalia, including the long-term security of World Food Programme maritime deliveries to Somalia and a possible coordination and leadership role for the United Nations in this regard to rally Member States and regional organizations to counter piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia are to be detailed in a report of the Secretary-General no later than three months after the adoption of resolution 1846(2008);

5. Also encourages all States and regional organizations fighting piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia to consider creating a centre in the region to co-ordinate information relevant to piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia, to increase regional capacity with the assistance of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to arrange effective shiprider agreements or arrangements consistent with the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and to implement the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and other relevant instruments to which States in the region are party, in order to effectively investigate and prosecute piracy and armed robbery at sea offences;

6. In response to the letter dated 9 December 2008 from the Transitional Federal Government, encourages Member States to continue to cooperate with the Transitional Federal Government in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea, notes the primary role of the Transitional Federal Government in rooting out piracy and armed robbery at sea, and decides that for a period of twelve months from the date of adoption of resolution 1846(2008), States and regional organizations cooperating in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea off the coast of Somalia for which advance notification has been provided by the Transitional Federal Government to the Secretary-General may undertake all necessary measures that are appropriate in Somalia, for the purpose of suppressing acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea, pursuant to the request of the Transitional Federal Government, provided, however, that any measures undertaken pursuant to the authority of the present paragraph shall be undertaken consistent with applicable international humanitarian and human rights law;

7. Calls upon Member States to assist the Transitional Federal Government, at its request and with notification to the Secretary-General, to strengthen its operational capacity to bring to justice those who are using Somali territory to plan, facilitate or undertake criminal acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea, and stresses that any measures undertaken pursuant to the present paragraph shall be consistent with applicable international human rights law;

8. Welcomes the communiqué issued by the International Conference on Piracy around Somalia, held in Nairobi on 11 December 2008, and encourages Member States to work to enhance the capacity of relevant States in the region to combat piracy, including judicial capacity;

9. Notes with concern the findings contained in the report of the Monitoring Group on Somalia of 20 November 2008 that escalating ransom payments are fuelling the growth of piracy in waters off the coast of Somalia, and that the lack of enforcement of the arms embargo established by resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 has permitted ready access to the arms and ammunition used by the pirates and driven in part the phenomenal growth in piracy;

10. Affirms that the authorization provided in the present resolution applies only with respect to the situation in Somalia and shall not affect the rights or obligations or responsibilities of Member States under international law, including any rights or obligations under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, with respect to any other situation, and underscores in particular that the present resolution shall not be considered as establishing customary international law, and affirms further that such authorizations have been provided only following the receipt of the letter dated 9 December 2008 conveying the consent of the Transitional Federal Government;

11. Affirms also that the measures imposed by paragraph 5 of resolution 733(1992) and further elaborated upon in paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 1425(2002) of 22 July 2002 shall not apply to weapons and military equipment destined for the sole use of Member States and regional organizations undertaking measures in accordance with paragraph 6 above;

12. Urges States, in collaboration with the shipping and insurance industries, and the International Maritime Organization to continue to develop avoidance, evasion and defensive best practices and advisories to take when under attack or when sailing in waters off the coast of Somalia, and further urges States to make their citizens and vessels available for forensic investigation, as appropriate, at the first port of call immediately following an act or attempted act of piracy or armed robbery at sea or release from captivity;

13. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Following the adoption of the resolution, the Secretary-General said that his Special Representative for Somalia convened an international conference on piracy from 11 to 12 December to further discuss the issue, and his Legal Adviser stood ready to assist States in finding a solution to the practical, legal and jurisdictional issues involved. The Secretariat had designated a focal point in the DPKO Office of Military Affairs for information-sharing on anti-piracy operations. UN anti-piracy efforts had to be appraised in the context of a comprehensive approach that fostered the peace process, helped the parties rebuild security and governance capacity, addressed human rights issues and harnessed economic opportunities throughout Somalia.

The Secretary of State of the United States, Condoleezza Rice, announced that her country intended to work with partners to create a contact group on Somali piracy. The United States envisioned the contact group serving as a mechanism to share intelligence, coordinate activities and reach out to other partners, including those in the shipping and insurance industries.

Children and armed conflict

In response to Security Council resolution 1612(2005) [YUN 2005, p. 863], the Secretary-General, in May [S/2008/352], submitted to the Council and its Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict his second report on the situation of children and armed conflict in Somalia, which covered the period from 16 March 2007 to 15 March 2008. The report stressed that the level of grave violations against children increased over the year, particularly with regard to the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict; the killing, maiming and raping of children; and the denial of humanitarian access to children. Insecurity and violence in central and southern Somalia increased, as Transitional Federal Government and Ethiopian forces continued to battle anti-Government groups. The regional border dispute between Somaliland and Puntland added to the overall insecurity. In the absence of rule of law, crimes against civilians, including children, continued to be committed with impunity. The Government and various factions of the anti-Government forces, including remnants of the Union of Islamic Courts and the Al-Shabaab group, were among the parties cited in the report as responsible for recruiting and using child soldiers and committing violations against children. Children were also being killed and maimed as a result of military actions by Ethiopian forces in the course of confrontations with anti-Government forces and civilian demonstrators. Reported cases of rape and other sexual violence against children also increased. The report described dialogue and action plans to redress violations of children's rights and follow-up and programmatic responses by UNDP, UNICEF and other organizations. It contained recommendations aimed at strengthening child protection action.

In December [S/AC.51/2008/14], the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict submitted its conclusions on children and armed conflict in Somalia, which contained the Group's exchange of views on the Secretary-General's report. The Working Group expressed its concern at the high number of children killed and maimed as a result of the conflict, the use of children to plant roadside bombs and other explosive devices, and the indiscriminate use of anti-personnel landmines. The Working Group condemned recent indiscriminate shelling and mortar attacks in Mogadishu and urged all parties to: comply with international humanitarian law; commit to maintaining the neutrality and security of schools and hospitals; allow unimpeded humanitarian access for children; end acts of sexual violence against children and protect children from such violence; halt new deployments of landmines; reflect child protection in ongoing reconciliation efforts and peace processes; release all children present in their ranks; and engage in an action plan to end abuses. The Working Group made recommendations to the Security Council and agreed to address letters to the World Bank, donors, and the Somalia Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting.

United Nations Political Office for Somalia

The United Nations Political Office for Somalia (UNPOS), established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 402] and headed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Ahmedou Ould-Abdallah (Mauritania), continued to assist in advancing the cause of peace and reconciliation and to monitor the situation in the country. The Security Council, in resolution 1814(2008) of 15 May (see p. 275), approved the Secretary-General's proposal to establish a joint planning unit in the office of the Special Representative to facilitate implementation of an updated, comprehensive, integrated strategy for peace and stability in Somalia, as discussed in the Secretary-General's March report [S/2008/178 & Corr.1,2]. It decided that UNPOS and the UN country team would support the transitional federal institutions in developing a Constitution and holding a constitutional referendum and free and democratic elections in 2009. The Secretary-General was asked to establish the necessary security arrangements for relocating UNPOS and the country team from Nairobi to Mogadishu.

Financing

The Secretary-General, in his February report [A/62/512/Add.6] on estimates in respect of special political missions, good offices and other political initiatives authorized by the General Assembly and/or the Security Council, said that with the upgrading of the level of the UNPOS head to the Under-Secretary-General level in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 281] and the increased role entrusted to him, including the implementation of an integrated UN approach for Somalia, UNPOS would take over constitutional, electoral and peace education activities from UNDP and legal support activities provided through the United Nations Office at Nairobi. Consequently, the organizational structure would be slightly rearranged. The Secretary-General presented revised estimated requirements for UNPOS for 2008 amounting to $16,233,800 net ($17,155,500 gross). The proposed revised requirements provided for civilian personnel costs amounting to $7,105,300 for 72 positions, including 33 additional positions, for six months in Nairobi and six months in Somalia.

In March [A/62/7/Add.37], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the resources requested by the Secretary-General for the special political missions, including UNPOS.

The General Assembly, in section III of resolution 62/245 of 3 April (see p. 1550), approved additional budgets for special political missions, including UNPOS, for 2008, totalling $48,954,400 ($53,571,500 gross).

In October [A/63/346/Add.3], the Secretary-General presented the proposed resource requirements for 10 special political missions, including UNPOS, grouped under the thematic cluster of UN offices, peacebuilding support offices, integrated offices and commissions. The resource requirements for UNPOS for the period from 1 January to 30 June 2009 amounted to $5,998,800 net ($6,420,400 gross). The reduction of $9,266,300 in 2009 requirements compared to the 2008 appropriation was attributable to the 2009 requirements being budgeted for six months, compared to the 12-month period in 2008. A supplementary budget for the period from 1 July to 31 December 2009, based on the recommendations of a security assessment mission to be dispatched to Somalia in the fourth quarter of 2008, would be presented to the Assembly at a later stage.

In a December report [A/63/593], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the resources requested by the Secretary-General for the special political missions authorized by the Assembly and/or Security Council, including UNPOS.

Arms embargo

The Security Council, by resolution 751(1992) [YUN 1992, p. 202], established the Committee on sanctions against Somalia to oversee the arms embargo imposed on that country by resolution 733(1992) [ibid., p. 199]. A Panel of experts was established by resolution 1425(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 206] to generate information on arms embargo violations. The Panel of Experts was succeeded by a Monitoring Group established by resolution 1519(2003) [YUN 2003, p. 254] to focus on embargo violations.

Report of Monitoring Group (April). As requested by the Security Council in resolution 1766(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 282], the Nairobi-based Monitoring Group of four experts continued to investigate arms embargo violations, update the draft list of individuals and entities violating the embargo and make recommendations.

In its report of 2 April [S/2008/274], which the Committee transmitted to the Council on 24 April, the Group stated that armed actions between opposition groups and the Transitional Federal Government force increased from October 2007 to April 2008. Opposition groups, particularly the Shabaab, gained control of more territory and limited the deployment of Government troops and their backers, the Ethiopian national defence force. Insurgents carried out sustained attacks using guerrilla warfare, established bases across Somalia, and received regular shipments of arms by sea. Their increased strength and successes contributed to the fragmentation of Government security forces, which commanders started to reinforce with their own militias.

Weapons sent to all parties of the conflict originated in some of the States previously reported, namely Eritrea, Ethiopia and Yemen, and reached Somalia by small vessels or through remote locations along land borders. The Group found that the arms embargo had limited impact on the conflict, as the parties were still able to receive arms. The Government was not able to control its borders against arms arriving in violation of the embargo. Cross-border shipments reached the parties directly or fuelled the seven arms markets that had opened since the Bakaraaha Arms Market in Mogadishu moved underground. The Group received information on arms sales by prominent Government security officials and Ethiopian and Ugandan AMISOM officers at the market in Mogadishu; such arms originated from army stocks or were seized following battles with insurgents. According to arms traders, the biggest suppliers of ammunition to the markets were Ethiopian and Government commanders. The Somali police no longer differed from other actors in the conflict: it purchased arms in Yemen, in violation of the embargo, not having requested an exemption from the Committee. Police commanders were also buying and selling arms at the Mogadishu markets.

The Monitoring Group recommended, among other measures, that the Committee address letters to States found by the Group to have violated the arms embargo, and address a letter to the Transitional Federal Government drawing its attention to the provisions contained in relevant Council resolutions for exemptions to the arms embargo for the development of security institutions. It also recommended that the Committee request the Government, Ethiopia and AMISOM to investigate the information regarding the sale by Government officials and Ethiopian and Ugandan military officers of weapons and ammunition to the Somali arms markets, and send their findings to the Committee within two months of the date of the report. The Group recommended that the Council expand its mandate to include the provision of information on internal arms transactions subject to possible additional measures. It also recommended that the Council impose individual targeted sanctions on embargo violators and their supporters and on elements that threatened by force the transitional federal institutions or AMISOM; and that the Committee designate persons and entities subject to individual measures.

Report of Monitoring Group (December). In response to resolution 1811(2008) (see p. 296), the Monitoring Group issued a report on 20 November [S/2008/769], which the Committee transmitted to the Security Council on 10 December. The Group stated that most serviceable weapons and almost all ammunition available in Somalia had been delivered since 1992 in violation of the embargo. Although provisions existed for exemptions to the embargo to be granted by the Council under resolutions 1725(2006) [YUN 2006, p. 308], 1744(2007), 1772(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 276] and 1816(2008) (see p. 286), no exemption for delivery of arms and ammunition or other lethal support to any Somali armed force or group had ever been granted. Consequently, the Monitoring Group believed that every armed force, group or militia in Somalia, their financiers, supporters and, in some cases, foreign donors, were in violation of the arms embargo. The volume and pattern of arms transfers to Somalia had remained fairly constant since the Ethiopian military intervention and the overthrow of the Council of Somalia Islamic Courts in January 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 270]. The transfer of skills and technology for military and terrorist purposes contributed to an escalation in targeted killings, the use of improvised explosive devices and other types of violence.

Commercial imports, mainly from Yemen, remained the most consistent source of arms, ammunition and military materiel to Somalia. Since June, Yemeni curbs on domestic arms sales had reduced the volume of exports to Somalia and driven up arms prices in Somali markets. Nevertheless, weapons from Yemen continued to feed Somali retail arms sales and armed opposition and criminal groups. Insurgent groups in Ethiopia also procured arms and ammunition from Yemen, which then transited Somalia in violation of the embargo. Arms and ammunition also flowed from Somalia to Yemen, allegedly in support of Yemeni insurgents.

Financing for embargo violations by armed opposition groups was derived from a variety of sources, including the Government of Eritrea, private donors in the Arab and Islamic world, and organized fund-raising among Somali diaspora groups. Armed opposition groups sustained themselves through the use of the Internet, and a number of websites and Internet forums were openly affiliated with one or more groups. Contributions for the armed struggle were increasingly taking the form of commercial goods, which could be resold in Somalia to generate cash.

Another source of arms and materiel to Somalia was external contributions—which were intended to support security and stabilization—to Government forces. Such contributions were eligible for exemption from the embargo, but most were not authorized by the Security Council, and thus constituted violations. As much as 80 per cent of the external support was diverted to private purposes, Somali arms markets or opposition groups. Contributions to the Government security sector thus represented a net source of insecurity and an obstacle to stabilization.

The Monitoring Group recommended, among other measures, that the Security Council require States and international organizations that came into possession of weapons, ammunition or military materiel on Somali territory, destined for Somalia or originating there to record the identifying characteristics of those items and share them with the Group, in accordance with Council resolution 1425(2002)

[YUN 2002, p. 206]. It recommended that the Council establish more precise guidelines for the notification of support to security sector institutions, and extend to international organizations, including UN specialized agencies, the requirement to notify the sanctions Committee of security sector support programmes. The Group also recommended that the Council authorize international naval forces in the Gulf of Aden and the Indian Ocean to seize any weapons encountered in the course of their operations and interdict arms trafficking; and request those naval forces to share with the Group information about weapons seizures.

2. Reiterates its intention to consider specific action to improve implementation of and compliance with measures imposed by resolution 733(1992), as well as resolution 1844(2008);

3. Decides to extend the mandate of the Monitoring Group referred to in paragraph 3 of resolution 1558(2004), and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary administrative measures as expeditiously as possible to re-establish the Monitoring Group for a period of twelve months, drawing, as appropriate, on the expertise of the members of the Monitoring Group established pursuant to resolution 1811(2008), and with the addition of a fifth expert, in consultation with the Committee, in order to fulfil its expanded mandate, this mandate being as follows:

(a) To continue the tasks outlined in paragraphs 3 (a) to (c) of resolution 1587(2005);

(b) To carry out additionally the tasks outlined in paragraphs 23 (a) to (c) of resolution 1844(2008);

(c) To continue to investigate, in coordination with relevant international agencies, all activities, including in the financial, maritime and other sectors, which generate revenues used to commit arms embargo violations;

(d) To continue to investigate any means of transport, routes, seaports, airports and other facilities used in connection with arms embargo violations;

(e) To continue refining and updating information on the draft list of those individuals and entities who violate the measures implemented by Member States in accordance with resolution 733(1992) and paragraphs 8 (a) to (c) of resolution 1844(2008), inside and outside Somalia, and their active supporters, for possible future measures by the Security Council, and to present such information to the Committee as and when the Committee deems appropriate;

(f) To continue making recommendations based on its investigations, on the previous reports of the Panel of Experts appointed pursuant to resolutions 1425(2002) of 22 July 2002 and 1474(2003) of 8 April 2003, and on the previous reports of the Monitoring Group appointed pursuant to resolutions 1519(2003), 1558(2004), 1587(2005), 1630(2005), 1676(2006), 1724(2006), 1766(2007) and 1811(2008);

(j) To submit, through the Committee, for consideration by the Council, a final report covering all the tasks set out above, no later than fifteen days prior to the termination of the mandate of the Monitoring Group;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary financial arrangements to support the work of the Monitoring Group;

5. Reaffirms paragraphs 4, 5, 7, 8 and 10 of resolution 1519(2003);

6. Requests the Committee, in accordance with its mandate and in consultation with the Monitoring Group and other relevant United Nations entities, to consider the recommendations in the reports of the Monitoring Group of 5 April and 16 October 2006, 17 July 2007 and 24 April and 20 November 2008 and recommend to the Council ways to improve implementation of and compliance with the arms embargo as well as the measures imposed in paragraphs 1, 3 and 7 of resolution 1844(2008), in response to continuing violations;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Report of Committee on sanctions. On 19 December [S/2008/806], the Chairman of the Security Council Committee on sanctions against Somalia submitted a report on activities in 2008. The Committee met seven times in informal consultations. On 25 March, the Committee discussed a request by the Monitoring Group for assistance in eliciting replies from the AU and Member States. Subsequently, on 27 March, it dispatched letters to the AU, Ethiopia, Somalia and the United Arab Emirates. On 25 June, the Committee discussed the request made by the Security Council in resolution 1814(2008) (see p. 275) to provide recommendations on specific measures the Council might impose on individuals and entities that blocked the peace process or breached the arms embargo. On 24 July, it held an exchange of views with the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Somalia in connection with the Council's request for recommendations on specific measures. In a letter of 1 August to the Council, the Committee conveyed its recommendations to the Council concerning the imposition of targeted measures against individuals and entities as designated by the Committee. During the reporting period, the Committee received 14 requests for exemptions to the arms embargo for non-lethal military equipment pursuant to Council resolution 1356(2001) [YUN 2001, p. 212]; one request for an exemption to the embargo pursuant to resolution 1772(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 276]; and a notification pursuant to resolution 1744(2007) [ibid., p. 269]. Denmark and the Netherlands informed the Committee of their decisions to provide naval escort to merchant ships carrying relief cargo at the request of WFP and with the consent of the Transitional Federal Government.

Financing of Monitoring Group

On 11 September [A/63/346/Add.2], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly estimated financial requirements for the Monitoring Group for 2009, amounting to $1,393,800 ($1,414,400 gross). In December [A/63/593], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the resources requested by the Secretary-General for 27 political missions, including the Monitoring Group.

The Assembly, in section XI of resolution 63/263 of 24 December (see p. 1548), approved budgets totalling $429,497,600 for the 27 political missions authorized by the Assembly and/or Council.

Eritrea–Ethiopia

In 2008, the United Nations maintained its presence in Eritrea and Ethiopia to assist both countries in implementing the June 2000 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities and the December 2000 Comprehensive Peace Agreement, both signed in Algiers (the Algiers Agreements), which regulated their border dispute that had led to armed conflict in 1998 and subsequent intermittent fighting. The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) continued to monitor the border region referred to as the Temporary Security Zone—a 25-kilometre-wide buffer zone that marked the formal separation of forces—and to support the work of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, the neutral body mandated under the terms of the Peace Agreement to delimit and demarcate the colonial treaty border. In January, the Security Council extended the UNMEE mandate until the end of July. However, UN engagement in the border dispute between the two countries changed dramatically during the year. Eritrea maintained its restrictions on the Mission, which had not received any fuel from its suppliers in Eritrea since December 2007 and was forced to reduce its operational activities. Despite demands by the Council for Eritrea to resume fuel shipments to the Mission or allow it to import fuel without restrictions, the situation remained unresolved. Cross-border movement and efforts to relocate UN personnel and equipment to Ethiopia were hindered by Eritrean Defence Forces and the Mission was compelled to activate an alternate plan whereby personnel and equipment were regrouped in Asmara and Assab, Eritrea. As those facilities were inadequate for an extended stay of the regrouped troops, the Mission was instructed by the Secretary-General to begin relocating military personnel to their home countries pending a final decision by the Council on the Mission's future. In June, the Council presented to the President of Eritrea and the Prime Minister of Ethiopia options for future UN engagement, which both countries rejected. Subsequently, the Council terminated the Mission's mandate effective 31 July. No progress was made towards the construction of boundary pillars between the two countries in the manner foreseen in 2006 by the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission. In its final report, the Commission said that a copy of the maps illustrating the points of demarcation of the boundary between the two countries was deposited with the Secretary-General on 17 January. The Commission, having terminated its mandate, considered itself functus officio.

Implementation of Algiers Agreements

Report of Secretary-General (January). In his January report on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2008/40 & Corr.1], submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 1320(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 176], the Secretary-General said that the Eritrean defence forces continued to induct troops into the Temporary Security Zone. UNMEE observed some 500 newly deployed Eritrean soldiers in the Zone in Sector West, 300 in Sector Centre and 100 in Subsector East. Some 17 new Eritrean camps were established in the Zone and adjacent areas. Eritrea maintained all previously imposed restrictions on the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE). It maintained the 45 permanent restrictions on UNMEE freedom of movement in a number of areas [YUN 2007, p. 288], and banned the Mission from carrying out night patrols. The Mission had not received any fuel from its suppliers in Eritrea since 1 December 2007, forcing UNMEE to reduce important operational activities, including patrols, demining and the provision of administrative support to regional locations and team sites. The Mission repeatedly raised the matter with the Eritrean Commissioner. It also requested permission to import fuel from the United Nations Mission in the Sudan (UNMIS), but did not receive a response. On 15

January, UNMEE reported that if the situation was not resolved through the immediate provision of fuel authorized by Eritrea, the Mission would be compelled to begin relocating its personnel from the country and effectively halt its operations.

The Secretary-General reported that Ethiopia and Eritrea had not complied with Council resolution 1767(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 289], which called on the parties to de-escalate the situation, including by returning to the 16 December 2004 levels of deployment and by avoiding provocative military activities. In an interview broadcast on Eritrean television on 5 January, President Isaias Afwerki of Eritrea reaffirmed his 2007 position that the border issue had been legally resolved, and that Eritrea considered the border demarcated [ibid., p. 293]. In a 15 January letter to the Council, President Afwerki stated that the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission [YUN 2000, p. 180] had terminated its functions by completing its work through 'virtual demarcation' and that the boundary was demarcated. He urged the Council to compel the evacuation of the Ethiopian army and institutions occupying sovereign Eritrean territories.

In a letter of 18 January to the Secretary-General, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia said that the Commission's virtual demarcation had no validity in international law, and attempts to equate the status of its 13 April 2002 delimitation decision [YUN 2002, p. 88] and its 27 November 2006 statement [YUN 2006, p. 324], in which the Commission identified the location of points for the placement of border pillars, were unacceptable, and therefore could not be equally binding. Ethiopia fully accepted the 2002 delimitation decision as final and binding and was committed to its implementation and the full demarcation of the border. On the same date, the Minister of Foreign Affairs also sent a letter to the Council, in which he described the Commission's virtual demarcation as "legal fiction". He stressed that Eritrea was in breach of the 2000 Algiers Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between Ethiopia and Eritrea [YUN 2000, p. 173], as it had violated the Temporary Security Zone, and urged the Council to take appropriate measures against that party.

In early January, the Secretariat informed Ethiopia and Eritrea that the Secretary-General intended to proceed with the appointment of the candidate for the post of the Secretary-General's Special Representative proposed in December 2007. Both countries indicated that they would appreciate it if the Secretary-General did not move forward with the appointment at that time.

The Secretary-General called on the parties to comply with the Council's demands as set out in resolution 1767(2007). In light of the restrictions on UNMEE operations, including the stoppage of fuel supplies, he recommended a one-month technical roll-over of the UNMEE mandate. In the meantime, the Secretary-General would review developments on the ground and the challenges facing UNMEE, and prepare recommendations on the Mission's future direction, including possible withdrawal or relocation.

Report of Boundary Commission (January).

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report [S/2008/40 & Corr.1] (see above) was the twenty-sixth report of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission. The Commission stated that, notwithstanding the September 2007 meeting of the two parties [YUN 2007, p. 290], no progress was made towards building boundary pillars in the manner foreseen in the Commission's 27 November 2006 statement. In stipulating that the boundary stood automatically as demarcated by the boundary points listed in the annex to the statement, the Commission considered that it had fulfilled its mandate, and remained in existence to deal with remaining administrative matters.

Communication. In a letter of 29 January to the Security Council [S/2008/54], Eritrea said that the final and binding demarcation of the boundary was expected to be completed within six months of the Boundary Commission's 2002 delimitation decision [YUN 2002, p. 188], but the process had been held hostage by Ethiopia for nearly six years. The final and binding delimitation and demarcation of the boundary was exclusively the mandate of the Boundary Commission, and no State had the right to intervene in the process. Eritrea urged the Council to focus on the fundamental issue of Ethiopia's withdrawal from sovereign Eritrean territory. Eritrea also stated that the Secretary-General's January report was presented by the Secretary-General's Acting Special Representative in total disregard for its previous protests and concerns. It reiterated its protest regarding the Acting Special Representative, about whom Eritrea expressed its disapproval in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 325] and in February 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 287].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 January [meeting 5829], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1798(2008). The draft [S/2008/49] was submitted by Belgium.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President pertaining to the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea (hereinafter referred to as "the parties") and the requirements contained therein, including in particular resolutions 1320(2000) of 15 September 2000, 1430(2002) of 14 August 2002, 1466(2003) of 14 March 2003, 1640(2005) of 23 November 2005, 1681(2006) of 31 May 2006, 1710(2006) of 29 September 2006, 1741(2007) of 30 January 2007 and 1767(2007) of 30 July 2007,

Stressing that the physical demarcation of the border between Eritrea and Ethiopia would support a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the dispute between the parties and the normalization of their relations,

Expressing its deep concern about the continuing dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea, and over the continued tense and potentially unstable security situation in the Temporary Security Zone and the adjacent areas, and stressing that it is the primary responsibility of the parties to end this situation by fulfilling expeditiously their obligations under the Algiers Agreements,

Reaffirming once again the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone as provided for in paragraphs 12 to 14 of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities, and recalling the objectives of its establishment, in particular to create conditions conducive to a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the conflict, and the commitment of the parties to respect the Temporary Security Zone,

3. Reiterates its call upon Eritrea and Ethiopia to maintain their full commitment to the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000, and to de-escalate the situation, including by returning to the 16 December 2004 levels of deployment;

4. Underlines that Eritrea and Ethiopia bear the primary responsibility for achieving a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the border dispute and normalizing their relations, demands that they take immediately concrete steps in order to complete the process launched by the Peace Agreement of 12 December 2000 by enabling physical demarcation of the border, and urges them to normalize their relations;

5. Reiterates its demands on Eritrea to withdraw immediately all troops and heavy military equipment from the Temporary Security Zone, to provide the Mission with the access, assistance, support and protection required for the performance of its duties and to remove immediately and without preconditions the restrictions on the Mission;

6. Reiterates its call upon Ethiopia to reduce the number of military forces in the areas adjacent to the Temporary Security Zone;

7. Notes with grave concern the Mission's critical fuel levels, demands that the Government of Eritrea resume immediately fuel shipments to the Mission or allow the Mission to import fuel without restrictions, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of developments;

8. Reiterates its call upon both parties to fully cooperate with the Mission with a view to urgently reactivating the work of the Military Coordination Commission, which remains a unique forum to discuss pressing military and security issues;

9. Strongly supports the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General and the international community to engage with Eritrea and Ethiopia to help them to normalize their relations, to promote stability between the parties and to lay the foundation for a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the dispute, and urges the parties to accept the Secretary-General's good offices;

13. Expresses its deep appreciation for the contribution and dedication of the troop-contributing countries to the work of the Mission;

14. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Communications. In a statement of 1 February [S/2008/68], Eritrea said that the Boundary Commission's demarcation by coordinates (virtual demarcation) constituted a culmination of the arbitration process and a final and comprehensive settlement of the border issue. The Security Council had no other authority or function other than enforcing the Commission's delimitation and demarcation determinations. As resolution 1798(2008) was in contravention of fundamental premises of the UN Charter and key principles of international law, and distorted fundamental tenets of the Algiers Peace Agreement, Eritrea considered that resolution irrelevant.

In a letter of 1 February to the Council [S/2008/66], the Secretary-General referred to his letter of 21 January to the Council on the fuel crisis facing UNMEE and his appeal for President Afwerki's personal intervention to facilitate the resumption of fuel delivery. The Secretary-General had yet to receive a response from President Afwerki, and UNMEE had not been authorized to import fuel directly or from UNMIS. Consequently, UNMEE operations were coming to a halt. He informed the Council that if the Eritrean authorities did not reinstate the fuel supply by 6 February, he would be compelled to instruct UNMEE to begin relocating personnel and equipment from Eritrea. Under the UNMEE contingency plan, some of the Mission's troops would have to be relocated temporarily to the Ethiopian side until a decision was taken on the longer-term presence of UNMEE, while other troops might be concentrated in Asmara, Eritrea, for temporary evacuation to their home countries. A technical assessment mission led by the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) would work with UNMEE and the Eritrean and Ethiopian authorities on options for the Mission's future direction. If Eritrea insisted on maintaining restrictions that would endanger UNMEE personnel, the Secretary-General would have to consider the total withdrawal of the Mission and recommend the termination of its mandate.

In a press statement of 4 February [SC/9240], the Security Council expressed its concern about the fact that the restrictions on fuel deliveries had not been lifted, reiterated its demand that Eritrea lift those restrictions without preconditions, and requested Eritrea to facilitate the dispatch of the UN technical assessment mission, which was due to depart for the region on 5 February.

In a statement of 15 February [S/2008/100] on the relocation on UNMEE, Eritrea said that the insinuation of impending danger to UNMEE troops in Eritrea was unfounded, and Eritrea could not acquiesce in temporary relocation or some other new arrangement that was at variance with the provisions of the Agreement. Eritrea called again on the Council to redress the situation and ensure the removal of the Ethiopian occupation of Eritrean territories.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 15 February [meeting 5838], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/7 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls that on 30 January 2008 it adopted resolution 1798(2008) on the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea. The Council is following with the utmost concern the situation confronting the Mission. It expresses its full support for the efforts of the Secretary-General to address this problem.

The Council notes with great concern that, by maintaining restrictions on the Mission despite the numerous demands of the Council and by refusing to reinstate fuel deliveries to the Mission, the Government of Eritrea has created a situation in which a temporary relocation of personnel and equipment from Eritrea has been rendered inevitable. The Council also expresses deep concern about the impediments and logistical constraints put on the Mission in its attempts to organize this temporary relocation. The Council condemns such steps taken by Eritrea.

The Council strongly condemns the lack of cooperation from the Government of Eritrea, which not only gravely contravenes Council resolutions and the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000 but also fails to comply with Eritrea's general obligation to assist forces that have been stationed with its consent. The Council holds Eritrea responsible for the safety and security of the Mission and its personnel.

The Council demands that the Government of Eritrea resume full cooperation with the Mission, including by ending all its restrictions on the Mission, and abide by all its obligations as a State Member of the United Nations.

The Council expresses its determination to closely monitor the situation and to consider further appropriate steps for the safety and protection of the Mission and its personnel.

Relocation of UNMEE

In a March special report [S/2008/145], the Secretary-General said that the situation concerning the non-delivery of fuel to UNMEE remained unresolved at the end of January, forcing the Mission to reduce its daily patrols in the Temporary Security Zone from 60 to 20. UNMEE estimated that if it maintained the minimum level of operations without replenishing its stocks, the fuel supply would be completely exhausted by the end of March. A technical assessment mission, composed of participants from the UN Departments of Peacekeeping Operations, Field Support and Safety and Security, visited Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 6 to 11 February; it was not able to travel to Eritrea due to the cancellation of the participants' visas by the Eritrean authorities. In a note of 8 February, the Secretariat informed Eritrea of the decision to relocate UNMEE personnel and requested it to extend the necessary cooperation to the Mission. The technical assessment mission, UNMEE and the Ministry of Defence of Ethiopia agreed to the emergency relocation plan on 10 February. The plan provided for the cross-border movement of 1,375 military personnel and their equipment from the Temporary Security Zone to five sites in Ethiopia. An advance unit of the UNMEE Indian Battalion carrying equipment in five vehicles was allowed to cross the border on 11 February. On 12 February, vehicles of the Mine Action Coordination Centre were stopped by Eritrean soldiers in Sector Centre, and two vehicles of the Indian Battalion were prevented from crossing the border in Subsector

East; the Mine Action Coordination Centre vehicles were allowed to cross the border on 13 February. In all, the Eritrean authorities allowed no more than six vehicles to cross into Ethiopia. On 15 February, the commercial company that distributed food rations to UNMEE informed the Mission that it would not be able to distribute the following week's rations, as its sub-contracted Eritrean company had stated that it had no vehicles "to do business for UNMEE". The Department of Field Support raised the issue with the Permanent Representative of Eritrea, informing him that some of the relocating contingents had only two days of emergency rations left. The same day, one month of rations were delivered to UNMEE in Asmara.

Efforts by UNMEE to engage the Eritrean authorities on 12 and 15 February to request them to facilitate the relocation to Ethiopia were unsuccessful: the Eritrean authorities maintained that the relocation was a "unilateral decision" by the United Nations, and the relocation plan had to be abandoned. On 14 and 15 February, the Secretariat briefed countries contributing troops to UNMEE on the developments. All countries considered the situation facing UNMEE and the measures imposed by the Eritrean authorities as unacceptable. They demanded that Eritrea provide the fuel required for relocating the Mission and allow UNMEE peacekeepers to leave Eritrea with their equipment in a dignified and orderly manner.

UNMEE was compelled to activate an alternative contingency plan, under which personnel and equipment from the Temporary Security Zone were regrouped in Asmara and Assab, Eritrea, beginning on 17 February. Following that date, a number of incidents occurred in which Eritrean soldiers prevented the movement of UNMEE personnel and equipment. In a letter of 20 February (see below), Eritrea stated that UNMEE had not informed the Eritrean authorities of its decision to regroup its personnel in Asmara until 19 February. The Secretary-General stated, however, that his Deputy Special Representative met with the Acting Eritrean Commissioner in charge of liaison with UNMEE on 12 February to discuss the relocation arrangements, but the Commissioner maintained that he had no instructions to discuss the relocation. UNMEE also sent notes to the Eritrean authorities on 15 and 18 February informing them of the status of the temporary relocation. On 19 February, the Commissioner informed the Deputy Special Representative that Eritrea would allow the movement of the blocked personnel and equipment to Asmara. Nevertheless, Eritrean soldiers continued to prevent the relocation. On 20 February, UNMEE informed the Commissioner of the difficulties the Mission was facing; the same day, the blocked convoys were allowed to move to Asmara. UNMEE continued to encounter problems, however, including incidents on 23 and 25 February, in which Eritrean soldiers prevented the movement of UNMEE fuel and equipment. All military units were given orders to carry as much of their equipment as the available fuel would allow. The Mission was further instructed to inventory all equipment and materiel that could not be relocated, and to present those inventories to the Eritrean authorities, conveying the expectation that Eritrea would safeguard the materiel until it could be removed. On 22 February, UNMEE informed the Eritrean authorities about the UN equipment that would be left at the vacated sites and requested their cooperation in keeping it safe; it also met with the Eritrean Commissioner to discuss the matter. The Commissioner stated that since UNMEE had decided unilaterally to relocate from the Temporary Security Zone, Eritrea should not be held responsible for any items left behind. Also on 22 February, the Secretariat requested Eritrea to reconsider its position, resume fuel supplies, lift all restrictions, and allow UNMEE to carry on with its mandate. The Eritrean authorities had still not responded. As at 26 February, 681 personnel of the 1,008 stationed in Sectors West and Centre of the Temporary Security Zone had been relocated to Asmara. In Subsector East, 101 troops from the Indian Battalion and the Indian Construction Company, as well as 11 military observers from various countries, were regrouped at Assab. The military personnel deployed on the Ethiopian side were not affected by the fuel crisis and continued to perform their tasks.

The Secretary-General said that there were no adequate facilities in Asmara and Assab for an extended stay of the regrouped troops, and a further relocation from Asmara and Assab to the designated sites in Ethiopia would be a lengthy and complex exercise. He therefore instructed UNMEE to begin relocating the military personnel in Asmara and Assab to their home countries pending a final decision by the Security Council on the Mission's future. The necessary personnel from the Indian, Jordanian and Kenyan contingents would remain in Asmara as a rear party to secure the contingent-owned equipment and facilitate its transportation when a decision was taken. Some 60 international civilian personnel, including the Deputy Special Representative and the Chief of Mission Support, would also remain in Asmara for liaison purposes and to inventory the equipment that would be left behind. The military and civilian personnel deployed on the Ethiopian side would remain in their positions until the Council decided on the future of UNMEE.

The Secretary-General observed that the restrictions imposed on UNMEE were unacceptable and in breach of the fundamental principles of peacekeeping. In view of the untenable situation in which Eritrea placed UNMEE, it was vital to relocate the Mission's personnel to sustainable locations. Once the relocation was completed, he intended to submit a report to the Council providing options and recommendations for any future UN peacekeeping presence in the area. He urged Eritrea and Ethiopia to avoid any action that could exacerbate the situation in the border areas and undermine the Agreement.

Communications (February-March). In letters to the Security Council dated 20 February [S/2008/114], 3 March [S/2008/148] and 4 March [S/2008/156], Eritrea addressed the issue of the UNMEE fuel supply, the regrouping of UNMEE troops and equipment and the safety and security of the troops. In those communications, Eritrea maintained that there was no threat to the safety and security of UN troops in the country and that the issue of the UNMEE fuel supply was technical and could have been resolved without politicizing it. It stated that the United Nations had made unilaterally the decision to regroup UNMEE troops. In that connection, Eritrea had not been adequately notified or provided in advance with the details of any changes in the Mission's status and major movements outside its area of responsibility. Notifications received from UNMEE were incomplete and did not include details on the scope and duration of the relocation, the legal explanation of its implications in terms of the Algiers Agreement, or logistical details. Communications on the regrouping of troops were received after the regrouping had been put into effect or, as in the case of the Mission personnel moved to Asmara, Eritrea was informed when the bulk of the troops had already arrived. Eritrea was also not provided in advance with the plan for the move or the handling of the Mission's heavy equipment. Subsequently, Eritrea had approached DPKO to ascertain UN plans concerning UNMEE, but no information was provided. Eritrea also reiterated its request for a response from the Secretary-General regarding Ethiopia's occupation of Eritrean territories in violation of the UN Charter and Algiers Peace Agreement. It stated that it could not be blamed for a lack of cooperation if its views and concerns as a host country were disregarded.

In a letter of 10 March to the Security Council [S/2008/172], Eritrea stated that it had no role in the major decisions that affected the status of UNMEE in Eritrea. The decision to relocate UNMEE troops from Eritrea to Ethiopia was done through closed consultation between the Secretary-General and Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi during the tenth ordinary session of the AU Assembly (Addis Ababa, 31 January–2 February). No consultations were held between the Secretariat and Eritrean authorities concerning the regrouping of UN troops to Asmara, and there remained a lack of clear information from the Secretariat on critical matters pertaining to the future status of UNMEE.

In a letter of 25 March to the Secretary-General [S/2008/200], President Afwerki stated that Eritrea could not accept any arrangements that would legitimize the Ethiopian occupation of sovereign Eritrean territories, and urged the Secretary-General to ensure the evacuation of the occupation. With regard to UNMEE, the President said that Eritrea had no wish to retain UNMEE equipment. When informed fully and clearly on the operational details regarding the evacuation of the Mission, it would not be difficult to put in place appropriate measures towards its smooth implementation.

In a letter of 28 March to the Secretary-General [S/2008/214], Ethiopia referred to President Afwerki's 25 March letter and stated that Eritrea had undermined the core elements of the 2000 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities [YUN 2000, p. 173], as well as the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone and a fully operational UNMEE. Ethiopia was not in occupation of any Eritrean territory, nor could the issue of occupation arise before demarcation was finalized. Eritrea had increased tension along the border between the two countries as it expanded its takeover of the Zone, and increased restrictions on UNMEE operations to the point where the Mission's effectiveness was destroyed. Those actions were taken in deliberate defiance of the United Nations and the Security Council, as well as the Algiers Agreement, which Eritrea was working to nullify. Ethiopia believed that it was necessary for the Council to impose punitive sanctions on Eritrea to ensure that it fulfilled the international obligations to which it had committed itself in 2000.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In his April special report on Ethiopia and Eritrea [S/2008/226], the Secretary-General said that UNMEE reached a critical turning point with the temporary relocation of the Mission's military personnel and equipment from Eritrea. Following the further temporary relocation of the Eritrea-based military personnel to their home countries, the UNMEE presence in Eritrea consisted of 164 military personnel, who constituted a rear party that would remain in the country to protect contingent-owned equipment until it was shipped. A small number of civilian personnel maintained a liaison with the Eritrean authorities and provided administrative support in handling the remaining equipment. The Mission's military personnel in Ethiopia continued to carry out their mandated tasks. The UNMEE presence in Ethiopia consisted of some 302 military personnel, including 90 military observers, deployed at seven sites along the southern boundary of the Temporary Security Zone and at UNMEE headquarters in Addis Ababa.

Taking into account the views expressed by Council members, together with the positions of Eritrea and Ethiopia, the Secretary-General presented four options that could be considered for the UN peacekeeping presence in Eritrea and Ethiopia: Eritrea could reconsider its position, resume fuel supplies to UNMEE, lift all restrictions and allow the Mission to continue to perform the tasks originally envisaged in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities; UNMEE could be terminated, leaving no UN peacekeeping presence in the area; a small observer mission could be deployed in the border area; and liaison offices could be established in Asmara and Addis Ababa to maintain UN readiness to assist the parties in implementing the border demarcation decision of the Boundary Commission, as well as the Comprehensive Peace Agreement.

On 20 March, the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Edmond Mulet, met with the Permanent Representative of Eritrea to seek his Government's views on those options and on the future of UNMEE. The Permanent Representative said that he would not discuss the Mission's future or the options because the United Nations had already taken the decision to relocate the Mission without consulting Eritrea.

Ethiopian authorities had informed the technical assessment mission that Ethiopia would find it extremely difficult to accept the long-term deployment of UNMEE limited to the Ethiopian side of the border. Such a deployment would effectively create a new security zone on Ethiopian territory, with legal implications for the status of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities and the Temporary Security Zone. The maximum Ethiopia could agree to would be an emergency relocation of UNMEE for a limited duration to ensure the safety and security of the peacekeepers while the Security Council decided on the future of the Mission. On 25 March, the Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Jean-Marie Guéhenno, discussed the options with Ethiopia, which informed him that it would continue to cooperate with the United Nations and would consider the proposed options. Ethiopia stressed that the two parties had the primary responsibility to resolve the dispute between them. Ethiopia would support the Secretary-General's good offices and was ready to meet with Eritrea to discuss the dispute.

On 26 March, the Secretary-General's Chef de Cabinet, Vijay Nambiar, met with the Permanent Representative of Eritrea, who stated that the Eritrean authorities were ready to cooperate in the relocation of UNMEE and would facilitate the transportation of the Mission's equipment to the seaports of Assab and Massawa, as requested by UNMEE. In order to transport UN and contingent-owned equipment from the Temporary Security Zone to Asmara and Assab, Eritrea requested that it be provided with an inventory of all equipment left in the Zone. UNMEE and the Secretariat undertook to provide the requested lists.

The Secretary-General observed that the military occupation by Eritrea of the Temporary Security Zone and the restrictions it imposed on UNMEE violated the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities and undermined the basis of the Mission's mandate. The total withdrawal of UNMEE could result in an escalation of tensions in the border area, with the risk of a resumption of hostilities. The deployment of an observer mission would require the agreement of both countries, but its mere presence might not provide adequate deterrence, especially against the possible accidental resumption of hostilities. The establishment of liaison offices would work only if both parties were prepared to proceed with the implementation of the final and binding decision of the Boundary Commission, with UN support. The Secretary-General recommended that the Council authorize him to explore with the two parties the four options, with the understanding that the resulting arrangements would have to be accompanied by parallel Council efforts to address the fundamental legal and political issues at the heart of the dispute. In the meantime, the Secretary-General would engage the parties on the options and report to the Council before the expiration of the UNMEE mandate on 31 July, setting out specific proposals agreed upon with the parties. Pending a final discussion by the Council on the envisaged recommendations, the temporary relocation of UNMEE from Eritrea and the deployment of the Mission in Ethiopia would remain in place as an interim arrangement. The Secretary-General urged Eritrea and Ethiopia to consider the consequences of the continued stalemate and accept the assistance of the Council and his good offices in implementing the agreements to which they had committed themselves.

Communications (April). In a letter of 15 April to the Security Council [S/2008/254], Eritrea said that it noted several omissions and incorrect assertions and assumptions in the Secretary-General's April report, particularly regarding the circumstances surrounding the departure of UNMEE, the status of the Temporary Security Zone and the completion of the Boundary Commission's work. It highlighted elements taken from the Algiers Agreements and previous reports of the Secretary-General that would complete the special report, and requested that they be read together with the report. Eritrea found the Secretary-General's observation concerning its military occupation of the Zone and restrictions placed on UNMEE unresponsive to, and incongruous with, prevailing reality. The Zone, which lay inside Eritrea, was not created as a permanent buffer zone, and its status changed with the completion of the Commission's work in November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 293], despite Ethiopia's failure to respect its commitment to the Algiers Peace Agreement. The presence of some Eritrean troops in their own territory could not constitute military occupation.

On 18 April [S/2008/262], Ethiopia said that Eritrea continued to question its acceptance of the Boundary Commission's delimitation decision and appeared to have no interest in resolving the dispute legally and peacefully. Eritrea had consistently violated the Agreement on the Cessation of Hostilities over several years through its incursions into the Temporary Security Zone and the restrictions on UNMEE beginning in 2004. Ethiopia expected the Security Council to take punitive measures against Eritrea for those violations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 April [meeting 5883], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/12 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council notes that the continuation of Eritrea's obstructions towards the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea has reached a level such as to undermine the basis of the Mission's mandate and has compelled the Mission to temporarily relocate. The Council recalls its previous condemnation of Eritrea's lack of cooperation.

The Council notes the underlying fundamental issues and stands ready to assist the parties to overcome the current stalemate, taking into account the interests and concerns of both parties.

The Council will, in the light of consultations with the parties, decide on the terms of a future United Nations engagement and on the future of the Mission.

The Council stresses, in accordance with its repeated statements, that the primary responsibility for achieving a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the border dispute and normalizing their relations rests with the parties themselves.

The Council urges both sides to show maximum restraint and to refrain from any threat or use of force against each other and calls upon the parties to address forthwith the unresolved issues in accordance with the commitments made in the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000 and the Peace Agreement of 12 December 2000 ("the Algiers Agreements").

Communications (April–July). On 30 April [S/2008/287], Eritrea said that in presidential statement S/PRST/2008/12, the Security Council not only neglected to endorse the Boundary Commission's final delimitation and demarcation decision of 27 November 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 324], but also failed to demand the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops from sovereign Eritrean territories. As the Commission completed its demarcation on 30 November 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 293], the specific condition stated in Council resolution 1320(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 176] concerning the UNMEE mandate and the completion of the delimitation and demarcation process had been met, necessitating the Council to terminate the Mission's mandate.

On 5 June [S/2008/368], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the temporary relocation of UNMEE military personnel to their home countries was completed on 19 May. Pending a Council decision on the Mission's future, he proposed that the temporarily relocated troops be considered repatriated. The Council agreed with that proposal on 30 June [S/2008/427].

In a letter of 7 July to the Security Council [S/2008/446], President Afwerki stated that in mid-April, Ethiopia invaded Mount Musa Ali, situated at the borders of Djibouti, Eritrea and Ethiopia, thereby occupying sovereign Eritrean and Djiboutian lands. The Council had not taken any remedial action against Ethiopia's act of aggression. Instead, it issued presidential statement S/PRST/2008/20 (see p. 316) against Eritrea on the basis of a bogus accusation by Djibouti. Eritrea said that the whole affair was concocted to cover up Ethiopia's acts of aggression and repeated violations of the peace agreement and that Ethiopia's new flouting of international law constituted another reminder to the Council to shoulder its legal responsibilities.

In a letter of 15 July [S/2008/463], Eritrea said that it did not report the invasion of Mount Musa Ali by Ethiopia on the date it occurred because it could not consider the act in isolation from Ethiopia's illegal occupation of Eritrea's sovereign territories for the previous six years. The United States misused its leverage in the Council to paralyse implementation of the Boundary Commission during that period; its objective of derailing the legal process continued unabated. Eritrea also called on the Council to examine the acts of destabilization fomented in the region by the United States and seek appropriate remedies.

On 17 July [S/2008/468], Ethiopia, referring to Eritrea's recent communications, including its letter of 15 July, said that there had been no Ethiopian takeover of any Eritrean or Djiboutian territory. Djibouti itself had made no such claim about Musa Ali.

Termination of UNMEE mandate

In a letter of 24 July to the Secretary-General [S/2008/487], Eritrea referred to a DPKO aide-memoire of 22 July detailing options on how the United Nations could most effectively support Eritrea and Ethiopia in implementing the Algiers Agreements. Eritrea said that the options appeared to be geared towards preventing a resumption of hostilities through a permanent presence of a UN observer force, in effect legitimizing Ethiopia's illegal occupation of sovereign Eritrean territories. The idea of a UN special envoy at that stage of the process further accommodated Ethiopia's persistent request for an alternative mechanism to tamper with and modify the Boundary Commission's delimitation and demarcation determinations. Eritrea could not accept that state of affairs. It would have no problem restoring good-neighbourly relations with Ethiopia but for that to happen, Ethiopia had to withdraw its troops from sovereign Eritrean territories. Eritrea called on UN institutions to channel their efforts towards addressing that obstacle.

An addendum to Eritrea's letter of 24 July [S/2008/487/Add.1] contained a letter of 1 July from the Legal Adviser to the Office of the President of Eritrea to the Boundary Commission, stating that Eritrea considered the Commission's mandate fulfilled. Eritrea continued to press the Security Council to exercise its legal authority in enforcing the Commission's delimitation and demarcation determinations.

In a letter of 28 July to the Security Council [S/2008/496], the Secretary-General said that on 22 July, his Acting Special Representative consulted with the Ethiopian Government, and the Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations met with the Permanent Representative of Eritrea to the United Nations to seek their views on the options for future UN engagement in the two countries, which were presented in identical letters of 10 June from the Council President to Ethiopian Prime Minister Zenawi and Eritrean President Afwerki. The options included a small military observer mission in Ethiopia; a small political and military liaison office in Ethiopia; and a Special Envoy of the Secretary-General based in New York. As indicated in a letter of 24 July from Ethiopia, which was annexed to the Secretary-General's letter, and the letter of the same date from Eritrea (see above), both parties rejected those options. The Secretary-General welcomed their earlier declarations that they had no intention of restarting the war, but believed that the risk of escalation of tension in the border area and a resumption of hostilities following the withdrawal of UNMEE remained a reality. He expressed concern over the destabilizing effect for the Horn of Africa of the continuing crisis, as well as the negative impact on prospects for economic development and the welfare of the region's people. The Council should keep the issue on its agenda and remain engaged with the parties to address the legal, political and security issues at the core of the crisis. The Secretary-General intended to continue working closely with the parties through his good offices with a view to normalizing their relations.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 5946], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1827(2008). The draft [S/2008/491] was submitted by Belgium.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions and the statements by its President pertaining to the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Stressing once again its unwavering commitment to the peace process and to the full and expeditious implementation of the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities of 18 June 2000 and the Peace Agreement of 12 December 2000 (hereinafter referred to as “the Algiers Agreements”) as a basis for peaceful and cooperative relations between Ethiopia and Eritrea,

Considering that Ethiopia and Eritrea bear a shared responsibility in the implementation of the Algiers Agreements, in which they agreed that the delimitation and demarcation determinations of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission shall be final and binding and that their forces shall respect the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone,

Reaffirming that the primary responsibility for achieving a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the border dispute and normalizing their relations rests with Ethiopia and Eritrea, and that the Security Council stands ready to assist them in addressing the underlying fundamental issues, taking into account the interests and concerns of both countries,

Regretting that Eritrea’s obstructions towards the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea reached a level so as to undermine the basis of the Mission’s mandate and compelled the Mission to temporarily relocate from Eritrea, stressing that this relocation was without prejudice to the Algiers Agreements and to the integrity of the Temporary Security Zone, and recalling the Council’s previous condemnation of Eritrea’s lack of cooperation,

Commending the efforts made by the Mission and its military and civilian personnel to accomplish its duties, despite the difficult circumstances, and expressing its deep appreciation for the contribution and dedication of the troop-contributing countries to the work of the Mission,

Having considered the special report of the Secretary-General of 7 April 2008, the letters from Ethiopia and Eritrea, dated 17 and 18 June 2008 respectively, in response to the letters dated 10 June 2008 from the President of the Security Council, and the letter dated 28 July 2008 from the Secretary-General in response to the letter dated 3 July 2008 from the President of the Security Council,

1. Decides to terminate the mandate of the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea effective on 31 July 2008, emphasizes that this termination is without prejudice to the obligations of Ethiopia and Eritrea under the Algiers Agreements, and calls upon both countries to cooperate fully with the United Nations, including in the process of liquidation of the Mission;

2. Demands that Ethiopia and Eritrea comply fully with their obligations under the Algiers Agreements, show maximum restraint and refrain from any threat or use of force against each other, and avoid provocative military activities;

3. Strongly supports the ongoing efforts of the Secretary-General and the international community to engage with Ethiopia and Eritrea to help them to implement the Algiers Agreements, to normalize their relations, to promote stability between them and to lay the foundation for a comprehensive and lasting peace between them, and again urges Ethiopia and Eritrea to accept the Secretary-General’s good offices;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to further explore with Ethiopia and Eritrea the possibility of a United Nations presence in Ethiopia and Eritrea in the context of the maintenance of international peace and security;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council regularly informed of the situation between Ethiopia and Eritrea and to make recommendations as appropriate;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Further developments

Final report of Boundary Commission. In a letter of 2 October [S/2008/630], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that he would no longer provide regular reports on the situation between Eritrea and Ethiopia. The letter contained the twenty-seventh and final report of the Boundary Commission, covering the period from 1 January to 25 August 2008. The Commission noted that on 17 January, a copy of the maps illustrating the points identified in the annex to the 27 November 2006 statement [YUN 2006, p. 324] was deposited with the Secretary-General; another was retained in the office of the United Nations Cartographer for public reference. Ethiopia continued to be in arrears of its share of the Commission’s expenses, in breach of the Algiers Agreement. A final account would be transmitted to the parties and the remaining funds held on deposit would be returned to the United Nations Trust Fund.

The Commission on 18 June 2008 had sent a letter to the parties stating that more than six months had passed since the expiry of the period indicated in the Commission’s 27 November 2006 statement. Since there had been no communication from the parties concerning the placing of pillars on the ground, the Commission had to conclude that the boundary stood demarcated in accordance with the coordinates annexed to the 2006 statement; that no further activity on its part was called for; and that it should therefore take the few final steps to wind up its operation. If no reply to the contrary was received within two weeks, the Commission would assume that there was no objection to that procedure.

Eritrea had replied on 1 July 2008, stating that it considered the Commission’s mandate as fulfilled, and that it continued to press the Security Council to exercise its authority in enforcing the Commission’s determinations. Ethiopia had not responded. Since the Commission had concluded all administrative matters connected with the termination of its mandate, it considered itself functus officio.

Communications. In a letter of 24 October to the Secretary-General [S/2008/673], Eritrea referred to the Boundary Commission's final report (see p. 311), and urged the Council to ensure the eviction of Ethiopia's occupation from its sovereign territories, including the new occupation of its land at Mount Musa Ali since May (see p. 310).

On 4 November [S/2008/690], Eritrea drew the Council's attention to Ethiopia's refusal to withdraw from Badme, Dembe Mengul and other sovereign Eritrean territories, as well as Mount Musa Ali, and said that occupation of those territories constituted a violation of the UN Charter.

In a letter of 10 November to the Council [S/2008/700], President Afwerki stated that Ethiopia continued to occupy the town of Badme and other Eritrean territories in violation of fundamental tenets of international law, and that those acts constituted a flagrant breach of the Algiers Peace Agreement and the UN Charter. In April, Ethiopia had gone one step further and occupied the Eritrean part of Mount Musa Ali on the Ethiopia-Djibouti-Eritrea junction.

UNMEE

The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) was established by Security Council resolution 1312(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 174] to monitor and verify implementation of the 2000 Algiers Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities between Eritrea and Ethiopia [ibid., p. 173]. Its core operations, which the Council revised in resolution 1320(2000) [ibid., p. 176] and 1430(2002) [YUN 2002, p. 189], were devoted to observation, reporting, analysis, identification of potential flashpoints and preventive action, chairing the Military Coordination Commission and assisting the Boundary Commission. UNMEE monitored the area within and around the 25-kilometre-wide Temporary Security Zone, which separated the two countries and was divided into Sectors West and Centre and Subsector East. The Mission was headquartered in Addis Ababa and Asmara. In resolution 1798(2008) of 30 January (see p. 304), the Council extended the UNMEE mandate until 31 July 2008 and demanded that Eritrea resume needed fuel shipments to the Mission or allow it to import fuel without restrictions. Eritrea's continued obstructions towards UNMEE, however, undermined the Mission's mandate and compelled it to temporarily relocate its personnel from the Eritrean parts of the Zone to Asmara and Assab, and later to their home countries. The temporary relocation of UNMEE military personnel was completed on 19 May. On 5 June, the Secretary-General proposed that the relocated troops be considered repatriated, pending a Council decision on the future of the Mission; the Council agreed with the proposal on 30 June. By resolution 1827(2008) of 30 July (see p. 310), the Council terminated the UNMEE mandate effective 31 July.

The Acting Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Eritrea and Ethiopia, Azouz Ennifar (Tunisia), was appointed in August 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 326] and served as Chief of Mission until the termination of the UNMEE mandate.

Financing

At its resumed sixty-second session, the General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's performance report on the UNMEE budget for the period 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 295], and the proposed UNMEE budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009 [A/62/811], which amounted to $100,367,400. It also considered the related ACABQ report [A/62/781/Add.17 & Corr.1], which endorsed the proposed appropriation for 2008–2009.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/872], adopted resolution 62/259 without vote [agenda item 148].

In November [A/63/546 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted the revised UNMEE budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, in view of the termination of the Mission's mandate. He proposed that the Assembly reduce the appropriation of $100,367,400 it approved in resolution 62/259 for the maintenance of the Mission to $37,016,400. In a December report [A/63/602], ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's proposal.

Djibouti and Eritrea

Communications. In a letter of 5 May to the Security Council [S/2008/294], Djibouti stated that it had witnessed since February a progressive increase in Eritrean troops at the border between Djibouti and Eritrea, including the preparation of fortifications and battlements; equipment flows; and well-armed Eritrean soldiers on the Djiboutian side of the promontory of the Ras Doumeira mountain range overlooking Red Sea shipping lanes. Refraining from any forceful action, Djibouti attempted to resolve the issue through diplomacy, which included bilateral contacts at all levels. It sought the advice and intercession of a key Gulf State leader and shared its concerns with the diplomatic community in Djibouti, the AU Peace and Security Council and the League of Arab States (LAS). Djibouti's efforts, however, failed to elicit any credible response. Therefore, it had to maintain a state of preparedness for the possibility of an incursion into its territory by Eritrean forces. Djibouti sensed a danger of being drawn into an unwarranted confrontation with Eritrea and considered Eritrea's move a misguided intimidation that constituted a provocation against its sovereignty and territorial integrity. Any attempts by Eritrea to impede Djibouti's progress and disrupt its peace and tranquillity could not be tolerated. Djibouti called on the Security Council to deploy all necessary measures towards preventing another conflict in the region.

On 9 June [S/2008/381], Djibouti informed the Council that although it had explored all the necessary bilateral and regional avenues to resolve the situation, Eritrea had strengthened its troops and made further incursions into Djibouti's territory. Its efforts to find a solution to the crisis were rejected by the Eritrean authorities. Similar efforts were undertaken by friendly countries, and regional organizations, including the AU, LAS and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), dispatched good offices missions. Those efforts failed due to the systematic opposition of Eritrea, which categorically denied that the two countries had any border issues. Eritrea insisted that it was not inclined to engage in fabricated problems that were part of external interferences designed to foment crisis in the region.

Djibouti provided an account of the situation on the ground, as reported by its military authorities as well as independent parties. It said that on 9 May, a delegation from the LAS Peace and Security Council visited Djibouti and reported that the Eritrean army was present in Djiboutian territory in several places, and that intensive work was being carried out in Ras Doumeira and Doumeira Island. On 15 May, Djiboutian military authorities attempted to climb to the top of Ras Doumeira, but at the halfway point were arrested by Eritrean soldiers. Djibouti concluded that Eritrean authorities did not recognize the Djiboutian borders and intended to appropriate a strategic part of Djibouti's sovereign territory without justification. Djibouti hoped that the Council would assume its responsibilities by dispatching a field mission to evaluate the situation and demand that troops pull back to their previous positions.

On 11 June [S/2008/387], Djibouti said that on 10 June, Eritrean armed forces launched unprovoked attacks against Djiboutian army positions. It noted that the act of aggression took place at a time when peace negotiations between Somali parties in Djibouti had resulted in the conclusion of a peace agreement (see p. 278). Djibouti requested the convening of an emergency Security Council meeting to end the aggression by Eritrean armed forces.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 5908], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/20 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council expresses its strong concern about the serious incidents that occurred on 10 June 2008 along the frontier between Djibouti and Eritrea, which led to several deaths and dozens of wounded.

The Council condemns Eritrea's military action against Djibouti in Ras Doumeira and Doumeira Island.

The Council calls upon the parties to commit to a ceasefire and urges both parties, in particular Eritrea, to show maximum restraint and withdraw forces to the status quo ante.

The Council urges both parties, in particular Eritrea, to cooperate and engage in diplomatic efforts to resolve the matter peacefully and in a manner consistent with international law.

The Council welcomes the efforts of the African Union, the League of Arab States and those States that have offered their assistance and calls upon the parties, in particular Eritrea, to engage fully in efforts to resolve the crisis.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General urgently to use his good offices and reach out to both parties, as appropriate and in coordination with regional efforts, to facilitate bilateral discussions to determine arrangements for decreasing the military presence along the border and to develop confidence-building measures to resolve the border situation.

Security Council consideration. On 24 June [meeting 5924], the Director of the Africa Division of the UN Department of Political Affairs, João Honwana, briefed the Council on the situation on the border between Djibouti and Eritrea, which was described as calm but tense. Military regroupings were taking place on either side of the border but the de facto ceasefire between the two countries, observed since the previous week, continued to hold. Local press and other sources reported that Djiboutian forces had reoccupied lost ground and regrouped near the border, but other reports indicated that those forces had retreated to a position about 4 kilometres from the border to be out of range of Eritrean mortars. LAS called on Eritrea to withdraw its forces from the border area; France and Egypt urged Eritrea to allow mediation; and the AU joined the United Nations in calling for talks between the two countries to end the border clashes. In a meeting on 19 June with the Director, Eritrea acknowledged that skirmishes had occurred, but said that Djibouti had initiated the attack and Eritrea had only reacted in self-defence. Eritrea blamed the United States for creating wars in the Horn of Africa; reiterated Eritrea's peaceful intentions towards Djibouti; and questioned the Council's hastiness in issuing presidential statement S/PRST/2008/20. On the same day, Djibouti said that the situation at the border could ignite into a war. Many soldiers had died in the fighting and numerous troops and heavy equipment were present at the border. Eritrea had failed to explain the reasons for its military presence, refused to resume dialogue with Djibouti and rebuffed offers by the President of Yemen to act as a mediator. Djibouti never intended to wage war but had been forced to respond to the attacks. In a meeting on 23 June, the Secretary-General and the Prime Minister of Djibouti agreed on the need to resolve the situation through dialogue, confidence-building, and a return to the status quo ante.

The Prime Minister of Djibouti, Dileita Mohamed Dileita, said that his country thought that Eritrea was pursuing its confrontation with Ethiopia by means of a conflict with Djibouti, through which transited most of the merchandise headed for Ethiopia. Eritrean authorities were hiding behind a total denial of the dispute. Djibouti military forces had been attacked solely by Eritrean forces, and Djibouti would not hesitate to exercise its right to self-defence, accorded under the UN Charter. It had taken all necessary steps to find a diplomatic way out of the crisis in order to avoid being drawn again into a useless conflict. Eritrea, however, rejected all mediation and persisted in denying the existence of any problem. At the same time, it took advantage of the situation to make further territorial gains and strengthen its army's positions. The peace and security of shipping lanes throughout the region were the key stakes in the conflict. There had been no positive developments since the Council's statement S/PRST/2008/20 (see above), and no sign of goodwill regarding the peaceful settlement of the dispute from the Eritrean authorities. Whereas the Djibouti army had withdrawn several kilometres since 12 June, Eritrean troops had again infiltrated Djiboutian territory. Djibouti was prepared to cooperate with the Council and the Secretary-General in their efforts to resolve the unilateral military adventure, which merited the Council's urgent attention.

Eritrea said that it had made no incursion into Djibouti's territory and had no territorial ambitions. There had been numerous contacts between the two Governments, including at the highest level. The leaders of the two countries decided to address the current development in a calm manner that took into account the need to ensure peace and security in the region. There was no territorial or other dispute between Eritrea and Djibouti, and Djibouti's unwarranted hostile campaign was underpinned by, and synchronized with, ulterior motives and regional developments. On 22 April, Ethiopia set up a military camp on Mount Musa Ali, situated at the intersection of the borders of Djibouti, Eritrea and Ethiopia (see p. 310), and deployed long-range artillery and heavy equipment directed at Eritrea. On 10 June, Djibouti was pushed to launch a military attack on the border, and Eritrea pulled its forces back to avoid the attack. On 12 June, Djibouti continued its attack, and Eritrea defended itself. Djibouti, however, accused Eritrea of the very acts that it had perpetrated. The underlying objective of the military provocation was to divert Eritrea from its legal pursuit to ensure Ethiopia's eviction from its sovereign territories in accordance with the final and binding determination of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission [YUN 2006, p. 324], and to embroil Eritrea on another front. Eritrea said that it would continue to value close cooperation with Djibouti, and called on countries with global reach and influence in the region to ensure that their policies became a positive force for development, peace and security for the people of the region.

Press statement. In a press statement of 24 June [SC/9376], the Security Council regretted that Eritrea had not answered the calls sent by presidential statement S/PRST/2008/20 and reiterated its call to the parties, in particular Eritrea, to withdraw forces to the status quo ante. The Council requested the Secretary-General to send a fact-finding mission to the border between Djibouti and Eritrea and called on the parties to facilitate the work of the mission. It also asked the Secretary-General to brief the Council on the situation in less than two weeks, if possible.

Fact-finding mission

The Secretary-General directed the Department of Political Affairs (DPA) to dispatch a fact-finding mission to Djibouti and Eritrea to assess the political, security and humanitarian situation in the area; the mission was also scheduled to visit Ethiopia, which shared a common border with both countries in the area of Mount Musa Ali. The mission, led by Sam Ibok, Deputy Director of the Africa II Division of DPA, visited Addis Ababa (28–31 July and 4–6 August) and Djibouti (1–4 August). The mission could not visit Asmara or the Eritrean side of the border because Eritrea refused to issue visas. The mission submitted its report to the Security Council in September [S/2008/602].

In Addis Ababa, the mission discussed the crisis with representatives of the AU, LAS and the Ethiopian Ministries of Defence and Foreign Affairs. In Djibouti, it met with members of the Government and the diplomatic corps, the UN Resident Coordinator and officials from several UN programmes and agencies. It was also received by the President of Djibouti, Ismail Omar Guelleh. The report discussed the history of the Djibouti-Eritrea border and implications for the status of Doumeira; set out a chronology of developments leading to the clashes of 10–12 June (see p. 316); and described initiatives by the AU and other organizations and actors to defuse tension and foster dialogue.

The clashes reportedly caused more than 35 deaths and left dozens wounded on both sides. The mission found that the Djibouti military had withdrawn 4 or 5 kilometres from the disputed area, in accordance with presidential statement S/PRST/2008/20, and adopted a defensive posture beyond the mortar range of the Eritrean defence forces. The mission was unable to identify clearly anti-aircraft weapons or any other weaponry from its observation point south of the disputed zone. It also could not determine whether the Eritrean defence forces had accomplished their deployment in the area. The security situation on the ground was described as stable but tense; it was not clear how long the Eritrean defence forces were prepared to hold the disputed sites. The mission established the incontestable fact that a stalemate had developed between Djibouti and Eritrea and that it could only be resolved through diplomatic means. Since the beginning of the tensions, relations between the two States had significantly deteriorated, prompting Djibouti to recall its ambassador to Eritrea and expel Eritrea's ambassador to Djibouti in June. Diplomatic relations between the two countries were suspended, as Eritrea continued to downplay the gravity of the situation and rebuff all attempts by regional and international organizations, including the United Nations, to help defuse tension. Only a high-level political intervention accepted by Eritrea could de-escalate the tension and persuade the parties to demilitarize their border and return to the status quo ante. Although the number of displaced persons was relatively low, the militarization of the border had a negative impact on the population.

The mission observed that the developments at the border, especially the militarization of Doumeira, constituted a threat to the stability and socio-economic development of Djibouti. The ongoing tension posed a considerable risk to the country's peace and security. The mission identified an interrelation between the Eritrea-Ethiopia conflict (see p. 302) and the Djibouti-Eritrea crisis: a breakthrough in the Eritrea-Ethiopia peace process would help secure Eritrea's cooperation in demilitarizing its border with Djibouti. In the short term, there might be no resolution of the dispute without the full cooperation of both countries, especially Eritrea.

The mission recommended renewing the offer of the Secretary-General's good offices to defuse the tension. To convey the importance attached by the Secretary-General and the Council to a solution to the crisis, the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs could return to Asmara to consult with the Eritrean leadership. Eritrea should be given a specific time frame to issue the necessary visas and facilitate the work of such a mission, including visits to the Eritrean side of the deployment in Doumeira. UN efforts to resolve the crisis should focus on providing the two countries with a platform to discuss the border and agree on a fair process that would lead to the demarcation of their frontier. Other recommendations were related to confidence-building through demilitarization of the border and better treatment of deserters of the Eritrean defence forces who crossed into Djibouti between April and June. The mission concluded that a sovereign country was being drawn into a crippling and unaffordable military mobilization to deal with a situation that might ultimately threaten national, regional and international peace. If the Secretary-General's good offices offer was again rebuffed by Eritrea, the matter should be referred to the Council for appropriate action.

Communication. In a letter of 16 September to the Security Council [S/2008/605], Eritrea reiterated its position regarding the report of the UN fact-finding mission, stating that the United States pursued a policy aimed at embroiling the Horn of Africa in an endless conflict, and had instigated the conflict between Djibouti and Eritrea.

Further developments

Security Council consideration. On 3 October [S/2008/635], Djibouti informed the Security Council that President Guelleh wished to address the Council in connection with the Djibouti–Eritrea question. Speaking before the Council on 23 October [meeting 6000], President Guelleh said that following the forceful occupation of part of Djibouti's territory, his country adopted a policy of calm and caution that provided sufficient time for bilateral contacts to resolve the differences between Djibouti and Eritrea amicably and peacefully. Eritrea's military construction on the ground continued, however, and the lack of cooperation on the part of the Eritrean authorities and their failure to respond to Djibouti's initiatives left Djibouti with no choice but to mass troops along the border to protect its territorial integrity. While Djibouti searched tirelessly for a peaceful diplomatic solution, Eritrea continued to reinforce its troops and carried out further incursions into Djiboutian territory. The President reiterated his country's determination to recover all its territory illegally occupied by Eritrea—Ras Doumeira and the Doumeira islands. The provocation and inexplicable invasion of Djibouti's territory were unacceptable, and it was imperative that the Council address the conflict in a timely and comprehensive manner. President Guelleh also alerted the Council to the danger posed by drawing comparisons between the Djibouti–Eritrea conflict and the Eritrea–Ethiopia conflict, as suggesting such a link would encourage Eritrea to indefinitely occupy Djibouti's territory, lead its people into other useless, fratricidal conflicts, and continue its adventurism in the region. The President invited the Council to consider key points that were illustrated in the report of the fact-finding mission. First, Eritrea must be called on to honour its international obligations and cooperate with the United Nations, accepting its good offices to resolve the crisis. Secondly, the priority for Djibouti was the demilitarization of the conflict area and the withdrawal of forces to pre-February 2008 positions. Thirdly, the two countries had to show themselves willing to re-establish mutual trust, particularly by activating bilateral mechanisms and submitting to a legal process or arbitration leading to an agreed demarcation of the border. Given the urgency of the situation, the President called on the Council to require both countries, within approximately three weeks, to devote themselves to resolving the crisis and said that failure to implement such a decision should give rise to Council sanctions. Inaction would encourage and reward Eritrea's attitude, and leave Djibouti with no option but war.

Eritrea said that there had been no new developments since the brief incident in June that was instigated by the unprovoked attack by Djibouti against Eritrea's units inside its own territory. Eritrea had chosen the path of restraint to avoid escalating a crisis not of Djibouti's making, but created by others. Contrary to the claims made, Eritrea had not taken any land belonging to Djibouti and had no territorial ambitions. President Afwerki had called President Guelleh and decided to address the problem calmly. That occurred when Eritrea was approached by the Emir of Qatar, to whom Eritrea showed its openness to solve any real or perceived source of problems. Eritrea desired the restoration of good-neighbourly relations with Djibouti on the basis of full, mutual respect for territorial integrity and sovereignty. It would not, however, allow itself to be dragged into a diversionary and fabricated conflict, or be obliged to have an exchange on a situation designed to foment conflict on the ground.

Communication. On 4 December [S/2008/766], Djibouti transmitted a letter from President Guelleh to the Council, which indicated that regional and international diplomatic efforts made since May to resolve the crisis had been rejected by Eritrea and a stalemate had developed. Sufficient time had elapsed for Eritrea to demonstrate goodwill, interest and peaceful intentions, rather than the outright denial and rebuffs to mediation, facilitation and the establishment of facts. Eritrea continued to link its problem with Djibouti to its long-standing problem with Ethiopia. For Djibouti, any extended entrenchment by Eritrea in Ras Doumeira and Doumeira Island was unacceptable. Consequently, Djibouti was awaiting action by the Council towards the demilitarization and withdrawal of forces from the conflict area and acceptance by Eritrea that it had a border dispute with Djibouti that it had to resolve peacefully, consistent with diplomatic and legal practices.

North Africa

Western Sahara

In 2008, negotiations towards a lasting political solution to the question of Western Sahara continued. Although the two parties to the dispute concerning the Territory—Morocco and the Frente Polisario para la Liberación de Saguía el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente Polisario)—held talks with the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy for Western Sahara in January and March, the parties remained far apart on ways to achieve a solution. Morocco favoured autonomy and Frente Polisario set out arrangements for a State where natural resources were exploited for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Territory and where the interests of Morocco and other neighbouring States were protected. However, they agreed to explore the establishment of family visits by land route in addition to the programme of air visits. The parties also discussed the human rights situation in Western Sahara and in the Tindouf refugee camps in Algeria, and reiterated their commitment to continue negotiations. The Personal Envoy visited the region in February for in-depth consultations with the Prime Minister of Morocco, the Frente Polisario Secretary-General and senior Government officials from other interested countries on ways to move the negotiations into a more intensive and substantive phase. The United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO) continued to monitor compliance with the 1991 ceasefire that ended hostilities between the two parties over the governance of the Territory. The situation in the Mission's area of responsibility remained generally calm and the Security Council extended its mandate until 30 April 2009.

Peacemaking efforts

In response to Security Council resolution 1783(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 299], the Secretary-General in January submitted a report [S/2008/45] on the status and progress of the negotiations on Western Sahara, covering developments since his October 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 298]. Pursuant to resolution 1754(2007) [ibid., p. 297], delegations from Morocco and the Frente Polisario para la Liberación de Saguía el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente Polisario) met in Manhasset, New York, United States (7–9 January), to continue the negotiations that began in 2007 [ibid., p. 298]. The parties held separate meetings with the Secretary-General's Personal Envoy, Peter van Walsum (Netherlands), as well as several face-to-face discussions. Representatives of the neighbouring countries, Algeria and Mauritania, were consulted separately during the meeting. The Personal Envoy underlined that the Council expected the parties to negotiate in good faith and show the political will to ensure the success of the negotiations. The parties reiterated their commitment to negotiations and the implementation of resolutions 1783(2007) and 1754(2007). Nevertheless, their positions remained far apart on ways to achieve a just, lasting and mutually acceptable political solution providing for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara; as a result, little exchange took place that could be characterized as negotiations. The parties did, however, engage in an extensive exchange of views about the implementation of the two resolutions. They discussed matters related to administration, including competencies and organs. Although the parties replied to queries raised by the Personal Envoy and interacted with each other to some degree, they did not examine specific elements of each other's proposals. The parties agreed to convene again in Manhasset in March for a fourth round of talks. Annexed to the report was the Personal Envoy's communiqué of 9 January, in which the parties reiterated their commitment to show political will and negotiate in good faith, and agreed on the need to move the process into a more intensive and substantive negotiation phase.

March negotiations. The Secretary-General reported that at the fourth round of negotiations (Manhasset, 16–18 March), the parties held several face-to-face discussions, as well as separate meetings with the Personal Envoy; representatives of the neighbouring countries were consulted separately during the meeting. The parties engaged in a broad exchange of views on the implementation of resolutions 1754(2007) and 1783(2007), and on the exercise of the principle of self-determination. They also discussed subjects related to administration, competencies and organs, as well as justice and resources. They were invited to consider strengthening confidence-building measures, as well as a possible expansion of the existing programme. Frente Polisario indicated that it accepted without exception all the proposals made by the Personal Envoy. The parties agreed to explore the establishment of family visits by land route, in addition to the programme of air visits, which would increase the number of Western Saharans who could benefit from such visits. The parties would further examine the issue of visits by land within the framework of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). The parties also raised matters related to human rights in the Territory and in the Tindouf refugee camps, and reiterated their commitment to continue the negotiations at a date to be determined.

Communications. In a letter of 3 April to the Secretary-General [S/2008/221], Morocco said that Algeria and Frente Polisario sought to conceal their lack of political commitment to the Manhasset negotiation process by diverting the attention of the international community towards alleged human rights violations against indigenous people of the Sahara region and other regions of Morocco. Morocco had refrained from responding to accusations and diversionary tactics, preferring to devote its energy to the success of the negotiations and to the socio-economic development of the region. In order to clear up any ambiguity, however, Morocco provided clarifications regarding the points that had been a recurrent theme in those communications. Those clarifications included reforms undertaken by Morocco and progress achieved in the area of human rights, as well as efforts to improve infrastructure, education, health care and housing in the Sahara region. Through its actions, Morocco had demonstrated its desire to enrich the dynamic launched by the Security Council and pledged to persevere in that vein.

In a letter to the Secretary-General dated 3 April [S/2008/230], Morocco stated that the overall situation and increasingly deplorable living conditions of the people in the Tindouf camps in Algeria were a source of concern to Morocco and the international community. It called on Algeria, as the host country, to allow UNHCR free access to the camps in order to identify and register the persons living there; assess their food-related needs; and determine their wishes concerning voluntary return to their country of origin.

On 11 April [S/2008/241], South Africa transmitted a letter of 10 April from the Frente Polisario Secretary-General, Mohamed Abdelaziz, in which he provided the view of Frente Polisario regarding the negotiations held in March. During those talks, Frente Polisario explained its ideas for future administrative, political, economic, social and security arrangements in the Territory of Western Sahara, in order to elaborate its 2007 proposal for a mutually acceptable political solution that provided for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara [YUN 2007, p. 296]. It indicated that Morocco's proposal denied the legitimate right of self-determination, and thereby the possibility of a permanent democratic solution. Condemning the human rights abuses of Saharawi civilian populations inside the occupied Territory, Frente Polisario urged the Council to implement the recommendations of the 2006 report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights [YUN 2006, p. 334], in particular that MINURSO be mandated to monitor the human rights of the inhabitants of Western Sahara. Frente Polisario was ready to continue the negotiating process and elaborate further its constructive ideas for arrangements to govern the Territory, and was willing to take account of Morocco's security concerns, including over its southern border. Frente Polisario also expressed its willingness to begin security cooperation with Morocco to combat security threats in the trans-Sahara region.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to resolution 1783(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 299], the Secretary-General in April submitted a report [S/2008/251] on the situation in Western Sahara, covering developments since his October 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 298] and his January 2008 report on the status and progress of negotiations. On 17 February, Frente Polisario organized elections in the Western Saharan refugee camps near Tindouf for a new 'Saharan parliament'. The 'parliament' held its inaugural meetings as part of official celebrations held by Frente Polisario in Tifariti on 27 February to mark the thirty-second anniversary of the proclamation of the 'Saharan Arab Democratic Republic'. Morocco objected to the events in Tifariti and to construction taking place there, claiming that Frente Polisario was breaching the terms of the military agreements. In a meeting on 3 March with the MINURSO Force Commander, the Moroccan military threatened action by "adequate means", including air strikes, to prevent further construction in the Tifariti area. The Force Commander responded that those civilian activities were taking place some 70 kilometres east of the berm—the buffer strip that separated the Moroccan-administered portion of the Territory (west) from the area controlled by Frente Polisario (east)—in the area of limited restrictions, where such activities did not violate military agreement No. 1 (see p. 323) of 1998 [YUN 1998 p. 194]. From 18 February to 13 March, the Royal Moroccan Army (RMA) conducted a series of pre-scheduled military training exercises in the vicinity of Awsard, involving some 1,200 troops stationed in the Awsard subsector. MINURSO was notified of the exercises in October 2007, and they were deemed to be in accordance with military agreement No. 1. In a letter of 13 March to the UN Secretary-General, the Frente Polisario Secretary-General protested the apparent provocation the military exercises entailed on the eve of the fourth round of the Manhasset negotiations.

The Secretary-General's Personal Envoy held consultations with Morocco and Frente Polisario, as well as Algeria and Mauritania and other interested countries. In addition, he visited the region from 5 to 15 February for in-depth consultations on ways to move the negotiations forward. He met with the Moroccan Prime Minister, Abbes El Fassi (Rabat, Morocco, 6–7 February); the Frente Polisario Secretary-General and its Coordinator with MINURSO, M'Hamed Khadad, as well as other senior Frente Polisario officials and traditional leaders (Tindouf, 9–10 February); the Algerian Prime Minister, Abdelaziz Belkhadem (Algiers, Algeria, 11–13 February); and senior Government officials of Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco. He met with the President of Mauritania, Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdellahi, in Nouakchott, Mauritania, on 14 February. The Personal Envoy also visited the El Aaiun refugee camp.

The situation in the MINURSO area of responsibility remained generally calm. The Mission continued to monitor the 6 September 1991 ceasefire [YUN 1991, p. 796]; between 1 October 2007 and 31 March 2008, it performed 4,042 ground patrols and 289 air patrols to visit RMA units and the Frente Polisario armed forces, and monitor adherence to the military agreements. MINURSO continued to enjoy good relations with RMA and the Frente Polisario armed forces. However, both sides continued not to deal directly with each other, and all known contact between them took the form of meetings and written communications with MINURSO. Violations of the military agreement had decreased since the Secretary-General's October 2007 report. MINURSO observed 3 new violations by RMA and 10 by the Frente Polisario armed forces. It recorded a significant decrease in the number of freedom-of-movement violations by both sides, with 139 such violations recorded on the part of RMA and 33 on the part of Frente Polisario. Both parties continued to extend their cooperation to MINURSO in the marking and disposal of mines, unexploded ordnance and expired ammunition. The newly established Mine Action Coordination Centre was working to enhance information on mine contamination and response, raise the level of safety for UN personnel and provide support for mine-action programmes.

UNHCR and WFP continued to provide humanitarian assistance to the most vulnerable Western Saharan refugees in the refugee camps near Tindouf. The UNHCR-led confidence-building programme continued to be implemented in coordination with MINURSO and in cooperation with the parties. Between November 2004 and 28 March 2008, 5,644 Western Saharans benefited from the exchange of family visits; 55 per cent of the beneficiaries were women and 35 per cent were children under the age of 18.

As to human rights, the Frente Polisario Secretary-General wrote to the UN Secretary-General eight times between January and April to protest the arrests and alleged repression of Western Saharan human rights activists by Moroccan authorities throughout the Territory, and to petition the United Nations to broaden the MINURSO mandate to include human rights protection and monitoring. Moroccan media expressed concerns about alleged human rights abuses in the camps near Tindouf and highlighted the allegedly deteriorating human rights and humanitarian situation of Western Saharan refugees in the camps.

Based on the fourth round of talks held in March, and taking into account the Personal Envoy's assessment, the Secretary-General recommended that the Council reiterate its call on the parties to enter into a more intensive and substantive phase of negotiations and to negotiate without preconditions. The Secretary-General believed that the presence of MINURSO remained indispensable for maintaining the ceasefire, and recommended that the Council extend the Mission's mandate until 31 October.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 April [meeting 5884], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1813(2008). The draft [S/2008/284] was submitted by France, the Russian Federation, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States.

4. Also calls upon the parties to continue negotiations under the auspices of the Secretary-General without preconditions and in good faith, taking into account the efforts made since 2006 and subsequent developments, with a view to achieving a just, lasting and mutually acceptable political solution which will provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara in the context of arrangements consistent with the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, and notes the role and responsibilities of the parties in this respect;

11. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Communication. In a letter of 27 May to the Secretary-General [S/2008/348], Morocco stated that from 19 to 22 May, Frente Polisario, supported by Algeria, again marshalled troops and held political demonstrations in the Tifariti zone east of the berm, in full view of MINURSO personnel, which undermined the ongoing negotiations. Morocco, while reiterating its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General and of his Personal Envoy to reach a political solution, reaffirmed that it could not accept or tolerate any change in the status quo in the zone.

Report of Secretary-General. In a later report [S/2009/200 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General said that King Mohammed VI of Morocco addressed his country on 30 July, the ninth anniversary of his enthronement, to register the need for respect for Morocco's territorial integrity. He called on Algeria to normalize ties between the two countries and reopen their common borders. In a statement on 6 November marking the thirty-third anniversary of Morocco's 'Green March' into Western Sahara [YUN 1975, p. 175], the King announced his Government's intention to transfer power to the regions, including Western Sahara, as part of decentralization reform.

In other developments, the mandate of the Personal Envoy, Peter van Walsum, ended in August. The Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, B. Lynn Pascoe, visited Morocco on 14 and 15 October for further discussions. The Secretary-General met in September with the Moroccan Minister for Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, Taïb Fassi Fihri, and with the Frente Polisario Secretary-General on 4 November, reiterating to the parties his commitment to pursuing the negotiation process mandated by the Council. The Consultative Council on Human Rights of the Government of Morocco held a meeting (Laayoune, 29–30 October) with the Royal Advisory Council for Saharan Affairs and a number of Moroccan and local NGOs to discuss the human rights situation in Western Sahara. The meeting highlighted the need to ensure better protection and promotion of human rights, with particular safeguards for union and political freedoms.

MINURSO

In 2008, the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO), established by Security Council resolution 690(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 794], continued to monitor compliance with the 1991 formal ceasefire [ibid., p. 796] between Frente Polisario and Morocco. The Mission's military observers carried out monitoring through a combination of ground and air patrols and observation posts, and through inspections of larger-than-company-size military units of Frente Polisario and RMA. The main focus was on military activities close to the berm, the defensive sand wall built by RMA between 1981 and 1987 across Western Sahara, extending from the north-east corner to the south-west, near the Mauritanian border.

Military Agreement No. 1, which MINURSO signed separately with the parties [YUN 1998, p. 194], remained the basic legal instrument governing the ceasefire monitoring of the five parts into which, for operational purposes, the disputed territory of Western Sahara was divided: one 5-kilometre-wide buffer strip to the east and south of the berm; two restricted areas—one, 25 kilometres wide east of the berm and the other, 30 kilometres wide west of it; and two areas with limited restrictions that encompassed the remainder of the Territory. Bilateral military agreements Nos. 2 and 3 [YUN 1999, p. 180], committing both parties to cooperating with MINURSO in the exchange of mine-related information, marking of mined areas, and clearance and destruction of mines and unexploded ordnance, remained in force.

At the end of 2008, MINURSO numbered 491 personnel: 197 military observers, 20 troops, 6 police, 97 international civilians, 153 local civilians and 18 United Nations Volunteers. The Mission maintained its headquarters in Laayoune, Western Sahara; a liaison office in Tindouf, Algeria; and nine military-observer team sites located across the Territory: four on the Moroccan-controlled side and five on the Frente Polisario side. In April, the Council extended the MINURSO mandate until 30 April 2009.

Financing

In June, the General Assembly considered the performance report [A/62/611] on the MINURSO budget for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007, with expenditures amounting to $41,702,600; the Secretary-General's report [A/62/679] on the MINURSO budget requirements for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, totalling $45,728,400; and the related ACABQ report [A/62/781/Add.3], which recommended reducing that amount to $45,698,200.

In an April note [A/62/817] on financing arrangements for MINURSO for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008, the Secretary-General said that resource requirements had increased by $3,870,500 and would be offset by the projected unutilized balance of $2,116,300. The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to appropriate and assess $1,754,200 for the maintenance of the Mission for the period from 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008, in addition to the $44,321,600 already appropriated for that period under resolution 61/290 [YUN 2007, p. 301].

In a statement of 12 May to the Fifth Committee [A/C.5/62/SR.40], the ACABQ Chairman said that, in light of the Mission's chronically precarious financial situation, ACABQ found that it had no choice but to concur with the Secretary-General's request.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 June [meeting 109], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/62/881], adopted resolution 62/268 without vote [agenda item 156].

Kenya

In 2008, the United Nations supported the efforts of the AU, the EU and the international community to address the political, security and humanitarian crisis that developed in Kenya in the aftermath of presidential, parliamentary and local elections held on 27 December 2007 under allegations of irregularities. On 30 December, the Electoral Commission of Kenya (ECK) announced that Mwai Kibaki of the Party of National Unity (PNU) won the presidential elections and the Orange Democratic Movement (ODM), the party of the opposition leader and presidential candidate Raila Odinga, had obtained the majority in Parliament. EU observers questioned the credibility of the electoral results, citing lack of access to some counting centres in the Central Province, as well as evidence of irregularities. Criticism also emanated from the international community. Demonstrations and ethnically motivated violence ensued—reportedly from supporters of both Government and opposition sides—targeting civilians. Instability was concentrated in central, western and coastal Kenya. An estimated 600,000 people were displaced as numerous reports of abuses against civilians emerged, including killings, rape and arson. Although a mediation initiative was launched in early January 2008 by the AU Chairman, Ghanaian President John Kufuor, in collaboration with other stakeholders, settlement prospects were diminished by the concurrent nomination of supporters of President Kibaki for key cabinet posts. Although talks broke down on 10 January, the parties agreed to mediation by an AU-sponsored Panel of Eminent African Personalities led by former UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan. On 1 February, the parties agreed on a four-point negotiating agenda addressing an end to the violence, the humanitarian situation, the political crisis, and land and historical injustices.

Decision of AU Assembly. The tenth ordinary session of the AU Assembly (Addis Ababa, 31 January–2 February), in a decision on the situation in Kenya following the presidential election, called for an in-depth investigation into the human rights violations that had occurred and urged the parties to build on their agreement of 1 February to end the violence and to commit themselves to a peaceful solution to the crisis through dialogue and in conformity with the rule of law.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 February [meeting 5831], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/4 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council welcomes the announcement of progress in the negotiations, overseen by Mr. Kofi Annan, between Mr. Mwai Kibaki and Mr. Raila Odinga on 1 February 2008, including the adoption of an agenda and a timetable for action to end the crisis in Kenya following the disputed elections of 27 December 2007. The Council welcomes the African Union communiqué of 21 January 2008, commends the efforts of the African Union, the President of Ghana, Mr. John Kufuor, and the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Mr. Ban Ki-moon, and emphasizes its full support for the Panel of Eminent African Personalities, led by Mr. Annan, in assisting the parties in finding a political solution. The Council deplores the widespread violence following the elections, which has resulted in extensive loss of life and serious humanitarian consequences.

The Council expresses its deep concern that, despite the commitments made on 1 February 2008, civilians continue to be killed, subjected to sexual and gender-based violence and displaced from their homes. The Council emphasizes that the only solution to the crisis lies through dialogue, negotiation and compromise and strongly urges Kenya's political leaders to foster reconciliation and to elaborate and implement the actions agreed to on 1 February without delay, including by meeting their responsibility to engage fully in finding a sustainable political solution and taking action to end immediately violence, including ethnically motivated attacks, dismantle armed gangs, improve the humanitarian situation and restore human rights. Recalling the need to avoid impunity, the Council calls for those responsible for violence to be brought to justice. It expresses its concern at the political, security and economic impact of the crisis in Kenya on the wider region.

The Council expresses its strong concern at the continuing dire humanitarian situation in Kenya and calls for the protection of refugees and internally displaced persons. The Council further expresses its concern for the safety of humanitarian workers and United Nations personnel and calls upon all parties to facilitate their work and ensure their safety. The Council welcomes the decisions, following consultations with the Government of Kenya, of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Adviser of the Secretary-General for the Prevention of Genocide to dispatch missions to Kenya. It calls upon Kenya's political leaders to facilitate the work of these missions and looks forward to being informed by the Secretary-General of their findings.

The Council further requests the Secretary-General to report on how the United Nations can further support the mediation efforts in Kenya and, as necessary, on the impact of the crisis on the wider subregion and United Nations operations in the subregion.

Security Council consideration. On 25 February [meeting 5845], the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs and Emergency Relief Coordinator, John Holmes, briefed the Council on his visit to Kenya (8–10 February) to reaffirm UN support for the people of Kenya and the mediation process led by Mr. Annan, as well as to assess the humanitarian situation on the ground. The violence resulted in approximately 1,000 deaths; at least 300,000 people had been driven from their homes and over 270,000 people from six of Kenya's eight provinces remained in approximately 200 camps and sites in the Nyanza, Rift Valley, Central, Coastal and Western Provinces. An estimated 500,000 people required assistance with shelter, water, food and medical care, while the needs of some 12,000 Kenyan refugees in Uganda were also being addressed. Common threads among all the displaced groups were their need for safety and security, particularly for women and children; disturbing accounts of continuing abuses in and around the camps; and the psychological consequences of the trauma experienced. He heard stories of murder, rape and burning, and said that the ethnic basis of much of what had happened was clear. Meanwhile, heightened ethnic awareness and fears had spread through much of Kenya, fuelling polarization. The effects of ethnic divisions on basic Government services had been dramatic in some areas, as staff quietly left or were afraid to go to work. Consequently, even if a political agreement was reached, the displacement crisis would not disappear quickly, posing a challenge for politicians, Kenyan society and the humanitarian community. There was a lot to be done in terms of rebuilding confidence and providing security before people could return home. He added that there must be accountability for those responsible for the violence, abuses of human rights and multiple failures to protect civilians. He also briefed the Council on the economic impact of the crisis, ongoing activities by UN agencies and NGO partners to address the humanitarian situation and the status of contributions from donors (see p. 1001).

Power-sharing agreement. On 28 February, ODM and PNU signed a power-sharing agreement to resolve the political crisis and thereby enacted the National Accord and Reconciliation Act 2008. The provisions of the "Agreement on the Principles of Partnership of the Coalition Government" established the following: the authority of the Prime Minister to coordinate and supervise the execution of the affairs of the Government; the manner in which the Prime Minister would be nominated and selected; the composition of the Cabinet (President, Vice-President, Prime Minister, two Deputy Prime Ministers and the other Ministers); the processes and conditions for the removal of the Prime Minister and Deputy Prime Ministers, the dissolution of the coalition Government, and the maintenance of the portfolio balance with regard to Government composition; and the entrenchment of the National Accord and Reconciliation Act in the Constitution. In a press statement of 29 February [SC/9265], the Security Council expressed its support to President Kibaki and Mr. Odinga in forming a new Government and called for the Agreement to be implemented without delay.

On 4 March, the two parties reached agreements on a constitutional review process; a commission of inquiry on post-election violence; an independent review committee to look into the conduct and management of the elections; and a truth, justice and reconciliation commission. On 18 March, the National Assembly approved a constitutional amendment and the National Accord and Reconciliation Act, which reflected the provisions of the Agreement. As tensions and divisions between ODM and PNU arose over the appointment of ministers, an agreement on the division of portfolios within the coalition Government was reached, involving an increase in the number of ministries to 40. On 17 April, Raila Odinga was sworn in as Prime Minister.

In March, Justice Johann Kriegler (South Africa) was named to chair the Independent Review Commission on the elections, and in April President Kibaki appointed Appeals Court Justice Philip Waki (Kenya) to chair the commission of inquiry on post-election violence.

Report of Independent Review Commission. In September, the Independent Review Commission on the General Elections held in Kenya on 27 December 2007 submitted its report to President Kibaki and to the Chair of the Panel of Eminent African Personalities. The report found that Kenya's constitutional and legal framework relating to elections contained weaknesses and inconsistencies that reduced its effectiveness and that the electoral management process as a whole needed revision. In the preparation and conduct of the 2007 elections, ECK lacked the necessary independence, capacity and functionality due to weaknesses in its organizational structure, composition and management systems. Other issues included defects in the voter register, which excluded nearly one third of eligible voters, with a bias against women and young people, and included the names of some 1.2 million dead people; abuse of polling; defective data collation, transmission and tallying; and the lack of adequate planning, staff selection and training, public relations and dispute resolution mechanisms. The integrity of the process and credibility of the results were so gravely impaired that the question of whether or not there was actual rigging at the national tally centre was irrelevant, as the results were irretrievably polluted. The report contained recommendations on reforming the electoral management process, including the development and implementation of legislative and political measures to support that process.

OHCHR mission. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) deployed a fact-finding mission to Kenya (6–28 February) to look into the violence and allegations of grave human rights violations following the elections. The mission's report included recommendations aimed at contributing to the parties' efforts to achieve sustainable peace through justice and respect for human rights (see p. 863).

Zimbabwe

During 2008, the political situation in Zimbabwe deteriorated owing to a post-election crisis that evolved following the holding of presidential, senatorial, parliamentary and local elections on 29 March. In the House of Assembly, the main opposition party, the Movement for Democratic Change (MDC) won 99 seats, while the ruling party, the Zimbabwe African National Union-Patriotic Front (ZANU-PF) won 97 seats. Another opposition faction that later committed to an alliance with MDC won 10 seats. In the Senate, ZANU-PF and the combined opposition won 30 seats each. The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission (ZEC), however, did not release the results of the presidential election. MDC claimed that its candidate, Morgan Tsvangirai, won the presidency outright.

SADC summit. The Southern African Development Community (SADC) convened the First Extraordinary Summit of Heads of State and Government (Lusaka, Zambia, 13 April) to discuss the political developments in Zimbabwe. Member States, with the exception of Zimbabwe, held informal consultations with presidential candidate Tsvangirai and independent candidate Simba Makoni. Both opposition leaders confirmed that the elections were held in a free, fair and peaceful environment and that they had no problem with the results of the parliamentary, senatorial and local elections. However, they were concerned by the delay in announcing the results of the presidential elections, as well as the lack of their participation in the verification process, which was being conducted by ZEC.

The Summit urged the electoral authorities to expeditiously verify and release the results in accordance with the due process of law, including verification and counting done in the presence of and authenticated by candidates or their agents. SADC offered to send its Election Observer Mission, which would be present throughout the verification and counting. If run-off elections were necessary, the Summit urged the Government to ensure that the elections were held in a secure environment. The Summit further appealed to ZEC to ensure strict compliance with the rule of law and SADC principles and guidelines governing democratic elections.

Security Council consideration (April). On 16 April [meeting 5868], during the Council's high-level debate on peace and security in Africa (see p. 108), the Secretary-General expressed concern at the prolonged non-release of the election results and said that the situation could deteriorate without a transparent solution to the impasse. He urged SADC leaders to continue efforts to address the issue and said that the United Nations stood ready to provide assistance. The President of Tanzania and AU Chairperson, Jakaya Kikwete, commended the work of SADC, stating that its efforts had enabled the people of Zimbabwe to hold peaceful elections and that SADC remained seized with the situation to ensure that the will of the people was respected. Eight members of the Council (Belgium, Costa Rica, Croatia, France, Italy, Panama, United Kingdom, United States) expressed concern about the situation, with several calling for either a free and fair second round or the release of the results of the presidential elections.

Election results. On 2 May, ZEC announced the results of the presidential elections and revealed that neither of the two leading contenders managed an outright win. Mr. Tsvangirai led by obtaining 47.9 per cent of the votes cast, while Robert Mugabe received 43.7 per cent, followed by former Finance Minister Simba Makoni with 8.3 per cent. Meanwhile, in the period leading up to the announcement of the results, the political and security situation had remained tenuous. On 25 April, approximately 185 to 200 opposition supporters were arrested on suspicion of involvement in political violence during a police raid on MDC offices in the capital city of Harare. MDC said that many of those arrested were taking shelter after fleeing intimidation. The following day, ZEC announced that the results of the parliamentary elections remained unchanged in 18 of 23 constituencies where recounts had taken place; the ZANU-PF loss of parliamentary majority was therefore confirmed. More than 180 of the arrested opposition activists were released without charge on 29 April, after MDC won a High Court order the previous day.

On 22 June, the opposition candidate, Mr. Tsvangirai, withdrew from the presidential run-off of 27 June, citing the absence of conditions for credible elections due to widespread violence and restrictions on his ability to campaign.

Security Council consideration (June). The Security Council held three meetings on 23 June. The first [meeting 5919], in response to a request from Belgium [S/2008/407], heard a briefing on the situation in Zimbabwe from the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, B. Lynn Pascoe. The second [meeting 5920] was held in private and the Council, in a communiqué, indicated that it had an exchange of views with the representative of Zimbabwe. The third [meeting 5921] issued statement S/PRST/2008/23 (see below).

In his briefing to the Council, the Under-Secretary-General said that the withdrawal of Mr. Tsvangirai from the presidential run-off demonstrated that the situation had deteriorated to alarming levels and had reached a new degree of gravity. During the visit to Zimbabwe by Assistant Secretary-General Haile Menkerios to explore ways to improve the political climate, meetings were held with a wide spectrum of actors, including President Mugabe, the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Justice, Labour and Social Welfare, the Deputy Commander of the army, ZEC, the leaders of MDC, civil society and church organizations, and the leaders of SADC. Based on his observations, Mr. Menkerios informed the Secretary-General that conditions did not exist for free and fair elections and that no outcome of an election run under those conditions could be considered credible. The country had experienced a staggering degree of violence, with the opposition claiming that more than 80 of its supporters had been killed by ZANU-PF supporters and that thousands were displaced from their wards. There was evidence that such violence had been perpetrated by a combination of State agencies—army, police and intelligence—as well as by war veterans and youth militias. The Government claimed that violence had also been perpetrated by MDC activists. While evidence suggested that there had been some retaliatory violence, it was of a much lesser degree than that of the Government and its supporters. The campaign of intimidation and threat had created a climate of fear, while the violence and displacements posed a challenge to the voting process.

The Under-Secretary-General said that it was hoped that the climate would improve with the arrival of a large number of regional and international observers, as their presence could help deter the violence and increase confidence. As at 23 June, some 397 SADC observers had been deployed in Zimbabwe, with 430 SADC observers expected in total (compared to 163 SADC observers for the first round). The AU and ECOWAS had also increased their number of observers. Despite those measures, initial reports by observer missions provided accounts of politically motivated violence. Other concerns included the restrictive provisions imposed on domestic observer groups by the authorities, diminishing their capacity to recruit observers; the situation of the MDC candidate, who had little or no access to Zimbabwean media and was barred from campaigning freely; the arrest and detention of the MDC Secretary-General on charges of treason; and reports that the MDC headquarters had been raided and dozens of supporters were being detained. In light of the above, the Under-Secretary-General said that the conditions for a free and fair run-off election did not exist. He made recommendations for the postponement of the elections, Government action to ensure that conditions were established for a credible process, and dialogue between the parties to determine a period during which conditions for free and fair elections could be created. He reiterated the Secretary-General's call on both parties to resume talks and seek a peaceful resolution of the crisis.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 June [meeting 5921], following consultations among Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2008/23 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council condemns the campaign of violence against the political opposition ahead of the second round of the presidential elections scheduled for 27 June 2008, which has resulted in the killing of scores of opposition activists and other Zimbabweans and the beating and displacement of thousands of people, including many women and children.

The Council further condemns the actions of the Government of Zimbabwe that have denied its political opponents the right to campaign freely, and calls upon the Government to stop the violence, to cease political intimidation, to end the restrictions on the right of assembly and to release the political leaders who have been detained. The Council urges the international monitors and observers to remain in Zimbabwe while the crisis continues.

The Council regrets that the campaign of violence and the restrictions on the political opposition have made it impossible for a free and fair election to take place on 27 June. The Council further considers that, to be legitimate, any government of Zimbabwe must take account of the interests of all its citizens. The Council notes that the results of the elections of 29 March 2008 must be respected.

The Council expresses its concern over the impact of the situation in Zimbabwe on the wider region. The Council welcomes the recent international efforts, including those of the leaders of the Southern African Development Community and particularly President Mbeki. The Council calls upon the Zimbabwean authorities to cooperate fully with all efforts, including through the United Nations, aimed at finding a peaceful way forward, through dialogue between the parties, that allows a legitimate government to be formed that reflects the will of the Zimbabwean people.

The Council further expresses its concern at the grave humanitarian situation in Zimbabwe and condemns the suspension by the Government of Zimbabwe of the operations of humanitarian organizations, which has directly affected one and a half million people, including half a million children. The Council calls upon the Government to immediately allow humanitarian organizations to resume their services.

The Council will continue to monitor closely the situation and requests the Secretary-General to report on ongoing regional and international efforts to resolve the crisis.

Run-off election. Despite calls for the election to be postponed until proper conditions were in place, including by the Secretary-General, second-round elections were held on 27 June. Incumbent President Mugabe stood as the only candidate and the official results declared him the winner with 85.5 per cent of the votes. President Mugabe was inaugurated on 29 June.

AU Assembly summit. The AU Assembly, at its eleventh ordinary session (Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, 30 June–1 July), adopted a resolution that expressed concern over the situation in Zimbabwe, the negative reports of the observers on the run-off election, and the violence and loss of life that had occurred. The Assembly urged President Mugabe and Mr. Tsvangirai to engage in dialogue with a view to promoting peace, stability, democracy and reconciliation. It supported the establishment of a government of national unity and recommended the continuation of SADC mediation efforts, including the establishment of a mechanism for a negotiated solution. The text of the AU resolution was transmitted to the Council in a letter dated 10 July [S/2008/452].

Security Council consideration (July). On 8 July [meeting 5929], Deputy Secretary-General Asha-Rose Migiro briefed the Council on the situation in Zimbabwe and the discussion of it at the AU Summit in Sharm el-Sheikh (see above). She said that three African observer missions present on the ground—AU, Pan-African Parliament and SADC—issued unequivocal condemnations of the electoral process and its results. Many irregularities were reported, including the requirement of voters to report the serial number of their ballots to ZANU-PF officials, rendering the concept of anonymous voting meaningless. Some people spoiled their ballots in protest, accounting for 5.1 per cent of the total votes. There were no national observers as in the first round, which stripped the elections of a critical measure of transparency and credibility, although regional groups had substantially augmented the number of observers for the second round. The United Nations provided logistic and technical support to SADC efforts to increase observation. The observer missions also indicated that the process leading up to the run-off election did not conform to accepted standards and was seriously flawed.

The Deputy Secretary-General said that the crisis of legitimacy surrounding the re-election of President Mugabe was compounded by the paralysis of State institutions. There was no functioning Parliament and civil society had been silenced and intimidated. Meanwhile, there were severe shortages of food and basic services. There was a need to restore the rule of law and to start building public institutions. She said that MDC and ZANU-PF recognized that Zimbabwe's political future depended on a transitional arrangement promoting national unity. The two parties, therefore, had accepted a dialogue towards a negotiated settlement and talks were ongoing under South African mediation, with President Thabo Mbeki working towards a direct meeting between President Mugabe and Mr. Tsvangirai. At the AU Summit, there was broad support for the creation of a government of national unity as a way forward. She said that the Secretary-General supported the AU recommendation for the continuation of SADC mediation efforts and the establishment of a mediation mechanism. He further called on the Zimbabwe authorities to lift restrictions on humanitarian activities.

On 11 July [meeting 5933], the Security Council considered a draft resolution [S/2008/447] that provided for the imposition of an arms embargo on Zimbabwe, as well as a travel ban and financial freeze against President Mugabe and 13 senior Government officials. Zimbabwe told the Council that the root cause of the crisis was land ownership and that the adverse reports on inter-party violence were overdramatized in the media, as only 10 per cent of the country might have witnessed some sort of violence. The Government would investigate the cases of the people who had claimed to be victims of political violence, and most of the culprits from both parties, including criminal gangs, had already appeared before the courts. Sanctions imposed by the United States in 2001 and the EU in 2002 had put the country's economy under siege and were affecting the vulnerable groups and general population. Meanwhile, political dialogue was ongoing between the contending parties. Zimbabwe welcomed the AU resolution and pointed out that, in line with his SADC mandate and supported by the AU, President Mbeki was in the country over the weekend to consult with President Mugabe and the political parties to chart the way forward. In that regard, Zimbabwe was of the view that any other initiative would be counterproductive and undermine the role of SADC and President Mbeki. He said that the draft resolution was an abuse of Chapter VII of the UN Charter, and its adoption would set a dangerous precedent. Zimbabwe's problems could be solved by Africans working together, and trying to impose a solution from outside would be unfair to Zimbabweans, SADC and the AU.

The result of the voting on the draft resolution was 9 in favour (Belgium, Burkina Faso, Costa Rica, Croatia, France, Italy, Panama, United Kingdom, United States), 5 against (China, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Russian Federation, South Africa, Viet Nam) and 1 abstention (Indonesia). Owing to the negative votes of two permanent members of the Council, the draft resolution was not adopted.

On 21 July, MDC and ZANU-PF signed a memorandum of understanding.

Global Political Agreement. On 15 September, under the facilitation of SADC, the Global Political Agreement on resolving the challenges facing Zimbabwe was signed between ZANU-PF and the two MDC formations led by Mr. Tsvangirai and Arthur Mutambara, respectively. The parties agreed to work together to solve the situation and chart a new political direction for the country. Key areas addressed in the 25-article Agreement included the framework for a new Government, humanitarian food assistance, the land question, the rule of law and respect for the constitution and other laws, security of persons and prevention of violence, sanctions and measures, freedom of expression and communication, interim constitutional amendments, implementation mechanisms and periodic review mechanisms.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

The twentieth session of the Council of the League of Arab States (LAS) (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, 29–30 March) [S/2008/296] adopted a resolution by which it affirmed the right of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to seek compensation for the material and human losses caused by the sanctions imposed on it by the Security Council in connection with the terrorist attacks against Pan Am flight 103 on 21 December 1988 and Union de transports aériens flight 772 on 19 September 1989. It also affirmed the demand for the release of Libyan national Abdelbaset al-Megrahi, considering his continued detention to be that of a hostage according to international law. The LAS Council demanded that the United Kingdom release all documents requested by the defence counsel for that Libyan national to the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission.

Mauritius–United Kingdom/France

Addressing the General Assembly on 29 September during the general debate [A/63/PV.16], Mauritius said that high-level talks were under way to settle the issue of its sovereignty claim regarding the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which the United Kingdom had excised from the territory of Mauritius prior to its independence, in disregard of Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49] and 2066(XX) [YUN 1965, p. 587]. Mauritius was sensitive to the aspirations of its citizens to return to the islands of their birth in the archipelago, from which they had been forcibly removed. It also urged France to pursue dialogue with Mauritius on the issue of sovereignty over Tromelin Island.

On 3 October [A/63/475], the United Kingdom, in exercise of the right of reply, maintained that the British Indian Ocean Territory was British and had been since 1814. It did not recognize Mauritius' sovereignty claim. However, the British Government recognized Mauritius as the only State that had the right to assert a claim of sovereignty when the United Kingdom relinquished its own sovereignty. The Territory would be ceded when no longer required for defence purposes. The United Kingdom remained open to discussions regarding arrangements governing the Territory or its future, and stated that when the time came for the Territory to be ceded it would liaise closely with Mauritius. It valued its close and constructive cooperation with Mauritius on a wide range of issues and looked forward to continuing such cooperation.

Americas

During 2008, the United Nations continued to advance the cause of lasting peace, human rights, sustainable development and the rule of law in the Americas. In Guatemala, the newly established International Commission against Impunity continued to implement its mandate. In October, the Secretary-General provided the General Assembly with an update on the current state and activities of the Commission, and the UN role in the implementation of its mandate.

In Haiti, continuing challenges relating to the political and security situation hampered progress in the democratic process. In February, internal tensions between the Government and Parliament culminated in Prime Minister Jacques-Edouard Alexis' being summoned to appear before the Chamber of Deputies to respond to questions on the high cost of living, security, justice reform and the development of the country's agriculture. In April, six days of increasingly violent demonstrations in various parts of the country against the high cost of living and increasing cost of basic food commodities exemplified the potential for civil unrest. The United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) assisted the Haitian National Police in responding to the security crisis. Nonetheless, the disturbances subsequently led to a vote of censure against the Government of Prime Minister Alexis, which left Haiti without a fully functioning Government for over four months. In August and September, a series of hurricanes and storms struck Haiti, exacerbating an already dire humanitarian situation arising from the food insecurity crisis. Over 800,000 Haitians lost their homes or were directly affected by the disasters. The need to address the problems posed by the hurricanes helped resolve the political standoff and generated a new sense of solidarity. The confirmation process for a new Government was concluded in September and the new Prime Minister was sworn into office. Subsequently, the houses of Parliament passed a law allowing the President to declare a state of emergency and establish a system of flexible disbursement of national funds to assist affected populations.

MINUSTAH provided extensive support to the authorities and the UN country team to facilitate the provision and coordination of humanitarian assistance and access by humanitarian personnel. The Mission also continued to support the training and institutional development of the police. In December, further progress was achieved with the adoption of a legislative agenda for 2009 and the issuance of a decree by the President, together with the new Prime Minister and members of her Government, setting the first and second rounds of the partial senatorial elections for 19 April and 7 June 2009.

In other developments in the region, the General Assembly again called on States to refrain from promulgating laws and measures such as the ongoing embargo against Cuba by the United States. The Assembly also considered activities undertaken by the United Nations to strengthen cooperation with the Caribbean Community.

Central America

---

In 2008, Central America further consolidated peace and built democratic and equitable societies upon the foundation developed in years of successful UN peacemaking efforts. In that connection, the United Nations continued to assist the region through development programming, the good offices of the Secretary-General and other means.

Guatemala

Four years after the ending of the mandate of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 287], the country continued to build upon the foundation laid in previous years. In 2008, the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG), established in September 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 308] with the concurrent entry into force of the 2006 agreement between the country and the United Nations [YUN 2006, p. 870], carried on implementing its mandate. Under the terms of the agreement, which set up the Commission as an independent, non-United Nations organ, the main CICIG objective was to assist, strengthen and support State institutions responsible for investigating and prosecuting crimes allegedly committed by illegal security forces and clandestine security organizations, and other criminal conduct related to those entities.

In a letter dated 18 September [A/63/376], Guatemala said that it was timely to inform the General Assembly of the achievements made related to CICIG. It therefore requested that the Assembly, pursuant to its decision 60/508 [YUN 2005, p. 376], accept the letter as notification and include CICIG for consideration at its sixty-third (2008) session, under the agenda item entitled “The situation in Central America: progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development”.

CICIG update. On 27 October [A/63/511], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an update on CICIG, including its establishment, activities and the UN role in the implementation of its mandate. He noted that the United Nations would be involved in an innovative attempt to dismantle criminal groups whose actions threatened to erode hard-fought gains in the peace process and had taken on the CICIG initiative at the explicit request of Guatemala. In that connection, the Organization had worked with three successive Governments to establish the Commission, most recently, to ensure its effective functioning. The mandated functions of CICIG included: determining the existence of illegal security groups and clandestine security structures; collaborating with the State in dismantling such groups and structures; promoting the investigation, prosecution and punishment of crimes committed by their members; and recommending to the State the adoption of policies for eradicating such groups and structures and preventing their re-emergence. While the Commission was set up as a non-UN organ, with its expenses being met through voluntary contributions from the international community, a trust fund administered by the United Nations Development Programme was established in October 2007 to channel those contributions and ensure transparency and accountability. Guatemala would provide the Commission with office space and other in-kind contributions, as well as ensure the security and protection of Commission staff. Some $26 million had been raised from 12 Member States and the European Union, which would cover 90 per cent of the projected two-year budget, and other Member States had seconded security staff, criminal investigators and legal experts. The Commission was operational with a staffing level of 115 international and Guatemalan staff assigned to both professional and administrative functions.

In the first year of its two-year mandate, CICIG made significant advances. It had received information from numerous sources that permitted progress in mapping clandestine structures. The Commission was investigating 15 high-impact cases, most often in coordination with the Office of the Public Prosecutor. In other activities, CICIG had identified and provided the authorities with the names of civil servants who had been derelict in their duty or had obstructed the work of CICIG; analysed national legislation on security, criminal law and criminal procedure in light of international best practices; identified legal and regulatory changes needed to better protect constitutional rights, remove obstacles and fill legal gaps that interfered with the prompt administration of justice; and submitted reform proposals for transmission as draft laws to the Congress.

The Secretary-General also highlighted challenges the Commission faced, such as those that could arise as investigations and court proceedings advanced in cases that touched powerful criminal interests, as well as the need to strengthen security, reinforce the framework for staff protection and immunities, facilitate the transnational exchange of information pertinent to its cases and create effective mechanisms for witness protection. He expressed the hope that CICIG, the United Nations, Guatemala and other Member States would work together to address those issues with alacrity and creativity.

The Assembly considered the Secretary-General’s update on 10 November [A/63/PV.43]. Guatemala observed that the initiative to establish the Commission originated in Guatemala and reflected the country’s conviction that international cooperation was needed to confront organized groups that operated with impunity—not to replace national authorities, but to support them and thereby strengthen them in the future. The Secretary-General added that CICIG activities would open new areas of work for the United Nations and provide lessons learned that might be useful to other Member States. The Secretary-General called for the Assembly’s continued support for CICIG, without any additional financial or budgetary implications. On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 63/19, which took note of the Secretary-General’s update and requested that he report on the Commission’s work at its sixty-fourth (2009) session.

Haiti

During 2008, although the political and security situation in Haiti remained challenging, progress was made in the democratic process with the July adoption of a new electoral law drafted by the Provisional Electoral Council and the installation of a new Prime Minister and Government in September. Following the promulgation of three key laws relating to the independence of the judiciary and the status of magistrates, the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) continued its work with the authorities, donors and other stakeholders to promote the availability of legal assistance to those in need. The first legal aid office opened in Cité Soleil in January, and by August, eight such offices had been established. In March, Haiti was admitted as a member of the Rio Group, marking a further step forward in the country's integration into regional structures. In April, civil unrest in the country was characterized by a series of demonstrations against the high cost of living, which resulted in the evacuation of UN offices in Les Cayes, in the south of the country. Haiti's fragile political consensus was tested following a Senate vote to censure the Government of Prime Minister Jacques-Edouard Alexis. Although four months of negotiations were required to obtain legislative approval for his successor, Michèle Duvivier Pierre-Louis, by year's end gains were made in the political process. In December, representatives of the Government and Parliament, with support from MINUSTAH and donors, participated in a joint workshop that culminated in the adoption of an agreed legislative agenda for 2009. An electoral schedule for the next three years was also completed. With nearly 80 per cent of Haiti's population living on $2 or less per day, extreme poverty remained one of the most far-reaching and complex challenges facing the country. In addition to providing security support, MINUSTAH facilitated the reform of rule-of-law structures, particularly the strengthening of the Haitian National Police (HNP), and the judicial and prison systems. It also monitored the human rights situation and supported humanitarian recovery and development.

Political and security situation

National dialogue and reconciliation

In 2008, the Government continued efforts to reach out to political groups and to strengthen State institutions. Progress was achieved in January with the consensus compromise that allowed the 10 senators whose terms would expire that year to remain in office until the adoption of a new electoral law, and with the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate electing new bureaux, which expressed the intention of enhancing cooperation between the two chambers. President René Préval continued to emphasize the need to reform rule-of-law institutions and to pursue efforts to combat corruption and impunity. In his 14 January address to the Parliament, he stressed that the country should not expect a quick solution to its problems, and called for a partnership between the public and private sectors. While his call for constitutional reform, queries regarding the need for an army, and statements on the high cost of living resulted in some criticism, they also generated reflection on those issues by political leaders, the private sector and civil society.

Despite the advances gained, differences between the branches of Government threatened to undermine effective governance. Tensions between the Government and Parliament culminated in Prime Minister Jacques-Edouard Alexis' being summoned to appear before the Chamber of Deputies on 28 February. During a 10-hour debate, the Prime Minister and Cabinet members responded to a variety of questions, mostly on the high cost of living, but also on security, justice reform and the development of the country's agriculture. The eight deputies who initiated the procedure voted to censure the Government, while 63 voted against and 13 abstained. Although the outcome represented an overall endorsement of the Government's approach, the event underlined the fragility of the political collaboration and the degree to which it was affected by public frustration.

Report of Secretary-General. In his March report [S/2008/202], the Secretary-General said that the political situation remained fragile given the continued political divisions and weak institutions, and the absence of significant improvements in the living conditions of the population. Many Haitians had experienced additional hardship due to an increase in the price of commodities and staple products, and tensions were generated by the public perception of deterioration in security conditions, including a rise in the number of kidnappings. In addition to the February summoning of Prime Minister Alexis, political dynamics were strained due to the ongoing investigation by an ad hoc Senate commission of allegations of dual nationality against senior officials, as dual nationality was forbidden by the Constitution, and a number of public exchanges and media reports suggested that tensions continued to exist between the judicial system and HNP.

Despite those challenges, significant achievements had been realized. The branches of Government worked together to enact critical judicial reform. On 18 February, the Provisional Electoral Council established in December 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 308] submitted a draft electoral law to the Government that was subsequently sent to Parliament for consideration. Meanwhile, MINUSTAH was helping plan the logistical and security aspects of the senatorial elections, and the ongoing updating of the voter rolls by the National Office of Identification, in collaboration with the Organization of American States, had resulted in the registration of more than 450,000 new voters.

On reform of rule-of-law structures, the Secretary-General said that the passage into law of a framework for judicial independence was a significant step forward and that it was essential that plans be translated into action and necessary funding be made available to support reform. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in consultation with the Government, was working towards the establishment of a joint rule-of-law trust fund which could facilitate the mobilization and coordination of international aid. The Government adopted a three-year justice reform plan focusing on five key areas: reorganization of the Ministry of Justice and Public Security; strengthening of the judiciary; improved access to justice and efficiency of the courts; rehabilitation and development of corrections facilities; and modernization of key legislation. In other efforts, MINUSTAH continued to work with the authorities and other stakeholders to promote the availability of legal aid to those in need; a legal aid office was established in Cité Soleil in January, and it was foreseen that five additional offices would be opened throughout the country; and President Préval requested MINUSTAH assistance in ensuring the effective judicial review of high-priority cases related to kidnapping and organized crime.

The institutions of governance continued to suffer from a lack of qualified personnel, poor infrastructure and limited resources. MINUSTAH provided expertise and technical assistance in support of key institutions and assisted efforts by the authorities to strengthen border management. However, the presence of the Government at the land border and key ports fell far short of what was required. The security situation had improved significantly since major operations undertaken against gangs in early 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 309], yet the potential for volatility remained. Since December, several areas of Port-au-Prince had experienced an increase in criminality, and the average number of reported kidnappings per month reached 28 between December 2007 and February 2008—up from 11 six months earlier. Anti-Government demonstrations, with a focus on the rising cost of living, had increased, and there were indications that gangs might be trying to reorganize themselves. In the regions outside the capital, the security situation remained relatively calm, but unrest and occurrences of popular justice had been reported. Illicit trafficking activities along the coast and by air, as well as misunderstandings between local communities in the border region, were also a concern.

MINUSTAH continued to work with national authorities, UNDP and donors in strengthening HNP, which was gradually becoming more effective in apprehending criminals and had made several drug shipment seizures. Nonetheless, the total number of police officers, which stood at 8,444, remained well below the 14,000 identified in the HNP reform plan as necessary for basic policing duties. The Mission continued to provide operational support to HNP with military patrols throughout the country and activities of its formed police units; worked with national authorities to adapt its security profile; provided assistance in HNP efforts to respond to major crimes and kidnapping incidents; secured strategic locations, such as the national penitentiary; and enhanced security in the vicinity of priority ports. MINUSTAH also supported HNP efforts to reform its weapons registration unit and assisted the Government in the revision of legislation on the import and possession of arms and in the implementation of a weapons registry system. The Mission was also strengthening the capacity of the judicial police.

In other developments, the Presidential Commission established in 2007 to undertake a process of reflection on the reinforcement of public security issued in January its first report, which discussed the definition of a defence policy and national security. MINUSTAH continued to implement its community violence reduction programme, including the launch on 1 March of six labour-intensive projects in violence-affected communities, which employed 7,572 individuals. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 1780(2007) [YUN 2007, p. 313], MINUSTAH launched a process of consultations with the authorities to identify benchmarks to measure consolidation of the emerging stability. Suggested critical milestones arising from those discussions included the completion of a cycle of elections; the establishment of a sustainable security structure and of an independent and credible judicial and penal system; and the extension of State authority throughout the country. Lasting stability would also require a tangible improvement in the living standards of the population and the creation of conditions for economic recovery. On 6 March, during the Rio Group Summit held in the Dominican Republic, Haiti was admitted as a member of the Group, marking a step forward in the country's integration into regional structures.

The Secretary-General observed that significant strides had been made in key areas, but the potential for regression remained apparent. He urged the leadership and institutions of Haiti to collaborate with one another and the executive and legislative branches of the Government to persevere in jointly outlining strategies for the future and in implementing them. Strong international involvement was indispensable for continued progress, and institutional reform could not succeed without extensive bilateral support. In that connection, he hoped that the establishment of a rule-of-law trust fund would be a useful vehicle for channelling assistance in that area. On the stability consolidation plan initiated by MINUSTAH, he would provide further details, including relevant benchmarks, in his next report.

Security Council consideration (April). In his 8 April [meeting 5862] briefing to the Security Council, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of MINUSTAH, Hédi Annabi, said that the political, security and institution-building progress, as well as the initial signs of improvement in the socio-economic situation, were only a first step and that progress remained fragile. The potential for a deterioration of relations was made clear by the February summoning of the Prime Minister before the Chamber of Deputies and the 1 April shooting inside the Parliament during a debate on investigations into alleged spending irregularities by legislators. Further problems could lie ahead related to ongoing inquiries on the possession of double nationality by legislators and Government officials, the question of constitutional reform, the preparation of elections for one third of the Senate, and unrest in various parts of the country, which was characterized by rising anti-Government demonstrations against the high cost of living, yet also appeared to have a political dimension. There were potential security implications in such unrest, such as the demonstrations that required the evacuation of UN offices in Les Cayes, in the south of the country, and similar demonstrations, albeit less violent, that took place in Gonaïves, Port-au-Prince and a few other locations.

In order to combat the threat of criminality and violence, MINUSTAH had reinforced its collaboration with the authorities and enhanced sharing of information; stepped up the presence of checkpoints throughout Port-au-Prince, where most of the kidnappings had taken place; worked to enhance the investigative and response capabilities of its police; and reinforced its presence along Haiti's land and maritime borders. MINUSTAH would continue to assist in the professionalization of the police and its institutional development, but complementary bilateral support was needed to meet HNP needs, including in areas such as infrastructure, transport, telecommunications and other equipment. He called for Haiti's democratic structures to be strengthened to facilitate greater institutionalization of dialogue and to break a tradition of politically motivated violence, as well as for the country's basic administrative capacities to be enhanced so that essential services could be provided to the population. The Mission could provide some of the assistance required and would continue to support local authorities. MINUSTAH would also continue to work towards strengthening national capabilities in key areas such as border management. He also urged donor countries, international financial institutions and the private sector to work with the authorities to find creative ways to generate "a stability dividend", an immediate and tangible improvement in socio-economic conditions that could allow the stabilization process to advance.

Escalation of violence and censure of Government

The Secretary-General reported [S/2008/586] that the sense of security crucial for public and investor confidence was seriously tested on 3 April, when a peaceful demonstration in Les Cayes of several hundred people against the rising cost of living turned to violent attacks against the Government and MINUSTAH. In the following six days, the protests spread to other cities, including Port-au-Prince, and became increasingly violent. In the capital, demonstrators erected barricades at crossroads, set tires ablaze and looted businesses and residences, resulting in several deaths, many injuries and significant damage to property. All available Haitian security forces and MINUSTAH military and formed police units in Port-au-Prince and other large cities were mobilized to bring the situation under control. The protests began as an expression of public frustration sparked by the rapid escalation in the global prices of basic commodities, which imposed severe hardship on the country's poor. However, as events unfolded, it became apparent from the level and scale of the demonstrations that they were being deliberately manipulated to serve a variety of political, criminal or financial objectives. The protests largely subsided after an appeal for calm by President Préval on 9 April. Three days later, the Senate voted to censure the Government, alleging that it had failed to control the cost of living. On the same day, President Préval announced a programme of short-term subsidies on imported rice and a medium-term plan to revive agricultural production.

Four months of negotiations were required in order to obtain legislative approval for the successor of Prime Minister Alexis, who remained in a caretaker capacity. During that period, Haiti was left without a fully functioning government. While a group of 16 Senators worked together to censure Prime Minister Alexis, a number of others left the upper house on 8 May, upon the conclusion of their terms of office. The Senate, which had 30 seats, was functioning with just 18 serving members, 16 of whom had to be present to form a constitutionally required quorum. Moreover, no date had been set for senatorial elections, which should have taken place in November 2007. The legislative process was significantly hampered and the Government was unable to submit any draft legislation, including key bills such as the draft 2008 revised budget.

Appointment of Prime Minister. President Préval's third nominee, Michèle Duvivier Pierre-Louis, received the approval of the lower house on 17 July and that of the Senate on 31 July. Nearly five months after the vote of censure of the Government, the new Prime Minister was sworn into office on 5 September [S/2009/129].

Further political and security developments

Report of Secretary-General. In August [S/2008/586], the Secretary-General said that Haiti's fragile political consensus was severely tested following the April Senate vote to censure the Government, which had been preceded by six days of anti-government demonstrations against the rising cost of living (see above). The April crisis had led to the postponement of a high-level donors conference to launch the poverty reduction strategy paper, which had been scheduled for 24 and 25 April in Port-au-Prince. Parliamentary dynamics remained fluid, and while activity in the Chamber of Deputies was characterized by heated debates over allegations of corruption and mismanagement, the Concertation des Parlementaires Progressistes had emerged as a relatively cohesive mechanism and played a significant role in facilitating the Chamber's ratification of Prime Minister Pierre-Louis. The President and Prime Minister were conducting consultations with a broad range of political actors with a view to forming a new government and building support within the Parliament for an eventual Statement of Government Policy, which required approval by an absolute majority in both houses. The parties prepared a "governability pact" for consideration by the executive branch, which outlined a possible formula for reinforced collaboration between all branches of Government and political parties and listed a number of objectives that could be addressed through joint action. Among those was a proposal that a consensus be sought to support the modification of certain provisions within the 1987 Constitution, deemed in some quarters as problematic.

Several electoral events were scheduled to take place in the next three years based on the calendar of the Constitution, including the delayed elections for one third of the Senate; elections in November 2009 to renew the Chamber of Deputies and a second third of the Senate; and elections for municipal and local officials. Presidential elections would take place in November 2010. The new electoral law drafted by the Provisional Electoral Council and submitted to Parliament in February was adopted by the legislature on 9 July and published on 25 July. The law introduced important changes, such as an increase in the number of voting centres; a possible increase in the number of Deputies from 99 to 142; a provision for the inclusion of blank votes in elections results; and measures to increase transparency in the electoral process and improve compliance with the Constitution. The Council began a comprehensive review of its structures and resources, both at central and local levels, in light of the provisions of the new law. The new requirement for at least two voting centres in each communal section necessitated the identification of more than 540 new voting centres throughout the country, beyond the 821 existing centres. MINUSTAH was providing technical, security and logistical support to facilitate those exercises. The ongoing updating of the voter rolls resulted in the registration of over 570,000 voters, from an estimated maximum pool of some 700,000 potential new voters.

Bilateral programmes to strengthen various ministries continued, and the Alexis Government developed a six-year State plan for the implementation of administrative reform. However, limited progress was made on broader projects to modernize the State, and ministries continued to suffer from a lack of resources and qualified personnel. MINUSTAH continued to work with the leadership of both chambers of Parliament in providing expertise and technical assistance to strengthen legislative capacity. It facilitated parliamentary and mayoral outreach programmes in all 10 departments through the organization of countrywide forums on relations between Members of Parliament and elected local officials. At the local level, MINUSTAH assisted the Ministry of Interior and local government in providing technical assistance to municipal councils on public administration. The Mission also supported training programmes, seminars and town hall meetings in communes around the country.

MINUSTAH continued to support the efforts of Haitian authorities to strengthen border management, including facilitating weekly informal coordination meetings with local Haitian and Dominican authorities and assisting in refurbishing customs and immigration facilities at Malpasse. On 18 June, at the meeting of the Presidential Commission on Border Development, the Commission President presented a draft decree to create a national coordinating council for border management, which would play a central role in promoting an integrated and cohesive approach to border management. Meanwhile, new border complexes were under construction at Belladère and Ouanaminthe, with bilateral support.

While there had been no further major incidents of civil disturbance since the April crisis and kidnappings had diminished in July, those events, together with brief incidents involving former military elements, underscored the fragility of the security environment and the need for continued preparedness on the part of MINUSTAH and HNP. As Haiti continued to experience threats that HNP was unable to handle alone, MINUSTAH security forces played an indispensable role in ensuring stability. The kidnappings, which seemed to be primarily motivated by ransom, were confined to the country's larger cities; some appeared to be opportunistic, while others were carried out by organized groups. Collaborative efforts by HNP and MINUSTAH to address the issue led to the arrest of several suspected kidnappers, including apparent organizers, and in July the number of kidnappings dropped to less than half the average monthly figure for the previous six months. During the April demonstrations, Haitian security forces and MINUSTAH military and formed police units contained the violence and averted the risk of an attack on the National Palace, as well as other key installations.

In addition to targeted operations, MINUSTAH's military component maintained regular patrolling throughout the country, including along the coast and land border, and increased its aerial surveillance with an additional aircraft. MINUSTAH also supported the enhancement of the National Commission for Disarmament, Dismantlement and Reinsertion, and along with the Commission, launched seven additional labour-intensive projects in violence-affected areas. A total of 20 such projects had been initiated during the year, with 14 of them ongoing and employing some 30,600 persons. As the composition of the Mission's military and police components had been significantly reconfigured over the previous two years to reflect changing circumstances and priorities, and given the demands placed on MINUSTAH forces in April, no further reconfiguration was advised at the time of the report. It was anticipated that the planned increase in HNP in the upcoming 12 months would lay the groundwork for the beginning of a systematic and progressive assumption of responsibilities by HNP, together with a corresponding reconfiguration of MINUSTAH.

Further progress was made towards reform of rule-of-law structures. Out of the target envisaged in the HNP reform plan of 14,000 trained and vetted officers by 2011, HNP included 8,546 officers—of whom 8.5 per cent were female. Ongoing training continued and it was expected that some 1,200 cadets would graduate from the police school in the first half of 2009. The Government launched a programme for reform of the Central Command of the Judicial Police, and a significant expansion of the police school was completed in June. On implementation of the three-year justice reform plan, the Government established commissions to supervise the election and certification of members of the Superior Council of the Judiciary. All nine members of the Council were selected and began vetting in July. The Government also prepared a draft law calling for the establishment of 160 new courts throughout the country. If adopted, the law would require the training of an additional 350 magistrates beyond the existing figure of 700, as well as of judicial support staff and administration. While the reopening of the School of Magistrates was delayed due to renovations, its overall curriculum and internal rules were finalized, and a training session for justices of the peace began on 7 July, with 25 participants. Another four legal aid offices opened in Port-de-Paix, Jacmel, Les Cayes and Jérémie, bringing the number of such offices to eight, out of a planned total of 18 by the end of 2009. Discussions were ongoing regarding proposals to establish specialized chambers within the Port-au-Prince jurisdiction to cover high-profile cases, including kidnappings and financial crimes. The Government, with support from MINUSTAH and other partners, launched a programme to reorganize and standardize court registration processes and case tracking management. An initiative on juvenile justice was also launched, which foresaw additional specialized judges in several jurisdictions. Progress was also achieved in implementing the 2007–2012 strategic plan of the National Prison Administration. However, much remained to be done in its four main areas of concentration: improvement of infrastructure; procurement of necessary equipment; training of personnel; and enhanced treatment of detainees. MINUSTAH continued to help ensure security and meet the need of detainees, while providing technical support for longer-term planning.

With regard to the consolidation plan, the Secretary-General said that while events that took place during the reporting period had an adverse impact on the timeline for progress in the five key areas, those broad objectives remained valid. In an annex to the report, he provided an elaboration of the initial outline and identified further indicators to measure and track progress, which were developed through MINUSTAH in consultation with the authorities.

The Secretary-General observed that Haiti's stabilization process had suffered a significant setback as a result of the April disturbances, the censure of the Government, and the prolonged difficulties in reaching agreement on a new Prime Minister and Government. Moreover, the delay of the adoption and implementation of State programmes, the continuing paralysis of the legislative process, the undermining of public confidence and the dissuading of internal and external private investment had increased the hardship experienced by the Haitian people and compounded the difficulties created by unfavourable global trends. He highlighted tasks that demanded priority attention, such as the adoption of short-term measures to meet the immediate needs of the Haitian people and help them cope with the global food and fuel crisis; finalization of the planning that was launched with the poverty reduction strategy paper process; the engagement of donors; and continued support for programmes to strengthen the country's rule-of-law structures. Renewed efforts to enhance communication between the authorities and the public, and the engagement of the private sector and civil society, were also crucial for success. As the continued deployment of the Mission remained indispensable in ensuring the country's stability and in contributing to the strengthening of rule-of-law institutions, the Secretary-General recommended that MINUSTAH's mandate be extended for a further year, until 15 October 2009, and that its military and police components be maintained at their existing strength. In addition to the support of MINUSTAH, he said that the engagement of the wider international community would be critical for real progress. Bilateral support through the provision of specialized training and through funding for necessary infrastructure would remain crucial for institution-building efforts. Moreover, the extreme hardship experienced by the country needed to be addressed or further destabilization would occur.

Communication. On 2 September [S/2008/640], Uruguay transmitted to the Security Council a joint communiqué released at the meeting of the Deputy Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Deputy Ministers of Defence of the "2 x 9 Mechanism" on Haiti (Montevideo, Uruguay, 29 August), which included the nine Latin American countries that contributed troops to MINUSTAH. The Ministers welcomed the appointment of Prime Minister Pierre-Louis, urged political leaders to form a new Government as soon as possible, and encouraged continued dialogue and the shaping of democratic consensus that included leaders of the country's productive sector. The Ministers observed that MINUSTAH had made significant progress in helping the Government to restore stability and establish security. They made recommendations for the Mission to envisage a new phase that would focus on helping build Haiti's institutional capacity and making substantial progress in social and economic development, basic services, administration of justice and infrastructure. They called on the international community to maintain and increase its political and financial commitments, as well as its presence on the ground. They also requested the United Nations to establish a system for coordinating international cooperation and donations for Haiti.

Security Council consideration (October). In his 8 October briefing to the Security Council [meeting 5990], the Special Representative reported on significant events in Haiti, including the devastating series of hurricanes that struck the country from mid-August to early September and the nomination and confirmation of the new Government. Over 800,000 Haitians lost their homes or were directly affected by the hurricanes and storms. There was also massive destruction of roads and bridges and large-scale destruction of crops.

MINUSTAH responded by undertaking evacuations, providing emergency medical care, supporting efforts to shore up collapsing infrastructure and helping bring critical relief supplies to those who needed them, in collaboration with national authorities and the UN country team.

The need to respond to the problems posed by the hurricanes helped to unblock a political standoff that had lasted nearly five months and to generate a new sense of solidarity. The lengthy and difficult confirmation process for a new Government was concluded on 5 September. Since then, the Parliament demonstrated a fresh level of interest in working with the executive branch, passing emergency legislation that enabled greater flexibility to provide relief funds, and adopting a supplementary budget as required under the Constitution. Civil society and the private sector worked alongside elected representatives to assist victims of the hurricanes, and the Government was pursuing a policy of informing and engaging the public. In other activity, MINUSTAH was working with the national authorities to prepare for the senatorial elections. Those efforts, however, were complicated by the confusion generated by the hurricanes.

On the stability consolidation plan, the Special Representative provided a summary of MINUSTAH's accomplishments in the five areas of focus and on the challenges that lay ahead. He said that the timelines for those areas were subject to change and that it was essential to measure progress not only by the calendar, but according to the effective achievement of the objectives. The consolidation of stability depended on the engagement of three sets of actors: the Haitian leadership and people; MINUSTAH and the UN system; and the wider international community, whose assistance and resources were indispensable to turn those plans into a reality. He also called for the convening of a discussion of the poverty reduction strategy paper that would take into account the vast extent of damage created by the hurricanes and explore how a large-scale effort might be launched to help Haiti recreate a basic infrastructure.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

18. Encourages the implementation of the strategic plan of the National Prison Administration, and supports the strengthening of the Mission's capacity, as referred to in paragraph 42 of the report of the Secretary-General, in particular to address prison overcrowding, and requests the Mission to remain engaged in supporting the mentoring and training of corrections personnel and strengthening institutional and operational capacities;

19. Requests the Mission to continue to pursue its community violence reduction approach, including through support to the National Commission on Disarmament, Dismantlement and Reintegration and concentrating its efforts on labour-intensive projects, the development of a weapons registry, the revision of current laws on importation and possession of arms, the reform of the weapons permit system and the promotion of a national community policing doctrine;

20. Reaffirms the human rights mandate of the Mission, calls upon the Haitian authorities to continue their efforts to promote and protect human rights, and calls upon the Mission to continue to provide human rights training to the Haitian National Police and other relevant institutions, including the correctional services;

21. Strongly condemns the grave violations against children affected by armed violence, as well as widespread rape and other sexual abuse of girls, and requests the Mission to continue to promote and protect the rights of women and children as set out in Security Council resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000, 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005 and 1820(2008) of 19 June 2008;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take the measures necessary to ensure full compliance of all Mission personnel with the United Nations zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse and to keep the Council informed, and urges troop-contributing countries to ensure that acts involving their personnel are properly investigated and punished;

23. Calls upon the Mission and the United Nations country team to further enhance their coordination and, in concert with the Government of Haiti and international partners, help to ensure greater efficiency in the implementation of the national strategy for growth and poverty reduction paper in order to achieve progress in the area of socio-economic development, which was recognized as essential for the stability of Haiti in the consolidation plan of the Secretary-General, and address urgent development problems, in particular those caused by recent hurricanes;

24. Recognizes the need for a high-level donor conference to lend its support to the national strategy for growth and poverty reduction paper, and in this regard calls upon the international community, in particular donor countries and partners of Haiti and multilateral institutions, in cooperation with the Haitian authorities, to devise and implement under the leadership of the Haitian authorities an efficient aid coordination system, based on mutual responsibility, which would focus on short-term immediate needs, as well as medium- and long-term reconstruction requirements, and also encourages donors and partners of Haiti to accelerate the disbursement of their pledges as a contribution to development and stability in Haiti;

25. Welcomes the progress made by the Mission in its communications and public outreach strategy, and requests it to continue these activities;

26. Also welcomes the work done by the Secretary-General to develop five benchmarks and indicators to measure progress being made towards the consolidation of stability in Haiti, and requests the Secretary-General to continue updating the consolidation plan on the basis of the outline provided, in consultation with the Government of Haiti, taking into account the national strategy for growth and poverty reduction paper, as appropriate, and to inform the Council accordingly in his reports;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of the mandate of the Mission semi-annually and no later than forty-five days prior to its expiration;

29. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Other developments. In a later report [S/2009/129], the Secretary-General said that there were indications of a new readiness among the political leadership to work together, owing to the crisis created by the series of hurricanes and tropical storms and by renewed tensions related to the senatorial elections. The Senate approved the Déclaration de politique générale of Michèle Duvivier Pierre-Louis on 5 September, and she was sworn in as Prime Minister on the same day. The Senate's action occurred against the background of a need to respond to the storms that hit the country in August and September, including tropical storm Hanna, which caused massive flooding and damage on 1 and 2 September, especially in the city of Gonaïves. The following week, the houses of Parliament passed a law allowing the President to declare a state of emergency, and thereby put in place a system of flexible disbursement of national funds to assist affected populations. President Préval drew upon that authority, enabling the Government to disburse $200 million in relief to hurricane victims. The private sector joined relief efforts by raising funds and in-kind assistance, while the international community also provided substantial assistance. On 30 September, the Parliament approved a revised 2007–2008 budget. The installation of the new Government was welcomed by MINUSTAH and the wider international community, which had sought to foster a collaborative approach to resolve the long-standing political impasse.

Despite those collaborative efforts, relations between the executive and legislative branches deteriorated in November, when parliamentarians expressed dissatisfaction with the new Government and questioned its management of post-disaster funds. On 27 November, five senators belonging to Lespwa, the main political formation represented in the Government, initiated the “interpellation” of the Minister of Economy and Finance, holding him responsible for Haiti's economic problems. Although the summons was later postponed, Parliament continued to hold numerous hearings with the Prime Minister and various cabinet ministers. In a positive development, on 9 and 10 December, representatives of the Government and Parliament, with support from MINUSTAH and donors, participated in a joint workshop which culminated in the adoption of an agreed legislative agenda for 2009. The agenda comprised 31 laws and 10 conventions, including measures that could assist in the consolidation of stability, such as legislation to curb corruption, and a draft customs code.

Progress was also made in the preparations for the elections. On 28 November, the Provisional Electoral Council launched the registration process for political parties and candidates for the elections. In order to comply with new requirements for voter access established by electoral law in July, the Council, with support from MINUSTAH, had identified 630 new voting centres throughout the country to supplement the 821 existing centres. Security assessment of the new centres, carried out jointly by HNP and the Mission, began in December and was expected to be completed in February 2009. On 29 December, President Préval, together with Prime Minister Pierre-Louis and members of her Government, issued a decree setting the first and second rounds of the partial senatorial elections for 19 April and 7 June 2009, respectively. MINUSTAH continued to provide technical, logistical and security assistance to the Council and other Haitian authorities in support of the electoral process.

The security situation remained fragile. Persistent poverty and youth unemployment in urban areas, aggravated by the destruction caused by the hurricanes and storms, created an environment that was vulnerable to renewed gang activity and instances of civil unrest. There were also reports of widespread trafficking in drugs and weapons throughout the country. The potential scale and impact of such activity was highlighted by an alleged theft of money linked to drug trafficking that took place in Port-de-Paix in November, which appeared to implicate members of the police and judiciary. MINUSTAH military and police personnel worked with HNP to deter criminal activities in urban areas and to improve information-sharing and collaboration with the general public, which paved the way for the dismantling of a number of kidnapping rings in the second half of the year.

In other activities, in October, MINUSTAH started producing and disseminating for broadcast on Haitian television stations a weekly video programme focusing on economic and social initiatives undertaken by Haitians, as well as on the international community's contributions towards achieving stability. An economist based at Oxford University visited Haiti from 1 to 5 December—at the request of the Secretary-General—to identify measures that could favour long-term economic recovery. He subsequently outlined a number of proposals, focusing in particular on job creation through the revival of export-driven industries. Two new legal aid offices were opened in Croix des Bouquets and Fort-Liberté in October, bringing the number of such offices to nine by the end of the year. On 10 December, the Minister of Justice announced the establishment of a new National Commission on Pretrial Detention to follow up on the recommendations of the previous Consultative Commission on Pretrial Detention.

Programme of support for Haiti

Ad Hoc Advisory Group. The Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti, mandated by Economic and Social Council decision 2004/322 [YUN 2004, p. 939] to follow and advise on the long-term development of the country, submitted a June report [E/2008/90] that analysed the follow-up to recommendations in the Group's 2007 report [YUN 2007, p. 316] on key issues for the long-term development of Haiti, namely, development planning and aid coordination, institutional capacity-building, and levers for economic and social development. Progress was achieved with the finalization of the national growth and poverty strategy paper by the end of 2007, and the ongoing preparation by the UN system of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework. Other developments included the adoption by Parliament of legislation on magistrates and progress made in 2007 in macroeconomic performances, such as a growth rate of 3.2 per cent, reversing the negative trend since 2004. Improvement in economic governance resulted in an increase in remittances and donor flows, as well as debt relief by the Inter-American Development Bank, although negative social indicators, and their impact on the economic situation, persisted. The report also provided information on the food crisis that Haiti had been experiencing in previous months, which had led to an institutional and political vacuum, and on action needed to end the crisis. Observing that political stability was paramount to development work in Haiti and that 2008 was a pivotal year, the Group encouraged the timely installation of a new Government. The report concluded with recommendations aimed at improving the economic and social situation and the impact of development support.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 2008/10 of 23 July (see p. 1021), extended the Group's mandate until July 2009.

MINUSTAH

In 2008, the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH), established by Security Council resolution 1542(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 294], maintained its focus on ensuring a secure and stable environment, supporting the electoral process and reform of rule-of-law structures, strengthening State institutions, providing humanitarian and development assistance, and protecting and promoting human rights.

Based in Port-au-Prince, MINUSTAH continued to be headed by the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Haiti, Hédi Annabi (Tunisia), and Major General Carlos Alberto dos Santos Cruz (Brazil) remained in his role as Force Commander. By resolution 1840(2008), the Council extended MINUSTAH's mandate to 15 October 2009.

MINUSTAH activities

During 2008, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on MINUSTAH activities and developments in Haiti for the periods from 22 August 2007 to 26 March 2008 [S/2008/202] and 26 March to 27 August 2008 [S/2008/586]. Activities for the remainder of the year were covered in a later report [S/2009/129]. In addition to political and security aspects, the reports summarized MINUSTAH activities dealing with human rights; child protection; the humanitarian and development situation; gender issues; reform of rule-of-law structures; the consolidation plan; strengthening of the State; the conduct and discipline of UN personnel; and Mission support.

Human rights. The situation in the country remained better than that experienced before the February 2006 elections [YUN 2006, p. 345]. Nonetheless, a number of problems persisted, with several due to continuing weaknesses in rule-of-law institutions, such as arrest without valid charges, evidence or proper judicial oversight; detention records and investigation reports that were difficult to track, poor in quality or non-existent; and a judicial system undermined by shortcomings in criminal investigations and delays in implementing decisions, which contributed to the high level of pretrial detentions. Lynching remained a widespread problem. From August 2007 to January 2008, some 66 incidents were reported that resulted in deaths of 30 individuals and injuries to 45 others. MINUSTAH supported the adoption of enabling legislation on the Office of the Ombudsman and worked to improve the Office's visibility through joint programming. It also organized training on human rights, law enforcement and due process standards for police officers, magistrates and national human rights non-governmental organizations (NGOs). In cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, a workshop on reporting to international treaty monitoring bodies was conducted for ministry representatives in advance of the establishment of an inter-ministerial commission to prepare the country's second periodic report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child. The Mission also supported the work of the Office of Citizen Protection, the sole independent human rights institution foreseen by the Constitution. In the wake of the August–September storms, the ability of the Haitian people to enjoy basic economic, social and cultural rights suffered a decline. During her visit to Haiti in November, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights called for reinforced support for the victims of the hurricanes. The Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Haiti also visited the country in November and emphasized the link between extreme poverty and instability.

Child protection. The improved security situation resulted in a significant reduction in the number of children affected by armed violence. However, areas of concern remained, including the kidnapping and trafficking of children, the rape of girls, and the number of minors held in pretrial detention, which increased to 266 in February 2008 from 226 in July 2007. Between March and August 2008, children represented 35 per cent of kidnapping victims, while two minors were killed by their captors. MINUSTAH produced radio messages by Haitian musician Wyclef Jean condemning kidnapping and sexual violence against children. The Juvenile Court, which drew on MINUSTAH technical assistance, became increasingly efficient, and the number of minors held in pretrial detention fell to 246 in June. Other areas of concern included the situation of children in institutional care centres; the increase in the trafficking of children to the Dominican Republic for labour and sexual exploitation; and the impact of the 2008 hurricane season on the educational system. Due to the destruction of school structures and the use of schools as temporary shelters, the start of the school year was delayed in various areas. Positive developments included the adoption of an implementation plan for the national Education for All strategy, the appointment of juvenile judges throughout the country between October and December and the establishment of a juvenile tribunal in Cap Haïtien. MINUSTAH and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) trained HNP officers, while the police appointed 50 regional child protection focal points in all 10 departments of Haiti. The Mission, UNDP and UNICEF worked with the Ministries of Justice and Social Affairs to improve the administration of justice for children in detention and were supporting Government efforts to strengthen the monitoring of institutional care centres.

Humanitarian situation. In 2008, Haiti suffered setbacks owing to rapidly rising global food and fuel prices, food insecurity, inflation and the impact of four successive hurricanes and tropical storms that hit Haiti in August and early September. Progress was undermined in numerous key areas, such as the country's gross domestic product, State revenue, agricultural and industrial production, the delivery of basic services, job creation and the percentage of the population living on less than $1 per day. The increase in food and fuel prices resulted in a food crisis, to which the authorities responded by outlining proposals such as price supports and revenue-generating, labour-intensive activities, together with a longer-term programme to enhance agriculture. National authorities indicated that food insecurity affected some 2.5 million Haitians. The immediate human cost of the hurricanes and storms included 793 deaths, 548 persons injured and 310 persons missing, while the damage or destruction of approximately 100,000 houses and the loss of livelihoods affected more than 165,000 families, especially in the Artibonite, South and South-East Departments. The Government estimated that more than 800,000 people were affected and in need of humanitarian assistance in 9 of the country's 10 departments. Damage to roads and bridges hampered recovery efforts and reduced access to basic services, including health care, water and nutrition. Pockets of malnutrition were identified all over the country, affecting some 210,000 persons. In the immediate aftermath of the hurricanes, MINUSTAH, the UN system, NGOs and bilateral donors supported the authorities by delivering emergency assistance and relief supplies to affected populations, focusing on urgent needs such as shelter, nutrition, water, sanitation and protection. MINUSTAH military, police and logistical components played a key role in undertaking rescue operations; provided immediate security; facilitated the delivery of emergency supplies; and shored up collapsing infrastructure immediately after the hurricanes. Mission efforts were supplemented by bilateral partners, whose swift and generous response made a critical difference in rescue and relief efforts.

Development. In macroeconomic terms, Haiti continued to make progress in stabilizing the economy under the International Monetary Fund (IMF) Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility programme. Following a 3.2 per cent rise in gross domestic product (GDP) and a decline in the inflation rate to 7.6 per cent in 2007, which rose to 11 per cent in January 2008, the IMF, nonetheless, estimated a continued GDP growth rate of 4.3 per cent during the year. With donor support, the MINUSTAH military component completed a series of small-scale projects aimed at delivering a peace dividend to more than 25,000 people in communities most affected by violence. The Mission also pursued, along with the World Bank, the provision of a grant to support infrastructure improvements that would facilitate operational activities and favour local development. In May, the UN country team submitted the first draft of the UN Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), which outlined development strategies in Haiti for the period 2009–2011 for all UN agencies, funds, and programmes, and most civilian sections of MINUSTAH. However, increasing global food and fuel prices during the first half of 2008 posed a threat to Haiti's stability. Inflation doubled to 15.8 per cent in June and economic growth forecasts for the country were revised downwards from 3.7 per cent to 2.5 per cent. Official estimates indicated that 2008 GDP growth slowed to 1.3 per cent. The 12-month inflation rate peaked at 19.8 per cent in September, yet fell to 10.1 per cent by the end of December. A post-disaster needs assessment, prepared by the Government with the support of the World Bank, the European Commission and the United Nations, outlined a framework for early recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction; needs were estimated at $763 million. In November, the UNDAF was approved as a UN common response in support of the poverty reduction strategy paper 2008–2010, with requirements of $520 million for its implementation during the next three years.

Gender. In February, in collaboration with the Ministry of Women's Affairs and Rights, MINUSTAH hosted a high-level delegation from the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and supported the validation process of the Government's initial report on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The Mission also worked with other UN system entities to support the National Plan of Action to Combat Violence against Women. According to national findings, there appeared to be an increase in the number of documented cases of physical and sexual violence against women and minors and a decrease in the number of reported gang rapes. It seemed that improved security and access to assistance, as well as public information campaigns, had motivated more victims of violence to seek help. MINUSTAH police assisted the HNP in strengthening its capacity to prevent and respond to violence against women and girls, including through training programmes. The Mission and HNP jointly initiated an information campaign in schools to increase children's awareness of women's rights and of punishable crimes under the Penal Code, such as rape and domestic violence. In June, the Mission conducted a series of regional workshops to identify obstacles to the participation of women in politics. Also in June, the Government submitted its first report to the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women. The Mission carried out a three-week programme entitled "Women in Action" to commemorate the adoption of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113], and to mark the International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, on 25 November, bringing together approximately 4,500 participants in 88 activities.

Other activities. In addition to routine tasks, key Mission support activities included the logistical facilitation of the military and police deployment at the four land border crossings with the Dominican Republic. Reconnaissance trips for eight seaport border locations were completed early in the year in preparation for the deployment of maritime assets when they became available, and by August, the development of coastal installations was under way to accommodate the maritime component of the Mission. MINUSTAH continued to integrate HIV/AIDS awareness and training into its activities, and to promote and maintain the availability of voluntary counselling and confidential testing at two permanent sites and through one mobile team. Following the series of storms and hurricanes that struck the country, MINUSTAH provided extensive assistance to Haitian authorities and the UN country team to facilitate the provision and coordination of humanitarian assistance and access by humanitarian personnel, including through large-scale transportation operations. In other efforts, MINUSTAH conducted road infrastructure and rehabilitation projects; undertook construction activity to deploy troops and equipment along the maritime border; extended coverage of Radio MINUSTAH to the Centre Department; began logistical support preparations for the senatorial elections; and supported a countrywide campaign organized jointly by the World Health Organization and UNICEF, by which some 3.7 million children were vaccinated in 2008.

Financing of MINUSTAH

In January [A/62/631], the Secretary-General submitted the performance report on the budget of MINUSTAH for the period from 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007, in which he recommended that the General Assembly should decide on the treatment of the unencumbered balance of $5,187,000 and other income and adjustments amounting to $34,594,200 for the period ended 30 June 2007.

On 5 March [A/62/720], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly the MINUSTAH budget for the period from 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009, which amounted to $575,103,200 gross and provided for the deployment of 7,060 military personnel, 951 UN police officers, 1,140 formed police personnel, 550 international staff, 1,288 national staff, 220 UN Volunteers and 16 government-provided personnel, including temporary positions.

ACABQ report. In a 7 May report [A/62/781/Add.6], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) identified reductions totalling $186,700. It therefore recommended that the General Assembly appropriate $574,916,500 for the period 1 July 2008 to 30 June 2009; and that the unencumbered balance and the amount resulting from other income and adjustments for the period 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 be credited to Member States in a manner to be determined by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Other questions

Colombia–Ecuador

In a 3 March letter [S/2008/146] to the Security Council, Ecuador reported that on 1 March, military aircraft and army police personnel from Colombia made incursions into Ecuadorian territory in the Province of Sucumbios. After clashing with members of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), they killed 17 people, including high-ranking leaders of that irregular Colombian group. In the context of those events, Colombian State forces entered the territory of Ecuador, took possession of a number of bodies and transported them back to Colombia. Expressing disappointment over the actions of the Colombian forces and noting the lack of bilateral cooperation in the operations, Ecuador stated that the events constituted a violation of its territorial integrity and that it would make use of all available security resources to prevent any recurrence of those circumstances. Ecuador called for the peaceful solution to Colombia's internal conflict and said that it stood ready to contribute to humanitarian efforts to achieve peace and understanding in Colombia.

On 13 March, in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council [S/2008/177], Ecuador reiterated its position on the internal conflict in Colombia; stated that it was a victim and not the facilitator of the conflict; and reported on steps taken concerning FARC members who were crossing the border, including the deployment of 11,000 members of the armed forces and police to their shared border. Ecuador also confirmed its non-interference in the internal affairs of Colombia, in accordance with international law.
